THE BIG 1960 SUBSIDY from the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations needed for such an overseas junket has gone to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for an Asian tour. Officials of the American National Theater and Academy, who handle the administration of this program, announced this choice just before the holiday.

The Bostonians went to Europe under ANTA-State Department auspices in 1952 and 1956, but this will be their first visit to Asia. They will open in Japan, at the Osaka Festival, about May 1, tour Japan, Formosa, Korea, and the Philippines, and return to play their summer concerts early in July.

I HAVE the highest regard for the Boston Orchestra and know from personal experience the contributions its earlier tours have made to American cultural prestige overseas. Its 1956 appearances in the Soviet Union, the first penetration of the Iron Curtain by an American orchestra, were still being discussed when I visited the country in 1958.

My only protest is that the Boston Symphony needs international prestige the way Fort Knox needs gold. The State Department, in sending it, is plainly selecting a group with plenty of tour experience which it knows will deliver fine performances with the minimum of fuss and bother.

Chicago appears to have the No. 1 place in the fuss and bother department. Orchestra Hall confirms that no negotiations have been conducted or are under way that might lead to an international tour under ANTA management.

SO HERE WE ARE, with one of the great orchestras of the world, an unrivaled reputation for being hard to deal with, and no chance in sight that we will be able to claim the applause that Boston, New York, Cleveland and Minneapolis have been able to secure overseas for their symphonic groups.

And a Happy New Year to you, too.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
TIMES-DEMOCRAT
SAT. 48,182 SUN. 57,105
DEC 20 1959

Catching The Beat In The Music World

BY INA WICKHAM

> "How many of us ever stop to think
> "Of music as a wonderous magic link
> "With God, taking sometimes the peace of prayer —
> "When words have failed us 'neath the weight of care
> "Music that knows no country, race or creed,
> "But gives to each, according to his need"
> —Anonymous

THE BOSTON Symphony will make a tour of Japan next year. The group has already made two post-war foreign tours. May 1st the orchestra led by Charles Munch will appear at the Osaka Festival and then visit several cities in that country. The itinerary is not yet completed but it is expected that the tour will last from six to eight weeks and that other Asian countries may be included, such as Tiawan, Korea. Hong Kong, and the Philippines.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH expects to take a conductor with him on the tour to assist in presenting the concerts. No one has been named as yet, but it is expected that it will be an American composer-conductor. The trip is under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations. If the tour lasts for eight weeks it may affect the Berkshire Music Festival, which usually begins the first week in July. A spokesman for the Boston orchestra has said that the festival at Tanglewood will go on but that its dates will be determined by the return of the orchestra.

* * *

DIRECTORS of the Newport, R. I. Jazz festival have voted to hold both the Jazz and Folk festivals again next summer. The time for the Jazz festival has been set for June 30 to July 4 and the folk festival will be held June 24, 25, and 26. Problems that beset the festivals last summer will be clarified and worked out.

* * *

THE NEW YORK City Opera Company will begin its third spring season of American Opera at the City Center in New York on Feb. 10. The season will run through Sunday, Feb. 21, as the company will begin a five week tour of the United States on Feb. 23. The tour repertoire will be selected from 18 American operas presented by the company, with the assistance of grants from the Ford Foundation the past two spring seasons. The company will again hold a seminar for young American composers, librettists and conductors interested in the lyric theater. For the first time operatic stage directors may this year join the seminar.

* * *

GEORGE A. KUYPER, formerly manager of the Chicago Symphony orchestra has been appointed general director of the Hollywood Bowl and the Southern California Symphony Association. He will assume his duties the first of the year. He had been manager of the Chicago Symphony for the past 15 years. Seymour Raven, music critic of the Chicago Tribune has been named manager of the Chicago orchestra and he will replace Mr. Kuyper after Jan. 1.

* * *

NEWS OF THE artists tells us that Margherita Roberti, (Mrs. Tom Nobis) will appear in "La Tosca" and in Busoni's "Doctor Faust," at La Scala in Milan this season. She is one of four Americans to sing there this winter. Others are Leontyne Price who will sing in "Aida," Cornell MacNeil in "Aida" and "The Masked Ball" and Gloria Lane in "Carmen" and "Boris Godunov." Miss Lane appeared with the Tri-City Symphony orchestra several seasons ago.

New England Newsclip Agency,
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 14,500
DEC 10 1959

Symphony Plans Tour Of Japan

Formosa, Korea Included On Planned Itinerary

The Boston Symphony will tour Japan and other Asian countries during a six week tour which will open at the Osaka Festival in Japan on May 1, 1960, it was announced this week by Dr. Charles Munch, director of the internationally famed orchestra.

The tour will be made under the sponsorship of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

This first Far East tour of the orchestra will take it to several cities in Japan and to other spots on Formosa, the Phillippines and Korea. The exact itinerary has not yet been completed, but it is expected that the orchestra will be gone from Boston until at least the later part of June.

Continued on Page Four

Continued From Page One

The projected tour which was voted by members of the orchestra, will mark the third foreign visit of the musicians in the past 10 years. In 1952 the Symphony toured Europe and in 1956 it made a return visit with stops in Ireland and Russia. The visit to Russia was the first of its kind to that nation.

The Orchestra spokesman said that the Pops and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be held. However, some ar-arangement of the Tanglewood dates may be necessary if the orchestra does not return from the Far East at the expected time.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 25,217
JAN 1960

Boston Symphony to Tour Japan Next Spring

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced their acceptance of an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries in the Spring of 1960. The tour will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

The tour, which is expected to begin on or about May 1, 1960 and last six to eight weeks, will open in Japan where the Orchestra will perform in the Osaka Festival. Other Japanese cities will be visited. The President's Program and ANTA have not confirmed the itinerary for the other East Asian countries, but it is anticipated that the Philippines, Formosa and Korea will be included.

This will be the third foreign tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It visited Europe in 1952, and in 1956 it was the first American orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

5

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 534,063 S. 632,432
DEC 27 1959

MUSIC

Overseas Tour In '60? Doubtful

By Robert C. Marsh

If I may intrude on your post-Christmas sense of well-being, a recent announcement from Washington seems to make it clear that Chicago's orchestra will not go overseas in 1960. Not, to be sure, that many could entertain serious hopes that it would.

The manner in which the 1959 tour negotiations came to an end seemed to preclude the possibility of our getting a second chance for a long time. But nonetheless, when music director Fritz Reiner announced the cancellation of the 1959 tour at that famous rehearsal in which he was hissed, he is reported to have promised a spring tour in 1960.

THE BIG 1960 SUBSIDY from the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations needed for such an overseas junket has gone to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for an Asian tour. Officials of the American National Theater and Academy, who handle the administration of this program, announced this choice just before the holiday.

The Bostonians went to Europe under ANTA-State Department auspices in 1952 and 1956, but this will be their first visit to Asia. They will open in Japan, at the Osaka Festival, about May 1, tour Japan, Formosa, Korea, and the Philippines, and return to play their summer concerts early in July.

I HAVE the highest regard for the Boston Orchestra and know from personal experience the contributions its earlier tours have made to American cultural prestige overseas. Its 1956 appearances in the Soviet Union, the first penetration of the Iron Curtain by an American orchestra, were still being discussed when I visited the country in 1958.

My only protest is that the Boston Symphony needs international prestige the way Fort Knox needs gold. The State Department, in sending it, is plainly selecting a group with plenty of tour experience which it knows will deliver fine performances with the minimum of fuss and bother.

Chicago appears to have the No. 1 place in the fuss and bother department. Orchestra Hall confirms that no negotiations have been conducted or are under way that might lead to an international tour under ANTA management.

SO HERE WE ARE, with one of the great orchestras of the world, an unrivaled reputation for being hard to deal with, and no chance in sight that we will be able to claim the applause that Boston, New York, Cleveland and Minneapolis have been able to secure overseas for their symphonic groups.

And a Happy New Year to you, too.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
TIMES-DEMOCRAT
SAT. 49,182 SUN. 57,165
DEC 20 1959

Catching The Beat In The Music World

BY INA WICKHAM

"How many of us ever stop to think
"Of music as a wonderous magic link
"With God, taking sometimes the peace of prayer —
"When words have failed us 'neath the weight of care
"Music that knows no country, race or creed,
"But gives to each, according to his need"
—Anonymous

THE BOSTON Symphony will make a tour of Japan next year. The group has already made two post-war foreign tours. May 1st the orchestra led by Charles Munch will appear at the Osaka Festival and then visit several cities in that country. The itinerary is not yet completed but it is expected that the tour will last from six to eight weeks and that other Asian countries may be included, such as Tiawan, Korea, Hong Kong, and the Philippines.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH expects to take a conductor with him on the tour to assist in presenting the concerts. No one has been named as yet, but it is expected that it will be an American composer-conductor. The trip is under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations. If the tour lasts for eight weeks it may affect the Berkshire Music Festival, which usually begins the first week in July. A spokesman for the Boston orchestra has said that the festival at Tanglewood will go on but that its dates will be determined by the return of the orchestra.

* * *

DIRECTORS of the Newport, R. I. Jazz festival have voted to hold both the Jazz and Folk festivals again next summer. The time for the Jazz festival has been set for June 30 to July 4 and the folk festival will be held June 24, 25, and 26. Problems that beset the festivals last summer will be clarified and worked out.

* * *

THE NEW YORK City Opera Company will begin its third spring season of American Opera at the City Center in New York on Feb. 10. The season will run through Sunday, Feb. 21, as the company will begin a five week tour of the United States on Feb. 23. The tour repertoire will be selected from 18 American operas presented by the company, with the assistance of grants from the Ford Foundation the past two spring seasons. The company will again hold a seminar for young American composers, librettists and conductors interested in the lyric theater. For the first time operatic stage directors may this year join the seminar.

* * *

GEORGE A. KUYPER, formerly manager of the Chicago Symphony orchestra has been appointed general director of the Hollywood Bowl and the Southern California Symphony Association. He will assume his duties the first of the year. He had been manager of the Chicago Symphony for the past 15 years. Seymour Raven, music critic of the Chicago Tribune has been named manager of the Chicago orchestra and he will replace Mr. Kuyper after Jan. 1.

* * *

NEWS OF THE artists tells us that Margherita Roberti, (M r s. Tom Nobis) will appear in "La Tosca" and in Busoni's "Doctor Faust," at La Scala in Milan this season. She is one of four Americans to sing there this winter. Others are Leontyne Price who will sing in "Aida," Cornell MacNeil in "Aida" and "The Masked Ball" and Gloria Lane in "Carmen" and "Boris Godunov." Miss Lane appeared with the Tri-City Symphony orchestra several seasons ago.

New England Newsclip Agency
Box 2076, Boston 6 • Richmond
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 14,500
DEC 10 1959

Symphony Plans Tour Of Japan

Formosa, Korea Included On Planned Itinerary

The Boston Symphony will tour Jap~~an and other~~ Asian countries during a six week tour which will open at the Osaka Festival in Japan on May 1, 1960, it was announced this week by Dr. Charles Munch, director of the internationally famed orchestra.

The tour will be made under the sponsorship of the President Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

This first Far East tour of the orchestra will take it to

Continued on Page Four

Continued From Page One

several cities in Japan and to other spots on Formosa, the Phillippines and Korea. The exact itinerary has not yet been completed, but it is expected that the orchestra will be gone from Boston until at least the later part of June.

The projected tour which was voted by members of the orchestra, will mark the third foreign visit of the musicians in the past 10 years. In 1952 the Symphony toured Europe and in 1956 it made a return visit with stops in Ireland and Russia. The visit to Russia was the first of its kind to that nation.

The Orchestra spokesman said that the Pops and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be held. However, some arrangement of the Tanglewood dates may be necessary if the orchestra does not return from the Far East at the expected time.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 25,217
JAN 1960

Boston Symphony to Tour Japan Next Spring

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced their acceptance of an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries in the Spring of 1960. The tour will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

The tour, which is expected to begin on or about May 1, 1960 and last six to eight weeks, will open in Japan where the Orchestra will perform in the Osaka Festival. Other Japanese cities will be visited. The President's Program and ANTA have not confirmed the itinerary for the other East Asian countries, but it is anticipated that the Philippines, Formosa and Korea will be included.

This will be the third foreign tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It visited Europe in 1952, and in 1956 it was the first American orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

6

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 398,886

JAN 17 1960

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—JANUARY 17, 1960

Oriental Neighbors Have Cosmopolitan Music

The Boston Symphony Will Find the Japanese Want Western Music

By CYRUS DURGIN

DURGIN

No doubt it is natural for us Occidentals who have not been in Asia to think of Japanese music more or less in terms of the pentatonic scale and queer harmonic sounds, whistles, tinkles, rasps and bops.

It isn't quite that, however. There is, the scholars tell us, a Japanese music, both classical and popular, believed to have originated in China and, about 300 A.D., conveyed through Korea to Japan.

★ ★ ★

But the native Japanese music is much more complex and substantial than tunes and simple harmonies you might find from the black keys of the piano, the five tones which in each octive make a pentatonic scale.

We've Heard Some

Actually we've heard some George Marek, vice president of R.C.A. Victor Records, wrote an amusing and highly informative story of his musical adventures in Japan for The Saturday Review. He titled it "Brahms in the Coffee House," and described how you could hear Brahms and other European composers in coffee spots.

Mr. Marek also was able to gauge the popular Japanese appetite for jazz, and found it voracious. Not just for one kind of jazz, but for all kinds, and rock 'n' roll, too. American popular music in general is consumed as avidly by young Japanese as by young Americans. It seems, Mr. Marek said in a conversation I had with him last week, that young Japanese, as he observed, have no interest in their own music.

Rosenstock's Word

I also have the word of conductor Joseph Rosenstock that the younger Japanese cannot get enough Western music. Polish-born Rosenstock, last in Boston in 1955 with the New York City Opera Co., told me then of his experiences in Japan.

He went out there before World War II to conduct the Nippon Philharmonic Orchestra in Tokyo, got interned dur- but the younger generation are crazy about Beethoven, Schubert, Brahms and Ravel. Especially Beethoven."

Back in 1911

From other sources I have heard that the Japanese are especially fond of German music, though, for some reason, not of Wagner. But Beethoven seems to be their idol.

Nipponese regard for Western music is not an altogether recent development. When Sumi Sumiko, said to have been a leading singer of the Imperial Opera in Tokyo, passed through Boston in 1911, she described in fairly glowing terms the Tokyo Conservatory of that day, whose faculty included both European teachers and Japanese who had studied in Europe of the United States.

The Opera then had a [illegible] tory which included [illegible] items of the Italian repertory [illegible] "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," "Il Trovatore" [illegible] "Madam Butterfly." Some French works were popular, also.

Thus it is evident [illegible] the Bostonian [illegible] their tour at [illegible] ganized in the [illegible] Osaka, two [illegible] find an audience [illegible] tan taste [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 182,816

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony Starts Japan Tour May 1

Boston Symphony Orchestra officials yesterday confirmed a report that the orchestra has accepted an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries in the spring of 1960.

The tour will be made under President Eisenhower's special International Program for Culture Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA). It will begin May 1, on the conclusion of the regular Boston Symphony season, and last from six to eight weeks.

The orchestra, as The Herald reported exclusively yesterday, will perform in various Japanese cities, and also in the Osaka Festical. The Philippines, Formosa and Korea are expected to be on the itinerary as well, though ANTA has not confirmed these dates.

The Far East appearance, first in the Boston Symphony's 79-year-old history, will be the orchestra's third foreign tour. It made its first European visit in 1952. In 1956, the Boston Symphony was the first major American orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 41,945

JAN 27 1959

Western Music Popular With Japanese People

By KIKO SHIBAZAKI

(Editor's Note: Mr. Shibazaki, a Japanese newspaperman, is spending three months at the Patriot Ledger under the auspices of the U.S. State Department. At home, he is a staff writer for the Yokohama Bureau of "The Yomiuri Shimbun.").

I have observed the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform at Symphony Hall recently. It is needless to say that the music was such a beautiful tone with every detail, but what I thought then most was how I wish we had a permanent hall like that in Tokyo.

Project Started

I learned also of the Symphony's history, and felt that the Bostonian classic music followers are lucky to have a great man like Henry Lee Higginson, who exerted his energy and spent his fortune to create a permanent orchestra 78 years ago.

Now in Tokyo the project of constructing the National Music Hall has started. This is being done by the government and welcomed fully by the music lovers.

There are large symphony orchestras in Tokyo, Osaka and elsewhere, and their repertoire includes everything from Bach to Shostakovitch. Recitals, concerts, and performances of operas and ballets are held frequently besides music contests which are sponsored regularly on a nationwide scale several times a year.

Many Japanese have studied music abroad with considerable success, while celebrated musicians, conductors, and ballet dancers have come from all parts of the world to give performances before the Japanese public.

Taught At Schools

Western music has been taught at schools since the 1860s when Japan emerged as a modern state by adopting things Occidental, including music. It is taught from the elementary grade, as well as at professional music schools such as the Tokyo Academy of Music, which was founded late in the last century and is now a faculty of the University of Arts, Tokyo.

Western music of all kinds has been popularized, including composition, vocal and instrumental music, opera and ballet. These kinds of Western music are now enjoyed equally by the Japanese people as well as traditional Japanese music.

In the traditional field, "Gagaku" (court music and dance) is preserved at the Imperial Court and at some Shinto shrines. Its prototype was introduced into Japan late in the Seventh Century from China of the T'ang Dynasty. "Gagaku" is performed for the public from time to time.

In addition to "Gagaku," there are various forms of "samisen" (a three-stringed instrument) music, most of which accompany "Kabuki" plays, "Bunraku" puppet shows, and classical stage dancing. After centuries of evolution, "samisen" music is very much alive among the people today.

Many Visited

Development of Western classical music, however, has been remarkably, particularly since 1950. This is, I think, mostly based on the fact that a large number of outstanding foreign musicians have visited Japan.

The first was French pianist Lazare Levy, who came to the country in 1950 to give a series of concerts. His visit served to infuse new life into the Japanese music world which had been stagnant for some ten years during and following the war.

Noted musicians who have come to Japan since then include French pianist Alfred Cortot, German pianists Wilhelm Backhaus and Wilhelm Kempf, Soviet pianist Emil Gilels, American violinists Yehudi Menuhin and Jascha Heifetz, Hungarian violinist Josef Szigeti, Soviet violinist David Oistrakh, German baritone Gerhard Huesch, American tenor Richard Tucker, Italian tenor Ferruccio Tagliavini, American sopranos Helen Traubel, Eleanor Steber and Georgia Laster, Soviet soprano [illegible] Solenkov, the Vienna Boys Choir, the French "The Little Singers with a Wooden Cross," the Berlin, Los Angeles and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestras, and the American Symphony of the Air Orchestra.

Important Part

Japanese newspapers and the Japan Broadcasting Corporation have played an important part in these visits, not only alloting large amounts of space and time but acting, in many cases, as sponsors. Foreign musicians visiting Japan have been enthusiastically received by music lovers there. In most cases, tickets were sold out long before the performance date. (I have found out the same is true of the Boston Symphony.)

In early 1958, French violinist Jean Fournier and his wife, pianist Ginette D[illegible] as well as Soviet violinist Nelie [illegible]nikov, visited Japan. Then from April to May of the same year, an International Art Festival was held in Osaka, bringing to Japan the Leningrad State Philharmonic Orchestra, Spanish cellist Gaspar Cassado and American tenor Jan Peerce.

Other foreign musicians who visited Japan during the year were Belgian pianists Henry Piette and Janine Reding, British pianist Benno Moiseiwitsch, Austrian conductor Edward Strauss and the British Amadeus String Quartet.

Epochal Event

Other than the prominent foreign musicians who have visited Japan in recent years, it is considered an epochal event in Japan's musical history that an Italian operatic troupe of 27 persons, led by Vittorio Gui, visited Japan during 1957, followed shortly afterward by the visit of a Russian ballet group from the world famous Bolshoi Opera. In 1958, the New York City Ballet troupe made a successful tour of Japan.

I hope, as a classical music lover of Japan, that some day the Boston Symphony will visit my country as well as it made tour to Europe in recent years. I am sure the Symphony, one of the top symphony orchestras in the world, will be enthusiastically welcome over there.

BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO
SAT. 32,205

DEC 14 1959

Munch, Hub Symph Far East Tour

NEW YORK — Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will tour Japan and other East Asian countries early in 1960. Munch and the orchestra, who recorded for RCA Victor, will make the tour under the President's special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater Academy.

Tour will likely start May 1 and continue for six or eight weeks. Opener will be in Japan, where the orchestra will perform in the Osaka Festival. Other Japanese cities will be visited also, and likely the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

This will be the orchestra's third foreign tour. It visited Europe in 1952 and 1956 and was the first American orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

PORT WASHINGTON, N.Y.
NEWS
W. 3,678

DEC 17 1959

Boston Symphony To Tour Far East

BOSTON (AP)—Boston's Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans call for performances in the Osaka festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 398,886

JAN 17 1960

Oriental Neighbors In Musical Tastes

Symphony

DURGIN

music, both classical and popular, believed to have originated in China and, about 300 A.D., conveyed through Korea to Japan.

★ ★ ★

But the native Japanese music is much more complex and substantial than tunes and simple harmonies you might find from the black keys of the piano, the five tones which in each octive make a pentatonic scale.

We've Heard Some

Actually we've heard some Japanese music, from the musicians of the touring Kabuki and Gagaku dance troupes The two most used instruments, one gathers ,are the koto, a form of zither, and the samisen, a kind of guitar. There are pipes and percussion instruments, too. The Japanese scale, like the Chinese, is not pentatonic but Pythagorean, of 13 semitones by perfect, untempered fifths.

But, from reliable accounts, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrives in Japan for the beginning of its Far Eastern tour, next May, they will find a lot of Japanese more interested in Western music than in their own.

George Marek, vice president of R.C.A. Victor Records, wrote an amusing and highly informative story of his musical adventures in Japan for The Saturday Review. He titled it "Brahms in the Coffee House," and described how you could hear Brahms and other European composers in coffee spots.

Mr. Marek also was able to gauge the popular Japanese appetite for jazz, and found it voracious. Not just for one kind of jazz, but for all kinds, and rock 'n' roll, too. American popular music in general is consumed as avidly by young Japanese as by young Americans. It seems, Mr. Marek said in a conversation I had with him last week, that young Japanese, as he observed, have no interest in their own music.

Rosenstock's Word

I also have the word of conductor Joseph Rosenstock that the younger Japanese cannot get enough Western music. Polish-born Rosenstock, last in Boston in 1955 with the New York City Opera Co., told me then of his experiences in Japan.

He went out there before World War II to conduct the Nippon Philharmonic Orchestra in Tokyo, got interned during the war, and returned to his musicians when he was freed by Gen Willoughby of the American occupying forces.

The orchestra seemed to have been composed of both Japanese and European musicians. It was a self-supporting organization, which worked very hard, paid its bills and even kept up the rent on the quarters Rosenstock was forced to leave during his internment, that they might be ready for him at war's end.

"I found in Japan an intense—and I mean intense—interest in Western music on the part of younger Japanese," Rosenstock told me. "The older people went to the Kabuki Theater, but the younger generation are crazy about Beethoven, Schubert, Brahms and Ravel. Especially Beethoven."

Back in 1911

From other sources I have heard that the Japanese are especially fond of German music, though, for some reason, not of Wagner. But Beethoven seems to be their idol.

Nipponese regard for Western music is not an altogether recent development. When Sumi Sumiko, said to have been a leading singer of the Imperial Opera in Tokyo, passed through Boston in 1911, she described in fairly glowing terms the Tokyo Conservatory of that day, whose faculty included both European teachers and Japanese who had studied in Europe of the United States.

The Opera then had a [illegible] tory which included [illegible] items of the Italian rep[illegible] "Cavalleria Rusti[illegible] [illegible]agliacii," "Il Tro-[illegible] "Madam Butter-[illegible]" Some French works were popu[illegible] also.

Thus it is evide[illegible] the Bostonian m[illegible] their tour at [illegible] ganized in th[illegible] Osaka, two [illegible] find an au[illegible] tan taste [illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 182,816

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony Starts Japan Tour May 1

Boston Symphony Orchestra officials yesterday confirmed a report that the orchestra has accepted an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries in the spring of 1960.

The tour will be made under President Eisenhower's special International Program for Culture Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA). It will begin May 1, on the conclusion of the regular Boston Symphony season, and last from six to eight weeks.

The orchestra, as The Herald reported exclusively yesterday, will perform in various Japanese cities, and also in the Osaka Festical. The Philippines, Formosa and Korea are expected to be on the itinerary as well, though ANTA has not confirmed these dates.

The Far East appearance, first in the Boston Symphony's 79-year-old history, will be the orchestra's third foreign tour. It made its first European visit in 1952. In 1956, the Boston Symphony was the first major American orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 41,945

JAN 27 1959

Western Music Popular With Japanese People

By KIKO SHIBAZAKI

(Editor's Note: Mr. Shibazaki, a Japanese newspaperman, is spending three months at the Patriot Ledger under the auspices of the U.S. State Department. At home, he is a staff writer for the Yokohama Bureau of "The Yomiuri Shimbun."),

I have observed the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform at Symphony Hall recently. It is needless to say that the music was such a beautiful tone with every detail, but what I thought then most was how I wish we had a permanent hall like that in Tokyo.

Project Started

I learned also of the Symphony's history, and felt that the Bostonian classic music followers are lucky to have a great man like Henry Lee Higginson, who exerted his energy and spent his fortune to create a permanent orchestra 78 years ago.

Now in Tokyo the project of constructing the National Music Hall has started. This is being done by the government and welcomed fully by the music lovers.

There are large symphony orchestras in Tokyo, Osaka and elsewhere, and their repertoire includes everything from Bach to Shostakovitch. Recitals, concerts, and performances of operas and ballets are held frequently besides music contests which are sponsored regularly on a nationwide scale several times a year.

Many Japanese have studied music abroad with considerable success, while celebrated musicians, conductors, and ballet dancers have come from all parts of the world to give performances before the Japanese public.

Taught At Schools

Western music has been taught at schools since the 1860s when Japan emerged as a modern state by adopting things Occidental, including music. It is taught from the elementary grade, as well as at professional music schools such as the Tokyo Academy of Music, which was founded late in the last century and is now a faculty of the University of Arts, Tokyo.

Western music of all kinds has been popularized, including composition, vocal and instrumental music, opera and ballet. These kinds of Western music are now enjoyed equally by the Japanese people as well as traditional Japanese music.

In the traditional field, "Gagaku" (court music and dance) is preserved at the Imperial Court and at some Shinto shrines. Its prototype was introduced into Japan late in the Seventh Century from China of the T'ang Dynasty. "Gagaku" is performed for the public from time to time.

In addition to "Gagaku," there are various forms of "samisen" (a three-stringed instrument) music, most of which accompany "Kabuki" plays, "Bunraku" puppet shows, and classical stage dancing. After centuries of evolution, "samisen" music is very much alive among the people today.

Many Visited

Development of Western classical music, however, has been remarkably, particularly since 1950. This is, I think, mostly based on the fact that a large number of outstanding foreign musicians have visited Japan.

The first was French pianist Lazare Levy, who came to the country in 1950 to give [illegible] series of concerts. His visit served to infuse new life into the Japanese music world which had been stagnant for some ten years during and following the war.

Noted musicians who have come to Japan since then include French pianist Alfred Cortot, German pianists Wilhelm Backhaus and Wilhelm Kempf, Soviet pianist Emil Gilels, American violinists Yehudi Menuhin and Jascha Heifetz, Hungarian violinist Josef Szigeti, Soviet violinist David Oistrakh, German baritone Gerhard Huesch, American tenor Richard Tucker, Italian tenor Ferruccio Tagliavini, American sopranos Helen Traubel, Eleanor Steber and Georgia Laster, Soviet soprano [illegible] Solenkov, the Vienna Boys Choir, the French "The Little Singers with a Wooden Cross," the Berlin, Los Angeles and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestras, and the American Symphony of the Air Orchestra.

Important Part

Japanese newspapers and the Japan Broadcasting Corporation have played an important part in these visits, not only alloting large amounts of space and time but acting, in many cases, as sponsors. Foreign musicians visiting Japan have been enthusiastically received by music lovers there. In most cases, tickets were sold out long before the performance date. (I have found out the same is true of the Boston Symphony.)

In early 1958, French violinist Jean Fournier and his wife, pianist Ginette D[illegible] as well as Soviet violinist Nelie [illegible]nikov, visited Japan. Then from April to May of the same year, an International Art Festival was held in Osaka, bringing to Japan the Leningrad State Philharmonic Orchestra, Spanish cellist Gaspar Cassado and American tenor Jan Peerce.

Other foreign musicians who visited Japan during the year were Belgian pianists Henry Piette and Janine Reding, British pianist Benno Moiseiwitsch, Austrian conductor Edward Strauss and the British Amadeus String Quartet.

Epochal Event

Other than the prominent foreign musicians who have visited Japan in recent years, it is considered an epochal event in Japan's musical history that an Italian operatic troupe of 27 persons, led by Vittorio Gui, visited Japan during 1957, followed shortly afterward by the visit of a Russian ballet group from the world famous Bolshoi Opera. In 1958, the New York City Ballet troupe made a successful tour of Japan.

I hope, as a classical music lover of Japan, that some day the Boston Symphony will visit my country as well as it made tour to Europe in recent years. I am sure the Symphony, one of the top symphony orchestras in the world, will be enthusiastically welcome over there.

BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO
SAT. 32,205

DEC 14 1959

Munch, Hub Symph Far East Tour

NEW YORK — Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony will tour Japan and other East Asian countries early in 1960. Munch and the orchestra, who recorded for RCA Victor, will make the tour under the President's special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater Academy.

Tour will likely start May 1 and continue for six or eight weeks. Opener will be in Japan, where the orchestra will perform in the Osaka Festival. Other Japanese cities will be visited also, and likely the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

This will be the orchestra's third foreign tour. It visited Europe in 1952 and 1956 and was the first American orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

PORT WASHINGTON, N.Y.
NEWS
W. 3,678

DEC 17 1959

Boston Symphony To Tour Far East

BOSTON (AP)—Boston's Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans call for performances in the Osaka festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 46,209
MAR 22 1960

Boston Symphony Plans 8-Week Tour of Far East

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make an eight-week tour to Japan and other far eastern countries leaving Boston on April 25 by chartered planes and returning to Boston on June 19 to prepare for the six-week Berkshire Festival.

* * *

THOMAS D. PERRY JR., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the tour is the orchestra's third foreign trip and will be made as part of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, with associate conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland plus the 104 musicians and staff will make the trip.

* * *

THE GROUP will arrive in Korea on April 27 and give two concerts there, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. About 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May. Six of the concerts will be presented in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. In New Zealand there will be two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before the orchestra's return to the United States.

* * *

THE CONDUCTORS plan to perform 22 compositions by 19 composers on the tour.

Included in the tentative list are eight works by seven American composers, Samuel Barber, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance;" Easley Blackwood, "Symphony No. 1; Copland's "Symphony No. 1" and the "Suite from The Tender Land;" Norman dello Joio, "Variations, Chaconne and Finale;" Leon Kirchner, "Toccata;" Walter Piston, 'Symphony No. 6;" and William Schuman, "New England Triptych."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 194,909
FEB 26 1960

U.S. Culture Stakes a World Claim—V

Boston Symphony Sets Classic Pace Abroad

By EDGAR J. DRISCOLL JR.

America has more major symphony orchestras than big league baseball clubs.

DRISCOLL

Today there are more than 30 major symphonies in cities throughout the United States, plus 700 professional and semiprofessional orchestras. In addition, there are thousands of amateur groups, made up of people who simply play for the love of it.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which heads for the Far East this Spring, will get a kind of reception that once was rated only by heads of state.

★ ★ ★

When the New York Philharmonic toured Latin America a year and a half ago, music lovers toted food and mattresses and slept on sidewalks for 24 hours before a concert to try and buy a ticket. Last year it was the rage of Russia.

At home the picture is almost as rewarding. "At no time in the history of American society have so many people devoted so much time, effort and money to the intangible rewards gained from serious music," says one expert in the field.

Today, music reproduced and "live" floods the country. It is provided by top-notch performing organizations which in turn have been provided by first-rate music schools. Says John N. Burk, writing in a recent concert bulletin of the B.S.O.: "This abundance is astonishing if directly compared to the status 50 years ago."

Then, he says, music was an imported activity. To study music, one went to Leipzig, Frankfurt or Paris. Boston and New York had the only permanent orchestras on the Eastern seaboard. Chicago, St. Louis and Cincinnati in the Midwest. The great West was, musically speaking, virgin territory. Two string quartets sufficed for the whole country. Opera hardly existed outside of New York.

In the short 50 years, thanks to recordings and transmission of good music by radio, we have been transformed from "a music starved into a music-conscious nation," he says.

★ ★ ★

Not too long ago your performing artist (like everybody's fine china) had to be an import to be really good. Nowadays American artists, while they may not get the Jenny Lind treatment, not only are copping top billing at home, they're being widely and wildly acclaimed abroad.

Time was when most of our great musicians came from overseas . . . conductors, vocalists, composers, performing musicians . . . Caruso, Mary Garden, Toscanini, Koussevitzky, Schuman-Heink, John McCormack, Kreisler.

Now we've homegrown talent aplenty to export.

Leonard Bernstein, Roberta Peters, Rise Stevens, Marian Anderson, Mahalia Jackson, Richard Tucker, Eileen Farrell, Van Cliburn, Leon Fleisher, Jerome Hines, Rosalind Elias, Leonard Warren, Leontyne Price.

Wherever our orchestras, choral groups or soloists perform, they collect rave notices and make front page news.

Said the Manila Times about a Richard Tucker concert: "Mr. Tucker is verily a tribute to the productive capacity of the United States which has been running out with magnificent success everything from canned soup to cyclatrons . . ."

When Sylvia Marlowe, harpsichordist, gave a 25-concert tour of the Far East she wound up a cover girl on several magazines. Our artists, she says, can be the best ambassadors America has to offer. Businessmen and diplomats move only in their own world. The artists speaks an international language. We have shown the world that we are no longer a cultural wasteland. The world is avid for more, she reports.

★ ★ ★

America, for a long time now, has written the music much of the world sings. Do-Re-Mi, hit of Sound of Music when it opened in Boston a a few months ago, can be heard on a bus in old Bankok.

Our more serious composers are winning recognition on the world front, too. Piston, Thomson, Copeland, Irving Fine, to name a few.

NEXT—Out of the woods and really on the move.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Advocate
SHARON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,200
APR 21 1960

X

Telescoop..

By TESS THE TATTLER

DOT DENNEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra flies to Tokyo next week; two prominent members of the Sharon Civic Orchestra are also getting around with one vacationing in Paris and her husband en route to India; the Sharon Civic Orchestra itself takes off "Around the World in Eighty Days" on May 20-21 with the Sharon High School Auditorium as the scene of this symphonic understaking.

Dr. Samuel Watson Peck and daughter Marcia of Belleville, N.J., were in town on Easter Sunday visiting relatives.

Measles, measles and more measles seem to constitute a major epidemic this Spring.

Miss Karen Krug of Brook Rd. was hostess at a party of twenty-two teen-agers last Friday evening with Miss Cindy Keeling as the guest of honor. The latter was in town for the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Eastman and daughter Sally of Billings Street visited Mrs. Eastman's sister in Montreal for four days over the past week end.

Mrs. Elizabeth Kallman and two children of Brattleboro, Vermont, were the weekend guests of the Gerald Smiths of Goddard Road over Easter. Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Kallman and children went to see "West Side Story."

EXONIAN - 2/27/60

Cox on Leave of Absence in Spring; To Manage Symphony's Orient Tour

Academy Secretary William J. Cox has been granted a leave of absence for the spring term in order to become advance manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of the Orient. He will return to PEA late in June.

Departing March 21, Mr. Cox will proceed directly to the Far East where he will travel the route which the Boston Symphony will later follow through Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand. After checking on the arrangements made for the 120-man group in the 22 cities on the tour, he will join the orchestra in Korea, where it will begin the series of concerts.

The symphony's tour is part of President Dwight D. Eisenhower's Cultural Presentations Program, under State Department supervision, administered through the American National Theatre and Academy. The Boston Symphony will be the first major American symphonic group to play in these areas.

Commented Mr. Cox, "I'm looking forward to seeing friends of the Academy over there, in particular, Anthony Smith, of Webster butt-room fame, in Melbourne," The piano-playing Mr. Smith taught science last year at PEA while on a leave of absence.

Mr. Cox has been associated with the Boston Symphony for the past six years, in a promotional and fund-raising capacity, as the Chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer music school.

The travel on Mr. Cox's advance portion of the symphony trip will be entirely by air except for portions of the itinerary in Japan, which includes visits to 14 major cities from Sapporo on the north, to Fukioko on the south.

7

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 48,208
MAR 22 1960

Boston Symphony Plans 8-Week Tour of Far East

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make an eight-week tour of Japan and other far eastern countries leaving Boston on April 25 by chartered planes and returning to Boston on June 19 to prepare for the six-week Berkshire Festival.

* * *

THOMAS D. PERRY JR., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the tour is the orchestra's third foreign trip and will be made as part of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, with associate conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland plus the 104 musicians and staff will make the trip.

* * *

THE GROUP will arrive in Korea on April 27 and give two concerts there, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. About 22 concerts will be given in [illegible] Japanese cities during May. Six of the concerts will be presented in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. In New Zealand there will be two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before the orchestra's return to the United States.

* * *

THE CONDUCTORS plan to perform 22 compositions by 19 composers on the tour.

Included in the tentative list are eight works by seven American composers, Samuel Barber, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance;" Easley Blackwood, "Symphony No. 1; Copland's "Symphony No. 1" and the "Suite from The Tender Land;" Norman dello Joio, "Variations, Chaconne and Finale;" Leon Kirchner, "Toccata;" Walter Piston, 'Symphony No. 6;" and William Schuman, "New England Triptych."

FEB 26 1960

U.S. Culture Stakes a World Claim—V

Boston Symphony Sets Classic Pace Abroad

By EDGAR J. DRISCOLL JR.

America has more major symphony orchestras than big league baseball clubs.

DRISCOLL

Today there are more than 30 major symphonies in cities throughout the United States, plus 700 professional and semiprofessional orchestras. In addition, there are thousands of amateur groups, made up of people who simply play for the love of it.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which heads for the Far East this Spring, will get a kind of reception that once was rated only by heads of state.

★ ★ ★

When the New York Philharmonic toured Latin America a year and a half ago, music lovers toted food and mattresses and slept on sidewalks for 24 hours before a concert to try and buy a ticket. Last year it was the rage of Russia.

At home the picture is almost as rewarding. "At no time in the history of American society have so many people devoted so much time, effort and money to the intangible rewards gained from serious music," says one expert in the field.

Today, music reproduced and "live" floods the country. It is provided by top-notch performing organizations which in turn have been provided by first-rate music schools. Says John N. Burk, writing in a recent concert bulletin of the B.S.O.: "This abundance is astonishing if directly compared to the status 50 years ago."

Then, he says, music was an imported activity. To study music, one went to Leipzig, Frankfurt or Paris. Boston and New York had the only permanent orchestras on the Eastern seaboard. Chicago, St. Louis and Cincinnati in the Midwest. The great West was, musically speaking, virgin territory. Two string quartets sufficed for the whole country. Opera hardly existed outside of New York.

In the short 50 years, thanks to recordings and transmission of good music by radio, we have been transformed from "a music starved into a music-conscious nation," he says.

* * *

Not too long ago your performing artist (like everybody's fine china) had to be an import to be really good. Nowadays American artists, while they may not get the Jenny Lind treatment, not only are copping top billing at home, they're being widely and wildly acclaimed abroad.

Time was when most of our great musicians came from overseas . . . conductors, vocalists, composers, performing musicians . . . Caruso, Mary Garden, Toscanini, Koussevitzky, Schuman-Heink, John McCormack, Kreisler.

Now we've homegrown talent aplenty to export.

Leonard Bernstein, Roberta Peters, Rise Stevens, Marian Anderson, Mahalia Jackson, Richard Tucker, Eileen Farrell, Van Cliburn, Leon Fleisher, Jerome Hines, Rosalind Elias, Leonard Warren, Leontyne Price.

Wherever our orchestras, choral groups or soloists perform, they collect rave notices and make front page news.

Said the Manila Times about a Richard Tucker concert: "Mr. Tucker is verily a tribute to the productive capacity of the United States which has been running out with magnificent success everything from canned soup to cyclatrons . . ."

When Sylvia Marlowe, harpsichordist, gave a 25-concert tour of the Far East she wound up a cover girl on several magazines. Our artists, she says, can be the best ambassadors America has to offer. Businessmen and diplomats move only in their own world. The artists speaks an international language. We have shown the world that we are no longer a cultural wasteland. The world is avid for more, she reports.

* * *

America, for a long time now, has written the music much of the world sings. Do-Re-Mi, hit of Sound of Music when it opened in Boston a a few months ago, can be heard on a bus in old Bankok.

Our more serious composers are winning recognition on the world front, too. Piston, Thomson, Copeland, Irving Fine, to name a few.

NEXT—Out of the woods and really on the move.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Advocate
SHARON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,200
APR 21 1960

Telescoop..

By TESS THE TATTLER

DOT DENNEN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra flies to Tokyo next week; two prominent members of the Sharon Civic Orchestra are also getting around with one vacationing in Paris and her husband en route to India; the Sharon Civic Orchestra itself takes off "Around the World in Eighty Days" on May 20-21 with the Sharon High School Auditorium as the scene of this symphonic understaking.

Dr. Samuel Watson Peck and daughter Marcia of Belleville, N.J., were in town on Easter Sunday visiting relatives.

Measles, measles and more measles seem to constitute a major epidemic this Spring.

Miss Karen Krug of Brook Rd. was hostess at a party of twenty-two teen-agers last Friday evening with Miss Cindy Keeling as the guest of honor. The latter was in town for the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Eastman and daughter Sally of Billings Street visited Mrs. Eastman's sister in Montreal for four days over the past week end.

Mrs. Elizabeth Kallman and two children of Brattleboro, Vermont, were the weekend guests of the Gerald Smiths of Goddard Road over Easter. Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Kallman and children went to see "West Side Story."

EXONIAN - 3/17/60

Cox on Leave of Absence in Spring; To Manage Symphony's Orient Tour

Academy Secretary William J. Cox has been granted a leave of absence for the spring term in order to become advance manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of the Orient. He will return to PEA late in June.

Departing March 21, Mr. Cox will proceed directly to the Far East where he will travel the route which the Boston Symphony will later follow through Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand. After checking on the arrangements made for the 120-man group in the 22 cities on the tour, he will join the orchestra in Korea, where it will begin the series of concerts.

The symphony's tour is part of President Dwight D. Eisenhower's Cultural Presentations Program, under State Department supervision, administered through the American National Theatre and Academy. The Boston Symphony will be the first major American symphonic group to play in these areas.

Commented Mr. Cox, "I'm looking forward to seeing friends of the Academy over there, in particular, Anthony Smith, of Webster butt-room fame, in Melbourne." The piano-playing Mr. Smith taught science last year at PEA while on a leave of absence.

Mr. Cox has been associated with the Boston Symphony for the past six years, in a promotional and fund-raising capacity, as the Chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer music school.

The travel on Mr. Cox's advance portion of the symphony trip will be entirely by air except for portions of the itinerary in Japan, which includes visits to 14 major cities from Sapporo on the north, to Fukioko on the south.

8

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

APR 25 1960

Music: Lively Boston

Symphony Ends Year and 'Met' Starts Tour

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 24—The Boston area, which was once the hub of intellectual life in this country, was a busy musical center this week-end.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ended its seventy-ninth season at Symphony Hall last night and spent today packing and girding itself for tomorrow's departure for its tour of Taiwan, Japan, the Philippines and Australia.

The Metropolitan Opera, with a performance of "Il Trovatore" this afternoon, completed the first leg of its annual spring tour. Its eight performances have played to sellout audiences in the 4,200-seat Metropolitan Theatre. Subscriptions were 12 per cent ahead of last year's record, and the remaining tickets were gone four weeks before the visit began.

•

The Boston Symphony, which has had a banner year, said farewell to its home patrons in a program that consisted of Jean Martinon's Prelude and Toccata, dedicated to the conductor, Charles Munch; the greatly promising Symphony No. 1 of the young American, Easley Blackwood, and Brahms' Second Symphony.

The Blackwood symphony will be played a number of times on the forthcoming tour, as will works by Aaron Copland, Samuel Barber, Norman Dello Joio, Leon Kirchner and Walter Piston. Despite complaints from Japanese quarters and from Boston sources that the orchestra should not be obliged to offer an American piece on each program, this observer believes that the State Department is right to make such a request.

An American orchestra has a duty to perform the music of Americans. If Mr. Blackwood's symphony, for example, is not a masterpiece, it is a substantial, imaginative effort. The Japanese know that our orchestras can play the classics. They have little knowledge of what our composers can do.

•

A remarkable demonstration of this point took place in Cambridge on Friday night. As a tribute to Mr. Piston, who is retiring from the Harvard faculty after more than three decades as a teacher, the university's music department presented an evening of his chamber music at the Sanders Theatre on the campus.

This program represented only one aspect of Mr. Piston's output, which has embraced a variety of forms and a wealth of compositions. And yet it provided a rewarding view of the composer's gifts.

Here was music of wit and feeling, written with directness, refinement and natural dignity. Here were works that reflected admirably the practical musician who was attracted to a diversity of combinations and who could find a happy blend of musical statements for whatever instruments that happened to draw his attention.

The earliest work [illegible] play was a suite of three pieces for flute, clarinet and bassoon, dating from [illegible]. It had a cheerful transparency. The most [illegible] was the String Quartet No. 4, written in 1951, which revealed polished craftsmanship and sustained lyricism.

Walter Piston

One was impressed throughout this program by Mr. Piston's rich vein of songfulness. In an age that inhibits lyricism, Mr. Piston has had the courage to write as he felt. Call him old-fashioned if you will; you cannot regard him as anything but honest.

•

His Passacaglia for Piano (1943) has a kind of classic solidity and fullness. His Duo for Viola and 'Cello (1949) is mellow and serene; its slow movement is a long-breathed, lyric meditation. And the Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946) shows how idiomatically and deftly the composer could combine strings and woodwinds.

The performers were Ruth Posselt, Luise Vosgerchian and the following leading players from the Boston Symphony: Richard Burgin, Joseph De Pasquale, Samuel Mayes, George Moleux, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi and Sherman Walt.

Mr. Piston himself conducted the Divertimento. The audience recalled him repeatedly as if it could not stop expressing its friendship and admiration. As teacher and composer he has exercised a balanced, stimulating influence on our music. In the years to come, when he will be free to devote all his time to writing music, he will surely add to his own stature as a composer and continue to contribute to the maturity of American composition.

France-Amérique — 24 Avril 1960

La musique

Musique et musiciens français aux Etats-Unis

CE serait pur chauvinisme de prétendre que la musique française occupe aux Etats-Unis la première place — en admettant qu'il y en ait une. Même en France, pareille affirmation serait à peine véridique. Toutefois, il n'en est pas moins vrai que l'influence de la pensée musicale française en Amérique est considérable, égale seulement à l'immense prestige dont jouissent les interprètes de nationalité ou de formation française.

Afin de mieux pouvoir mesurer la puissance de cette influence, nous aimerions préciser les caractéristiques de ce qu'on appelle communément "musique française".

Les Français, élevés dans la grande tradition cartésienne, sont maîtres logiciens; encore sous le coup de la merveilleuse renaissance classique des XVIIème et XVIIIème siècles, ils sont également maîtres du "style"; enfin, ils sont maîtres artisans, puisque seule une oeuvre sans défauts est susceptible de satisfaire leur soif de moyens rigoureusement disciplinés pour les exprimer d'une manière appropriée, compatible avec leur nature intrinsèque.

De plus, les Français ont toujours témoigné un profond respect pour tout ce qui est "forme" et "plan" dans toute activité créatrice de l'esprit et notamment en matière de musique, où le facteur "forme" est de l'essence même de l'art. Selon Debussy, la précision et la densité de la forme constituent l'un des traits caractéristiques du génie français.

LA musique est, par définition, l'art et la science des sons "organisés" suivant des formes préétablies, dans le but d'exprimer et de provoquer des "climats" affectifs artistiques. L'on comprend donc aisément pourquoi l'esprit français, avec son acuité rationnelle et son constant souci du style, a placé la France dans une situation prépondérante là où, précisément, "organisation" et "forme" sont les clefs de voûte de l'édifice artistique entier.

Les mêmes qualités du génie musical français se retrouvent dans l'"école" française d'interprétation, en vertu de l'importance qu'elle accorde à l'art subtil du phrasé, dont la maîtrise permet aux exécutants élevés dans cette discipline délicieuse de rendre plausible le "message" d'une oeuvre musicale et d'en exprimer la substance avec une rhétorique éloquente.

Bien sûr, les Américains ont subi — et subissent toujours (n'en déplaise à M. Paul-Henry Lang) l'influence de la culture musicale française à un degré tel que l'observateur le plus superficiel ne saurait manquer de s'en apercevoir. Depuis près de trois quarts de siècle, l'énorme majorité des musiciens américains dignes de ce nom ont une formation artistique française, soit directe — aux Conservatoires de Paris et de Fontainebleau, à la "Schola Cantorum", auprès de Nadia Boulanger, Darius Milhaud, Edgar Varèse, etc. — soit indirecte, lorsqu'il s'agit des deuxième et troisième générations.

ET puis, il y a les magnifiques et grands interprètes français qui passent une portion importante de leur temps aux Etats-Unis et qui ont contribué, plus que quiconque, à façonner et à rehausser le goût du public américain.

● Citons, en premier, le vénérable Pierre Monteux, qui vient de fêter so[illegible]ème anniversaire en dirigeant, [illegible], la IXème Symphonie [illegible], et qui continue à faire de la musique avec une [illegible]eur et une souplesse à peine [illegible]ables.

● Paul Par[illegible], chef d'orchestre éminent, ancien président des Concerts Colonne et des Concerts de Monte-Carlo, auteur d'ouvrages de grand mérite, comme la "Messe" ou la "Symphonie en Ut", est actuellement directeur de l'orchestre de Détroit, dont il a fait, en l'espace de quelques années, un instrument symphonique qui compte parmi les meilleurs.

● A Boston, Charles Münch préside avec une autorité magistrale aux hautes destinées du légendaire orchestre de la métropole voisine. Après avoir mené sa phalange de triomphe en triomphe, il y a deux ans, à travers l'Europe et la Russie soviétique, Münch partira avec ses musiciens, d'ici quelques jours, pour une tournée de deux mois en Extrême-Orient. Ils sont rarissimes, les prélats de la musique qui se soient dévoués autant que Charles Münch au service de la musique, qui aient obtenu des résultats aussi spectaculaires et qui soient entourés de tant de respect et d'affection.

● Vladimir Golschmann, après avoir mené d'une manière glorieuse la barque de l'orchestre de Saint-Louis pendant vingt-six ans, et avoir ainsi gravé son nom en lettres d'or dans l'Histoire de la Musique en Amérique, a été invité à doter la ville de Tulsa, en Oklahoma, d'un orchestre moderne.

● A Salt Lake City, voici onze ans depuis que Maurice Abravanel est le chef de la "Utah Symphony", voué à l'admiration sans réserve de ses [illegible]toyens.

● A New-York enfin, que ce soit à la chaire d'orchestre du Conservatoire Juilliard ou au pupitre du Metropolitan Opera, Jean Morel dispense généreusement, avec autant de compétence que d'esprit, un océan d'érudition musicale.

ATTARDONS-NOUS un instant de plus sur le chapitre "orchestres" afin de mentionner — hélas, sans les nommer, car ils sont légion — les merveilleux musiciens, français de nationalité, de coeur ou d'esprit, en l'absence desquels les groupements symphoniques américains perdraient leurs principaux titres de gloire.

Parmi les grands virtuoses français, il n'y en a pas un qui n'ait pas été triomphalement accueilli aux Etats-Unis, soit d'une manière permanente, soit à l'occasion de tournées transcontinentales. Zino Francescatti, l'un des plus formidables interprètes-virtuoses du violon, a élu domicile en Amérique, où il fait honneur tant à sa profession qu'à son pays natal. L'incomparable Robert Casadesus, sa femme, Gaby, et leur fils Jean sont la famille musicale la plus aimée, la plus admirée des Etats-Unis. Lily Pons et Martial Singher sont toujours les grands favoris de nos publics, qui ont également adopté Daniel Guilet, Léon Temerson et tant d'autres encore.

Oui, la culture musicale française a répandu ses bienfaits aux Etats-Unis, tant et si bien que l'on peut affirmer, sans crainte d'erreur ni d'exagération, qu'elle constitue l'élément le plus précieux du patrimoine national musical de l'Amérique.

Edgard FEDER

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 60,734

MAR 11 1960

Boston Symphony Picked For Tour Of Far East

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department announced yesterday that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take an eight-week concert tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand, beginning the end of April.

The orchestra will give 37 concerts in Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand.

The tour, the state department said, will be sponsored by President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations. This program provides financial assistance to offset deficits that cannot be covered by the revenues from commercial performances abroad, the State Department said.

The itinerary for the Boston Symphony tour:

April 29-May 1 — Seoul, Korea.

May 3-30 — Japan, including performances at Osaka and Tokyo.

June 1-3 — Manila, P.I.

June 5-14 — Australia, including concerts at Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide.

June 16-17 — New Zealand, with concerts at Wellington and Auckland.

9

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W.

DEC 19 1959

Munch, Boston Symph. To Tour Orient In '60

NEW YORK—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, RCA Victor recording artists, have announced their acceptance of an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries in the spring of 1960. The tour will be made under the President's special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre Academy.

The tour, which is expected to begin on or about May [illegible] six to eight weeks, will open in [illegible] where the orchestra will [illegible] the Osaka Festival. Other Japanese cities will be visited. The President's Program and ANTA ha[illegible] the itinerary for the other East Asian countries [illegible] that the Philippines, [illegible] and Korea will be included.

This will be the third foreign tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It visited Europe [illegible] 1956 it was the first American orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

Most recent RCA Victor recordings by Munch and the Boston Symphony include: Blackwood Symphony No. 1 and the Haieff Symphony No. 2 released this month and Schubert Symphony in C [illegible] ("Great"). The Boston Symphony recently won a 1959 Grammy Award for "Best Classical Performance by an Orchestra" for its recording of Debussy's "Images."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box [illegible], Boston 6 • Richmond [illegible]
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 5,920

[illegible] 25 [illegible]

Boston Symphony Tour Announced

Itinerary Is Listed For 8-Week Trip

Thomas D. Perry Jr, Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces the tentative itinerary for the orchestra's forthcoming eight week tour of Japan and other Far Eastern countries. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as part of the president's special international program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Music Director, with Associate Conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland plus the 104 musicians and staff will depart Boston April 25 by chartered planes. After a change of planes on the West Coast, the orchestra will fly to Korea where they arrive April 27.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May. Six of these concerts will be held in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Australia the orchestra will fly to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens on July 18 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Messrs. Munch, Burgin and Copland plan to perform 22 compositions by 19 composers on the tour. Included in the tentative list are eight works by seven American composers: Samuel Barber, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance"; Easley Blackwood, Symphony No. 1; Aaron Copland, Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from "The Tender Land"; Norman dello Joio, "Variations, Chaconne and Finale"; Leon Kirchner, "Toccata"; Walter [illegible]

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS-TELEGRAM
D. 85,105

MAR 17 1960

Abravanel To Direct Academy Sessions

By CONRAD B. HARRISON
Deseret News Music Editor

Maurice Abravanel, conductor and musical director of the Utah Symphony Orchestra since 1947, will spend at least eight weeks of his busy summer at Santa Barbara, Calif., again this year.

For the sixth consecutive season the Utah maestro will be musical director of the Music Academy of the West's summer session.

Conrad B. Harrison

Also on the staff for the eight-week session, beginning July 4, will be a pair of Utah Symphony first desk people. In the orchestral division again will be Sally Peck, viola principal, and Robert Lentz, timpanist and percussion expert, of the Utah orchestra. In private life they are Mr. and Mrs. Lentz.

Another member of the staff at the sessions will be Gyorgy Sandor, piano, a soloist with the Utah Symphony recently, while handling vocal chores again will be Lotte Lehman.

Off the sounding board: Looking even farth[illegible] ahead, Mr. Abravanel is s[illegible] to guest conduct the [illegible] harmonic Orchestr[illegible] on May 9 and 10, 1[illegible] Utah Symphony O[illegible] the way, will be [illegible] in [illegible] Beethoven "Lenor[illegible] No. 3 and "Pastor[illegible] ny on the Kenneco[illegible] Hour over KSL r[illegible] at 8:30 p.m. . . .

Puccini's "Tosca,[illegible] Zinka Milanov and Euge[illegible] in leading roles, [illegible] for the Metropolitan Opera broadcast over KSL [illegible] Saturday at 1 p.m. . . . [illegible] ing Saturday Ren[illegible] baldi, Richard Tucker an[illegible] Bastianini will appear [illegible] dano's "Andrea Ch[illegible]" . . .

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand this spring, leaving Boston April 25 and returning June 19. . . . First concert will be in Korea April 27, after which 22 concerts will be presented in 22 Japanese cities before going on to other countries. . . . Conductor Charles Munch will be spelled by Associate Conductor Richard Burgin and Guest Conductor Aaron Copland. . . . Works of seven American composers will be included on the programs. . . .

2/3/60

Bostonians' Travels

According to a recently announced tentative itinerary the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give thirty-six concerts in five countries during its Far Eastern spring tour, with Charles Munch, Richard Burgin and Aaron Copland conducting. Leaving Boston by air April 25, the orchestra will arrive in Korea two days later for a concert in Seoul and another probably in Pusan. Flying to Tokyo May 1, it will give six concerts there, two in Osaka and fourteen in other Japanese cities.

Three concerts will be given in Manila early in June before the Bostonians reach Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. They will also play at Auckland and Wellington in New Zealand before the orchestra returns to Boston June 19 and opens its six week Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. on Friday, July 8, with Mr. Munch and Pierre Monteux conducting.

• • •

Berkshire Center

Mr. Munch will again be director of the Berkshire Music Center for its 1960 session at Tanglewood, July 3 to Aug. 14, with Mr. Copland as chairman of the faculty and Ralph Berkowitz as dean. The opera department, which was suspended last summer, will resume its activities under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, who returns after a year's leave of absence. Full information about the Center may be obtained from its registrar, Miss R. Bossler, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Members of the Boston Symphony will hold auditions here for instrumentalists who wish to study orchestra and chamber music playing at the Center. Timpanists and percussionists will be heard at 7 p. m. Wednesday at Carnegie Hall, and string and wind players will have their hearings from 1 to 4 Friday in Room 503 of the Juilliard School. Harpists should arrange for audition appointments through Miss Bossler at Symphony Hall.

• • •

Randall's Island Jazz

Bo[illegible] Plan Spring [illegible] The Far East

BOSTON, Dec. 8.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first Far Eastern tour this spring under the sponsorship of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, which is administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

The tour, which will open about May 1 and will take from six to eight weeks, will include various Japanese cities and probably the Philippines, Formosa and Korea. In Osaka, the concerts will be among the major events of that city's annual spring festival.

This will be the Boston Symphony's third foreign tour. It went to Europe in 1952 and also in 1956, when it was the first American orchestra to play in the Soviet Union.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box [illegible], Boston 6 • Richmond [illegible]
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 194,909

MAR 12 1960

Itinerary for Symphony Tour

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the tentative itinerary for the Orchestra's forthcoming eight weeks tour in the Far East. The tour, the Orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Charles Munch, music director, with associate conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland, plus the 104 musicians and staff, will leave Boston Apr. 25 by chartered planes. After a change of planes on the West Coast, the orchestra will fly to Korea, where they will arrive Apr. 27.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the Orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May, six in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the Orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Austarlia the Orchestra will enplane to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The Boston Symphony will arrive back in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens July 8 at Tanglewood in Lenox.

9

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W.

DEC 19 1959

Munch, Boston Symph. To Tour Orient In '60

NEW YORK—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, RCA Victor recording artists, have announced their acceptance of an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries [illegible] of 1960. The tour will be made under the President's special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the [illegible] Theatre Academy [illegible]

The t[illegible] begin on or a[illegible] to eight w[illegible] where the orchestra [illegible] the Osaka Festival, [illegible] cities will be visited. Th[illegible] Program and ANTA [illegible] the itinerary [illegible] East Asian countries [illegible]ed that the Philippines, [illegible] and Korea will be included [illegible] tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It visited Europe [illegible] 1956 it was the [illegible] orchestra to perform [illegible]

Most recent [illegible] recordings by Munch [illegible] Symphony include: Black[illegible] No. 1 and the Haieff [illegible] 2 released this month [illegible] Symphony in C [illegible] "Great"). The Boston Symphony recently won a 1959 Grammy Award for "Best Classical Performance by an Orchestra" for its recording of Debussy's "Images."

[illegible]
[illegible], Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 5,920

Boston Symphony Tour Announced

Itinerary [illegible]ted For 8-Week Trip

Thomas D. Perry Jr, Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces the tentative itinerary for the orchestra's forthcoming eight week tour of Japan and other Far Eastern countries. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as part of the president's special international program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Music Director, with Associate Conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland plus the 104 musicians and staff will depart Boston April 25 by chartered planes. After a change of planes on the West Coast, the orchestra will fly to Korea where they arrive April 27.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May. Six of these concerts will be held in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Australia the orchestra will fly to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens on July 18 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Messrs. Munch, Burgin and Copland plan to perform 22 compositions by 19 composers on the tour. Included in the tentative list are eight works by seven American composers: Samuel Barber, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance"; Easley Blackwood, Symphony No. 1; Aaron Copland, Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from "The Tender Land"; Norman dello Joio, "Variations, Chaconne and Finale"; Leon Kirchner, "Toccata"; Walter

---

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS-TELEGRAM
D. 85,105

MAR 17 1960

Abravanel To Direct Academy Sessions

By CONRAD B. HARRISON
Deseret News Music Editor

Maurice Abravanel, conductor and musical director of the Utah Symphony Orchestra since 1947, will spend at least eight weeks of his busy summer at Santa Barbara, Calif., again this year.

For the sixth consecutive season the Utah maestro will be musical director of the Music Academy [illegible] of the West's summer session.

Conrad B. Harrison

Also on the staff for the eight-week session, beginning July 4, will be a pair of Utah Symphony first desk people. In the orchestral division again will be Sally Peck, viola principal, and Robert Lentz, timpanist and percussion expert, of the Utah orchestra. In private life they are Mr. and Mrs. Lentz.

Another member of the staff at the sessions will be Gyorgy Sandor, piano, a soloist with the Utah Symphony recently, while handling vocal chores again will be Lotte Lehman.

Off the sounding board: Looking even farth[illegible]ahead, Mr. Abravanel is sc[illegible] to guest conduct the [illegible] harmonic Orchestr[illegible] on May 9 and 10, 1[illegible] Utah Symphony C[illegible] the way, will be [illegible] Beethoven "Leno[illegible] No. 3 and "Pastor[illegible] ny on the Kenneco[illegible] Hour over KSL r[illegible] at 8:30 p.m. . . .

Puccini's "Tosca," [illegible]inka Milanov and Eugen[illegible] in leading roles, [illegible] for the Metropoli[illegible] broadcast over KSL [illegible] urday at 1 p.m. . . . [illegible]ing Saturday Ren[illegible]di, Richard Tucker a[illegible]ore Bastianini will appe[illegible] dano's "Andrea Ch[illegible].

The Boston Sym[illegible] Orchestra will tour Kor[illegible] Japan, the Philippines, Austr[illegible] and New Zealand this spring, leaving Boston April 25 and returning June 19. . . . First concert will be in Korea April 27, after which 22 concerts will be presented in 22 Japanese cities before going on to other countries. . . . Conductor Charles Munch will be spelled by Associate Conductor Richard Burgin and Guest Conductor Aaron Copland. . . . Works of seven American composers will be included on the programs. . . .

3/13/60

Bostonians' Travels

According to a recently an[illegible] Orchestra will give [illegible]-six concerts in five countries during its Far Eastern spring tour, with Charles Munch, Richard Burgin and Aaron Copland conducting. Leaving Boston by air April 25, the orchestra will arrive in Korea two days later for a concert in Seoul and another probably in Pusan. Flying to Tokyo May 1, it will give six concerts there, two in Osaka and fourteen in other Japanese cities.

Three concerts will be given in Manila early in June before the Bostonians reach Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. They will also play at Auckland and Wellington in New Zealand before the orchestra returns to Boston June 19 and opens its six week Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. on Friday, July 8, with Mr. Munch and Pierre Monteux conducting.

• • •

Berkshire Center

Mr. Munch will again be director of the Berkshire Music Center for its 1960 session at Tanglewood, July 3 to Aug. 14, with Mr. Copland as chairman of the faculty and Ralph Berkowitz as dean. The opera department, which was suspended last summer, will resume its activities under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, who returns after a year's leave of absence. Full information about the Center may be obtained from its registrar, Miss R. Bossler, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Members of the Boston Symphony will hold auditions here for instrumentalists who wish to study orchestra and chamber music playing at the Center. Timpanists and percussionists will be heard at 7 p. m. Wednesday at Carnegie Hall, and string and wind players will have their hearings from 1 to 4 Friday in Room 503 of the Juilliard School. Harpists should arrange for audition appointments through Miss Bossler at Symphony Hall.

• • •

The Far East

BOSTON, Dec. 8.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first Far Eastern tour this spring under the sponsorship of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, which is administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

The tour, which will open about May 1 and will take from six to eight weeks, will include various Japanese cities and probably the Philippines, Formosa and Korea. In Osaka, the concerts will be among the major events of that city's annual spring festival.

This will be the Boston Symphony's third foreign tour. It went to Europe in 1952 and also in 1956, when it was the first American orchestra to play in the Soviet Union.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box [illegible] Boston 6 • Richmond 2-[illegible]
[illegible] Globe
[illegible], Mass.
Independent
Circ. [illegible]

MAR 12 1960

Itinerary for Symphony Tour

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the tentative itinerary for the Orchestra's forthcoming eight weeks tour in the Far East. The tour, the Orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Charles Munch, music director, with associate conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland, plus the 104 musicians and staff, will leave Boston Apr. 25 by chartered planes. After a change of planes on the West Coast, the orchestra will fly to Korea, where they will arrive Apr. 27.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the Orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May, six in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the Orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Austarlia the Orchestra will enplane to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The Boston Symphony will arrive back in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens July 8 at Tanglewood in Lenox.

10

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 335,486 S. 527,002

DEC 13 1959

BEFORE REHEARSAL BEGINS — Leonard Bernstein consults with David Keiser, left, and Carlos Moseley about Bach's Concerto for Three Pianos, which the trio will play at this week's Philharmonic concerts.

Top Brass to Play Concert

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Leonard Bernstein's two fellow soloists in this week's Philharmonic performances of Bach's three-piano Concerto in C major at Carnegie Hall are prominent in Philharmonic affairs, but this will be their debut in a concert of this orchestra. They are David M. Keiser, the Philharmonic-Symphony Society's president, and Carlos Moseley, its associate managing director. Both, however, have had prominent pianists as teachers. Mr. Keiser studied with the late Ernest Hutcheson at the Juilliard Graduate School, and Mr. Moseley was a pupil of the late Olga Samaroff at the Philadelphia Conservatory of Music.

After next Sunday's dual assignment, including the regular afternoon concert and the second concert of the series under Andre Kostelanetz in the evening, the Philharmonic will take a week off, reassembling Monday morning, Dec. 28, to begin rehearsals under Dimitri Mitropoulos' direction for the concerts of New Year's Eve and Jan. 1, 2 and 3.

• • •

Bostonians to Travel

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra visits Japan and probably other Far Eastern countries this spring, Charles Munch will share its conductorship with a guest leader not yet chosen. Since the orchestra will be away for six or eight weeks, beginning about May 1, those of its musicians who are also members of the Boston Pops Orchestra will have to miss that traditional spring series. But the Pops will take place as usual, with Arthur Fiedler conducting another ensemble. Even if the tour runs for the full eight weeks, the orchestra should be back in time for next summer's Berkshire Festival.

Meanwhile, owing to its current arduous schedule, the Boston Symphony has had to withdraw from the American Music Center's commissioning project sponsored by the Ford Foundation. It will be replaced by the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra under Theodore Bloomfield's direction.

• • •

St. Louis Musician

Leslie Parnas, who gives his first New York recital Thursday night in Town Hall, has been first cellist of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra since 1954. He was born in St. Louis twenty-eight years ago, and studied there before going to the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia. His brother, Richard, is also a first desk musician, heading the viola section of Washington's National Symphony.

• • •

Casals to Teach

Pablo Casals, who celebrates his eighty-third birthday Dec. 29, will hold a master class in cello playing during April at the University of California in Berkeley. Auditions for cellists wishing to join the class as performers will be held in Berkeley Jan. 28 to 30; applicants unable to go there at that time may send tape recordings. Students may also join the class as auditors. Information and application forms may be obtained from University Extension, University of California, Berkeley 4, Calif.

• • •

With the Orchestras

The Trenton Symphony Orchestra, which has changed its title to Greater Trenton Symphony, will open its season in the New Jersey capital's War Memorial tonight with Nicholas Harsanyi conducting and Rise Stevens as soloist. It has been placed on a firmer financial foundation through the efforts of a board headed by Mrs. Mary Roebling, Trenton banker.

The new Cambridge (Mass.) Civic Symphony Orchestra, which makes its debut tonight in Harvard's Sanders Theater under the direction of Victor Manusevitch, has commissioned seven composers to write works for its later programs. A Dutch work, Marius Flothuis' "Symphonic Music," will have its American premiere in Wednesday's concert of the Hartford Symphony under Fritz Mahler.

HERALD TRIBUNE, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1959

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

MAR 15 1960

BSO Plans Itinerary for Far East Tour

The tentative itinerary for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming eight-week tour of Japan and other Far East countries has been announced by Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. in Boston.

The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, with associate conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland plus the 104 musicians and staff will leave Boston April 25 by chartered planes. After a change of planes on the West Coast, the orchestra will fly to Korea, where they arrive April 27.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May. Six of these concerts will be in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Manila Concerts

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Australia the orchestra will fly to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festivale, which opens on July 8 at Tanglewood.

Munch, Burgin and Copland plan to perform 22 compositions by 19 composers on the tour. Included in the tentative list are eight works by seven American composers: Samuel Barber, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance"; Easley Blackwood, Symphony No. 1; Aaron Copland, Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from "The Tender Land"; Norman dello Joio, "Variations, Chaconne and Finale"; Leon Kirchner, "Toccata"; Walter Piston, Symphony No. 6; and William Schuman, "New England Triptych."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 141,391

MAR 11 1960

Hub Symphony To Make Tour Of Far East

Washington — (AP) — The State Department announced yesterday the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make an eight-week concert tour of the Far East beginning at the end of April.

The orchestra will give 37 concerts in Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

The tour, the State Department said, will be sponsored by President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations. This program provides financial assistance to offset deficits that cannot be covered by the revenues from commercial performances abroad, the State Department said.

The itinerary for the Boston Symphony tour:

April 20-May 1, Seoul, Korea.

May 3-30, Japan, including performances at Osaga and Tokyo.

June 1-3, Manila, P.I.

June 5-14, Australia, including concerts at Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide.

June 16-17, New Zealand, with concerts at Wellington and Auckland.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 28,770

DEC 8 - 1959

BSO To Tour Japan, East Asia Before 1960 Festival Season

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Japan and other East Asian countries late next spring, it was announced here today.

The tour, which will be made under the auspices of the President's special international program for cultural exchanges, will begin about May 1 and last six to eight weeks.

The opening date for the BSO Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be set after the precise dates of the tour have been determined.

The American National Theater and Academy, which administers the President's program, has made firm commitments for the BSO to appear in Japan, but the exact itinerary is yet to be determined. The orchestra will participate in a festival in Osaka, Japan.

The other East Asian nations on the tour have yet to be confirmed by ANTA, but it is anticipated that the Philippines, Formosa and Korea will be included.

The trip to the Far East will be the third international tour of the BSO. The orchestra visited Europe in 1952, and in 1956 it was the first American orchestra to play in Soviet Russia.

Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the BSO, will accompany the orchestra on the tour.

11

San Diego Tribune

CURTAIN CALL

- Polish Ballet Wins Ovations
- 100 Singing Dancers Perform
- Brilliant Costumes Used

By BRUNO USSHER

LOS ANGELES: Exuberant and expressive dancing won repeated ovations for the Polish State Folk Ballet (Slask) in its five-day engagement here at Philharmonic Auditorium under the Moss and Hayman management. This is the first visit of the company of nearly 100 singing dancers who are jointly sponsored by Impresario S. Hurok and the U.S. State Department.

USSHER

Watching the young people of the Slask, one is reminded of the program given last year by the Moiseyev dance company from Moscow While the latter displayed a dramatically more varied repertoire, the Slask likewise is rich in personalities, and richer yet in singers, soloists, and ensembles. While much of the singing borders on yelling, these vocal dynamics seem part of a general vitality which makes the Slask consistently attractive.

Slask dispenses with scenery. Frequent changes of brilliant costumes provide, however, a wealth of color which is enhanced by exciting tempos maintained by the founder of the troupe, Stanislav Hadyna, who functions as artistic chief and orchestra conductor. A versatile personality, Hadyna also has collected and arranged the folk songs and dances forming the Slask music. Suffice to add that these settings invariably are in good taste and thus are steeped in genuine folk feeling.

Sometimes one has the impression that the Slask dance technique owes not a little to the formalisms of classic ballet, but Polish character of these dances is maintained with great energy and spellbinding speed and rhythms. Nearly always one is aware of humor and emotional warmth, even during romantic episodes.

A tremendous happiness evidently fills the Slask program. These Polish dancers are a smiling lot, while theirs is also a wonderful exactitude of movement and gesture.

Choreography by Elwira Kaminska is of strict discipline, just as vocal numbers still have the flavor of folk-art. Even astoundingly high leaps and tricky foot rhythms seem spontaneous. There never is an attempt on the part of principal dancers or singers to show-off. They seem happy because of their special contributions to the "show" as a whole.

NEWS FROM BOSTON: Maestro Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony have announced their acceptance of an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries next Spring. The tour will be made under the President Eisenhower's special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater Academy.

The tour, which is expected to begin about May 1 and last from six to eight weeks, will open in Japan where the orchestra will perform in the Osaka Festival and in various Nipponese cities. What other Asiatic countries will be visited has not yet been determined, but the Philippines, Korea, and Formosa have been mentioned.

If the orchestra travels from the West Cosst, it is to be hoped that some concerts will be arranged here.

DOCUMENTARIES FOR TV: Weekly documentaries based on the six volume memoirs of Winston Churchill will be televised next fall by the American Broadcasting Company.

---

ew England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,240

MAY 1 1960

Boston Symphony's Tour

Having concluded the regular Symphony Hall season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has embarked on its first tour of the Far East, its third foreign venture in recent years. By the time the musicians return home to snatch some rest and prepare for the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in July and August they will have appeared in Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand. Unfortunately, the concerts in Korea were canceled.

The problems involved in arranging such a journey by a large, ensemble are many and complex (the long jumps are being made by plane), not the least being that of making up the programs. From a vast repertoire it is only a matter of selection to assure balance and variety, but when the concerts are broadcast the timing has to be exact, and there will be little chance for rehearsing.

There is also the matter of audience demand, and some disappointment on the part of the sponsors is reported on this score in Japan, where the standard classics are most favored by symphony patrons. Since the current tour was arranged under the President's Fund for International Cultural Presentations, at least one work by a contemporary American composer is required on each program.

Twenty - two concerts are scheduled in Japan, six of them in Tokyo, and some disappointment is inevitable that Charles Munch is not to conduct every one but will be relieved occasionally by concertmaster Richard Burgin and composer Aaron Copland. It is safe to predict that after a few samples of the shimmering strings, the brilliant brasses, the crisp attacks and crashing climaxes for which the Boston Symphony is famous under any competent conductor the customers will be completely convinced, and all will be well.

Meanwhile other tours by leading American orchestras are planned. In memory of its founder, the late Arturo Toscanini, the Symphony of the Air, directed by Leopold Stokowski, will visit Italy this spring, opening in Rome May 27. Before returning to New York it will make several stops elsewhere in Europe. Proceeds will be used to establish Toscanini memorial scholarships in Italian universities.

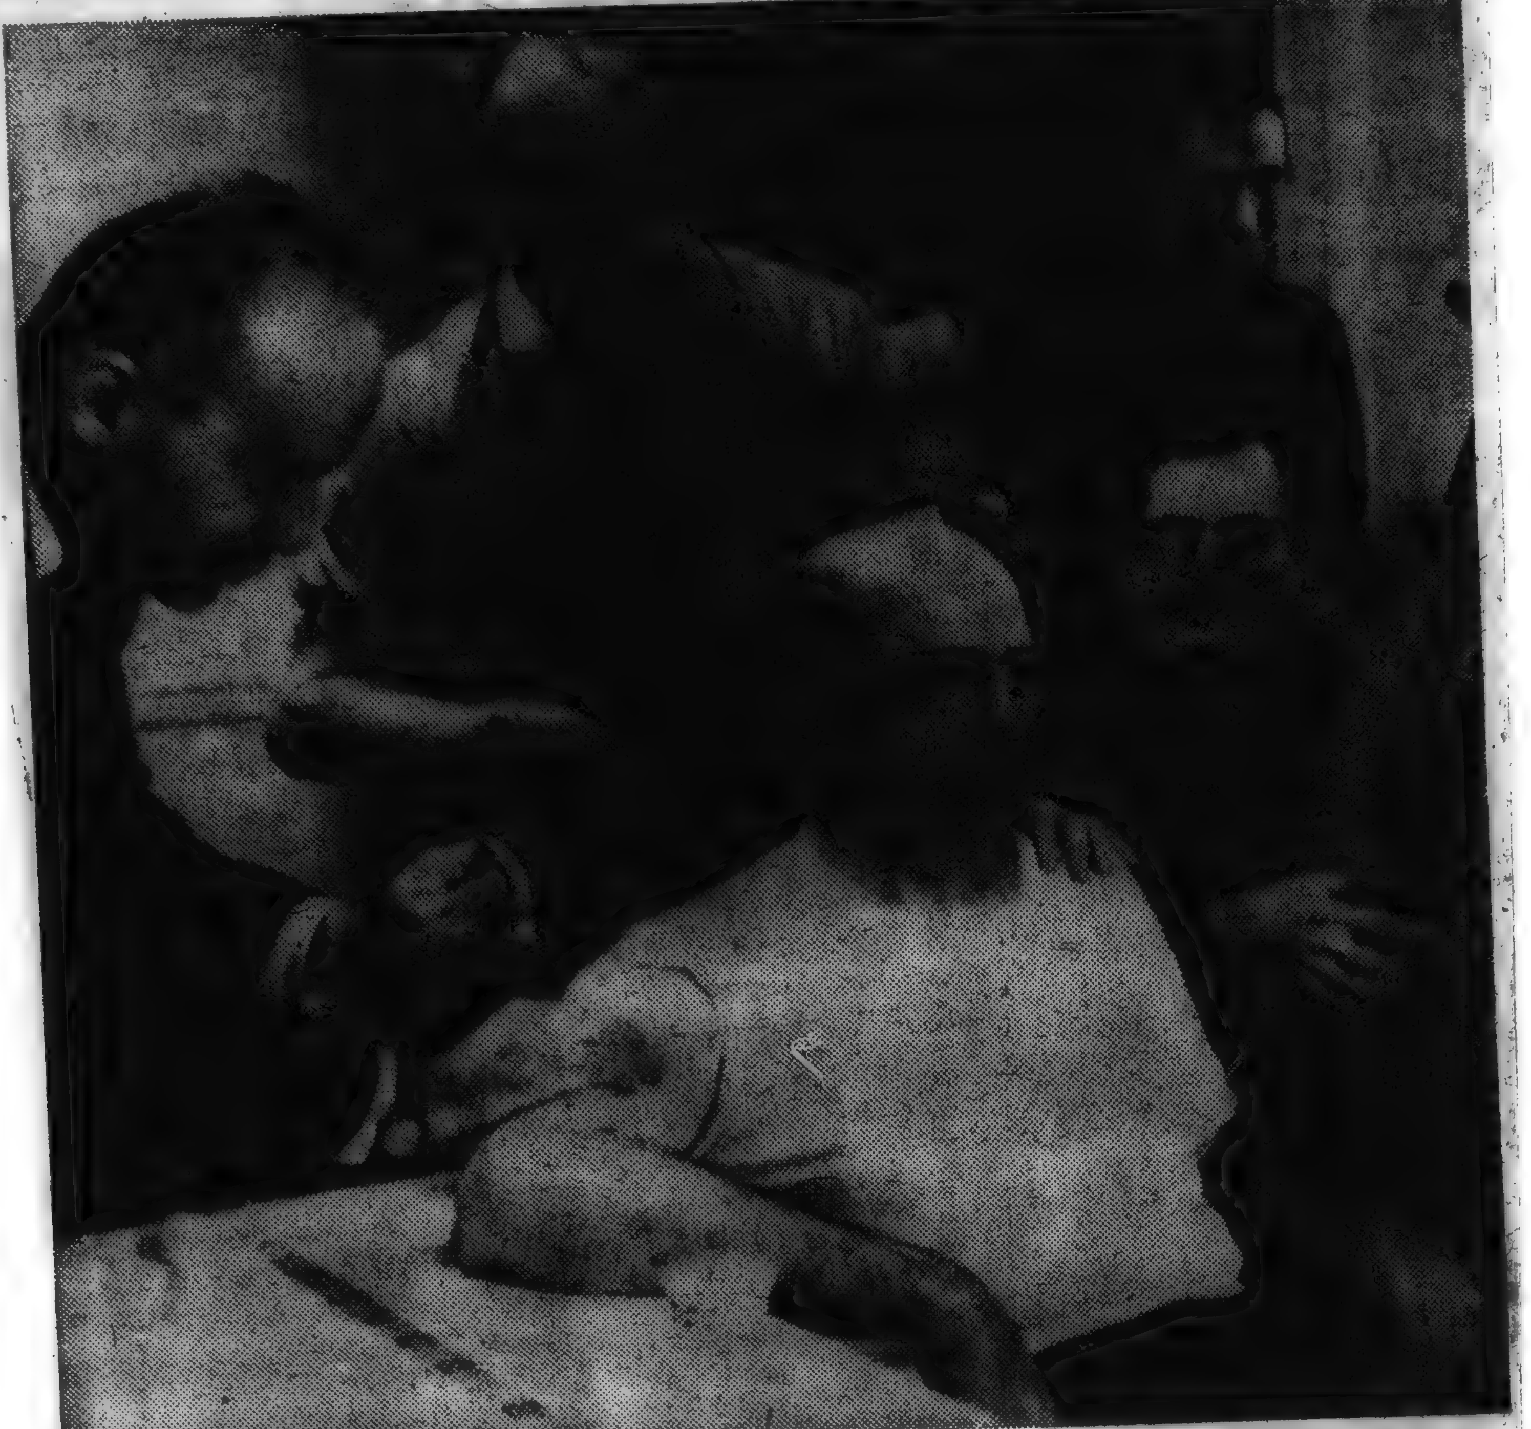
The New York Philharmonic has tentative plans for a tour of the Far West and Hawaii in August and September, after the close of the annual Lewisohn Stadium series; should arrangements fall through, a shorter tour of [illegible] may be made, with Leonard Bernstein conducting everywhere in [illegible] case. It is estimated that the esteemed Philadelphia Orchestra has traveled [illegible] miles, including two European tours, during its 60 seasons, giving 6705 oncerts in all, some 2600 of hem outside Philadelphia's Academy of Music.

American orchestras have been warmly received on recent visits to foreign lands; these extensive travels not only provide employment for the players before and after the regular season but also bring the ultimate in music to audiences that seldom hear it "live." Especially for music lovers who live where such opportunities are rare, immersion in the sweep and glow of time-honored masterworks, in the rapt hush of a packed concert hall, is something to remember always.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,804

APR 11 1960



FOR ART'S SAKE—Dr. Karen Chobanian is shown, left, administering typhoid shots to members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the group's forthcoming cultural tour to Asia and Australia. Receiving shots is assistant manager, Norman Shirk. In rear are Jerry Lipson, Kilton Vinal Smith, seated, and John SanAmbrogio. (UPI Telephoto)

13

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 14,500

DEC 10 1959

A New Approach

— Editorial —

The Boston Symphony Orchestra this week announced that it is making plans to visit the Far East next Spring. Plans of the visit are reported in our news columns; but there is more significance to the visit than appears from the straight news story.

The announcement of the BSO's trip comes while President Eisenhower is making his triumphal tour of the near east — letting people know what the Americans think and what they hope to achieve in the field of world peace.

It has long been established that a wider knowledge of the various cultures is one way to maintain the peace of the world and certainly the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been foremost in this field. The trip to the Far East will mark the third time that this group of talented musicians have gone abroad to demonstrate the depth of American culture to our friends — and our foes — in other parts of the world.

We know that their trip to the Far East will be another resounding success. We are proud that their home is in the Back Bay — but more so that as ambassadors of good will they can do more traveling through the world than can startling exhibitions of armed might.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,240

MAR 13 1960

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., MARCH 13, 1960

Boston Symphony to Make Extensive Far East Tour

BOSTON (UPI) — The world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its third foreign tour starting next month as part of President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

Eight-Week Trip

The trip, administered by the American National Theatre and Academy, will include Japan, Korea, Manila, Australia and New Zealand during its eight-week duration.

The orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, associate conductor Richard Burgin, and guest conductor Aaron Copland will head 104 musicians and staff who will leave April 25 by chartered planes.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, at Seoul and probably Pusan, before the extensive Japanese tour begins May 1. Some 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May.

To Return June 19

Three early June concerts are scheduled for Manila, seven in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne, and Adelaide, Australia, and two in Auckland and Wellington, New Zealand, before the orchestra returns to the United States.

The return date, June 19, will give the orchestra time to prepare for the start, July 8, of its annual six-week Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 182,816

DEC 8 - 1959

Tour of Japan For Symphony

First Far East Visit Expected This May

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have voted in favor of a Japanese tour at the conclusion of the 1959-60 season here The Herald learned yesterday. This will be the first time that the orchestra, one of the world's finest, has appeared in the Far East.

Although Symphony Hall officials refused to confirm the report, sources close to the orchestra declared the tour will probably be taken under U.S. State Department sponsorship and will bring the Boston Symphony into most of the major cities of Japan.

Earlier Tours

In 1956, the Symphony undertook a history-making tour of the Soviet Union, and in May, 1952, wrote a new chronicle of musical activity during its first European appearances. It is believed that the Japanese tour will occur, like these others, in the [illegible].

If so, the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler will again consist of an alternate group of musicians instead of the regularly-scheduled Symphony men.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,350

MAR 24 1960

* * *

The other day I was talking to Mrs. Robert Karol of 59 Willard Circle and she told me how excited she is about her pending trip to Japan. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is leaving soon on a tour of the Far East, and while in Japan many of their families plan to join them for a month's stay. By chartering a plane, the fare is drastically reduced, and she wondered if there might be people interested in taking advantage of such a trip. You don't have to be connected with the Symphony in any way to fly over and back and the saving is tremendous. The dates are May 3rd through June 5th, and Mrs. Karol will be happy to give more information on the subject. She may be reached at DA6-9303.

* * *

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 25,217
FEB 1960

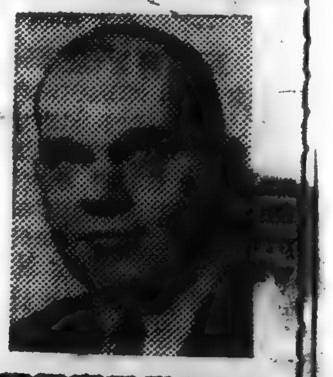
CONDUCTORS

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the baton with Dr. Munch and the associate conductor, Richard Burgin. . . . Leonard Bernstein has signed a new long-term recording contract with Columbia Records, it is announced by Goddard Lieberson, president; he will continue to conduct the New York Philharmonic for this company and will be heard as pianist and conductor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

MAR 31 1960

Here's Howie



By HOWARD J. RICHARD

HOWDY, FOLKS! This is your New York Lifer, Howie Richard, breaking the traditional rule of April Fool's Day with stories based on fact and not on fantasy . . . Most of us have heard of Father Flanagan's Boys Town but very few of us know about Girls Town down in Florida under the sponsorship of Horace E. Dodge, Jr. Last week at a $100-a-plate-dinner at the Hotel Fontainebleau in Miami the guest speakers were national chairman, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt; state chairman, Governor Leroy Collins, Frank Sinatra and, most impressive of all, Irving Mann ,formerly of Newton. Irving just happens to be vice-president of the development corporation donating the land for the project in Mount Plymouth, Florida. The Joseph Manns have mighty good cause to be proud of the accomplishments of all six of their children!

Up at Ithaca Brookline's Lou Novack has just been appointed business manager of the Cornell Law Forum, a most responsible position in that very enlightened newspaper. When Lou was at Boston Latin School, he was president of the ceramics company of the Junior Achievement Organization. His work was so outstanding in this field that he was awarded a Dale Carnegie scholarship.

Just off the press is Doctor Abe Nizel's latest masterpiece entitled "Nutrition in Clinical Denistry" dedicated to his wife, Jeanette, and his two sons, David and Jonathan. This opus was apparently prepared in order to enable the general practitioner to use nutrition as a practical objective discipline in his daily practice and as a guide for teaching nutrition to the dental student and the dental hygienist. Plenty of food for thought in that book! . . . Another work being readied for publication is Art Moger's "Name Droppers" which apparently drops the names of many of his fellow-columnists.

At Newton's Weeks Junior High School the 9th grade awarded science medals to Elizabeth Gesmer for her "Regeneration of Planaria" and to Gene Oppenheim and Peter Wolff for their "Embryology of the Chicken." I'll bet those kids don't spend four hours a day watching television shows! . . . On Wednesday the front pages of the Boston newspapers were filled with Japanese charges about the forthcoming tour of Japan by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. What didn't appear on the front pages, however, was the fact that a charter flight, headed by Marion Dubbs and Lillian Goodman, will take a whole plane-load of Friends of the Boston Symphony to Tokyo on the 3rd of May and return on the 5th of June. If you want to get in on this deal, get in touch with Marion Dubbs. Just so there may be no confusion about the fact, however, I want you to understand that I am not, gentle reader, your local travel agent.

Brookline's Doctor I. Robert Frank doesn't know this but his "Heart to Heart" talk at the Temple Kadimah Brotherhood a few Sunday mornings ago has been cited as the outstanding breakfast meeting in that Temple's long history. Cardiologist Frank is certainly no failure when it comes to talking about the heart . . . Bob Rittenburg is spending the next ten days in Puerto Rico as assistant coach of Harvard's track team. This will give him additional time in the hot sun to prepare for this summer's Olympic try-outs . . . An interesting photo is the one of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kaplan of Newton chatting with Doctor Albert Schweitzer at the latter's settlement in Lambarene, French Equitorial Africa, during their recent visit on the occasion of Doctor Schweitzer's 85th birthday. The world seems to be getting smaller and smaller or is it just a case of more people wandering around in it? . . . And that ends this week's travelogue until next Thursday when I'll once again be skipping from one continent to another so, so long.

13

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 14,500

DEC 10 1959

A New Approach

— Editorial —

The Boston Symphony Orchestra this week announced that it is making plans to visit the Far East next Spring. Plans of the visit are reported in our news columns; but there is more significance to the visit than appears from the straight news story.

The announcement of the BSO's trip comes while President Eisenhower is making his triumphal tour of the near east — letting people know what the Americans think and what they hope to achieve in the field of world peace.

It has long been established that a wider knowledge of the various cultures is one way to maintain the peace of the world and certainly the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been foremost in this field. The trip to the Far East will mark the third time that this group of talented musicians have gone abroad to demonstrate the depth of American culture to our friends — and our foes — in other parts of the world.

We know that their trip to the Far East will be another resounding success. We are proud that their home is in the Back Bay — but more so th[illegible] ambassadors of good will they can [illegible]ing through the world than can startling exhibitions of armed might.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,240

MAR 13 1960

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., MARCH 13, 1960

Boston Symphony to Make Extensive Far East Tour

BOSTON (UPI) — The world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its third foreign tour starting next month as part of President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

Eight-Week Trip

The trip, administered by the American National Theatre and Academy, will include Japan, Korea, Manila, Australia and New Zealand during its eight-week duration.

The orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, associate conductor Richard Burgin, and guest conductor Aaron Copland will head 104 musicians and staff who will leave April 25 by chartered planes.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, at Seoul and probably Pusan, before the extensive Japanese tour begins May 1. Some 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May.

To Return June 19

Three early June concerts are scheduled for Manila, seven in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne, and Adelaide, Australia, and two in Auckland [illegible] Wellington, New [illegible] before the orchestr[illegible] the United States.

The re[illegible] 19, will give the [illegible] to prepare for the [illegible] 8, of its annual six-week [illegible]shire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

New England [illegible], Inc.
Box 2078, Boston [illegible] Richmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 182,816

DEC 8 - 1959

Tour of Japan For Symphony

First Far East Visit Expected This May

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have voted in favor of a Japanese tour at the conclusion of the 1959-60 season here the Herald learned yesterday. This will be the first time that the orchestra, one of the world's finest, has appeared in the Far East.

Although Symphony Hall officials refused to confirm the report, sources close to the orchestra declared the tour will probably be taken under U.S. State Department sponsorship and will bring the Boston Symphony into most of the major cities of Japan.

Earlier Tours

In 1956, the Symphony undertook a history-making tour of the Soviet Union, and in May, 1952, wrote a new chronicle of musical activity during its first European appearances. It is believed that the Japanese tour will occur, like these others, in the [illegible]y.

If so, the [illegible] orchestra under Ar[illegible] will again consist of [illegible] group of musicians [illegible] the regularly-scheduled [illegible] men.

New [illegible], Inc.
Box 20[illegible]
[illegible]ress
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,350

MAR 24 1960

The other day I was talking to Mrs. Robert Karol of 59 Willard Circle and she told me how excited she is about her pending trip to Japan. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is leaving soon on a tour of the Far East, and while in Japan many of their families plan to join them for a month's stay. By chartering a plane, the fare is drastically reduced, and she wondered if there might be people interested in taking advantage of such a trip. You don't have to be connected with the Symphony in any way to fly over and back and the saving is tremendous. The dates are May 3rd through June 5th, and Mrs. Karol will be happy to give more information on the subject. She may be reached at DA6-9368.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 25,217
FEB 1960

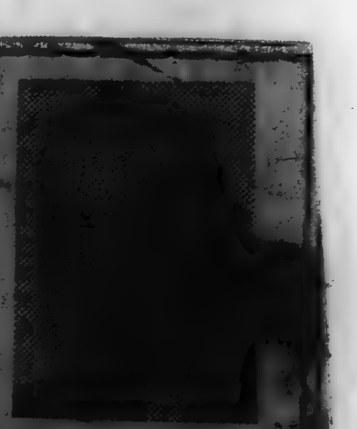
CONDUCTORS

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the baton with Dr. Munch and the associate conductor, Richard Burgin. . . . Leonard Bernstein has signed a new long-term recording contract with Columbia Records, it is announced by Goddard Lieberson, president; he will continue to conduct the New York Philharmonic for this company and will be heard as pianist and conductor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
[illegible] Richmond 2-4200
[illegible] Advocate
[illegible], Mass.
W[illegible] 809

MAR 31 1960

Here's Howie



By HOWARD J. RICHARD

HOWDY, FOLKS! This is your New York Lifer, Howie Richard, breaking the traditional rule of April Fool's Day with stories based on fact and not on fantasy . . . Most of us have heard of Father Flanagan's Boys Town but very few of us know about Girls Town down in Florida under the sponsorship of Horace E. Dodge, Jr. Last week at a $100-a-plate-dinner at the Hotel Fontainebleau in Miami the guest speakers were national chairman, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt; state chairman, Governor Leroy Collins, Frank Sinatra and, most impressive of all, Irving Mann, formerly of Newton. Irving just happens to be vice-president of the development corporation donating the land for the project in Mount Plymouth, Florida. The Joseph Manns have mighty good cause to be proud of the accomplishments of all six of their children!

Up at Ithaca Brookline's Lou Novack has just been appointed business manager of the Cornell Law Forum, a most responsible position in that very enlightened newspaper. When Lou was at Boston Latin School, he was president of the ceramics company of the Junior Achievement Organization. His work was so outstanding in this field that he was awarded a Dale Carnegie scholarship.

Just off the press is Doctor Abe Nizel's latest masterpiece entitled "Nutrition in Clinical Denistry" dedicated to his wife, Jeanette, and his two sons, David and Jonathan. This opus was apparently prepared in order to enable the general practitioner to use nutrition as a practical objective discipline in his daily practice and as a guide for teaching nutrition to the dental student and the dental hygienist. Plenty of food for thought in that book! . . . Another work being readied for publication is Art Moger's "Name Droppers" which apparently drops the names of many of his fellow-columnists.

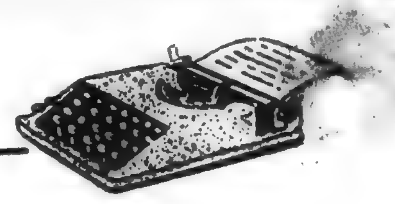
At Newton's Weeks Junior High School the 9th grade awarded science medals to Elizabeth Gesmer for her "Regeneration of Planaria" and to Gene Oppenheim and Peter Wolff for their "Embryology of the Chicken." I'll bet those kids don't spend four hours a day watching television shows! . . . On Wednesday the front pages of the Boston newspapers were filled with Japanese charges about the forthcoming tour of Japan by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. What didn't appear on the front pages, however, was the fact that a charter flight, headed by Marion Dubbs and Lillian Goodman, will take a whole plane-load of Friends of the Boston Symphony to Tokyo on the 3rd of May and return on the 5th of June. If you want to get in on this deal, get in touch with Marion Dubbs. Just so there may be no confusion about the fact, however, I want you to understand that I am not, gentle reader, your local travel agent.

Brookline's Doctor I. Robert Frank doesn't know this but his "Heart to Heart" talk at the Temple Kadimah Brotherhood a few Sunday mornings ago has been cited as the outstanding breakfast meeting in that Temple's long history. Cardiologist Frank is certainly no failure when it comes to talking about the heart . . . Bob Rittenburg is spending the next ten days in Puerto Rico as assistant coach of Harvard's track team. This will give him additional time in the hot sun to prepare for this summer's Olympic try-outs . . . An interesting photo is the one of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kaplan of Newton [illegible] with Doctor Albert Schweitzer at the latter's settlem[illegible] Lambarene, French Equitorial Africa, during their [illegible] on the occasion of Doctor Schweitzer's 85th birthday. The world seems to be getting smaller and smaller or is it just a [illegible] people wandering around in it? . . . [illegible] from one continent to another so, so long.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 159,988

MAR 21 1960

WASHINGTON LETTER



To the Readers of The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON SYMPHONY TOURS FAR EAST

B[illegible] Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Charles Munch, is touring the Far East for eight weeks beginning April 26.

The trip comes under the President's cultural exchange program.

Music

Rosalind Elias Tops Record Music Week

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Musically speaking, the week-end and the days following will bring to the scene the largest number of concerts ever listed for an equal period of time in this city's musical history.

Tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock in the Wilmington high school auditorium the Men's group of the Wilmington Methodist church will sponsor a concert by the brilliant young French violinist, Charles Petremont. His program will embrace some of the finest selections from the library for violin.

This event should actually highlight the entire series. Mr. Petremont who has the musical charm to thrill listeners on each and every occasion is expected to score an overwhelming success.

Next Tuesday evening in the auditorium at the Nashua, N. H. high school Rosalind Elias will present her long awaited recital. The concert, a part of the Community Concert series in Nashua, will bring to a close what has been a fine season for the New Hampshire city.

The local Community Concert series will climax the season Wednesday evening at the Little Theater when the gifted American dramatic soprano, Eileen Farrell, sings a program of Leider, art songs and operatic arias.

Sharing the local spotlight Wednesday evening will be the annual band concert by the Lowell high and Lowell Public schools. William Notini, band director in the school system will conduct.

The Junior band will present a list of marches and familiar selections as arranged for elementary school groups. The senior group will offer highlights by Sousa, Von Suppe, Gould, Wagner, Bach, Wilson and Rodgers. Appearing as guest conductor will be Jonathon Reynolds.

Wesley Boynton

On Wednesday evening May 4 the musical stage combination of Wesley Boynton and Morse Haithwaite will present a performance of "The Secret of Susan." The production is being sponsored by the Girl Officers alumnae and will benefit the Frances R. H. Leggat scholarship fund.

In the performance Wesley Boynton will sing the male lead and he shares the spotlight with Barbara Cole, soprano who has been heard with the Arundel Opera theater in Kennebunkport, Me., and Tom Picard, who aside from his acting is designer for the summer group.

Up to this evening the spring season of the Metropolitan Opera company in Boston has been a tremendous success. Among the highlights have been the singing of Nicoli Gedda, tenor; Renata Tebaldi, soprano; the stage directing of Cyril Ritchard, the costumes designed by Frederick Fox for "Andrea Chenier" and the conducting of Eric Leinsdorf.

The members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, accompanied by a staff of 13, will leave from Boston in two groups. Destination will be Japan where a series of concerts are scheduled.

The orchestra will arrive in Tokyo April 27 and will leave the same day for Seoul, Korea, where the first concert of the eight-week-tour will be given on Friday evening April 29.

Guest conductor, Aaron Copland will join the orchestra on May 1 when it returns to Tokyo. Twenty-two concerts will be given in Japan during May, seven of which will be performed in Tokyo.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 14,500

MAR 17 1960

Boston Symphony Off On Tour For Week Of Apr. 21

Berlioz' "Symphonie fantastique" will conclude the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in Symphony Hall tomorrow at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. In the same program Charles Munch will conduct the Suite from Handel's "Water Music" and the "Variations, Chaconne and Finale" by Norman dello Joio.

The Orchestra will make its final tour of the season during the week of Ma[illegible] 21 when concerts will be given in Hartford, New Haven, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and New York City.

Mme. Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be the Orchestra's guest at the Symphony Hall concerts of April 1, 2, 3 and in Providence on April 5. The program for these four concerts will include Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, and the Suite No. 3 by Bach in addition to the Ravel Piano Concerto and Faure's "Ballade" in which Mme. Henriot-Schweitzer will be heard.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 57,908

MAR 11 1960

Hub Symphony To Make Tour Of Far East

Washington — (AP) — The State Department announced yesterday the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make an eight-week concert tour of the Far East beginning at the end of April.

The orchestra will give 37 concerts in Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

The tour, the State Department said, will be sponsored by President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations. This program provides financial assistance to offset deficits that cannot be covered by the revenues from commercial performances abroad, the State Department said.

The itinerary for the Boston Symphony tour:

April 20-May 1, Seoul, Korea.

May 3-30, Japan, including performances at Osaga and Tokyo.

June 1-3, Manila, P.I.

June 5-14, Australia, including concerts at Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide.

June 16-17, New Zealand, with concerts at Wellington and Auckland.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 159,988

DEC 8-1959

Boston Symphony Plans Japan Tour

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is going to Japan at the end of its current season, probably in May, Symphony officials confirmed today.

This will mark the third time the full orchestra, one of the leading symphonic groups in the world, has toured outside the United States, and its first visit to the Far East.

Symphony officials revealed that the exact itinerary, number of concerts, and dates of the tour have not yet been worked out. It is understood the BSO tour will include several major Japanese cities and the trip will be under State Department auspices.

The orchestra toured Europe including the Soviet Union in 1956 and several years earlier gave concerts in various Western European cities but did not go behind the Iron Curtain.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 182,816

MAR 15 1960

Symphony Announces Far East Tour Dates

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces the tentative itinerary for the Orchestra's forthcoming Far Eastern tour, made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, with associate conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland plus the 104 musicians and staff will leave Boston April 25 by chartered planes to fly to Korea.

Two concerts will be given in Korea before the Orchestra flies to Tokyo May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May. Six of these concerts will be held in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in June before the orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Australia the orchestra will fly to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The Orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens on July 8 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

15

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 179,169

MAR 16 1960

Symphony's Far-East Schedule

The tentative itinerary for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming eight-week tour of Japan and other Far Eastern countries is announced by Thomas D. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager.

The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as part of the President's special international program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

Charles Munch, music director, with associate conductor Aaron Copland, plus the 104 musicians and staff, will depart April 25 by chartered planes. After a change of planes on the West Coast, the orchestra will fly to Korea where they arrive April 27.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Australia the orchestra will fly to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States.

The orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens on July 8 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Messrs. Munch, Burgin and Copland plan to perform 22 compositions by 10 composers on the tour. Included in the tentative list are eight works by seven American composers:

Samuel Barber, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Venge[illegible] Easley Blackwood, Sy[illegible]o. 1; Aaron Copland, [illegible]y No. 1 and th[illegible] Sui[illegible] Land"; Norman [illegible] "Variations, Chaconne [illegible] Finale"; Leon Kirchner, [illegible]cata"; Walter Piston, Symphony No. 6, and William Schuman, "New England Triptych."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 179,169

MAR 10 1960

Boston Symphony Will Make Tour of Far East

WASHINGTON (AP)—The State Department announced today the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make an eight-weeks concert tour of the Far East beginning at the end of April.

The orchestra will give 37 concerts in Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

The tour, the State Department said, will be sponsored by President Eisenhower's "Special International Program for Cultural Presentations." This program provides financial assistance to offset deficits that cannot be covered by the revenues from commercial performances abroad, the State Department said.

The itinerary for the tour:

April 20-May 1, Seoul Korea.

May 3-30, Japan, including performances at O[illegible] Tokyo.

June 1-3, Manila, P. I.

June 5-14, Australia, including concerts at Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D. 257,251 S. 469,372

JAN 28 1960

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is going to Japan this summer to play at the Osaka Festival.

It seems to me [illegible]me that, although our major eastern orchestras go all over the world, they rarely play on the west coast.

Since the Boston Symphony Orchestra's route will pass right over San Francisco, could you initiate a campaign among your readers to write Boston, urging the orchestra to stop on the way to or from Japan to give us westerners a concert or two?

We simply do not hear our country's best orchestras often enough. A Boston Symphony concert would, furthermore, impel us to try to make our western orchestras better—and they certainly need betterment.

BLAIN D. HIGHTOWER,

---

the point of caricature. Juvenile w

Monitor 5/17/60

Boston Symphony's Itinerary

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces the tentative itinerary for the orchestra's forthcoming eight-week tour of Japan and other Far Eastern countries. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

Charles Munch, music director, assisted by Richard Burgin and Aaron Copland, plus the 104 musicians and staff will depart Boston April 25 by chartered planes. After a change of planes on the west coast, the orchestra will fly to Korea, arriving April 27.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, in Seoul, and probably Pusan, before the orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May. Six of the concerts will be held in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

* * *

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne, and Adelaide, then to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. It will return to Boston on June 19 to prepare for the Berkshire Music Festival which opens on July 8 at Tanglewood.

Messrs. Munch, Burgin, and Copland plan to perform 22 compositions by 19 composers on the tour. Included in the tentative list are eight works by seven American composers: Samuel Barber, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance"; Easley Blackwood, Symphony No. 1; Aaron Copland, Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from "The Tender Land"; Norman Dello Joio, "Variations, Chaconne, and Finale"; Leon Kirchner, "Toccata"; Walter Piston, Symphony No. 6; and William Schuman, "New England Triptych."

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 476,746 S. 857,175

FEB 7 1960

Why Can't Boston Symphony Stop Here?

Blain D. Hightower comes forth with this good suggestion: "The Boston Symphony Orchestra is making a trip to the Far East this summer, principally for the Osaka Festival. I think it will leave Boston at the end of June.

"It is a fine thing for our orchestras to go abroad, but I wish they would display their talents a little closer to home. It seems to me that the Boston Symphony could very easily stop in Los Angeles and give us a concert or two. In this age of jets there is no reason for Los Angeles to be left out of any major group's extensive tour. Would you ask readers who would enjoy hearing the Boston Symphony here to send their requests to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.?"

And from a small town critic, who must be nameless, comes this plaint: "I constantly read your concert reviews, and admire their quality of penetrating illumination. May I ask you for help in the same field? A musician, but no writer, it is nevertheless my duty to write reviews of local community concerts, with inadequate results, to my mind.

"The local audience, largely unsophisticated, is my first concern. However, reviews have to be sent to the artists and the New York headquarters. I have been roundly censured by the local district representative for adverse criticism. She wishes only sweetness and light.

"Yesterday I ran across your 1948 Sounding Board, 'Integrity Is More Than a Word.' I try to maintain that integrity, though sometimes having recourse to leaving the flaws unmentioned, considering that the knowing in our audience will perceive that the omission is for a purpose."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 600,319 S. 1,221,337

DEC 9 1959

BOSTON SYMPHONY WILL PLAY IN JAPAN

The Boston Symphony, which already ~~has made two~~ post-war foreign tours, will appear in Japan next year. With Charles Munch as its conductor, the orchestra will take part in the Osaka Festival on May 1 and then visit several cities in Japan.

As yet the itinerary has not been completed. It is expected that the tour will last from six to eight weeks, and that other Asian countries in addition to Japan will be visited. Taiwan, Korea, Hong Kong and the Philippine Islands are locations being discussed.

If the tour lasts for eight weeks, it will affect the Berkshire Music Festival, which usually starts the first week in July. A spokesman for the Boston Symphony said yesterday that the festival of Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., would go on, but that its dates would be determined by the return of the orchestra.

This will not be the first time that the Far East will be hearing a major American orchestra. The Symphony of the Air toured that area in 1955, the Los Angeles Philharmonic in 1956 and the Little Orchestra Society early this year.

Those trips, like the Boston Symphony's forthcoming one, were made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered for the State Department by the American National Theatre and Academy.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
BERGEN RECORD
D. 90,211

MAR 26 1960

Boston Symphony To Tour

Come April 25, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, plus conductors and administrative personnel raising the total number in the party to about 110, will fly on a Pacific tour that will include Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand. Charles Munch, Richard Burgin, and composer Aaron Copland will share the conducting of the 38 concerts presently scheduled. The return date of June 19 provides for a 3-week respite before the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., begins on July 8.

2/25/60.

THE EXETER NEWS-LETTER

Exeter Man Will Tour Orient With Boston Symphony

Academy Secretary William J. Cox has been granted a leave of absence for the spring term in order to become advance manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of the Orient.

Mr. Cox will depart about March 21 and proceed directly to the Far East, where he will go over the route which the Boston Symphony will follow when the actual concert tour begins in Seoul, Korea, on April 29.

Before the actual series of concerts begins Mr. Cox will check on arrangements made for the 120-man traveling group in Korea, Japan and the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

There are 22 cities on the tour, and the advance manager will have to spend some time in each one before joining the tour in Korea and going over the route again when the orchestra plays the concerts in each of the cities.

The symphony's tour is part of the President's Cultural Presentations Program under State Department supervision and administered through the American National Theater and Academy. The Boston Symphony will be the first major American symphonic group to play in these areas.

For the past six years Mr. Cox has been associated in a volunteer capacity with the symphony as the chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, the symphony's summer music school at Tanglewood. He was appointed secretary of the Academy in June, 1948, and was previously absent from the school for two years in 1951-1953 when recalled to duty as executive officer of a destroyer during the Korean War.

In addition to his administrative duties in the Academy, Mr. Cox teaches a class in geography. He has never been to Japan or Australia but spent several months in the Philippines during World War II.

The travel on the advance portion of the trip will be entirely by air except for portions of the itinerary in Japan which includes 14 major cities from Sapporo on the north to Fukuoka on the south.

There are three separate series of concerts in Tokyo during the entire month of May when the Symphony will perform in Japan. Following three concerts in Manila, the last two weeks will be spent in Australia and New Zealand, including concerts which are tentatively scheduled for Brisbane, Sydney, Canberra, Melbourne and Auckland.

The entire company returns during the last week of June and Mr. Cox will resume his duties at the Academy July 1.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 214,827 S. 635,122
MAR 27 1960

City Violinist to Play With Casals Group

MUSIC CHAT

Minneapolis violinist Theodore Ptashne will be a member of the Casals festival orchestra in Puerto Rico in June . . . Alexander Tcherepnin, pianist-composer who has been a Twin Cities visitor, wrote the harmonica concerto John Sebastian played in New York's Town hall, winning audience and critical plaudits . . .

The April-May tour by the Boston Symphony orchestra to Japan, the Philippines and Australia will end with the orchestra back at the Berkshire music festival for its annual stint there, July 3 to Aug. 14 . . .

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D. 467,557 S. 598,880
DEC 16 1959

ROGER DETTMER

CHARLES MUNCH and the Boston Symphony orchestra will tour Japan and the Far East next spring, at the invitation of the President's International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by ANTA. The junket will include performances at the Osaka festival, and last from six to eight weeks.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-420[illegible]

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770
MAR 11 1960

Cox Invited On BSO Tour Of the Orient

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited William J. Cox to join the orchestra's staff on the forthcoming tour to Japan and other Asian nations. Secretary of Exeter (N.H.) Academy, Mr. Cox has been granted a leave of absence for the school's spring term to accept Mr. Perry's invitation.

Mr. Cox will depart from Boston approximately March 21 for the Far East where he will visit each city in which the orchestra will perform later this spring on its eight-week foreign tour. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as a part of the President's Cultural Presentations Program administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

For six years Mr. Cox has been associated with the orchestra in a volunteer capacity as chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-420[illegible]

Lakes Region Trader
LACONIA, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 9,000
MAR 9 1960

Symphony Quintet Coming to Plymouth Before Far East Tour

PLYMOUTH — The Plymouth Rotary club announces the annual Dr. Hyman S. [illegible] Memorial concert will again feature members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Special Projects chairman Albert Beaulieu has received clearance from the Boston Orchestra management to have The Quintet come to Plymouth on April 11.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra continues to maintain its reputation as the finest, as well as the busiest symphony in the world. Following the completion of their regular Boston season, the orchestra will make a tour of the Far East, during which time members will play in India, Korea, Japan and other countries. This is part of the cultural exchange program that our State Department feels is so valuable in developing good relations between countries. Because of this important tour, it was found [illegible] key musicians who ha[illegible] Plymouth in the past [illegible] unable to play here this [illegible] arrangements have been completed for the Boston Symphony Quintet to play here.

There will, however, be slight change in the make-up of the quintet.

Herald 3/15

Symphony Announces Far East Tour Dates

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces the tentative itinerary for the Orchestra's forthcoming Far Eastern tour, made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, with associate conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland plus the 104 musicians and staff will leave Boston April 25 by chartered planes to fly to Korea.

Two concerts will be given in Korea before the Orchestra flies to Tokyo May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May. Six of these concerts will be held in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in June before the orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Australia the orchestra will fly to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The Orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens on July 8 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 183,620

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony Abroad

THE possibility of a Boston Symphony Orchestra tour of Japan next year comes as welcome news.

In the past, visits to foreign lands by our justly famous musical organization have added immensely to the prestige of Boston and the whole nation.

The 1952 tour of Europe helped to soften the harsh emphasis on military and economic links that the cold war made necessary.

And the Russian visit in 1956 made the first important chink in the cultural iron curtain that has since been penetrated so successfully.

A visit to Japan could only strengthen the ties that industrialists, investors, scholars and artists are forging with the U.S.—particularly with Boston.

~~Globe 3/23/60~~

Itinerary for Symphony Tour

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the tentative itinerary for the Orchestra's forthcoming eight weeks tour in the Far East. The tour, the Orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Charles Munch, music director, with associate conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland, plus the 104 musicians and staff, will leave Boston Apr. 25 by chartered planes. After a change of planes on the West Coast, the orchestra will fly to Korea, where they will arrive Apr. 27.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the Orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May, six in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the Orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Austarlia the Orchestra will enplane to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The Boston Symphony will arrive back in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens July 8 at Tanglewood in Lenox.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 183,620

DEC 9 - 1959

Hub Symphony To Visit Far East

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit the Far East for the first time in its 79-year history in a tour beginning May 1.

Key country on the six to eight weeks itinerary is Japan. The orchestra will appear in various Japanese cities and in the Osaka Festival.

It is expected the Philippines, Formosa and Korea will be included in the tour.

Announcement of the orchestra's third foreign tour came from officials yesterday and confirmed an exclusive report by The Boston Herald.

THE MAINICHI, MONDAY, MAY 2, 1960

MUSIC CALENDAR

BY Jack Hirano

Charles Munch

The impending tour of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Maestro Charles Munch is bound to make history in Japan's musical life. They are heading a galaxy of foreign artists converging on Japan from all over the world for the Third Osaka International Festival which is being held in Osaka until the middle of this month.

Before that, the famous American troupe, coming in full strength of 110 musicians, will open a series of appearances in Tokyo at Hibiya Hall Thursday, May 5, beginning at 6.30 p.m.

Generally recognized as one of the world's foremost symphony organizations, the Boston Symphony's glorious history is closely connected with the permanent leadership of some of the greatest conductors of our time, George Henschel, Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, Emil Paur, Karl Much, Max Fiedler, Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteux and Sergei Koussevitzky. The lofty tradition those giants created is more than upheld, and the line of their immortal names is continued by Munch whose brilliant name and musical personality is already known here through discs.

Maestro Munch will be in charge of musical direction of half of their appearances, to be given by the orchestra in the course of its three-week Japanese tour. Their program for the first evening is made up by Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique Op. 14, Dello-Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2 Op. 43.

* * *

The Leningrad Ballet Compahy will present a series of performances at Tokyo Takarazuka Theater from Wednesday, May 4 through Saturday, May 7, daily at 7 p.m. For the first four days, they will present a complete performance of Tchaikovsky's "Swan Lake." The music will be played by the Tokyo Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dubovsky.

* * *

A vocal recital will be given by Haruo Okago, Monday, May 2, at 6.30 p.m., at Yamaha Hall. Kozo Takagi will assist him at the piano. He will sing operatic selections and German songs.

* * *

Also on Monday, May 2, a chorus concert will be held at Bunkyo Hall, from 7 p.m.

* * *

A special concert of the Tokyo Symphony Orchestra will be presented at Hibiya Hall, Wednesday, May 4, from 6.30 p.m. Under the musical direction of Shinji Toyama, the orchestra will play Mozart's Symphony No. 36, Brahms' Symphony No. 2 and a work of Mendelssohn.

* * *

The third concert of the All-Japan Boys Chorus Union will be presented at Bunkyo Hall, Tuesday, May 3, beginning at 6 p.m.

* * *

The 5th recital of Tomoko Tsukamoto will be given at Yamaha Hall, Wednesday, May 4, at 6.30 p.m. Kozo Takagi will be at the piano. She will sing works of Schumann and Kosack Yamada.

* * *

An "Afternoon of Popular Music" will be presented with Kan Ishimaru conducting the American Cultural Center Orchestra Thursday, May 5, at 1.30 p.m.

* * *

The 12th concert of the Ancient Music Society will be presented at Daiichi Seimei Hall, Friday, May 6, at 6.30 p.m. Under the baton of Juro Mikame, they will play a program of ancient Italian works.

* * *

A graduation concert of the Kunitachi Music College will be given at Nippon Seinenkan, Saturday, May 7, from 6 p.m.

* * *

The 50th "Videl Jazz Festival" will be presented at Video Hall, Yurakucho, Thursday, May 5, Friday, May 6 and Saturday, May 7, at 6 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N.Y.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 6[illegible]

DEC 9 - 1959

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO PLAY IN JAPAN

Munch to Conduct Group in Spring Tour, Which May Cover Other Countries

The Boston Symphony, which already has made two post-war foreign tours, will appear in Japan next year. With Charles Munch as its conductor, the orchestra will take part in the Osaka Festival on May 1 and then visit several cities in Japan.

As yet the itinerary has not been completed. It is expected that the tour will last from six to eight weeks, and that other Asian countries in addition to Japan will be visited. Taiwan, Korea, Hong Kong and the Philippine Islands are locations being discussed.

If the tour lasts for eight weeks, it will affect the Berkshire Music Festival, which usually starts the first week in July. A spokesman for the Boston Symphony said yesterday that the festival of Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., would go on, but that its dates would be determiner by the return of the orchestra.

Mr. Munch will bring another conductor on the trip. His associate has not yet been named, but it was rumored in Boston yesterday that an American composer-conductor would be selected.

This will not be the first time that the Far East will be hearing a major American orchestra. The Symphony of the Air tour that area in 1955, the Los Angeles Philharmonic in 1956 and the Little Orchestra Society early this year.

Those trips, like the Boston Symphony's forthcoming one, were made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered for the State Department by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Herald 12/9/59

Symphony Starts Japan Tour May 1

Boston Symphony Orchestra officials yesterday confirmed a report that the orchestra has accepted an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries in the spring of 1960.

The tour will be made under President Eisenhower's special International Program for Culture Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA). It will begin May 1, on the conclusion of the regular Boston Symphony season, and last from six to eight weeks.

The orchestra, as The Herald reported exclusively yesterday, will perform in various Japanese cities, and also in the Osaka Festical. The Philippines, Formosa and Korea are expected to be on the itinerary as well, though ANTA has not confirmed these dates.

The Far East appearance, first in the Boston Symphony's 79-year-old history, will be the orchestra's third foreign tour. It made its first European visit in 1952. In 1956, the Boston Symphony was the first major American orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 149,070

DEC 30 1959

AaronCoplandGuestConductor OnFarEastTourbySymphony

Aaron Copland, who is conducting this week's concerts by the Boston Symphony, has been invited my music director Charles Munch to be guest o nthe Far East tour by the orchestra next Spring.

Copland will share conducting responsibilities with Dr. Munch and associated conductor Richard Burgin during the tour, which will begin May 1 in Osaka, Japan. The trip will require from six to eight weeks.

Copland has had a long association with the Boston Symphony, which has played 18 works of his on numerous occasions. He also has been piano soloist with the orchestra. Copland is vice president of the Berkshire Music Center, the Summer school run in conjunction with the Berkshire Festivals at Tanglewood, in Lenox.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

DEC 31 1959

~~Eagle 12/31/59~~

Munch Names Copland Associate Conductor For BSO Foreign Tour

BOSTON—Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch has invited composer Aaron Copland to be guest conductor for the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens May 1 in Osaka, Japan.

Mr. Copland will share the conducting duties with Mr. Munch and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor, during the six-to-eight-week tour.

Mr. Copland has conducted the BSO on previous occasions both in Boston and at Tanglewood, usually when his own works were being played.

The Far Eastern tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 182,816

DEC 30 1959

Copland to Tour With Boston Symphony

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight-week tour with Dr. Munch and Associate Conductor Richard Burgin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 14,909

JAN 21 1960

Aaron Copland To Visit Japan With Boston Symphony In May

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the Orchestra's Far Eastern tour which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight week tour with Doctor Munch, the Orchestra's Music Director, and Associate Conductor Richard Burgin. The tour, the Orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Mr. Copland has had a long association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Orchestra, conducted by the late Serge Koussevitzky, first performed one of his compositions at a concert on February 20, 1925. Since then seventeen additional works by Mr. Copland have had over 130 performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Copland has been guest artist with the Orchestra at several concerts the New School for Social Research in New York and at Harvard University, is the author of three books: What To Listen For In Music, Our New Music and Music and Imagination.

Continued on Pa[illegible]

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 229,348

FEB 1960

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight week tour with Conductor Munch and with Associate Conductor Richard Burgin. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 600,319

DEC 30 1959

COPLAND TO CONDUCT

Named for Tour of Far East by Boston Symphony

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Aaron Copland to be guest conductor for the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens May 1 in Osaka, Japan.

Mr. Copland, noted as a composer, will share the conducting duties with Mr. Munch and Richard Burgin, associate conductor, during the six- to eight-week tour.

The Far Eastern tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. [illegible],620

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony Starts Japan Tour May 1

Boston Symphony Orchestra officials yesterday confirmed a report that the orchestra has accepted an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries in the spring of 1960.

The tour will be made under President Eisenhower's special International Program for Culture Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA). It will begin May 1, on the conclusion of the regular Boston Symphony season, and last from six to eight weeks.

The orchestra, as The Herald reported exclusively yesterday, will perform in various Japanese cities, and also in the Osaka Festival. The Philippines, Formosa and Korea are expected to be on the itinerary as well, though [illegible] to perform [illegible] ANTA has not confirmed these dates.

The Far East appearance, first in the Boston Symphony's 79-year-old history, will be the orchestra's third foreign tour. It made its first European visit in 1952. In 1956, the Boston Symphony was the first major American orches-

---

[illegible] of contemporary music.

Copland To Tour With Boston Symphony

Boston.—Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which will open on May 1, in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six- to eight-week tour with Mr. Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Richard Burgin, associate conductor. The tour, the orchestra's third abroad, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

January 15, 1960

Mus. America

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 159,988

DEC 30 1959

Copland for BSO Tour

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour that will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities with Dr. Munch and with Richard Burgin associate con-

---

HERALD-
12/30

Copland to Tour With Boston Symphony

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight-week tour with Dr. Munch and Associate Conductor Richard Burgin.

'STORY ON PAGE ONE'

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,809

JAN 9 1960

Copland Joins Munch in Asia

Charles Munch [illegible] invited Aaron Copland [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] as guest conductor on the orchestras' Far Eastern tour which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan.

Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight weeks tour with Doctor Munch and associate conductor Richard Burgin. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

18

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 149,070

DEC 30 1959

Aaron Copland Guest Conductor On Far East Tour by Symphony

Aaron Copland, who is conducting this week's concerts by the Boston Symphony, has been invited my music director Charles Munch to be guest o nthe Far East tour by the orchestra next Spring.

Copland will share conducting responsibilities with Dr. Munch and associated conductor Richard Burgin during the tour, which will begin May 1 in Osaka, Japan. The trip will require from six to eight weeks.

Copland has had a long association with the Boston Symphony, which has played 18 works of his on numerous occasions. He also has been piano soloist with the orchestra. Copland is vice president of the Berkshire Music Center, the Summer school run in conjunction with the Berkshire Festivals at Tanglewood, in Lenox.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

DEC 31 1959

~~Eagle 12/31/59~~

Munch Names Copland Associate Conductor For BSO Foreign Tour

BOSTON—Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch has invited composer Aaron Copland to be guest conductor for the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens May 1 in Osaka, Japan.

Mr. Copland will share the conducting duties with Mr. Munch and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor, during the six-to-eight-week tour.

Mr. Copland has conducted the BSO on previous occasions both in Boston and at Tanglewood, usually when his own works were being played.

The Far Eastern tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

[illegible] Copland

Conti[illegible]d from Page One

when he performed the solo in his Concerto for Piano and Orchestra. At the request of Doctor Munch, he first conducted the Orchestra in 1957 at the Berkshire Festival. Since its inception in 1940, Mr. Copland has been Chairman of the Faculty and head of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of music maintained by the Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

In addition to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Copland has been guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C., the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestras at the Revinia Festival. He has conducted Orchestras in Europe, Scandinavia, Central and South America. Mr. Copland, who has taught at the New School for Social Research in New York and at Harvard University, is the author of three books: What To Listen For In Music, Our New Music and Music and Imagination.

---

music.

Copland To Tour With Boston Symphony

Boston.—Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which will open on May 1, in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six- to eight-week tour with Mr. Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Richard Burgin, associate conductor. The tour, the orchestra's third abroad, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

January 15, 1960

Mus. America

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 182,816

DEC 30 1959

Copland to Tour With Boston Symphony

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight-week tour with Dr. Munch and Associate Conductor Richard Burgin.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 229,348

FEB 1960

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight week tour with Conductor Munch and with Associate Conductor Richard Burgin. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 159,988

DEC 30 1959

Copland for BSO Tour

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour that will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities with Dr. Munch and with Richard Burgin, associate conductor. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

Mr. Copland has had a long association with the Boston Symphony. The late Serge Koussevitzky first performed one of his compositions at a concert on Feb. 20, 1925. Since then 17 additional works by Mr. Copland have had more than [illegible] performances by the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 600,319

DEC 30 1959

COPLAND TO CONDUCT

Named for Tour of Far East by Boston Symphony

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Aaron Copland to be guest conductor for the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens May 1 in Osaka, Japan.

Mr. Copland, noted as a composer, will share the conducting duties with Mr. Munch and Richard Burgin, associate conductor, during the six- to eight-week tour.

The Far Eastern tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,809

JAN 9 1960

Copland [illegible]

Charles Munch [illegible] invited Aaron Copland [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] guest conductor on the or-

Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight weeks tour with Doctor Munch and associate conductor Richard Burgin. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 103,620

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony Starts Japan Tour May 1

Boston Symphony Orchestra officials yesterday confirmed a report that the orchestra has accepted an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries in the spring of 1960.

The tour will be made under President Eisenhower's special International Program for Culture Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA). It will begin May 1, or the conclusion of the regular Boston Symphony season, and last from six to eight weeks.

The orchestra, as The Herald reported exclusively yesterday, will perform in various Japanese cities, and also in the Osaka Festival. The Philippines, Formosa and Korea are expected to be on the itinerary as well, though [illegible] to perform [illegible] ANTA has [illegible] dates.

The Far East appearance, first in the Boston Symphony's 79-year-old history, will be the orchestra's third foreign tour. It made its first European visit in 1952. In 1956, the Boston Symphony was the first major American orches-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 149,070

DEC 30 1959

Aaron Copland Guest Conductor On Far East Tour by Symphony

Aaron Copland, who is conducting this week's concerts by the Boston Symphony, has been invited my music director Charles Munch to be guest o nthe Far East tour by the orchestra next Spring.

Copland will share conducting responsibilities with Dr. Munch and associated conductor Richard Burgin during the tour, which will begin May 1 in Osaka, Japan. The trip will require from six to eight weeks.

Copland has had a long association with the Boston Symphony, which has played 18 works of his on numerous occasions. He also has been piano soloist with the orchestra. Copland is vice president of the Berkshire Music Center, the Summer school run in conjunction with the Berkshire Festivals at Tanglewood, in Lenox.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 26,770

DEC 31 1959

~~Eagle 12/31/59~~

Munch Names Copland Associate Conductor For BSO Foreign Tour

BOSTON—Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch has invited composer Aaron Copland to be guest conductor for the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens May 1 in Osaka, Japan.

Mr. Copland will share the conducting duties with Mr. Munch and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor, during the six-to-eight-week tour.

Mr. Copland has conducted the BSO on previous occasions both in Boston and at Tanglewood, usually when his own works were being played.

The Far Eastern tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, [illegible] 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 182,816

DEC 30 1959

Copland to Tour With Boston Symphony

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight-week tour with Dr. Munch and Associate Conductor Richard Burgin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

[illegible]
[illegible]
Circ. [illegible],620

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony Starts Japan Tour May 1

[illegible] port that the orchestra has accepted an invitation to tour Japan and other East Asian countries in the spring of 1960.

The tour will be made under President Eisenhower's special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre [illegible]

[illegible] May 1, at the conclusion of the regular Boston Symphony season, and last [illegible] to eight weeks.

The orchestra, as The Herald reported exclusively yesterday, will perform in various Japanese cities, and also in the Osaka Festival. The Philippines, Formosa [illegible] expected to be on the itinerary [illegible] ANTA has [illegible] dates.

The Far East appearance, first in the Boston Symphony's 79-year-old history, will be the orchestra's third foreign tour. It made its first European visit in 1952. In [illegible]

Copland

Continued from Page One

when he performed the solo in his Concerto for Piano and Orchestra. At the request of Doctor Munch, he first conducted the Orchestra in 1957 at the Berkshire Festival. Since its inception in 1940, Mr. Copland has been Chairman of the Faculty and head of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of music maintained by the Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

In addition to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Copland has been guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C., the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestras at the Revinia Festival. He has conducted Orchestras in Europe, Scandinavia, Central and South America. Mr. Copland, who has taught at the New School for Social Research in New York and at Harvard University, is the author of three books: What To Listen For In Music, Our New Music and Music and Imagination.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 229,348

FEB 1960

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six to eight week tour with Conductor Munch and with Associate Conductor Richard Burgin. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, [illegible] 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N.Y.
Independent Democrat
Circ. 600,319

DEC 30 1959

COPLAND TO CONDUCT

Named for Tour of Far East by Boston Symphony

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Aaron Copland to be guest conductor for the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens May 1 in Osaka, Japan.

Mr. Copland, noted as a composer, will share the conducting duties with Mr. Munch and Richard Burgin, associate conductor, during the six- to eight-week tour.

The Far Eastern tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

18

[illegible] contemporary music.

Copland To Tour With Boston Symphony

Boston.—Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which will open on May 1, in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on the six- to eight-week tour with Mr. Munch, the orchestra's music director, and Richard Burgin, associate conductor. The tour, the orchestra's third abroad, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

January 15, 1960

Mus. America

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 150,988

DEC 30 1959

Copland for BSO Tour

Charles Munch has invited Aaron Copland to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor on the orchestra's Far Eastern tour that will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Mr. Copland will share the conducting responsibilities with Dr. Munch and with Richard Burgin, associate conductor. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

Mr. Copland has had a long association with the Boston Symphony. The late Serge Koussevitsky first performed one of his compositions at a concert on Feb. 20, 1925. Since then 17 additional works by Mr. Copland have had more than [illegible] performances by the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, [illegible] • Richmond 2-4200

[illegible] (m)
[illegible], Mass.
Independent
Circ. 369,809

JAN 9 1960

Copland [illegible]

Charles Munch [illegible] Aaron Copland [illegible] on Symphony [illegible] guest conductor on the or-[illegible] Copland will share the conducting responsibilities on [illegible] six to eight weeks tour [illegible] Doctor Munch and [illegible] conductor Richard [illegible] tour, the orchestra's [illegible] foreign trip, will be [illegible] the President's Special [illegible] national Program for [illegible] presentations [illegible] the American National [illegible] and Academy.

19

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1959

First Stop Will Be Japan

Boston Symphony to Tour Countries in East Asia

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, r. Charles Munch, will make tour of from six to eight weeks in eastern Asia, beginning May 1.

Japan will be the first country visited, where the Orchestra will participate in the Osaka Festival, and will be heard in the principal Japanese cities.

Other countries of eastern Asia will be included. An associate conductor, yet to be announced, will assist Dr. Munch.

The tour will be made under auspices of President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA).

Robert Schnitzer, general manager of ANTA, is in charge of the over-all arrangements.

"The itinerary is still incomplete," Schnitzer said.

"But it is certain that the Philippines will be included. Taiwan is pretty sure, also, and Korea is a possibility. The Koreans want American musicians very much, but there is difficulty in arranging accommodations for so large a party in Korea.

"Singapore is another possibility, and so is Hongkong. The prospects of going to India are not bright. I think it is doubtful that the State Department feels that it can afford travel that far westward.

Japanese Enthusiastic

"Japan is wildly enthusiastic about fine Western music, and that is the main peg upon which we hang this tour. The secondary Japanese city on the main island, was established two years ago as an international artistic venture.

"The Boston Symphony, I believe, is the most impressive thing we've sent to Asia."

The tour will be undertaken at the close of the Boston Symphony's main season at Symphony Hall. The Orchestra will return shortly before the beginning of the Summer Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Absence of the Boston Symphony will necessitate that the Spring season of Pops at Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, be performed by another orchestra to be assembled. This [illegible] the case in 1952 when [illegible] Boston Symphony made it[illegible] European tour in May.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
8 TI a YR. 13,634

MAR 1960

Aaron Copland will share the conducting responsibilities with Charles Munch when the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its Far Eastern tour, which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Though he has been associated with the Orchestra as composer or solo pianist since they first performed one of his compositions in 1925, Mr. Copland conducted the group for the first time in 1957 at the Berkshire Festival. In addition to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Copland has been guest conductor with many of the major orchestras in this country, Europe, Scandinavia and South America.

---

he orchestra's music administraor, leave Boston at 1:45 p.m. for os Angeles where they will fly o Tokyo.

The Orchestra arrives in Tokyo on Wednesday. Guest conductor Aaron Copland will join the Orchestra on May 1 in Tokyo. Twenty-two concerts will be given in Japan during May, seven of which will be performed in Tokyo.

On May 31 the Orchestra will fly to the Philippines for three concerts in Manila. The Orchestra will then fly to Brisbane, Australia, on June 4 for a concert there on June 6 in Sydney on June 7, 8, 9, in Adelaide on June 11 and in Melbourne on June 13 and 14. Two concerts will be given in New Zealand: in Wellington on June 16 and in Auckland on June 17.

The orch[illegible] depart Auckland o[illegible] 19 and, because [illegible] Date Line, [illegible] same date.

The tour, will be made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American [illegible] Theater and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Bost[illegible] RIchmond 2-4200
New[illegible]
MIL[illegible], Mass.
Independent
Circ. 7,321

DEC 9 - 1959

Boston Symphony Plans Tour

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced plans for a tour of cities in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea lasting six to eight weeks.

The tour will begin in April at the close of the orchestra's regular concert season at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Osaka, Japan, no other definite dates or cities were announced.

The orchestra has made two other foreign tours, going to western Europe in 1952 and to Russia in 1956. The Asian tour will be under the auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Bost[illegible] RIchmond 2-4200
Po[illegible]
BRIDGEP[illegible], Conn.
Circ. [illegible]9,349

DEC 9 - 1959

ORCHESTRA TO TOUR

BOSTON, Dec. 9—(AP) Boston's famed symphony orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 369,809

APR 16 1960

Symphony Flies To Asia Apr. 25

Boston Symphony musicians are preparing to leave April 25 on chartered planes for Korea, Japan, Manila, Australia and New ealand on an eight weeks concert tour.

The trip, part of Pres. Eisenhower's special international program of cultural presentations, will be sponsored by the American National Theater and Academy.

Charles Munch, Associate Conductor Richard Burgin and Guest Conductor Aaron Copland will head 104 musicians and staff. They return June 19, to prepare for their annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HART[illegible], Conn.
Circ. 12[illegible].161

DEC 9 - 1959

chapter.

SYMPHONY TOUR

Boston — (AP) — Boston's famed symphony orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans call for performances in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

Repack

Circ. 10,196

DEC 9 - 1959

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO TOUR FAR EAST

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

Register (e)
NEW HA[illegible], Conn.
Independent
Circ. [illegible]6,886

DEC 9 - 1959

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Democratic
Circ. 98,416

DEC 9 - 1959

Hub Orchestra Plans a Tour

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced plans for a tour of cities in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea lasting six to eight weeks.

The tour will begin in April at the close of the orchestra's regular concert season at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Osaka, Japan, no other definite dates or cities were announced.

The orchestra has made two other foreign tours, going to western Europe in 1952 and to Russia in 1956. The Asian tour will be under the auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,538

DEC 10 19[illegible]

Symphony to Tour East

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced here [illegible] performances in the O[illegible]tival in Japan and seve[illegible] Japanese cities, the Ph[illegible], Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, [illegible]
Independent
Circ. 12,775

DEC 9 - 1959

New England News Briefs

BOSTON (AP)—Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 22,129

DEC 9 - 1959

ORCHESTRA TOUR

BOSTON—(AP)—Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will start a six to eight-year tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several others Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

Circ. 28,[illegible]6

DEC 9 - 1959

Orchestra To Travel

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's Symphony Orchestra will [illegible] six to eight weeks tour of the Far [illegible] beginning next May. Plans [illegible] in the Os[illegible]

VARIETY 12/23

Boston Symph Booked For Tour of Far East

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under maestro Charles Munch, will tour Japan and other Asian countries next spring as part of the International Program for Cultural Presentations administred by the American National Theatre & Academy. Tour will open about May 1 for six to eight weeks.

This is the third foreign tour for the Boston Symph, which records for RCA Victor. It was the first symph to perform in the Soviet Union, in 1956. In 1952

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
[illegible] & Times (e)
[illegible]ON, Mass.
[illegible]1,681

MA[illegible] 1960

SYDNEY, Aus. — (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin a seven-concert tour of Australia next June 5, U. S. Ambassador William J. Sebald announced today. The orchestra, arriving fr[illegible] Manila, will give its fi[illegible] performance in Brisbane. Three concerts will be given here, one in Adelaide and two in Melbourne before flying to New Zealand. The tour, with conductor Charles Munch and composer Aaron Copeland as guest-conductor, was organized under the U. S. cultural exchange program. It is the first such tour by any American orchestra to Australia.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Bost[illegible]
Eve[illegible]
BOS[illegible]

DEC 8 - 19[illegible]

Symphony Will Tour Far East Next Spring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced it will tour Eastern Asia next Spring.

The trip will begin May 1 and will require six to eight weeks.

Japan will be the first stop, where the orchestra will participate in the Osaka Festival. Other countries of Eastern Asia will be visited, and these may include the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

Music director Charles Munch will conduct many of the concerts. An associate tour conductor, whose identity has yet to be revealed, will direct other concerts.

The tour will be made under auspices of President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Theater and Academy (ANTA).

19

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1959

First Stop Will Be Japan

Boston Symphony to Tour Countries in East Asia

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its music director, Dr. Charles Munch, will make a tour of from six to eight weeks in eastern Asia, beginning May 1.

Japan will be the first country visited, where the Orchestra will participate in the Osaka Festival, and will be heard in the principal Japanese cities.

Other countries of eastern Asia will be included. An associate conductor, yet to be announced, will assist Dr. Munch.

The tour will be made under auspices of President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA).

Robert Schnitzer, general manager of ANTA, is in charge of the over-all arrangements.

"The itinerary is still incomplete," Schnitzer said.

"But it is certain that the Philippines will be included. Taiwan is pretty sure, also, and Korea is a possibility. The Koreans want American musicians very much, but there is difficulty in arranging accommodations for so large a party in Korea.

"Singapore is another possibility, and so is Hongkong. The prospects of going to India are not bright. I think it is doubtful that the State Department feels that it can afford travel that far westward.

Japanese Enthusiastic

"Japan is wildly enthusiastic about fine Western music, and that is the main peg upon which we hang this tour. The secondary Japanese city on the main island, was established two years ago as an international artistic venture.

"The Boston Symphony, I believe, is the most impressive thing we've sent to Asia."

The tour will be undertaken at the close of the Boston Symphony's main season at Symphony Hall. The Orchestra will return shortly before the beginning of the Summer Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Absence of the Boston Symphony will necessitate that the Spring season of Pops at Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, be performed by another orchestra to be assembled. This was the case in 1952 when the Boston Symphony made its first European tour in May.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
8 Ti a YR 13,634

MAR 1960

Aaron Copland will share the conducting responsibilities with Charles Munch when the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its Far Eastern tour, which will open on May 1 in Osaka, Japan. Though he has been associated with the Orchestra as composer or solo pianist since they first performed one of his compositions in 1925, Mr. Copland conducted the group for the first time in 1957 at the Berkshire Festival. In addition to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Copland has been guest conductor with many of the major orchestras in this country, Europe, Scandinavia and South America.

---

personal staff and Leonard Burkat, the orchestra's music administrator, leave Boston at 1:45 p.m. for Los Angeles where they will fly to Tokyo.

The Orchestra arrives in Tokyo on Wednesday. Guest conductor Aaron Copland will join the orchestra on May 1 in Tokyo. Twenty-two concerts will be given in Japan during May, seven of which will be performed in Tokyo.

On May 31 the Orchestra will fly to the Philippines for three concerts in Manila. The Orchestra will then fly to Brisbane, Austraila, on June 4 for a concert there on June 6 in Sydney on June 7, 8, 9, in Adelaide on June 11 and in Melbourne on June 13 and 14. Two concerts will be given in New Zealand: in Wellington on June 16 and in Auckland on June 17.

The orchestra will depart Auckland on [illegible] 19 and, because [illegible] International Date Line, [illegible] Boston the same date. [illegible]

The tour, will be made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 7,321

DEC 9 - 1959

Boston Symphony Plans Tour

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced plans for a tour of cities in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea lasting six to eight weeks.

The tour will begin in April at the close of the orchestra's regular concert season at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Osaka, Japan, no other definite dates or cities were announced.

The orchestra has made two other foreign tours, going to western Europe in 1952 and to Russia in 1956. The Asian tour will be under the auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 79,349

DEC 9 - 1959

ORCHESTRA TO TOUR

BOSTON, Dec. 9—(AP) Boston's famed symphony orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 369,809

APR 16 1960

Symphony Flies To Asia Apr. 25

Boston Symphony musicians are preparing to leave April 25 on chartered planes for Korea, Japan, Manila, Australia and New ealand on an eight weeks concert tour.

The trip, part of Pres. Eisenhower's special international program of cultural presentations, will be sponsored by the American National Theater and Academy.

Charles Munch, Associate Conductor Richard Burgin and Guest Conductor Aaron Copland will head 104 musicians and staff. They return June 19, to prepare for their annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 120,161

DEC 9 - 1959

chapter.

SYMPHONY TOUR

Boston — (AP) — Boston's famed symphony orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans call for performances in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

Repack
Circ. 10,198

DEC 9 - 1959

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO TOUR FAR EAST

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. [illegible]8,886

DEC 9 - 1959

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Democratic
Circ. 98,416

DEC 9 - 1959

Hub Orchestra Plans a Tour

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced plans for a tour of cities in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea lasting six to eight weeks.

The tour will begin in April at the close of the orchestra's regular concert season at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Osaka, Japan, no other definite dates or cities were announced.

The orchestra has made two other foreign tours, going to western Europe in 1952 and to Russia in 1956. The Asian tour will be under the auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Independent
Circ. 3,538

DEC 10 1959

Symphony to Tour East

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced here for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 149,070

DEC 8 - 1959

Symphony Will Tour Far East Next Spring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced it will tour Eastern Asia next Spring.

The trip will begin May 1 and will require six to eight weeks.

Japan will be the first stop, where the orchestra will participate in the Osaka Festival. Other countries of Eastern Asia will be visited, and these may include the Phillipines, Formosa and Korea.

Music director Charles Munch will conduct many of the concerts. An associate tour conductor, whose identity has yet to be revealed, will direct other concerts.

The tour will be made under auspices of President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Theater and Academy (ANTA).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,775

DEC 9 - 1959

New England News Briefs

BOSTON (AP)—Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 22,129

DEC 9 - 1959

ORCHESTRA TOUR

BOSTON—(AP)—Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will start a six to eight-year tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several others Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

Independent Republican
Circ. 28,[illegible]

DEC 9 - 1959

scattered.

Orchestra To Travel

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans call for performances in the Osaka festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

---

established.

Variety 12/23

Boston Symph Booked For Tour of Far East

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under maestro Charles Munch, will tour Japan and other Asian countries next spring as part of the International Program for Cultural Presentations administred by the American National Theatre & Academy. Tour will open about May 1 for six to eight weeks.

This is the third foreign tour for the Boston Symph, which records for RCA Victor. It was the first symph to perform in the Soviet Union, in 1956. In 1952.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 41,681

MAR 3 1960

SYDNEY, Aus. — (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin a seven-concert tour of Australia next June 5, U. S. Ambassador William J. Sebald announced today. The orchestra, arriving from Manila, will give its first performance in Brisbane. Three concerts will be given here, one in Adelaide and two in Melbourne before flying to New Zealand. The tour, with conductor Charles Munch and composer Aaron Copeland as guest-conductor, was organized under the U. S. cultural exchange program. It is the first such tour by any American orchestra to Australia.

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1959

e Japan

ymphony to Tour Countries in East Asia will participate in the Osaka Festival, and will be heard in the principal Japanese cities.

Other countries of eastern Asia will be included. An associate conductor, yet to be announced, will assist Dr. Munch.

The tour will be made under auspices of President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA).

Robert Schnitzer, general manager of ANTA, is in charge of the over-all arrangements.

"The itinerary is still incomplete," Schnitzer said.

"But it is certain that the Philippines will be included. Taiwan is pretty sure, also, and Korea is a possibility. The Koreans want American musicians very much, but there is difficulty in arranging accommodations for so large a party in Korea.

"Singapore is another possibility, and so is Hongkong. The prospects of going to India are not bright. I think it is doubtful that the State Department feels that it can afford travel that far westward.

Japanese Enthusiastic

"Japan is wildly enthusiastic about fine Western music, and that is the main peg upon which we hang this tour. The secondary Japanese city on the main island, was established two years ago as an international artistic venture.

"The Boston Symphony, I believe, is the most impressive thing we've sent to Asia."

The tour will be undertaken at the close of the Boston Symphony's main season at Symphony Hall. The Orchestra will return shortly before the beginning of the Summer Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Absence of the Boston Symphony will necessitate that the Spring season of Pops at Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, be performed by another orchestra to be assembled. This was the case in 1952 when the Boston Symphony made its first European tour in May.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 293,904

APR 24 1960

Boston Symphony Leaves for Japan April 25

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will leave for Japan tomorrow morning accompanied by a staff of 13 will leave from Boston's Logan Airport in two groups. The first group, which will include Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster, and assistant manager Norman S. Shirk, leaves Boston at 7:30 a.m. for New York where they will board a non-stop jet flight to Los Angeles. From Los Angeles they will fly to Tokyo by way of Honolulu.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager, and Mrs. Perry will be included in the second group which leaves Boston at 8:30 a.m. From New York this group will fly to Tokyo via Seattle and Anchorage.

Conductor Charles Munch, his personal staff and Leonard Burkat, the orchestra's music administrator, leave Boston at 1:45 p.m. for Los Angeles where they will fly to Tokyo.

The Orchestra arrives in Tokyo on Wednesday. Guest conductor Aaron Copland will join the orchestra on May 1 in Tokyo. Twenty-two concerts will be given in Japan during May, seven of which will be performed in Tokyo.

On May 31 the Orchestra will fly to the Philippines for three concerts in Manila. The Orchestra will then fly to Brisbane, Australia, on June 4 for a concert there on June 6 in Sydney on June 7, 8, 9, in Adelaide on June 11 and in Melbourne on June 13 and 14. Two concerts will be given in New Zealand: in Wellington on June 16 and in Auckland on June 17.

The orchestra will depart Auckland on [illegible] 19 and, because [illegible] International Date Line, [illegible] Boston the same date. [illegible]

The tour, will be made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 7,321

DEC 9 - 1959

Boston Symphony Plans Tour

BOSTON (UPI) — The Bost Symphony Orchestra has announced plans for a tour of cities in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea lasting six to eight weeks.

The tour will begin in April at the close of the orchestra's regular concert season at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Osaka, Japan, no other definite dates or cities were announced.

The orchestra has made two other foreign tours, going to western Europe in 1952 and to Russia in 1956. The Asian tour will be under the auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Post (e)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 79,349

DEC 9 - 1959

ORCHESTRA TO TOUR

BOSTON, Dec. 9—(AP) Boston's famed symphony orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 369,809

APR 16 1960

Symphony Flies To Asia Apr. 25

Boston Symphony musicians are preparing to leave April 25 on chartered planes for Korea, Japan, Manila, Australia and New ealand on an eight weeks concert tour.

The trip, part of Pres. Eisenhower's special international program of cultural presentations, will be sponsored by the American National Theater and Academy.

Charles Munch, Associate Conductor Richard Burgin and Guest Conductor Aaron Copland will head 104 musicians and staff. They return June 19, to prepare for their annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 10,198

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Independent
Circ. [illegible]8,886

DEC 9 - 1959

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Democratic
Circ. 98,416

DEC 9 - 1959

Hub Orchestra Plans a Tour

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced plans for a tour of cities in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea lasting six to eight weeks.

The tour will begin in April at the close of the orchestra's regular concert season at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Osaka, Japan, no other definite dates or cities were announced.

The orchestra has made two other foreign tours, going to western Europe in 1952 and to Russia in 1956. The Asian tour will be under the auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

---

six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced here call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 149,070

DEC 8 - 1959

Symphony Will Tour Far East Next Spring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra today announced it will tour Eastern Asia next Spring.

The trip will begin May 1 and will require six to eight weeks.

Japan will be the first stop, where the orchestra will participate in the Osaka Festival. Other countries of Eastern Asia will be visited, and these may include the Phillipines, Formosa and Korea.

Music director Charles Munch will conduct many of the concerts. An associate tour conductor, whose identity has yet to be revealed, will direct other concerts.

The tour will be made under auspices of President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Theater and Academy (ANTA).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 12,775

DEC 9 - 1959

New England News Briefs

BOSTON (AP)—Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

Variety 12/23

Boston Symph Booked For Tour of Far East

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under maestro Charles Munch, will tour Japan and other Asian countries next spring as part of the International Program for Cultural Presentations administred by the American National Theatre & Academy. Tour will open about May 1 for six to eight weeks.

This is the third foreign tour for the Boston Symph, which records for RCA Victor. It was the first symph to perform in the Soviet Union, in 1956. In 1952.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 41,681

MAR 3 1960

SYDNEY, Aus. — (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin a seven-concert tour of Australia next June 5, U. S. Ambassador William J. Sebald announced today. The orchestra, arriving from Manila, will give its first performance in Brisbane. Three concerts will be given here, one in Adelaide and two in Melbourne before flying to New Zealand. The tour, with conductor Charles Munch and composer Aaron Copeland as guest-conductor, was organized under the U. S. cultural exchange program. It is the first such tour by any American orchestra to Australia.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Independent Republican
Circ. 28,[illegible]36

DEC 9 - 1959

Orchestra To Travel

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans call for performances in the Osaka festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 120,161

MAR 10 1960

Boston Symphony Tour of Far East To Start Apr. 25

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will make its annual appearance at the Bushnell Memorial Monday night, will leave Boston by plane Apr. 25 for a Far Eastern tour as part of the cultural exchange program.

Arriving in Korea Apr. 27 where it will give two concerts, it will go to Japan May 1 to give 22 concerts in 16 Japanese cities in May. Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before going to Australia for seven concerts and New Zealand for two.

The orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for the six-week Berkshire Music Festival which will open at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 13,085

DEC 10 1959

BSO to Tour Asian Cities Next Spring

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will leave here late next April for a six-to-eight-week tour of Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea, it was announced yesterday.

The tour will begin at the end of the orchestra's regular concert season in Symphony Hall. No definite dates or cities, with the exception of Osaka, Japan, have been settled.

It will be the third foreign visit in the history of the orchestra, which dates from 1881. The Asian tour will be under auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO
SAT. 42,205

MAR 14 1960

Hub Symph, Munch to Far East

WASHINGTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will leave for the Far East on April 26 to begin an eight-week concert tour. Tour will be under the sponsorship of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the State Department.

Some 37 concerts will be given in Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand. Aaron Copland, noted American composer and conductor, will join the orchestra as guest conductor.

Before undertaking the assignment, Mr. Copland will visit the Soviet Union with Lukas Foss, another of this nation's leading orchestral composers. The composers will visit the U. S. S. R. under the terms of a 1958 agreement signed by State Department and Russia, which called for cultural exchanges.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 194,909

MAR 4 1960

Boston Symphony To Play in 3 Australia Cities

SYDNEY, Australia, Mar. 3 (Reuters)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Australia in June as part of its Far Eastern tour, it was announced here tonight.

The orchestra's first Australian concert will be in Brisbane June 5. Then it plays in Sydney, Adelaide and Melbourne.

The orchestra visits Japan, the Philippines, Korea and New Zealand during its Asian tour.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 600,319 S. 1,221,337

DEC 30 1959

COPLAND TO CONDUCT

Named for Tour of Far East by Boston Symphony

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Aaron Copland to be guest conductor for the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens May 1 in Osaka, Japan.

Mr. Copland, noted as a composer, will share the conducting duties with Mr. Munch and Richard Burgin, associate conductor, during the six- to eight-week tour.

The Far Eastern tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 335,466 S. 527,002

DEC 9 1959

Bostonians Plan Spring Tour of The Far East

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Dec. 8.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first Far Eastern tour this spring under the sponsorship of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, which is administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

The tour, which will open about May 1 and will take from six to eight weeks, will include various Japanese cities and probably the Philippines, Formosa and Korea. In Osaka, the concerts will be among the major events of that city's annual spring festival.

This will be the Boston Symphony's third foreign tour. It went to Europe in 1952 and also in 1956, when it was the first American orchestra to play in the Soviet Union.

New Engl[illegible] Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, [illegible] • Rich[illegible]d 2-4200

Sta[illegible]-Times (e)
NEW [illegible]ORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,527

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony Plans Far East Tour

BOSTON, Dec. 9 (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced plans for a tour of cities in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea lasting six to eight weeks.

The tour will begin in April at the close of the orchestra's regular concert season at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Osaka, Japan, no other definite dates or cities were announced.

The orchestra has made two other foreign tours, going to Western Europe in 1952 and to Russia in 1956. The Asian tour will be under the auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

ASAHI EVENING NEWS, SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1960

AARON COPLAND, a guest conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived in Tokyo Thursday by NWA. The Orchestra is now visiting Japan on a performance tour.

Asahi Eve. News

Church Street — New York

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

MAR 23 1960

Bostonians to Asia

Boston, March 22.

Boston Symphony Orchestra will leave for the Far East April 26 for an eight-week concert tour sponsored by the President's special international program. Orchestra, under Charles Munch, will give 37 concerts in Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand. Aaron Copland will go along as guest conductor.

Copland and fellow composer Lucas Foss left for a Soviet Union tour last week (15) to last until April 1.

Church Street — New York

DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
D. 385,908 S. 472,366

APR 3 1960

Symphony Set For New Tour

The world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its third foreign tour starting next month as part of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

The trip, administered by the American National Theater and Academy, will include Japan, Korea, Manila, Australia and New Zealand during its eight-week duration.

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,753

DEC 9 - 1959

TO TOUR FAR EAST

BOSTON, (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced plans for a tour of cities in Japan, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea lasting six to eight weeks. The tour will begin in April at the close of the orchestra's regular concert season at Symphony Hall. With the exception of Osaka, Japan, no other definite dates or cities were announced.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
NEGRO LABOR NEWS
SAT. CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

MAR 26 1960

Symphony set to tour East

WASHINGTON

The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves April 26 for the Far East to make a concert tour under the sponsorship of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

April 30-May 1: Seoul, Korea, two concerts.

May 3-30: Japan Some 22 concerts at Osaka International Music Festival, in provincial cities and Tokyo.

June 1-3: Manila, the Philippines, three concerts.

June 5-14: Australia, seven concerts scheduled tentatively for Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide.

June 16: Wellington, New Zealand.

June 17: Auckland, New Zealand.

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,602

DEC 9 - 1959

TOUR PLANNED

BOSTON (AP)—Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,288

DEC 9 - 1959

PLAN FAR EAST TOUR

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans call for performances in the Osaka festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

Courant
CLINTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 550

DEC 11 1959

SYMPHONY

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Herald said today Boston Symphony Orchestra members had voted to make a tour of Japan after the 1959-1960 season for the famous orchestra's first Far Eastern visit.

The paper said the tour would be under State Department auspices. Management of the orchestra refused to confirm or deny the report.

The orchestra toured Europe in 1952 and made a historic tour of the Soviet Union in 1956.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Free Press (m)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Independent Republican
Circ. 31,130

DEC 10 1959

Boston Symphony Planning Tour Of Far East

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony announced Tuesday it will tour the Far East for the first time when the current season ends. The tour will begin in early May and last six to eight weeks.

The orchestra will perform at the Osaka Festival in Japan, in several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

The tour will be sponsored by the President's special international program for cultural presentations, and administered by Anta (American National Theater and Academy).

The symphony toured Europe in 1952 and made an unprecedented tour of the Soviet Union in 1956.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 12,678

DEC 9 - 1959

SYMPHONY TO TOUR

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 24,963

DEC 9 - 1959

Boston Symphony Sets Far East Tour

BOSTON (AP)—Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 80,581

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony to Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Japan at the end of the 1959-60 season, a Boston newspaper reported Tuesday. The paper said the members of the symphony had voted in favor of the tour which would probably be taken under the sponsorship of the U. S. State Department. In 1956 the Symphony made a tour of Russia. It is believed the tour would be held in May.

New [illegible] Agency, Inc.
Box [illegible] • Richmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 120,161

DEC 28 1959

ORCHESTRA TO TOUR

Boston — (AP) — Boston's famed symphony orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 120,161

MAR 19 1960

Boston Symphony Tour of Far East To Start Apr. 25

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will make its annual appearance at the Bushnell Memorial Monday night, will leave Boston by plane Apr. 25 for a Far Eastern tour as part of the cultural exchange program.

Arriving in Korea Apr. 27 where it will give two concerts, it will go to Japan May 1 to give 22 concerts in 16 Japanese cities in May. Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before going to Australia for seven concerts and New Zealand for two.

The orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for the six-week Berkshire Music Festival which will open at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 8.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

MAR 23 1960

Bostonians to Asia

Boston, March 22.

Boston Symphony Orchestra will leave for the Far East April 26 for an eight-week concert tour sponsored by the President's special international program. Orchestra, under Charles Munch, will give 37 concerts in Korea, Japan,

Mike Hunter—KELP—El Paso

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 39,753

DEC 9 - 1959

TO TOUR FAR

BOSTON, (UP

Symphony

noun

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Free Press (m)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Independent Republican
Circ. 31,130

DEC 10 1959

Boston Symphony Planning Tour Of Far East

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony announced Tuesday it will tour the Far East for the first time when the current season ends. The tour will begin in early May and last six to eight weeks.

The orchestra will perform at the Osaka Festival in Japan, in several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

The tour will be sponsored by the President's special international program for cultural presentations, and administered by Anta (American National Theater and Academy).

The symphony toured Europe in 1952 and made an unprecedented tour of the Soviet Union in 1956.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 13,085

DEC 10 1959

BSO to Tour Asian Cities Next Spring

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will leave here late next April for a six-to-eight-week tour of Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea, it was announced yesterday.

The tour will begin at the end of the orchestra's regular concert season in Symphony Hall. No definite dates or cities, with the exception of Osaka, Japan, have been settled.

It will be the third foreign visit in the history of the orchestra, which dates from 1881. The Asian tour will be under auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

ASAHI EVENING NEWS, SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1960

AARON COPLAND, a guest conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived in Tokyo Thursday by NWA. The Orchestra is now visiting Japan on a performance tour.

Asahi Eve. News

HOUSTON, TEXAS
NEGRO LABOR NEWS
SAT. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

MAR 26 1960

Symphony set to tour East

WASHINGTON

The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves April 26 for the Far East to make a concert tour under the sponsorship of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

April 30-May 1: Seoul, Korea, two concerts.

May 3-30: Japan Some 22 concerts at Osaka International Music Festival, in provincial cities and Tokyo.

June 1-3: Manila, the Philippines, three concerts.

June 5-14: Australia, seven concerts scheduled tentatively for Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide.

June 16: Wellington, New Zealand.

June 17: Auckland, New Zealand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 12,678

DEC 9 - 1959

SYMPHONY TO TOUR .. ..

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO
SAT. 42,205

MAR 14 1960

Hub Symph, Munch to Far East

WASHINGTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will leave for the Far East on April 26 to begin an eight-week concert tour. Tour will be under the sponsorship of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the State Department.

Some 37 concerts will be given in Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand. Aaron Copland, noted American composer and conductor, will join the orchestra as guest conductor.

Before undertaking the assignment, Mr. Copland will visit the Soviet Union with Lukas Foss, another of this nation's leading orchestral composers. The composers will visit the U. S. S. R. under the terms of a 1958 agreement signed by State Department and Russia, which called for cultural exchanges.

DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
D. 385,908 S. 472,366

APR 3 1960

Symphony Set For New Tour

The world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its third foreign tour

---

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 11,602

DEC 9 - 1959

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Independent
Circ. 24,963

DEC 9 - 1959

Boston Symphony Sets Far East Tour

BOSTON (AP)—Boston's famed Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May.

Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 194,909

MAR 4 1960

Boston Symphony To Play in 3 Australia Cities

SYDNEY, Australia, Mar. 3 (Reuters)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Australia in June as part of its Far Eastern tour, it was announced here tonight.

The orchestra's first Australian concert will be in Brisbane June 5. Then it plays in Sydney, Adelaide and Melbourne.

The orchestra visits Japan, the Philippines, Korea and New Zealand during its Asian tour.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 335,466 S. 527,002

DEC 9 1959

Bostonians Plan Spring Tour of The Far East

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Dec. 8.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first Far Eastern tour this spring under the sponsorship of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, which is administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

The tour, which will open about May 1 and will take from six to eight weeks, will include various Japanese cities and probably the Philippines, Formosa and Korea. In Osaka, the concerts will be among the major events of that city's annual spring festival.

This will be the Boston Symphony's third foreign tour. It went to Europe in 1952 and also in 1956, when it was the first American orchestra to play in the Soviet Union.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Independent Republican
Circ. 26,288

DEC 9 - 1959

PLAN FAR EAST TOUR

BOSTON (AP) — Boston's Symphony Orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans call for performances in the Osaka festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Republican
Circ. 80,581

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony to Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Japan at the end of the 1959-60 season, a Boston newspaper reported Tuesday. The paper said the members of the symphony had voted in favor of the tour which would probably be taken under the sponsorship of the U. S. State Department. In 1956 the Symphony made a tour of Russia. It is believed the tour would be held in May.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 800,318 S. 1,221,337

DEC 30 1959

COPLAND TO CONDUCT

Named for Tour of Far East by Boston Symphony

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Aaron Copland to be guest conductor for the orchestra's Far Eastern tour, which opens May 1 in Osaka, Japan.

Mr. Copland, noted as a composer, will share the conducting duties with Mr. Munch and Richard Burgin, associate conductor, during the six- to eight-week tour.

The Far Eastern tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 61,527

DEC 9 - 1959

Symphony Plans Far East Tour

BOSTON, Dec. 9 (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced plans for a tour of cities in Japan, the Philippines,

---

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant
CLINTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 550

DEC 11 1959

SYMPHONY

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Herald said today Boston Symphony Orchestra members had voted to make a tour of Japan after the 1959-1960 season for the famous orchestra's first Far Eastern visit.

The paper said the tour would be under State Department auspices. Management of the orchestra refused to confirm or deny the report.

The orchestra toured Europe in 1952 and made a historic tour of the Soviet Union in 1956.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 120,161

DEC 28 1959

ORCHESTRA TO TOUR

Boston — (AP) — Boston's famed symphony orchestra will begin a six to eight weeks tour of the Far East beginning next May. Plans announced last night call for performances in the Osaka Festival in Japan and several other Japanese cities, the Philippines, Formosa and Korea.

21

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Reformer &
Vermont Phoenix (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Circ. 7,022

MAR 30 1960

Off-Pitch Note Heard

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi - government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917

MAR 30 1960

Symphony Stirs Tokyo Discord

Complaints were aired in Tokyo that American officials responsible for the forthcoming tour of the Boston Symphony are pushing its sponsors around "as in the days of the occupation."

They were carried in the English - language newspaper Asahi Evening News in connection with the orchestra's 22-concert tour of Japan.

The paper said the Japanese sponsors complained that they had been led to believe Charles Muench would conduct all concerts but had learned he would conduct only about half of them, that too many programs were devoted to the works of American composers unknown in Japan and that programs and terms were "virtually dictated in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 293,904

APR 10 1960

Culture, Politics Often Are at Odds

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"BOSTON SYMPHONY PLANS SHOCK JAPAN'S PROMOTERS." Nippon, it seems, is upset about the forthcoming Eastern tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Or at least an English-language newspaper is, The Asahi Evening News, which knows a circulation-building issue when it sees one. According to the News, the Symphony is pushing around the Japanese, "like in the days of the Occupation."

Well, we've been scanning the BSO's schedule of programs and conductors on the tour and attempting to relate these to the Japanese complaints. Of such booking complexities as the bewailed fact that the BSO will make two appearances in Tokyo before going to the Osaka Festival, we know nothing. But it's possible to establish opinions about the conducting and repertory against the State Department background of the trip.

Here's where the Japanese (to wit, the Asahi Evening News) dispose their chief criticism—conducting and repertory. They are disappointed because Charles Munch plans to conduct "only" 12 of 22 concerts and because of the inclusion of "too much" unfamiliar music.

Not Justified

The first of these dissatisfactions is unjustified it seems to me. To divide the conducting burden on such a journey is common orchestral practice. The recent Philharmonic trip through Russia, for instance, found Leonard Bernstein sharing the platform with Seymour Lipkin and other associates.

It should be remembered that tours by large symphony orchestras are not pleasure junkets, but a form of cultural diplomacy. Physically, these have much in common with the exhausting one-night stands that popular dance bands used to make by bus in the thirties. Let us take one week of the proposed schedule:

May 9, Monday, Afternoon: Travel to Kyoto (from Osaka); Evening: Concert: Kyoto, Charles Munch conducting Fantastic—Dello Joio Variations—Roussel Bacchus et Ariane—Return to Osaka.

May 10, Tuesday, Morning: Leave Osaka-Kobe for Matsuyama via Inland Sea; Afternoon: Arrive Matsuyama.

May 11, Wednesday, Morning: Rehearsal (Burgin, Program E); Evening: Concert: Matsuyama, Richard Burgin conducting Kirchner Toccata, Mahler Adagio, Tchaikowsky No. 5.

May 12, Thursday, Morning: Travel to Oita; Evening: Concert: Oita, Richard Burgin conducting Kirchner, Mahler, Tchaikowsky.

May 13, Friday, Morning: Travel to Yawata; Afternoon: Arrive Yawata; Evening: Concert: Yawata, Aaron Copland conducting Purcell Fantasies, Copland No. 1, Suite from "Tender Land."

May 14, Saturday, Morning: Travel to Hakata; Evening: Concert: Fukuoka, Charles Munch conducting Eroica, Piston No. 6, Ravel Daphsis No. 2.

May 15, Sunday, Morning: Leave Hakata for Hiroshima; Afternoon: Arrive Hiroshima; Evening: Concert: Hiroshima, Charles Munch conducting Fantastic, Dello Jolo, Roussel.

And so it goes.

Charles Munch is 69 years old, an age when conductors are often in full bloom, but scarcely an age for undergoing the attendant rigors of a succession of one-night stands without respite. Four concerts in a week is enough; 12 out of 22 represents no slight to the Japanese, but rather, an indefatigable, tireless spirit.

Pertinent Criticism

The strictures concerning the programs have, I'd say, more pertinence. The Asian tour was arranged under President Eisenhower's Fund for International Cultural Presentations; and, consequently, require the presentation of contemporary American scores. This is a necessity—still, against necessity, must be weighed the fact that what's good for Symphony Hall in Boston isn't necessarily good for cultural exchange.

Without condescension to the musical tastes of the Japanese, who have developed their own modes to a characteristic refinement and purity, is the obvious reality that the country came late to western music. No wonder Beethoven and the classical composers are held in such esteem. The intellectuals, undoubtedly, will find points of reference in Kirchner, Blackwood et al. Why start out the audience as a whole, though, working backward from atonality?

The Symphony No. 1 of Easley Blackwood fills a purpose in Symphony Hall. It's new, experimental, introductory, significant to the composer's artistic development. But not the kind of music one would export to define either the Boston Symphony or contemporary expression in its full maturity. Mr. Copland's works are fine, yet do not constitute his ripest writing either in the generality of published American criticism. One's aim is not to pick at individual works, rather to point out that the demands of cultural exchanges may all too frequently be at odds with the common sense aims of cultural diplomacy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
LEOMINSTER, Mass.
Circ. 5,175

MAR 30 1960

Japanese Complaint

Hub Symphony Hits a Sour Note

BOSTON, March 30 (AP)—An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi - government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 12,678

MAR 31 1960

Hub Symphony Plans Off-Key, Japs Complain

BOSTON [illegible] off-pitch note intruded [illegible] plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming [illegible] Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asaki Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi - government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

PATERSON, N.J.
NEWS
D. 50,777

MAR 30 1960

Charge Boston Symphony Head Abusing Japanese

TOKYO (AP) — Complaints were aired here today that American officials responsible for the forthcoming Japan tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are pushing its Japanese sponsors around "like in the days of the occupation."

They were carried in the English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News in connection with the orchestra's 22-concert tour of Japan, May 4-30 under sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 61,527

MAR 30 1960

MASS., WEDNESDAY, MARCH 30, 1960

Symphony Plans Hit Sour Note in Japan

BOSTON, March 30 (AP)—An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

NHK officials said they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation."

Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts, but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 369,809

MAR 31 1960

List Classics For Jap Tour

17 BOSTON DAILY RECORD, THURS., MAR. 31, 1960

Officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra met yesterday to iron out "an apparent misunderstanding" in Tokyo, involving programs for the famed orchestra's forthcoming Far East tour.

And, in Tokyo, a spokesman for the Tokyo American Cultural Center denied a report that U. S. officials were conducting negotiations for a Tokyo visit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next May in a 'shocking manner."

An impression that the programs include too many works of contemporary American composers, at the expense of the classics, is "erroneous," officials declared. The classics, they said, are still the main features of the planned programs.

Inclusion of one contemporary American composition in each program has been approved by the State Dept., a spokesman said.

He also pointed out that arrangement for using some alternate conductors, in addition to the world-famed 68-year-old Dr. Charles Munch, is normal during extended tours

---

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

MAR 30 1960

Japs Complain About BSO; It's Pushy

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 is devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

State Dept. Policy

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi - government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

Virtual Dictation

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 98,416

MAR 30 1960

Japan Begins to Growl About Symphony's Tour

Boston Orchestra's Program Plans Draw Fire; Too Much U. S. Music Said Slated

BOSTON (AP)—An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

NHK officials said they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation."

"Foremost among their (the sponsors') complaints," said the newspaper, "is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American officials in Tokyo and lately by an advance manager sent here from Boston."

The newspaper named Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and William J. Cox, the orchestra's advance manager.

Neither was available for comment.

Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour. This was the practice on the past three tours made by the orchestra, including a 1956 visit to Europe and Russia. Composer-conductor Aaron Copland and associate conductor Richard Burgin will spell Munch.

The Asahi Evening News said it sent Munch a cable asking whether he was aware of Japanese dissatisfaction, and that his name "is being used to force far more contemporary music on classical [illegible] fans in Japan than they desire, or that:—

"The people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally."

Munch could not be reached for comment.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Monitor & New Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Circ. 12,544

MAR 30 1960

Boston Symphony Tour Is Off on Wrong Note

BOSTON, March 30 (AP)—An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 14,500

MAR 24 1960

Boston Symphony Announces Route For Far Eastern Tour

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces the tentative itinerary for the orchestra's forthcoming eight week tour of Japan and other Far Eastern countries. The tour, the orchestra's third foreign trip, will be made as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Music Director, with Associate Conductor Richard Burgin and guest conductor Aaron Copland plus the 104 musicians and staff

Continued on Page Eight

[illegible] in early June before the Orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Australia the Orchestra will fly to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The Orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens on July 8 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

Messrs. Munch, Burgin and Copland plan to perform 22 compositions by 19 composers on the tour. Included in the tentative list are eight works by seven American composers: Samuel Barber, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance"; Easley Blackwood, Symphony No. 1; Aaron Copland, Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from "The Tender Land"; Norman dello Joio, "Variations, Chaconne and Finale"; Leon Kirchner, "[illegible]ta"; Walter Piston, Symphony No. 6; and William Schuman, "New England Triptych".

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 11,602

MAR 30 1960

Boston Symphony Hears Off-Pitch Note

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi - government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 369,809

MAR 31 1960

List Classics For Jap Tour

17 BOSTON DAILY RECORD, THURS., MAR. 31, 1960

Officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra met yesterday to "iron out "an apparent misunderstanding" in Tokyo, involving programs for the famed orchestra's forthcoming Far East tour.

And, in Tokyo, a spokesman for the Tokyo American Cultural Center denied a report that U. S. officials were conducting negotiations for a Tokyo visit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next May in a 'shocking manner."

An impression that the programs include too many works of contemporary American composers, at the expense of the classics, is "erroneous," officials declared. The classics, they said, are still the main features of the planned programs.

Inclusion of one contemporary American composition in each program has been approved by the State Dept., a spokesman said.

He also pointed out that arrangement for using some alternate conductors, in addition to the world-famed 68-year-old Dr. Charles Munch, is normal during extended tours.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 98,416

MAR 30 1960

Japan Begins to Growl About Symphony's Tour

Boston Orchestra's Program Plans Draw Fire; Too Much U. S. Music Said Slated

BOSTON (AP)—An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

NHK officials said they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation."

"Foremost among their (the sponsors') complaints," said the newspaper, "is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American officials in Tokyo and lately by an advance manager sent here from Boston."

The newspaper named Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and William J. Cox, the orchestra's advance manager.

Neither was available for comment.

Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour. This was the practice on the past three tours made by the orchestra, including a 1956 visit to Europe and Russia. Composer-conductor Aaron Copland and associate conductor Richard Burgin will spell Mu[illegible].

The A[illegible] Evening News said it sent [illegible] a cable asking whether he was aware of Japanese d[illegible]faction, and that his name '[illegible] being used to force far more [illegible]ary music on classical [illegible]ny fans in Japan than they desire, or that:—

"The people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally."

Munch could not be reached for comment.

Special Dove Offer
Birds Eye Froze
FREN TEND ORA FISH
APPLE-GRA
APPLE-PRO
20c
29c lb.

ston Symphony

Continued From Page One

will depart Boston April 25 by chartered planes. After a change of planes on the West Coast, the Orchestra will fly to Korea where they arrive April 27.

Two concerts will be given in Korea, in Seoul and probably Pusan, before the Orchestra flies to Tokyo on May 1. Approximately 22 concerts will be given in 16 Japanese cities during May. Six of these concerts will be held in Tokyo and two in Osaka.

Three concerts are scheduled for Manila in early June before the Orchestra flies to Australia for seven concerts in Sydney, Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. From Australia the Orchestra will fly to New Zealand for two concerts in Auckland and Wellington before its return to the United States. The Orchestra will arrive by plane in Boston June 19 to prepare for its own six-week Berkshire Festival which opens on July 8 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

Messrs. Munch, Burgin and Copland plan to perform 22 compositions by 19 composers on the tour. Included in the tentative list are eight works by seven American composers: Samuel Barber, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance"; Easley Blackwood, Symphony No. 1; Aaron Copland, Symphony No. 1 and the Suite from "The Tender Land"; Norman dello Joio, "Variations, Chaconne and Finale"; Leon Kirchne[illegible]ta"; Walter Piston, Sy[illegible] No. 6; and William Schuman, "New England Triptych".

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

MAR 30 1960

Japs Complain About BSO; It's Pushy

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 is devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

State Dept. Policy

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi - government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

Virtual Dictation

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Monitor & New Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Circ. 12,544

MAR 30 1960

Boston Symphony Tour Is Off on Wrong Note

BOSTON, March 30 (AP)—An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 11,602

MAR 30 1960

Boston Symphony Hears Off-Pitch Note

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi - government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

SHOWTHROUGH

23

Asahi Evening News
March 30, 1960

Boston Symphony Plans Shock Japan's Promoters

By Hans E. Pringsheim

The forthcoming Japanese tour of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch is giving its Japanese sponsors many unexpected headaches.

Foremost among their complaints is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American cultural officials in Tokyo and lately by an advance manager sent here from Boston.

It is also claimed that after the sponsors had been led to believe that Mr. Munch would conduct all concerts, other conductors were substituted for nearly half of the concerts.

The unduly large share allotted in the programs to works by contemporary American composers, most of them practically unknown to the Japanese concert public, has been another cause of serious complaint.

Programs, schedules, and other terms were virtually dictated to the sponsors in a "take it or leave it" attitude, it is claimed.

As in the case of the U.S.-Japan Security Treaty, the Japanese want to be consulted, by the Boston Symphony, on the programs which are to be presented here.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Japanese tour is to cover 22 concerts between May 4 and 30. It is part of a 37-concert tour of Asia, arranged under President Eisenhower's Fund for International Cultural Presentations.

Twenty of the concerts in Japan are to be sponsored by the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK) and two by the Osaka International Festival Society.

Officials of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation said that they were being "pushed around like in the days of the Occupation."

The Osaka International Festival Society charged that it had been given "the run-around" and as a result lost several months in publicizing its 1960 Festival, which starts a week from today. The full schedule, including the programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's two concerts, could not be published until today. (See story on Page 3).

Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, first offered the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Osaka International Festival Society last October as the opening attraction for the 1960 Festival, Miss Michi Murayama, executive director of the Society, said yesterday.

"On the strength of this offer, we canceled arrangements for another famous musical group which we had already booked for the Festival opening," she said. "We have been kept waiting ever since."

On two occasions late in December and early in January, Mr. Findlay told this writer that "problems with the unions" had delayed arrangements for the Boston Symphony's tour; that it would not be here in time for the Festival opening but could play the closing Festival concerts, but that he would insist that the orchestra would have its own opening in Tokyo before appearing at the Osaka Festival.

Mr. Findlay announced to the press here on January 8 that "the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch" would come to Japan on a month-long tour beginning about May 1. No sponsor was mentioned in the announcement.

About two weeks later, it was announced that NHK would sponsor the tour, with the Osaka International Festival Society as cosponsor for performances in Osaka. This announcement still mentioned only Mr. Munch as conductor of the tour, but added that the American composer Aaron Copland would accompany the orchestra to Japan and possibly conduct some of his own compositions.

NHK officials said that ever since they have kept asking for the schedule, programs, and other details, but were kept waiting for a reply more than two months.

"We did not receive the programs and schedule until late last Friday," one official said.

From the schedule, NHK officials were shocked to learn that Mr. Munch would conduct only 12 of the 22 concerts, while five would be conducted by Aaron Copland and another five by cluded among the 19 compositions making up the six programs for Japan.

(Continued on Page 3)

Last Saturday, NHK reportedly tried to negotiate about the number of concerts to be conducted by Mr. Munch and about the programs, with William J. Cox, advance manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Cox had just arrived to arrange for hotel bookings, train [illegible]tions, [illegible] other technical details of the orchestra's visit.

Meanwhile, as late as last Friday, the Osaka Festival Society had cabled to Boston, asking for the programs and complaining that it was given "the run-around." The programs were finally shown to the Society at a meeting on Sunday afternoon. Miss Murayama raised the same objections as NHK to the choice of programs, and to the fact that Mr. Munch would conduct only one of the two Festival concerts.

At the meeting, Mr. Cox said that the decision on the schedule and programs had been made by the orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, and was "final." He added that if NHK and the Osaka International Festival Society were dissatisfied, they could still call off the Japanese tour, as the orchestra had not yet left Boston.

Mr. Cox made only one concession regarding a technical detail of scheduling, subject to Mr. Munch's telegraphic confirmation which was received Tuesday.

He also claimed that "until a couple of weeks ago," the orchestra's management did not know that the orchestra was in Tokyo. At least that is what the State Department announced in Washington last week, when it mentioned Osaka first, and then Tokyo."

Ian Hunter, noted British concert manager and founder of the Edinburgh Festival, expressed the same opinion when he visited Japan last month. He said it was unthinkable in any European country that a major attraction booked for a Festival would be presented in another city first, in competition with that festival.

Also the Soviet Union's cultural authorities have shown the same consideration. When the Leningrad State Philharmonic Orchestra came to Japan two years ago, it first played for the opening of the Osaka Festival, then went to Tokyo for concerts.

To clarify Mr. Munch's position regarding the arrangements having been made in Japan in his name and on behalf of his orchestra, the Asahi Evening News yesterday sent the noted conductor a telegram, asking him to answer a number of questions by cable for publication in this paper. The following questions were addressed to Mr. Munch:

"Are you aware that in arranging your forthcoming concert tour, your name is being used to force far more contemporary American music on classic symphony fans in Japan than they desire:

"That the Japanese sponsors of the Boston Symphony's tour are unhappy with your programs;

"That the Japanese were led to believe you would conduct all concerts with the possible exception of Aaron Copland conducting a few of his own compositions;

"That until a few days ago, the Japanese were not shown your programs nor told that you would conduct only 12 of the 22 concerts;

"That the people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally?

"Do you think such highhandedness is in keeping with the tour's avowed purpose to promote goodwill and closer cultural ties between Japan and America?"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,775

MAR 30 1960

Off-Pitch Note Seen In Boston's Orchestra Plans

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in [illegible]-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complain[illegible] were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct [illegible] concerts but other conductors were [illegible]unced for nearly half the performances.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • [illegible] 2-4200

Citi[illegible] (e)
LACON[illegible], N. H.
Circ. [illegible]

MAR 31 1960

Off-Pitch Note Hit On Orchestra Tour

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming [illegible] Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

BANGOR, Me.
MAR [illegible] 1960

Boston Symphony Plans In Japan Irk Promoters

N. Y. Times News Service

TOKYO, March 30 — "Boston [redacted] as having said that they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation" by the Boston organization. The network is sponsoring 20 of the orchestra's 22 concerts in various Japanese cities in May. The other two appearances will be at the Osaka festival, May 7 and 8.

Both sponsors are disappointed, it was reported, because Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, plans to conduct only 12 of the 22 concerts. The others promoters," said a black three-column headline on the front page [redacted] ductor.

The sponsors were quoted as expressing extreme dissatisfaction with the inclusion of an American work "unknown in Japan" on its programs. The Japanese, it appears want a heavier percentage of the Classical composers favored here.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Bost[illegible] 2-4200

Caledo[illegible] (e)
ST. JO[illegible], Vt.
Indepen[illegible]blican
Ci[illegible]

MAR 30 1960

Boston Symphony Hits Sour [illegible] On Tour O[illegible]apan

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22 concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemarpory American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work bv a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

23

EVENING NEWS, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 30

Boston Symphony—

(Continued From Page 1)

Richard Burgin, concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony. They also found that the orchestra was to play six different programs, each containing at least one work by a contemporary American composer; three of the composers are practically unknown in Japan.

"If these concerts were to be offered to the public free of charge, that would be all right," one official commented. "But people have to pay for their tickets, and the prices will have to be fairly high. And the people who are asked to buy those tickets want to hear the Boston Symphony under Mr. Munch only, and playing the kind of musical works for which Mr. Munch is famous from his records."

Most of the recordings released in Japan of Mr. Munch conducting the Boston Symphony are of the symphonies of Beethoven, Schubert, and Berlioz. Only three of these works are included among the 19 compositions making up the six programs for Japan.

Last Saturday, NHK reportedly tried to negotiate about the number of concerts to be conducted by Mr. Munch and about the programs, with William J. Cox, advance manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Cox had just arrived to arrange [illegible] hotel bookings, train [illegible], [illegible] other technical details of the orchestra's visit.

Meanwhile, as late as last Friday, the Osaka Festival Society had cabled to Boston, asking for the programs and complaining that it was given "the run-around." The programs were finally shown to the Society at a meeting on Sunday afternoon. Miss Murayama raised the same objections as NHK to the choice of programs, and to the fact that Mr. Munch would conduct only one of the two Festival concerts.

At the meeting, Mr. Cox said that the decision on the schedule and programs had been made by the orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, and was "final." He added that if NHK and the Osaka International Festival Society were dissatisfied, they could still call off the Japanese tour, as the orchestra had not yet left Boston.

Mr. Cox made only one concession regarding a technical detail of scheduling, subject to Mr. Munch's telegraphic confirmation which was received Tuesday.

He also claimed that "until a couple of weeks ago," the orchestra's management did not know that the orchestra was supposed to play at the Osaka Festival at all, let alone before playing in Tokyo.

To suit the Boston Symphony's schedule, the Osaka Festival had to extend its duration, originally set from April 6 to May 6, so that the orchestra could play on May 7 and 8 after its Tokyo concerts.

Miss Murayama said she could not believe that Mr. Munch and the orchestra were aware of the stand which their representative was taking toward the Osaka Festival.

"I am sure Mr. Munch knows that significance of a music festival," she said. "I also recall that the Boston Symphony played at the Edinburgh Festival a few years ago; but I don't recall that the orchestra had to play first in London, the British capital, before it could go to Edinburgh."

"Even the U.S. State Department, which is backing this tour of Asia, seems to take it for granted that the orchestra will play first in Osaka and then in Tokyo. At least that is what the State Department announced in Washington last week, when it mentioned Osaka first, and then Tokyo."

Ian Hunter, noted British concert manager and founder of the Edinburgh Festival, expressed the same opinion when he visited Japan last month. He said it was unthinkable in any European country that a major attraction booked for a Festival would be presented in another city first, in competition with that festival.

Also the Soviet Union's cultural authorities have shown the same consideration. When the Leningrad State Philharmonic Orchestra came to Japan two years ago, it first played for the opening of the Osaka Festival, then went to Tokyo for concerts.

To clarify Mr. Munch's position regarding the arrangements having been made in Japan in his name and on behalf of his orchestra, the Asahi Evening News yesterday sent the noted conductor a telegram, asking him to answer a number of questions by cable for publication in this paper. The following questions were addressed to Mr. Munch:

"Are you aware that in arranging your forthcoming concert tour, your name is being used to force far more contemporary American music on classic symphony fans in Japan than they desire:

"That the Japanese sponsors of the Boston Symphony's tour are unhappy with your programs;

"That the Japanese were led to believe you would conduct all concerts with the possible exception of Aaron Copland conducting a few of his own compositions;

"That until a few days ago, the Japanese were not shown your programs nor told that you would conduct only 12 of the 22 concerts;

"That the people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally?

"Do you think such highhandedness is in keeping with the tour's avowed purpose to promote goodwill and closer cultural ties between Japan and America?"

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,775

MAR 30 1960

Off-Pitch Note Seen In Boston's Orchestra Plans

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in [illegible]-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complain[illegible] were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct [illegible] but other conductors were [illegible] for nearly half [illegible] performances.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • [illegible] 2-4200

Citiz[illegible] (e)
LACONIA, N. H.
Circ. [illegible]

MAR 31 1960

Off-Pitch Note Hit On Orchestra Tour

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming [illegible] Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • [illegible] 2-4200

Caledo[illegible] (e)
ST. JO[illegible], Vt.
Indepen[illegible]blican
Ci[illegible]

MAR 30 1960

Boston Symphony Hits Sour [illegible] On Tour Of [illegible]pan

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan, May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemarpory American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

BANGOR, Me.
MAR 31 1960

Boston Symphony Plans In Japan Irk Promoters

N. Y. Times News Service

TOKYO, March 30 — "Boston [redacted] as having said that they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation" by the Boston organization. The network is sponsoring 20 of the orchestra's 22 concerts in various Japanese cities in May. The other two appearances will be at the Osaka festival, May 7 and 8.

Both sponsors are disappointed, it was reported, because Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, plans to conduct only 12 of the 22 concerts. The others promoters," said a black three-column headline on the front page ductor.

The sponsors were quoted as expressing extreme dissatisfaction with the inclusion of an American work "unknown in Japan" on its programs. The Japanese, it appears want a heavier percentage of the Classical composers favored here.

---

my, the Navy announced Tuesday.

Adm. Davidson, a 1929 graduate of the academy, will relieve Rear Adm. Charles L. Melson in June. Adm. Melson will become Commander of the 1st Fleet in the Pacific and has been nominated by the President for promotion to vice-admiral.

The 2,550-ton West German destroyer Hamburg, the biggest warship built in Germany since the end of World War II, slides down the ways in launching ceremonies at Hamburg. The destroyer will have a top speed of 35 knots, 7 torpedo tubes, 2 depth-charge mortars and 12 anti-aircraft guns. AP Radiophoto

Frankfurt Man Accused Of Slaying a Call Girl

UPI

FRANKFURT, Mar. 29 — Salesman Heinz Pohlmann was charged Tuesday with the 1957 murder of call girl Rosemarie Nitribitt. The movie "Rosemary" is based on Rosemarie's career in vice.

Rosemarie was found strangled in her luxury apartment in downtown Frankfurt. Dozens of her customers, including leading businessmen from denied the killing and was released after several days of questioning. He later was convicted of fraud and is serving a 16-month sentence.

Pohlmann also was charged Tuesday with stealing 18,000 marks ($4,100) from Rosemarie's apartment.

The Nitribitt Case shocked Germany with its revelations of prosperity in the prostitution business that matched the nation's economic boom. Rosemarie was earning more than

EMPLOYMENT

Help Wanted

FOREIGNER seeks Japanese language and literature coach who could also serve as secretary. Some English or French preferable but not necessary. Full time or part time basis. Send personal history with photo stating other qualifications such as typing, driving, to Box 424, "Classified" Asahi Evening News CPO 555, Tokyo.

TOKYO OFFICE of progressive American Company accepting application for (1) individual experienced in important-export of sundries capable of independently handling English correspondence (Spanish also preferred) with foreign accounts and (2) sales promotor and coodinator with knowledge insecticides, preferably estoniologist, to assist Japanese firm selling pyrethrum-butoxide base insecticide in Japan. Excellent pay, benefits, working condition. Only qualified person need apply. Send resume, references to Box 426, "Classified" Asahi Evening News CPO 555, Tokyo.

ACCOUNTANT wanted by Osaka Foreign Export Firm, good knowledge of general office routine and TYPEWRITERS all priced at ¥13,000. Sell at special price. Guaranteed. Also repairing. BROTHER TYPEWRITER CO. Tel: 291-8050, near Kanda Station (North Entrance. Front of Chuo-Line platform).

ANGEL-Silk. Fans, Bamboku-ware & dolls (Nikkatsu Arcade).

YOUR BEST BUY for Sony Transistor Radios, China-ware and Toys is at NIKKATSU ARCADE EXPRESS (Nikkatsu Bldg. Basement) Tel: 271-6236/7.

Wanted to Buy

REFRIGERATOR, DEEP FREEZER, AIR CONDITIONER, OIL HEATER, GAS RANGE. T.V. Will go any place. Call 331-8966. 9 a.m.-6 p.m.

GOLF-CLUBS, air-conditioner GOLF-CLUBS, refrigerator, RCA TV, etc. BEST PRICE. Near Ikebukuro rotary. IKEBUKURO & CO. Call 982-8496, 6986.

CALCULATING MACHINE—Wanted to buy and sell. Efficient repairing service.

TOHO JIMUKI K.K.
Tel: (251) 4796.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 159,988

MAR 30 1960

Japanese Criticize Symphony Plans

Negotiations, They Say, Were Highhanded

Complaints have been registered in a Tokyo newspaper that American officials in charge of handling the forthcoming Boston Symphony Orchestra tour of Japan are "pushing around" the Japanese sponsors "like in the days of the occupation."

The newspaper said that the sponsors have complained that the programs and terms were "virtually dictated to (them) in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The Asahi Evening News, an English-language newspaper, stated that "foremost among their (the sponsors') complaints is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American officials in Tokyo and lately by an advance manager sent here from Boston."

Speaking in reference to the orchestra's 22-concert tour in May, sponsored by the Japan Broadcasting Corporation and the Osaka International Festival Society, the paper named Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and William J. Cox, the advance manager of the Boston Symphony.

The newspaper further said that the sponsors complain of having been led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts, but that other conductors have been scheduled for nearly half of them. They also consider that an "unduly large share" of the programs are devoted to contemporary American composers with whom the Japanese public is not familiar.

A spokesman for the orchestra in Boston stated that relief conductors are usually taken on tour (in this case, Richard Burgin and Aaron Copland) and that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one contemporary work by an American be included in each program on tour.

The Asahi Evening News stated that it sent a cable to Dr. Munch asking if he were aware of the dissatisfaction among the Japanese and that his name "is being used to force far more contemporary music on classical symphony fans in Japan than they desire," or that "the people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally."

'Aparajito' for Telepix

"Aparajito" ("The Unvanquished"), produced and directed by Satajit Ray, who was responsible for "Pather Panchali," will have its Boston première Thursday, April 14, at the Telepix Cinema.

The film follows the maturing process of a young Indian student as he slowly drifts away from his village and his family.

"Aparajito" is set against the background of the cities of Benares and Calcutta. Karuna and Kanu Banerji, who had the roles of the mother and father in "Pather Panchali," head the cast.

Ravi Shankar composed and plays the score for "Aparajito," as he did for "Pather Panchali."

"Aparajito" is the second film of the trilogy based on the novel "Pather Panchali" being made by Ray.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,231

MAR 31 1960

Japs Object To Hub Symphony Tour Program

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note has intruded in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concer ttour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 14,737

MAR 30 1960

IN COMING TOUR

Japanese Sponsors Don't Like Program Of Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Circ. 6,888

MAR 30 1960

Tour of [illegible]an By Symph[illegible]y Is Off-Key

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department,, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

Sponsor Complaints

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 183,620

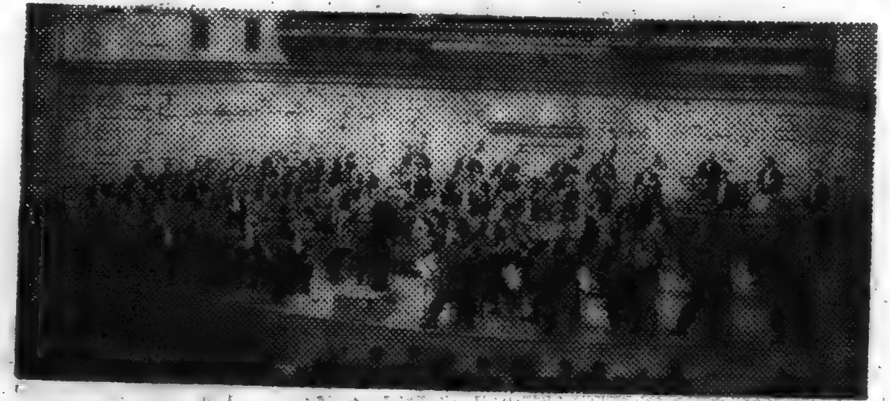
MAR 31 1960

Symphony Discord

SOUR notes are often sounded in the tuning up period before any great orchestral event. And we'd just as soon consign to that category the discordant noises that are coming from Tokyo over the impending Japanese tour by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The grounds on which Japanese officials complain that they're "being pushed around" seem very flimsy indeed. They involve normal procedures of the orchestra, at home as well as on tour.

Even in Boston Dr. Munch doesn't conduct all concerts. Even in Boston the works of little known American composers are frequently played. Even in Boston the programs are set without consulting sponsors.



"We like the system. We're sure the Japanese people will too.

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 24,963

AR 30 1960

Jap Sponsors Resentful Over Hub Symphony Tour

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that ar "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

Explanation

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

Misled

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

25'

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,462

MAR 31 1960

Boston Symphony's Tour of Japan Hits Sour Note

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded was in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

Dictate Programs

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other items were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

NHK officials said they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation."

"Foremost among their (the sponsors') complaints," said the newspaper, "is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American officials in Tokyo and lately by the advance manager sent here from Boston."

The newspaper named Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and William J. Cox, the orchestra's advance manager.

Neither was available for comment.

Munch Conducts

Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour. This was the practice on the past three tours made by the orchestra, including a 1956 visit to Europe and Russia. Composer-Conductor Aaron Copland and Associate Conductor Richard Burgin will spell Munch.

The Asahi Evening News said it sent Munch a cable asking whether he was aware of Japanese dissatisfaction, and that his name "is being [illegible] to force far more con[illegible] classical symp[illegible] in Japan than they desire, or that:

"The people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,754

APR 1 1960

Symphonic Beef

Uncle Sam, sowing dollars and good will, reaps more than his share of complaint.

The Boston Symphony orchestra is going to tour Japan in a plan of operations underwritten by the Eisenhower Fund for International Cultural Presentations and the Japanese are not happy about it.

Officials of the Japanese Broadcasting Corp., which is in charge of the tour, say they are being pushed around by orchestra officials as in the days of occupation. Specifically they charge two things. One is that Charles Munch, orchestra conductor will lead the musical unit in only 12 of the 22 concerts. Lesser lights will wield the baton on the other occasions. The other complaints are that the program for each concert includes one composition written by some American who is unknown in Japan.

These musicians, who wallow in the cultural and who reproach the rest of us for not taking similar baths, are peculiar people if judged by common standards. They may be depended upon to blow up a storm out of a catspaw of wind. It is indeed a rare occasion when one [illegible] has a good word for another. So we are not surprised to find the Japanese acting in similar character. And it is in keeping with past experience that, when Uncle Sam spends his money to give some other nation a good time, all he gets in return is a cacophony of ingratitude.

At Boston an official of the orchestra reported that it is common practice to send relief conductors with the unit when it is on tour. As to the inclusion of one American work in each program—why should that be considered an affront? Certainly this tossing in of a bit of American music in a good will tour is not too much. The State Department which passes on such musical junkets requires that one U. S. number be played on each program. This we think is no more than fair—if Uncle Sam is going to get any return at all for his money.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

A[illegible] 13 1960

Boston

By Guy Livingston
(423 Little Bldg.; DE 8-7560)

Norm Crosby in long run at The Surf, Revere.

Fred Petty booking Cape Cod strawhat niteries again this season.

Stanley Blinstrub, night spot owner, to San Francisco for visit with medico son.

Boston Symphony officials ironing out "apparent misunderstanding" in Tokyo involving programs for the orch's visit there in May.

Boston Opera Assn. racked up biggest sale on record for the Boston season by Metropolitan Opera at Metropolitan Theatre one weeker opening Monday (18).

Bruce Yorke, of Galvin Productions, and G. Sheldon Balloch, Dickinson Film Productions, Boston, acquired film rights to "The Nili Spies" by Anita Engle, and plan shooting in Israel this fall.

Jerome Rosenfeld's Show of the Month Club expanding to N.Y. where Jack Yorke, former Shubert manager in Boston, now at the Cort, N.Y., will head up the N.Y. Show of the Month Club. New offices are being opened in Manhattan.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • [illegible] 2-4200

Her[illegible]
BOS[illegible]
Cir[illegible]

MAR 30 1960

Treatment 'Like in Occupation'

Symphony's Tour Draws Tokyo Fire

TOKYO (AP) — Complaints were aired here Wednesday that American officials responsible for the forthcoming Japan tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are pushing its Japanese sponsors around "like in the days of the occupation."

They were carried in the English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News in connection with the orchestra's 22-concert tour of Japan, May 4-30, under sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

"Foremost among their (sponsors') complaints," said the paper, "is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American officials in Tokyo and lately by an advance manager sent here from Boston."

The paper named Edward J. Findlay as director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center and William J. Cox as the orchestra's advance manager.

(Continued on [illegible] Five)

One spokesman [illegible] was usual practice for th phony to have "relief" co when on tour and that been the case in the last three tours, including the Europe-Russian tour of 1956.

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,041

MAR 30 1960

Off-Pitch Note Sounded In Bost[illegible] Symphony Tour

BOSTON (AP) — [illegible]-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

Sponsors Complain

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semigovernment Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening news said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

NHK officials said they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation.

"Foremost among their (the sponsors') complaints," said the newspaper, "is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American officials in Tokyo and lately by an advance manager sent here from Boston."

The newspaper named Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and William J. Cox, the orchestra's advance manager. Neither was available for comment.

Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complaind they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

Standard Practice

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour. This was the practice on the past three tours made by the orchestra, including a 1956 visit to Europe and Russia. Composer-conductor Aaron Copland and associate conductor Richard Burgin will spell Munch.

The Asahi Evening News said it sent Munch a cable asking whether he was aware of Japanese dissatisfaction, and that his name "is being used to force far more contemporary music on classical symphony fans in Japan than they desire, or that:

"The people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally."

Munch could [illegible] reached for comment.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,462

MAR 31 1960

Boston Symphony's Tour of Japan Hits Sour Note

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded was* in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

Dictate Programs

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other items were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

NHK officials said they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation."

"Foremost among their (the sponsors') complaints," said the newspaper, "is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American officials in Tokyo and lately by the advance manager sent here from Boston."

The newspaper named Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and William J. Cox, the orchestra's advance manager.

Neither was available for comment.

Munch Conducts

Asahi Evening News sai sponsors complained the led to believe that Charle would conduct all co other conductors were for nearly half the perform

In Boston, the orchestr spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour. This was the practice on the past three tours made by the orchestra, including a 1956 visit to Europe and Russia. Composer-Conductor Aaron Copland and Associate Conductor Richard Burgin will spell Munch.

The Asahi Evening News said it sent Munch a cable asking whether he was aware of Japanese dissatisfaction, and that his name "is bein[illegible] to force far more co[illegible] classical [illegible] in Japan than th[illegible] desire, or that:

"The people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Republican (m)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,754

APR 1 1960

Symphonic Beef

Uncle Sam, sowing dollars and good will, reaps more than his share of complaint.

The Boston Symphony orchestra is going to tour Japan in a plan of operations underwritten by the Eisenhower Fund for International Cultural Presentations and the Japanese are not happy about it.

Officials of the Japanese Broadcasting Corp., which is in charge of the tour, say they are being pushed around by orchestra officials as in the days of occupation. Specifically they charge two things. One is that Charles Munch, orchestra conductor will lead the musical unit in only 12 of the 22 concerts. Lesser lights will wield the baton on the other occasions. The other complaints are that the program for each concert includes one composition written by some American who is unknown in Japan.

These musicians, who wallow in the cultural and who reproach the rest of us for not taking similar baths, are peculiar people if judged by common standards. They may be depended upon to blow up a storm out of a catspaw of wind. It is indeed a rare occasion [illegible] one [illegible] has a good word for another. So we are not surprised to find the Japanese acting in similar character. And it is in keeping with past experience that, when Uncle Sam spends his money to give some other nation a good time, all he gets in return is a cacophony of ingratitude.

At Boston an official of the orchestra reported that it is common practice to send relief conductors with the unit when it is ur. As to the inclusion of one Ameri in each program—why should dered an affront? Certainly bit of American music not too much. The sses on such one U. S. This

---

Time (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,041

MAR 30 1960

Off-Pitch Note Sounded In Bosto[illegible] Symphony Tour

BOSTON (AP) — A[illegible]-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

Sponsors Complain

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semigovernment Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening news said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

NHK officials said they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation.

"Foremost among their (the sponsors') complaints," said the newspaper, "is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American officials in Tokyo and lately by an advance manager sent here from Boston."

The newspaper named Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and William J. Cox, the orchestra's advance manager. Neither was available for comment.

Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complaind they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

Standard Practice

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour. This was the practice on the past three tours made by the orchestra, including a 1956 visit to Europe and Russia. Composer-conductor Aaron Copland and associate conductor Richard Burgin will spell Munch.

The Asahi Evening News said it sent Munch a cable asking whether he was aware of Japanese dissatisfaction, and that his name "is being used to force far more contemporary music on classical symphony fans in Japan than they desire, or that:

"The people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally."

Munch could [illegible] reached for comment.

165

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AV

A 13 1960

Boston

By Guy Livingston
(423 Little Bldg.; DE 8-7560)

Norm Crosby in long run at The Surf, Revere.

Fred Petty booking Cape Cod strawhat niteries again this season.

Stanley Blinstrub, night spot owner, to San Francisco for visit with medico son.

Boston Symphony officials ironing out "apparent misunderstanding" in Tokyo involving programs for the orch's visit there in May.

Boston Opera Assn. racked up biggest sale on record for the Boston season by Metropolitan Opera at Metropolitan Theatre one weeker opening Monday (18).

Bruce Yorke, of Galvin Productions, and G. Sheldon Balloch, Dickinson Film Productions, Boston, acquired film rights to "The Nili Spies" by Anita Engle, and plan shooting in Israel this fall.

Jerome Rosenfeld's Show of the Month Club expanding to N.Y. where Jack Yorke, former Shubert manager in Boston, now at the Cort, N.Y., will head up the N.Y. Show of the Month Club. New offices are being opened in Manhattan.

---

kyo Blast At Symphony

(Continued fro[illegible] Page)

Neither Findlay nor Cox was available for comment.

The paper said the sponsors complain that:

1—They had been led to believe Charles Muench would conduct all concerts but that other conductors have been scheduled for nearly half of them.

2—That an "unduly large share" of the programs are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of whom are unkonwn among Japanese.

3—That programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

In Boston, symphony officials expressed surprise at the Japanese charges, when informed of them by The Herald early today.

One spokesman noted that it was usual practice for the symphony to have "relief" conductors when on tour and that this had been the case in the last three tours, including the Europe-Russian tour of 1956.

Bargain BASEMENT MEN CONDITIONED
$22.50
34 to 42
wool lined
SURPLUS—for wrinkle resistance
ALL FIRST QUALITY
OFF PRICE
America's Fine Stores
THURSDAY at 9:15
CAN you tie this for yourself—for your friends
fancy woven patterns silk foulards
RTED
TIES and other SILK
$1.39

26

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

MAR 31 1960

JAPAN HITS TOUR BY U. S. ORCHESTRA

Upset by Boston Symphony's Conducting and Repertory Plans for Visit in May

By ROBERT TRUMBULL
Special to The New York Times.

TOKYO, March 30—"Boston Symphony Plans Shock Japan's Promoters," said a three-column headline on the front page today of The Asahi Evening News, a Tokyo English-language newspaper.

Officials of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK) were quoted as having said that they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation" by the Boston organization. NHK is sponsoring twenty of the orchestra's twenty-two concerts in various Japanese cities in May. The other two appearances will be at the Osaka Festival on May 7 and 8.

The festival authorities and NHK are disappointed because Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, plans to lead only twelve of the twenty-two concerts. The others will be divided between Aaron Copland, the composer, and Richard Burgin, the symphony's concertmaster and associate conductor.

The sponsors were quoted as expressing extreme dissatisfaction with the inclusion of an American work "unknown in Japan" on each of its six programs. The Japanese, it appears, want a heavier percentage of the classical composers such as Beethoven, who are favored here.

A spokesman for the United States Embassy, which is in this troubled picture because the orchestra's thirty-seven-day Asian tour was arranged under President Eisenhower's Fund for International Cultural Presentations, commented that "American audiences would think that these were good programs."

"The purpose of the President's Fund is to present American orchestras playing some American music," he said.

Miss Michi Murayama, executive director of the Osaka International Festival Society, complained about the program content and also the fact that the orchestra would make two appearances in Tokyo before going to the Osaka Festival.

Orchestra States Position

BOSTON, March 30 (AP)—Established policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a State Department requirement are shaping the plans of the orchestra for a tour of Japan, a symphony spokesman said last night.

The spokesman said that it was standard procedure for the symphony to have relief conductors when on tour. He said that has been the practice on the last three tours made by the orchestra, including a 1956 trip to Europe and the Soviet Union.

He added that it is a State Department requirement that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on the tour. That is symphony policy at home as well, he said, for virtually every concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

MAR 30 1960

Japan Angry About Boston Symphony Tour

TOKYO (Wednesday) Mar. 30 (AP)—Complaints were aired here today that American officials responsible for the forthcoming Japan tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are pushing its Japanese sponsors around "like in the days of the occupation."

They were carried in the English-language newspaper, Asahi Evening News, in connection with the orchestra's 22-concert tour of Japan, May 4-30, under sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

JAPAN TOUR
Page Twelve

5

share devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of whom are unknown among Japanese.

3. That programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

"Like Occupation Days"

Officials of NHK were quoted as saying they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation."

In connection with reports the orchestra plans to play in Tokyo before holding its two scheduled concerts at the Osaka International Festival, Miss Michi Murayama, the festival society's executive director, was quoted as saying:

"I . . . recall that the Boston Symphony played at the Edinburgh Festival a few years ago. But I don't recall that the orchestra had to play first in London. . . ."

Both NHK officials and Miss Murayama were also highly critical of what they said was the more than two months delay in getting Boston Symphony officials to give them a schedule and programs.

The orchestra's Japan visit is part of a 37-concert tour of Asia under President Eisenhower's fund for international cultural representations.

The Asahi Evening News said that in order to "clarify Mr. Munech's position" on the matter, it had sent him a cable asking whether he was aware of Japanese dissatisfaction, that his name "is being used to force far more contemporary music on classical symphony fans in Japan than they desire, or that:

"The people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally."

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,085

MAR 30 1960

Boston Symphony Tour

Off-Pitch Note in Plans; Japan Being 'Pushed Around'

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

Many Unknown

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

"Dictated to Sponsors"

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 149,[illegible]

MAR 31 1960

Never the Twain . . .

Japanese Discord Jars Symphony Tour

By CYRUS DURGIN

What prompted the complaint in Tokyo about the nature of the programs to be played there by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the fact that music director Charles Munch would not conduct all the concerts in Japan?

As of last night, the orchestra's management could not explain the origin of this crisis, and it was said that the United States State Department had not been able to cast any light upon it.

An Associated Press dispatch from Tokyo yesterday, listed three categorical complaints which had been published in the Asahi Evening News, an English-language newspaper. The first two dealt with the fact that Munch will not conduct all the Japanese concerts; the inclusion of "an unduly large share" of American composers unknown to the Japanese public and thirdly that programs and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The Asahi Evening News also stated that, to clarify Dr. Munch's position, it had sent him a cable inquiring if he were aware of Japanese dissatisfaction in these matters. Symphony Hall said, last night, that no reply yet had been sent, and that "no message of direction" had been received there from the U.S. State Dept.

The Orchestra's management pointed out that the State Dept. had stipulated one American work should appear on each program, a policy which had been followed upon the Boston Symphony's two previous tours in Europe in 1952 and 1956.

As for Dr. Munch not conducting all concerts, it was further emphasized it would be a physical impossibility, and no intimation ever had been made that he would conduct all concerts in Japan.

Pierre Monteux shared the conducting with Dr. Munch on the European tours. For the forthcoming Far East tour, under sponsorship of President Eisenhower's Fund for International Cultural Representations, concert master and associate conductor Richard Burgin, and Aaron Copland had been announced as co-conductors.

The Asahi Evenings News story cited, in its statement of complaint about the manner in which negotiations had been conducted, Edward J. Findlay as director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and William J. Cox, advance representative of the Orchestra.

Cox, 42, is secretary of Phillips Exeter Academy and was given a Spring leave of absence when he was invited to join the orchestra's staff on tour. Cox has been active as voluntary chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Conductor Munch had worked out four programs which he will conduct on the tour, and one each had been set up for Burgin and Copland.

The American music includes Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance" by Samuel Barber; Norman Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale; Easley Blackwood's First Symphony; Leon Kirchner's Toccata, and Copland's Symphony No. 1 and Suite from the opera, "The Tender Land."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

MAR 31 1960

JAPAN HITS TOUR BY U. S. ORCHESTRA

Upset by Boston Symphony's Conducting and Repertory Plans for Visit in May

By ROBERT TRUMBULL
Special to The New York Times.

TOKYO, March 30—"Boston Symphony Plans Shock Japan's Promoters," said a three-column headline on the front page today of The Asahi Evening News, a Tokyo English-language newspaper.

Officials of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK) were quoted as having said that they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation" by the Boston organization. NHK is sponsoring twenty of the orchestra's twenty-two concerts in various Japanese cities in May. The other two appearances will be at the Osaka Festival on May 7 and 8.

The festival authorities and NHK are disappointed because Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, plans to lead only twelve of the twenty-two concerts. The others will be divided between Aaron Copland, the composer, and Richard Burgin, the symphony's concertmaster and associate conductor.

The sponsors were quoted as expressing extreme dissatisfaction with the inclusion of an American work "unknown in Japan" on each of its six programs. The Japanese, it appears, want a heavier percentage of the classical composers such as Beethoven, who are favored here.

A spokesman for the United States Embassy, which is in this troubled picture because the orchestra's thirty-seven-day Asian tour was arranged under President Eisenhower's Fund for International Cultural Presentations, commented that "American audiences would think that these were good programs."

"The purpose of the President's Fund is to present American orchestras playing some American music," he said.

Miss Michi Murayama, executive director of the Osaka International Festival Society, complained about the program content and also the fact that the orchestra would make two appearances in Tokyo before going to the Osaka Festival.

Orchestra States Position

BOSTON, March 30 (AP)—Established policies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a State Department requirement are shaping the plans of the orchestra for a tour of Japan, a symphony spokesman said last night.

The spokesman said that it was standard procedure for the symphony to have relief conductors when on tour. He said that has been the practice on the last three tours made by the orchestra, including a 195 trip to Europe and the Sovie Union.

He added that it is a Stat Department requirement tha at least one work by a contem porary American composer b included in each program on th tour. That is symphony polic at home as well, he said, fo virtually every concert.

---

ip Agency, Inc.
ichmond 2-lobe ass.
6

their (sponsors') complaints," said the paper, "is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted on behalf of the orchestra, first by American officials in Tokyo and lately by an advance manager sent here from Boston."

The paper named Edward J. Findlay as director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center and William J. Cox as the orchestra's advance manager.

Neither Findlay nor Cox was available for comment.

The paper said the sponsors complain that:

1. They had been led to believe Charles Muench would conduct all concerts but that other conductors have been scheduled for nearly half of them.

2. That an "unduly large share" of the programs are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of whom are unknown among Japanese.

3. That programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

"Like Occupation Days"

Officials of NHK were quoted as saying they were being "pushed around like in the days of the occupation."

In connection with reports the orchestra plans to play in Tokyo before holding its two scheduled concerts at the Osaka International Festival, Miss Michi Murayama, the festival society's executive director, was quoted as saying:

"I . . . recall that the Boston Symphony played at the Edinburgh Festival a few years ago. But I don't recall that the orchestra had to play first in London. . . ."

Both NHK officials and Miss Murayama were also highly critical of what they said was the more than two months delay in getting Boston Symphony officials to give them a schedule and programs.

The orchestra's Japan visit is part of a 37-concert tour of Asia under President Eisenhower's fund for international cultural representations.

The Asahi Evening News said that in order to "clarify Mr. Munech's position" on the matter, it had sent him a cable asking whether he was aware of Japanese dissatisfaction, that his name "is being used to force far more contemporary music on classical symphony fans in Japan than they desire," or that:

"The people negotiating on behalf of your orchestra presented the programs and terms virtually as an ultimatum and threatened cancellation unless the Japanese accepted unconditionally."

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,085

MAR 30 1960

Boston Symphony Tour

Off-Pitch Note in Plans; Japan Being 'Pushed Around'

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

Many Unknown

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

"Dictated to Sponsors"

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 149,

MAR 31 1960

Never the Twain . . .

Japanese Discord Jars Symphony Tour

By CYRUS DURGIN

What prompted the complaint in Tokyo about the nature of the programs to be played there by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~and the~~ fact ~~that music~~ director Charles Munch would not conduct all the concerts in Japan?

As of last night, the orchestra's management could not explain the origin of this crisis, and it was said that the United States State Department had not been able to cast any light upon it.

An Associated Press dispatch from Tokyo yesterday, listed three categorical complaints which had been published in the Asahi Evening News, an English-language newspaper. The first two dealt with the fact that Munch will not conduct all the Japanese concerts; the inclusion of "an unduly large share" of American composers unknown to the Japanese public and thirdly that programs and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The Asahi Evening News also stated that, to clarify Dr. Munch's position, it had sent him a cable inquiring if he were aware of Japanese dissatisfaction in these matters. Symphony Hall said, last night, that no reply yet had been sent, and that "no message of direction" had been received there from the U.S. State Dept.

The Orchestra's management pointed out that the State Dept. had stipulated one American work should appear on each program, a policy which had been followed upon the Boston Symphony's two previous tours in Europe in 1952 and 1956.

As for Dr. Munch not conducting all concerts, it was further emphasized it would be a physical impossibility, and no intimation ever had been made that he would conduct all concerts in Japan.

Pierre Monteux shared the conducting with Dr. Munch on the European tours. For the forthcoming Far East tour, under sponsorship of President Eisenhower's Fund for International Cultural Representations, concert master and associate conductor Richard Burgin, and Aaron Copland had been announced as co-conductors.

The Asahi Evenings News story cited, in its statement of complaint about the manner in which negotiations had been conducted, Edward J. Findlay as director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and William J. Cox, advance representative of the Orchestra.

Cox, 42, is secretary of Phillips Exeter Academy and was given a Spring leave of absence when he was invited to join the orchestra's staff on tour. Cox has been active as voluntary chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Conductor Munch had worked out four programs which he will conduct on the tour, and one each had been set up for Burgin and Copland.

The American music includes Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance" by Samuel Barber; Norman Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale; Easley Blackwood's First Symphony; Leon Kirchner's Toccata, and Copland's Symphony No. 1 and Suite from the opera, "The Tender Land."

27

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 60,734

MAR 31 1960

Hub Symphony Defends Tour Plan For Japan

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is an American orchestra and should be expected to play American music, its manager said Wednesday in response to reported Japanese criticism of its planned Japanese tour.

Thomas D. Perry Jr. said he found the Japanese remarks "astonishing."

A Tokyo English language newspaper, said the orchestra's scheduled May tour of Japan was giving its Japanese sponsors "many unexpected headaches." The paper criticized the "shocking manner" in which negotiations were conducted.

Among its complaints were that too many works by contemporary American composers were scheduled on the 22-concert tour and that the orchestra's regular conductor, Charles Munch, would conduct only half the concerts himself.

Government Arranged Tour

Perry said, "It is understood that an American orchestra plays American music. We are an American orchestra and we go there to reflect our culture and we would be derelict if we didn't."

Perry said that the U.S. State Department, which arranged the tour, specified that at least one composition by an American composer should be played in each program. A typical concert program, he said, would include the work of an American composer and two by European classicists. It is the orchestra's policy, Perry said, to place ultimate responsibility, musically, in the hands of the conductor.

Playing Japanese music would be "impossible," Perry said, without specially adapting the orchestra's traditional Western instruments. "We have not planned to play Japanese music because it's composed for different instruments," he said.

Need Travel Time

Concerning criticism that Munch was not conducting all the concerts, Perry said he did not know how the impression ever arose that Munch could do so. "It is impractical because it simply is too fatiguing," he said. "Why it should take anyone by surprise is difficult to understand."

He said he did not know "who said what to whom and in what manner" in making arrangements. "We didn't know anything about it until we saw it in the papers. We are working very hard now to try to understand what seems to be a monumental misunderstanding."

There was no immediate comment from Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,256

MAR 30 1960

Boston Symphony Denies Jap Sponsors Pushed Around

BOSTON (AP)—An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

POLICY AT HOME

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announed for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Express (e)
NEWPORT, Vt.
Circ. 4,233

MAR 30 1960

Sour Notes From Boston Symphony Orchestra

Forthcoming Tour of Japan Echoes With Discord Over Programs

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi - government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 183,620

MAR 30 1960

Hub Symphony Stand On Jap Tour Defended

The manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today expressed surprise at reported complaints surrounding the orchestra's forthcoming Japanese tour.

"Actually," said Thomas D. Perry Jr. of Hingham, "I find the remarks astonishing."

SAYS U. S. AGENCY BEARS RESPONSIBILITY

Another spokesman said [illegible] of the criticism did not concern the orchestra, since a government agency has primary responsibility for the tour.

A Japanese newspaper, as quoted in a wire service dispatch from Tokyo, berated American officials for allegedly mistreating the Japanese sponsors of the tour.

The newspaper, the English-language Asahi Evening News, claimed the Japanese sponsors were being "pushed around [illegible] in the days of occupation."

"Foremost among the complaints," the paper said, "is the shocking manner in which negotiations have been conducted [illegible] behalf of the orchestra."

Specifically, the paper said, the sponsors have made the following criticisms:

—That they had been led to believe Charles Munch would conduct all concerts, but that other conductors have been scheduled for nearly half of them.

—That an "unduly" large share of the programs are devoted to works of contemporary American authors, many of whom are unknown to the Japanese.

—That programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

"It would be," he suggested, "like playing 'The Stars and Stripes Forever' on a single-string violin."

Perry answered the criticisms categorically.

"In the first place, he said, [illegible] impossible to conceive how [illegible] the idea that Mr. Munch would undertake to conduct all the concerts."

"It is impractical because it [illegible] is too fatiguing," he [illegible] should take anyone by surprise is difficult to understand."

"Secondly, he added, "it is understood that an American orchestra plays American music."

"We are an American orchestra," he explained, "and we go there to reflect our culture, and we would be derelict if we didn't."

THINKS AMERICAN MUSIC FITTING

Perry conceded that the State Department had specified that at least one composition in each program would be by an American composer.

"But I think this is perfectly fitting and proper," he added.

A typical program, he said, would include the work of an American composer and two European classicists.

[illegible] playing music by Japanese composers, Perry said it would be "impossible" without specific adaptation to western-style instruments.

"We have not planned to play it," he said, "because it's composed for different instruments."

Concerning the criticism that the terms of the tour were "virtually dictated," Perry said he had no way of knowing "who said what to whom and in what manner."

However, he added, that the orchestra "can't play 10 hours a day and must leave time for travel and other arrangements."

Furthermore, he said, it is the fixed practice of orchestra to place the ultimate responsibility, musically, in the hands of the conductor.

"[illegible] sorry they saw fit to shoot [illegible] cannon," Perry said.

"I really don't know what it's all about. It's perfectly normal."

The 22-concert tour of the orchestra in Japan is scheduled for May 4 to 30 under the joint sponsorship of the semi-government Japan Broadcasting Corp. and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The tour was arranged by the State Department's Culture Exchange officials.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Circ. 11,977

MAR 30 1960

Japanese Hits Hub Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — An off-pitch note intruded today in plans for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan. A Tokyo newspaper said Japanese sponsors feel they are being "pushed around."

The English-language newspaper Asahi Evening News said one complaint of the sponsors is that an "unduly large share" of the programs for the symphony's 22-concert tour of Japan May 4-30 are devoted to works of contemporary American composers, many of them unknown in Japan.

A spokesman for the orchestra explained that the State Department, sponsoring the tour, requires that at least one work by a contemporary American composer be included in each program on tour. This is also symphony policy at home, he said, for virtually every concert.

The concerts are under the sponsorship of the semi - government Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society.

The Asahi Evening News said the sponsors complained that programs, schedules and other terms were "virtually dictated to the sponsors in a take-it-or-leave-it attitude."

The newspaper said the sponsors complained they were led to believe that Charles Munch would conduct all concerts but other conductors were announced for nearly half the performances.

In Boston, the orchestra's spokesman said it is standard procedure to have relief conductors on tour.

28

Asahi Evening News
April 1, 1960

Concert Sponsors Back Up Asahi Eve. News Story

By Hans E. Pringsheim

Spokesmen for the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK) and the Osaka International Festival Society Thursday backed up the accuracy of the report carried Wednesday by the Asahi Evening News about the negotiations for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's forthcoming tour of Japan.

A highly placed NHK official said he had read the report and approved it.

Miss Michi Murayama, executive director of the Osaka International Festival Society, said after reading the report that as far as she knew, it presented the facts accurately.

A spokesman for the American Cultural Center in Tokyo had earlier called the report "completely untrue," but failed to cite, let alone refute, any untrue statement from the report.

The same spokesman was quoted as saying that the U.S. Embassy and the American Cultural Center "were not really involved" in the matter.

Both NHK and the Festival Society confirmed Thursday that in their negotiations about the Boston Symphony Orchestra's visit, from October of last year until last week, they had been dealing exclusively with officials of the American Cultural Center and occasionally of the U.S. Embassy. Only last week end, for the first time, the Boston Symphony's advance manager, William J. Cox, appeared on the scene.

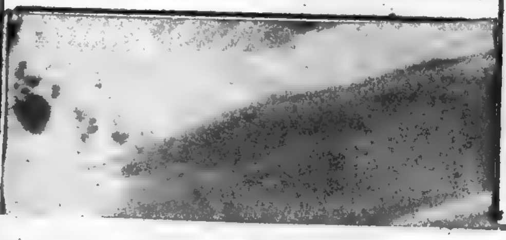
Mr. Cox entered the negotiations with NHK last Saturday, and with the Festival Society on Sunday.

The highly placed NHK official, who asked that his name be withheld, said that at one time he telephoned a high U.S. Embassy official to complain about the manner in which the Cultural Center was conducting the negotiations.

"But we are no longer concerned with these matters now, as we are too busy preparing everything possible to make the Boston Symphony tour a success," another NHK official said. "Very little time has been left, now that at last we have got the schedule and the programs."

No word has to date been received from the orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, to whom the Asahi Evening News cabled a number of questions on Tuesday, asking him to cable his answers for publication.

The orchestra's administrator, Leonard Burkat, was quoted as having said in Boston on Wednesday that a statement would be issued shortly to clarify what seemed to him "a monumental misunderstanding."



Meanwhile, more misunderstandings cropped up in another statement attributed to Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Perry reportedly was astonished at Japanese criticism of the orchestra's plans to play American music rather than Japanese music.

The Asahi Evening News has reported no Japanese criticism of the orchestra's plans to play American music. The report cited Japanese complaints of the "unduly large share allotted in the programs to works by contemporary composers, most of them practically unknown to the Japanese concert public." It also cited Japanese complaints about not having been consulted about the programs, the delay in being shown the programs and schedules, and the refusal of the orchestra's advance manager to consider any changes.

All this was in sharp contrast with the experience which Japanese sponsors have had in negotiating with other famous symphony orchestras, including the Berlin, Leningrad, Prague, and Vienna Philharmonic orchestras. In all cases, programs and schedules were agreed upon, after due consultations between the orchestras and the Japanese sponsors.

(Continued on Page 4)

Concert Sponsors—

(Continued From Page 1)

Nowhere did the Asahi Evening News report cite any request that the Boston Symphony Orchestra should play any Japanese music, which indeed Japanese audiences would not welcome.

However, for the record, Mr. Perry erred when he stated that playing Japanese music would be "impossible" without adapting the orchestra's Western-style instruments specially for the tour.

Mr. Perry was also quoted as saying that the Boston Symphony had not planned to play any Japanese music "because it's composed for different instruments."

The orchestra manager seems to be unaware that Japanese composers have been writing music for Western instruments for nearly a century, and that many of the contemporary Japanese composers' orchestra works are being performed successfully all over the world, including the United States.

Only the other day, the American conductor Thor Johnson told the press in Tokyo that practically every major symphony orchestra in the United States was playing some Japanese compositions this season.

Mr. Perry further asked how the impression arose that Mr. Munch would conduct all the concerts.

Again for the record, this impression arose as the result of announcements made, and statements attributed to, the director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center.

A spokesman for the Boston Symphony was quoted as having said on this subject that it was standard procedure for the orchestra to have relief conductors when on tour. The question arises as to what constitutes "relief."

When the Berlin Philharmonic visited Japan in November, 1957, on a three-week tour of 16 concerts under the direction of Herbert von Karajan, it also took along a "relief conductor" in the person of Wilhelm Schuechter, now the regular conductor of the NHK Symphony Orchestra. But Mr. von Karajan, who of course, is much younger than Mr. Munch, was scheduled to conduct all the concerts, and did, with the exception of one, in Sendai, when he had a severe cold and was "relieved" by Mr. Schuechter.

In the present case, the Japanese complaints are not directed against the fact that Mr. Munch will have "relief conductors," but against the unproportionately large numbers of concerts allocated to relief conductors in the schedule itself, and the failure to mention anything about relief conductors in the negotiations until the presentation of the final schedule as a fait accompli.

Both NHK and the Osaka International Festival Society seem to have resigned themselves to accepting the terms which have been presented to them as final. Their criticism against the manner in which the terms were presented has thereby lost none of its validity.

29

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
APR 22 1960

Music and Political Discord

The cancellation of the proposed trip of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Korea was wisely made. There is no assurance that the situation in that unhappy country will be calm enough in two weeks time even to permit travelers to move about without danger to their lives. Certainly the atmosphere could scarcely be less conducive to the rapport between orchestra and audience necessary for sufficient appreciation.

Ears keyed to the shouts of rioters and the guns of marshaled troops have little time for supreme orchestration and performance. The suppression of the arts is an inevitable corollary of political violence. Korea is diminished by its misfortunes in more ways than one. Nor will the proposed visit by President Eisenhower in June restore the nation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • [illegible] 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. [illegible]
APR 20 1960

RIOTS MAY BLOCK SYMPHONY TRIP

Boston Symphony Orchestra officials said today its scheduled visits to Korea next week may be cancelled because of "the itchy situation there."

The orchestra's 105 musicians and managers, and some seven tons of musical instruments, are due to leave Logan Airport Monday at 7:30 a. m., on a Far Eastern tour under auspices of the State Dept.

"We are in constant touch with the State Dept., and as of now there is no definite change in our schedule," an orchestra spokesman said. "However, Washington has informed us it will not send the orchestra into Korea if there is any danger involved."

The orchestra tour schedule calls for the group to arrive in Korea April 27 and to present concerts in Seoul April 29 and 30.

Concerts also are scheduled in Tokyo for May 4 and 5, but according to the symphony spokesman, the state dept. has no objection to the orchestra's appearance in Japan.

"It is quite poss[illegible] cause of the riots [illegible] Seoul, the Korean part of our tour may be lopped off," he said.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 50,968
APR 21 1960

Boston Symphony May Bypass Korea

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra said Wednesday it was considering cancellation of two concerts scheduled in Korea because of the "itchy situation there."

A spoksman said the orchestra was discussing the matter with the State Department, which arranged the Far Eastern tour, scheduled to begin with concerts April 29 and 30 at Seoul.

Student riots there have put the city in a state of seige.

The statement emphasized that the orchestra had no intention of canceling the entire tour which includes 22 concerts in Japan starting May 4, three in the Philippines June 1, 2 and 3 and nine in Australia and New Zealand starting June 6.

The orchestra entourage, with seven tons of musical instruments, was scheduled to leave Logan Airport next Monday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, [illegible] • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,462
APR 20 1960

Boston Symphony Tour May Be Canceled

BOSTON (UPI) — Representatives of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and U. S. State Department discussed today the possibility of cancelling part or all of the orchestra's Far Eastern tour.

A spokesman for the symphony said the scheduled April 29 and 30 concerts in Seoul, Korea, might be cancelled because of the "itchy situation over there."

The orchestra also is scheduled for appearances May 4 and 5 in Tokyo. According to the spokesman, it is not known immediately whether the entire tour will be cancelled.

The State Department said it had no objection to the orchestra visiting Japan.

Seven tons of musical instruments along with orchestra members were scheduled to leave Logan Airport at 7:30 a. m. Monday on the tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 159,988
APR 21 1960

Korean Concert Off

By the Associated Press

Seoul, Korea

The United States Embassy today canceled two concerts by the Boston Symphony scheduled in the strife-torn capital for next week.

The embassy said that even if it were possible to arrange performances under the restrictions of martial law, "it would not accord with the mourning of the nation to hold entertainment at this time."

The statement added that it may be possible to reschedule the concert dates in June, but this is uncertain.

The orchestra leaves Boston Monday for a tour of the Far East. Last night a spokesman said it still expected to play in Seoul.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 57,908
APR 21 1960

Orchestra May Avoid Korea

Boston — (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra said yesterday it is considering cancellation of two concerts scheduled in Korea because of the "itchy situation there."

A spokesman said the orchestra is discussing the matter with the State Department, which arranged the Far Eastern tour, scheduled to begin with concerts April 29 and 30 at Seoul.

Student riots there have put the city in a state of siege.

The statement emphasized that the orchestra has no intention of canceling the entire tour which includes 22 concerts in Japan starting May 4, three in the Philippines June 1, 2 and 3 and nine in Australia and New Zealand starting June 6.

The orchestra entourage with seven tons of musica instruments, is scheduled t leave Logan Airport nex Monday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 39,753
APR 20 1960

Boston Symphony May Cut Concerts Set for Seoul

BOSTON, (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra said today it was discussing with the State Department in Washington the possibility of cutting two Korean concerts from its Far East tour because of the "itchy situation there."

A spokesman said the tour had been scheduled to open with concerts April 29 and 30 at Seoul where student riots have put the city in a state of siege.

The statement made it plain that the orchestra had no thought of canceling the entire tour which includes 22 concerts in Japan starting May 4, three concerts in the Philippines June 1, 2, and 3, and nine concerts in Australia and New Zealand starting June 6.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 883,213 S. 1,199,862
APR 22 1960

Symphony Cancels Visit

SEOUL, Korea, April 21 [Reuters]—The United States embassy announced Friday night that the Boston Symphony orchestra, which was to perform April 27 in Seoul under President Eisenhower's "people to people program," has canceled its visit.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635
APR 22 1960

SEOUL CONCERTS OFF

Boston Symphony's Dates Are Canceled Because of Unrest

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 21—Concerts that were to have been given in Seoul, Kroea, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra April 29 and 30 have been canceled.

The orchestra was notified by the State Department today that the United States Embassy in Korea and the Seoul sponsor of the concerts had agreed to the cancellation. The state of national unrest, widespread mourning and martial law in Korea made it impossible for the concerts to be presented properly, the announcement said.

The Boston Symphony will leave Monday for Tokyo. Other Far Eastern concerts will be arranged on the dates originally reserved for the Korean appearances.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 45,338

APR 20 1960

Boston Symphony May Exclude Korea From Far East Tour

BOSTON, (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra said today it was discussing with the State Department in Washington the possibility of cutting two Korean concerts from its Far East tour because of the "itchy situation there."

A spokesman said the tour had been scheduled to open with concerts April 29 and 30 at Seoul where student riots have put the city in a state of siege.

The statement made it plain that the orchestra had no thought of canceling the entire tour which includes 22 concerts in Japan starting May 4, three concerts in the Philippines June 1, 2, and 3, and nine concerts in Australia and New Zealand starting June 6.

The players and managers with seven tons of musical instruments were scheduled to leave Logan Airport Monday at 7:30 a.m. EDT.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 50,965

APR 22 1960

Hub Symphony Cancels Playing Dates In Korea

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra Thursday announced cancellation of two scheduled concerts in Korea because of "national unrest" amid bloody riots in Seoul.

The concerts had been scheduled April 20-30 in Seoul at the start of a seven-week tour of the Far East and Australia.

Orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., said it was notified by the State Department in Washington that the cancellation had been agreed to by the U.S. Embassy in Korea and local sponsors.

"It was agreed that the state of national unrest, widespread mourning and martial law in Korea made it impossible for the concerts to be properly presented," Perry said.

He said Monday's departure for the 104-piece orchestra would not be postponed. "It is not yet known where in the Far East the orchestra will perform on the dates previously scheduled for Korea," he said.

The tour includes 22 concerts in Japan, starting May 4, three in the Philippines June 1-3 and nine in Australia and New Zealand starting June 6.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

APR 22 1960

Boston Symphony Not to Visit Seoul

SEOUL, South Korea, Apr. 21 (Reuters)—The United States Embassy announced here tonight that the visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was due to perform next week in Seoul, has been canceled.

The orchestra was scheduled to appear here from Apr. 27 until May 1 under President Eisenhower's "People to People Program."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

APR 20 1960

Two Concerts Scheduled

Boston Symphony Still Plans Trip to Korea

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is proceeding with normal preparations for its proposed Far East tour despite the uneasy situation in that part of the world, a spokesman for the orchestra declared today.

Part or all of the tour will be cancelled only if such advice is received from the U.S. State Department in Washington, he pointed out.

The 104-member orchestral group is scheduled to leave Logan Airport on Monday at 7:30 a.m. aboard two large transport planes.

The schedule calls for two concerts in Seoul, Korea, on April 29 and 30 under the direction of Charles Munch.

Twenty-two concerts have been scheduled for Japan with subsequent perfomances in Australia and New Zealand.

The orchestra is scheduled to arrive in Seoul on Apr. 27. The Far Eastern tour is under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

The Seoul perfomances are co-sponsored by the Korean Newspaper Publishers Assn. and the Korean Musicians Assn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 141,391

APR 22 1960

Orchestra Cuts Out Korea Tour

Boston —(UPI)— The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced yesterday that it canceled two concerts scheduled in Korea because of "national unrest" there.

The orchestra was scheduled to give concerts April 29 and 30 in Seoul to start a seven-week tour of the Far East and Australia.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., orchestra manager, said the State Department told him the cancellations were agreed to by the local sponsors and the U.S. Embassy in Korea.

The 104-piece orchestra will leave Monday as scheduled, he said. "It is not known where in the Far East the orchestra will perform on the dates previously scheduled for Korea," he added.

The tour includes 22 concerts in Japan, three in the Philippines and nine in Australia and New Zealand.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

APR 27 1960

Korean Rioting Kayos Boston Symph in Seoul

Boston, April 26.

The Boston Symphony Orch has been notified that the U.S. Embassy in striketorn Seoul, Korea, has canceled two concerts skedded there on April 29 and 30. The 104-member orch left yesterday, Monday (25) for a tour of the Far East.

The Embassy said even if it were possible to arrange performances in the Korean capitol under the restrictions of martial law "it would not be in accord with the mourning of the nation to hold entertainment at this time." It might be possible to reschedule the concerts in June, but this was seen as uncertain.

The orch and staff of 13 left Boston's Logan airport in two groups, arriving in Tokyo tomorrow, Wednesday (27), for 22 concerts in Japan. The orch's tour, its third foreign trip, is being made as part of the Presidential's special international program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Uni[illegible] (m)
SPRING[illegible], [illegible]
Cir[illegible]

APR 2[illegible] 1960

Boston Symphony Cuts Korea Off Concert Trip

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced Thursday that it canceled two concerts scheduled in Korea because of "national unrest" there.

The orchestra was scheduled to give concerts April 29 and 30 in Seoul to start a seven-week tour of the Far East and Australia.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

APR 20 1960

BSO Talks Of Avoiding 'Itchy' Seoul

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra said today it was discussing with the State Department in Washington the possibility of cutting two Korean concerts from its Far East tour because of the "itchy situation there."

A spokesman said the tour had been scheduled to open with concerts April 29 and 30 at Seoul where student riots have put the city in a state of siege.

The statement made it plain that the orchestra had no thought of canceling the entire tour which includes 22 concerts in Japan starting May 4, three concerts in the Philippines June 1, 2, and 3, and nine concerts in Australia and New Zealand starting June 6.

The players and managers with seven tons of musical instruments were scheduled to leave Logan Airport Monday at 7:30 a.m. (EST)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 600,318

APR 23 1960

Seoul Concerts Are Cancelec

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 21—Concerts that were to have been given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Seoul, Korea, April 29 and 30 have been canceled. The State Department, in notifying the orchestra Thursday, said unrest in Korea prompted the action by the United States Embassy in Korea and the Seoul sponsor.

New England Ne[illegible], Inc.
Box 2078, Boston [illegible] 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,041

APR 21 1960

Boston Concerts In Seoul Canceled

SEOUL, Korea (AP) — The U. S. Embassy today canceled two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this strife-torn capital next week.

The embassy said even if it were possible to arrange performances under the restrictions of martial law, "it would not accord with the mourning of the nation to hold entertainment at this time."

The statement added that it may be possible to reschedule the concert dates in June but said this is uncertain.

The 104-member orchestra leaves Boston Monday for a tour of the Far East.

31

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770
APR 22 1960

BSO Cancels Two Concerts In Seoul, Korea

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been notified by the State Department in Washington that the U.S. Embassy in Korea and the local sponsor of the orchestra's concerts, which were scheduled to be given in Seoul on April 29-30, have agreed on a cancellation of these concerts.

It was agreed that the state of national unrest, widespread mourning and martial law in Korea made it impossible for the concerts to be properly presented.

The orchestra will depart from Boston Monday morning for Tokyo, as originally scheduled. It is not yet known where in the Far East the orchestra will perform on the dates previously scheduled for Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Mercury (e)
MEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,602
APR 20 1960

MAY CUT TOUR

BOSTON (UPI) — Representatives of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and U.S. State Department discussed today the possibility of cancelling part or all of the orchestra's Far Eastern tour.

A spokesman for the symphony said the scheduled April 29 and 30 concerts in Seoul, Korea, might be cancelled because of the "itchy situation over there."

NewEngland NewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,037
APR 20 1960

Hub Symphony May Bypass Korea

Political unrest in South Korea may force the Boston Symphony Orchestra to cancel to scheduled appearances in Seoul next week, a spokesman said today.

"We are waiting word from Washington on that segment of our aFr Eastern tour," the spokesman said. "State Department officials said they would consider the situation and let us know."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 41,681
APR 20 1960

BOSTON. — (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra said today it was discussing with the state department in Washington the possibility of cutting two Korean concerts from its Far East tour because of the "itchy situation there." A spokesman said the tour had been scheduled to open with concerts April 29 and 30 at Seoul where student riots have put the city in a state of siege. The statement made it plain that the orchestra had no thought of canceling the entire tour which includes 22 concerts in Japan starting May 4, three concerts in the Philippines June 1, 2 and 3, and nine concerts in Australia and New Zealand starting June 6.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 39,753
APR 21 1960

CONCERTS CANCELLED

SEOUL, (AP)—The U. S. Embassy today cancelled two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this strife-torn capital next week.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 179,169
APR 21 1960

Symphony To Skip Seoul

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was notified today that the U. S. Embassy in strike-torn Seoul, Korea, has canceled two concerts scheduled there next week.

The 104-member orchestra leaves here Monday for a tour of the Far East.

The Embassy said even if it were possible to arrange performances in the Korean capital under the restrictions of martial law "it would not be in accord with the mourning of the nation to hold entertainment at this time." It may be possible to reschedule the concerts in June, but this was regarded as uncertain.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
MALDEN, Mass.
Circ. 10,804
APR 20 1960

MAY CUT TOUR

BOSTON (UPI) — Representatives of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and U.S. State Department discussed today the possibility of cancelling part or all of the orchestra's Far Eastern tour.

A spokesman for the sym-

(Continued on Page Seven)

over there."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (m)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 31,775
APR 21 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY GOES AHEAD WITH KOREA PLANS

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is proceeding with normal plans for two concerts in Korea despite the uneasy situation there.

A spokesman for the 104-member orchestra said plans still call for departure from Logan Airport, Boston Monday morning for a concert tour of the Far East.

The spokesman said part or all of the tour will be caneled only if such advice is received from the State Department.

Lincoln White, State Department Press Officer, said in Washington Wednesday he has had no information about a cancelation.

NewEngland NewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
APR 21 1960

Boston Symphony To Play in Korea Despite Situation

The Boston Symphony Orchestra schedule still includes two performances in Korea next week despite the uneasy situation there.

A spokesman for the 104-piece orchestra said part or all of the tour will be canceled only upon advice from the State Department in Washington.

The troupe leaves Logan Airport Monday at 7:30 a.m. aboard two large transport planes. Concerts, under the direction of Charles Munch, are scheduled Apr. 29 and 30 in Seoul.

Twenty-two other concerts are planned in Japan with subsequent performances in Australia and New Zealand as part of the President's special international program for cultural presentations.

NewEngland NewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341
APR 21 1960

Boston Symphony Plans to Keep Dates in Seoul

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is proceeding with normal plans for two concerts in Korea despite the uneasy situation there.

A spokesman for the 104-member orchestra said that plans still call for departure from Boston's Logan Airport Monday morning for a concert tour of the Far East.

He said that part or all of the tour will be canceled only if such advice is received from the State Department.

The orchestra has arranged to play concerts in Seoul on April 30 and May 1.

The Japan Times
April 22, 1960

Boston Symphony Cancels ROK Trip

SEOUL (AP)—South Korea's uprising Thursday forced cancellation of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which had been scheduled for next week.

The cancellation heightened speculation that President Dwight D. Eisenhower's scheduled June 22 visit to Seoul may also be canceled unless complete calm is restored to the riot-torn nation well in advance of the President's trip to the Orient.

American officials are still hoping this will come about and have not yet recommended cancellation, it is understood.

But it seemed likely Eisenhower would not visit Korea if the capital is still under curfew proclaimed at the height of Tuesday's uprising in which police shot nearly 1,000 persons.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815

APR 23 1960

TO PLAY IN TAIPEI

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold two concerts at Taipei, Formosa, to replace two dates originally scheduled for Korea, it was announced Friday. The Korean concerts were canceled following the riots there this week.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 600,319

APR 23 1960

Boston Symphony to Taiwan

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give two concerts in Tapei, Taiwan, next Friday and Saturday under Charles Munch. The programs will replace the scheduled concerts in Korea that were canceled because of the political situation there.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,835

APR 23 1960

Boston Symphony to Taiwan

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give two concerts in Tapei, Taiwan, next Friday and Saturday under Charles Munch. The programs will replace the scheduled concerts in Korea that were canceled because of the political situation there.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

APR 23 1960

BSO Replaces Korea With Taipei Concerts

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold two concerts at Taipei, Formosa, to replace two dates originally scheduled for Korea, it was announced Friday.

The Korean concerts were canceled following the riots there this week.

The orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, will play at Taipei April 29 and 30, the dates originally set for Korea. The orchestra leaves here Monday for Tokyo on its Far Eastern tour.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

APR 23 1960

Symphony to Play Twice in Taipei

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, having had its two concerts in Korea canceled by the troubles there, will instead play twice in Taipei, the capital of Formosa.

The Orchestra will depart next Monday as scheduled and upon arrival in Tokyo will proceed immediately to Taipei. Concerts will be played in the Taipei City Hall Apr. 29 and 30. It is said without confirmation that one of them may be given under patronage of Mme. Chiang Kai-Shek.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

APR 22 1960

Korea Dropped From Symphony Tour of Orient

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will not go into strife-torn Korea on its Eastern tour which starts Monday when the orchestra leaves for Tokyo.

Scheduled concerts in Seoul on April 29 and 30 have been canceled, the orchestra was notified yesterday by the State Department.

The State Department said that the U.E. embassy and the local sponsors had agreed on the cancellation because of "national unrest, widespread mourning and martial law."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 141,391

APR 23 1960

CONCERTS IN FORMOSA

Boston—(AP)— The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give two concerts in Taipei, Formosa, April 29 and 30, it was announced yesterday, to replace the two canceled dates in Korea. The orchestra leaves Monday for its Far East tour.

The Japan Times
April 24, 1960

Boston Symphony To Play in Taipei

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold two concerts at Taipei to replace two dates originally scheduled for Korea, it was announced Friday.

The Korean concerts were canceled following the riots there last week.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"
Melbourne, Vic.

2 MAY 1960

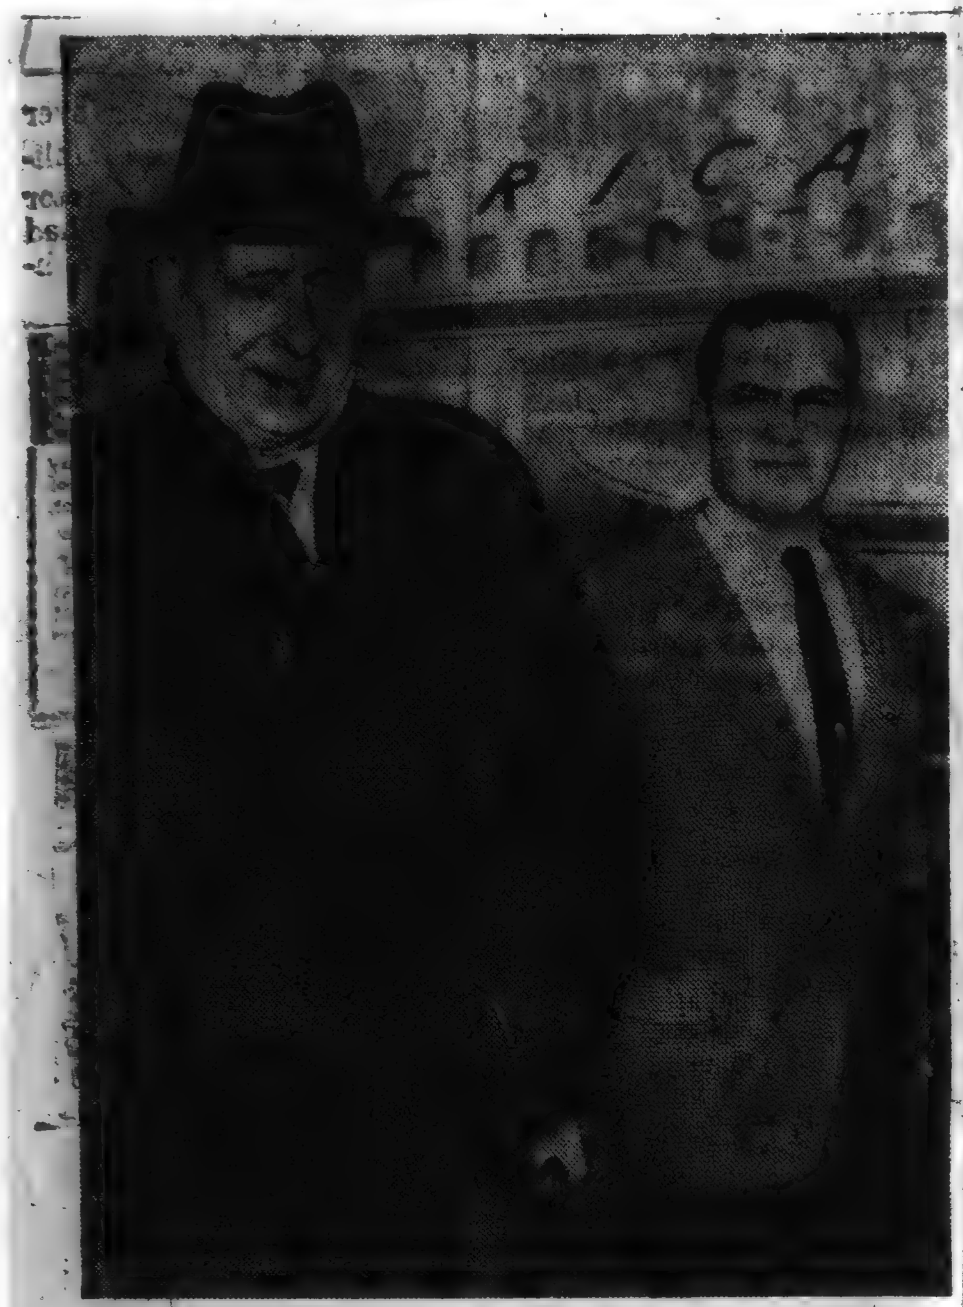
Orchestra flies in

TOKYO, Sun. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in Tokyo by air today for a month's tour of Japan.—AAP.

33

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 496,337 S. 880,264
APR 26 1960



ORIENT BOUND—Charles Munch, left, conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Leonard Burkat, orchestra administrator, arrive at International Airport en route to Orient. Orchestra is on tour. Times photo

Boston Symphony Off for Tour of Far East

It was moving day yesterday for 110 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who embarked on the second airborne leg of a 10,000-mile jaunt to the Orient from L.A. International Airport last night.

Under the guidance of conductor Charles Munch, the Boston musicians, their instruments and luggage were packaged neatly aboard three big planes and bundled off to Japan for an eight-week tour of the Far East and the land Down Under.

Routine Moving Job

They accomplished the one-day shift from Boston to Los Angeles and points East without so much as dropping a note.

"It's just a routine moving chore for us," said orchestra administrator Leonard Burkat. "The only thing we've got to worry about is the weather. We don't want to miss our schedules."

Burkat, who supervised the roundup of scattered musicians and the loading of the big transports, said the orchestra's second international tour includes Japan, Formosa, Manila, New Zealand and Australia. A Korean concert was cancelled because of last week's riots in Seoul.

Conducted in L.A.

It's the first trip to the Orient for Munch and his traveling Bostonians, who brought Western music to Moscow three years ago.

Munch will be remembered here as the distinguished conductor who appeared at Philharmonic Auditorium with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the French National Symphony 10 years ago.

"I'm sure we will be well received in the Orient," Munch mused as he inspected a helicopter ("That's a taxi?") at the American Airlines ramp. "Their interest in the music of the West has increased greatly in the last few decades."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 100,462
APR 25 1960

Part of Orchestra Is Delayed by Fog

BOSTON (AP) — Only about half the Boston Symphony Orchestra was able to begin its air trip to the Orient on schedule today. Fog delayed the other half.

Some 50 musicians left on schedule by Northeast Airline for Idletwild Airport in New York.

Another 50 were all comfortably seated, their instruments stowed and wives and children waving goodbye, when the trip was postponed.

Director Charles Munch and some administrative personnel are scheduled to leave later today.

The first group will fly from New York to Los Ageles and thence to Honolulu and Tokyo.

The second group is scheduled to fly to Seattle and thence to Tokyo.

The orchestra has substituted two appearances in Taipei, Formosa, for two concerts originally scheduled for troubled Korea.

The musicians will paly 22 concerts in Japan and also make appearance in the Phlippines, Australia and New Zealand.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,557 S. 1,033,048
APR 27 1960

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown the Happi Coat presented to him by hostess Alice Satow of Japan Air Lines at airport in Boston. Munch and orchestra will tour Japan.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,085
APR 25 1960

Cardillo Flying With Orchestra On Tour of Far East

Pasquale Cardillo, member of the clarinet section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Cardillo of 149 Pleasant St., isn't fond of flying but he'll do quite a little of it in the next few weeks.

He and other members of the orchestra boarded airliners in Boston this morning to fly to Tokyo, Japan, one group by way of Honolulu, another via Seattle, Wash., and Anchorage, Alaska, and a third by way of Los Angeles. They will assemble in Tokyo Wednesday to prepare for the first of seven concerts in that city during May, to be followed by 13 others in various cities in Japan.

On May 31 the orchestra will fly to the Philippines for three concerts in Manila, then to Australia for concerts in Brisbane June 6, three in Sydney on the 7th, 8th and 9th, one in Adelaide on the 11th and two in Melbourne on the 13th and 14th. A flight to New Zealand will follow for concerts in Wellington June 16 and Auckland June 17 and then the planes will point homeward on June 18 and 19. Korea originally was on the schedule but was dropped off because of the recent political troubles in Seoul.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
APR 25 1960

Off To The Orient

TRADITIONAL "Happi Coat" to symbolize comfort is presented [illegible]phony Orchestra conductor Charles Munch at Boston Airport by Japan [illegible] Hostess Alice Satow. Dr. Munch is leading orchestra on its first tour of the Orient. At left is Arthur Fiedler, Boston Pops conductor, and at right, Lenard Burkat.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
APR 25 1960

Boston Symphony Heads For Far East

The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves by plane today for Tokyo to start a series of concerts in the Far East.

More than 30 appearances will be made in Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand. The orchestra will return in mid-June.

Two concerts scheduled for Korea have been cancelled.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

APR 26 1960

Symphony Off to Japan -- It Hopes

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra ever launched into a concerto the way they were forced to start off their trip to the Orient yesterday, they would unquestionably be branded as the most off-beat musical aggregation ever to miss a downbeat.

For what was to be an orderly exodus to Japan turned out to be a sprawling, disjointed evacuation from Boston.

The three contingents became widely separated, one flying off as scheduled, another detained by fog, and a third forced to take an alternate route.

But the forecast for today was for good flying weather, and there was every reason to hope that the orchestra will soon be assembled within baton-sighting distance of its conductor, Charles Munch, who took off in the first plane.

The orchestra will spend eight weeks touring the Orient on its third foreign trip under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

The only change in the schedule so far is the cancellation of concerts in South Korea, due to the uprisings there. Instead the tour opens with two concerts at Taipei, Formosa, Friday and Saturday, Apr. 29 and 30.

Aaron Copland will join the orchestra as guest conductor in Tokyo on May 1. There will be 22 concerts given in Japan during May, seven of them in Tokyo.

Programs will also be presented in Manila and Brisbane, Sydney, Adelaide and Melbourne, Australia.

The tour will end in New Zealand, with the orchestra scheduled to head for Boston June 18 or 19.

Due to the international date line, the orchestra will land in Boston on the same date it takes off from New Zealand, even though it's a two-day trip.

THE BOSTON GLOBE—TUESDAY, APRIL 26, 1960 Fifteen

Symphony Off to Japan -- It Hopes

Bad Weather Sends Units In 3 Directions

(Globe Photo by Jack O'Connell)

HAPPI COAT PRESENTED to Symphony Orchestra director Charles Munch at Logan Airport before takeoff by Alice Satow of the Japanese airlines.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra ever launched into a concerto the way they were forced to start off their trip to the Orient yesterday, they would unquestionably be branded as the most off-beat musical aggregation ever to miss a downbeat.

For what was to be an orderly exodus to Japan turned out to be a sprawling, disjointed evacuation from Boston.

The three contingents became widely separated, one flying off as scheduled, another detained by fog, and a third forced to take an alternate route.

But the forecast for today was for good flying weather, and there was every reason to hope that the orchestra will soon be assembled within baton-sighting distance of its conductor, Charles Munch, who took off in the first plane.

The orchestra will spend eight weeks touring the Orient on its third foreign trip under the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

The only change in the schedule so far is the cancellation of concerts in South Korea, due to the uprisings there. Instead the tour opens with two concerts at Taipei, Formosa, Friday and Saturday, Apr. 29 and 30.

Aaron Copland will join the orchestra as guest conductor in Tokyo on May 1. There will be 22 concerts given in Japan during May, seven of them in Tokyo.

Programs will also be presented in Manila and Brisbane, Sydney, Adelaide and Melbourne, Australia.

The tour will end in New Zealand, with the orchestra scheduled to head for Boston June 18 or 19.

Due to the international date line, the orchestra will land in Boston on the same date it takes off from New Zealand, even though it's a two-day trip.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

APR 25 1960

Symphony Orchestra Off for Japan Today

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra leave today for Japan and an extensive concert tour.

Before returning to Boston in the middle of June they will present more than 30 concerts in Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
NEEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 5,423

APR 21 1960

Eight Local Symphony Musicians Fly To Orient For Concert Tour

Eight Needham residents, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will leave Monday on a jet plane for the Orient where they will spend eight weeks playing concerts in Japan, Korea, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand.

They are Mrs. Winifred Winograd of 196 Valley road and Karl Zeise of 207 South street, cellists; Henry Freeman of 136 Manning street and Leslie Martin of 50 Marsh road, bass players; Leo Panasevich of 49 Valley road, violinist; Harry Shapiro of 28 Bird street, horn; Gerard Goguen of 287 High Rock street, trumpet; and, William Gibson of 342 Hillcrest road, trombone.

This will be the first time the famous Boston orchestra has scheduled concerts on the other side of the Pacific Ocean. In recent years, they have made two European tours including outstanding performances in Russia.

Zeise and Shapiro are veteran performers having played with the BSO for twenty years. Gibson and Martin, who direct the Needham Philharmonic, are newer members of the group.

Mrs. Winograd is one of the three regular woman members of the Symphony. On this trip, she will have the company of her sister, Lois Shaefer, who will perform with the group for the first time as flutist.

The 110 members will fly in two chartered planes and will arrive in Seoul on Wednesday. They are expected home on June 19.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. [illegible]

APR 25 1960

BOSTON. — (UPI) — Heavy fog grounded 50 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who were scheduled to leave Boston today on a Far Eastern tour. However, 50 other orchestra members left Logan Airport for LaGuardia Field, New York. After leaving New York City, the orchestra will fly to Seattle where they will board a jet liner for Tokyo. The orchestra cancelled its two appearances in riot-torn Seoul, Korea, April 29 and 30. The group has scheduled concerts for Taipeh, Formosa, on those dates. Following the Formosa bookings, the orchestra will conduct 22 concerts in Japan during May. Visits to Australia and New Zealand will wind up the tour.

35

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770.

APR 26 1960

DR. CHARLES MUNCH, Boston Symphony conductor, standing, is shown the Happi Coat that was presented to him by Japan Air Lines hostess Alice Satow as he left Boston yesterday for Japan. Munch, whose BSO will tour Orient, would have miss[illegible]erday's flight if it had not been for a 12-year-old s[illegible] who delayed takeoff. Boy, Freddie Leidkte of M[illegible], Conn., was removed from plane. Munch was delayed en route to airport. At right, Leonard Burkat, of BSO. (United Press International)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

APR 26 1960

(AP Photo)

GOING-AWAY GIFT—Conductor Charles Munch was presented this "Happi Coat" at Boston airport yesterday as he took off for Orient tour by Alice Satow, kimono-clad hostess for Japan Air Lines.

STOWAWAY JOINS FOG IN BALKING SYMPHONY

What with the fog and one stowaway, the departure of the Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday for its concert tour of the Orient became a mildly mixed-up overture.

The first group got off in fine style at 7:30 a.m. for the first leg of their flight to New York's Idlewild Airport. There they were delayed two hours by an equipment checkup of the plane taking them on to Los Angeles.

The second group did their waiting of more than two hours in a plane at the end of the runway at Boston airport when fog closed dow n on the field and delayed their takeoff until 11 a.m.

Then Conductor Charles M[illegible] and the orchestra music admin[illegible]trator, Leonard Burkat, boarded [illegible] 1:45 p.m. jet flight direct to [illegible] Angeles.

They were delayed, too. N[illegible] equipment or fog but by [illegible] away, 14-year-old Fred Liedt[illegible] Meriden, Conn., who will not make the concert tour. Removing Fred meant only a 15-minute delay in take-off.

Fred came to Boston to see the Red Sox, or more specifically, Ted Williams. When he found the Sox were away from home he went to the airport and unwittingly joined the Orient-bound Symphony. Fred said he thought the plane was headed for Hartford, Conn., near his home.

Last night his mother, Mrs. William A. Liedtke, of 74 Plumb Ave., Meridan, a widow, was enroute to Boston to bring her son back home.

[illegible] orchestra will be gone for [illegible] weeks on this third foreign [illegible] during which they will give [illegible]erts in Formosa, Japan, Ma[illegible], Australia and New Zealand. Scheduled concerts in Korea were canceled because of "national unrest."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston [illegible] • RIchmond 2-4200

J[illegible] (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 57,908

APR 26 1960

Dr. Charles Munch, [illegible] of Boston Symphony Orchestra, is presented with Japanese happi coat by hostess Alice Satow at Logan Airport, Boston, yesterday. Orchestra left on tour of Far East.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2[illegible], Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Tra[illegible] (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

APR 25 1960

A Sour Note

LEAVING plane, blocked by fog from takeoff at Boston Airport, [illegible] group of Boston Symphony Orchestra members who were leaving today for concert tour of Far East. Group will go later today to New York, Seattle and Tokyo. Another group left this morning before fog closed airport.

36

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

APR 25 1960

Tour Departure Delayed

Half of Hub Symphony Thrown Off Key by Fog

Just about half of the musicians comprising the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~got started on time~~ on their scheduled flight to Japan this morning. The rest stayed at fogbound Logan International Airport waiting for the weather to clear.

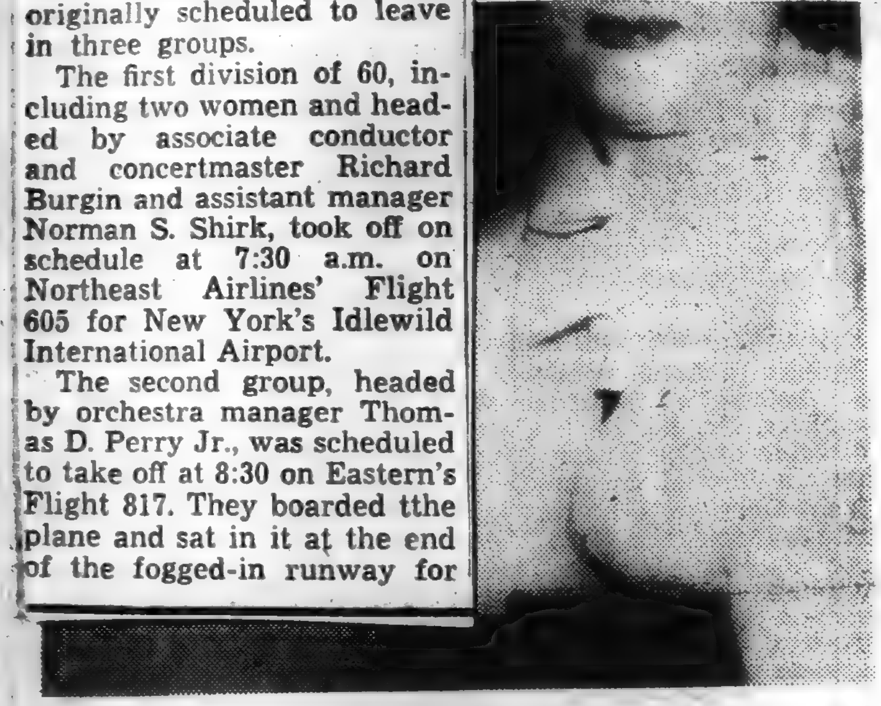
The 100-member orchestra and 13 staff members were originally scheduled to leave in three groups.

The first division of 60, including two women and headed by associate conductor and concertmaster Richard Burgin and assistant manager Norman S. Shirk, took off on schedule at 7:30 a.m. on Northeast Airlines' Flight 605 for New York's Idlewild International Airport.

The second group, headed by orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., was scheduled to take off at 8:30 on Eastern's Flight 817. They boarded tthe plane and sat in it at the end of the fogged-in runway for an hour and a half before they were taxied back to the loading apron.

The fog began to lift a bit at 10:30 and the musicians filed into the plane once more. Their plane finally left at 11 a.m.

SYMPHONY 2
Page Fifteen



ASSOCIATE CONDUCTOR Richard Burgin and his wife, Ruth, shown at Logan Airport before departure of first contingent.

Departs on 8-Week Good Will Tour of Orient

(Globe Photos by Edward F. Carr)

MEMBERS OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY walk to plane at Logan Airport this morning for trip to Japan. They were among first group to leave. Later plane was held up for some time because of fog.

OFF ON TOUR—William Waterhouse, violinist, and Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist, shown with Mazzeo's daughter, Rima, 3, at Logan Airport.

Fog Delays 113 Musicians, Staff

SYMPHONY 2
Continued From the First Page

In New York, meanwhile, the first contingent was subjected to a delay of two hours before it got off the ground on a non-stop jet flight to Los Angeles. From Los Angeles, the musicians were scheduled to fly to Tokyo by way of Honolulu.

The third and smallest group, consisting of conductor Charles Munch, his personal staff and Leonard Burkat, the orchestra's music administrator, was to leave at 1:45 p.m. via American Airlines jet direct to Los Angeles.

More than 100 relatives and friends came to the airport to bid fond adieus to the Boston musicians.

The orchestra will be gone for eight weeks. This is its third foreign trip as part of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

The original schedule called for the tour to open with concerts at Seoul, Korea. These were cancelled last week by the State Department in the wake of rioting there.

The tour opens instead with two concerts at Taipei, Formosa. These will be performed Friday and Saturday, Apr. 29 and 30. 11

Aaron Copland will join the orchestra as a guest conductor when it returns to Tokyo May 1. The orchestra will perform 22 concerts in Japan during May, seven of them in Tokyo.

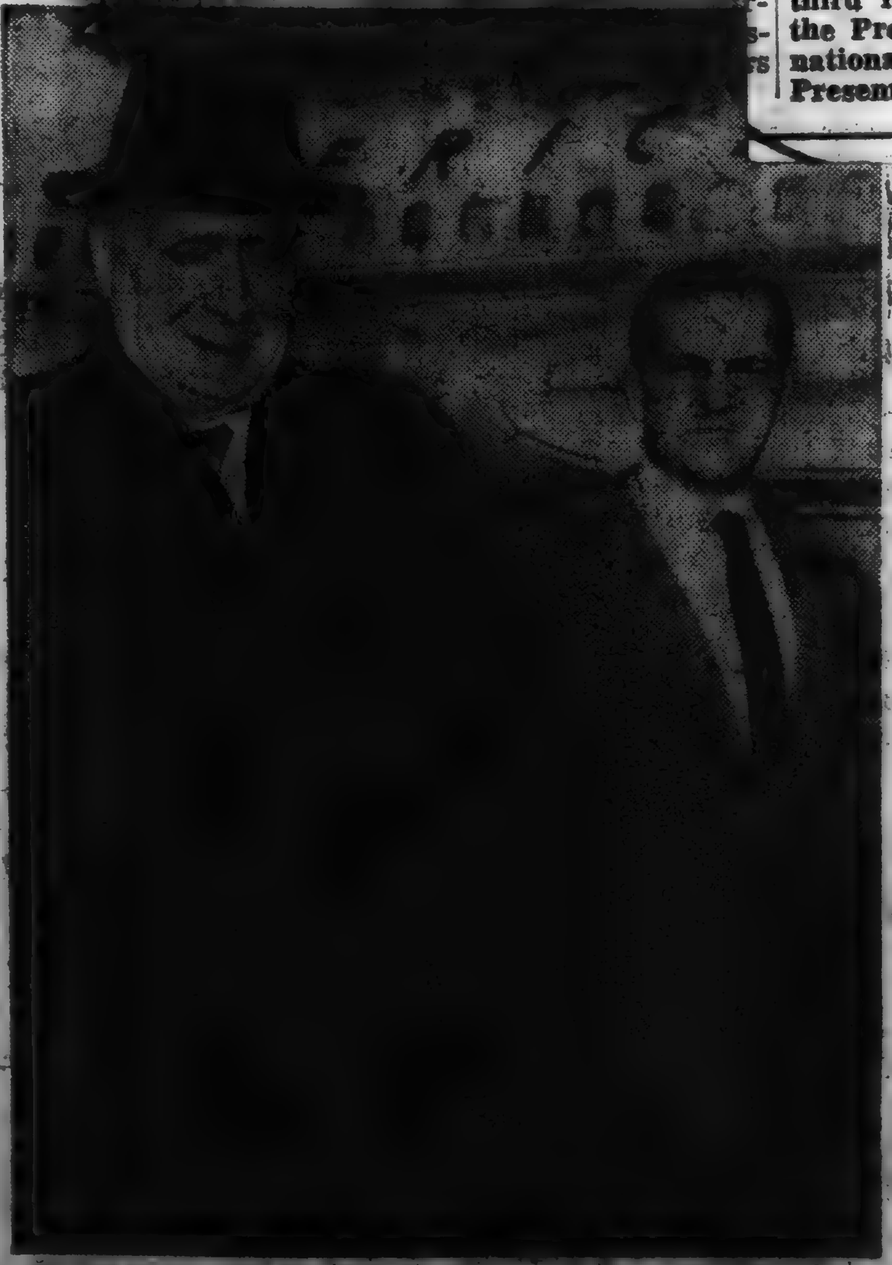
Three concerts will be performed in Manila on the first three days of June; then the orchestra will fly to Brisbane, Australia, for a concert there June 6.

Concerts will be given in Sydney on June 7, 8 and 9; in Adelaide on June 11; and in Melbourne on June 13 and 14. Two concerts will be given in New Zealand, in Wellington on June 16 and Auckland on June 17.

The orchestra is scheduled to leave Auckland for home on June 18 or 19. Because of the International Dateline, it will arrive back here in Boston on the same date.

The orchestra's Summer school of music, the Berkshire Music Center, will open at Tanglewood, Lenox, on July 3. Dr. Munch is scheduled to conduct the first concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on July 8.

A wire carrying an electric current is the simplest heating device.



ORIENT BOUND—Charles Munch, left, conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Leonard Burkat, orchestra administrator, arrive at International Airport en route to Orient. Orchestra is on tour.

ymphony Off of Far East

It was moving day yesterday for 110 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who embarked on the second airborne leg of a 10,000-mile jaunt to the Orient from L.A. International Airport last night.

Under the guidance of conductor Charles Munch, the Boston musicians, their instruments and luggage were packaged neatly aboard three big planes and bundled off to Japan for an eight-week tour of the Far East and the land Down Under.

Routine Moving Job

They accomplished the one-day shift from Boston to Los Angeles and points East without so much as dropping a note.

"It's just a routine moving chore for us," said orchestra administrator Leonard Burkat. "The only thing we've got to worry about is the weather. We don't want to miss our schedules."

Burkat, who supervised the roundup of scattered musicians and the loading of the big transports, said the orchestra's second international tour includes Japan, Formosa, Manila, New Zealand and Australia. A Korean concert was cancelled because of last week's riots in Seoul.

Conducted in L.A.

It's the first trip to the Orient for Munch and his traveling Bostonians, who brought Western music to Moscow three years ago.

Munch will be remembered here as the distinguished conductor who appeared at Philharmonic Auditorium with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the French National Symphony 10 years ago.

"I'm sure we will be well received in the Orient," Munch mused as he inspected a helicopter ("That's a taxi?") at the American Airlines ramp. "Their interest in the music of the West has increased greatly in the last few decades."

Miss Jean Kirksey
Frances Denney's nationally known be sultant in filene's aisle of beauty, street floo
With every purchase of any Denney beauty product you will receive a $3.50 bottle of One Touch of Glamour
Boston only . . .

Hub Symphony Departs on 8-Week Good Will Tour of Orient

ASSOCIATE CONDUCTOR Richard Burgin and his wife, Ruth, shown at Logan Airport before departure of first contingent.

(Globe Photos by Edward F. Carr)

MEMBERS OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY walk to plane at Logan Airport this morning for trip to Japan. They were among first group to leave. Later plane was held up for some time because of fog.

OFF ON TOUR—William Waterhouse, violinist, and Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist, shown with Mazzeo's daughter, Rima, 3, at Logan Airport.

Fog Delays 113 Musicians, Staff

SYMPHONY

Continued From the First Page

TdewtO 1⅜f	20⅛	20¼	20¼	20⅛
TimRB2.40a	56¼	55	55	56¼
Transam .80.	26⅝	26¼	26⅝	26⅜
Transitron..	45	44½	44½	45⅝
TriCont .30e	34¼	34	34⅛	34½
TwenC 1.60.	36⅞	36¾	36¾	37
TXL Oil....	15⅜	15⅛	15⅛	15¼
U
UBgCP 1.20a	36⅜	36¼	36¼	36½
UnCarb3.60.	131½	130¼	130¼	130¼
UnOil Cal 1b	40½	40¼	40¼	40½
Un Pac1.20a.	26⅞	26¾	26⅞	26⅞
UnitArL ⅓b	27¾	27	27	27¾
Unit Arc 2..	34	33½	33¾	33⅜
Unit Cp .35g	7⅛	7⅛	7⅛	7⅛
UnitFruit½e	23⅝	23¼	23¼	23⅜
UnGsCp 1½	29⅞	29¾	29⅞	29⅞

the American National Theater and Academy.

The original schedule called for the tour to open with concerts at Seoul, Korea. These were cancelled last week by the State Department in the wake of rioting there.

The tour opens instead with two concerts at Taipei, Formosa. These will be performed Friday and Saturday, Apr. 29 and 30.

Aaron Copland will join the orchestra as a guest conductor when it returns to Tokyo May 1. The orchestra will perform 22 concerts in Japan during May, seven of them in Tokyo.

Three concerts will be performed in Manila on the first three days of June; then the orchestra will fly to Brisbane, Australia, for a concert there June 6.

Concerts will be given in Sydney on June 7, 8 and 9; in Adelaide on June 11; and in Melbourne on June 13 and 14. Two concerts will be given in New Zealand, in Wellington on June 16 and Auckland on June 17.

The orchestra is scheduled to leave Auckland for home on June 18 or 19. Because of the International Dateline, it will arrive back here in Boston on the same date.

The orchestra's Summer school of music, the Berkshire Music Center, will open at Tanglewood, Lenox, on July 3. Dr. Munch is scheduled to conduct the first concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on July 8.

A wire carrying an electric current is the simplest heating device.

---

oup of t tour
Tokyo.

ORIENT BOUND—Charles Munch, left, conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Leonard Burkat, orchestra administrator, arrive at International Airport en route to Orient. Orchestra is on tour.

Boston Symphony Off for Tour of Far East

It was moving day yesterday for 110 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who embarked on the second airborne leg of a 10,000-mile jaunt to the Orient from L.A. International Airport last night.

Under the guidance of conductor Charles Munch, the Boston musicians, their instruments and luggage were packaged neatly aboard three big planes and bundled off to Japan for an eight-week tour of the Far East and the land Down Under.

Routine Moving Job

They accomplished the one-day shift from Boston to Los Angeles and points East without so much as dropping a note.

"It's just a routine moving chore for us," said orchestra administrator Leonard Burkat. "The only thing we've got to worry about is the weather. We don't want to miss our schedules."

Burkat, who supervised the roundup of scattered musicians and the loading of the big transports, said the orchestra's second international tour includes Japan, Formosa, Manila, New Zealand and Australia. A Korean concert was cancelled because of last week's riots in Seoul.

Conducted in L.A.

It's the first trip to the Orient for Munch and his traveling Bostonians, who brought Western music to Moscow three years ago.

Munch will be remembered here as the distinguished conductor who appeared at Philharmonic Auditorium with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the French National Symphony 10 years ago.

"I'm sure we will be well received in the Orient," Munch mused as he inspected a helicopter ("That's a taxi?") at the American Airlines ramp. "Their interest in the music of the West has increased greatly in the last few decades."

37

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012
APR 26 1960

Fog Sour Note in Symphony Tour

EASTERN AIR LINES

ONE AWAY—TWO TO GO—Members of Boston Symphony Orchestra at airport for first flight on first leg of hop to Japan, for eight-week Orient tour, under U. S. auspices. First flight took off in dense fog, second was grounded and third was to leave later in day. Conductor Charles Munch heads 105 famed musicians.

(Story, Other Pix, P. 4) (Record-American, Ollie Noonan)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
APR 25 1960

Symphony Players Leave For Orient After Delay

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left by plane for the Orient today to begin a Far Eastern tour.

Half the group was delayed at Boston Airport when a thick, spring fog temporarily grounded one of the two planes carrying the musicians.

CONDUCTOR MUNICH LEAVES THIS AFTERNOON

But all were on their way by 11:30 a.m.

The first contingent left Boston at 7:30 a.m. aboard a Northeast Airlines plane. The second group departed aboard an Eastern Airlines flight at 11:30.

They flew to Idlewild Airport in New York, where they transferred to overseas flights.

Conductor Charles Muench was scheduled to leave Boston this afternoon aboard an American Airlines jet plane for a direct flight to the West Coast.

The orchestra has 22 concerts scheduled in Formosa, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand. Two appearances in Seoul, Korea, were cancelled because of the poltical unrest there.

The orchestra returns to Boston in mid-June.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 179,169
APR 25 1960

Fog Spreads Symphony Across U. S.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was playing the blues today.

Its violinists were over the Rocky Mountains, its woodwinds were over Ohio, and conductor Charles Munch was in a fog in Boston.

The symphony was scheduled to depart by air for the Orient and an eight-week concert tour under U. S. Government auspices. Two planes were to take 102 musicians to New York City this morning to catch flights to the West Coast. Munch and two others were to follow on an afternoon flight.

The violinists wereo ff and into the overcast at 7:30 a. m. The following flight wa grounded here for hours, bu finally lifted the "om-pah" section into the clouds at the lunc hour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (m)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 31,775
APR 26 1960

STOWAWAY DELAYS DR. MUNCH'S PLANE

Enables Symphony Conductor to Make Connection

BOSTON (AP)—Thanks to a 12-year-old boy stowaway, Boston Symphony Orchestra director Charles Munch caught his plane Monday as the orchestra started on the first leg of a flight to Japan.

American Airlines officials reported the plane was delayed while flight personnel routed out a Meriden, Conn., boy who tried to secrete himself on the big craft.

If he hadn't delayed the flight, one airline spokesman said of the boy, "Dr. Munch wouldn't have caught the plane."

The boy, who originally would admit only that his name was "Freddie" and that he came from Meriden, was turned over to the East Boston District Court probation officer. Later, he added that his last name was Leidtke, and that at 4:30 a.m., he thumbed a ride to Boston under the mistaken belief that he could see Ted Williams play for the Red Sox Monday. After he found out that no game was scheduled, he went to the airport.

Earlier, the hundred member orchestra left on two different planes, one of which was delayed by fog.

The Boston musicians will play 22 concerts in Japan and will also make appearances in the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 179,169

APR 25 1960

OFF TO TOKYO

To Play For Japs

Members of famed Boston Symphony Orchestra board airliner at Logan Airport for flight to the Orient where they will make an eight-week concert tour under auspices of the U. S. government. First stop is Tokyo. One musician (below), Andre Come of Canton, was bid farewell by his daughter, Jacqueline, 2. They look over trumpet he'll use on the tour. Group is headed by Conductor Charles Munch and travels in three planes.

Record-American Photos by Ollie Noonan

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815

APR 26 1960

Dr. Munch Catches Plane With Help of Stowaway, 12

BOSTON (AP) — Thanks to a 12-year-old boy stowaway, Boston Symphony Orchestra director Charles Munch caught his plane Monday as the orchestra started on the first leg of a flight to Japan.

Routed Out

American Airlines officials reported the plane was delayed while flight personnel routed out a Meriden, Conn., boy who tried to secrete himself on the big craft.

If the boy hadn't delayed the flight, one airline spokesman said, "Dr. Munch wouldn't have caught the plane."

Dr. Munch was delayed in arriving at the airport due to a transportation hitch.

The boy, who originally would admit only that his name was "Freddie" and that he came from Meriden, was turned over to the East Boston District Court probation officer. Later, he added that his last name was Leidtke, and that at 4:30 a. m., he thumbed a ride to Boston under the mistaken belief that he could see Ted Williams play for the Red Sox Monday. After he found out that no game was scheduled, he went to the airport.

He was turned over to the state's Youth Service Board for arraignment in juvenile court as a runaway today, when his parents will be present.

---

in the United States.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown the Happi Coat presented to him by [illegible] Alice Satow of Japan Air Lines at airport in Boston. Munch and orchestra will tour Japan.

Phila. Inquirer
April 27, 1960

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

26 APR 1960

FOG DELAYS ORCHESTRA

BOSTON, Tues. (UPI).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left for the Far East yesterday after fog at Logan Airport delayed for almost three hours the take-off of 50 musicians.

The orchestra has scheduled concerts for Taipeh (Formosa) next Friday and Saturday, 22 concerts in Japan in May, and visits to Australia and New Zealand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 13,442

APR 26 1960

Meriden Boy Stows Away On Plane, Helps Out Maestro

BOSTON, April 25 — (AP) Thanks to a 12-year-old boy stowaway, Boston Symphony orchestra director Charles Munch caught his plane today as the orchestra started on the first leg of a flight to Japan.

American Airlines officials reported the plane was delayed while flight personnel routed out a Meriden, Conn., boy who tried to secrete himself on the big craft.

If he hadn't delayed the flight, one airline spokesman said of the boy, "Dr. Munch wouldn't have caught the plane."

Dr. Munch was delayed in arriving at the airport because of a transportation hitch.

The boy, who originally would admit only that his name was "Freddie" and that he came from Meriden, was turned over to the East Boston District court probation officer. Later, he added that his last name was Leidtke, and that at 4:30 a.m., he thumbed a ride to Boston under the mistaken belief that he could see Ted Williams play for the Red Sox today. After he found out that no game was scheduled, he went to the airport.

He was turned over to the state's Youth Service board for arraignment in Juvenile court as a runaway tomorrow, when his parents will be present.

Earlier, the hundred-member orchestra left on two different planes, one of which was delayed by fog.

The orchestra has substituted two appearances in Taipei, Formosa, for concerts originally scheduled for troubled Korea.

The Boston musicians will play 22 concerts in Japan and will also make appearances in the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand.

39

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 9,142

APR 28 1960

Fat Man Aids BoyStowaway

BOSTON (UPI) — Resourceful Freddy Leidtke eyed the fat man at the airline passenger gate.

When his heavy friend moved past the ticket agent, 14 - year-old Freddy moved too, carefully keeping on the shadowy side. A minute later he was trotting across the Logan Airport runway toward the shiny jet airliner's ramp.

"I fastened my safety belt and a lady asked me if I was alone," Freddy said later. "I said I was and I was going to California.

A ride on a jet liner was the Meriden, Conn. youngster's final and top priority project Monday, and it certainly appeared accomplished when he settled comfortably into the airliner seat. But Freddy soon sang a different tune.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, bound for Los Angeles and Japan, boarded minutes later and Freddy was found out. He was taken in tow by the state police.

Freddy's busy day started in Meriden on the Wilbur Cross Parkway. Four rides later he was in Boston with two things in mind:

See Ted Williams and the plane ride. But Williams was in New York, so Freddy decided on Gov. Foster Furcolo as a substitute. The governor wasn't around, an aide at the State House told Freddy. The youngster settled for an autographed picture.

Freddy finally did get sort of a "jet" ride Monday, but it was long after the airliner left. Freddy was propelled by the two fingers his mother fastened on his ear when she arrived from Connecticut.

BOSTON DAILY RECORD, TUE., APRIL 26, 1960

Boy Stowaway Aids Munch Catch Plane

Freddie, a 14-year-old freckled stowaway, delayed the takeoff of a Los Angeles-bound American Airlines jet [illegible] Logan Airport yesterday for 25 minutes.

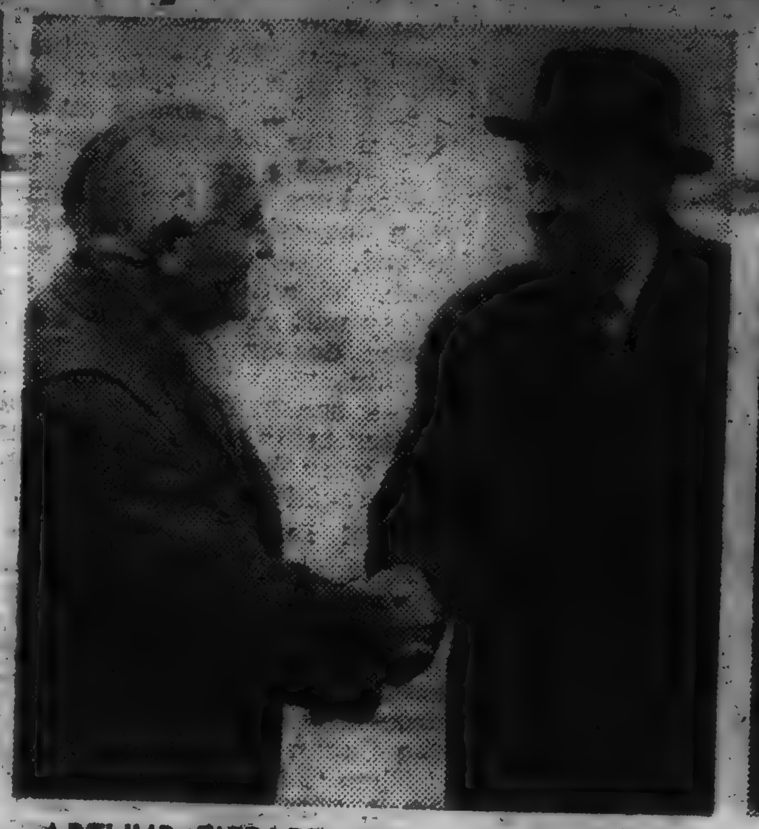
This happenstance saved the day for Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Through a series of mixups that climaxed a day of cacophony for the entire Symphony, Munch arrived [illegible]tly 25 minutes late to make the flight and join his 102 musicians on the West Coast on the first leg of their government-sponsored tour of the Far East.

FOG CANCELS FLIGHTS

Oddly, stowaway Freddie was sitting in Dr. Munch's reserved seat and posed as the portly, aging, French-speaking maestro when a stewardess discovered he didn't look at all like an orchestra director.

"Just as D[illegible]

Turn t[illegible]



ARTHUR FIEDLER CHARLES MUNCH

[illegible] Conductor Bags Happy Landing

(Record-American Photo by John Murphy)

MGR. ED McAULEY, LEFT, "LITTLE FREDDIE"

Lad Sought Jet Ride; Found [illegible] Takeoff

(Record-American Photo by John Murphy)

Munch Is a Bit 'Andante,' Just Makes His Jet

Continued From Page 4

huffing and puffing, airline officials were leading Freddie away.

Freddie, and that's the only name police could get out of the lad after questioning, first hopped aboard the rear tourist section of the jet. Stewardess Jane Gardun spotted him and ordered him to leave.

He left, but from the rear of the plane he went up front and into the reserved section where he found one vacant seat. It was marked with the name of Dr. Charles Munch.

Stewardess Mary Alice Mielby looked at the seat card.

"You are not Dr. Munch," she said to the boy.

CLAIMS HE'S MUNCH

"Oh, yes I am," he replied. "I tore up my ticket."

The stewardess led him off the plane and took him to the office of American Airlines passenger service manager Ed McAuley.

In the 25 minutes of confusion occasioned by Freddie's antics, Dr. Munch reached the landing gate, grabbed a "Happi Coat" which Japan Air Lines hostess Alice Satow had been waiting to present him, and rushed aboard to the seat kept warm (and safe) for him by Freddie.

ADMITS IDENTITY

It wasn't until some time after the boy was taken to East Boston Court for questioning that he finally admitted he was Frederick R. Liedtke of 71 Plumb ave., Meriden, Ct.

Police contacted his widowed mother, Mrs. William A. Liedtke, who had just found a note left by Freddie in which he stated:

"I am running away from home because I played hookie all last week from school and I know you'll find out sooner or later."

He told Boston authorities he had hitchhiked to Boston to see Ted Williams play baseball, but when he found the Red Sox were not in town, he went to the airport and climbed onto the plane.

And so, instead of a trip to California, Freddie waited for the arrival of his mother and the ride back home.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

APR 26 1960

(AP Photo)

MUSIC LOVER GROUNDED—Fred Liedtke, 14, from Meriden, Conn., was found stowed away in jet plane flying Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch to Los Angeles. Charles Sullivan of airline escorts. (Story on Page 5.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
NEWBURYPORT, Mass.
Circ. 6,226

APR 26 1960

FREDDY LEIDTKE is a resourceful 14-year-old. He snuck abroad a jet airliner at Boston's Logan airport yesterday, only to be bumped by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bound for Los Angeles and Japan. Freddy's busy day started in Meriden, Conn., where he determined to do something special: see Ted Williams, (he couldn't, because Ted was in New York), see Gov. Furcolo, (he didn't, but got his picture as a substitute), ride on a jet. Freddy's only propulsion was by his mother's two fingers fastened to his right ear, when she ushered him into the family car for the crip back to Conn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

APR 26 1960

(Globe Photo by Jack O'Connell)

STOWAWAY CAUGHT ON JET AIRLINER—Freddie Leidtke, 14, of Meriden, Ct., with Edward McCauley, American Airlines passenger service manager, after he was taken from plane.

Ct. Youth Fails to See Red Sox But Gets Gov. Furcolo's Photo

Boy's Jet Plane Hitch With Symphony Flops

Fred Leidtke, 14, of Meriden, Ct., afflicted with Spring wanderlust and two burning desires, headed for home yesterday no closer to his goals.

He wanted to see Ted Williams play ball, and he hoped to ride a jet liner.

He missed Ted because the Sox were in New York.

But he nearly got a ride to Los Angeles on a jet carrying Dr. Charles Munch and part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~bound for Japan.~~

Fred also got into the office of Gov. Furcolo where he received an autographed photo of the state's chief executive.

The husky, tow-headed boy began his adventure with a slide down a drainpipe at home, then hied his way to the Wilbur Cross Parkway and started thumbing north. Four rides later he was in Boston.

"I saw the gold dome on a building, and I knew it was the State House," Freddie said. "I never met a governor, but seeing how I couldn't see Ted, I figured if I told my gang I met a governor, the trip wouldn't be wasted."

Freddie then paraded into the governor's office where he asked "a man" if he could meet Gov. Furcolo. The governor was unavailable, but Freddie at least got his signed picture.

STOWAWAY
Page Fifteen

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341

APR 26 1960

Stowaway Stalls Plane

Hub Orchestra Is Off For Japan

BOSTON (AP) — Thanks to a 12-year-old boy stowaway, Boston Symphony Orchestra director Charles Munch caught his plane yesterday as the orchestra started on the first leg of a flight to Japan.

American Airlines officials reported the plane was delayed while flight personnel routed out a Meriden, Conn., boy who tried to hide away on the big craft.

If he hadn't delayed the flight, one airline spokesman said of the boy, "Dr. Munch wouldn't have caught the plane."

Transportation Hitch

Dr. Munch was delayed in arriving at the airport because of a transportation hitch.

The boy, who originally would admit only that his name was "Freddie" and that he came from Meriden, was turned over to the East Boston District Court probation officer. Later, he added that his last name was Leidtke, and that at 4:30 a.m., he thumbed a ride to Boston under the mistaken belief that he could see Ted Williams play for the Red Sox yesterday. After he found out that no game was scheduled, he went to the Airport.

Youth Service Board

He was turned over to the state's Youth Service Board for arraignment in Juvenile Court as a runaway today, when his parents will be present.

Earlier, the hundred-member orchestra left on two different planes, one of which was delayed by fog.

The orchestra has substituted two appearances in Taipei, Formosa, for concerts originally scheduled for troubled Korea.

The Boston musicians will play 22 concerts in Japan and will also make appearances in the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand.

(AP Wirephoto)

"FREDDIE" FROM MERIDEN
With Charles Sullivan, airlines employe

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 50,968

APR 26 1960

Stowaway Holds Plane To Japan For Hub Director

BOSTON (AP) — Thanks to a 12-year-old boy stowaway, Boston Symphony Orchestra director Charles Munch caught his plane Monday as the orchestra started on the first leg of a flight to Japan.

American Airlines officials reported the plane was delayed while flight personnel routed out a Meriden, Conn., boy who tried to secrete himself on the big craft.

If he hadn't delayed the flight, one airline spokesman said of the boy, "Dr. Munch wouldn't have caught the plane."

The boy, who originally would admit only that his name was "Freddie" and that he came from Meriden, was turned over to the East Boston District Court probation officer. Later, he added that his last name was Leidtke, and that at 4:30 a.m., he thumbed a ride to Boston under the mistaken belief that he could see Ted Williams play for the Red Sox Monday. After he found out that no game was scheduled, he went to the airport.

Earlier, the hundred member orchestra left on two different planes one of which was delayed by fog.

The Boston musicians will play 22 concerts in Japan and will also make appearances in the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 141,391

APR 26 1960

Busy Day For Freddy

Boston—(UPI)— Resourceful Freddy Leidtke eyed the fat man at the airline passenger gate.

When his heavy friend moved past the ticket agent, 14-year-old Freddy moved too, carefully keeping on the shadowy side. A minute later he was trotting across the Logan Airport runway toward the shiny jet airliner's ramp.

"I fastened my safety belt and a lady asked me if I was alone," Freddy said later. "I said I was and I was going to California."

A ride on a jet liner was the Meriden, Conn., youngster's final and top priority project yesterday, and it certainly appeared accomplished when he settled comfortably into the air liner seat.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, however, bound for Los Angeles and Japan, boarded minutes late and Feddy was found out. He was taken in tow by police.

Freddy's busy day started in Meriden on the Wilbur Cross Parkway. Four rides later he was in Boston with two things in mind: See Ted Williams and get the plane ride. But Williams was in New York so Freddy decided on Gov. Foster Furcolo as a substitute. The governor wasn't around, an aide at the State House told Freddy. The youngster settled for an autographed picture.

Freddy finally did get sort of a "jet" ride yesterday, but it was long after the airliner left. Freddy was propelled by the two fingers his mother fastened on his ear when she arrived from Connecticut.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 104,765

APR 26 1960

STOWED ASHORE: Freddy Liedtke, 14, of Meriden, is escorted from an airliner at Boston Airport Monday. The youth "thumbed" an auto ride after running away from home because he played hookey from school last week. He climbed aboard the airliner and the craft was delayed while crew members searched for him. The delay enabled Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Charles Munch to make the flight — first leg of a trip to Japan with the orchestra (AP Wirephoto).

Dr. Munch Makes Plane Thanks To Stowaway, 14

MERIDEN (Special) — Little Freddy Liedtke doesn't like school very much. And he knew his mother would find out.

But his efforts to hide a fondness for playing hookey saved the day for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its renowned conductor Monday in Boston.

Search Plane

Freddy, 14-year-old son of Mrs. Edna Liedtke of 74 Plum Ave., was routed from a stowaway's berth on a Japan-bound airplane to make room for orchestra conductor Charles Munch. American Airlines officials delayed the plane to look for Freddy.

If he hadn't delayed the flight, an airline spokesman said of the boy, "Dr. Munch wouldn't have caught the plane."

Dr. Munch was delayed in arriving at the airport because of a transportation hitch.

At first, Freddy would admit only his first name and that he came from Meriden. He was turned over to the East Boston District Court probate officer, the Associated Press reported.

He later said his last name was Liedtke and that at 4:30 a.m. he had thumbed a ride to Boston. He told officials he had wanted to see Ted Williams play for the Red Sox Monday.

But Freddy's brother, William, said Monday night he was not a baseball fan. Asked what Freddy's interests were, William said:

"Nothing much, I guess—except TV. He must have watched it every day last week while he was playing hookey."

Freddy's mother works all day. He is an eighth grade pupil i Jefferson Junior High School. Each day last week, William said Freddy left for school.

But Monday morning, schoo officials called Mrs. Liedtke a work to ask why Freddy ha been out of school a week.

'You'll Find Out . . .'

Mrs. Liedtke went home and found this note from Freddy, written on school paper:

"I am running away from home because I played hookey all last week from school and I know you'll find out sooner or later."

William said Freddy apparently took nothing with him. He hadn't known about the hookey, he said.

Mrs. Liedtke went out looking for Freddy, William said, then she went to Meriden police. She gave them the note.

The boy's mother arrived in Boston later in the day and picked him up, and they started back to Meriden. Boston authorities originally planned to take him to Juvenile Court as a runaway, but they decided not to take any action.

He said he had climbed aboard the plane when he found the Red Sox didn't play Monday.

BLANK PAGE

INFORMATION OBSCURED

CHARLES MUNCH, orchestra music director.

IN Leningrad, Munch conducts Boston Symphony.

BARBER .. Medea's Meditation & Dance of Vengeance, Op 23a.
DEBUSSY .... "La Mer" trois esquisses symphoniques.
BRAHMS .... Symphony No 2, in D major, Op 73.

PROGRAM C (Charles Munch, music director)

BERLIOZ .... Symphonie Fantastique, Op 14.
DELLO-JOIO .... Variations, Chaconne and Finale.
[illegible]

PROGRAM D (Charles Munch, music director)

BEETHOVEN ...... Symphony No 5, in C minor, Op 67.
BLACKWOOD .... First Symphony Op 3.
WAGNER .... Excerpts from Act III, "Die Meitersinger von Nurnberg"

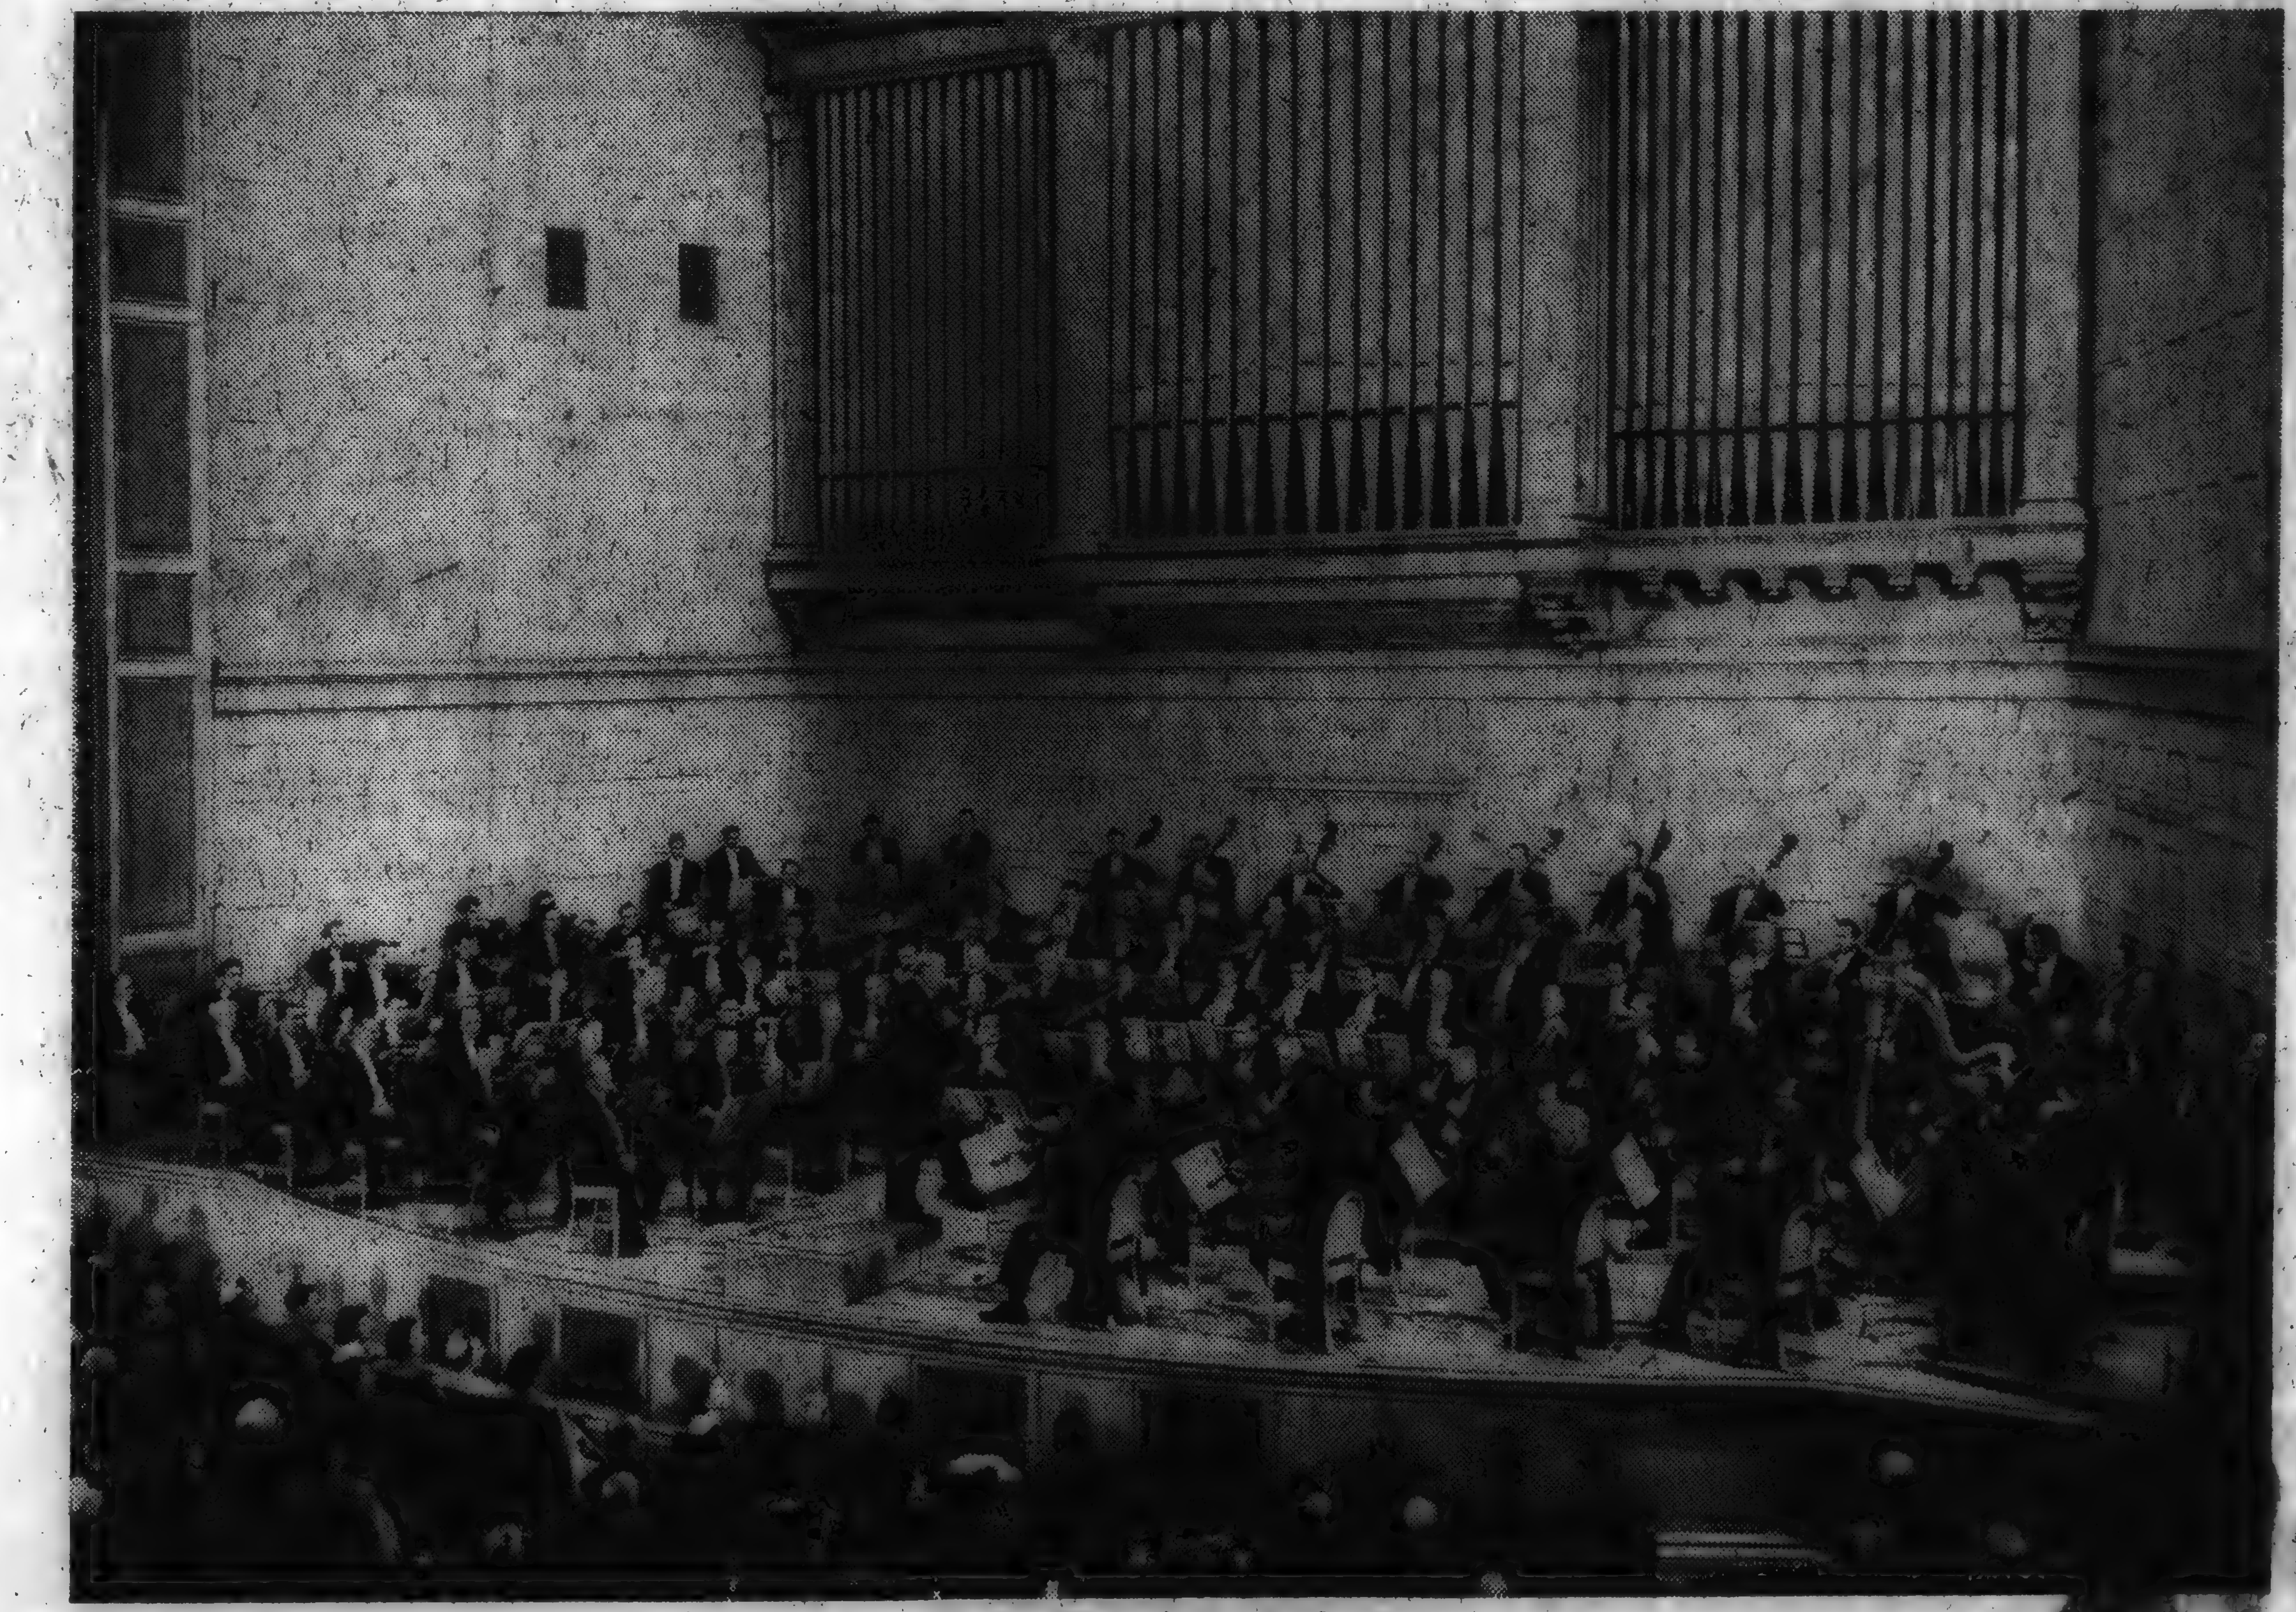
PROGRAM E (Richard Burgin, associate conductor)

LEON KIRCHNER .... Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds & Percussion.
MAHLER . Adagio from the 10th Symphony (Posthumous).
TCHAIKOVSKY .. "Symphony No 5, in E minor, Op 64.

PROGRAM F (Aaron Copland, guest conductor)

PURCELL .... Fantasias for Strings.
COPLAND .... First Symphony.
HAYDN .... Symphony No 95 in C minor.
COPLAND .... Orchestra Suite from the Opera. "The Tender Land."

Monteux, Koussevitzky, Munch (L to R) led it to greatness.



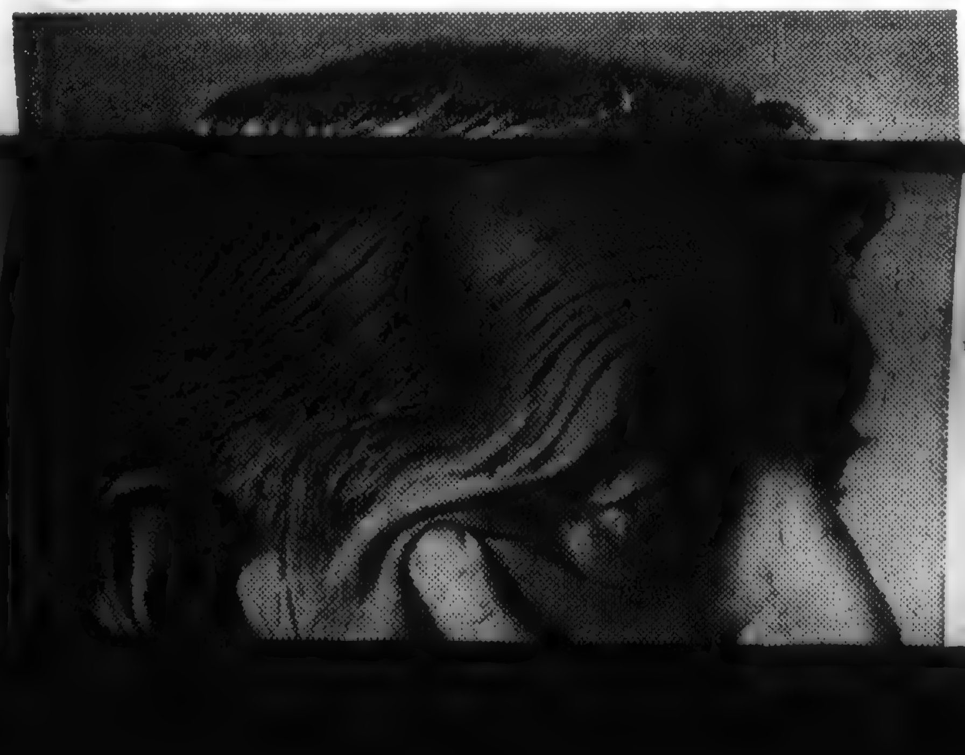
Boston Symphony Orchestra

INFORMATION OBSCURED

44

ON the banks of Charles River, in Boston, large audience enjoys good music by Boston Symphony Orchestra.

FRIENDSHIP THROUGH GOOD MUSIC



The 1959-1960 season marks the 79th year of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the 11th year with the orchestra of Charles Munch, its conductor and music director. Founded in 1881, the Boston Symphony is junior—in terms of years—to only a few of the world's orchestras, notably those of London, Leipzig, Vienna and Paris.

This year's "Japan-American Centennial Tour," celebrating the 100th anniversary of the formal opening of diplomatic relations between the two countries, is the first visit to Asia by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its first European trip was made in 1952, followed in 1956 by a second tour of Europe which included highly successful concerts in Moscow, Leningrad and Prague.

The orchestra's history since 1920 is inseparably bound up with the names of Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch. In 1924, Serge Koussevitzky, a renowned figure in the European musical world, began what was to be the longest term for a conductor of the Boston Symphony—25 years. It was a period of great symphonic growth throughout the US. Orchestras, once a rarity, were established in every center where music was valued. Native composers appeared who wrote in their own way instead of the traditional European way.

Following Koussevitzky's retirement in 1948, Charles Munch came to Boston as conductor and music director. He had been one of the foremost musicians in France and the conductor of four orchestras in Paris. Dr Munch's mother was French and his father was Alsatian. He grew up literally surrounded by the music of Bach, for his father and uncle were both leaders of Bach's music in the churches of their cities. Another Alsatian, Albert Schweitzer, who was once a pupil of Munch's uncle, is related by marriage to Charles Munch.

Dr Munch has been the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for eleven years. In this time his American public have come to know and admire him as a man completely dedicated to his art, a musician oblivious to outward show, who is not only absorbed by the music he is conducting but possessed by it, who can penetrate and communicate it as perhaps no other conductor living.

In recent years the Boston Symphony Orchestra has averaged more than 200 concerts a year.

SCHEDULE

May 4 Tokyo Munch Program A. May 5 Tokyo Munch Program C. May 7 Osaka Copland Program F. May 8 Osaka Munch Program A. May 9 Kyoto Munch Program C.

May 11 Matsuyama Burgin Program E. May 12 Oita Burgin Program E. May 13 Yahata Copland Program F. May 14 Fukuoka Munch Program A. May 15 Hiroshima Munch Program C. May 16 Okayama Copland Program F. May 18 Nagoya Munch Program D. May 19 Shizuoka Copland Program F.

May 20 Yokohama Munch Program B. May 21 Nagaoka Burgin Program E. May 22 Tokyo Munch Program D. May 23 Tokyo Copland Program F. May 25 Sapporo Munch Program D. May 27 Sendai Munch Program B. May 28 Koriyama Burgin Program E. May 29 Tokyo Munch Program B. May 30 Tokyo Burgin Program E.

PROGRAMS

PROGRAM A (Charles Munch, music director)

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No 3, in E flat major, "Eroica" Op 55.
PISTON .... Symphony No 6.
RAVEL .... "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No 2.

PROGRAM B (Charles Munch, music director)

BARBER .. Medea's Meditation & Dance of Vengeance, Op 23a.
DEBUSSY .... "La Mer" trois esquisses symphoniques.
BRAHMS .... Symphony No 2, in D major, Op 73.

PROGRAM C (Charles Munch, music director)

BERLIOZ .... Symphonie Fantastique, Op 14.
DELLO JOIO .... Variations, Chaconne and Finale.
ROUSSEL .... "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No 2

PROGRAM D (Charles Munch, music director)

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No 5, in C minor, Op 67.
BLACKWOOD .... First Symphony Op 3.
WAGNER .... Excerpts from Act III, "Die Meitersinger von Nurnberg"

PROGRAM E (Richard Burgin, associate conductor)

LEON KIRCHNER .... Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds & Percussion.
MAHLER . Adagio from the 10th Symphony (Posthumous).
TCHAIKOVSKY .. "Symphony No 5, in E minor, Op 64.

45

THE MANDARIN FLIGHT
CAT

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HERE — The Boston Sym-[illegible]Orchestra arrived yesterday in the course of its tour [illegible] Far East. It will give its first concert here tonight [illegible] Rizal Memorial coliseum. From left: R. S. Burnsly of the US embassy, Mrs. Thomas Perry, Prof. Felipe Padilla de Leon, Aaron Copland, Miss Liwanag Cruz, Charles Munch, Alfredo Lozano, Thomas Perry, orchestra manager and Lt. Col. Antonino Buenaventura.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

APR 27 1960

Hub Symphony Flies Tokyo to Formosa

TOKYO, Apr. 27 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra passed through Tokyo today, en route to Formosa to open an eight-week concert tour of the Orient.

The group of more than 100 persons led by Conductor Charles Munch, arrived in two chartered planes with their instruments and baggage on a third aircraft.

After a stopover of nearly three hours for refueling, they took off for Taipei, where they will give their first concert tomorrow. They also will play in Japan, the Philippines, New Zealand and Australia.

India has deferred its use of metric weights and measures until Aug. 1, 1960.

The Mainichi
April 29, 1960

Boston Orchestra Arrives In Taipei

TAIPEI, Apr. 28 (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived here Wednesday to give two concerts in the first stop of its Asian tour.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN TOWN.—One hundred eight members of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived yesterday afternoon aboard two chartered planes from Tokyo for a series of performances at the Rizal Coliseum starting today. Photo shows the group headed by Aaron Copland, composer (second from left); Dr. Charles Munch, music director (fourth from left); Thomas Perry, (right), orchestra manager; and Richard Burgin, associate director.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

MAY 2 - 1960

In Brief . . .

Though the Lee Town Hall has served the town well over the past 86 years and presumably will serve even better now that the interior has been overhauled, it is unfortunate that the building was erected during the period of Victorian horrors. Most people don't see beyond that—shudder!—exterior . . . Mount Everett Principal Charles E. Bybee's decision to return to the classroom after many years of administrative duties in public high schools is an interesting reversal of a national trend that is taking many good teachers away from their blackboards and placing them at higher paying, but often less challenging, desk jobs . . . Everyone, especially the kids, seemed to enjoy Canaan, Connecticut's promotion stunt of dropping 2,500 ping pong balls containing merchandise certificates out of a helicopter Saturday. Everyone, that is, except the people left with the job of clearing the crushed balls off Railroad and Main Streets . . .

The roaring welcome accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Taipei bodes well for the rest of the orchestra's Far Eastern tour. A month ago, with the Japanese carping about the program selections, the whole thing was beginning to look like an Oriental torture . . . The four-year full scholarship won by Jan King Rau of Great Barrington at New York University would be an admirable achievement for any youngster, let alone one who has been in this country only 3½ years . . .

It's kind of hard to decide whose side we'd be on in this overheard argument, "You're the only beatnik I ever saw wearing a bow tie."—Chicago News.

Now is the time to get rid of crab grass forever—just pave your lawn.—Hartford Courant.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012

APR 30 1960

RECORD, SAT., APRIL 30, 1960 2

BIG TRIUMPH BY SYMPHONY

TAIPEI (AP)—The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its Far East tour was given here yesterday and won praise from listeners and critics.

The demands for tickets far outran the capacity of the Japanese-built City Hall Theater. It was crammed with a standing-room only audience. The orchestra will give another concert Saturday and will leave Sunday for Japan.

45

THE MANDARIN FLIGHT
CAT

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HERE — The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived yesterday in the course of its tour of the Far East. It will give its first concert here tonight at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. From left: R. S. Burnsly of the US embassy, Mrs. Thomas Perry, Prof. Felipe Padilla de Leon, Aaron Copland, Miss Liwanag Cruz, Charles Munch, Alfredo Lozano, Thomas Perry, orchestra manager and Lt. Col. Antonino Buenaventura.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

APR 27 1960

Hub Sy

TOKYO,
Boston Sy passed thr en route t an eight-w
the Orient.
The grou persons le
Charles Mu chartered pl struments a third aircra

May 1 Designate
'Humane' Sunday

A tradition dating bac
1914 will be observed thro out the nation and in n foreign countries during week beginning May 1 to

N

The Mainichi
April 29, 1960

Boston Orchestra Arrives In Taipei

TAIPEI, Apr. 28 (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived here Wednesday to give two concerts in the first stop of its Asian tour.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN TOWN.—One hundred eight members of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived yesterday afternoon aboard two chartered planes from Tokyo for a series of performances at the Rizal Coliseum starting today. Photo shows the group headed by Aaron Copland, composer (second from left); Dr. Charles Munch, music director (fourth from left); Thomas Perry, (right), orchestra manager; and Richard Burgin, associate director.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

MAY 2 - 1960

In Brief . . .

Though the Lee Town Hall has served the town well over the past 86 years and presumably will serve even better now that the interior has been overhauled, it is unfortunate that the building was erected during the period of Victorian horrors. Most people don't see beyond that—shudder!—exterior . . . Mount Everett Principal Charles E. Bybee's decision to return to the classroom after many years of administrative duties in public high schools is an interesting reversal of a national trend that is taking many good teachers away from their blackboards and placing them at higher paying, but often less challenging, desk jobs . . . Everyone, especially the kids, seemed to enjoy Canaan, Connecticut's promotion stunt of dropping 2,500 ping pong balls containing merchandise certificates out of a helicopter Saturday. Everyone, that is, except the people left with the job of clearing the crushed balls off Railroad and Main Streets . . .

The roaring welcome accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Taipei bodes well for the rest of the orchestra's Far Eastern tour. A month ago, with the Japanese carping about the program selections, the whole thing was beginning to look like an Oriental torture . . . The four-year full scholarship won by Jan King Rau of Great Barrington at New York University would be an admirable achievement for any youngster, let alone one who has been in this country only 3½ years . . .

It's kind of hard to decide whose side we'd be on in this overheard argument, "You're the only beatnik I ever saw wearing a bow tie."—Chicago News.

Now is the time to get rid of crab grass forever—just pave your lawn.—Hartford Courant.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012

APR 30 1960

RECORD, SAT., APRIL 30, 1960 2

BIG TRIUMPH BY SYMPHONY

TAIPEI (AP) — The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its Far East tour was given here yesterday and won praise from listeners and critics.

The demands for tickets far outran the capacity of the Japanese-built City Hall Theater. It was crammed with a standing-room only audience. The orchestra will give another concert Saturday and will leave Sunday for Japan.

46

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341

APR 30 1960

Formosans Cheer Hub Symphony

TAIPEI (UPI) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch opened its first far eastern tour Friday night before a cheering audience of 1,800 persons.

Shoutng "bravo," the audience called Munch back six times after the two-hour program for three encores.

The 104-piece orchestra played before a mixed audience of Chinese and Americans in the auditorium of Taipei City Hall where the Nationalist Chinese Parliament meets.

The orchestra arrived in Formosa two days ago for concerts here before flying to Tokyo Sunday for a four-week tour through Japan, to be followed by performances in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

The orchestra originally was scheduled to open its Asian series in South Korea, but at the last minute substituted Formosa because of the Seoul government crisis.

Munch opened his program with Beethoven's Third (Eroica) Symphony.

Intermission was followed by Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite Number Two.

The audience rose in ovation to the 68-year-old conductor and his orchestra.

The symphony earlier performed in Europe, including Russia, but most of the members are visiting the Far East for the first time.

The Asian tour is being conducted under President Eisenhower's people to people program.

Several musicians said they were fascinated by their first exposure to the Eastern custom of removing shoes before entering hotel rooms.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012
APR 29 1960

TOURING HUB VIOLINIST ILL

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack early yesterday.

He was taken to an American missionary hospital, where doctors described his condition as fair. The musician, in his 60's, had heart trouble previously.

The orchestra is here for concerts, the first appearances on its Far Eastern tour. All tickets have been sold.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, [illegible] 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770
APR 28 1960

BSO Violinist Has Heart Attack In Formosa

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP) — Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack today.

He was taken to an American Missionary Hospital, where doctors described his condition as fair. The musician, in his 60s, had heart trouble previously.

The orchestra is here for concerts tomorrow and Saturday nights, the first appearances on its far eastern tour.

Mr. Leidovici, a member of the first violin section of the BSO, joined the orchestra in 1926. He plays a Cremona instrument dated 1791. Born in Romania, he studied at the Paris Conservatory, winning first prize in solfege in 1911 and in violin in 1914.

Eagle 4/30

BSO Plays 3 Encores In Formosa

Orient [illegible]ener Cheered by 1,800; Japan Next

TAIPEI (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch opened its first Far Eastern tour Friday night before a cheering audience of 1,800 persons.

Shouting "bravo," the audience called Munch back six times after the two-hour program for three encores.

Mixed Audience

The 104-piece orchestra played before a mixed audience of Chinese and Americans in the auditorium of Taipei City Hall where the Nationalist Chinese Parliament meets.

The orchestra arrived in Formosa two days ago for concerts here before flying to Tokyo Sunday for a four-week tour through Japan to be followed by performances in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

The orchestra originally was scheduled to open its Asian series in South Korea, but at the last minute substituted Formosa because of the Seoul government crisis.

Munch opened his program with Beethoven's Third (Eroica) Symphony.

Intermission was followed by Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite Number Two.

The audience rose in ovation to the 68-year-old conductor and his orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 39,753
APR 28 1960

VIOLINIST STRICKEN

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack early today. He was taken to an American Missionary Hospital, where doctors this afternoon described his condition as fair.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. [illegible],169
APR 29 1960

Formosa Hails Hub Symphony

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its Far East tour was given here today and won praise from listeners and critics.

The demand for tickets far outran the capacity of the Japanese-built City Hall Theater. It was crammed with a standing room only audience.

The orchestra will give another concert Saturday, then leave Sunday for a 29-day stay in Japan before going to the Philippines ,ustralia and New Zealand.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. [illegible]
APR 30 1960

Cheering Audience In Taipei Hails Boston Symphony

TAIPEI, Apr. 30 (Sat.) (UPI) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch opened its first Far Eastern tour Friday night before a cheering audience of 1800 persons.

Shouting "Bravo," the audience called Munch back six times after the two-hour program for three encores.

New England [illegible]
Box 2078, [illegible]
[illegible] (e)
L[illegible], Mass.
Circ. [illegible],129
APR 28 1960

Violinist Suffers Heart Attack On Symphony Tour

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack today.

He was taken to an American Missionary Hospital, where doctors described his condition as fair. The musician, in his 60s had heart trouble previously.

The orchestra is here for concerts tomorrow and Saturday nights, the first appearances or its far eastern tour.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. [illegible],958
APR 28 1960

BSO Violinist Ill

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack today.

He was taken to an American Missionary Hospital, where doctors described his condition as fair. The musician, in his 60s, had heart trouble previously.

The orchestra is here for concerts tomorrow and Saturday nights, the first appearances on its far eastern tour.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
APR 29 1960

Boston Symphony Violinist Stricken Before Asia Debut

TAIPEI, Formosa, Apr. 28 — (AP)—Samuel J. Leibovici, a violinist with the touring Boston Symphony Orchestra, was reported recovering at an American missionary hospital after suffering a heart attack today.

Although his condition was described as good, Liebovici is not expected to be able to play in the orchestra's first Far East concert tomorrow in Taipei.

Leibovici was stricken at a hotel in Peitou, a resort where several orchestra members are quartered. A naturalized American born in Romania, he lives in Brookline, Mass.

Other members of the famed 104-man orchestra were given a reception by U.S. Ambassador Everett F. Drumright.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
APR 28 1960

Symphony Member Ill In Formosa

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack early today.

He was taken to an American missionary hospital, where doctors this afternoon described his condition as fair.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341
A[illegible] 1960

Boston Symphony Violinist Stricken In Formosa

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leibovici, a violinist with the touring Boston Symphony Orchestra, was reported recovering at an American missionary hospital after suffering a heart attack early yesterday.

Although his condition was described as good, Liebovici is not expected to be able to play in the orchestra's first Far East concert, scheduled for today in Taipei.

Leibovici, in his 60s, was stricken at a hotel in Peitou, a resort where several orchestra members are quartered. A naturalized American who was born in Romania, he makes his home in Brookline, Mass.

Other members of the 104-man orchestra were given a reception by U.S. Ambassador Everett F. Drumright.

The orchestra originally had been scheduled to play Friday and Saturday nights in Seoul, South Korea, but because of the unrest there, the performances were rescheduled for Taipei. Tickets for both concerts already have been sold out.

The orchestra will leave Sunday for Tokyo for a 29-day tour of Japan.

---

diving equipment.

Globe 4/29/60

Boston Symphony Violinist Stricken Before Asia Debut

TAIPEI, Formosa, Apr. 28 — (AP)—Samuel J. Leibovici, a violinist with the touring Boston Symphony Orchestra, was reported recovering at an American missionary hospital after suffering a heart attack today.

Although his condition was described as good, Liebovici is not expected to be able to play in the orchestra's first Far East concert tomorrow in Taipei.

Leibovici was stricken at a hotel in Peitou, a resort where several orchestra members are quartered. A naturalized American born in Romania, he lives in Brookline, Mass.

Other members of the famed 104-man orchestra were given a reception by U.S. Ambassador Everett F. Drumright.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341

APR 30 1960

Formosans Cheer Hub Symphony

TAIPEI (UPI) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch opened its first far eastern tour Friday night before a cheering audience of 1,800 persons.

Shoutng "bravo," the audience called Munch back six times after the two-hour program for three encores.

The 104-piece orchestra played before a mixed audience of Chinese and Americans in the auditorium of Taipei City Hall where the Nationalist Chinese Parliament meets.

The orchestra arrived in Formosa two days ago for concerts here before flying to Tokyo Sunday for a four-week tour through Japan, to be followed by performances in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

The orchestra originally was scheduled to open its Asian series in South Korea, but at the last minute substituted Formosa because of the Seoul government crisis.

Munch opened his program with Beethoven's Third (Eroica) Symphony.

Intermission was followed by Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite Number Two.

The audience rose in ovation to the 68-year-old conductor and his orchestra.

The symphony earlier performed in Europe, including Russia, but most of the members are visiting the Far East for the first time.

The Asian tour is being conducted under President Eisenhower's people to people program.

Several musicians said they were fascinated by their first exposure to the Eastern custom of removing shoes before entering hotel rooms.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012

APR 29 1960

TOURING HUB VIOLINIST ILL

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack early yesterday.

He was taken to an American missionary hospital, where doctors described his condition as fair. The musician, in his 60's, had heart trouble previously.

The orchestra is here for concerts, the first appearances on its Far Eastern tour. All tickets have been sold.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

APR 28 1960

BSO Violinist Has Heart Attack In Formosa

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP) — Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack today.

He was taken to an American Missionary Hospital, where doctors described his condition as fair. The musician, in his 60s, had heart trouble previously.

The orchestra is here for concerts tomorrow and Saturday nights, the first appearances on its far eastern tour.

Mr. Leidovici, a member of the first violin section of the BSO, joined the orchestra in 1926. He plays a Cremona instrument dated 1791. Born in Romania, he studied at the Paris Conservatory, winning first prize in solfege in 1911 and in violin in 1914.

Eagle 4/30

BSO Plays 3 Encores In Formosa

Orient [illegible] Cheered by 1,800; Japan Next

TAIPEI (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch opened its first Far Eastern tour Friday night before a cheering audience of 1,800 persons.

Shouting "bravo," the audience called Munch back six times after the two-hour program for three encores.

Mixed Audience

The 104-piece orchestra played before a mixed audience of Chinese and Americans in the auditorium of Taipei City Hall where the Nationalist Chinese Parliament meets.

The orchestra arrived in Formosa two days ago for concerts here before flying to Tokyo Sunday for a four-week tour through Japan to be followed by performances in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

The orchestra originally was scheduled to open its Asian series in South Korea, but at the last minute substituted Formosa because of the Seoul government crisis.

Munch opened his program with Beethoven's Third (Eroica) Symphony.

Intermission was followed by Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite Number Two.

The audience rose in ovation to the 68-year-old conductor and his orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 39,753

APR 28 1960

VIOLINIST STRICKEN

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack early today. He was taken to an American Missionary Hospital, where doctors this afternoon described his condition as fair.

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. [illegible],169

APR 29 1960

Formosa Hails Hub Symphony

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)— The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its Far East tour was given here today and won praise from listeners and critics.

The demand for tickets far outran the capacity of the Japanese-built City Hall Theater. It was crammed with a standing room only audience.

The orchestra will give another concert Saturday, then leave Sunday for a 29-day stay in Japan before going to the Philippines ,ustralia and New Zealand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. [illegible]

APR 30 1960

Cheering Audience In Taipei Hails Boston Symphony

TAIPEI, Apr. 30 (Sat.) (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch opened its first Far Eastern tour Friday night before a cheering audience of 1800 [illegible] audi- [illegible] k six [illegible] pro-

---

Lynn Hospital, Wednesday.
A son to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Lovell of 40 Murray Street, West Peabody, at Union Hospital, Wednesday.
A son to Mr. and Mrs. David C. Wisner of 252 Main Street, Wakefield, at Union Hospital.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • [illegible] 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. [illegible]

APR 28 1960

BSO Violinist Ill

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leidovici, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, suffered a heart attack today.

He was taken to an American Missionary Hospital, where doctors described his condition as fair. The musician, in his 60s, had heart trouble previously.

The orchestra is here for concerts tomorrow and Saturday nights, the first appearances on its far eastern tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

APR 29 1960

Boston Symphony Violinist Stricken Before Asia Debut

TAIPEI, Formosa, Apr. 28 — (AP)—Samuel J. Leibovici, a violinist with the touring Boston Symphony Orchestra, was reported recovering at an American missionary hospital after suffering a heart attack today.

Although his condition was described as good, Liebovici is not expected to be able to play in the orchestra's first Far East concert tomorrow in Taipei.

Leibovici was stricken at a hotel in Peitou, a resort where several orchestra members are quartered. A naturalized American born in Romania, he lives in Brookline, Mass.

Other members of the famed 104-man orchestra were given a reception by U.S. Ambassador Everett F. Drumright.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341

APR [illegible] 1960

Boston Symphony Violinist Stricken In Formosa

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Samuel J. Leibovici, a violinist with the touring Boston Symphony Orchestra, was reported recovering at an American missionary hospital after suffering a heart attack early yesterday.

Although his condition was described as good, Liebovici is not expected to be able to play in the orchestra's first Far East concert, scheduled for today in Taipei.

Leibovici, in his 60s, was stricken at a hotel in Peitou, a resort where several orchestra members are quartered. A naturalized American who was born in Romania, he makes his home in Brookline, Mass.

Other members of the 104-man orchestra were given a reception by U.S. Ambassador Everett F. Drumright.

The orchestra originally had been scheduled to play Friday and Saturday nights in Seoul, South Korea, but because of the unrest there, the performances were rescheduled for Taipei. Tickets for both concerts already have been sold out.

The orchestra will leave Sunday for Tokyo for a 29-day tour of Japan.

---

diving equipment.

Globe 4/29/60

Boston Symphony Violinist Stricken Before Asia Debut

TAIPEI, Formosa, Apr. 28 — (AP)—Samuel J. Leibovici, a violinist with the touring Boston Symphony Orchestra, was reported recovering at an American missionary hospital after suffering a heart attack today.

Although his condition was described as good, Liebovici is not expected to be able to play in the orchestra's first Far East concert tomorrow in Taipei.

Leibovici was stricken at a hotel in Peitou, a resort where several orchestra members are quartered. A naturalized American born in Romania, he lives in Brookline, Mass.

Other members of the famed 104-man orchestra were given a reception by U.S. Ambassador Everett F. Drumright.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

19

ASAHI EVENING NEWS, MONDAY, MAY 2, 1960

Famous Boston Symph[illegible] Arrives for 22-Co[illegible]t To[illegible]pan

Fifty-nine members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Conductor Charles Munch arrived Sunday from Taipei aboard a chartered NWA plane.

Fifty members of the famed American orchestra arrived aboard a chartered CAT plane from Taipei for a 22-concert tour of Japan.

By Hans E. Pringsheim

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra under its music director Charles Munch arrived in Tokyo Sunday afternoon for a Japanese tour of 22 concerts in 16 cities.

Forming part of a Far Eastern tour arranged under President Eisenhower's Fund for International Cultural Presentations, the orchestra's visit to Japan is sponsored by the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK), which is arranging 20 of the 22 concerts, and the Osaka International Festival Society, which is arranging the [illegible] two concerts.

[illegible] orchestra arrived in two chartered planes from Taipei, the [illegible] group of 59 headed by Charles Munch arriving by Northwest Airlines, and the second group of 50 headed by the orchestra's associate conductor and concert master Richard Burgin arriving by Civil Air Transport.

Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and officials of NHK greeted the orchestra at the airport. Pretty Japanese girls presented flowers to Mr. Munch and senior members of the orchestra.

In honor of Mr. Munch and members of the orchestra, the President of the NHK and Mrs. Hideo Nomura will be hosts at a buffet lunch at the Korin Mansion today.

The orchestra's first performance will be a simlutaneous radio and television program from the NHK Hall on Wednesday, from 7:30 p.m. The program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, "Eroica;" Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2. Mr. Munch will conduct.

On Thursday, fro[illegible] the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give [illegible] concert at Hibiya Hall, also with Charles Munch conducting. For this, the p[illegible] includes Berlioz's Fantas[illegible]hony; Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne, and Finale, and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's two Osaka Festival programs are booked for May 7 and 8 at the Festival Hall. The May 7 program will be conducted by the noted American composer Aaron Copland and will include his own First Symphony and his orchestra suite from the opera, "The Tender Land," in addition to Purcell's Fantasia for Strings and Haydn's Symphony No. 95 in C minor.

Charles Munch will conduct the May 8 concert, which will be the closing performance of the 1960 Osaka International Festival. It will repeat the program of the Boston Symphony's initial Japanese broadcast of May 4.

The orchestra's schedule in Japan further includes concerts in the following cities: Kyoto, May 9; Matsuyama, May 11; Oita, May 12; Yawata, May 13; Fukuoka, May 14; Hiroshima, May 15; Okayama, May 16; Nagoya, May 18; Shizuoka, May 19; Yokohama, May 20; Nagaoka, May 21; Hibiya Hall, Tokyo, May 22 and 23; Sapporo, May 25; Sendai, May 27; Koriyama, May 28; Hibiya Hall, Tokyo, May 29, and Tokyo Gymnasium, May 30.

Of the 22 concerts in Japan, 12 will be conducted by Charles Munch, five by Richard Burgin, and five by Aaron Copland, who is due to arrive in Tokyo on May 14.

In the course of its Far Eastern tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will also play in the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand.

On its way to Japan, the orchestra gave two concerts in Taipei on April 29 and 30. The visit to Taiwan became possible as the result of the cancellation of two concerts originally planned in Seoul, as the orchestra did not go to Korea in view of the recent political unrest in that country.

Page 1

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 50,968

MAY 2 - 1960

Boston Symphony Arrives In Tokyo

TOKYO, (UPI)—The famed 109-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by conductor Charles Munch, flew here from Formosa Sunday for a series of 22 concerts in Japan.

The orchestra will make its Japan debut here in a radio-television appearance May 4.

India has some 16,000 Tibetan refugees.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012

MAY [illegible] - 1960

Hub Symphony Arrives in Japan

TOKYO (UPI) — The famed 109-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by conductor Charles Munch, flew here from Formosa for a series of 22 concerts in Japan. The orchestra will make its Japan debut here in a radio-television appearance May 4.

Asahi Evening News
April 30, 1960

Boston Symphony To Arrive Sunday

(Another Story on Page 3)

The 110-member Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled to arrive tomorrow afternoon from Taipei for an extended series of concerts.

Sixty members, including noted conductor Charles Munch, will arrive aboard a NWA and 50 others aboard CAT plane.

The first in the series of 22 concerts in Japan will be a radio-TV broadcast Tuesday from 7:30 p.m. to 8:40 p.m. at the NHK Hall in Tokyo.

On Thursday, the famed orchestra will perform at the Hibiya Public Hall from 6:30 p.m.

The orchestra will perform at the Osaka International Festival on May 7 and 8 in Osaka.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-[illegible]

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

APR 27 1960

Symphony Group Arrives In Tokyo

TOKYO (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra passed through Tokyo today, en route to Formosa to open an eight-week concert tour of the Orient.

The group of more than 100 persons led by Conductor Charles Munch arrived in two chartered planes with their instruments and baggage on the third aircraft.

After a stopover of nearly three hours for refueling, they took off for Ttipei. There they will give thier first concert tomorrow. They also will be play in Japan, the Philippines, New Zealand and Australia.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MADISON, WIS.
WISCONSIN STATE JOURNAL
D 5 360 S 80 508

MAY 3 1960

Boston Symphony Starts Japan Tour

TOKYO (UPI) — The famed 109-member Boston Symphony orchestra, led by conductor Charles Munch, flew here from Formosa Sunday for a series of 22 concerts in Japan.

The orchestra will make its Japan debut here in a radio-television appearance Wednesday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 179,169

APR 27 1960

Hub Symphony Reaches Tokyo

TOKYO (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra passed through Tokyo today, enroute to Formosa to open an eight-week concert tour of the Orient.

The group of more than 100 persons, led by conductor Charles Munch arrived in two chartered planes with their instruments and baggage on a third aircraft.

After a stopover of nearly three hours for refueling, they took off for Taipei, where they will give their first concert tomorrow. They will play also in Japan, the Philippines, New Zealand and Australia.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

MAY 2-1960

Japan Welcomes Boston Symphony

The World's Day

Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Asia: Photographers Photographed at Airport

To the click and whirl of photographers photographing musicians and musicians photographing photographers, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was welcomed by hundreds of Japanese on its arrival at Tokyo airport.

Queen Elizabeth II and the Duke of Edinburgh have accepted an invitation to visit Pakistan, an authoritative source said in London. Dates have not been fixed for the journey which may include a visit to India.

The Mainichi
May 1, 1960

Stage ★ Sc

Boston Symphony Arriving Today

The 114-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by regular conductor Charles Munch, will arrive in Tokyo from Taipei, Formosa Sunday afternoon by two specially chartered planes (NWA and CAT).

The orchestra will open a performance tour of 22 concerts in Japan with a radio-television appearance on NHK on May 4, from 7.30 p.m.

TAIPEI, Apr. 30 (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch opened its first Far Eastern tour Friday night before a cheering audience of 1,800 persons.

Shouting "bravo," the audience called Munch back six times after the two-hour program for three encores.

The 104-piece orchestra played before a mixed audience of Chinese and Americans in the auditorium of Taipei City Hall, where the Nationalist Chinese Parliament meets.

The Mainichi
May 2, 1960

Boston Orchestra Here

The 109-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by conductor Charles Munch, arrived in Tokyo Sunday from Taipei via chartered NWA and CAT planes for a series of 22 concerts in Japan.

The orchestra will open its performance in Japan with a radio-television appearance on NHK on May 4 from 7.30 p.m., followed by a concert at Hibiya Public Hall on May 5.

(Photo shows the first group, comprising 60, upon arrival at Tokyo International Airport.)

Asahi Evening News
May 2, 1960

Famous Boston Symphony Orchestra Arrives for 22-Concert Tour in Japan

By Hans E. Pringsheim

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra under its music director Charles Munch arrived in Tokyo Sunday afternoon for a Japanese tour of 22 concerts in 16 cities.

Forming part of a Far Eastern tour arranged under President Eisenhower's Fund for International Cultural Presentations, the orchestra's visit to Japan is sponsored by the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK), which is arranging 20 of the 22 concerts, and the Osaka International Festival Society, which is arranging the remaining two concerts.

The orchestra arrived in two chartered planes from Taipei, the first group of 59 headed by Charles Munch arriving by Northwest Airlines, and the second group of 50 headed by the orchestra's associate conductor and concert master Richard Burgin arriving by Civil Air Transport.

Edward J. Findlay, director of the Tokyo American Cultural Center, and officials of NHK greeted the orchestra at the airport. Pretty Japanese girls presented flowers to Mr. Munch and senior members of the orchestra.

In honor of Mr. Munch and members of the orchestra, the President of the NHK and Mrs. Hideo Nomura were hosts at a buffet lunch at the Korin Mansion today.

The orchestra's first performance will be a simultaneous radio and television program from the NHK Hall on Wednesday, from 7:30 p.m. The program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, "Eroica;" Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2. Mr. Munch will conduct.

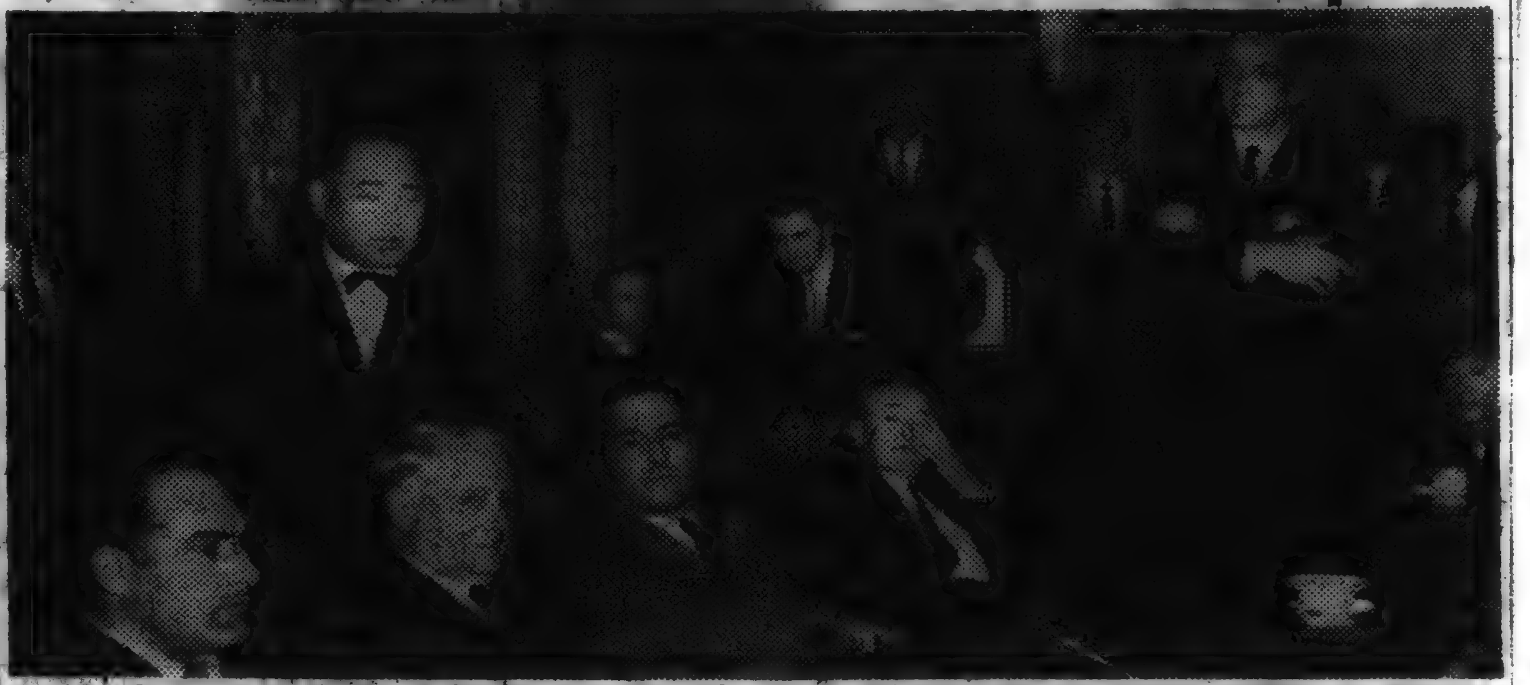
On Thursday, from 6:30 p.m., the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its first public concert at Hibiya Hall, also with Charles Munch conducting. For this, the program includes Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony; Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne, and Finale, and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's two Osaka Festival programs are booked for May 7 and 8 at the Festival Hall. The May 7 program will be conducted by the noted American composer Aaron Copland and will include his own First Symphony and his orchestra suite from the opera, "The Tender Land," in addition to Purcell's Fantasia for Strings and Haydn's Symphony No. 95 in C minor.

Charles Munch will conduct the May 8 concert, which will be the closing performance of the 1960 Osaka International Festival. It will repeat the program of the Boston Symphony's initial Japanese broadcast of May 4.

The orchestra's schedule in Japan further includes concerts in the following cities: Kyoto, May 9; Matsuyama, May 11; Oita, May 12; Yawata, May 13; Fukuoka, May 14; Hiroshima, May 15; Okayama, May 16; Nagoya, May 18; Shizuoka, May 19; Yokohama, May 20; Nagaoka, May 21; Hibiya Hall, Tokyo, May 22 and 23; Sapporo, May 25; Sendai, May 27; Koriyama, May 28; Hibiya Hall, Tokyo, May 29, and Tokyo Gymnasium, May 30.

Of the 22 concerts in Japan, 12 will be conducted by Charles Munch, five by Richard Burgin, and five by Aaron Copland, who is due to arrive in Tokyo on May 14.



Representatives of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this morning called on Japan Broadcasting Corporation President Hideo Nomura. Left to right are Joseph de Pasquale, Charles Munch, famed conducter; Leonard Burkat, secretary-general of the orchestra; Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master; and (standing) Thomas Perry, orchestra manager who is the grandson of the late Commodore Matthew C. Perry.

Asahi Eve. News

5

Asahi Evening News
April 30, 1960

Boston Symphony Due Here —Scores Success in Taipei

By The Associated Press

TAIPEI, Apr. 30—The first concert of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra on its first Far East tour was given in Taipei Friday and was an unqualified success.

The demand for tickets far outran the capacity of the Japanese-built City Hall Theater, crammed with a standing-room-only audience enraptured throughout the performance.

The orchestra will give another concert Saturday, then leave Sunday for a 29-day stay in Japan before going to the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

Lin Arison, music adviser to the armed forces of Nationalist China and former assistant conductor of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, wrote this review for the Associated Press:

Charles Munch, ninth permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, enthralled the audience with his emotional interpretation of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony and, finally, Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite, Number II.

It was a great musical experience for the audience whose thunderous whole-hearted applause attested to their appreciation of the most delightful concert ever given in Taipei. The audience was charmed with the winning personality projected by Dr. Charles Munch, who captivated in with his techniques of control.

His genial, warm presence welded both audience and artists into a single unit of musically appreciative humanity.

A peak difficult to describe was reached through their mutual attention and devotion, especially in the finale of the Beethoven Eroica.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

3 MAY 1960
EVENING NEWS (DANNEVIRKE)

OUT-"PRESSING" THE PRESS

TOKIO, May 1 (AAP-Reuter).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived by air today and for several minutes exchanged shutter clicks with local press photographers waiting to greet them. The orchestra arrived from Taipeh on two special aircraft. Hundreds of welcoming Japanese lined the roof of the air terminal building.

As the musicians left the first aircraft led by the conductor, Charles Munch, press cameras began popping and whirring.

The orchestra was equal to the occasion.

Members hastily brought out their assortment of cameras and clicked and whirred back at the press photographers and crowd.

The orchestra will spend a month touring Japan. They passed through here briefly en route to Taipeh on April 27.

The first concert will be given in Tokio on May 4, then the tour begins, covering almost the whole of Japan.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

MAY 2 - 1960

Boston Symphony Has Camera Duel With Tokyo Press

TOKYO, May 1 (Reuters)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived here by air today and for several minutes fought a camera duel with local press photographers waiting to greet them.

Hundreds of welcoming Japanese lined the roof of the air terminal building as the orchestra arrived from Taipei, Formosa, in two special planes. When the musicians left the first aircraft, led by Conductor Charles Munch, press cameras began popping and whirring.

The orchestra was equal to the occasion. The musicians hastily brought out their assortment of cameras and clicked and whirred back at press photographers and the crowd.

The orchestra will spend a month touring Japan. The first concert will be given in Tokyo Wednesday and then a tour begins that will cover almost the whole of Japan.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

3 MAY 1960
BAY OF PLENTY TIMES
(Tauranga)
Circulation approx. 5,600
Auckland Province (South)

Japan Welcomes Orchestra

TOKYO, May 2.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived by air and for several minutes exchanged shutter clicks with local Press photographers waiting to greet them.

The orchestra arrived from Taipeh, Formosa, on two special aircraft.

Hundreds of welcoming Japanese lined the roof of the air terminal building.

As the musicians left the first aircraft led by the conductor, Dr Charles Munch, Press cameras began popping and whirring.

The orchestra was equal to the occasion.

Members hastily brought out their assortment of cameras and clicked and whirred back at the Press photographers and crowd.

The orchestra will spend a month touring Japan.

The first concert will be given at Tokyo on May 4. Then the tour begins, covering almost the whole of Japan.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

3 MAY 1960
WANGANUI HERALD
(Wanganui)
Circulation approx .9,600
Wellington Province.

In Tokyo

TOKYO, Sunday. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived by air today and for several minutes exchanged shutter clicks with local Press photographers waiting to greet them. The orchestra arrived from Taipeh on two special aircraft.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Time (e)
PAWTUCKET
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,041

MAY 4 1960

BostonSymphony In Japan Debut

TV Audience Is Enthusiastic

TOKYO (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its Tokyo debut today under the baton of Charles Munch to an enthusiastic applause from Crown Prince Akihito and his wife, Princess Michiko among a selected audience of 600.

Earlier disputes over the scheduling and programming failed to dampen the audience's spirits.

The 70-minute concert was broadcast to the nation over the radio and television network of the Japanese Broadcasting Corp. from its new auditorium.

A studio audience of invited guests cheered Munch and the orchestra of more than 100 members. Members of the diplomatic corps and music critics were there.

Munch chose a program designed to appeal to the classical music lovers of Japan. At the same time he displayed the perfection of the Boston Symphony in its interpretations of romantic and modern French and German music.

Munch opened the program with one of Japan's favorites, Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, and closed with Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite.

The orchestra arrived here May 1 from Taipei and will also play in Osaka and Nagoya, then proceed to Manila, Australia and New Zealand.

The Yomiuri
May 4, 1960

[illegible]

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play the first of five scheduled Tokyo performances. Directed by Charles Munch, the program, in Hibiya Hall at 6.30, will present Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique, Walter Piston's Symphony No 6, and Roussel's Second Suite from "Bacchus and Ariadne."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815

MAY 2 1960

Boston Symphony Back ~~In Tokyo From~~ Formosa

TOKYO (AP)—The Boston Symphony flew back into Tokyo Sunday from Taipei where it gave two concerts, to open a 22-performance tour of Japan.

The world famous orchestra led by Director Charles Munch passed through Tokyo April 27 for a four-day visit of Formosa.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 142,535

MAY 4 1960

Boston Symphony Makes Tokyo Debut

Tokyo— (AP) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its Tokyo debut today under the baton of Charles Munch to enthusiastic applause from Crown Prince Akihito and his wife, Princess Michiko among a selected audience of 600.

Earlier disputes over scheduling and programming failed to dampen the audience's spirits.

The 70-minute concert was broadcast to the nation.

Mr. Munch chose a program designed to appeal to the classical music lovers of Japan. At the same time he displayed the perfection of the Boston Symphony in its interpretations of romantic and modern French and German music.

Mr. Munch opened the program with one of Japan's favorites, Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, and closed with Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite.

The Yomiuri
May 4, 1960

Boston Orchestra Takes Bow On TV

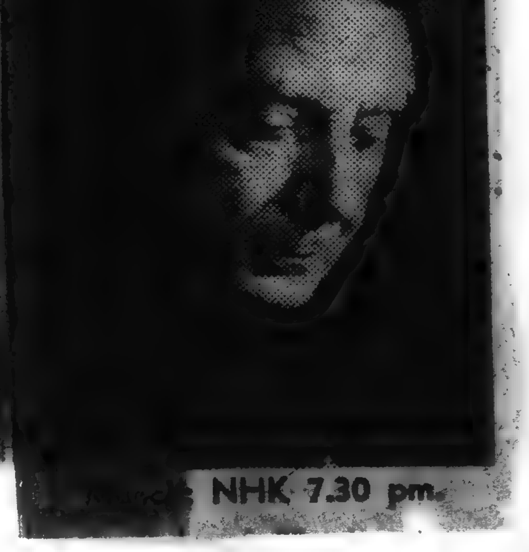
The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch this evening gives the first of a series of full-scale concerts on the air in Japan.

(NHK 7.30-8.40 pm).

The program is a good one: 1) "Symphony No 3" by Beethoven and 2) "Daphnis et Chloe" by Ravel.

In the opening, the national anthems of both Japan and the US will be played and the concert on the air will get under way.

The concert, staged at the NHK Hall, is being broadcast simultaneously over the corporation's national radio network.



Munch NHK 7.30 pm.

52

Herald
BOSTON, [illegible]s.
Circ. 175,676

MAY 5 1960

Crown Prince, Princess Attend

Boston Symphony in Debut In Japan Over TV Network

By ROSS PARMENTER
[The New York Times News Service]

TOKYO—The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first program in Japan Wednesday. It took the form of a 70-minute telecast which was in the nature of a state occasion, for it was attended by Crown Prince Akihito and Crown Princess Michiko and by Ambassador and Mrs. Douglas MacArthur of the United States.

The program was given in a studio-hall of NHK, the Japanese broadcasting Corporation, which sponsoring the orchestra's tour Japan.

The Japanese are said to own 000,000 television sets, and the telecast was nation-wide. The program was also broadcast. Thus large numbers got a sample hearing and viewing of the orchestra free, but only an invited audience of 650 heard the orchestra in person. And the guest list was lim-

(Continued on Page Twenty-two)

(AP Wirephoto)

FLORAL WELCOME greeted members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as they arrived at the Tokyo airport in Japan during their five-nation tour.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 3078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

MAY 5 1960

All Fly in Happi-Coats

Hub Symphony Basks In Japanese Courtesy

Helen Perry, wife of the Boston Symphony manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr., has accompanied the Orchestra upon its current tour in the Far East. Herewith, in diary style, is the first of several stories conveying her impressions of the trip.

By HELEN PERRY

It is 7:30 a.m. 49th State time, 11:30 a.m. Boston time, and 4:30 p.m. tomorrow in Tokyo. We are flying over Alaskan mountains, shining in the morning sunshine.

HELEN PERRY

We really feel Orient bound. Since Seattle, where we were greeted by a winsome Japanese hostess in kimono and obi, we have been comforted and cossetted with traditional Japanese courtesy.

Since yesterday was a day fraught with frustrations in transportation—from the Boston fog on take-off to minor mechanical difficulty in Chicago which delayed us four hours—this soothing welcome by Japan's air arm was manna. One mathematical musician remarked that he had averaged 50 miles an hour by jet transport!

I am always impressed by the resilience and the cheerful acceptance of the vicissitudes of travel by this talented and varied group of musicians. Their humor never fails. When the plane air conditioner came on noisily in the wee small hours one man quipped "O, that old East wind!" And this morning after little more than four hours sleep in 29 hours, they are happily snapping pictures of the snow-covered Alaskan land below us.

The plane is comfortable, a DC-7, and we have it all to ourselves, so the atmosphere is relaxed and informal, truly one big happy family.

To go back to our welcome aboard the Japanese Airlines plane, "City of Hong Kong." One of the delights of Japanese air travel is the issuing of Happi-coats to all passengers. The Happi-coat is a short cotton kimona-style jacket, in this case a bold black and white geometric pattern with a red good luck medallion center back.

It adapts to different orchestra men in different ways. On the tall ones it resembles a smoking jacket, on the short a gaudy sleep-coat. It was particularly entrancing on one violinist, worn with a French beret to keep his head warm. Also given us were a pair of white cotton socks in which the men are padding up and down the aisle, and a painted fan which has not yet been needed.

No sooner had we settled ourselves in our Happi-coats this morning at 1 a.m. already feeling lazily Oriental, then we were served champagne and a continuing profusion of little sandwiches, bits of meat and fish, rice treats, to be eaten with chopsticks if one wished. Some of our members are proficient with these puzzling implements and gave lessons to the uninitiated.

So we are predisposed to like the Japanese. I think we are all excited as we fly closer to this country which this year is celebrating the 100th anniversary of its first treaty of trade and international relations with the United States.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

MAY 5 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN JAPANESE BOW

Plays 70-Minute Telecast Attended by Prince Akihito and Princess Michiko

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to The New York Times.

TOKYO, May 4—The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first program in Japan tonight. It took the form of a seventy-minute telecast that was in the nature of a state occasion, for it was attended by Crown Prince Akihito and Crown Princess Michiko and by Ambassador and Mrs. Douglas MacArthur 2d of the United States.

The program was given in a studio-hall of NHK, the Japanese broadcasting corporation, which is sponsoring the orchestra's tour of Japan.

The Japanese are said to own 8,000,000 television sets, and the telecast was nation-wide. The program also was broadcast. Thus large numbers got a sample hearing and viewing of the orchestra free, but only an invited audience of 650 heard the orchestra in person. And the guest list was limited to persons in diplomacy, culture and education.

In Japan, when the Boston Symphony is spoken of, one quickly realizes the orchestra is one of America's greatest cultural assets. And its Australasian tour is being made under President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

System Accepted

Thus an initial concert in Japan closed to the ticket-buying public struck Western visitors as strange. But no Japanese resentment has been heard. Concertgoers here are accustomed to the sponsor system. Under this system, if the sponsor is a radio or television station, it always presents its imported attraction first from its own studios. Concertgoers get the second performance.

Many important Japanese organizations vied for the honor of sponsoring the orchestra here. Having won the sponsorship, NHK was not going to give up the customary advantage of presenting the orchestra first under its own auspices. No one at NHK seemed seriously concerned that the Tokyo Symphony was giving a concert the same night at Hibiya Hall.

It will be the Boston's turn at Hibiya tomorrow night and in breaks between concerts in other Japanese cities, the Boston will also play at Hibiya on May 22, 23 and 29. The orchestra will give its farewell Japanese concert on May 30 in the 8,000-seat Tokyo Gymnasium.

Tonight's program began at 7:30 with the playing of the Japanese National Anthem. It was followed by "The Star-Spangled Banner." Then Charles Munch led the orchestra in Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. It was a tactful choice, for it is well known that, of all the Western classical composers, Beethoven is the Japanese favorite.

Ravel Work Heard

Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite, a specialty of Mr. Munch's, was the other work of the program. It brought the event to what was literally a deafening conclusion.

One says this because the NHK studio hall is extraordinarily vibrant. With the Boston Symphony playing full blast in it, the fortes were not only uncomfortably loud but also continued reverberating when the music grew softer. The invited audience, therefore, got an idea of the orchestra's massed skill, but it did not hear its best tonal qualities.

From the hall itself one could not judge the sound received by television sets, but this is never of very high fidelity. In the hall, however, one could judge the skill of the Japanese cameramen, for two sets were set up showing what outside receivers were viewing.

The pictures were clear and sharp and what could be done to make an orchestral concert interesting on TV was done. That is, there was a good deal of imaginative shifting of camera angles. An[illegible] cameramen, knowing [illegible] solo passages, were clever in making close-ups of the leading performers. There were also many striking sequences of close-ups of the always photogenic Mr. Munch.

Symphony On Japan TV

(Continued from First Page)

17

ited to persons in diplomacy, culture and education.

In Japan, when the Boston Symphony is spoken of, one quickly realizes the orchestra is one of America's greatest cultural assets. And its tour is being made under President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

Thus an initial concert in Japan closed to the ticket-buying public struck Western visitors as strange. But no Japanese resentment has been heard. Here concert-goers are accustomed to the sponsor system. Under this system, if the sponsor is a radio or television station it always presents its imported attraction first from its own studios. Concert-goers get the second performance.

VIED FOR HONOR

Many important Japanese organizations vied for the honor of sponsoring the Boston Symphony here. Having won the sponsorship, NHK was not going to give up the customary advantage of presenting the orchestra first under its own auspices. And no one at NHK seemed seriously concerned that the Tokyo Symphony was giving a concert the same night at Hibiya Hall.

It will be the Boston's turn at Hibiya Thursday night. In breaks between concerts in other Japanese cities, the Boston will also play at Hibiya on May 22, 23 and 29. The Orchestra will give its farewell Japanese concert on May 30 in the 8000-seat Tokyo Gymnasium.

The Mainichi
May 4, 1960

Let's Tune In

NHK-TV CHANNEL 1—7.30 p.m.: The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, invited to Japan by NHK, offers its first TV concert from the NHK Hall in Tokyo with Charles Munch conducting. Numbers to be presented include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 and Ravel's Daphnis at Chloe, Suite No. 2.

Boston Symphony Here For 22-Performance Tour Of Japan

The 109-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by conductor Charles Munch, Sunday flew into Tokyo from Taipei for a 22-performance tour of Japan. The orchestra will open its tour in Japan with a radio-television appearance on NHK on May 4 from 7.30 pm followed by a concert at Hibiya Public Hall on May 5. It will then visit Osaka where two concerts will be given at the International Art Festival now in progress. Other shows will be performed in Kyoto, Matsuyama, Oita, Fukuoka, Hiroshima, Nagoya, Shizuoka, Yokohama, Nagaoka, Sapporo and Koriyama. On May 31 the orchestra will continue its Far East tour by flying to Manila, then to Australia and New Zealand.

The Yomiuri
May 3, 1960

Music Calendar

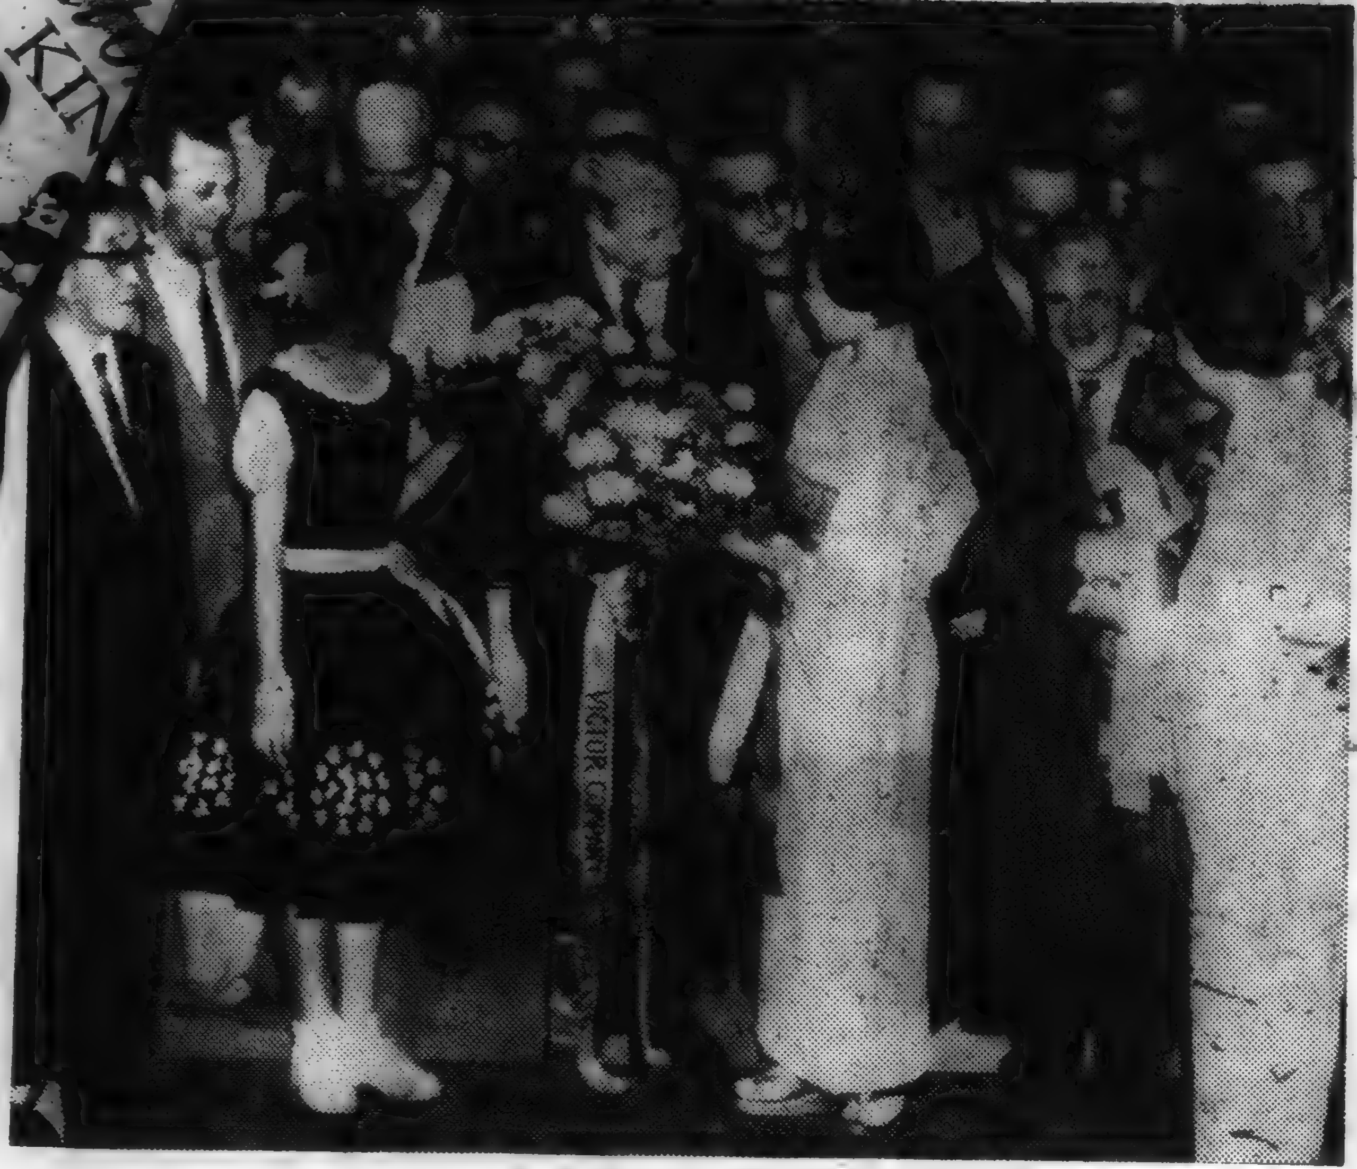
The long expected first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the great event of the week, but Japanese performers will also be very [illegible]

52

Famous Creator
JUNIORS
CLOSEOUTS, FEW SECONDS
ONE, FEW of a KIND
SHORT FORMAL PROM OR BRIDESMAID
GOWNS
9.90 to $21.90
nylon over acetate taffeta pink, yellow, white, light blue, pastel greens and other spring or summer shades

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

1960



(AP Wirephoto)

FLORAL WELCOME greeted members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as they arrived at the Tokyo airport in Japan during their five-nation tour.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

MAY 5 1960

All Fly in Happi-Coats

Hub Symphony Basks In Japanese Courtesy

Helen Perry, wife of the Boston Symphony manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr., has accompanied the Orchestra upon its current tour in the Far East. Herewith, in diary style, is the first of several stories conveying her impressions of the trip.

By HELEN PERRY

It is 7:30 a.m. 49th State time, 11:30 a.m. Boston time, and 4:30 p.m. tomorrow in Tokyo. We are flying over Alaskan mountains, shining in the morning sunshine.

HELEN PERRY

We really feel Orient bound. Since Seattle, where we were greeted by a winsome Japanese hostess in kimono and obi, we have been comforted and cossetted with traditional Japanese courtesy.

Since yesterday was a day fraught with frustrations in transportation—from the Boston fog on take-off to minor mechanical difficulty in Chicago which delayed us four hours—this soothing welcome by Japan's air arm was manna. One mathematical musician remarked that he had averaged 50 miles an hour by jet transport!

I am always impressed by the resilience and the cheerful acceptance of the vicissitudes of travel by this talented and varied group of musicians. Their humor never fails. When the plane air conditioner came on noisily in the wee small hours one man quipped "O, that old East wind!" And this morning after little more than four hours sleep in 29 hours, they are happily snapping pictures of the snow-covered Alaskan land below us.

The plane is comfortable, a DC-7, and we have it all to ourselves, so the atmosphere is relaxed and informal, truly one big happy family.

To go back to our welcome aboard the Japanese Airlines plane, "City of Hong Kong." One of the delights of Japanese air travel is the issuing of Happi-coats to all passengers. The Happi-coat is a short cotton kimona-style jacket, in this case a bold black and white geometric pattern with a red good luck medallion center back.

It adapts to different orchestra men in different ways. On the tall ones it resembles a smoking jacket, on the short a gaudy sleep-coat. It was particularly entrancing on one violinist, worn with a French beret to keep his head warm. Also given us were a pair of white cotton socks in which the men are padding up and down the aisle, and a painted fan which has not yet been needed.

No sooner had we settled ourselves in our Happi-coats this morning at 1 a.m. already feeling lazily Oriental, then we were served champagne and a continuing profusion of little sandwiches, bits of meat and fish, rice treats, to be eaten with chopsticks if one wished. Some of our members are proficient with these puzzling implements and gave lessons to the uninitiated.

So we are predisposed to like the Japanese. I think we are all excited as we fly closer to this country which this year is celebrating the 100th anniversary of its first treaty of trade and international relations with the United States.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

MAY 5 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN JAPANESE BOW

Plays 70-Minute Telecast Attended by Prince Akihito and Princess Michiko

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to The New York Times.

TOKYO, May 4—The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first program in Japan tonight. It took the form of a seventy-minute telecast that was in the nature of a state occasion, for it was attended by Crown Prince Akihito and Crown Princess Michiko and by Ambassador and Mrs. Douglas MacArthur 2d of the United States.

The program was given in a studio-hall of NHK, the Japanese broadcasting corporation, which is sponsoring the orchestra's tour of Japan.

The Japanese are said to own 8,000,000 television sets, and the telecast was nation-wide. The program also was broadcast. Thus large numbers got a sample hearing and viewing of the orchestra free, but only an invited audience of 650 heard the orchestra in person. And the guest list was limited to persons in diplomacy, culture and education.

In Japan, when the Boston Symphony is spoken of, one quickly realizes the orchestra is one of America's greatest cultural assets. And its Australasian tour is being made under President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

System Accepted

Thus an initial concert in Japan closed to the ticket-buying public struck Western visitors as strange. But no Japanese resentment has been heard. Concertgoers here are accustomed to the sponsor system. Under this system, if the sponsor is a radio or television station, it always presents its imported attraction first from its own studios. Concertgoers get the second performance.

Many important Japanese organizations vied for the honor of sponsoring the orchestra here. Having won the sponsorship, NHK was not going to give up the customary advantage of presenting the orchestra first under its own auspices. No one at NHK seemed seriously concerned that the Tokyo Symphony was giving a concert the same night at Hibiya Hall.

It will be the Boston's turn at Hibiya tomorrow night and in breaks between concerts in other Japanese cities, the Boston will also play at Hibiya on May 22, 23 and 29. The orchestra will give its farewell Japanese concert on May 30 in the 8,000-seat Tokyo Gymnasium.

Tonight's program began at 7:30 with the playing of the Japanese National Anthem. It was followed by "The Star-Spangled Banner." Then Charles Munch led the orchestra in Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. It was a tactful choice, for it is well known that, of all the Western classical composers, Beethoven is the Japanese favorite.

Ravel Work Heard

Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite, a specialty of Mr. Munch's, was the other work of the program. It brought the event to what was literally a deafening conclusion.

One says this because the NHK studio hall is extraordinarily vibrant. With the Boston Symphony playing full blast in it, the fortes were not only uncomfortably loud but also continued reverberating when the music grew softer. The invited audience, therefore, got an idea of the orchestra's massed skill, but it did not hear its best tonal qualities.

From the hall itself one could not judge the sound received by television sets, but this is never of very high fidelity. In the hall, however, one could judge the skill of the Japanese cameramen, for [illegible] sets were set up showing what outside receivers were viewing.

The pictures were clear and sharp and what could be done to make an orchestral concert interesting on TV was done. That is, there was a good deal of imaginative shifting of camera angles. And the cameramen, knowing the [illegible] solo passages, were clever in making close-ups of the leading performers. There were also many striking sequences of close-ups of the always photogenic Mr. Munch.

Symphony On Japan TV

(Continued from First Page) 17

ited to persons in diplomacy, culture and education.

In Japan, when the Boston Symphony is spoken of, one quickly realizes the orchestra is one of America's greatest cultural assets. And its tour is being made under President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy.

Thus an initial concert in Japan closed to the ticket-buying public struck Western visitors as strange. But no Japanese resentment has been heard. Here concert-goers are accustomed to the sponsor system. Under this system, if the sponsor is a radio or television station it always presents its imported attraction first from its own studios. Concert-goers get the second performance.

VIED FOR HONOR

Many important Japanese organizations vied for the honor of sponsoring the Boston Symphony here. Having won the sponsorship, NHK was not going to give up the customary advantage of presenting the orchestra first under its own auspices. And no one at NHK seemed seriously concerned that the Tokyo Symphony was giving a concert the same night at Hibiya Hall.

It will be the Boston's turn at Hibiya Thursday night. In breaks between concerts in other Japanese cities, the Boston will also play at Hibiya on May 22, 23 and 29. The Orchestra will give its farewell Japanese concert on May 30 in the 8000-seat Tokyo Gymnasium.

The Mainichi
May 4, 1960

Let's Tune In

NHK-TV CHANNEL 1—7.30 p.m.: The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, invited to Japan by NHK, offers its first TV concert from the NHK Hall in Tokyo with Charles Munch conducting. Numbers to be presented include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 and Ravel's Daphnis at Chloe, Suite No. 2.

Boston Symphony Here For 22-Performance Tour Of Japan

The 100-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by conductor Charles Munch, Sunday flew into Tokyo from Taipei for a 22-performance tour of Japan. The orchestra will open its tour in Japan with a radio-television appearance on NHK on May 4 from 7.30 pm followed by a concert at Hibiya Public Hall on May 5. It will then visit Osaka where two concerts will be given at the International Art Festival now in progress. Other shows will be performed in Kyoto, Matsuyama, Oita, Fukuoka, Hiroshima, Nagoya, Shizuoka, Yokohama, Nagaoka, Sapporo and Koriyama. On May 31 the orchestra will continue its Far East tour by flying to Manila, then to Australia and New Zealand.

The Yomiuri
May 3, 1960

Music Calendar

The long expected first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the great event of the week, but Japanese performers will also be very [illegible]

53

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

MAY 5 1960

VICTOR COMPANY

Associated Press Wirephoto

Charles Munch (center) and Richard Burgin (right), director and associate director of the Boston Symphony, receive bouquets from Japanese girls after the arrival of the touring musicians Sunday night at the Tokyo airport.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,976

MAY 2 - 1960

Boston Symphony Returns to Tokyo

TOKYO (AP)—The Boston symphony flew back into Tokyo Sunday from Taipei to open a 22-performance tour of Japan. The first performance will be on Wednesday.

The world famous orchestra led by Director Charles Munch passed through Tokyo April 27 for a four day visit of Formosa.

The Mainichi
April 23, 1960

Boston Symphony:

Early Arrival Poses Headache To Sponsor

UPI

The sponsor of a Japan concert tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra expressed surprise Friday that it had decided to cancel its performance in the Republic of Korea because of "national unrest."

Commenting on reports from Boston that the orchestra had canceled two concerts in Seoul on advice of the State Department and the American Embassy in Seoul, officials of NHK (Japan Broadcasting Corporation) said:

"We are making arrangements on the assumption that the orchestra will arrive in Tokyo May 1 and that it will give its first concert May 4 despite its sudden change of schedule.

"We believe that the orchestra will not be able to hold a concert before May 4 unless it will give it free."

The 104-member orchestra was originally scheduled to perform in Seoul April 29 and 30 and then fly to Tokyo.

Officials said accommodations for the members of the orchestra would be the big headache if it were to come here earlier than scheduled.

"We are checking with the head office of the symphony orchestra whether it was planning to come here before May 1," they said.

The reports from Boston said that the orchestra was planning to leave there next Monday as originally scheduled but did not say where in the Far East it will perform on the dates previously scheduled for Korea.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

MAY 4 1960

Late News

A Belmont soldier is being held by federal authorities in Bangor, Me., on a charge involving the interstate transportation of a stolen car. Thomas W. Flynn, 18, and another soldier, James R. Ryan, 17, of Pawtucket, R. I., are being held in $3,000 bail each.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee today approved a nine per cent pay raise bill for 21.7 federal workers. It would cost $810 million annually.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States today protested as "unsupported and unjustified" the Dominican Republic's ouster of American diplomat Carl E. Davis. He was ordered out on grounds he "conveyed material derogatory to the Dominican Republic to a British newspaperman."

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Agriculture Department announced today it will pay an indemnity of up to $3.02 a barrel for 1959-crop cranberries which were forced off the market last fall.

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Secretary of Labor Mitchell ruled today workers on government contracts in the tire industry and related lines must be paid at least $1.77 an hour.

TOKYO (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its Tokyo debut today under the baton of Charles Munch to enthusiastic applause. Crown Prince Akihito and his wife were

(Continued [illegible] Page Thirty-one)

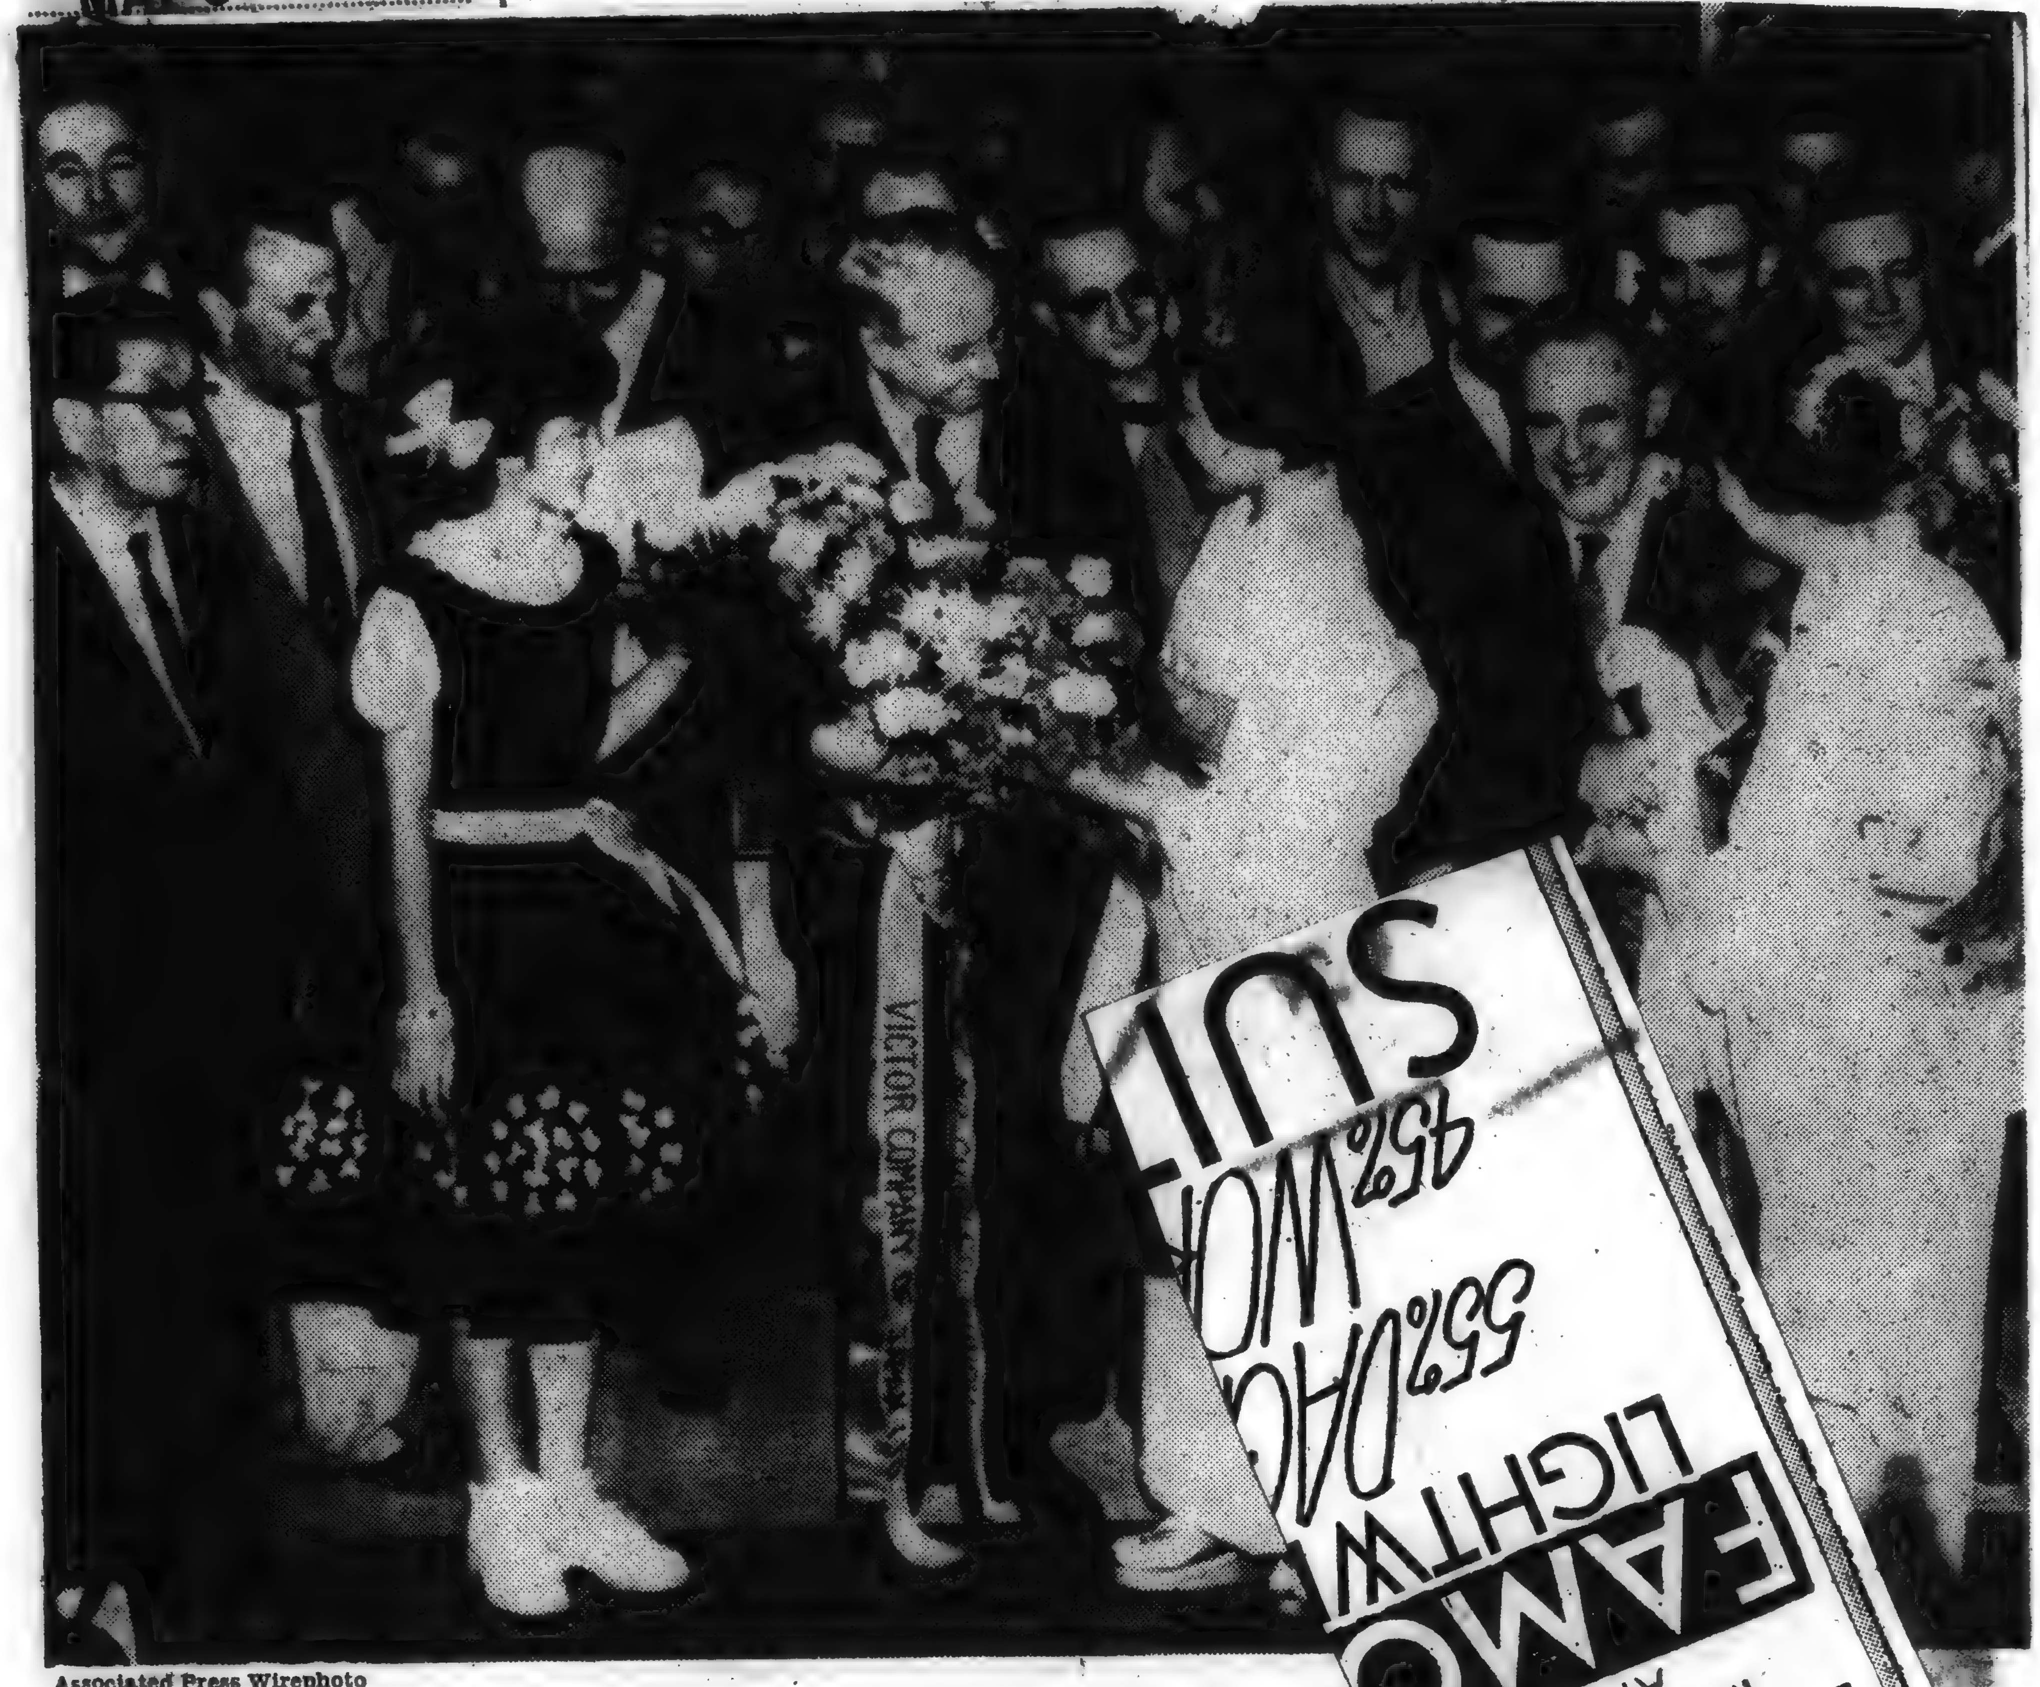
Cardinal Spellman observed his 71st birthday today by ordaining his nephew, Rev. John William Pagnan, 28, of Whitman, Mass., as a priest in ceremonies in St. Patrick's Cathedral.

53

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

MAY 5 1960



Associated Press Wirephoto

Charles Munch (center) and Richard Burgin (right), director and associate director of the Boston Symphony, receive bouquets from Japanese girls … cians Sunday night at the T…

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,976

MAY 2 - 1960

Boston Symphony Returns to Tokyo

TOKYO (AP)—The Boston symphony flew back into Tokyo Sunday from Taipei to open a 22-performance tour of Japan. The first performance will be on Wednesday.

The world famous orchestra led by Director Charles Munch passed through Tokyo April 27 for a four day visit of Formosa.

---

p Agency, Inc.
hmond 2-4200

s.

FAMO LIGHTW
55% DAC
45% WO
SUI
MEN
MADE DURING TH
AT SACRIFICE S
The summer suit that's fast becom
men—come, try one on Filene's Auton
THURSD
silk organzas — silk prints — silk nylon lace — and fashions — SIZE
AT

The Mainichi
April 23, 1960

Boston Symphony:

Early Arrival Poses Headache To Sponsor

UPI

The sponsor of a Japan concert tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra expressed surprise Friday that it had decided to cancel its performance in the Republic of Korea because of "national unrest."

Commenting on reports from Boston that the orchestra had canceled two concerts in Seoul on advice of the State Department and the American Embassy in Seoul, officials of NHK (Japan Broadcasting Corporation) said:

"We are making arrangements on the assumption that the orchestra will arrive in Tokyo May 1 and that it will give its first concert May 4 despite its sudden change of schedule.

"We believe that the orchestra will not be able to hold a concert before May 4 unless it will give it free."

The 104-member orchestra was originally scheduled to perform in Seoul April 29 and 30 and then fly to Tokyo.

Officials said accommodations for the members of the orchestra would be the big headache if it were to come here earlier than scheduled.

"We are checking with the head office of the symphony orchestra whether it was planning to come here before May 1," they said.

The reports from Boston said that the orchestra was planning to leave there next Monday as originally scheduled but did not say where in the Far East it will perform on the dates previously scheduled for Korea.

---

ate News

(Continued from First Page)

among a selected audience of 600.

NEW YORK (UPI) — Red-haired film star Suzy Parker announced today through her attorney, Paul O'Dwyer, that she plans to divorce her husband, Pierre de La Salle, a French magazine writer.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department today rejected a new Soviet bid for a long-term moratorium on underground tests of small nuclear weapons.

WASHINGTON (AP)—A former chief of Cuba's military intelligence told Senate investigators today that Russian technicians are building a gigantic airstrip in a swamp on the southern coast of Cuba. Col. Manuel Antonio Ugalde Carrilo said the strip is 12 miles long. He said his informants told him the concrete base could support any type of plane.

ISTANBUL (AP) — Secretary of State Herter left Istanbul for Athens tonight aboard a U.S. Air Force C54 transport. The plane was put into emergency service when his Boeing 707 jet developed engine trouble.

WASHINGTON (AP) — House foes of a $251-million distressed area development bill started a parliamentary filibuster today which could delay action on the bill for hours—perhaps block it completely.

NEW YORK (AP) — Francis Cardinal Spellman observed his 71st birthday today by ordaining his nephew, Rev. John William Pagnan, 28, of Whitman, Mass., as a priest in ceremonies in St. Patrick's Cathedral.

53

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

MAY 5 1960

Associated Press Wirephoto

Charles Munch (center) and Richard Burgin (right), director and associate director of the Boston Symphony, receive bouquets from Japanese girls Sunday night at the T

cians

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

MAY 2 - 1960

Boston Symphony Returns to Tokyo

TOKYO (AP)—The Boston symphony flew back into Tokyo Sunday from Taipei to open a 22-performance tour of Japan. The first performance will be on Wednesday.

The world famous orchestra led by Director Charles Munch passed through Tokyo April 27 for a four day visit of Formosa.

The Mainichi
April 23, 1960

Boston Symphony:

Early Arrival Poses Headache To Sponsor

UPI

The sponsor of a Japan concert tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra expressed surprise Friday that it had decided to cancel its performance in the Republic of Korea because of "national unrest."

Commenting on reports from Boston that the orchestra had canceled two concerts in Seoul on advice of the State Department and the American Embassy in Seoul, officials of NHK (Japan Broadcasting Corporation) said:

"We are making arrangements on the assumption that the orchestra will arrive in Tokyo May 1 and that it will give its first concert May 4 despite its sudden change of schedule.

"We believe that the orchestra will not be able to hold a concert before May 4 unless it will give it free."

The 104-member orchestra was originally scheduled to perform in Seoul April 29 and 30 and then fly to Tokyo.

Officials said accommodations for the members of the orchestra would be the big headache if it were to come here earlier than scheduled.

"We are checking with the head office of the symphony orchestra whether it was planning to come here before May 1," they said.

The reports from Boston said that the orchestra was planning to leave there next Monday as originally scheduled but did not say where in the Far East it will perform on the dates previously scheduled for Korea.

The Japan Times
May 2, 1960

Receiving bouquets from pretty Japanese girls are Charles Munch (left), conductor, and Richard Burgin, concert master, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which arrived at Tokyo International Airport yesterday aboard an NWA plane for a one-month performance tour in Japan.

FAMO LIGHTW 55% DAC 45% WO SUI
MEN
MADE DURING TH
AT SACRIFICE S
The summer suit that's fast becom men—come, try one on Filene's
THURSD
Auton
AT silk organzas — silk prints — and nylon lace fashions — SIZE

ite News

(Continued [illegible] First Page)

among a selected audience of 600.

NEW YORK (UPI) — Red-haired film star Suzy Parker announced today through her attorney, Paul O'Dwyer, that she plans to divorce her husband, Pierre de La Salle, a French magazine writer.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department today rejected a new Soviet bid for a long-term moratorium on underground tests of small nuclear weapons.

WASHINGTON (AP)—A former chief of Cuba's military intelligence told Senate investigators today that Russian technicians are building a gigantic airstrip in a swamp on the southern coast of Cuba. Col. Manuel Antonio Ugalde Carrilo said the strip is 12 miles long. He said his informants told him the concrete base could support any type of plane.

ISTANBUL (AP) — Secretary of State Herter left Istanbul for Athens tonight aboard a U.S. Air Force C54 transport. The plane was put into emergency service when his Boeing 707 jet developed engine trouble.

WASHINGTON (AP) — House foes of a $251-million distressed area development bill started a parliamentary filibuster today which could delay action on the bill for hours—perhaps block it completely.

NEW YORK (AP) — Francis Cardinal Spellman observed his 71st birthday today by ordaining his nephew, Rev. John William Pagnan, 28, of Whitman, Mass., as a priest in ceremonies in St. Patrick's Cathedral.

54

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 600,319
MAY 4 1960

THE NEW YORK TIMES, WEDNESDAY, MAY 4, 1960.

Advertising: Foreign Tourist Drive Backed

By ROBERT ALDEN

The Government may be critical of advertising every now and then. But when trouble brews that same Government recognizes advertising as one of the best weapons in its arsenal.

Of late Congress has been concerned with the loss of markets to foreign competition. With increasing imports and a foreign military and economic aid program, gold has been flowing out of the country, rather than, as before, into it. This is a cause for alarm among Congressmen.

The Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has been looking into the situation with a view toward determining how to restore the balance.

One means that has occurred to the chairman of the committee, Senator Warren G. Magnuson, Democrat of Washington, also has been talked about for some time among advertising men—the setting up of an Office of International Travel and Tourism.

The ofice, much in the manner of similar offices in other countries, would encourage tourists to visit and leave currency behind.

Yesterday, Richard L. Scheidker, senior vice president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, testified before the committee in support of an advertising program to encourage overseas visitors to the United States.

Ads Are Shown

Also yesterday, David Ogilvy, president of Ogilvy, Benson & Mather, shhowed the senators a series of advertisements his agency had drawn to encourage tourism in the United States. He had first presented the campaign before last year's meeting of the A. A. A. A.

As he had done before the meeting of the A. A. A. A., Mr. Ogilvy offered to donate the layouts to whatever advertising agency was eventually appointed to handle the campaign.

"One word of warning," Mr. Ogilvy [illegible] the senators. "When the time comes for the new Office [illegible] International Travel and Tourism to advertise in foreign countries, I suggest that those concerned should be careful not to put anything into their advertisements, which could hurt the image of the United States.

"Indeed, they should try to create advertising, which will improve that image.

"For example, it would be tactless to run advertisements boasting about the material wealth of the United States—however attractive that might be to tourists. I suggest that it would be just as productive, and far wiser, for the advertising to emphasize the physical beauty of the American landscape, the disarming friendliness of the inhabitants, and their spiritual values."

the cost of such a tourist campaign would cost the United States about $1,362,000 a year for space, roughly $2,000,000 by the time all other costs were added.

This figure he said, represented the cost of one fighter airplane.

Beer and Music

The music recording business, which has discovered that the packaging of its albums is at least as important as the music inside as far as sales are concerned, has another first coming up.

A handsome red and white checked box, four inches thick, holds in addition to two long-playing records of the Boston Pops Orchestra, two bright red beer mugs. The mugs are inscribed with the seal of RCA-Victor and the fact that the album marks the Seventy-fifth anniversary of the Boston Pops. In addition, the mug is inscribed with the crest of Anheuser-Busch, Inc., under which is the name Budweiser.

The name of the album is "Everything But the Beer." Presumably the man who gets the album will pop the recordings on his turntable, fill the bonus mug with beer (Budweiser, of course) and enjoy the beer and the music in the manner of the people who hear the Boston Pops in persor. at Boston's Symphony Hall.

There, people sit at tables and drink their beer while the band plays on.

The albums are going out to stores from the distributors and advertising will begin this week. Esquire, Time, The Saturday Review, the New Yorker, Hi-Fi Review, High Fidelity and Schwann, a monthly record catalogue, have been scheduled for two-color insertions and the advertisement will also appear in black and white in The New York Times.

Grey Advertising, Inc., is the agency for RCA-Victor records.

Budweiser is distributing displays to its dealers; RCA-Victor is doing the same and the word has been passed out from the headquarters of the two organizations for dealers to cooperate with each other.

In view of the novelty of the packaging (it is possible to see the beer mugs through cellophane windows on top of the album cover) and the extensive promotion and advertising plans, RCA-Victor is anticipating lively sales and is sending out one of the largest initial orders in Red Seal history.

*

Across the River

Beginning this week, the Long Island City Savings Bank, through its agency, Lynn Baker, Inc., will start a series of six full-page institutional advertisements in The New York Times.

The campaign is unusual for a savings bank. It makes no mention of interest rates, gifts for opening accounts or even how wise it is to save money. Instead, the six advertisements parade the virtues of Queens as a place to live and work.

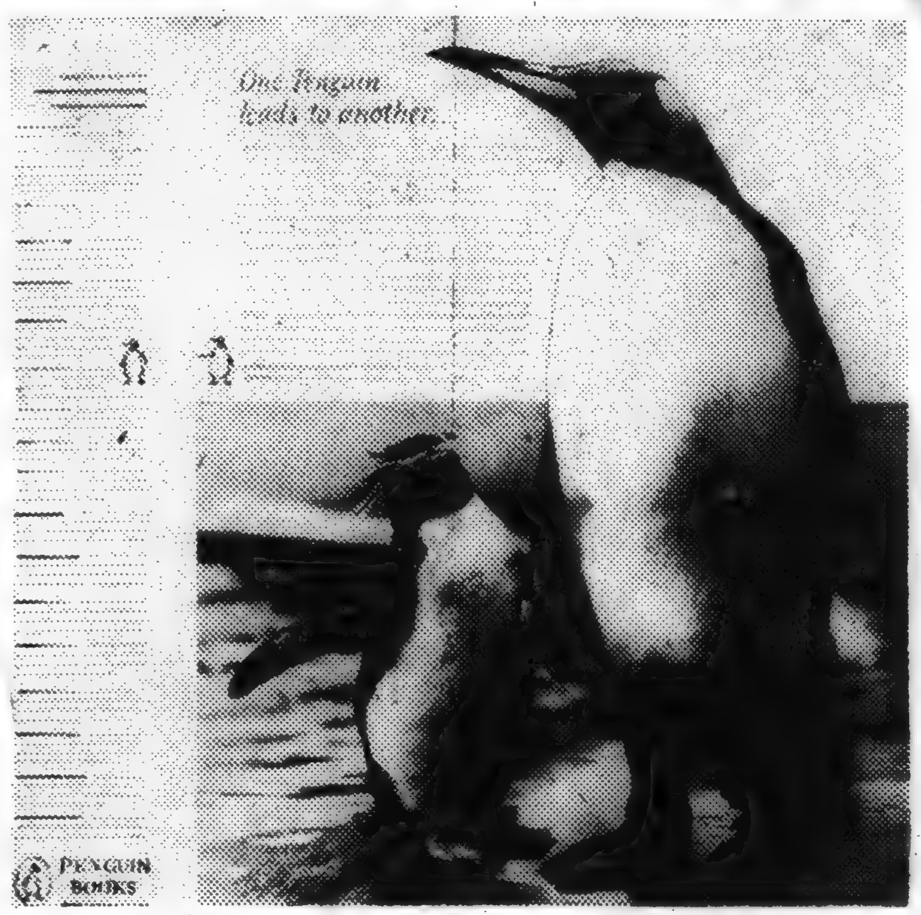
The first advertisement shows a mother, father and child on the Queens side of the East River gazing across at the Manhattan skyline. "Ever wonder how Manhattan looks from the other side of the river?" the headline asks.

"It's a magical sight, Manhattan's skyline from the Battery to the United Nations. Wonderful restaurants over there. Good theatres, too. Stores stocked with everything that any one could want. A glamorous, exciting island that makes us glad to be its neighbor," says the advertisement, answering its own question.

The advertisement then goes on to talk about Queens and of the role that the bank plays in the borough.

Running concurrently with this institutional campaign will be a series of 700 line advertisements to be placed in Long Island newspapers with the theme "Save Now, Pay Less Later." These will be closer to the kind of advertising usually associated with savings banks.

Penguins Put to Work for Books



One Penguin leads to another.
PENGUIN BOOKS

The Penguins are on the march.

Penguin Books has started a campaign whose feature is the stately and eye-catching penquin to push the sale of its paperback books. The advertising, placed by Sussman & Sugar, Inc., is appearing in The New York Times Book Review and the New Yorker.

The above insertion is scheduled for the June 19 issue of The Times Book Review.

The headlines accompanying the art work pretty much tell a story of penguins: "No Penguin is an island." "'Can there be too many Penguins?" And one showing a group of penguins gathered outside a housewife's door, saying in chorus: "Madam, we're working our way through college."

The campaign is believed to be the most extensive to date on behalf of higher-price (65 cents to $1.95) paperback books.

Olivia Trager and Peter Nord appointed senior copy writers at Hicks & Greist, Inc.

Walter McNiff elected vice president of the Television Bureau of Advertising. He is director of the bureau's Western division.

Harmon H. Woodworth appointed advertising and public relations manager of Rand McNally & Co.

Gerald J. Levey has joined Cortez F. Enloe, Inc., as an account executive .

Addenda

¶The semiconductor division of Sylvania Electric Products, Inc., has consolidated its advertising, sales promotion and merchandising activities into a single department. David B. Tolins, the division's manager of advertising and sales promotion, will head the department . . . . ¶Arthur H. Motley, president of Parade Publications, will receive the 1960 Bronze Plaque of Achievement of the Advertising Club of New York. The award will be made at a special luncheon on May 18 in the club's headquarters . . . . ¶The Advertising Research Foundation, Inc., has released to its members a 1960 consumer analysis of the Greater Milwaukee market. The study is the first veys of buying habits and brand use made with the foundation's cooperation . . . ¶James B. Moore has been elected president of the Long Island Public Relations Association. Mr. Moore is director of information of the Fairchild Camera and Instrument Corporation.

Accounts

Potter Instrument Company to Donaldson Associates, Inc., Huntington, L. I.

Lambda Electronics to Michel-Cather, Inc.

Electrical Engineering magazine, publication of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, to the Fred Wittner Company.

General Preserve Company, Inc., to Charles W. Hoyt Company, Inc., for Honeydew preserves.

Cepelia Galleries, a center for folk arts and crafts, to Ralph D. Gardner Advertising.

Softique, Inc., to Beckert & Bradley, Inc., for Softique beauty bath oil.

Fitzgerald Brothers Brewing Company to Woodard, Voss & Hevenor, Inc., Albany.

Massey-Ferguson, tractor manufacturer, to Lambe & Robinson-Benton & Bowles, Ltd., London, for advertising in the United Kingdom. Needham, Louis & Brorby, Inc., handles the company's United States advertising.

People

Richard M. Dunn has joined Wade Advertising, Inc., Chicago, as director of broadcasting. He had been with Compton Advertising, Inc.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 179,169
MAY 4 1960

Jap Prince Hails Hub Orchestra

TOKYO (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra made its Tokyo debut today under the baton of Charles Munch to an enthuswiastic applause from Crown Prince Akihito and his wife, Princess Michiko, among a selected audience of 600.

The 70 minute concert was broadcast to the nation over the radio and television network of the Japanese Broadcasting Corp. from its new TV auditorium.

Circ. [illegible],815

APR 30 1960

Boston Orchestra Given Praise at Taipei Concert

TAIPEI (AP)—The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its Far East tour was given here Friday and won praise from listeners and critics.

Demand for tickets far outran the capacity of the Japanese-built city hall theater. It was crammed with a standing room only audience.

The orchestra will give another concert today, then leave Sunday for a 29-day stay in Japan before going to the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

NEW RED BOOKS SET

---

können

~~Staats-Zeitung~~ 4/13/60

Die Boston Symphony im Fernen Osten

Nach Abschluß der diesjährigen Saison wird das Boston Symphonieorchester unter Charles Munch eine achtwöchige Gastspielreise durch Japan und zu anderen Nationen des Fernen Ostens unternehmen.

Das erste Konzert dieser ausgedehnten Tour wird am 27. April in Seoul, Korea, gegeben, wo noch ein zweites Konzert geplant ist. Anschließend werden die Bostoner in 16 japanischen Städten konzertieren. Für Ende Mai und Anfang Juni sind drei Konzerte in Manila angesetzt, dann geht es weiter nach Australien und Neuseeland.

Am 19. Juni wird das Orchester nach Boston zurückkehren.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,909

MAY 5 1960

(AP Wirephoto)

FLOWERS FOR BOSTON MUSICIANS—Japanese girls present flowers to Director Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Tokyo, as well as to other members of the entourage on five-nation tour.

Asahi Evening News, May 3, 1960

第3種郵便物認可

Boston Symphony Opens Tour Here At NHK, May 4th

By Hans E. Pringsheim

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the world's oldest and most famous orchestras, will open its 22-concert tour of Japan with a special radio and television concert from NHK Hall at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, May 4, under the baton of its music director, Charles Munch.

In the course of its four-week visit to Japan, which is sponsored by the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (20 concerts) and the Osaka International Festival Society (two concerts), the orchestra will play in Tokyo, Osaka, Kyoto, Nagoya, Yokohama, and 11 other cities.

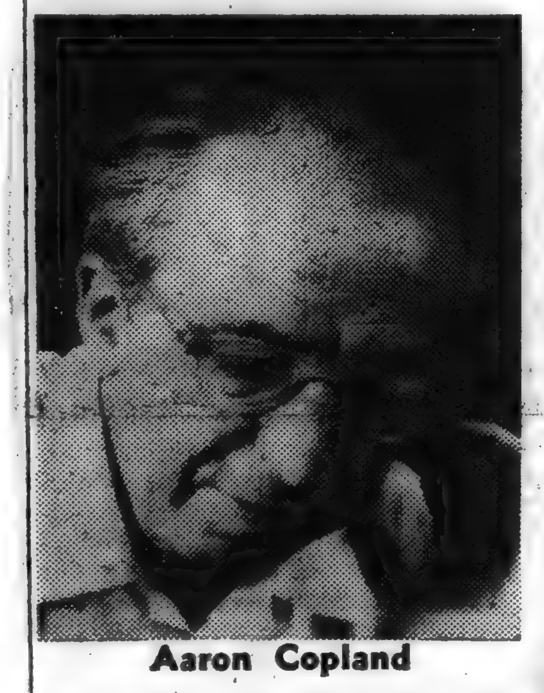
Arranged under President Eisenhower's Fund for International Cultural Presentations, the present tour of Japan is part of a Far Eastern tour which takes in altogether five countries: Taiwan, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

The orchestra's visit to Japan partly marks the 100th anniversary of the formal opening of diplomatic relations between Japan and the United States, and partly celebrates the 35th anniversary of the start of radio broadcasting in Japan by the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK).

In keeping with the mission of the orchestra's tour under the International Cultural Presentations project, contemporary American music is included in each of the six programs which make up the tour repertory.

The noted composer Aaron Copland, who will conduct five of the 22 concerts scheduled in Japan, will introduce two of his own compositions: his First Symphony, and the orchestra suite from his opera, "The Tender Land."

Other American composers and their works to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are: Walter Piston, Symphony No. 6; Samuel Barber, Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance; Dello Joio, Variations, Chaconne, and Finale; Blackwood, Symphony No. 1, and Kirchner, Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds, and Percussions.

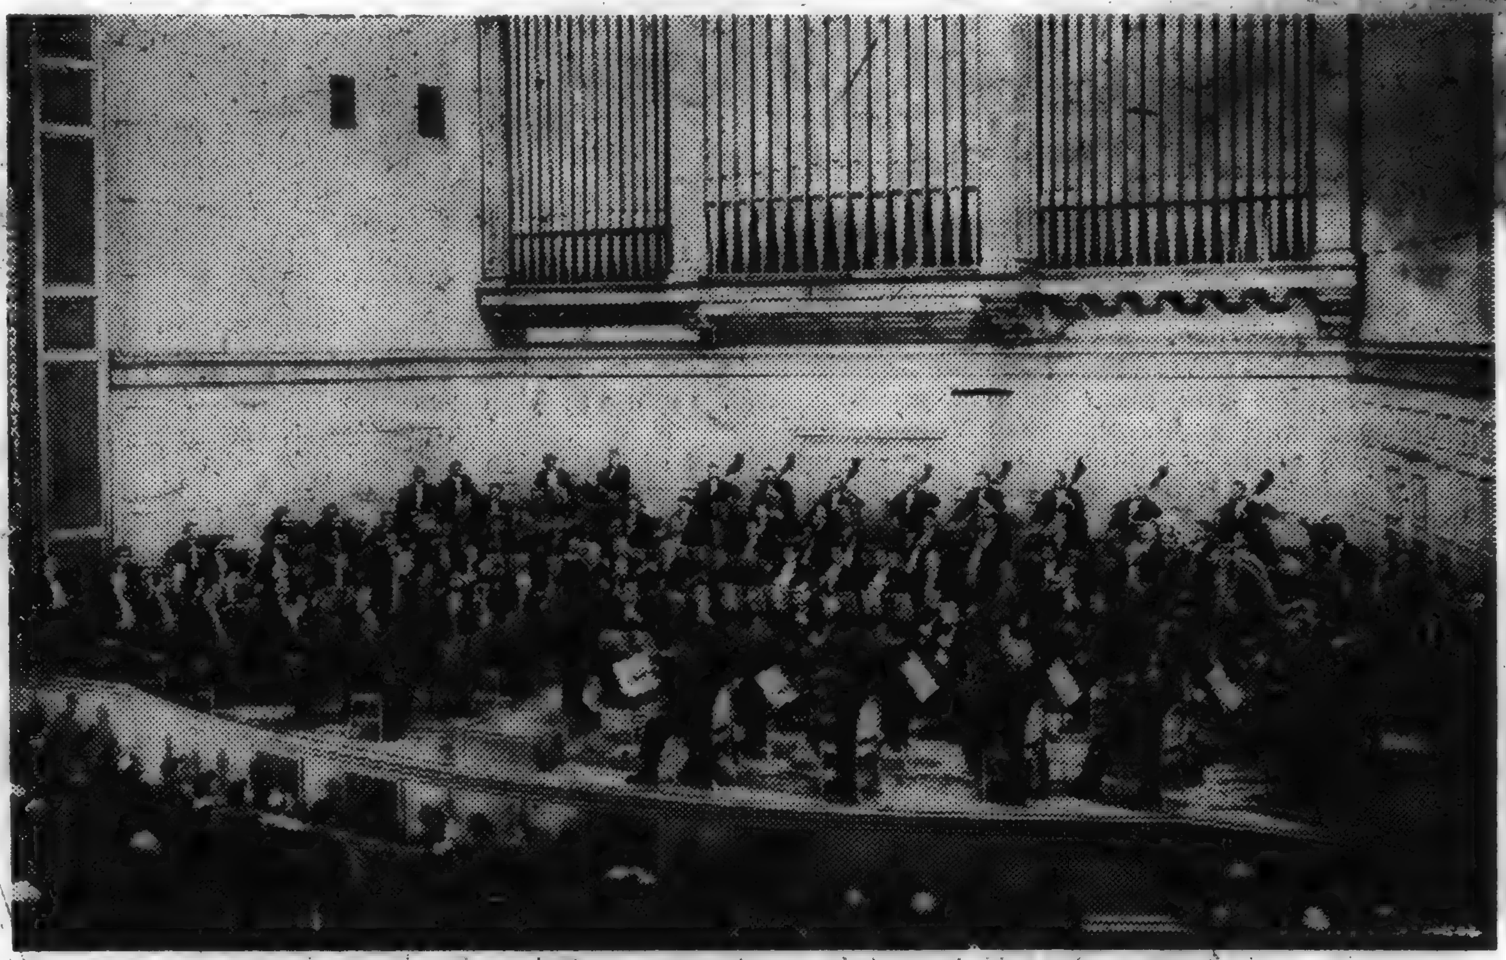


Aaron Copland

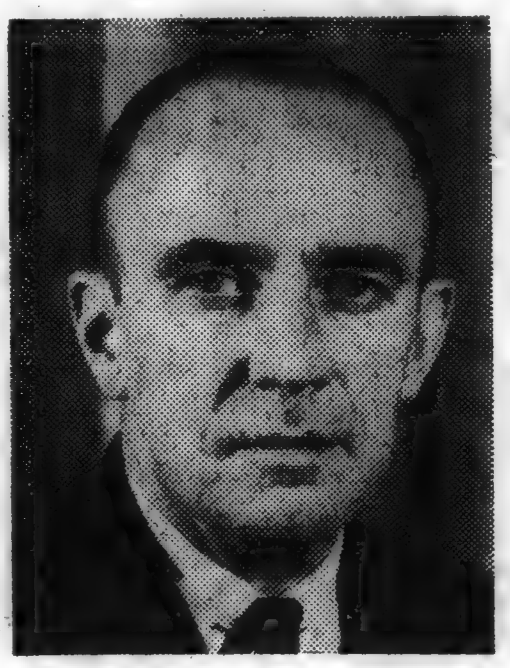
Charles Munch, who will conduct four of the six different programs, has also included the following classic and modern works in his tour repertory: Beethoven's Third and Fifth Symphonies; the "Fantastic Symphony" of Hector Berlioz; the Second Symphony of Brahms; Roussel's Suite No. 2 from "Bacchus et Ariane;" Debussy's "La Mer;" Ravel's Suite No. 2 from "Daphnis et Chloe," and excerpts from the Third Act of Wagner's opera, "The Meistersingers of Nuernberg."

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor and concert master, will conduct one program which contains the Adagio from Gustav Mahler's Posthumous Symphony No. 10, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, in adition to the Kirchner Toccata.

Aaron Copland, in addition to his own compositions, will present three of Purcell's Fantasias for Strings, and Haydn's Symphony No. 95 in C minor.



The Boston Symphony Orchestra plays to a full audience.



One hundred years ago this month, the reception of Lord Shimmi's mission by President Buchanan in the White House opened formal diplomatic relations between Japan and the United States. This historic event also signaled the beginning of a cultural interchange between our two peoples which has steadily grown in breadth and intensity to the present day. Thus, as a part of this Centennial celebration, it gives me the greatest pleasure to welcome to Japan the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a symbol of the sincere respect which America accords to the cultural relations between our two countries.

The Boston Symphony itself is only 21 years short of its own centennial. Since its founding in 1881, it has become one of the world's greatest orchestras, its excellency recognized equally in Japan as in the United States and Europe. After two highly-successful European tours, it is both timely and appropriate that the Boston Symphony and its renowned music director, Charles Munch, now meet their Japanese friends in person.

I know that my fellow Americans who come here as members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will enjoy the finest traditions of Japanese hospitality. And I know as well that you, the listeners, will recognize a great response to this hospitality in the splendor of the music of this great orchestra.

Douglas MacArthur II
United States Ambassador to Japan

WE of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are honored to be in Japan during the 100th anniversary celebration of diplomatic relations between our two countries. On behalf of the members of the orchestra, I wish to extend warm greetings to the people of Japan. It is my wish that we are helping to inaugurate, through the common language of music, a second hundred years of friendship, understanding and goodwill between Japan and the United States of America.

Charles Munch
Music Director

During rehearsal, Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, checks a musical point with Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master of the Orchestra since 1920.

56

The Yomiuri
May 4, 1960

Much Rich Musical Fare For Tokyo Audiences

By Edmund C. Wilkes

And still the invasion of the musicians continues, with the climax of certainty to be this week with the Boston Symphony's first concert.

But the Osaka Festival's overflow and the solo recitals of Ruggiero Ricci and Japan's own Takahiro Sonoda were in themselves outstanding events.

The concert by the Spanish, or more correctly Basque harpist Nicanor Zabaleta showed him to be a virtuoso on an instrument that, played even so faultlessly, seems a bit thin in musical values for a whole evening. Mr Zabaleta is proud that his programs present the pure music composed expressly for the harp, and he is to be praised that he does not follow the example of various fellow (or more likely, lady) harpists who pad their programs out with transcriptions of "Clair de Lune" and Chopin nocturnes.

The program, widely altered from that announced, contained a noble Pavane and Variations by the sixteenth century Spanish Cabezon, a pretty sonata by the French composer Mehul, a fairly conventional Air and Variations by Handel, a sonata by the Bohemian Dussek, which called for real virtuosity and received it, a modern sonata (1957) by Germaine Tailleferre which strove to find new color possibilities for the instrument but had little of importance to say, and some pieces by Faure and others.

Let me not give the impression that Zabaleta is not a great player, it is just that to my mind the glassy ripplings of the harp are best heard either as it imparts color to the symphonic repertoire or, as in the radio broadcast which Zabaleta performed with the NHK Orchestra in a harp concerto by Handel. Pity he could not have teamed up with Hayashi Ruriko for the Mozart Concerto for Flute and Harp.

Takahiro Sonoda is rapidly becoming the Horowitz of Japan. Like him he has a tremendous technical facility and an intellectual keenness that makes his every appearance an event. As was said of Goldsmith, "He touches nothing that he does not adorn."

He appeared last week in recital to an audience that nearly filled Hibiya Hall, and that in these crowded days in something that indicates surely that he is a hero to his public. His program opened with Haydn's Sonata No 49, almost the last of the series and therefore one of the most interesting. It was not unlike Beethoven in his first period with a truly lovely adagio cantabile done [illegible] fine style by Mr Sonoda.

Schumann's "Fantasia" in which, under the guise of a tribute to Beethoven, he hymned his love of Clara Wieck, is a tremendous work of passionate intensity and brooding invention. Its prodigious difficulties were child's play to Mr Sonoda. In the most intricate passage work I detected no blurring. It was all clean, but it lacked the ultimate grow of pure poetry, deep insight and heart that some players bring it. Mr Sonoda will play this better when he has lived with it longer. The "Triumphal Arch" he erects grandly now; the "Wreath of Stars" he will weave better then.

Debussy's "Images, Set I" was played with much imagination and color and the concert ended with the preludes of Chopin in a nearly faultless performance in which technique was well mated to poetic feeling.

Another good house turned out for the first recital in Tokyo of the American violinist, Ruggiero Ricci. Perhaps they knew from his year of making superb records for London that here was the man whose Beethoven Concerto was for long held by many critics as the best to be had, whose astonishing performances of Paganini concertos and caprices were lessons in virtuosity. Anyway they came to hear a program of taxing pieces that left no one in doubt of Ricci's position in the forefront of violinists.

He opened with Tartini's "Devil's Trill" Sonata which combines some forthright tunes with fiendishly difficult trill passages and double-stopping and such acrobatics as separate the men from the boys. There was no question where Mr Ricci belongs.

Cesar Franck's beautiful Sonata in A Major is overplayed. Nearly every visiting violinist for the last two or three years has done it. Still it is a masterwork, and with Carlo Bussotti, whom many of us recall as the able accompanist for Szigeti some seasons ago, Mr Ricci immersed himself in the poetic and dramatic values of the work and gave it one of the most fine-grained performances in memory. The wistful questioning of the first movement's dialogue was not overstated by the violinist, as we heard it once not too long ago, but kept in perfect balance, lending all the more fire to the passionate second movement by contrast. The recitative of the fantasia was like an improvisation; one seemed to be hearing this music for the first time, and the canon was joyous and triumphant as it should be.

Mr Ricci, and equally Mr Bussotti, were well able to justify the inclusion of the sonata once more. I had asked, "Why the Franck again? Why not a Grieg sonata, Faure or Lekeu or any one else?" but they answered my question.

Prokofiev's Sonata in D Major, Opus 115 for violin alone was a comparative novelty and a relief from the overworked Chaconne. Its first movement is in classic form, a little dry in substance, but worked out with typical Prokofiev wit and elegance. A set of variations of folk character and a rondo finale made this little work, if no masterpiece, yet a useful exercise in violinistics.

Bartok's Suite of Rumanian Folk Dances were colorfully done and their technical problems were tossed off lightly. They are in the most popular vein for Bartok, but that does not mean that they are easy to play.

The last half hour of the recital was one of virtuosity exemplified. Today we are apt to look down our noses at Paganini, Sarasate and the other exhibitionists of the violin literature. They are the Liszts of this instrument. Yet audiences frankly love these whirlwind pieces with their seemingly diabolical bowings and pluckings. Mr Ricci chose better in this area than did, say, Mr Kogan or young Mr Oistrakh. His "Moses Fantasy" and three caprices of Paganini had some validity as music, perhaps as much as many other sets of variations, acceded to by more "refined" tastes.

Certainly he played them with fastidious workmanship and with uncanny accuracy. He was rewarded with bravos and with a refusal to leave until he had added four encores.

The Boston Symphony

The music lovers of this city — and their number is increasing with the passing of each year — will have the opportunity to hear beginning tonight one of the world's greatest musical organizations: the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra will play a series of three concerts under the auspices of Alfredo Lozano, who is working in cooperation with the International Cultural Program of the United States government for the current musical festival.

The Boston Symphony has won world renown not only for the catholicity of its programs but also for the superb artistry of its men and conductors. In its Philippine engagement, the orchestra will be led by its musical director, Dr. Charles Munch, and two guest conductors: Richard Burgin and Aaron Copland, the famous American composer.

Needless to say, the affair of the next three nights is a cultural event of tremendous significance, for it will enable those to whom good music has become indispensable to catch a glimpse of that perfection which can be found in the works of the masters as played by an orchestra of the fame of the Boston Symphony.

But more than this, the performances here of the Boston Symphony will give the Filipinos another chance to become acquainted with the more enduring aspects of American culture and civilization. For the Boston Symphony and some of the works it will play are product of America's striving toward beauty and truth.

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 600,319

MAY 6 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY HAILED IN TOKYO

First Concert for Japanese General Public Cheered—2 French Works Played

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to The New York Times.

TOKYO, May 5—Japanese audiences don't often cheer. They don't think it is polite. But tonight an audience was carried away. It cheered the Boston Symphony.

The occasion was the orchestra's first concert for Japan's general public. It was given at Hibiya Hall, a wide auditorium with a single balcony, which seats almost 2,400 and occupies a position in Tokyo's musical life comparable to Carnegie Hall in New York.

The hall was packed. Young people predominated in the audience, even though the tickets ranged from 800 to 2,500 yen. This is high by Tokyo standards, for translated into dollars it ranges from $2.25 to $7.00. But obviously the enthralled young people felt that the money, so carefully saved for the tickets, was well spent.

Charles Munch, the conductor, gave them two rousing showpieces from the French repertory, Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique" and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2. Both were cheered. There was also warmth in the applause for the American work that came between them, Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony.

Group in Superb Form

The orchestra was in superb form, and the acoustical properties of the hall were kind to its sound. Thus no matter how fervently Mr. Munch exhorted his musicians to play in the climaxes—and they responded for all they were worth—the fortes were never overdriven or brassy. The full-voiced sonorities were wonderful. Probably there were many in the audience who had never heard such waves of thrilling orchestral sound.

The concert was in sharp contrast with the one offered to an invited audience last night in the NHK studio. There the hall was over-reverberant and the orchestra did not sound like its usual self—at least not to a visitor accustomed to hearing it in Carnegie Hall.

There was a good deal of favorable comment on the studio concert, nevertheless. Unison sonorities of such power are almost unknown in Japan. Many commented especially on how stirring their own national anthem sounded when played by such strings and such brasses. It had a similarly moving effect tonight.

Both Anthems Played

Again it was followed by "The Star Spangled Banner" and, as at the studio, the flags of the United States and Japan hung side by side at the back of the stage. At the climax of the Berlioz, with the Boston brass players sitting nine abreast in front of those flags, it was as brave a sight to see as to hear.

Japanese royalty was present at this concert, too. Last night the members of the Imperial family were Crown Prince Akihito and Crown Princess Michiko. Tonight it was Prince Takamatsu, the younger brother of the Emperor.

After the Roussel one thought that perhaps Mr. Munch had concentrated too much on orchestral virtuosity at the expense of depth of content. But in response to the continuing applause, he varied the fare by a sudden change of mood in an encore. It was the gentle air from Handel's "Water Music."

Still, the audience had not had enough. The orchestra played a jaunty allegro from the "Water Music" as a second encore. Mr. Munch saw that the bouquets brought to the stage by two girls in kimonos went to Richard Burgin, the concertmaster, and Joseph de Pasquale, the first violist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 26,702

MAY 5 1960

BSO ON TV

Charles Munch conducts a full-length concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Cha[illegible] Tuesday, May 10 at 8:30 p.m. Taped earlier this season at Sanders Theatre, the concert includes Mozart's Symphony No. 38 ("Prague"); Copland's Suite from "The Tender Land" and Beethoven's 5th Symphony. The telecast is the first in a summer series of complete Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts video-taped during the past season.

57

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)

ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋２－８第一生命分館
電話京橋（561）９４３１（代表）

新聞切抜

ASAHI EVENING NEWS (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY - 6 1960

Osaka Int'l Festival: 63

Boston Symphony Will Play Tomorrow

By Hans E. Pringsheim

The Boston Symphony Orchestra left Tokyo by train Friday morning for Osaka, where it will give two concerts at the Festival Hall.

The first will be conducted by Aaron Copland, contemporary American composer, from 7 p.m. on Saturday. The second concert, from 7 p.m. on Sunday, will be conducted by Charles Munch and will be the closing event of the 1960 Osaka International Festival.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of 22 concerts in Japan had a grandiose start Wednesday night with the initial program under the baton of Charles Munch at the NHK Hall.

It was a closed performance presented before a select group of invited guests only; but music lovers in all Japan took part in this event, which was broadcast simultaneously over the nationwide radio and television networks of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK).

Their Imperial Highnesses the Crown Prince, Crown Princess, and Prince Yoshi attended the concert in the company of the NHK President and Mrs. Hideo Nomura and American Ambassador and Mrs. Douglas MacArthur II. Many other members of the diplomatic corps and noted figures of the Japan public life were among the guests.

Aaron Copland, a guest conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived in Tokyo Thursday by NWA. The Orchestra is now visiting Japan on a performance tour.

Asahi Eve. News

Beethoven's Third Symphony, "Eroica," started the program proper, followed by the "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2 of Ravel. It was the only of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's programs here not presenting a work of contemporary American music.

Mr. Munch, the orchestra's musical director, is a conductor whom it is a delight to watch. His direction is precise, his authority over the orchestra is absolute, and the orchestra's response is marvelous. The playing of the Eroica was memorable, even though the sound of NHK Hall is designed more for ideal broadcasting acoustics than for the pleasure of listeners in the hall itself.

By recompensation, one is able to watch the conductor and the individual players and groups on the TV monitor screen and thus get a much more direct impression of the performance than one is normally able to get in a live concert. Using as many as five television cameras, NHK did a superb job in presenting the orchestra and conductor on the screen.

The orchestra gave its first public concert Thursday night before a large audience at the Hibiya Public Hall.

The Japan Times
May 5, 1960

Crown Prince Akihito and Princess Michiko attended a special performance of the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra held at the NHK Hall, Uchisaiwai-cho, Chiyoda-ku, last night. Prince Yoshi was also present. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was invited by the NHK (Japan Broadcasting Corporation) to make a series of performances here to commemorate the centenary of the opening of diplomatic relations between Japan and the United States.

Asahi Evening News
May 7, 1960

Boston Symphony Greeted in Osaka

The noted American composer Aaron Copland arrived in Osaka with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening to conduct the first of the orchestra's two concerts at the Festival Hall on Saturday.

Mr. Copland will present his own First Symphony and suite from the opera, "The Tender Land," in addition to works by Purcell and Haydn.

The Festival's closing concert on Sunday will be conducted by Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with a program of Beethoven, Piston and Ravel.

Asked by reporters here to describe the trend of his recent compositions, Aaron Copland said that even though he had used the 12-tone technique of musical composition in one of his latest work, a Fantasie for piano, this did not mean that he had become a 12-tone composer.

"I don't like to be tied down to any particular system of composition," he said. "I like to be free to write my music exactly as I please."

Mr. Copland came to Japan almost directly from the Soviet Union, which he had toured with another noted American composer, Lucas Foss. He spent a few days concertizing in England on his way from Russia to Japan.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony, said the American musicians were delighted to perform in Osaka for Japanese music lovers.

"We hope we shall be successful, but also hope that the time will come when Japan will send a symphony orchestra to the United States so that we may show them our approciation of the wonderful reception we have been given in Japan."

Orchestra Manager Thomas Perry said the reaction of the audience to the orchestra's first Hibiya Hall concert on Thursday was "a demonstration of spontaneous and direct appreciation."

A top member of the orchestra, viola player Joseph de Pasquale, praised the Japanese audience for being very quiet and attentive, and knowing when to applaud and when not —even more so than American audiences, he added.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

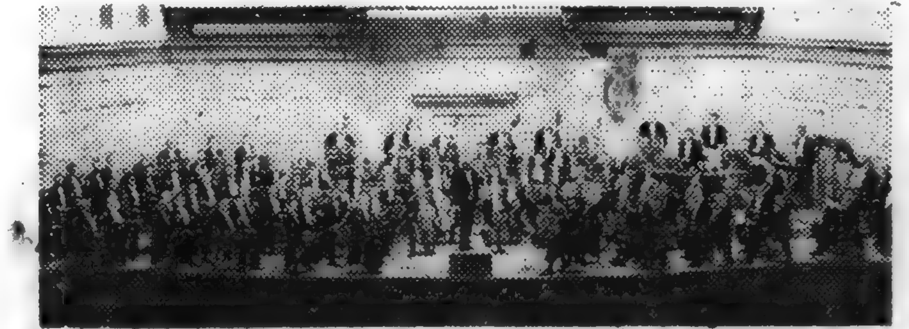
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

MAY 6 1960

Symphony Abroad

ONCE again, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is on a tour of one-night stands in a mission of international good will. And once again, it is proving that among men of widely different cultures and tongues music can be a language of universal understanding.

The Japanese people—whether they are among the thousands lucky enough to have tickets for one of the concerts or among the millions relying on TV and radio—are well aware that they are hearing one of the world's finest orchestras.



The performances tell them so, and so does the intense competition among Japanese organizations to become sponsors of the concerts.

Excitement over the orchestra's appearances runs high throughout Japan, greatly enhancing the tour's value as a gesture of American friendship.

Of no less interest to us, of course, is the enormous prestige that redounds to Boston as the home city of these messengers of music and mutual understanding.

The Mainichi
May 2, 1960

MUSIC CALENDAR

BY Jack Hirano

Charles Munch

The impending tour of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Maestro Charles Munch is bound to make history in Japan's musical life. They are heading a galaxy of foreign artists converging on Japan from all over the world for the Third Osaka International Festival which is being held in Osaka until the middle of this month.

Before that, the famous American troupe, coming in full strength of 110 musicians, will open a series of appearances in Tokyo at Hibiya Hall Thursday, May 5, beginning at 6.30 p.m.

Generally recognized as one of the world's foremost symphony organizations, the Boston Symphony's glorious history is closely connected with the permanent leadership of some of the greatest conductors of our time, George Henschel, Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, Emil Paur, Karl Much, Max Fiedler, Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteux and Sergei Koussevitzky. The lofty tradition those giants created is more than upheld, and the line of their immortal names is continued by Munch whose brilliant name and musical personality is already known here through discs.

Maestro Munch will be in charge of musical direction of half of their appearances, to be given by the orchestra in the course of its three-week Japanese tour. Their program for the first evening is made up by Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique Op. 14, Dello-Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2 Op. 43.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAY 6 1960

To Change the Subject:

From Battlefield to Flower Garden . . . . By J. Emlyn Williams

Bonn, Germany

"The last time I was in the Saar," said a German friend of mine recently, "I went there at the command of Hitler to help build the Westwall. Then it was more or less slave labor. I was one of the thousands of unemployed young men for whom work was found instead of going 'stempeln' (clocking in at the labor exchange). At that time, I had just got married and had to leave my wife behind me in Frankfurt. This time, she and our two children—now grown up—were with me."

My friend had been to Saarbrücken again recently visiting relatives, and took the opportunity to go to a spot not far from that city where he had been working. But what a difference! The Westwall was the line of defense which the Nazis hurriedly built on that part of the French-German frontier to which the Maginot Line did not extend. Where formerly bunkers and lookout posts had dominated the situation, there were now flowers and shrubs. Where formerly French and Germans had fought in battle in 1870, 1914, and 1939, they were now cooperating in peace and friendship.

For the occasion was the opening of the new garden exhibition on the Spicherer Hoehe, and more than 3,000 French and Germans attended the ceremony.

* * *

Both the French and West German Ministers of Agriculture spoke of the new future "already begun" as they stood before a German man and a French woman, the one representing Michael and the other Marianne, the symbols of the two participating nations. Michael was decked out in German national colors, and Marianne in French. The Roman Catholic Bishop of Lourdes and the German Protestant Bishop Otto Dibelius both spoke of their countrymen's determination to maintain peace in Europe and in the world, as they laid wreaths on the French war memorial nearby.

Some relics of the Westwall fortifications still remain—those which resisted postwar attempts to blow them up. But their ugliness has largely disappeared, transformed by the flowers and shrubs. Three bunkers serve as places of refreshment for visitors to the exhibition. The organizers have chosen a spot which is not only symbolically significant, but also beautiful in itself, and suitable for such a show.

* * *

And the layout of the gardens offers an interesting example of the big difference between French and German ideas. The former tend to much more formal and exact presentation, while the latter are much more informal. There are some 275,000 crocuses, narcissi, and tulips, 170,000 flowering bushes and 15,000 French and 12,000 German roses among the exhibits. (Holland has contributed 100,000 tulips.)

The United States has also played its part in practical help for this venture, in that it has presented a prefabricated exhibition hall. And the United States Ambassador in Bonn, Walter C. Dowling, paid an official visit to the exhibition. In addition, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will participate in the cultural program during the next few months. This will also include performances by the Comédie Française, the Vienna State Opera Ballet, etc.

The exhibition, it is estimated, will cost 6,500,000 Marks (more than $1,500,000). It will be paid for from funds supplied by the West German Federal Republic, France and the Saar.

This exhibition is not an example of turning swords into plowshares, but of battlefields into gardens. And the press on both sides of the frontier have echoed Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's hopes in his greetings to the exhibition that the flowers and trees there planted will be a symbol of French-German cooperation.

Fritz Mittelstädt, Saarbrücken

Saarbrücken Spring

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,073

MAY 7 1960

Pay Tribute to Boston Symphony

TOKYO (UPI)—The Japan Times paid high tribute today to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is playing a series of concerts in Japan. In an article written by Marcel Grilli, its music and drama critic, the newspaper said "No musical gift could have been more appropriate" to help Japan and the U.S. celebrate the 100th anniversary of formal relations.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,075

MAY 6 1960

TOKYO GIVES OVATION TO BOSTON SYMPHONY

By ROSS PARMENTER
[The New York Times News Service]

TOKYO—Japanese audiences don't often cheer. They don't think it is polite. But Thursday night a Japanese audience got carried away. It cheered the Boston Symphony.

The occasion was the orchestra's first concert for Japan's general public. It was given at Hibiya Hall, a wide auditorium with a single balcony, which seats almost 2,400 and occupies a position in Tokyo's musical life comparable to Carnegie Hall's in New York.

HALL PACKED

The hall was packed. Young people predominated even though the tickets ranged from $2.25 to $7, high prices by Tokyo standards. But the enthralled young people obviously felt the money was well spent.

Charles Munch, the conductor, gave them two rousing showpieces from the French repertory—Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique" and Roussell's "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2. Both were cheered. There was also warmth in the applause for an American work, Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony.

CHANGE OF MOOD

The orchestra was [illegible] superb form and the acoust[illegible] properties of the hall were [illegible] its sound. The fortes were [illegible] overdriven or brassy. [illegible] sonorities were w[illegible] ably there were m[illegible] dience who had never [illegible] waves of thrilling orchestral sound before.

After the Roussel, in response to the continuing applause, Munch varied the fare by a sudden change of mood in an encore. It was the gentle air from Handel's "Water Music." Still the audience had not had enough. The orchestra then played a jaunty allegro from the "Water Music" as a second encore.

The conductor saw that the bouquets brought to the stage by two girls in Kimonos went to Richard Burgin, the concert master, and Joseph de Pasquale, the first violinist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,770

MAY 6 1960

BSO Hailed In Tokyo

1st Public Concert Wins Cheers From Full House

TOKYO, Japan — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~in its first~~ Japanese public concert, received the applause of a capacity crowd of 2,400 here yesterday.

New York Times critic Ross Parmenter described the reception as follows:

"Charles Munch, the conductor, gave them two rousing showpieces from the French repertory, Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique" and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2. Both were cheered. There was also warmth in the applause for the American work that came between them, Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony.

"The orchestra was in superb form, and the acoustical properties of the hall were kind to its sound. Thus no matter how fervently Mr. Munch exhorted his musicians to play in the climaxes—and they responded for all they were worth—the fortes were never overdriven or brassy. The full-voiced sonorities were wonderful. Probably there were many in the audience who had never heard such waves of thrilling orchestral sound.

"The concert was in sharp contrast with the one offered to an invited audience last night (Wednesday) in the NHK studio. There the hall was over-reverberant and the orchestra did not sound like it usual self—at least not to a visitor accustomed to hearing it in Carnegie Hall."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

MAY 4 1960

Boston Symphony Applauded in Tokyo

TOKYO, May 4 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its tokyo debut today under the baton of Charles Munch to an enthusiastic applause from Crown Prince Akihito and his wife, Princess Michiko among a selected audience of 600.

Earlier disputes over scheduling and programming failed to dampen the audience's spirits.

The 70-minute concert was broadcast to the nation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 141,391

APR 27 1960

Hub Orchestra Lands in Tokyo

Tokyo—(Reuters)—The Boston ~~Symphony~~ Orchestra was joined by conductor Dr. Charles Munch and guest conductor Aaron Copland tonight when it stopped here for two hours en route to Taipei, Formosa, by plane.

The orchestra bypassed South Korea, where it had scheduled a series of concerts. The United States embassy in Seoul announced last week the visit was dropped because of political unrest there.

Globe 5/8/60

Japan Critic Lauds Boston Symphony

TOKYO, May 7 (UPI)—The Japan Times paid high tribute today to the [illegible] Symphony Orchestra, which is playing a series of concerts in Japan.

In an article written by Marcel Grilli, its music and drama critics, the newspaper said: "No musical gift could have been more appropriate" to help Japan and the United States celebrate the 100th anniversary of formal relations.

He termed the Boston Symphony "the most aristocratic, musically mature and technically distinguished of American symphonic ensembles."

He said the symphony, under Charles Munch, "exemplified an elegance and clarity of music-making in addition to its inique qualities of sonority, blend and balance."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 45,338

MAY 6 1960

Boston Symphony Attracts Packed House In Tokyo

TOKYO (Reuters) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night gave its second performance here to a packed house.

The orchestra, led by Charles Munch, played Symphonie Fantastique by Berlioz, Roussell's Bacchus Et Ariane and Piston's Sixth Symphony.

Prince Takamatsu, a younger brother of Emperior Hirohito, and Princess Takamatsu, watched tonight's concert.

The orchestra will appear next on Saturday, in Osaka, western Japan.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,026,850 S. 3,332,879

MAY 5 1960

Akihito at Concert

Tokyo, May 4 (Reuters).—Crown Prince Akihito and Princess Michiko tonight attended the opening performance by [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra.

60

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life Insurahce Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)

ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋2－8第一生命分館
電話京橋（561）9 4 3 1（代表）

新聞切抜

THE JAPAN TIMES (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY - 7. 1960 Ed

Speaking of Music . . .

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By MARCEL GRILLI

On this centenary year of Japan-United States relations no musical gift could have been appropriate than the current tour of this country by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch.

This auspicious visit of good-will and greater mutual understanding between the two nations has begun decisively enough. On Wednesday evening, Mr. Munch and his virtuoso ensemble electrified a specially invited audience in the NHK Hall with brilliantly executed performances of the Eroica Symphony of Beethoven and the second suite of Daphnis et Chloe by Ravel. On Thursday evening in Hibiya Hall, marking the orchestra's first public appearance in Tokyo, he missed none of the countless chances offered to virtuoso instrumental effects by the Symphonie Fantastique of Berlioz. It is beyond this reviewer's powers to assess the total impact brought to the untold numbers of nation-wide listeners over their radios and TV receiving sets on the first occasion, but it must have been of tremendous proportions judging by the extending applause and the unbounded cheering that greeted these musicians in their Hibiya Hall appearance. It was an unprecedented demonstration. Never before have I witnessed its like in the same hall, even when other major international orchestras have appeared here, to match this one in warmth, spontaneity and genuine gratitude.

The Japanese have had relatively few opportunities to make direct contact with major American orchestras. They know, of course, of the high degree of technical polish and of their virtuoso assurance, a knowledge derived largely through the medium of recordings. But meeting these Bostonians face to face has brought them a new and memorable experience. For, beyond all its viruoso capabilities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra provides one of those all-too-rare exquisite, civilized pleasures of music-making on the highest spheres. In every respect, it is the most aristocratic, musically mature and technically distinguished of American symphonic ensembles.

This phenomenon, to be sure, is as much the result of the orchestra's identity with the patrician traditions and cultural values of the community which has nourished it as of the continuity of musical directors who have guided its destinies.

Established almost eighty years ago by a most extraordinary public-spirited citizens, Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, this orchestra has not only enjoyed the distinction of being led by a galaxy of accomplished conductors — Henschel, Gericke, Nikisch, Paur, Fieldler, Muck, Rabaud, Monteux, Koussevitzky, Munch all of whom made musical history in Boston—but all these, in turn, enjoyed extended tenure of service.

The "Muck incident" at the time of America's participation in World War I ended an almost 40-year period of absolute Germanic dominancy to be succeeded by an equally brilliant phase of French influence. Rabaud was an interim figure who remained only one year; he was followed by Monteux who stayed until 1924 (at the venerable age of 85, he is still emeritus guest conductor). Koussevitzky, who died in 1951, held the podium for a splendid quarter-century, to be succeeded in 1949 by the present musical director, Mr. Munch.

The same feature of "permanency" applies to the instrumental ranks. Indeed, as I renewed my own acquaintance with this orchestra the other evening, I was happy to recognize among the young newcomers in its ranks the faces of many old friends Louis Speyer, the English horn player, for example, goes back to the days of Rabaud. This also includes the first flutist, James Pappoutsakis, Rosario Mazzeo, the bass clarinetist, and Richard Burgin, the concert-master and associate conductor, who came with Monteux. These instrumentalists have retained all their vigor, vitality and freshness.

On Wednesday evening, it was at once evident that the Boston Symphony, under Mr. Munch, exemplifies an elegance and clarity of music-making in addition to its unique qualities of sonority, blend and balance. The playing was swift, clear-cut and efficient; the attacks and the blending absolutely precise, yet the effect produced on the listener is never one of purely exhibiting a fine orchestra for its own glamorous sake.

The combined orchestral sound, whether in Beethoven or Berlioz, was perfectly clear and radiant; brilliance, under Mr. Munch, never becomes blatant. His Eroica was spacious in conception, warm in tone and supremely satisfying without any false melodramatic posturing. The music was allowed to rise freely and unstrained to all its wonderful climaxes; the articulation of the phrasing was never exaggerated. The music seemed aligned to the conductor's natural impulse—it was our pulses that were set madly racing—and the animated rhythm did not lack in intensity.

There was magnificence of expression and nuance in the slower passages. The "Funeral March" stirred the imagination as it developed to heroic grandeur. The music's urgency, the dynamic excitement, in short, the entire mechanics of orchestral articulation were effectively shaped by the conductor's keen sense of form and structure.

Ravel and Berlioz are Mr. Munch's special predilections. No one can touch him here, with the possible exception of a Monteux or a Beecham. This is music makes much of translating sensory and visual impressions into sound, and Mr. Munch impressed his hearers with the delicacy of his ear and his partiality for a rich, firm and velvety sound texture. An analysis of the depth of the Boston Symphony's tone calls for a separate treatment all to itself, as indeed does also the entire program of Berlioz, Piston and Roussel, showpieces for such an orchestra as this which cultivates niceties of dynamics as well as timbre.

For the nonce, let us end by saying that the sheer instrumental exuberance and the all-too-sumptuous sound of the final pages of the Danse Generale of Ravel completely overtaxed the open-stage and dry acoustics of the NHK Hall and that, even though somewhat cramped within the restricted confines of Hibiya Hall, the "Fantastique" made a far better effect. Old Major Higginson would have been gratified with the outburst of cheers that shook Hibiya Hall to its rafters . . . and so, too, would Koussevitzky!

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life Insurahce Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)

ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋2－8第一生命分館
電話京橋（561）9 4 3 1（代表）

新聞切抜

THE MAINICHI (Tokyo)

MAY - 8. 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Impresses Music Fans Here

By Jack Hirano

A large crowd of classical music lovers was deeply impressed by the outstanding directorship of Charles Munch Wednesday evening when he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the NHK TV Hall in Tokyo. This was the Boston Symphony's first stage appearance in Japan, and was an additional significant event in the nation's rapidly developing music history of recent days.

The orchestra performance was broadcast on radio ahd TV programs throughout the country after opening its curtain with the national anthems of the United States and Japan.

Maestro Munch presented performances of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2, which drew a storm of applause from the packed TV hall. The fine mixture of Munch's directorship and orchestra members' individual performances was so effective that it stirred the hearts of the music-loving people.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is well-known for its internationality. The former orchestra conductors were Austrian, German, French, Hungarian and Russian nationals of long musical tradition. They include George Henschel, Wilhelm Gericke, Karl Much, Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteux, Arthur Nickisch, Emil Paur, Max Fidler and Segei Koussevitzky. The orchestra is a symbol of completeness.

Conductor Munch was born in 1891 as a son of a famous musician, and received his music education in Germany and France. His direction is clear and intelligent, full of strength and passion.

This is one of the key points to understanding of the orchestra's recent recorded works now available in Japan, mostly those of Debussy, Berlioz, Wagner and Brahms from Germany and France.

Wednesday evening's performance reassured us that maestro Munch is more passionate and energetic than we had expected, especially when he presented what was called a "tremendous explosion of top music" of the world. His direction was clear and colorful.

The orchestra displayed an ideal interchange of sense and feeling between the conductor and orchestra members — a complete harmony.

The surprisingly beautiful harmony of both the string and wind instruments was shown the same evening when they staged Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2. "Here is music" was the general impression we received.

The Boston Symphony showed its deep interest and understanding of German compositions when Munch conducted Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 During the performance of "Daphnis et Chloe," the orchestra exhibited directness and liveliness of the music composed by the great Neo-Classical master of the early 20th century.

Maestro Munch, while conducting the Ravel work, drew listeners into a world of fantasy. The orchestra reproduced the picture of sunrise and chirping of birds with flutes and clarinets after symbolizing the whispering river theme with harps.

The most impressive scene of this Ravel masterpiece was the rich and clear blend of flutes which represented the song of love of Daphnis [illegible] Chloe. Such feelings were [illegible] due to the much-discussed fact that every player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, individually [illegible] good soloist.

BARRAULT

In 1936 Munch was appointed a professor at the Ecole Normale de Musique in Paris. In 1938 he visited London and conducted the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra and the same year he succeeded Phillippe Gaubert as conductor of the Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire. Since 1945 he has been touring Europe and America extensively and in 1948

MISS LOPEZ

Stradivarius. And all the instruments had once been in possession of Paganini.

The quartet is proud of a wide repertoire ranging from baroque to contemporary music. But the feature of the quartet is Beethoven.

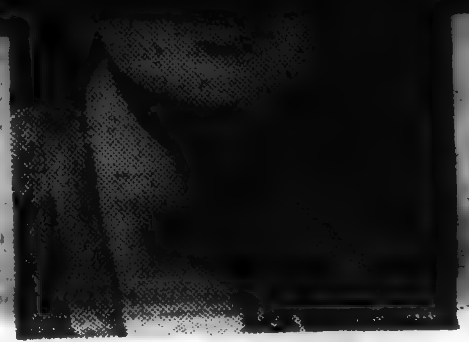
Their concerts are scheduled to be held on April 20 at the Festival Hall and April 25 at the Sankei Kaikan.

ZABALETA

erlied" (Swiss Song) .... Schubert

"Volkslied" (Little Song); "Der Nussbaum" (the Nut Tree); "Mondnacht" (Night of the Moon); "Auftrage" (Order) .... Schumann

"Es wiss und rat es doch keiner" (No one Knows); "Nachtlied" (Night Song); "Neue Liebe" (the New Lover); and "Wanderlied" (Wanderer's Song) .... Mendelssohn



MISS STADER

Kanagawa Prefecture, in 1860.

The visit of the ships to Japan led to the opening of Japanese ports and the signing of a Japan-U.S. treaty of trade and friendship.

The composer himself and Takashi Asahina will conduct the Kansai Symphony Orchestra with the cast provided by the Nikikai group, the Kansai Opera Co.

Come to

April 6—May 8

'60 OSAKA INTERNATIONAL FESTIVAL

THE CZECH CHAMBER ORCHESTRA	April 6, 7, 8, 18
MARIA STADER & HANS ERISMANN	April 9
HARPIST: NICANOR ZABALETA	April 11
ZABALETA HARP CONCERTO EVENING	April 13
JAPANESE OPERA "BLACK SHIPS"	April 15, 16, 17
THE PAGANINI STRING QUARTET	April 20, 25
SOPRANO: MARIA STADER	April 27
THEATRE de FRANCE RENAUD-BARRAULT "Baptiste," "Fausses Confidences" (April 23) "Misanthrope" (April 24), "Hamlet" (April 26) "Christophe Colomb" (April 28)	April 23, 24, 26, 28
SPANISH BALLET of PILAR LOPEZ	April 30, May 2, 5, 6
GRAND KOTO CONCERT	May 1
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA	May 7, 8

April 25 at the SANKEI KAIKAN   Others: at the FESTIVAL HALL

Make Reservations Now!

A limited number of good seats are still available

For further information contact:

OSAKA INTERNATIONAL FESTIVAL SOCIETY
2-22, Nakanoshima, Kita-ku, Osaka   Tel.: 23-6985

Osaka Int'l Festival Opens April 6

Many Big Events Scheduled Including Boston Symphony

The Third Osaka International Festival will open on April 6 to last until May 8 with colorful programs of music and drama performed by world-famous musicians and stage artists.

Although cities in Europe and the United States had customarily the venues of such festivals of art and music, Osaka joined them as the first Asian city in 1958 when it staged the First Osaka International Festival.

The Osaka Festival is unique among the world's similar festivals in that it presents a blend of cultures of the East and West. Leading musicians and artist groups from all parts of the world are invited every year by the Osaka International Festival Society to display their skill in the festival.

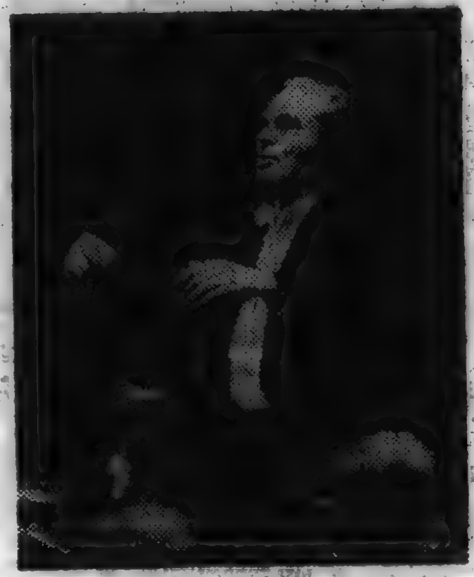
Much of the success of the First Festival was attributed to the excellent facilities of the Festival Hall located in the heart of Osaka. Experts have praised it as one of the best acoustically constructed auditorium in the world.

The Festival Hall has a capacity of 3,000 and it has excellent lighting and air conditioning equipments.

Among the foreign artists to perform in the Third Osaka International Festival are the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch, the Czech Chamber Orchestra without conductor, the Paganini String Quartet, Soprano Maria Stader, Harpist Nicanor Zabaleta, the Renault-Barrault Theatrical Troupe and the Spanish Ballet of Pilar Lopez.

The Japanese entries include opera "Black Ships" by Kosaku Yamada and a grand koto concert by the Togensha Group.

BARRAULT



MUNCH

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has brought world fame to Boston. When the orchestra was founded by Henry Lee Higginson in 1881, Higginson engaged Georg Hanschel as its first conductor. After three seasons he was succeeded by Wilhelm Gericke who led the orchestra from 1884 to 1889. The next conductor was Arthur Nikisch who stressed personal interpretation and brilliant sonority. Nikisch remained as conductor from 1889 to 1893.

Karl Muck was the conductor of the orchestra from 1906 to 1908, followed by Max Fiedler (1908-1912). After Henri Rabaud and Pierre Monteux took the baton, the Russian conductor Sergey Kussevitsky was engaged in 1942 to direct the orchestra.

In 1949, Kussevitsky was succeeded by the Alsatian conductor Charles Munch, a musician of great exuberance of spirit.

Munch was born in Strasbourg on September 26, 1891. He studied the violin first at the Strasbourg Conservatory and later in Berlin as a pupil of Carl Fresch.

He became professor of the violin first at the Conservatory, then at Leipzig where from 1926 he was leader of the Gewandhause Orchestra.

In 1933, he went to Paris and made his debut as a conductor, giving concerts with the Paris Symphony Orchestra and Lamoureux and Straram Orchestras.

In 1936 Munch was appointed a professor at the Ecole Normale de Musique in Paris. In 1938 he visited London and conducted the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra and the same year he succeeded Phillippe Gaubert as conductor of the Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire. Since 1945 he has been touring Europe and America extensively and in 1948 he was appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Numerous guest conductors and composers have appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Among them were Ernest Ansermet, Sir Thomas Beecham, Leonard Bernstein, Ernest Bloch, Sir Adrian Boult, Guido Cantelli, Arthur Honegger, Vincent d'Indy, Darius Milhaud, Marice Ravel, Bruno Walter and others.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts will be held on May 7 and 8.

Program

(May 7)

Fantasias for Strings .... Purcell
First Symphony ..... Copland
Symphony No. 95 .... Haydn
Orchestra Suite from Opera "The Tender Land" Copland

(May 8)

Symphony No. 3 "Eroica" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 6 ...... Piston
"Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2 .... Ravel

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Czech Chamber Orchestra

The Prague Chamber Orchestra from Czechoslovakia will open the festival on April 6 with a concert. It will also appear at the Festival Hall on April 7, 8 and 18.

The chamber orchestra was organized in 1946 by Vaclav Talich, leading Czech conductor with young and promising musicians in Prague.

The orchestra was temporarily dissolved in 1948 but later was reorganized by Joseph Vlach.

The coming chamber orchestra consisting of 25 players has neither conductor nor concertmaster because each member of the orchestra was trained as an individual solo player.

Program

(April 6)

Symphony in C Major .... J. Kohout
Symphony In B Major .... J. Benda
Divertimento in D Major .... Mozart
String Serenade ... L. Janacek

(April 7)

Symphony in C Major .... J. Kohout
Serenade .... Mozart
String Serenade .... J. Suk

(April 8)

Symphony in B Major .. Benda
Piano Concerto in D Minor .... J.S. Bach
Serenade .... Mozart
String Serenade ...... J. Suk

(April 18)

Symphonia in G Major .... A. Vivaldi
Piano Concerto ..... J.S. Bach
Divertimento .... Mozart
Concerto Grosso ...... Vivaldi
Serenade .... Mozart

MISS LOPEZ

Paganini Quartet

The internationally - renowned Paganini String Quartet is composed of Henri Temianka, first violin, Charles Libove, second violin, David Schwartz, viola, and Lucien Laporte, cello.

Since its founding in 1946, the quartet has toured major cities in the United States, Canada, Europe and Latin America.

The unique point of this quartet is that all members of the ensemble have string instruments made by famous Stradivarius. And all the instruments had once been in possession of Paganini.

The quartet is proud of a wide repertoire ranging from baroque to contemporary music. But the feature of the quartet is Beethoven.

Their concerts are scheduled to be held on April 20 at the Festival Hall and April 25 at the Sankei Kaikan.

Program

(April 20)

Op. 44, No. 1 .... Mendelssohn
No. 6 .... Bartok
Quartet .... Debussy
Op. 54, No. 2 .... Haydn
Quartet .... Ravel
Op. 131 .... Beethoven
K. 465 (Dissonances) .. Mozart
Quartet .... B. Phillips
Op. 59, No. 2 ...... Beethoven

(April 25)

All Beethoven Program: Op. 18-2, in G Major, Op. 95 in D Minor and Op. 131 in C-Sharp Minor

Soprano Stader

Soprano Maria Stader, a Swiss-born vacalist who is known as one of the world's best singers of Bach and Mozart, will give her recital on April 27 and will give solos in the concert with the Kansai Symphony Orchestra on April 9.

ZABALETA

Miss Stader won her first international concours in the First Geneva International Music Concours and since then she had been active on concert stages in Europe until World War II.

After the war, she made a spectacular comeback, getting the L. Lehmann Prize in 1950 and the Mozart Prize in the Saltzburg Festival in 1956.

Her debut in the United States was made in 1953, when she was invited by the Little Orchestra Association to sing with the Philadelphia Symphonic Orchestra.

In New York, she sang with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra under the baton of Bruno Walter and Leonard Bernstein.

Program

(April 27)

Recital

"Nun beut die flur das frische Grun" (Gabriel's aria from "Creation of World") .... Haydn
"Voi, che sapete," Non so piu cosa son," and "Giunse al fin il momento" (arias from "the Marriage of Figaro" . Mozart
"Il Fruhling" (Spring); "La Pastorella" (Pastrale); "Gretchen am Spinnrad" (Gretchen at spinning wheel); "Seligkeit" (Joy); "Die Forelle" (Trout); "Schweizerlied" (Swiss song) .... Schubert
"Volkslied" (Little Song); "Der Nussbaum" (the Nut Tree); "Mondnacht" (Night of the Moon); "Auftrage" (Order) .... Schumann
"Es wiss und rat es doch keiner" (No one Knows); "Nachtlied" (Night Song); "Neue Liebe" (the New Lover); and "Wanderlied" (Wanderer's Song) .... Mendelssohn

(April 9)

Mozart Program

Concert Arias

"Vorri Spiegarmi" .... K. 418
"Voi Avete" .... K. 217
"Nehmt Meinen Dank" . K. 383
"Exsultate Jubilate" 165
Symphony No. 41 "Jupiter" .... K. 551

Harpist Zabaleta

Nicanor Zabaleta, noted Spanish harpist, will give his recital at the Festival Hall on April 11 and will play the harp solo with the Kyoto Municipal Symphony Orchestra conducted by Carl Caelius on April 13.

Zabaleta started a study of harp at the age of 6 and was admitted to the Madrid Music Academy at 8. He made his first public performance at 9.

He has played in 2,000 concerts all over the world and appeared with over 80 orchestras including the Berlin Philharmonic, London B.B.C., Philadelphia and others.

Program

(April 11)

Recital

I

Three Etudes .. Ch. N. Boscha
Sonata .... J.B. Viotti
Variations on a Swiss Air .... Beethoven
Introduction and Rondo .... E. Parish-Alvars

II

Sonata .... J.L. Dussek
Variations on a Theme by Mozart .... M.I. Glinka
Prelude .... Prokofieff
"La Source" ..... M. Tournier
"Chanson dans la Nuit" .... C. Salzedo

(April 13)

With Orchestra

Overture to "Mastersinger of Nurenburg" .... Wagner
Harp Concerto .. Parish-Alvars
"Slavonic Dances" (No. 2, 4 and 8) .... Dvorak
Symphonic Poem "Moldau" .... Smetana
Harp Concerto ...... Boieldieu

Spanish Ballet

The Spanish Ballet of Pilar Lopez will give performances on April 30, May 2, 5 and 6 at the Festival Hall.

MISS STADER

The ballet troupe left Madrid on March 12 aboard the Laos on its way to Osaka via Marseilles. They are scheduled to arrive in Kobe on April 26.

Miss Pilar made her debut at the age of 7 in Spain. Her American debut was made in New York in 1945 at the Metropolitan Theater.

In Spain she organized her own troupe, the Ballet of Pilar Lopez.

French Drama

The Compagnie of Madeleine Renaud-Jean Louis Barrault will present five plays in the festival. They are: "Misanthrope," "Les Fausses Confidences," "Baptisto," "Le Livre de Christophe Colomb" and "Hamlet."

Performances by the Renaud-Barrault company are scheduled at the Festival Hall on April 23, 24, 26 and 28.

Miss Renaud started her stage career as a member of the Comedie Francaise in 1928 and later entered the filmdom in 1934. As a screen actress she won popularity and was awarded the French Movie Award.

Jean-Louis Barrault started his stage career in 1931 and also appeared in many French pictures.

In 1946, Miss Renaud organized the troupe together with Barrault.

Koto Concert

A grand koto concert with some 120 koto will be held at the Festival Hall on May 1.

Members of the Togensha Troupe will play koto with the accompaniment of the Kansai Symphony Orchestra conducted by Takashi Asahina. The program includes works by Michio Miyagi and Chigyo Suyama.

Japanese Opera 'Black Ships'

Japanese opera "Black Ships" will be presented at the Festival Hall on April 15, 16 and 17.

The presentation of the Japanese opera by Kosaku Yamada marks the 60th anniversary of the composer's musical career and the 100th anniversary of Japanese-American relationship.

The "Black Ships" refer to three vessels of the United States which visited Uraga, Kanagawa Prefecture, in 1860.

The visit of the ships to Japan led to the opening of Japanese ports and the signing of a Japan-U.S. treaty of trade and friendship.

The composer himself and Takashi Asahina will conduct the Kansai Symphony Orchestra with the cast provided by the Nikikai group, the Kansai Opera Co.

ASAHI EVENING NEWS, FRIDAY, MAY 6, 1960 ★★

FRIDAY, MAY 6, 1960

THE ASAHI EVENING NEWS 1960

Osaka Int'l Festival:

Boston Symphony Plays Saturday

By Hans E. Pringsheim

The Boston Symphony Orchestra left Tokyo by train Friday morning for Osaka, where it will give two concerts at the Festival Hall.

The first will be conducted by Aaron Copland, contemporary American composer, from 7 p.m. on Saturday. The second concert, from 7 p.m. on Sunday, will be conducted by Charles Munch and will be the closing event of the 1960 Osaka International Festival.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of 22 concerts in Japan had a grandiose start Wednesday night with the initial program under the baton of Charles Munch at the NHK Hall.

It was a closed performance presented before a select group of invited guests only; but music lovers in all Japan took part in this event, which was broadcast simultaneously over the nationwide radio and television networks of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK).

Their Imperial Highnesses the Crown Prince, Crown Princess, and Prince Yoshi attended the concert in the company of the NHK President and Mrs. Hideo Nomura and American Ambassador and Mrs. Douglas MacArthur II. Many other members of the diplomatic corps and noted figures of the Japan public life were among the guests.

The orchestra opened the concert with the playing of the national anthems of Japan and the United States. Not in many years has the "Kimigayo" been given such a rousing performance here.

Beethoven's Third Symphony, "Eroica," started the program proper, followed by the "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2 of Ravel. It was the only of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's programs here not presenting a work of contemporary American music.

Mr. Munch, the orchestra's musical director, is a conductor whom it is a delight to watch. His direction is precise, his authority over the orchestra is absolute, and the orchestra's response is marvelous. The playing of the Eroica was memorable, even though the sound of NHK hall is designed more for ideal broadcasting acoustics than for the pleasure of listeners in the hall itself.

By recompensation, one is able to watch the conductor and the individual players and groups on the TV monitor screen and thus get a much more direct impression of the performance than one is normally able to get in a live concert. Using as many as five television cameras, NHK did a superb job in presenting the orchestra and conductor on the screen.

The Rauel, noted as one of the most difficult pieces in the modern orchestra repertory, was given a performance of such virtuosity that it virtually defies description in words. Mr. Munch himself visibly was enjoying exery tone of the orchestra's playing—which may be the highest tribute to the utter perfection of their performance.

The orchestra gave its first public concert Thursday night before a large audience at the Hibiya Public Hall.

Asahi Even[illegible]
April 26, 1960

U.S. Orchestra For Osaka Fest

Director Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, left, is shown the Happi coat that was presented to him by JAL hostess Alice Satow, center, prior to his departure from Boston for Tokyo. At right is Leonard Burkat, the orchestra's music administrator.

UPI-Sun Radiophoto

By The Associated Press

BOSTON, Apr. 25—Only about half the Boston Symphony Orchestra was able to begin its air trip to the Far East on schedule Monday. Fog delayed the other half.

Some 50 musicians left on schedule by plane for New York.

Director Charles Munch and some administrative personnel are scheduled to leave later Monday.

The first group will fly from New York to Los Angeles and thence to Honolulu and Tokyo.

The second group is scheduled to fly to Seattle and thence to Tokyo.

Osaka Int'l Festival:

Boston Symphony Will Play Tomorrow

By Hans E. Pringsheim

The Boston Symphony Orchestra left Tokyo by train Friday morning for Osaka, where it will give two concerts at the Festival Hall.

The first will be conducted by Aaron Copland, contemporary American composer, from 7 p.m. on Saturday. The second concert, from 7 p.m. on Sunday, will be conducted by Charles Munch and will be the closing event of the 1960 Osaka International Festival.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of 22 concerts in Japan had a grandiose start Wednesday night with the initial program under the baton of Charles Munch at the NHK Hall.

It was a closed performance presented before a select group of invited guests only; but music lovers in all Japan took part in this event, which was broadcast simultaneously over the nationwide radio and television networks of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK).

Their Imperial Highnesses the Crown Prince, Crown Princess, and Prince Yoshi attended the concert in the company of the NHK President and Mrs. Hideo Nomura and American Ambassador and Mrs. Douglas MacArthur II. Many other members of the diplomatic corps and noted figures of the Japan public life were among the guests.

The orchestra opened the concert with the playing of the national anthems of Japan and the United States. Not in many years has the "Kimigayo" been given such a rousing performance here.

Beethoven's Third Symphony, "Eroica," started the program proper, followed by the "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2 of Ravel. It was the only of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's programs here not presenting a work of contemporary American music.

Mr. Munch, the orchestra's musical director, is a conductor whom it is a delight to watch. His direction is precise, his authority over the orchestra is absolute, and the orchestra's response is marvelous. The playing of the Eroica was memorable, even though the sound of NHK Hall is designed more for ideal broadcasting acoustics than for the pleasure of listeners in the hall itself.

By recompensation, one is able to watch the conductor and the individual players and groups on the TV monitor screen and thus get a much more direct impression of the performance than one is normally able to get in a live concert. Using as many as five television cameras, NHK did a superb job in presenting the orchestra and conductor on the screen.

The Rovel, noted as one of the most difficult pieces in the modern orchestra repertory, was given a performance of such virtuosity that it virtually defies description in words. Mr. Munch himself visibly was enjoying exery tone of the orchestra's playing—which may be the highest tribute to the utter perfection of their performance.

The orchestra gave its first public concert Thursday night before a large audience at the Hibiya Public Hall.

Asahi Evening News
May 4, 1960

Osaka Int'l Festival:

Spanish Ballet Scores Big Hit; Final Appearances May 5 and 6

The exciting atmosphere of an evening in Spain was recreated on the stage of the Osaka Festival Hall Monday night by the Spanish Ballet of Pilar Lopez which gave its second Festival program.

Most successful were the two major numbers, de Falla's "El Amor Brujo" with its famous fire dance, and Granados' "Fantasia Goyesca." In both pieces, the [illegible] Spanish troupe revea[illegible]s peculiar skill in pro[illegible] the classical art of Spa[illegible]ancing while giving full[illegible] modern means of cho[illegible]c expression.

S[illegible]e dancers showed perf[illegible] the use of the castanet[illegible] which they could draw [illegible] rhythms as well as intimate whispers and beautiful echo effects.

While most of the members of this troupe are trained as dancers as well as singers the only truly outstanding singer among them is without doubt Paco Carmona.

The performances of this Spanish Ballet, which combines in its repertory the Spanish national, regional, and gypsy dances of the country, have been attracting wide attention, and Monday's audience included a large number of prominent Japanese dancers, singers, playwrights, stage directors, musicians, as well as a large group of foreign residents and tourists.

Two final performances, both with the same program, will be given by the Spanish Ballet of Pilar Lopez from 6:30 p.m. on May 5 and 6 at the Festival Hall.

The main numbers are Concert of Aranjuez, with music by Rodrigo; a series of five Preludes and Images, by Debussy, and Bolero, by Ravel. Other selections include: Three Bolero Themes; L'Espagnolade; Triana; Flamencos of Perchel; Torre Bermeja; Gypsy Rhythms of Sacromonte, and Dance of Siete Batas.

Boston Symphony Concert

With the last performances of the Spanish Ballet, the five-week 1960 Osaka International Festival is drawing near its close, leaving only as the final events the two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on May 7 and 8, both starting 7 p.m. at the Festival Hall.

Aaron Copland will conduct the program on May 7, presenting his own First Symphony and suite from the opera, "The Tender Land," in addition to Haydn's Symphony No. 95 in C minor, and three of Purcell's Fantasias for Strings.

The Festival's closing event will be the concert to be conducted by Charles Munch on May 8, featuring Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 5, and Ravel's Suite No. 2 from "Daphnis at Chloe."

ASAHI EVENING NEWS, SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1960

FLOWERS FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY: The Boston Symphony Orchestra was given a hearty welcome on its arrival at Osaka Station Friday night for two concerts which will end the 1960 Osaka International Festival. Shown receiving flowers upon their arrival are (left to right) Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master; Paul Koaney, French horn player; Aaron Copland, guest conductor, and Thomas Perry, manager.

Osaka Int'l Festival:

Boston Symphony Greeted in Osaka

By Hans E. Pringsheim

The noted American composer Aaron Copland arrived in Osaka with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening to conduct the first of the orchestra's two concerts at the Festival Hall on Saturday.

Mr. Copland will present his own First Symphony and suite from the opera, "The Tender Land," in addition to works by Purcell and Haydn.

The Festival's closing concert on Sunday will be conducted by Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with a program of Beethoven, Piston and Ravel.

Asked by reporters here to describe the trend of his recent compositions, Aaron Copland said that even though he had used the 12-tone technique of musical composition in one of his latest work, a Fantasie for piano, this did not mean that he had become a 12-tone composer.

"I don't like to be tied down to any particular system of composition," he said. "I like to be free to write my music exactly as I please."

Mr. Copland came to Japan almost directly from the Soviet Union, which he had toured with another noted American composer, Lucas Foss. He spent a few days concertizing in England on his way from Russia to Japan.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony, said the American musicians were delighted to perform in Osaka for Japanese music lovers.

"We hope we shall be successful, but also hope that the time will come when Japan will send a symphony orchestra to the United States so that we may show them our approciation of the wonderful reception we have been given in Japan."

Orchestra Manager Thomas Perry said the reaction of the audience to the orchestra's first Hibiya Hall concert on Thursday was "a demonstration of spontaneous and direct appreciation."

A top member of the orchestra, viola player Joseph de Pasquale, praised the Japanese audience for being very quiet and attentive, and knowing when to applaud and when not—even more so than American audiences, he added.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
[illegible] 1,254,835
APR 20 1960

OSAKA FETE CITES BUNGLING BY U. S.

It Dropped an Orchestra for Boston Symphony, Which Could Not Fulfill Dates

By ROSS PARMENTER

Special to The New York Times.

OSAKA, Japan, April 19—The Czech Chamber Orchestra, which opened the Osaka International Festival on April 6, last night gave the fourth and last of its concerts here. It was a program of subtlety, finesse and grace, qualities that were conspicuously lacking from the American negotiations that account for the presence of the Czechs in Japan's second largest city.

As Osakans tell the story, it was American bungling that led to the engagement of the Prague ensemble. Michi Murayama, the executive director of the festival, is outspoken on the subject, for she was the one who had to do all the arranging and then rearranging once she was told that promises made about the Boston Symphony Orchestra could not be kept.

When Miss Murayama went to Europe last summer to line up talent for Osaka's third big festival, she engaged a major European orchestra to open it. When she returned to Japan, the United States Cultural Center in Tokyo assured her, she says, that the Boston Symphony was coming to the Orient and that it could open the festival.

Knowing the length of the orchestra's Boston season, she was dubious that the orchestra could get to Osaka so early in April. But because the center's assurances were urgent she scrapped the posters that had been printed and canceled the agreement with the European orchestra.

She is keeping the name of that orchestra secret, lest it be publicized as having been thrown over for the Boston Symphony. But she makes no secret of the fact that she was angry when she was told in December that the Boston Symphony could not get to Osaka for the opening after all.

The anger was fanned when she learned later that the Boston Symphony could not even get to Osaka during the festival period. It had to play in Tokyo first, she was told. By this time she had engaged the small Czech ensemble. Being independent in spirit and the daughter of a newspaper magnate, she took the position that she would not have the Boston Symphony in the festival at all.

However, the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK), which is sponsoring twenty of the Boston's twenty-two concerts in Japan, brought pressure on her to relent. She finally agreed to extend the festival by two days, so the Boston's May 7 and 8 concerts could get under the festival wire.

Miss Murayama is still a little unhappy, for she hoped to have Charles Munch lead both concerts. But it has been ordained that Aaron Copland will lead the first of them, which includes his Symphony No. 1 and his suite from his opera, "The Tender Land."

There is a further irony arising from the fact that all the Japanese concerts of the Boston are not being led by men noted as conductors.

When the tour was projected last December, India was one of the countries on the anticipated itinerary. Pierre Monteux's physician warned him that at 85 he should not go to countries that are hot. Reluctantly he bowed out. But he said recently in Boston that he would [illegible] if he had known that the plans would be changed, as they were, to substitute Australia and New Zealand for the tropical countries.

Loving Western classical music as they do, the people of Osaka will probably welcome the Bostonians anyway. Meanwhile, they have lavished their affections on the twenty-four Czechs. Last night they were clearly loath to let them go. The Vivaldi - Bach - Mozart program was a generous one, but the applause for the excellent ensemble was so genuine that five encores were called for before the reluctant "sayonara," which is Japanese for good-by.

65

The Japan Times
May 7, 1960

Speaking of Music . . .

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By MARCEL GRILLI

On this centenary year of Japan-United States relations no musical gift could have been appropriate than the current tour of this country by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch.

This auspicious visit of goodwill and greater mutual understanding between the two nations has begun decisively enough. On Wednesday evening, Mr. Munch and his virtuoso ensemble electrified a specially invited audience in the NHK Hall with brilliantly executed performances of the Eroica Symphony of Beethoven and the second suite of Daphnis et Chloe by Ravel. On Thursday evening in Hibiya Hall, marking the orchestra's first public appearance in Tokyo, he missed none of the countless chances offered to virtuoso instrumental effects by the Symphonie Fantastique of Berlioz. It is beyond this reviewer's powers to assess the total impact brought to the untold numbers of nationwide listeners over their radios and TV receiving sets on the first occasion, but it must have been of tremendous proportions judging by the extending applause and the unbounded cheering that greeted these musicians in their Hibiya Hall appearance. It was an unprecedented demonstration. Never before have I witnessed its like in the same hall, even when other major international orchestras have appeared here, to match this one in warmth, spontaneity and genuine gratitude.

The Japanese have had relatively few opportunities to make direct contact with major American orchestras. They know, of course, of the high degree of technical polish and of their virtuoso assurance, a knowledge derived largely through the medium of recordings. But meeting these Bostonians face to face has brought them a new and memorable experience. For, beyond all its viruoso capabilities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra provides one of those all-too-rare exquisite, civilized pleasures of music-making on the highest spheres. In every respect, it is the most aristocratic, musically mature and technically distinguished of American symphonic ensembles.

This phenomenon, to be sure, is as much the result of the orchestra's identity with the patrician traditions and "cultural values of the community which has nourished it as of the continuity of musical directors who have guided its destinies.

Established almost eighty years ago by a most extraordinary public-spirited citizens, Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, this orchestra has not only enjoyed the distinction of being led by a galaxy of accomplished conductors — Henschel, Gericke, Nikisch, Paur, Fieldler, Muck, Rabaud, Monteux, Koussevitzky, Munch all of whom made musical history in Boston—but all these, in turn, enjoyed extended tenure of service.

The "Muck incident" at the time of America's participation in World War I ended an almost 40-year period of absolute Germanic dominancy to be succeeded by an equally brilliant phase of French influence. Rabaud was an interim figure who remained only one year; he was followed by Monteux who stayed until 1924 (at the venerable age of 85, he is still emeritus guest conductor). Koussevitzky, who died in 1951, held the podium for a splendid quarter-century, to be succeeded in 1949 by the present musical director, Mr. Munch.

The same feature of "permanency" applies to the instrumental ranks. Indeed, as I renewed my own acquaintance with this orchestra the other evening, I was happy to recognize among the young newcomers in its ranks the faces of many old friends Louis Speyer, the English horn player, for example, goes back to the days of Rabaud. This also includes the first flutist, James Pappoutsakis, Rosario Mazzeo, the bass clarinetist, and Richard Burgin, the concert-master and associate conductor, who came with Monteux. These instrumentalists have retained all their vigor, vitality and freshness.

On Wednesday evening, it was at once evident that the Boston Symphony, under Mr. Munch, exemplifies an elegance and clarity of music-making in addition to its unique qualities of sonority, blend and balance. The playing was swift, clear-cut and efficient; the attacks and the blending absolutely precise, yet the effect produced on the listener is never one of purely exhibiting a fine orchestra for its own glamorous sake.

The combined orchestral sound, whether in Beethoven or Berlioz, was perfectly clear and radiant; brilliance, under Mr. Munch, never becomes blatant. His Eroica was spacious in conception, warm in tone and supremely satisfying without any false melodramatic posturing. The music was allowed to rise freely and unstrained to all its wonderful climaxes; the articulation of the phrasing was never exaggerated. The music seemed aligned to the conductor's natural impulse—it was our pulses that were set madly racing—and the animated rhythm did not lack in intensity.

There was magnificence of expression and nuance in the slower passages. The "Funeral March" stirred the imagination as it developed to heroic grandeur. The music's urgency, the dynamic excitement, in short, the entire mechanics of orchestral articulation were effectively shaped by the conductor's keen sense of form and structure.

Ravel and Berlioz are Mr. Munch's special predilections. No one can touch him here, with the possible exception of a Monteux or a Beecham. This is music makes much of translating sensory and visual impressions into sound, and Mr. Munch impressed his hearers with the delicacy of his ear and his partiality for a rich, firm and velvety sound texture. An analysis of the depth of the Boston Symphony's tone calls for a separate treatment all to itself, as indeed does also the entire program of Berlioz, Piston and Roussel, showpieces for such an orchestra as this which cultivates niceties of dynamics as well as timbre.

For the nonce, let us end by saying that the sheer instrumental exuberance and the all-too-sumptuous sound of the final pages of the Danse Generale of Ravel completely overtaxed the open-stage and dry acoustics of the NHK Hall and that, even though somewhat cramped within the restricted confines of Hibiya Hall, the "Fantastique" made a far better effect. Old Major Higginson would have been gratified with the outburst of cheers that shook Hibiya Hall to its rafters . . . and so, too, would Koussevitzky!

中國飯店
China House

The Only Genuine Classical Cantonese Cuisine in Tokyo
(Member of The Diners' Club)
No. 4, 3-chome, Tamura-cho,
Shiba, Minato-ku.
Tel. 501-4301/4
On Ave. "A"
between 10th
& 12th St.

The Mainichi
May 8, 1960

THE MAINICHI, SUNDAY, MAY 8, 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Impresses Music Fans Here

By Jack Hirano

A large crowd of classical music lovers was deeply impressed by the outstanding directorship of Charles Munch Wednesday evening when he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the NHK TV Hall in Tokyo. This was the Boston Symphony's first stage appearance in Japan, and was an additional significant event in the nation's rapidly developing music history of recent days.

The orchestra performance was broadcast on radio and TV programs throughout the country after opening its curtain with the national anthems of the United States and Japan.

Maestro Munch presented performances of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2, which drew a storm of applause from the packed TV hall. The fine mixture of Munch's directorship and orchestra members' individual performances was so effective that it stirred the hearts of the music-loving people.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is well-known for its internationality. The former orchestra conductors were Austrian, German, French, Hungarian and Russian nationals of long musical tradition. They include George Henschel, Wilhelm Gericke, Karl Much, Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteux, Arthur Nickisch, Emil Paur, Max Fidler and Segei Koussevitzky. The orchestra is a symbol of completeness.

Conductor Munch was born in 1891 as a son of a famous musician, and received his music education in Germany and France. His direction is clear and intelligent, full of strength and passion.

This is one of the key points to understanding of the orchestra's recent recorded works now available in Japan, mostly those of Debussy, Berlioz, Wagner and Brahms from Germany and France.

Wednesday evening's performance reassured us that maestro Munch is more passionate and energetic than we had expected, especially when he presented what was called a "tremendous explosion of top music" of the world. His direction was clear and colorful.

The orchestra displayed an ideal interchange of sense and feeling between the conductor and orchestra members — a complete harmony.

The surprisingly beautiful harmony of both the string and wind instruments was shown the same evening when they staged Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2. "Here is music" was the general impression we received.

The Boston Symphony showed its deep interest and understanding of German compositions when Munch conducted Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 During the performance of "Daphnis et Chloe," the orchestra exhibited directness and liveliness of the music composed by the great Neo-Classical master of the early 20th century.

Maestro Munch, while conducting the Ravel work, drew listeners into a world of fantasy. The orchestra reproduced the picture of sunrise and chirping of birds with flutes and clarinets after symbolizing the whispering river theme with harps.

The most impressive scene of this Ravel masterpiece was the rich and clear sound of flutes which represented the song of love of Daphnis et Chloe. Such feelings were realized due to the much-discussed fact that every player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is, individually, a good soloist.

---

the university's Marian Hall at No. 1 Miyashiro-cho, Shibuya-ku, Tokyo.

MONDAY, MAY 9, 1960

No. 1,960 © The Asahi Evening News 1960

Osaka Int'l Festival Ends With Concerts By Boston Symphony

The famed Boston Symphony Orchestra played the two final concerts of the 1960 Osaka International Festival in Festival Hall in Osaka. Aaron Copland conducted the orchestra Saturday night.

Asahi Shimbun

62,000 Attend 32-Day Fete

By Hans E. Pringsheim

A brilliant concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its music director Charles Munch at the Festival Hall Sunday night ended the 1960 Osaka International Festival in a tremendous success.

The enthusiasm of the capacity audience was so great that it slightly upset arrangements for the closing ceremony which traditionally ends the Osaka Festival, now in its third year.

Amidst thunderous ovations, Dr. Munch returned to the stage to conduct the playing of "Auld Lang Syne," which was to be followed by the sounding of fanfares from the gallory to mark the end of the Festival.

However, the audience, unwilling to let the orchestra and its conductor go home yet, recalled Dr. Munch to the stage time and again, so that finally he had to give in and play an encore—a movement from Handel's "Water Music." Then, only after he had returned for more curtain calls and finally signaled the orchestra members to rise and leave the stage, could the ceremony be ended with the sound of the fanfares.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra provided the two final concerts of the 1960 Osaka Festival, which started on April 6 with a gala concert by the Czech Chamber Orchestra.

Artists from six nations—Chechoslovakia, Switzerland, Spain, the United States, France, and Japan—took part in the programs, which included 23 performances at the Festival Hall; one recital at the Sankei Hall and a Noh performance at the Asahi Kaikan. In addition, a number of Japanese theatrical presentations were staged at various Osaka playhouses in conjunction with the Festival.

An estimated 62,000 persons attended the various performances of the Festival proper, Noted thi[illegible] was the increasingly la[illegible]ercentage of foreign reside[illegible] tourist who visited the [illegible]; their number was estimated at about 10,000 by the Festival office.

The keen interest shown abroad in the Osaka Festival was further reflected in the fact that for the first time, a major foreign newspaper—the New York Times—sent a member of its staff to Japan especially to cover the Festival.

Also the foreign diplomatic corps was well represented among the Festival visitors this year. The Doyen of the diplomatic corps and many other heads of mission.

Altogether, the klieglight glamor which had surrounded the orchestra's opening radio and television performance in Tokyo last Wednesday, had given way to a truly festive spirit in its Osaka performances. Thus, Beethoven's "Eroica" stood out this time in an even more monumental style of playing, perhaps less spectacular but certainly not weakend in its impact.

Besides, the superior acoustics of the Festival Hall did better justice to the magnificent sound of this orchestra, so that, for instance, the warmth of the strings in the faneral march was heard to much greater advantage.

Of great [illegible] was the acquaintance [illegible] the Sixth Symphony [illegible]temporary American [illegible] Walter Piston, a [illegible] will be reviewed in more detail at another opportunity. It was given a meticulous performance which was warmly applauded.

The shattering climax to the concert came again in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2 a brilliant piece which probably no orchestra in the world today plays with so much virtuosity as the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays it under Charles Munch.

Or Saturday, the noted American composer Aaron Copland scored a great success as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony's first Festival concert. The program opened with three of Purcell's seldom heard Fantasias for Strings, in whose interpretation Mr. Copland showed the same good taste as he did later in the Haydn Symphony No. 95.

As a composer, he introduced himself with his Frst Symphony, one of his early works written some 35 years ago under the immediate influence of his years of study in Paris, and with the orchestra suite from his opera, "The Tender Land."

The latter showed his emancipation from those influences, but it was only in the encores that the audience recognized the true Copland [illegible] modern American folk [illegible] style, for which he ha[illegible] so well known and [illegible] in this country, too[illegible]

The Japan Times
May 16, 1960

Osaka Int'l Fest Ends in Success

OSAKA—The 1960 Osaka International Festival ended Sunday with a brilliant concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch at the Festival Hall.

In a month-long program which started April 6 as the third of its kind held in Japan, artists from Czechoslovakia, Switzerland, Spain, the United States, France and Japan performed a total of 24 concerts in various halls and theaters here.

Boston Symphony Ends Osaka Int'l Festival

Asahi 5/9/60

By Hans E. Pringsheim

A brilliant concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its music director Charles Munch at the Festival Hall Sunday night ended the 1960 Osaka International Festival in a tremendous success.

The enthusiasm of the capacity audience was so great that it slightly upset arrangements for the closing ceremony which traditionally ends the Osaka Festival, now in its third year.

Amidst thunderous ovations, Dr. Munch returned to the stage to conduct the playing of "Auld Lang Syne," which was to be followed by the sounding of fanfares from the gallery to mark the end of the Festival.

However, the audience, unwilling to let the orchestra and its conductor go home yet, recalled Dr. Munch to the stage time and again, so that finally he had to give in and play an encore—a movement from Handel's "Water Music." Then, only after he had returned for more curtain calls and finally signaled the orchestra members to rise and leave the stage, could the ceremony be ended with the sound of the fanfares.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra provided the two final concerts of the 1960 Osaka Festival, which started on April 6 with a gala concert by the Czech Chamber Orchestra.

Artists from six nations—Chechoslovakia, Switzerland, Spain, the United States, France, and Japan—took part in the programs, which included 23 performances at the Festival Hall; one recital at the Sankei Hall and a Noh performance at the Asahi Kaikan. In addition, a number of Japanese theatrical presentations were staged at various Osaka playhouses in conjunction with the Festival.

An estimated 62,000 persons attended the various performances of the Festival proper. Noted this year was the increasingly larger percentage of foreign residents and tourist who visited the Festival; their number was estimated at about 10,000 by the Festival office.

The keen interest shown abroad in the Osaka Festival was further reflected in the fact that for the first time, a major foreign newspaper—The New York Times—sent a member of its staff to Japan especially to cover the Festival.

Also the foreign diplomatic corps was well represented among the Festival visitors this year. The Doyen of the diplomatic corps and many other heads of mission.

Altogether, the klieglight glamor which had surrounded the orchestra's opening radio and television performance in Tokyo last Wednesday, had given way to a truly festive spirit in its Osaka performances. Thus, Beethoven's "Eroica" stood out this time in an even more monumental style of playing, perhaps less spectacular but certainly not weakened in its impact.

(Continued on Page 3)

Besides, the superior acoustics of the Festival Hall did better justice to the magnificent sound of this orchestra, so that, for instance, the warmth of the strings in the funeral march was heard to much greater advantage.

Of great interest was the acquaintance with the Sixth Symphony by the contemporary American composer Walter Piston, a work which will be reviewed in more detail at another opportunity. It was given a meticulous performance which was warmly applauded.

The shattering climax to the concert came again in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2 a brilliant piece which probably no orchestra in the world today plays with so much virtuosity as the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays it under Charles Munch.

Or Saturday, the noted American composer Aaron Copland scored a great success as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony's first Festival concert. The program opened with three of Purcell's seldom heard Fantasias for Strings, in whose interpretation Mr. Copland showed the same good taste as he did later in the Haydn Symphony No. 95.

As a composer, he introduced himself with his Frst Symphony, one of his early works written some 35 years ago under the immediate influence of his years of study in Paris, and with the orchestra suite from his opera, "The Tender Land."

The latter showed his emancipation from those influences, but it was only in the encores that the audience recognized the true Copland of the modern American folk music style, for which he has become so well known and popular in this country, too.

67

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

MAY 8 - 1960

Japan Critic Lauds Boston Symphony

TOKYO, May 7 (UPI)—The Japan Times paid high tribute today to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is playing a series of concerts in Japan.

In an article written by Marcel Grilli, its music and drama critics, the newspaper said: "No musical gift could have been more appropriate" to help Japan and the United States celebrate the 100th anniversary of formal relations.

He termed the Boston Symphony "the most aristocratic, musically mature and technically distinguished of American symphonic ensembles."

He said the symphony, under Charles Munch, "exemplified an elegance and clarity of music-making in addition to its inique qualities of sonority, blend and balance."

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

MAY 8 1960

JAPANESE SPONSORSHIP AND HOW IT WORKS

By ROSS PARMENTER

TOKYO.

ONE does not have to be in Japan very long to realize that the very thing that makes its Western-style musical culture economically possible is also the element bedeviling that culture. Or if that is too strong a word, complicating it.

One refers to the sponsorship system—specifically, the sponsorship of musical events and musical institutions by the proprietors of mass media. In Japan the newspapers and the radio stations (with their television adjuncts) are the chief sponsors of classical music.

Their financial support is indispensable, partly because the bills are so high, and partly because Japanese musicians and Japanese concert societies do not have the sources of support available to their counterparts in Europe or the United States. That is, there are no large state subsidies as in France, Italy, Germany, Austria and Russia, and there are few of the public-spirited wealthy individual patrons one finds in the United States.

The bills for Japanese musicians are not exorbitant. Indeed, they are lower than elsewhere, for Japanese musicians are not very well paid. But the costs of bringing over foreign soloists and conductors are very high, and they become exorbitant when a whole ensemble is involved.

Traveling Costs

Transportation is what costs so much. Not only is Japan far from Europe and the United States, but it also is almost the only performing area in this part of the world. Visiting artists cannot spread their touring costs over many other places. They have to ask for large fees to make it worth their while to come here.

The sponsors do not make money from the Western-style musical events they underwrite. In fact, they often incur large deficits. But in presenting the concerts they win prestige and popularity with the people. Being newspapers and radio stations, this is vitally important to them.

Why their sponsorship is so complicating is because of their intense rivalry. Though they will accept advertising, newspapers of one chain will be so discourteous to the musical events promoted by another chain as to virtually boycott the efforts of their rivals. Similarly a radio station with its own symphony orchestra is not likely to encourage the performances of other symphony orchestras.

Since sponsors hold such control, musical organizations generally do not have so much autonomy as they need for artistic purposes. And musicians sometimes get caught between rival camps. This is especially true of foreign artists who do not know the political ins and outs of the situations they step into. And sometimes if an artist appears for the benefit of one sponsor, he will be given little opportunity with any of the organizations supported by rival sponsors.

Another consequence of the rivalry is that one sponsor—or so a visitor is assured—will hide his plans from another. Sometimes the lack of this cross-consultation will be that events of similar character will come off almost simultaneously. Last fall, for instance, Tokyo, which gets an average of only two foreign orchestras a season, had the Czech Philharmonic and the Vienna Philharmonic within a week of each other.

Last week there was an instance of overlapping that was distressing to an outsider. The Japanese tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is being sponsored by N. H. K., the Government-owned Japanese broadcasting corporation, which is patterned on the British Broadcasting Corporation. The night N. H. K. presented the Boston Symphony in its first appearance in Japan was the same night that the Tokyo Symphony was playing at Hibiya Hall.

When the question was raised as to whether the conflict was deliberate, the answer was "no, it was the result of indifference." The Tokyo Symphony's main sponsors are Tokyo Radio and Asahi Beer.

Another instance of the rivalry occurred in Osaka. Ruggiero Ricci, who is one of America's leading violinists, is now giving concerts in this country. He gave two in Osaka last Monday and Tuesday. That was within the period of the Osaka International Festival. But a visitor had to get to Tokyo to learn of those concerts. In Osaka the festival people never mentioned Mr. Ricci. He was not part of the festival because he had a different sponsor.

But thanks to the sponsorship system, Tokyo has four solidly established orchestras and two precarious ones. Numerically, that is a better record than New York has.

The N. H. K. Symphony, the city's oldest orchestra, dates back to the late Nineteen-Twenties. It has the support of the Government-sponsored radio. Its closest rival is the Japan Philharmonic, founded in 1956, which is sponsored by Bunka Hoso (Cultural Broadcasting Association) and by Fuji Television.

The already mentioned Tokyo Symphony is generally rated as the third orchestra. Fourth is the Tokyo Philharmonic, which does quite a lot of free-lance work and is often used by N. H. K. for studio shows and as a secondary orchestra.

Precarious Footing

The orchestras on a precarious footing are the Imperial and the A. B. C. Symphony. The former is an orchestra that is trying to exist in the manner of the Symphony of the Air. Most of its members are former A. B. C. men who resigned in discontent from the former orchestra, run by Asahi Broadcasting Corporation, which is linked with the Asahi newspaper chain. The Imperial has only given two concerts so far, both led by Americans, William Strickland and Thor Johnson.

Asahi is rebuilding an orchestra with mostly new members, but there are no public concerts scheduled in the near future. For a number of years the A. B. C. Symphony had the reputation of being the orchestra most skillful in playing in the pit for visiting ballet and opera companies. Such pit engagements, as well as recordings, help orchestras and orchestral musicians exist.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 45,338

MAY 7 - 1960

210,000 VISITORS EXPECTED:

JAPANESE TOURIST TRADE PROSPERING

From Japan Report

Published in New York City
by the Consulate General of Japan

AMERICANS MADE THE MAJORITY of the 180,000 foreign travelers who visited Japan last year.

The British were next in numbers among the crowd of tourists who spent about 100 million dollars in the country.

Looking Toward Increase

This year, according to the Japanese Ministry of Transportation which is in charge of tourism, 210,000 foreign sightseers and tourist revenues of 110 million dollars are expected.

Sea travel to Japan is on the increase and many new round-the-world superliners of the 20,000 to 30,000-ton class have touched port in Japan in recent years. The picture for 1960 has brightened further because Britain's Orient & Pacific Lines has increased its sailings to Japanese ports.

A total of 16 round-the-world or round-the-Orient liners are expected to touch at Japanese ports carrying 6,400 foreign visitors. This is a considerable increase compared with the nine ships and 4,500 visitors which arrived in Japan during 1959. The Japan Travel Bureau has already booked reservations for a total of 6,410 foreign tourists—622 tour parties—for the January-June period of 1960. The bookings for this season of 1960 show an increase of 1,910 persons over the corresponding period of 1959. A Soviet sightseeing group visited Japan for the first time since the war in 1959. In 1960, two groups from West Germany totaling about 100 persons are expected.

The increased use of giant jet airliners in 1960 is also expected to boost the influx of foreign tourists. Twelve airline companies are scheduled to place 115 Boeing B707 jets in operation on their routes in 1960. At the same time 139 Douglas DC-8 jet airliners will be operated by 18 airline companies, including the Japan Air Lines beginning in 1960. Thirty-nine Comet IV jet airliners will also be placed in service by seven companies.

A great number of foreign participants are also expected for cultural festivals, international conferences and trade fairs. Igor Oistrakh, the famous Soviet violinist, has already been in Japan for a series of recitals. Poland's Mazowsze Song and Dance Ensemble (125 members) was in Tokyo in March, and the Vienna Academy Choral group (25 members) arrived in April. The Boston Symphony Orchestra (108 members) arrived this week.

New Hotels

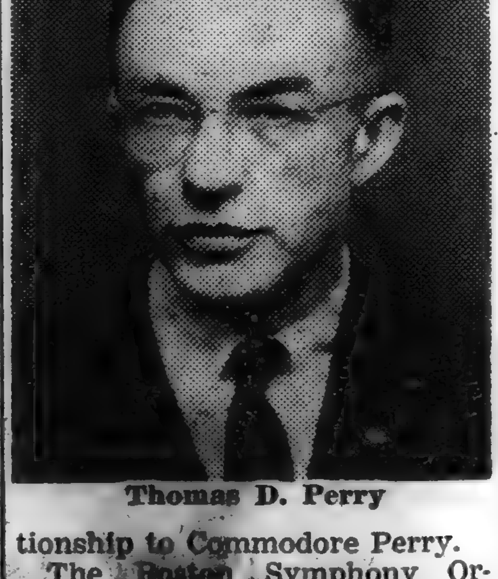
To cope with the rising number of foreign tourists, the Transportation Ministry, the Japan Tourist Association (JTA) and other interested groups are rushing preparations for accommodation and service. The Transportation Ministry has mapped out plans to increase hotel rooms by 1,000 in 1960. The Nikko Hotel in Tokyo, built by the Japan Air Lines, was completed in December, 1959 and can accommodate 200 guests. The Fujiya Hotel in Atami, which can handle 100 persons, has also been completed.

The Hotel New Japan in Tokyo with accommodations for 1,000 will be completed in March as well as the new Fujiya Hotel at Miyanoshita, near Hakone, accommodating 916 guests.

Two more large hotels are scheduled for completion this fall. They are the six-story Okura Hotel now under construction at Akasaka, Tokyo, with a total of 500 rooms and the 10-story Tokyo Hotel in Ginza with accommodation for 500 persons.

Asahi Evening News
May 3, 1960

Boston Orchestra Member A Relative of Com. Perry



Thomas D. Perry

An official of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now visiting Japan at the invitation of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation, is a relative of Commodore Perry, the American who opened Japan's doors to the world in 1853.

He is Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of Boston Symphony.

Mr. Perry, who told the Asahi Evening News he plans to visit the sites of the Commodore's activities here in Japan if he is given sufficient time, admitted that he is only remotely related to the Commodore—so remotely, he said, that it is difficult to describe the relationship.

"But I have heard a lot about the Commodore since my childhood and hope that my first visit to this country will provide me with the opportunity to see the sites of his activities," he said.

He said that NHK is considering scheduling him on a personal appearance on TV because of his slight relationship to Commodore Perry.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is now in Japan to make a series of appearances in commemoration of the centennial of the ratification of the Japan-U.S. Treaty of Amity and Commerce. The orchestra arrived Sunday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston • Richmond 2-4200

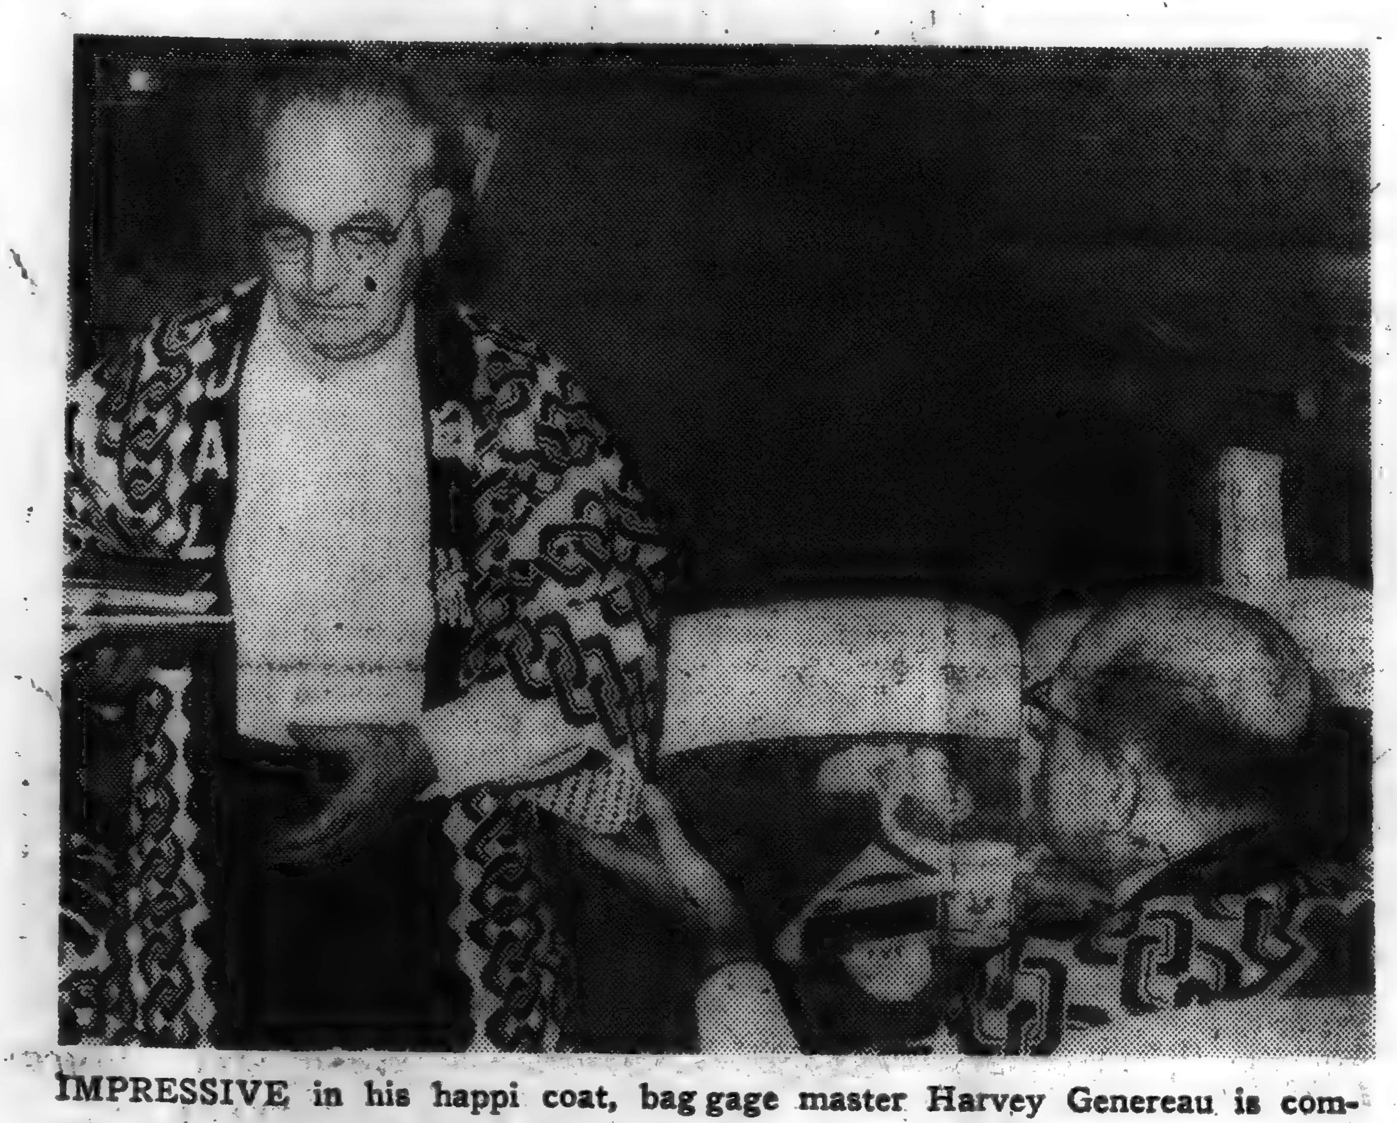
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

MAY 7 - 1960

HOT TOWELS are handed out to violinist William Waterhouse, left, and Louis Speyer, English horn player, by stewardess.

JAPAN AIR LINES stewardess greets associate conductor Richard Burgin, left, and assistant manager Norman Shirk before they boarded plane.

There's Music in the Air



IMPRESSIVE in his happi coat, baggage master Harvey Genereau is complimented by Norman Shirk. Coats were passed out to all passengers by the air line.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now on tour of the Orient under the cultural exchange program, is photographed as members relaxed during flight. George Humphrey, orchestra member who plays the viola, made these photos during the trip and airmailed them back to the Globe.

The group has already given two concerts in Formosa and is scheduled to perform 22 more in Japan.

CARD GAME IN THE AIR—Jerome Lipson, right, violist, offers light to Richard Burgin as they and Philip Kaplan, left, violinist, and Joseph Silverstein, violinist, gather around for game of cards.

69

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE
PressClipping
c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)
ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋2－8第一生命分館
電話京橋（561）9431（代表）
新聞切抜

THE JAPAN TIMES (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY 1 2 1960

Speaking of Music...

Boston Symphony Orchestra—Sumptuous Sound With Sensitivity

By MARCEL GRILLI

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, combines sumptuous sound with sensitivity. In the recreation of great music this superlative American ensemble maintains a clarity of orchestral texture as well as warmth of tone. The key, of course, is to be found in the perfect balance within each of its instrumental choirs.

The foundation of any symphony orchestra is its string tone. The Boston Symphony has a string section in which not only the violins but the lower strings have a remarkable warmth and singing quality into which the sharper tones of the wind instruments can be embedded to produce admirable translucency of tone.

The winds are notable as a finely integrated ensemble instead of an aggregate of excellent soloists. The clarinet is liquid and sensuous; the flutes light and airy, with no semblance of being breathy; while the oboes feature a lean, ethereal tone. The horns are vivid, yet with mellow tone like burnished copper.

The heavy brasses are capable of remarkable brilliance without stridency. These brasses are in every way outstanding, not only are they perfectly balanced as a choir, but the principal trumpet will take on from time to time volume, tone, and style to merge with a chord, to dominate an orchestral tutti, or play a mellifluous solo as the music may require.

Based on Blend

The orchestra's over-all tonal splendors are determined by this basic consideration for blend, yet the blend is never opaque, for the blend within each instrumental section, as evidenced alike in music by Beethoven, Berlioz or Ravel, always achieved translucency. This quality was notably revealed in the final tumultuous "Danse generale" of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," where amidst the frenzied clangor of the orchestral brilliance and all the onrush of rhythm, every detail of the music was clearly exposed.

Or take, as another extraordinary musical experience, the virtuoso performance of Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique."

It is descriptive music tinged with Byronic overtones, turbulent, tempestuous, and exciting to the nth degree. But from beginning to end it is music that breathes a splendid spontaneity. Berlioz, as Mr Munch himself reminds us, "became the Delacroix of music not by building according to rigid specifications but by working in big frescoes spattered with broad splashes of color. Everything is more than life-size." And Mr. Munch cautions, "it would be frustrating to try to listen to this music the way one looks at an exquisite miniature."

Life-Size Conception

It was precisely such a stupendous life-size conception of the work that the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented to us. The playing not only fully captured the wild and eerie quality of the music, but Mr. Munch's orchestral imagination and delicacy molded every phrase of Berlioz's tonal magnificences and recreated his intense visions. It was a fervent, firmly controlled recreation, yet flexible in rhythmic shaping and clear in instrumental articulation.

To use an expression borrowed from the "horsey set," Mr. Munch cracked the whip and he rode his orchestra hard and well. He made it play soft and slow, loud and fast, stop dead in its tracks, change gaits, in fact, do everything but saunter. In brief, Mr. Munch treated us to the kind of ultra-Romantic emotionalism which Berlioz intended—the huge accents, imperceptible pianissimos, interminable pauses, and the long subtly accented melodies—and through it all the music never lost its poetical impetus and inner cohesion. The extraordinary vividness of this performance was as much the result of musical sensitivity as of sumptuous sound.

American Work

These same qualities were experienced also in the playing, on the same program, of the second suite from the ballet score "Bacchus et Ariane" of Roussel. Produced in 1931, this, too, is colorful and incisive music in the Ravel tradition of inventive orchestral sound.

Each of the Boston Symphony's programs carry a work by a contemporary American composer. On this occasion, a pleasant interlude was provided by Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, a spirited and appealing work of about 25-minute duration.

The most attractive quality of this music is its admirable craftsmanship, embodying traditional and contemporary procedures, characteristic of all Piston's works. The music winds its course in a vigorous manner; the two outer movements have a splendid vigor and vitality. The short scherzo-like second movement serves as a bridge to a serene Adagio, in which a long, flowing melody introduced by the cello solo is gradually interwoven into the orchestral fabric.

This Symphony was one of the 15 compositions commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its 75th anniversary in 1956.

Greater Amity

In summary, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's visit in this centennial of Japan-United States relations is meeting all expectations. As a first-class American symphonic ensemble it is bringing glorious music to the major musical centers and, through such media as radio and television broadcasts, its programs are being extended to the people in the most remote reaches of this nation.

But aside from the important cultural ballast and the sheer mass of popular enjoyment, the coming of such a superlative orchestra—made possible through President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy, on the American side, and the interest of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK), the sponsoring Japanese organization—carries with it tremendous benefits of greater amity, goodwill, and understanding between the people of the two nations.

The deepest and universal gratitude, therefore, is due to those persons who have been directly and indirectly involved in bringing to fruition such an enormous cultural-diplomatic undertaking.

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE
PressClipping
c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)
ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋２－８第一生命分館
電話京橋（561）９４３１（代表）
新聞切抜

THE YOMIURI (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY 13 1960 Ed.

BOSTON'S GREAT GIFT TO MUSIC

By Edmund C. Wilkes

The long anticipated visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has materialized, and on the two occasions we have already had to hear it in performance it has entirely lived up to our expectations.

To be honest, this was only to be expected. Perhaps I should begin by stating that the Boston Symphony was the first orchestra I ever heard. While I was still a boy in high school I heard Pierre Monteux conduct it in a program of Beethoven and Debussy.

Later while I was in college I arranged my schedule so that every Friday afternoon I could buy one of the "rush seats" and climb to the second balcony to hear Serge Koussevitsky conduct a brilliant array of old music and news, often with the assistance of the greatest soloists and choruses then available. Then and there I was taught how the music should sound, and I must admit that the remembrance of those performances still conditions my listening. Not all the works pleased the fairly conservative Boston audience, which on Friday afternoons, at least, contained in addition to us students a very generous share of starchy grand-dames who could fancy a new Stravinsky or Berg score to be a personal insult and walk out in mid-performance.

But, like it or not, they were fed a diet of new works, many of which Koussevitsky commissioned from the rising generation of American composers. This was his duty and his pleasure. It was our duty to listen open-mindedly and often our pleasure to discover among these works a piquant symphony by Roy Harris, a crackling suite by Aaron Copland or a forward-looking composition by Roger Sessions.

When I moved away from Boston, the orchestra followed me on half a dozen occasions a year to New York, and I continued to search them out, learning to compare them with the fabulous Philadelphians or the New York Philharmonic, which was then being led by Toscanini. They were great days. When finally after 25 wonderful years Koussevitsky stepped down and Charles Munch replaced him in 1949, it was a foregone conclusion that the orchestra would continue to make great music. As recently as last November I heard them on their home grounds, and again in New York, and I was well satisfied. They were the same.

It would be pointless to draw comparisons between this great aggregation and, say, the Vienna Philharmonic, or the Berlin or the Leningrad. They are all great bands, but I must declare, that, prejudiced or not, I find the Boston to have the best over-all balance of all the groups that we have heard in recent years in Tokyo. For one thing, the personnel of the orchestra is as little changed as possible from year to year. Richard Burgin, who was concert master when I was in college, is still concert master and, since 1933, assistant conductor. The English horn is still played by Louis Speyer, the flute by James Pappoutsakis and the first chair players of the violas, cellos, and horns are such famous virtuosos as Joseph Pasquale, Samuel Mayes and James Stagliano.

And Charles Munch is a great director. He is a tall man of immense dignity, and in his conducting he is very forceful, even athletic, when the need arises. He is capable of the most dynamic contrasts and sustained effects. He conducts largely from memory. He has a large repertory and a mind that is inquisitive into every corner of modern music.

Before he arrived there was a rather pointless cry of anguish that he had overloaded his programs with American works that the local sponsors despaired of selling to the public. But like Koussevitsky before him, Munch knows a good score from a bad one and the inclusion of the Piston Symphony, the Copland works, the Blackwood, Barber and Kirchner will prove no worse, probably better than the works of Egk, Blacher, Jolivet or the later Prokofiev we have been hearing. And why should an American orchestra not play American composers? If a Japanese orchestra went abroad, the audiences there would expects it to play Japanese compositions—and by that I do not mean court music.

The program for the debut performance in NHK's Television Hall was heard by an invited audience including royalty, diplomats, important people, and a handful of us ordinary mortals. It was obviously an event of the season for some diplomats who have never graced the concert halls before were in attendance. It was heard and seen by millions of others who in some respects had the best of it, for I could not help but observe how well the TV cameras (relayed back to us from both sides of the stage) caught the most fascinating moments of Mr Munch's direction and selected the instrumental choirs in turn in a way that no spectator from any seat in the house could do. I must compliment the technicians who obviously had made a study of the music and presented their part of the show very well.

Furthermore the over-live and dry acoustics of the hall, which seats about 600 only, were somewhat of a disadvantage in that in the heavily instrumented passages there was at times a feeling of almost being drowned in the flood of sound.

But what sound: In the noble "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven, the strings were admirable in their precision and attack. There will be some, especially those nurtured in the Toscanini or Furtwaengler tradition, who will say that Mr Munch did not extract all the heroic stature of the symbolic protagonist Beethoven limned, that it was somewhat hurried; but there is more than one way to play the "Eroica" and this was a vital sharply accented performance in which the utterly fantastic skill of the orchestra allowed the conductor to dash headlong into passages that any lesser group would have had to approach with trepidation.

In the Hibiya Hall performance the next evening the concert hall acoustics were better for the assembled audience and the orchestra was really heard to better advantage.

Walter Piston's Symphony No 6 was one of the works commissioned by the orchestra for their 75th anniversary. It was played from London to Moscow in the orchestra's European tour, and since it was written for the special sound of the Boston and for Munch, we knew we were hearing the genuine article. Piston, who teaches at Harvard, says that his symphony "was composed with no intent other than to make music to be played and listened to."

Actually it is a charming work with a scherzo that is full of the most piquant percussion noises on record. The slow movement divides its tender melodies between solo cello and flute, and its finale bounced rythmically along to a brilliant close. No one in the audience, I venture to say, felt cheated that Piston's Symphony had been played instead of some weary old war horse.

7'

Asahi Evening News
May 12, 1960

Dazzling Performance

Boston Symphony Scores

By Heuwell Tircuit

MUSICIANS come and go here with the regularity of the seasons, and the richest for Japan is spring, when Osaka plays host to its Festival. Japan has heard a large assortment of the music world's best through its annual rite of spring, but none has so completely dazzled by sheer magnificence as had the recent Tokyo concerts of the Boston Symphony. Nothing else we have had has so completely lived up to expectation.

The brilliancy and sonority of the orchestra are something incredible. They are a very loud orchestra, that is true, but they manage to maintain their beautiful sound at all volume levels.

Anyone can make a lot of noise, but getting such volume control is a much different matter.

The string section plays like a large group of soloists, and they use a soloistic volume, which gives the whole group a great power potential. Since the string sound is so powerful, the winds and brass are free to sing out as they very rarely can with other orchestras. There were moments in the Roussel work when I thought they were going to blow the first three rows off of the Hibiya balcony, and yet they never produced an ugly or even an ungrateful sound. One has the feeling of being immersed in sound.

Super-virtuosoity is omnipresent in the Boston Symphony, and one can observe it in some rather unexpected places. The percussion section, for example, is populated by five men who are either geniuses or else insane. They stand there blandly doing the impossible as a matter of course. The shading, nuance, and subtlety of phrasing they employ are unbelievable. They make a tambourin "sing" somehow, and in their hands cymbals seem to know the difference between "piano dolce" and "piano agitato." I suppose that if some composer scored for burp, they could get it down to precisely the degree of volume and tone required of the truly symphonic burp.

Under Charles Munch, the opening concert offered: the Fantastic Symphony of Berlioz; the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston, and the Second Suite from Albert Roussel's ballet, "Bacchus et Ariane." The Air and Finale of the Handel-Harty Water Music were the wildly applauded encores.

The program naturally opened with the Japanese and American National anthems played to within an inch of their lives. Even the Star Spangled Banner emerged sounding like a piece of real music and although it may seem superfluous to mention this here, it is of the essence of the Boston Symphony. They can make a piece sound much better than it actually is, which means that we poor devils who must review their concerts of new works are playing at critical "Russian roulette." One never knows when an appraisal will blow up in one's face.

Someone once observed that "Bruckner wrote a fine Symphony, but the trouble is that he wrote it nine times." Mr. Piston has so far only written his six times. None of them is without merit, yet not one of them can be said to be especially outstanding. Piston being court composer for the Boston Symphony, they play his works all over the place.

His Sixth has one of the finest scherzi in the literature, and there are places of real charm in the first movement as well. These stay in the mind and give pleasure upon recall. The Sixth is also a terse, good humored work and deserves encouragement for that, since there are so few like it in modern music. It is pleasing enough—if all you want from music is to be pleased.

The Boston Symphony owns Berlioz, Ravel, and Roussel, and they display their wares to maximum advantage. Mr. Munch thrives on spur-of-the-moment temperament, and in the last two movements of the Berlioz he beat the orchestra some pretty fantastic tempi. It will be a long time before any local group dare play this literature.

Mr. Munch deserves a special pat on the back for having been the first to tour Japan with programs above the provincial level we usually get. American music is almost totally unknown to Japanese audiences, and what better way to introduce it than with a first-class American orchestra? Yet I can not help wish they were offering more distinguished pieces than Barber's Boogie-Woogie etude and Dello Joio's profanity against Missa De Angelis. Both these composers have been presented on several occasions, whereas several major Americans have not had hearings here.

Roger Sessions in particular needs presentation, simply because the Japanese orchestras can not play it themselves. The Japan Philharmonic, for example, recorded the Sessions First piece by piece, but thought better of trying to offer it publicly, and the Imperial Phil. had to give up its hope of doing the Fourth last month, even though the parts were here. This is the kind of music we need. Many many thanks for the Kirchner, the Blackwood, and the Copland First. Idem aside, there is no substitute for first-class music. Still, considering what we got in the past, we should feel grateful.

In SUMMARY: easily the best played and most interesting programs Japan has had. The acid test will be whether they can maintain this level of performance. If they do, it will be another "first" for Japan.

Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Hibiya Hall in its second appearance in Tokyo on May 5.
Asahi Shimbun

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 61,527

MAY 12 1960

Japanese Critic Hails Orchestra

TOKYO, May 12 (AP)—The Japan Times today praised the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra for its "life-size conception."

The orchestra "combines sumptuous sound with sensitivity," wrote Marcel Grilli, music critic for the Japan Times.

The critic selected for special praise the orchestra's presentation of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" where "amidst the frenzied clangor of the orchestral brilliance and all the onrush of rhythm, every detail of the music was clearly exposed."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 369,809

MAY 12 1960

JAPAN LAUDS SYMPHONY

TOKYO (AP)—The Japan Times yesterday praised the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra for its "life-size conception."

The orchestra "combines sumptuous sound with sensitivity," wrote Marcel Grilli, music critic for the Japan Times.

The critic selected for special praise the orchestra's presentation of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" where "amidst the frenzied clangor of the orchestral brilliance and all the onrush of rhythm, every detail of the music was clearly exposed."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Circ. 36,416

MAY 12 1960

SYMPHONY PRAISED

TOYKO (AP) — The Japan Times Wednesday praised the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra for its "life-sized conception."

The orchestra "combines sumptous sound with sensitivity," wrote Marcel Grilli, music critic for the Japan Times.

The critic selected for special praise the orchestra's presentation of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" where "amidst the frenzied clangor of the orchestral brilliance and all the onrush of rhythm, every detail of the music was clearly exposed.".

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815

MAY 12 1960

Japanese Critic Praises Hub Orchestra Concert

TOKYO (AP)—The Japan Times Wednesday praised the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra for its "life-size conception."

The orchestra "combines sumptuous sound with sensitivity," wrote Marcel Grilli, music critic for the Japan Times.

The critic selected for special praise the orchestra's presentation of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe' 'where "amidst the frenzied clangor of the orchestral brilliance and all the onrush of rhythm, every detail of the music was clearly exposed."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 121,657

MAY 11 1960

Boston Symphony Draws Ovation From Japanese

CHARLES MUNCH
In the Far East

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has performed more concerts in Hartford than any other visiting symphonic group and will return next season in the Bushnell Symphony Series, is arousing tremendous acclaim currently in Japan.

Such is the word received by Bushnell Managing Director William H. Mortensen, whose close association with the orchestra's leadership dates back to 1930.

* * *

OPENING their Japanese tour the night of May 4, the Bostonians under the baton of Charles Munch gave millions of Japanese their first taste of New England-made music via a 70-minute telecast from Tokyo.

After opening with the Japanese national anthem and "The Star-Spangled Banner," Dr. Munch led the 100-plus players, and Ravel's second "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite, a specialty of the conductor which has been frequently heard in Bushnell concerts.

Guests at this initial concert included Crown Prince Akihito, Crown Princess Michiko, Ambassador and Mrs. Douglas MacArthur 2nd, and many leaders in the field of government, diplomacy, culture and education.

Newspapers covering the concert, and those which followed on succeeding days, were quick to describe the orchestra as one of America's greatest cultural assets, and to extol its tour as Japan's foremost musical treat since the war.

* * *

THE BOSTON Symphony will be playing in Japan's major cities all of this month, under President Eisenhower's international program for cultural exchanges.

Then three early June concerts are scheduled for Manila, seven have been arranged for Australian cities and two in New Zealand before the orchestra flies back on June 19 to prepare for its upcoming Tanglewood season.

Next season's Bushnell Symphony Series, for which applications are now being accepted, will bring in addition to the Boston Symphony, the Warsaw Philharmonic, New York Philharmonic, Cleveland and Philadelphia orchestras.

The Yomiuri
May 12, 1960

Czech Trio, Boston Symphony On Video

The Czech Trio and the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight take turns at coming on the air.

• CZECH TRIO.
NTV, YTV 9.15-9.45 pm.

Since their arrival here the trio have endeared themselves to many music lovers.

Founded in 1946, the outfit consists of pianist Josef Palenicek, violinist Alexandre Plocek and cellist Sacha Vectmov.

They have toured overseas extensively and impressed critics in many countries with their brilliant styles.

On the program this evening, their selection features works by Suk, Dvorak, and Rimsky-Korsakov.

• BOSTON SYMPHONY.
NHK 10.45-11.35 pm.

Now in Japan with the orchestra, Aaron Copland, one of the most important American composers, tonight takes a bow on television.

Selected for the special television concert are two of his compositions: 1) First Symphony, and 2) "The Tender Land."

Born in 1900, Copland has long been known in Japan through records.

Among the most popular of his works in Japan are "El Salon Mexico," which he composed in 1936 based on his impressions of Mexico, and "Appalachian Spring" (1944), for which he won the Pulitzer award.

Copland himself will conduct the orchestra on the program today.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 50,968

MAY 12 1960

Japan Times Lauds Boston Symphony

TOKYO (AP) — The Japan Times Wednesday praised the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra for its "life-size conception."

The orchestra "combines sumptuous sound with sensitivity," wrote Marcel Grilli, music critic for the Japan Times.

The critic selected for special praise the orchestra's presentation of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" where "amidst the frenzied clangor of the orchestral brilliance and all the onrush of rhythm, every detail of the music was clearly exposed."

[illegible] people do not recog-

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

MAY 13 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN PROVINCIAL CITY

Orchestra Receives a Warm Welcome in Matsuyama on Island of Shikoku

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to The New York Times.

MATSUYAMA, Japan, May 12—There were two interesting encounters here yesterday. The Boston Symphony had its first taste of the warmth and friendliness of provincial Japan and this city had its first contact with a major American orchestra.

In fact, for many in the audience the Boston's concert was their first experience with a live orchestra, for Matsuyama is not on the regular concert circuit. It is a small city on the island of Shikoku and few musicians ever come here.

Clearly the concert generated good-will, but it was not as big a success as it might have been. The program was one of the problems.

On its Japanese tour, the orchestra is making a point of playing the same sort of programs it plays in Boston. Thus, two of its major offerings for Matsuyama were Leon Kirchner's Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion and the twenty-two-minute adagio of Mahler's Tenth Symphony.

Mahler Well Performed

The Mahler was especially well performed, with the violas, in particular, playing with a depth of expressiveness that matched their beauty of tone. But Kirchner and late Mahler were hardly right for a town like this, which showed how little concert experience it had had at the intermission.

In television concerts there are no intermissions where viewers get up, and take a stroll. Not being accustomed to such breaks, the audience last night just stayed in its place.

Another problem was the leadership. The conductor was Richard Burgin, who is leading five of the Japanese concerts. Mr. Burgin has been the Boston's concertmaster for many years and he is an excellent man in the job. But he is not an inspiring conductor. And last night in the one work that was well chosen for the audience—Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony—he did not lift the men from the routine.

2 Encores Played

But the audience was grateful for the Tchaikovsky nevertheless, and Mr. Burgin obliged with two encores, the air from Handel's "Water Music" and the march from Prokofieff's "The Love for Three Oranges."

On the other side, the encounter there was considerably less qualification about complete success. Matsuyama certainly made a hit with the Bostonians. And well it might. It is a lovely town set among mountains, and because it is blessed with abundant hot springs, it has many charming Japanese-style inns and the relaxed gaiety of a popular spa.

The town's conquest of its visitors began Tuesday afternoon when most of its school children were at the pier to meet the boat that brought the orchestra down the Inland Sea. Then, after a processional ride to Dogo, the hot spring sector, the musicians found big signs in English in front of all their hotels. They read "Welcome Boston Symphony."

Then they enjoyed removing their shoes in the inns, getting into comfortable kimonos, and later soaking in the relaxing—and communal—hot baths.

73

NDAY HERALD, MAY 15, 1960

John Fiasca Dies in Japan, Symphony Viola Was 37

John Fiasca, 37, of 66 The Fenway, a member of the viola section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died yesterday in his sleep in Fukuoka, Japan, where the orchestra was appearing during its Asiatic tour.

JOINED IN 1954

The death of the musician—he was one of the youngest members of the orchestra—was attributed to acute vascular collapse resulting from a heart ailment. After an autopsy, the body was to be returned to Fiasca's native Milwaukee.

Mr. Fiasca attended the Wisconsin School of Music and studied viola at the Juilliard School of Music in New York under Hans Letz.

He joined the Boston Symphony with Charles Munch in 1954 after playing for the St. Louis, Portland, Ore., Symphony Orchestras, the National Symphony of Washington, D.C., and the Columbia Pictures Studio Orchestra in Hollywood.

In 1956, he accompanied the Boston orchestra on a tour that extended to Russia.

He arrived with the Symphony in Japan eearly this month for a seeries of 22 concerts as part of a tour that includes the Phillippines, Australia and New Zealand.

He was the son of the late Pasquale Fiasca. His mother, Filomena, lives in Milwaukee.

Other survivors include three brothers, Patrick of Milwaukee, Alfred of Green Bay, Wis., and Michael Fiasca of Portland, Ore.

The Japan Times
May 16, 1960

Boston Symphony's Viola Player Dies in Hotel Room

FUKUOKA (Kyodo) — John Fiasca, 36-year-old viola player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was found dead in his bed in the Hakata Imperial Hotel in Fukuoka Saturday afternoon.

Police said yesterday Fiasca was believed to have died of an acute attack caused by a weak heart or excessive drinking, as he showed no external injuries. It was not immediately known whether it was a case of homicide, police said.

The body of Fiasca was transferred to the U.S. Air Force base at Itazuke, outside of Fukuoka.

Thomas Perry, manager of the orchestra, said the orchestra will continue its performance tour of the Far East in spite of the death of Fiasca.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra led by conductor Charles Munch, is currently on a 22-concert tour of Japan under the Japan-U.S. centennial program.

The Yomiuri
May 16, 1960

US Violinist Found Dead

Japanese police said Sunday that John Fiasca, a Milwaukee-born violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra now touring Japan, was found dead in his hotel suite in Fukuoka, southern Japan, Saturday afternoon.

A police official said that following a post-mortem examination it seems that Fiasca died of a natural cause because he had "no external injuries."

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700

MAY 1960

Boston Symphony Flies On Far East Tour

Closing its Boston season on April 23, the Boston Symphony Orchestra left on the following Monday morning from Boston's Logan airport in two groups on the first leg of its eight-week tour of the Far East. From New York's Idlewild, one group headed by Richard Burgin, associate conductor, began a non-stop jet flight to Los Angeles, and then flew to Tokyo by way of Honolulu. A second group, headed by Thomas J. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager, and Mrs. Perry flew via New York, Seattle and Anchorage, Alaska, to Tokyo. Conductor Charles Munch, his staff, and Leonard Burket, orchestral music administrator, left later by jet for Los Angeles and then flew direct to the Japanese capital.

The orchestra, after arrival in Tokyo, April 27, left the same day for Seoul, Korea, where the first concert was scheduled on April 29. Guest conductor Aaron Copland was to join the orchestra on May 1, when it returned to Tokyo. On the schedule are 22 concerts in Japan, including 7 in Tokyo, in May. On May 30 the players fly to the Philippines for three concerts in Manila (June 1-3); then to Brisbane, Australia, for a program on June 6; others follow in Sydney, June 7 to 9; Adelaide, June 11; Melbourne, June 13 and 14. Two concerts in New Zealand include one in Wellington, June 16, and another in Auckland, June 17.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

MAY 15 1960

Boston Symphony Player Dies

TOKYO, May 15 (Sunday) (AP)—The police said today that John Fiasca, a Milwaukee-born violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra now touring Japan, was found dead yesterday in his hotel suite in Fukuoka, Southern Japan. An autopsy will be held.

5/15/60

Boston Symphony Violinist Dies

STARS & STRIPES

TOKYO (AP)—John Fiasca, a Milwaukee-born violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra now touring Japan, was found dead in his hotel suite in Fukuoka, Japan, Saturday afternoon.

Cause of the death was not immediately known, but a police official said Fiasca apparently died of natural causes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4210

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,452

MAY 20 1960

John Fiasca of Boston Symphony Dies in Japan

John Fiasca, member of the viola section of the touring Boston Symphony Orchestra, died in Fukuoka, Japan.

A medical report indicated that the 37-year-old musician succumbed of a heart ailment.

Mr. Fiasca, a native of Milwaukee, studied at the Wisconsin School of Music before attending the famed Juilliard School in New York, where he studied under Hans Letz.

Prior to joining the Boston Symphony in 1954, he played for the St. Louis Symphony, the Portland, Or., Symphony, the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, and Columbia Pictures Studio.

His residence in Boston was at 66 The Fenway.

Mr. Fiasca was with the Boston Symphony in 1956 during its European tour.

He was the son of the late Pasquale Fiasca. His mother, Filomena, lives in Milwaukee.

Also surviving are three brothers, Patrick of Milwaukee, Alfred of Green Bay, Wis., and Michael of Portland, Or.

NDAY HERALD, MAY 15, 1960

John Fiasca Dies in Japan, Symphony Viola Was 37

John Fiasca, 37, of 66 The Fenway, a member of the viola section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died yesterday in his sleep in Fukuoka, Japan, where the orchestra was appearing during its Asiatic tour.

JOINED IN 1954

The death of the musician—he was one of the youngest members of the orchestra—was attributed to acute vascular collapse resulting from a heart ailment. After an autopsy, the body was to be returned to Fiasca's native Milwaukee.

Mr. Fiasca attended the Wisconsin School of Music and studied viola at the Juilliard School of Music in New York under Hans Letz.

He joined the Boston Symphony with Charles Munch in 1954 after playing for the St. Louis, Portland, Ore., Symphony Orchestras, the National Symphony of Washington, D.C., and the Columbia Pictures Studio Orchestra in Hollywood.

In 1956, he accompanied the Boston orchestra on a tour that extended to Russia.

He arrived with the Symphony in Japan eearly this month for a seeries of 22 concerts as part of a tour that includes the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

He was the son of the late Pasquale Fiasca. His mother, Filomena, lives in Milwaukee.

Other survivors include three brothers, Patrick of Milwaukee, Alfred of Green Bay, Wis., and Michael Fiasca of Portland, Ore.

The Japan Times
May 16, 1960

Boston Symphony's Viola Player Dies in Hotel Room

FUKUOKA (Kyodo) — John Fiasca, 36-year-old viola player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was found dead in his bed in the Hakata Imperial Hotel in Fukuoka Saturday afternoon.

Police said yesterday Fiasca was believed to have died of an acute attack caused by a weak heart or excessive drinking, as he showed no external injuries. It was not immediately known whether it was a case of homicide, police said.

The body of Fiasca was transferred to the U.S. Air Force base at Itazuke, outside of Fukuoka.

Thomas Perry, manager of the orchestra, said the orchestra will continue its performance tour of the Far East in spite of the death of Fiasca.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra led by conductor Charles Munch, is currently on a 22 concert tour of Japan under the Japan-U.S. centennial program

---

The Yomiuri
May 16, 1960

US Violinist Found Dead

Japanese police said Sunday that John Fiasca, a Milwaukee-born violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra now touring Japan, was found dead in his hotel suite in Fukuoka, southern Japan, Saturday afternoon.

A police official said that following a post-mortem examination it seems that Fiasca died of a natural cause because he had "no external injuries."

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,835
MAY 15 1960

Boston Symphony Player Dies

TOKYO, May 15 (Sunday) (AP)—The police said today that John Fiasca, a Milwaukee-born violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra now touring Japan, was found dead yesterday in his hotel suite in Fukuoka, Southern Japan. An autopsy will be held.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2073, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4[illegible]

Italian News
Boston, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,452
[illegible] 20 1960

John Fiasca of Boston Symphony Dies in Japan

John Fiasca, member of the viola section of the touring Boston Symphony Orchestra, died in Fukuoka, Japan.

A medical report indicated that the 37-year-old musician succumbed of a heart ailment.

Mr. Fiasca, a native of Milwaukee, studied at the Wisconsin School of Music before attending the famed Juilliard School in New York, where he studied under Hans Letz.

Prior to joining the Boston Symphony in 1954, he played for the St. Louis Symphony, the Portland, Or. Symphony, the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, and Columbia Pictures Studio.

His residence in Boston was at 66 The Fenway.

Mr. Fiasca was with the Boston Symphony in 1956 during its European tour.

He was the son of the late Pasquale Fiasca. His mother, Filomena, lives in Milwaukee.

Also surviving are three brothers, Patrick of Milwaukee, Alfred of Green Bay, Wis., and Michael of Portland, Or.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700

MAY 1960

Boston Symphony Flies On Far East Tour

Closing its Boston season on April 23, the Boston Symphony Orchestra left on the following Monday morning from Boston's Logan airport in two groups on the first leg of its eight-week tour of the Far East. From New York's Idlewild, one group headed by Richard Burgin, associate conductor, began a non-stop jet flight to Los Angeles, and then flew to Tokyo by way of Honolulu. A second group, headed by Thomas J. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager, and Mrs. Perry flew via New York, Seattle and Anchorage, Alaska, to Tokyo. Conductor Charles Munch, his staff, and Leonard Burket, orchestral music administrator, left later by jet for Los Angeles and then flew direct to the Japanese capital.

The orchestra, after arrival in Tokyo, April 27, left the same day for Seoul, Korea, where the first concert was scheduled on April 29. Guest conductor Aaron Copland was to join the orchestra on May 1, when it returned to Tokyo. On the schedule are 22 concerts in Japan, including 7 in Tokyo, in May. On May 30 the players fly to the Philippines for three concerts in Manila (June 1-3); then to Brisbane, Australia, for a program on June 6; others follow in Sydney, June 7 to 9; Adelaide, June 11; Melbourne, June 13 and 14. Two concerts in New Zealand include one in Wellington, June 16, and another in Auckland, June 17.

[illegible]

Boston Symphony Violinist Dies

STARS & STRIPES

TOKYO (AP)—John Fiasca, a Milwaukee-born violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra now touring Japan, was found dead in his hotel suite in Fukuoka, Japan, Saturday afternoon.

Cause of the death was not immediately known, but a police official said Fiasca apparently died of natural causes.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,835

MAY 15 1960

JAPANESE DELICACY VS. AMERICAN SONORITY

By ROSS PARMENTER

TOKYO.

THE day after the Boston Symphony arrived in Tokyo its [illegible] assembled for [illegible] press conference. The Japanese newsmen proved more active in taking photographs than in asking questions. But one question came to their lips right away: "Had the orchestra ever played any Japanese music in Boston?"

Charles Munch, the conductor, had to shake his head. A little later came the question: "Was the orchestra going to play any Japanese music on its tour of Japan?" Again the answer was in the negative.

It seemed like an opportunity missed. One says this partly in the light of the moving effect the orchestra has made in playing the Japanese national anthem, and partly in view of the fact that the United States Department of State has insisted that there be an American work on every program.

Playing a Japanese piece would have been a gesture of goodwill, and one can easily imagine how pleased and proud the Japanese would have been to have heard a work by one of their countrymen played by so fine an orchestra. It is reasonably certain that a Japanese piece could have been found.

Winning Friends

But Japanese music or no, the Boston tour, which is now at the midway mark, gives promise of making many new friends for the United States. It certainly got off to a rousing start in Tokyo. The initial telecast and a great deal of newspaper coverage has made Japan well aware of the presence of its visitors, and the first public concert at Hibiya Hall carried away its audience. The listeners cheered the Bostonians as a Japanese audience has seldom been known to do.

Having heard two of Japan's finest orchestras, this visitor can understand why the people of Tokyo who could crowd into that first public concert were so overwhelmed. If one word has to be found for it, the word would be sonority.

The two orchestras this listener has heard were the Japan Philharmonic and the Tokyo Symphony. They were both good. But they do not have the power to pour out great floods of golden sonority.

The warmth, the power, the richness of color, the great full-throated songfulness—these are the Boston qualities they did not have. And so one can be sure that these were the elements heard in Hibiya that made the Boston's performances of Berlioz' "Symphonie fantastique" and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" so extraordinarily thrilling.

But sensuousness, power and color are not the only orchestral virtues. What the Japanese orchestras had was a quite exquisite tonal refinement. Lacking the assured virtuosity of the Japan Philharmonic, the Tokyo Symphony had to play more gingerly. But even if it was somewhat held back by the need to take pains to play carefully, the Tokyo Symphony was always beautiful in sound.

The purity of the intonation, the delicacy of texture, the unfailing accuracy and the sweet songfulness of the orchestra were always a delight to the ear. And Shinji Tohyama, the Japanese conductor who has just returned from several years of study in Vienna, led it with careful and graceful musicianship, especially in Mozart's "Linz" Symphony.

The Japan Philharmonic has the same merits of purity, delicacy, accuracy and lyricism, but it also has the ability to play with remarkable deftness and assurance. Its sound is almost the most enchanting orchestral sound this listener has ever heard.

Akeo Watanabe, the Japan Philharmonic's regular conductor, is out of the country now, and the leader on this particular occasion—a broadcast sponsored by the Tokyo Railroad Company—was another talented Japanese, Tadashi Mori. And it should be noted that this orchestra has an American concertmaster. He is Broadus Erle, who used to be the leader of the New Music String Quartet.

What was notable about both orchestras was that the strings were the finest of the choirs. Investigation of this phenomenon led to the information that the Japanese situation with regards to strings is the reverse of that in the United States.

Here there is no shortage of strings. On the contrary, string players are emerging from the music schools in large numbers. Mr. Erle, who teaches some of them, is amazed at their talents. And other observers are convinced that before very long America will be importing string players from Japan.

Not only is violin study pushed over here, but it also has been facilitated by the fact that the Japanese have always been among the world's finest woodworkers. They have been able to make violins that can be purchased fairly cheaply. Thus students have been able to acquire good instruments to work with. With brasses and woodwinds this has not been so. Wind instruments are expensive and have to come from abroad.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,835
MAY 17 1960

HIROSHIMA HEARS BOSTON SYMPHONY

Musicians Visit the Memorial Museum—Their Concert Is Warmly Received

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to The New York Times.

HIROSHIMA, Japan, May 16—Hiroshima is an extraordinarily moving place. For grief there is the Peace Memorial Museum with its appalling documentation of the explosion that destroyed the city fifteen years ago. For hope there is the new Hiroshima that has grown up from the ashes of the atomic desert.

Hope predominates, for that is the spirit of its friendly citizens. And the new city they have built, with its broad avenues, parks, modern buildings and bright neon signs, is prosperous, progressive and attractive.

Yesterday the scales were tipped still further in the life-affirming direction, for the Boston Symphony brought music to the city that suffered the bomb. The city, in return, responded with generous enthusiasm.

Saddened by Death

For various reasons, one might have expected the concert to be less than exhilarating. Yesterday was one of the days the orchestra had to travel and to give a concert as well. And when the musicians arrived here in the afternoon they were tired. They were saddened, too, by the death of a colleague the day before. John Fiasca, 37-year-old violist from Milwaukee, had suffered a fatal heart attack in Fukuoka.

Then the musicians were further saddened, and in some cases stunned, by the museum. With its photographs, models and grisly displays, it demonstrated that the devastation of the bomb was worse than most of them had ever imagined. The still standing shell of the gutted industrial exposition hall further increased the impact.

How, they wondered, could the people of Hiroshima smilingly ask Americans for "kind writing," a phrase those who speak a little English sometimes use for autographs?

Perhaps it was in response to such a forgiving and unembittered spirit that the musicians played the Japanese national anthem with especial dignity and expressiveness. At all events, it got the concept off to an excellent start and, despite the heat of the concert hall, the orchestra played well all evening.

Charles Munch conducted. The 1,800 persons who jammed the new concert hall Hiroshima has built as part of its Peace Park, were given Program 'C.' That is, Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique," Norman Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2.

Two girls in white and pink kimonos brought in flowers at the end, but the continuing applause demonstrated the desire for encores. Mr. Munch led two, both excerpts from Handel's "Water Music." Then he showed that the concert was over by a gracious gesture. He picked up the flowers that had been placed beside the podium and bowingly waved good-bye.

The Japanese have a beautiful proverb: "Meeting is the beginning of parting." They understood the gesture and appreciated the treasuring of their well-loved flowers.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
NEW YORKER
D. 28,986 S. 30,153

MAY 17 1960

Alice Hughes

Extremes of Elegance And of Oriental Poverty

This morning's mail had a flimsy letter with beautiful Japanese stamps postmarked "Toyko." My sister, who lives in Boston, is married to a French violinist in that city's Symphony orchestra. Currently that noted band is touring Japan and Australia, giving concerts authorized by President Eisenhower's U. S. International Cultural Presentations. My younger sister who lives in Darien, Connecticut, joined the Symphony flight. She writes a colorful description of the first concert, attended by only 650 invited guests, including the young Crown Prince of Japan and his Crown Princess. Quietly standing outside the concert hall, just to be close to the event, were thousands of Tokyo residents. And by statistics, the 8 million TV sets in Japan enabled at least 25 million inhabitants of the country to hear this prize orchestra.

Conductor Charle Munch, knowing the Japanese love for Beethoven's music, soothed them with the "Eroica" smyphony and then stirred them with Ravel's spirited "Daphnis and Chloe" suite, whose crashing climax was drowned out by the cheers of the audience. En route to Tokyo my relatives stopped at Hong Kong, an Oriental Mecca teeming with tourists who spend their time shipping and being fitted for overnight, made-to-order clothes at low prices, at which this city excels. While there they attended an elegant garden party at the Governor's home. They first telephoned the aide-de-camp to inquire about dress for the occasion. His answer: 'Hats and gloves, of course. The rest is up to you." My younger sister never wears a hat, so she strolled into a flower shop on the street wh[illegible] the Peninsula hotel is lo[illegible] and bought 85c worth o[illegible] grant, fresh yellow-and[illegible] flowers and twirled them [illegible] circlet which won ma[illegible] pliments.

* * *

THIS GARDEN PARTY was lavish beyond imagination. Two bands, each made up of 100 musicians, alternated with continuous music. The Fusiliers wore brilliant red uniforms. The other band wore black Chinese suits. Women guests were all dressed in their native attire. Titled Indian women wore lustrous white-and-gold saris, and many had rubies embedded on the side of one nostril and on the forehead. Chinese women wore slim, sheathlike dresses, richly brocaded, while the Japanese were in their most resplendent kimonos. By comparison, English women looked drab, in flower-printed dresses and big skimmer-hats. French women and those from South America in Paris style cocktail dresses heightened the elegance, while American women, simply and correctly dressed, revealed their trim svelte figures. Women from local areas wore dresses draped in handsomely striped Thai silks.

In contrast to the luxury and lofty protocol of the wealthy society and diplomatic set, are natives and particularly refugees, escaped from Communist China into international Hong Kong. They have no money, no possessions, no homes, little food and nowhere to exist other than in the streets. At night they sleep in hovels, on roofs, doorsteps and under crowded cardboard tinder shacks housing 15 to 20 men, women and children. The city literally crawls with displaced people whose plight is unbelievably sordid. Their only means of earning a living is to hire a junk, put out to sea and fish. They sell all they can: what's left, they eat. Destitute women beg on the street surrounded by children, often 5 to 6, with a babe in arms and the rest under 10 or 12 years, at which age they go forth to forage for food on their own.

[illegible] Tokyo, Osaka and Kyoto concerts are over and the Boston Symphony orchestra is now en route for Australia. Concerts scheduled for Korea were called off due to the recent uprisings. I envy this thrilling journey. Whatever the day's emotional or physical hardship, each evening is enriched with melodious bursts of lovely music.

Copyright, 1960, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

72

ASAHI EVENING NEWS, WEDNESDAY, MAY 18, 1960

FOR NEW YORK: Mr. Nagataka Murayama, the Chairman of the Board of the Asahi Shimbun and the Asahi Evening News, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Michi Murayama, left Tokyo for New York by PanAm plane midnight last night to attend the 13th Congress of the Federation Internationale des Editeurs de Journaux et Publications. Mr. Murayama, who is Vice-President of the Federation, will deliver a speech entitled "A Milestone in Publishing," in connection with Asahi Shimbun's facsimile printing. The Murayamas are scheduled to return early next month after inspecting newspaper facilities and organizations in the U.S. Asahi Eve. News

---

The Yomiuri
May 21, 1960

Music Calendar

By Edmund C. Wilkes

The performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are the great events of the coming week but there are other attractive events as well.

SUNDAY, May 22

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returns to Tokyo under Charles Munch's direction to play from 6.30 in Hibiya Hall. Beethoven's Symphony No 5, Easley Blackwood's Symphony No 1 and three episodes from the third act of Wagner's "Meistersinger" comprise the program.

MONDAY, May 23

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard from 6.30 in Hibiya Hall in a program conducted by Aaron Coplan, celebrated American composer. Fantasias for strings by Purcell, Haydn's Symphony No 95, and Copland's own rarely heard First Symphony and a suite from his opera "The Tender Land" make up the program.

SUNDAY, May 29

The Boston Symphony presents its final concert under Charles Munch's direction from 6.30 in Hibiya Hall. Samuel Barber's "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance," Debussy's "La Mer," and Brahms' Symphony No 2 in D Major are the program.

MONDAY, May 30

Under associate conductor Richard Burgin's direction, the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its farewell in the Tokyo Gymnasium in Sendagaya from 6.30. Leon Kirchner's Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion, Mahler's Adagio from the unfinished Tenth Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No 5 are the final program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Natick Bulletin
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,011

MAY 19 1960

WETHERSFIELD

Sonya Davidson
OL 3-1219

Attention Wethersfield residents! Home-owners in the area who have occasion to drive through Wethersfield streets several times during the course of a normal day, have noticed the increasingly careless manner in which young cyclists abuse traffic regulations and the courtesy of the road, especially during dusk. They have also been greatly annoyed with the "laissez-faire" attitude of local suburban dwellers who seem to feel that it is permissible to allow their toddlers to sit and play on the roadside or even to wander casually into the middle of the road, figuring that it is up to the motorist to see that they remain with life and limb intact to say nothing of the countless unleashed dogs who are allowed to roam the area at large, jumping viciously in front of every passing car, destroying well-kept shrubs and lawns, and terrifying the children! A word of warning by parents to their offspring as well as pet-owners confining their dogs to their own property where they rightfully belong, might serve to avoid tragic accidents and make this community a far pleasenter place to live in.

Mrs. Goldie Korenberg of Westlake Rd. was guest speaker at the May meeting in Winchester of the Minutemen Division of World Book Encyclopedia. This division includes most of Boston and the surrounding towns. Mrs. Korenberg spoke on, "The Complete Educational Aspect of World Book Encyclopedia and Child Craft" before an audience of sales representatives and managers.

A speedy recovery to Mrs. Irving Kloper of 67 Westlake Rd. who was recently a victim of a freak accident at the famed Grossinger Resort where she and Mr. Kloper were spending a few days. Mrs. Kloper suffered a broken arm while playing volley-ball and had to have it strapped up in such a manner as to enable her to drive her car back home again. By an odd coincidence, the proprietor of our local delicatessen, Max Covall, was vacationing at Grossingers at the same time.

Congratulations to the McCue family of 17 Felch Rd. who were the lucky winners of a rent-free month in a cottage on Cape Cod. Mr. McCue, who is employed as a production planner, was the first to have his name drawn at a recent lot-drawing at the Natick Shopping Center.

The latest reports on Joseph Silverstein of Irving Rd. who is now on a far Eastern Tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is that he is being lionized and wined and dined in great style at Consulate parties.. The symphony concerts have been enthusiastically received throughout the orient. Meanwhile, the other two Wethersfield members of the symphony, Arthur Press of Russell Circle and Charles Yancich of Rutledge Rd., are playing in the Pop concerts.

THE JAPAN TIMES, THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1960

Boston Symphony Playing in Y'hama

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the noted conductor Charles Munch will give its one and only concert in Yokohama at the Kanagawa Prefectural Music Hall on Friday, May 20 from 6:30 p.m.

To be heard are Samuel Barber's "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance;" Debussy's "La Mer," and Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D Min.

Tickets for good seats are still available for this fine program at ¥2,500 and ¥2,000 at the NHK Yokohama branch on the 5th floor of the Daiwa Bank at Onoecho, Yokohama or at the hall itself.

The concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are part of the celebrations of the centennial of U.S.-Japan relations and the 35th anniversary of NHK (Japan Broadcasting Corporation) and are being sponsored by the NHK Service Center with the support of the Foreign Office and the U.S. Embassy.

ASAHI EVENING NEWS, THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1960

Boston Symphony To Perform Friday

The visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a performance under the direction of Charles Munch in Yokohama tomorrow evening.

The curtain will go up at 6:30 p.m. at the Kanagawa Prefectural Music Hall.

The program offers Medea's "Meditation" and "Dance of Vengeance" by Barber, "La Mer" by Debussy and "Symphony No. 2 in D major" by Brahms.

Tickets are available at the Yokohama branch of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK) or at the Music Hall.

NHK is sponsoring the current Japan performance tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the support of the Foreign Office and the American Embassy to mark the 35th anniversary of radio broadcasting and the centenary of Japan-U.S. diplomatic relations.

BLANK PAGE

77

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872

MAY 26 1960

Tour Not Affected

Boston—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, currently on a tour of the Far East, has not been affected by tidal waves in the area, a spokesman said yesterday.

The orchestra is scheduled to give performances in Japanese cities until May 30. Other concerts will follow in Manila, P.I., Australia and New Zealand.

The musicians will return to Boston June 19.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 25,163

MAY 26 1960

Boston Symphony Safe In Wave-Swept Japan

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now touring Japanese cities, has been unaffected by tidal waves in the area, a spokesman said yesterday. The musicians will perform in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston June 19.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 14,737

MAY 26 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Unaffected By Jap Tidal Waves

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now touring Japanese cities has been unaffected by tidal waves in the area, a spokesman said yesterday. The musicians will perform in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston June 19.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, [illegible]
Circ. 11,602

MAY 26 1960

ALL'S WELL

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now touring Japanese citizen has been unaffected by tidal waves in area, a spokesman said yesterday. The musicians will perform in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston June 19.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208

MAY [illegible] 1960

Symphony Ducks Waves

BOSTON, May 26 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now touring Japanese cities, has been unaffected by tidal waves in the area, a spokesman said yesterday. The musicians will perform in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston June 19.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. [illegible]

MAY 26 1960

ORCHESTRA SAFE

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now touring Japanese cities has been unaffected by tidal waves in the area, a spokesman said yesterday. The musicians will perform in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston June 19.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

MAY 26 1960

BSO Is Safe In Japan Storms

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, now touring Japanese cities, has been unaffected by tidal waves in the area, a spokesman said yesterday. The musicians will perform in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston June 19.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076

MAY 26 1960

• • •

Music as Usual

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY orchestra, on a tour of the Far East, has not been affected by tidal waves in the area, a spokesman reported yesterday.

The orchestra is scheduled to give performances in Japanese cities until May 30. Other concerts will follow in Manila, P.I., Australia and New Zealand. The musicians will return to Boston June 19.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

MAY 26 1960

B.S.O. Is O.K

"The B.S.O. is O.K."

This comforting message wa received last night by wives o members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra currently o tour in the Far East.

The women cabled the man ager of the group Tuesday t see if their husbands were i any danger from the tida waves which have been rock ing the area.

No word came until late yesterday afternoon. A cable wa received at the orchestra's personnel department at Symphony Hall from manage Thomas D. Perry Jr. whic simply said:

"B.S.O. Unaffected by Tida Waves."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341

MAY 26 1960

Hub Symphony Is Not in Area Of Tidal Waves

BOSTON (UPI) — A spokesman for the Boston Symphony Orchestra said he received word Wednesday that the orchestra was unaffected by tidal waves on its current Japanese tour.

Symphony Hall publicity director Laning Humphrey said he received the following telegram from Tokyo Wednesday:

"B.S.O. (Boston Symphony Orchestra) unaffected by tidal waves."

Humphrey said the telegram was signed by Thomas D. Perry Jr., orchestra manager. Earthquakes along the Chilean coast recently caused huge tidal waves to batter the coast of Japan.

The Boston Symphony has five more concert dates scheduled in Japan before flying to Manila for concerts on June 1, 2 and 3.

Then the orchestra heads for Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegraph (e)
NASHUA, N. H.
Circ. 11,733

MAY 26 1960

Boston, May 26 (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra, now touring Japanese cities, has been unaffected by tidal waves in the area, a spokesman said yesterday. The musicians will perform in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston June 19.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 183,699

MAY 22 1960

Records Reviewed

Sunday Journal TV Weekly 23
May 22, 1960

Young Bolivian Plays Bach With Maturity

By RUTH TRIPP

THE young Latin American violinist, Jaime Laredo, plays Bach's Partita No. 3 in E with a maturity that belies his 19 years. And to add weight to the impressiveness of his musical understanding, the reverse side of this RCA Victor album offers Sonata No. 3 in D minor, Op. 108, by Brahms. In this work, the young violinist shares the honors with pianist Vladimir Sokoloff of Curtis Institute. (The Bach Partita is unaccompanied.) Bolivia is proud of Mr. Laredo because he was born there. The United States can be proud of him also because he received his education here. This is an unusually interesting recording of violin music.

The musical ensemble called I Musici, which has played here, may be heard on an Epic record as it plays music by Mozart, Adagio and Fugue in C minor (K.546) by Handel, Concerto Grosso in B minor, Op. 6, No. 12, and by Bach, Concerto No. 5 in F minor for Clavier and Strings. The sensitive interpretations are a pleasure to hear and the choice of a favorite on this list would tax the listener.

Another ensemble that is a favorite is the Juilliard String Quartet. On an RCA release, it plays two of the favorites of the repertoire, Debussy's Quartet in G minor, Op. 10, and Ravel's String Quartet in F. It is good to hear the vitality of these intense musicians perfectly controlled to bring the delicacy and color from these contrasting French scores. When we think of the exciting manner in which this group plays Bartok, the contrast is all the more striking when you hear this record.

The Soria Series of RCA has chosen the Munch interpretation of the Berlioz Requiem for a splendid addition to this important recording venture. The Boston Symphony is playing in its own Symphony Hall, with the chorus of New England Conservatory, which is trained by Lorna Cooke DeVaron, assisting. Hearing the stupendous score and realizing the story of Berlioz' conception of this amazing score is a musical experience of major importance. This is a treasure.

The rich voice of Mack Harrell, who died last January, has been recorded many times. With the RCA Victor Orchestra and Chorus conducted by Robert Shaw, we may hear two Bach Cantatas with Mr. Harrell as soloist. They are No. 56, "I Will Carry the Cross with Gladness" and No. 82, "It Is Enough". Dignity and depth of communication are the chief assets of this release.

Ingrid Haebler, pianist, plays two Mozart Concertos with the Vienna Symphony Orchestra conducted by Christoph von Dohnanyi. Her playing on this Epic record is neat and expressive. The artist is a native of Vienna and a winner of several important medals. The Concertos, both in B flat, are No. 18, K. 456 and No. 27, K. 595.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 99,236

MAY 26 1960

SYMPHONY TOUR CONTINUES

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~now touring Japanese~~ cities, has been unaffected by tidal waves in the area, a spokesman said yesterday. The musicians will perform in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston June 19.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

MAY 27 1960

Islands of Beauty

Symphony in Visit To Hub Sister City

This is the fifth in a series on highlights of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Japan tour, written by Mrs. Helen Perry, wife of the orchestra's manager. Today she pictures more of the beautiful places visited by the Boston party.

By HELEN PERRY

KYUSHU, Japan—The day being bright and brisk, the orchestra was happily afloat on the Island Sea. Our first voyage two day ago from Osaka to Takahama was overcast and shutin, beautiful in a sense with the islands and mountains shrouded and mysterious.

It did give us all a chance to write letters and catch up on sleep, which was welcome since we had breakfasted at 6 a. m. in Osaka before departing for Kobe pier and the ship Kurenai-Maru.

She was a beauty too, just finished last October, the pride of the fleet, with commodious cabins for all and a dining room serving either Japanese or western food.

We had Japanese — raw fish, tuna which tasted like filet mignon, raw quail egg, delicious crisp vegetables, fried prawns and rice.

The Japanese, like the French, have a way of giving the simplest dishes a gourmet look.

These lovely boat trips have given us a chance to actually see the islands and mountains which appear in Japanese scrolls and paintings.

I had always thought them a creation of the artist's imagination, but they do exist, the rocky outcroppings of bizarre shapes fringed with wind-shaped trees, the fog-softened outlines.

★ ★ ★

We had a bit of a sea running, since we were crossing from the island of Shikoku to Kyushu, the southermost island of Japan. The Inland Sea joins the Pacific Ocean and the wind sweeps through the Hoyo Strait. Despite the wind the trip ended pleasantly.

Two nights which the Boston Symphony spent in Dogo Hot Springs, a resort suburb of Matsuyama where a concert was played, were most enjoyable.

The Orchestra also visited Kyoto, the sister-city of our own Boston, and our stay was all too short. Kyoto is the old capital of Japan, before Tokyo, and is the seat of culture and contains a great number of beautiful shrines and palaces.

Host to our group was Gizo Takayama, mayor of the city, who visited Boston and attended a Pops Concert a few years ago.

We traveled to Kyoto in buses which I believe had solid rubber tires: for such a vibrating treatment people pay money. But the beauty and interest of the countryside offset the rigors of bus travel.

Mayor Takayama received us for tea, each of us 110 BSOers seated on a woven bamboo tool before long lacquer-topped tables. We were served bean curd cakes and thick green tea, which looked like spinach soup and taster not quite as good.

The mayor welcomed us through an interpreter and spoke of his delight at having been in Boston and now at having us in his city. He asked us to bear his greetings to the people of Boston and to Mayor Collins.

★ ★ ★

Boston should be proud of its relationship with this fair city, which resembles it not at all physically, but considerably in appreciation of cultural tradition.

There was further sightseeing, including a visit to the Golden Pavillion, a gilded three-tiered pagoda.

Most of the orchestra men ate their pre-concert meal in the restaurant in the same building as the hall.

The restaurant was a Japanese counterpart of Horn & Hardart, where you select what you wish from samples in a glass case, get tickets, go to a table where a waitress takes your ticket and you hope she brings what you want.

Mr. Munch, with his innate gentleness and sense of showmanship, completely won his audience and made a tremendous hit with the music itself — two encores.

The audience clapped and cheered, and Mayor Takayama, who sat behind me, beamed in obvious delight. I'm sure that Boston and Kyoto have become even fonder sisters since this visit.

BSO in Japan

Turning from opera for the moment, we've received clippings from time to time on the current tour of the Boston Symphony [illegible] through the Far East and one of the best-written comes from Heuwell Tircuit, [illegible] Tokyo's "Asahi [illegible]." Here are some excerpts, [illegible], perhaps, of informed [illegible] on the spot.

Declares Mr. [illegible]: "Japan has heard a large assortment of the music world's best . . . but nothing else we have had has so completely lived up to expectation.

"The brilliance and sonority of (the Boston Symphony) orchestra are something incredible. They are a very loud orchestra, that is true, but they manage to maintain their beautiful sound at all volume levels . . . Since the string sound is so powerful, the winds and the brass are free to sing out as they very rarely can in other orchestras . . .

"Even the Star Spangled Banner emerged sounding like a piece of real music. The orchestra can make a piece sound much better than it actually is, which means that the poor devils who must review their concerts of new works are playing at critical "Russian roulette" . . . Mr. Munch deserves a pat on the back for having been the first to tour Japan with programs above the provincial level . . . Yet I cannot help wish they were offering more distinguished works than the Barber and the Dello Joio . . . In the last two movements of the "Symphonic Fantastique," Mr. Munch beat some pretty fantastic tempi. It will be a long time before any local group dare play this literature."

79

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life Insurahce Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)

ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋2－8第一生命分館
電話京橋 (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)

新聞切抜

THE YOMIURI (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY 2 9 1960 Ed.

03

More Marvels From Munch And Copland

By Edmund C. Wilkes

"The Boston Symphony continues to astound us with the virtuosity of its playing. In two more concerts last week it displayed other facets of its unquestioned superiority both in modern music and in the classic repertoire."

Space did not permit a full report in the earlier account in these columns of Mr Munch's way with Ravel and Berlioz and Roussel. The "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite, the "Fantastic Symphony" and the ballet music from "Bacchus and Ariane" of these composers is nearly the private property of Mr Munch.

Certainly no one else can evoke the liquid loveliness of the Ravel as he can. No conductor brings the conviction to the Berlioz claptrap melodrama or the exquisite taste that graces the very French and very civilized Roussel suite.

"But he could not do it if he did not have in the orchestra an instrument that responds perfectly to his nearly impossible demands. There were prestissimos taken at a speed that conductors may dream of but never succeed in achieving; there were the most subtle variations in quantity." Koussevitasky could still be immensely proud of Mr Munch's use of his great instrument.

There is of course room for a variety of interpretations of Beethoven's music. The Symphony No 5 that Munch presented was brisk and fine sounding, but it did not attempt to override the music with sentient forebodings of "Fate."

Most interesting on this second program was the First Symphony of Easley Blackwood, a 27-year-old composer who is obviously someone to be reckoned with. Not everyone will like the tartness of his first movement but its thrust was exciting and the development of the themes was tightly composed. A spacious and serene andante was bittersweet; the scherzo played with a grotesque theme in constantly changing harmonics, and the finale developed variations of the first theme in a way that explored all the resources of the orchestra.

There can be no question that the music is the product of a young man wrestling with the problems of producing significant music and avoiding the tricks and formulas that seem to be the refuge of so many of the new generation in Europe. Blackwood's first symphony probably will not outlive Beethoven's fifth but he has something to say even now.

Munch's way with Wagner is well-known. As an Alsatian, he may be said to be looking both toward Paris and toward the Rhine. He led the orchestra in three rousing excerpts from "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg" as though his life had been spent in Bayreuth and Munich. The encores the audience demanded were Mendelssohn's Scherzo from the Octet and Berlioz's "Racokzy March."

On the next evening the audience had the opportunity to test the music and the conducting skill of one of the greatest of American composers, Aaron Copland. To most of us it was our first acquaintance with him as conductor; indeed Mr Copland tells of himself that his first attempt to conduct before his great good friend and mentor Koussevitsky was a complete failure and not for years did he try again. But he has made a handsome recovery. In the Purcell Fantasias that he chose to open the concert, he brought insight and imagination to these rarely heard prototypes of the classic sonatas and made the strings of the orchestra resound as a sweet "consort of viols.'

In the Haydn Symphony No 95 he used the classical orchestra. The jaunty minute and trio with its difficult solo for cello was tossed off by Mr Mayes in fine style.

In his own first symphony Mr Copland was giving most of us a first view of a work which was strongly influenced by his studies with Nadia Boulanger. It begins with a Prelude that is charmingly simple, even pastoral. In the succeeding scherzo the orchestration grows in complexity, and the finale busily, perhaps overbusily, works through a maze of developing thematic material. Needless to say the symphony got a rousing performance.

But it is as a composer for the theater that most of us know Aaran Copland. His ballets "Rodeo," "Billy the Kid," and "Appalachian Spring," his "Music for the Theater," "Quiet City," and music for numerous films seem to be his most popular works and deservedly so, for he is never more American than when he is exploring or suggesting the folk element.

His opera "The Tender Land" suffered from libretto trouble, but the music he excerpted for the suite deserves to be heard repeatedly and suggests that the libretto should be reworked to give the opera a second chance. The broad soaring music of the Introduction, the lyric outpouring of the Love Music and especially the finale "The Promise of Living," is Copland of a very fine order. The audience was well impressed and wanted more music, but a tight schedule in loading the instruments for the Hokkaido trip deprived us of these.

So the Boston, under Munch and Copland, continues to make good music, and there is more to come.

There remains but little space to report an excellent concert by the Japan Philharmonic Orchestra under Hideo Saito. The last of Handel's concerti Grossi, Opus 6, No 12, was given reading of real transparency with excellent soloists, especially Broadus Earle, the concertmaster. Haydn's "Oxford Symphony" was brisk and stately by turns with some good dialogue between strings and winds, and Kodaly's "Hary Janos" Suite was given a rousing and humorous reading.

But the novelty of the concert was the rarely heard Viola Concerto which Bela Bartok left unfinished at his death and which his friend Tibor Serly finished from his sketches. Thus it will always be a tantalizing fragment like the Mahler Tenth.

The work is profoundly emotional and may be autobiographical. Bartok's fatal illness pushed him to complete the piano concerto for his wife's use and this work for Primrose. There are sections that seem forced, virtuosity for its own sake, but elsewhere it is Bartok at his best.

Certainly the solo part is terrifying in its complexity. For the most part Kisei Kitazume solved the problems Bartok laid for his instrument, but it cannot be said that he had the last ounce of temperament that should be brought to the music if it is to entirely persuade us. He was best in the second movement, [illegible] religioso, where Bartok is simplest. But it was a fine thing for the Philharmonic to bring us this near-masterpieces.

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life Insurahce Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)

ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋2－8第一生命分館
電話京橋 (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)

新聞切抜

THE MAINICHI (Tokyo)
DAILY NEWS

Dat. MAY 2 9. 1960 Ed.

Boston Symphony Makes Donation

SENDAI, May 27. — The members of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra which gave a performance at the Sendai City Public Hall Friday evening under the direction of Charles Munch donated ¥100,000 to victims of the tidal waves that hit Miyagi Prefecture.

The orchestra is now visiting Japan at the invitation of Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK) to commemorate the Japan-U.S. Centennial now being observed in major cities.

THE JAPAN TIMES (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY [illegible]

03

What's Going On This Week

Music

May 16

SHIGEO HISAMOTO, piano. Daiichi Seimei Hall, 7 p.m. Fantasia in SUMIE KAWAUCHI, soprano, Daiichi Seimei Hall, 6:30 p.m.

May 19

NOBUMICHI TANAKA, violin; Kiyoko Tanaka, piano. Bunkyo Public Hall, 6:30 p.m. Partitia No. 2 (Bach); Sonata in C (Franck); Sonata No. 17 (Mozart); etc.

May 20

TOKYO PHILHARMONIC ORCH. Hibiya Hall, 6:30 p.m. Conductor, Hiroyuki Iwaki. Soloist: Hiroko Nakamura, piano. Beethoven program: Leonore Overture; Piano Concerto No. 1 in C; Symphony No. 3 "Eroica."

May 21

MASASHI KITAGAWA, piano. Daiichi Seimei Hall, 6:30 p.m. Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue in D (Bach); Sonata in B Min. (Chopin); Sonata "1905" (Janacek); Sonatine (Ravel).

Ma 21

BERNARD MICHELIN, French cellist. Kyoritsu Hall, 6:30 p.m. Sonatas by Pergolesi, Debussy; Variations on a Mozart Theme (Beethoven); etc.

May 22

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Conductor, CHARLES MUNCH. Hibiya Hall, 6:30 p.m. Fifth Symphony (Beethoven); Symphony No. 1 (Blackwood); Interludes from "Meistersingers" (Wagner).

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE
PressClipping
c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)
ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋2－8第一生命分館
電話京橋(561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)
新聞切抜

THE JAPAN TIMES (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY 28. 1960 Ed

Speaking of Music . . .

American Music by the Boston Symphony

By MARCEL GRILLI

When a virtuoso orchestra is on a visit abroad its hosts naturally enough like to hear it perform the familiar masterworks of the international repertoire—but is it too much to expect these same hosts also to demonstrate a willingness of broadening their horizon into unfamiliar music, especially works of merit produced in the homeland of their guests?

I need not remind my readers that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has long championed the cause of American music, and that this orchestra, whether performing on its home grounds or traveling in foreign lands, has followed through with Charles Munch on the podium the policy fixed under Serge Koussevitzky.

Nor do I need to recall that many of the modern works which have entered this orchestra's active repertoire have been closely identified with it, either as direct commissions, as was the case with Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, which we heard last week, or as works produced under special grants by organs and foundations associated with the name of Koussevitzky.

Easley Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 (Op. 3, 1955), which Mr. Munch and the Bostonians introduced to us on Sunday evening in Hibiya Hall (the same partnership gave this work its first performances in Boston and New York last year), not only confirmed the wisdom of the Boston Symphony's policy, but it also afforded Japanese listeners a rare opportunity of hearing for themselves the high quality of music being written in certain quarters of the United States.

The name Easley Blackwood was entirely unfamiliar to me, as it must have been to many, many others who attended last Sunday's concert. I have since learned that he was born in Indianapolis in 1933, that he studied with Messiaen and Hindemith, and later at the American Conservatory at Fontainebleau, France, under a Fulbright scholarship. He became a member of the staff of the University of Chicago in 1958, and his work in progress is a commission of the Koussevitzky Foundation in the Library of Congress.

The symphony presented many attractive and appealing aspects. It is cast in the traditional four-movement form and, though there is a vigilant avoidance of ultramodernistic technical cliches, the music is strictly of today. Its orchestration is heavy, dissonant, but the general character is tonal. There is brilliant rhythmic vitality, as well as abundant individuality and imaginative treatment of thematic material.

In fact, there seemed to be so much to this music and of so varied material that at this first hearing the ear was hard put to it to grasp the inner connections. The best music was in the third movement, an animated Scherzo based on ostinato figures of varying lengths, and in the ruminative final movement, an "Andante sostenuto" which reiterates some of the material of the opening section, and which quietly floats away on an exquisite pianissimo of muted violins.

Mr Munch and the orchestra gave Blackwood's music a beautiful and eloquent performance. The eloquence of such music-making could only be interpreted as a tribute to the genius of the 26-year-old American composer.

Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which opened this concert, and the three Wagnerian excerpts from the third act of "Die Meistersinger," which closed it, emerged as other facets of orchestral eloquence. There is no need here to recapitulate what has already been said about Mr. Munch's rhythmic energy and the Boston Symphony's virtuosity in all departments.

* * *

The orchestra, on Monday evening, brought the same brilliance and virtuosity, as well as a touch of glitter, to a program largely of unfamiliar music and which also introduced Aaron Copland in the dual role of composer and conductor.

To the capacity audience in Hibiya Hall which gave him a warm and cordial welcome, Mr. Copland, of course, was better known in the former capacity—indeed, one may add, the most completely successful among American composers of his generation. And so there is no doubt that the vast majority of his listeners were better disposed to hear him interpret his own music than that of other people.

Two of Mr. Copland's works—his First Symphony (1924-28) and the Suite from the opera, "The Tender Land" (1954)—were prefaced by three of Purcell's Fantasias arranged for string orchestra (the third being the gimmick F Major "Fantasia on One Note") and by the beautiful, but unjustifiably neglected, Symphony No. 95 in C Minor by Haydn.

Throughout this entire program, the orchestral playing was molded with considerable vitality by Mr. Copland. It is a great privilege to watch a composer supervise an interpretation of his own music. But the pleasure was enhanced in this case, as Mr. Copland attuned his acute ear to details of phrasing, rhythm and instrumental balance in the music of Haydn and Purcell.

This is music which he undoubtedly enjoys performing. It was good, too, to see him share the applause, after the Haydn symphony, with the orchestra's principal cellist, Samuel Mayes, who played exquisitely the solo part in the trio of the minuet.

This program, while eschewing the so-called "popular" and, perhaps, most "characteristic" of Mr. Copland's output, did give us a perspective of the path traversed by this most prolific and extremely vital composer. He has always been admired for his eager, zestful, and forward-looking temperament. His adherence to broad views, his profound humane outlook, and his high craftsmanship have won him world-wide respect.

The Japanese had long known him through some of the more popular pieces, mostly those reflecting periods of jazz influences, explorations into subtle and intriguing rhythmic patters, and featuring colorful and brash orchestration.

The two works chosen on this occasion span three decades: the First Symphony, standing almost at the beginning of his career, marks the composer's initial break from "European" influences and the beginnings of his "American" style; the music of "The Tender Land," his last major work, may well represent the summation of his thoroughly Americanized manner. The juxtaposition of these two works revealed a certain tempering and mellowing process in which both time and wisdom have undoubtedly lent a generous hand.

As Mr. Copland draws close to his 60th year, one is happy to note that his music is still enormously brilliant and tremendously colorful and thrilling, but flamboyance and brashness have given way to relative simplicity of texture and more expressive qualities. There is less reliance on assertive energy and more sense of relaxation and serenity. For this backward-forward glimpse into Copland's oeuvre all our gratitude should go to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Yomiuri
May 29, 1960

PEOPLE AND EVENTS

Tokyo American Cultural Center's program for today includes a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Hibiya Public Hall beginning 6.30 pm, with Charles Munch conducting. At 6.30 pm Monday, the orchestra is presenting a concert at Tokyo Gymnasium with Richard Burgin conducting. Earlier Monday, from 2 pm, "Gagaku" (Imperial Court Music) will be presented for members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Korinkaku restaurant.

The Japan Times
May 23, 1960

What's Going On This Week

Music

May 23

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Conductor, AARON COPLAND. Hibiya Hall, 6:30 p.m. Program D: Symphony No. 7; Fantasy for Strings (Purcell); Symphony No. 1 (Copland); Symphony No. 5 (Haydn); Suite from "Tenderland" (Copland).

81

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

MAY 22 1960

Boston Symphony Plays Tokyo Concert Tonight

FOR ENTIRE ORCHESTRA, Armando Ghitalla, trumpeter, accepted a kiss of welcome when the muscians landed at Honolulu. The generous offer of the Ghitalla cheek saved young lady from chore of kissing 99 others.

BOTANY AT AIRPORT engages Conductor Charles Munch, center, who studies Hawaiian flower he had plucked from lei adorning the neck of Rosario Mazzeo, right, clarinetist. Leonard Burkat, music administrator, reaches for another blossom while John Barwicki, contrabass, in background, watches.

Philippines Next on Tour, Return to U.S. Is June 19

The Boston Symphony will play in Hibiya Hall in Tokyo tonight in its triumphant tour of the Orient which will carry it to the Philippines next week and then to Australia and New Zealand before the 100-member orchestra flies home June 19.

Despite the heavy concert schedule for the two-month tour, which began April 25, the musicians have had free time for sightseeing in strange lands. Wherever the orchestra has traveled in the Far East, it has received enthusiastic receptions, often rivaling the greeting accorded political leaders.

The disappointment of cancelling two dates in South Korea because of political unrest was offset by the warm reception they received in Formosa.

22 Concerts

The concerts at the Chinese Nationalist stronghold were not included in the original itinerary but were made possible by the unexpected developments in Seoul. The Formosan concerts were given in Taipeh, the capital. Among those welcoming the orchestra was Yu You-Rou, ranking native official of the island.

So far, the musicians have visited Honolulu and Wake Island as well as Japan where they now are in the midst of a 22-concert series. The tour is being sponsored by The President's Program for Cultural Exchange.

Among unique experiences abroad, one that lies ahead is a two-day flight back home through which they will arrive in the United States on the same day they left Auckland, New Zealand. The trick of compressing 48 hours into one day involves crossing the international dateline.

But even at that, they can't get a day ahead. They merely recapture the day they lost flying west.

CHINESE AIR FORCE MUSICIANS, left of barrier, entertained Symphony with Oriental instruments in Taipeh, Formosa. Studying the Far East technique, from left, were James Nagy and William Marshall, violinists, and Jerome Lipson, violist.

WAKE ISLAND BREAKFAST for Boston Symphony was eaten by, from left, clockwise, Noah Bielski, violinist; William Marshall, violinist; Henry Freeman, contra-bass; Dr. Keran Chobanian, physician; Martin Hoherman, cellist; Bernard Kadinoff, viola; William Moyer, trombonist, and Alfred Schnedier, violinist.

---

been guests of Soviet lawmakers.

Eagle 5/21/60

Moscow Cancels Some U.S. Shows, Not Recorded BSO

LONDON [illegible]—Moscow Radio's home service today broadcast a 40 - minute program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra after scrapping three other scheduled American programs earlier this week.

The concert was listed in the home service program preview Thursday.

On Tuesday the home service dropped the scheduled radio version of "My Fair Lady" and replaced it with a program entitled "Soviet Man Will Be The First To Go Into Space."

A program of Mario Lanza records, scheduled for Wednesday, was replaced with a recital by a Bulgarian tenor and the recorded version of the musical "Oklahoma" was replaced by a Russian light opera.

82

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SE[illegible]

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life [illegible] Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, [illegible]
Tel (561) [illegible]
[illegible]ニバーサル[illegible]信社
[illegible]生命分館
[illegible]1（代表）

新聞切抜

THE YOMIURI (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY 1 4 1960 Ed.

Music Calendar

03

By Edmund C. Wilkes

Among foreign artists performing will be Pilar Lopez and her ballet, Bernard Michelin, cellist, and Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, but Japanese artists also have scheduled an unusually full week.

SUNDAY, May 15

The Pilar Lopez Spanish Ballet Company will present its second program at 2 and 6.30 in Sankei Hall. Falla's "El Amor Brujo," a "Goya Fantasie" to music of Granados and a group of dances by Rios, Chapi, Turina, and others, will be seen.

MONDAY, May 16

The Pilar Lopez Spanish Ballet Group will be seen in their third program from 6.30 in Sankei Hall. Works of Rios, Soler, Turina, Albeniz, etc will be danced.

* * *

Also on Monday at 7 in Daiichi Seimei Hall, Nario Hisamoto will present a piano recital. Schumann's "Abegg Variations" and Fantasie, Op 17, and Chopin's Fantasie, the Scherzo No 1, and Ballade No 1 make up the program.

* * *

Again on Monday at 6.30 in the Yamaha Hall, Tenor Ryoei Kano, with Hiroshi Niijima at the piano, will present a program of Beethoven songs. The Gellert songs, "An die Ferne Geliebte," three Goethe songs and others will be presented.

TUESDAY, May 17

Sumie Kawauchi, soprano, with Yoshio Kato at the piano will give a recital from 6.30 in the Daiichi Seimei Hall. Arias from "Norma" "Adriana Lecouvreur" and Verdi's "Attila" and songs by Italian composers will be sung.

WEDNESDAY, May 18

The Japan Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra will play in Hibiya Hall from 7 a program comprising Handel's Concerto Grosso in B minor, Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony, Bartok's Viola Concerto, and Kodaly's "Hary Janos" Suite. Hideo Saito will conduct and Kisei Kitazume will be the viola soloist.

* * *

On the same evening Akiko Koshiji, pianist, will play Handel's Suite No 10, and Chaconne in G Major, Bach's Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, and, with Yasuo Omi, Mozart's Two Piano Sonata K 448, and Chopin's Rondo for two pianos.

THURSDAY, May 19

From 6.30 in Bunkyo Hall, Nobumichi Tanaka, violinist, with Kiyoko Tanaka at the piano, will play Bach's Partita No 2, Franck's Sonata in A Major, Mozart's Sonata No 17 in A Major, Bloch's Nigun and Ravel's Tzigane, etc.

SATURDAY, May 21

Bernard Michelin, French cellist, returns to Tokyo with a recital in Kyoritsu Hall from 6.30. Sonatas of Pergolesi and Debussy, Beethoven's Variations on a Mozart Theme, and pieces by Francoeur, Mendelssohn and Mozart make up the program.

* * *

On the same evening, from 6.30 in Daiichi Seimei Hall, Tadashi Kitagawa, pianist, will play Bach's Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, Chopin's Sonata in B Minor, Ravel's Sonatine, and Prokofiev's Sonata No 7.

SUNDAY, May 22

The Boston Symphony returns under Charles Munch's direction in Hibiya Hall from 6.30. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, Easley Black-wood's Symphony No 1, and three orchestral interludes from Wagner's "Meistersingers" will be heard.

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9431（代表）
ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋2－8第一生命分館
電話京橋（561）9431（代表）

新聞切抜

THE JAPAN TIMES (Tokyo)

MAY 1 9 1960

Boston Symphony Playing in Y'hama

03

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the noted conductor Charles Munch will give its one and only concert in Yokohama at the Kanagawa Prefectural Music Hall on Friday, May 20 from 6:30 p.m.

To be heard are Samuel Barber's "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance;" Debussy's "La Mer," and Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D Min.

Tickets for good seats are still available for this fine program at ¥2,500 and ¥2,000 at the NHK Yokohama branch on the 5th floor of the Daiwa Bank at Onoe-cho, Yokohama or at the hall itself.

The concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are part of the celebrations of the centennial of U.S.-Japan relations and the 35th anniversary of NHK (Japan Broadcasting Corporation) and are being sponsored by the NHK Service Center with the support of the Foreign Office and the U.S. Embassy.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

85

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuo-ku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9431 (代表)

ユニバーサル通信社
[illegible]

新聞切抜

THE YOMIURI (Tokyo)

Dat. JUN - 1 1960 Ed.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,367

MAY 31 1960

Wind Up Tour

TOKYO (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra flew to the Philippines today for concert appearances after winding up its tour of Japanese cities. Conductor Charles Munch led a group of more than 100 persons as they left Tokyo International Airport aboard two chartered planes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 80,581

MAY 31 1960

Boston Symphony Flies For Tour in Philippines

TOKYO (Tuesday) (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra wound up its tour of Japan and flew today to the Philippines for concert appearances there. The group, led by conductor Charles Munch, left Tokyo International Airport aboard two chartered planes.

In the past month and a half it has been touring Japanese cities and making appearances on radio and TV.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,072

MAY 31 1960

ORCHESTRA LEAVES JAPAN

TOKYO, (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra flew to the Philippines today for concert appearances after winding up its tour of Japanese cities. Conductor Charles Munch led a group of more than 100 persons as they left Tokyo International Airport aboard two chartered planes.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ENDS SUCCESSFUL JAPAN TOUR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's historic 30-day concert tour of Japan came to an end Tuesday with the departure of the musicians for Manila. The 111-member party, led by Charles Munch, Music Director, Associate Conductor Richard Burgin, and Guest Conductor Aaron Copland, will next perform concerts in the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand before returning to Boston on June 20.

The orchestra arrived in Tokyo May 1 after a pair of concerts in Taipei and performed 22 concerts in 16 major cities of Japan during its month-long stay under the auspices of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK).

The extensive tour of the Far East is being made in cooperation with the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by ANTA (American National Theater and Academy).

The concert series in Japan was in special recognition of the Centennial Year of Japan-American relations.

"We have made many new friends," Charles Munch said in a special statement on behalf of the orchestra. "The people of our two nations have helped to prove once more that international understanding is strengthened through the mutual appreciation of music and the common language of art."

"For all the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for myself I want to thank the thousands of individual thoughtfulness and the enthusiastic reception of our music by concert audiences will long be remembered by all of us who return to our homes in Boston. We are most grateful to NHK and to the governments of our two countries which helped to make this tour possible.

The 22 concerts in Japan were performed before an estimated concert hall audience of more than 50,000 in cities on all four main islands of the nation. Countless thousands also heard or saw the live and delayed radio and television broadcasts by NHK over nation-wide networks.

The intricate details of hotel accommodations and travel combining trains, buses, planes and steamships were handled by the Japan Travel Bureau. These arrangements were often made difficult by the fact that the tour took place during the peak of the tourist season.

The enormously complex transfer of the orchestra's baggage—nine tons of instrument in 86 theatrical-type trunks—was arranged by the Japan Express Company. Four special trucks and a fleet of drivers and baggage handlers drove approximately 3,200 miles transferring the wardrobe and equipment trunks from one end of Japan to the other. Charter aircraft and railway facilities were used for the difficult travel to and from Hokkaido.

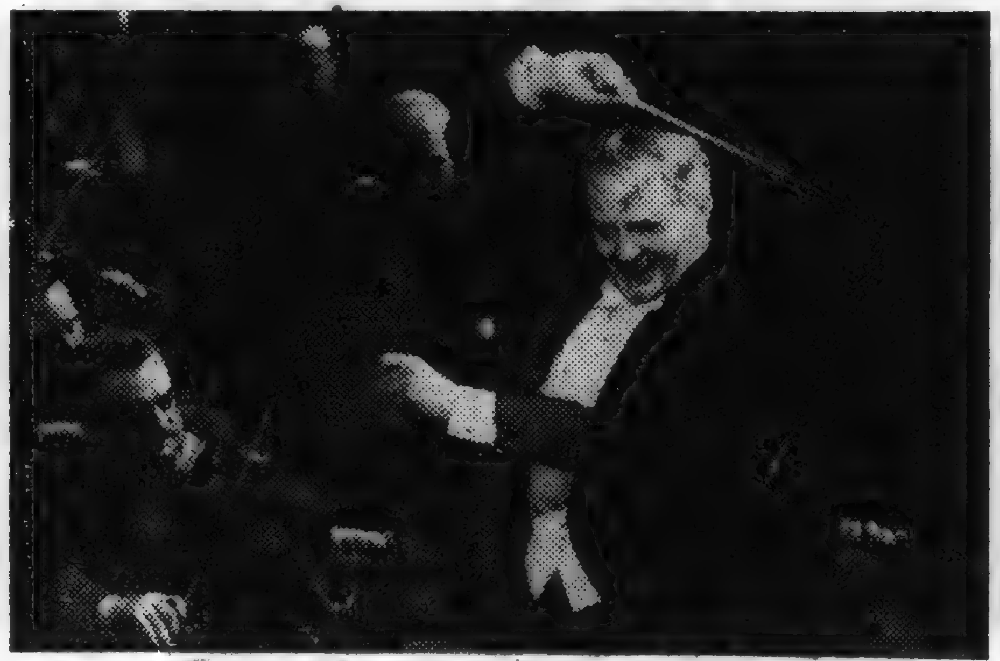
Altogether, the Boston Symphony presented six concerts in Tokyo, two in Osaka (the concluding events of the Osaka International Festival), and one each in Kyoto, Matsuyama, Oita, Yawata, Fukuoka, Hiroshima, Okayama, Nagoya, Shizuoka, Yokohama, Nagaoka, Sapporo, Sendai and Koriyama.

The musicians of the orchestra were besieged everywhere by music students, journalists, or everyday music lovers. In dozens of individual and extemporaneous meetings and demonstrations off-stage, the American visitors displayed their instruments or exhibited their particular musical techniques.

Informal sessions arranged by directors of American Cultural Centers in 11 of the 16 cities on the itinerary brought together Japanese music students and Boston Symphony members who were eager to demonstrate their instruments.

The orchestra members took part in a rehearsal of a university orchestra, a special session at the Tokyo University of Arts, and other informal events. On one occasion, the Boston players invited the members of the NHK orchestra to a rehearsal conducted by Mr Munch.

The tour of Japan coincided with some major dramatic events as well as with the Japan-American centennial year.



CHARLES MUNCH conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra during one of its performances in Japan.

In Matsuyama on the island of Shikoku, a mild earthquake was experienced on the day of the concert.

The arrival of the orchestra in Sapporo coincided with the impact of a devastating tidal wave which left thousands homeless. After traveling through the damaged areas in Matsushima on the way to the Sendai concert, the orchestra performed Debussey's "La Mer" which contains a passage of musical violence symbolic of the great power of the sea.

At the close of the concert in Sendai, the orchestra presented a gift of ¥100,000 to the tidal wave relief fund. The presentation was made to Yoshio Miura, governor of the stricken Miyagi-ken.

Personnel and friends of the orchestra were saddened by the death of one of the members, John Fiasca, in Fukuoka, on the afternoon of the concert there. Mr Munch directed the orchestra to stand for a moment of silence before playing the second movement of the Beethoven Eroica Symphony, a funeral march, which was scheduled for that evening's program.

Signs of welcome and special banners greeted the Symphony's arrival in every city visited. The 111-member group, led by the conductors and by Thomas D. Perry, Jr, manager, and his wife, were entertained and met with great hospitality by local officials, directors and officers of NHK and other dignitaries.

Reception

American Ambassador Douglas MacArthur II gave an official reception for the group in Tokyo on arrival. The Society for International Cultural Exchange and the Japan-American Centennial Committee entertained the members on the day before departure. A special visit to the Imperial Palace grounds was also arranged. The mayor of Kyoto, who had visited Symphony Hall in Boston two years ago, invited the orchestra to a performance of the Miyako Odori on the afternoon of the Kyoto concert. Mayors, governors, and other high official groups presented gifts and mementos in recognition of the Orchestra's visit.

Flowers were presented to the leading orchestra personnel on the station platforms or at airports in every city. Other floral tributes were presented to the conductors on stage and the end of every concert.

The visiting Bostonians [illegible]eled by day and played concerts before capacity audiences by night. They sometimes stayed in Japanese inns and learned the Japanese style of eating and sleeping. Everywhere, they taxed hotel accommodations to the utmost. They learned to eat box lunches with chopsticks during the long train rides between concerts, or quickly sought out the local restaurants, which sometimes made special provisions for musicians who enjoy dining after an evening concert, usually after the normal closing hours of local restaurants.

Boston musicians climbed Mt Fuji; visited volcanoes in Hokkaido; enjoyed hot baths at famous Japanese hot springs, and sought out every major tourist attraction during three separate series of concerts in Tokyo. Informal research among the 111 members reveals that more than 75 new cameras, many transistor radios, and countless pearls were purchased during the month.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

JUN 4 1960

A scene from "Black Ships," an opera by the Japanese composer Kosac Yamada, with Kakura Kamo, Mutsumu Shibata, Mariko Yamada, and Arrigo Pola as Townsend Harris, the American consul. The opera was heard at the Osaka Festival. The events were climaxed by two Boston Symphony concerts.

86

The Japan Times
May 28, 1960

Speaking of Music . . .

American Music by the Boston Symphony

By MARCEL GRILLI

When a virtuoso orchestra is on a visit abroad its hosts naturally enough like to hear it perform the familiar masterworks of the international repertoire—but is it too much to expect these same hosts also to demonstrate a willingness of broadening their horizon into unfamiliar music, especially works of merit produced in the homeland of their guests?

I need not remind my readers that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has long championed the cause of American music, and that this orchestra, whether performing on its home grounds or traveling in foreign lands, has followed through with Charles Munch on the podium the policy fixed under Serge Koussevitzky.

Nor do I need to recall that many of the modern works which have entered this orchestra's active repertoire have been closely identified with it, either as direct commissions, as was the case with Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, which we heard last week, or as works produced under special grants by organs and foundations associated with the name of Koussevitzky.

Easley Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 (Op. 3, 1955), which Mr. Munch and the Bostonians introduced to us on Sunday evening in Hibiya Hall (the same partnership gave this work its first performances in Boston and New York last year), not only confirmed the wisdom of the Boston Symphony's policy, but it has afforded Japanese listeners a rare opportunity of hearing for themselves the high quality of music being written in certain quarters of the United States.

The name Easley Blackwood was entirely unfamiliar to me, as it must have been to many, many others who attended last Sunday's concert. I have since learned that he was born in Indianapolis in 1933, that he studied with Messiaen and Hindemith, and later at the American Conservatory at Fontainebleau, France, under a Fulbright scholarship. He became a member of the staff of the University of Chicago in 1958, and his work in progress is a commission of the Koussevitzky Foundation in the Library of Congress.

The symphony presented many attractive and appealing aspects. It is cast in the traditional four-movement form and, though there is a vigilant avoidance of ultramodernistic technical cliches, the music is strictly of today. Its orchestration is heavy, dissonant, but the general character is tonal. There is brilliant rhythmic vitality, as well as abundant individuality and imaginative treatment of thematic material.

In fact, there seemed to be so much to this music and of so varied material that at this first hearing the ear was hard put to it to grasp the inner connections. The best music was in the third movement, an animated Scherzo based on ostinato figures of varying lengths, and in the ruminative final movement, an "Andante sostenuto" which reiterates some of the material of the opening section, and which quietly floats away on an exquisite pianissimo of muted violins.

Mr Munch and the orchestra gave Blackwood's music a beautiful and eloquent performance. The eloquence of such music-making could only be interpreted as a tribute to the genius of the 26-year-old American composer.

Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which opened this concert, and the three Wagnerian excerpts from the third act of "Die Meistersinger," which closed it, emerged as other facets of orchestral eloquence. There is no need here to recapitulate what has already been said about Mr. Munch's rhythmic energy and the Boston Symphony's virtuosity in all departments.

* * *

The orchestra, on Monday evening, brought the same brilliance and virtuosity, as well as a touch of glitter, to a program largely of unfamiliar music and which also introduced Aaron Copland in the dual role of composer and conductor.

To the capacity audience in Hibiya Hall which gave him a warm and cordial welcome, Mr. Copland, of course, was better known in the former capacity—indeed, one may add, the most completely successful among American composers of his generation. And so there is no doubt that the vast majority of his listeners were better disposed to hear him interpret his own music than that of other people.

Two of Mr. Copland's works—his First Symphony (1924-28) and the Suite from the opera, "The Tender Land" (1954)—were prefaced by three of Purcell's Fantasias arranged for string orchestra (the third being the gimmick F Major "Fantasia on One Note") and by the beautiful, but unjustifiably neglected, Symphony No. 95 in C Minor by Haydn.

Throughout this entire program, the orchestral playing was molded with considerable vitality by Mr. Copland. It is a great privilege to watch a composer supervise an interpretation of his own music. But the pleasure was enhanced in this case, as Mr. Copland attuned his acute ear to details of phrasing, rhythm and instrumental balance in the music of Haydn and Purcell.

This is music which he undoubtedly enjoys performing. It was good, too, to see him share the applause, after the Haydn symphony, with the orchestra's principal cellist, Samuel Mayes, who played exquisitely the solo part in the trio of the minuet.

This program, while eschewing the so-called "popular" and, perhaps, most "characteristic" of Mr. Copland's output, did give us a perspective of the path traversed by this most prolific and extremely vital composer. He has always been admired for his eager, zestful, and forward-looking temperament. His adherence to broad views, his profound humane outlook, and his high craftsmanship have won him world-wide respect.

The Japanese had long known him through some of the more popular pieces, mostly those reflecting periods of jazz influences, explorations into subtle and intriguing rhythmic patters, and featuring colorful and brash orchestration.

The two works chosen on this occasion span three decades: the First Symphony, standing almost at the beginning of his career, marks the composer's initial break from "European" influences and the beginnings of his "American" style; the music of "The Tender Land," his last major work, may well represent the summation of his thoroughly Americanized manner. The juxtaposition of these two works revealed a certain tempering and mellowing process in which both time and wisdom have undoubtedly lent a generous hand.

As Mr. Copland draws close to his 60th year, one is happy to note that his music is still enormously brilliant and tremendously colorful and thrilling, but flamboyance and brashness have given way to relative simplicity of texture and more expressive qualities. There is less reliance on assertive energy and more sense of relaxation and serenity. For this backward-forward glimpse into Copland's oeuvre all our gratitude should go to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

From Townsend Harris to Charles Munch

By Eloise Cunningham
Osaka

The hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace, amity, and commerce between Japan and the United States was commemorated by the third annual festival held in Osaka during April and May. Douglas MacArthur II, United States Ambassador to Japan, called it "a truly international festival of the arts." While American musical organizations were featured, programs drew widely on both eastern and western resources. They included concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Paganini String Quartet, as well as the production of a Japanese opera based on a story about the first American consul to Japan.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra climaxed this year's festival with two performances: one conducted by Aaron Copland, featuring his own works, and the other led by Charles Munch, the regular conductor. The Paganini String Quartet, also representing the United States, gave one Beethoven program at the request of the Japanese committee, and one devoted to works by other European composers.

Yamada's 'Black Ships'

The presentation of the opera, "Black Ships," by Kosac Yamada was "peculiarly appropriate this year," according to the message from Foreign Minister Aiichiro Fujiyama printed in the program. The title refers to the three American vessels which visited Japan and led to the signing of the Japan-United States treaty. However, aside from the fact that the libretto is based on the affair of Townsend Harris, the first United States consul to Japan, with the servant girl Okichi, there is no connection with America.

The music of the German-trained Japanese composer is principally Italian in style, making use of Japanese melodic idioms in the Puccini manner. The role of the consul was sung by an Italian tenor, Arrigo Pola. Other musicians taking part were Japanese. The beautiful settings and stage effects, in the best Kabuki tradition, were the outstanding feature of the production.

Classic tradition emerged even more fully in special performance of No by outstanding actors. Considered the oldest living theatrical form in the world, a No play might be described as a brief incident related in poetry and illuminated by music and dance. The text is often based on a supernatural event or a dream and can be intensely moving or serenely detached.

One or two principal male actors, assisted by a unison chorus of eight men, chant and sing accompanied by three small drums and a flute. In contrast to the simple wooden stage with only a few symbolic properties, the actors wear priceless masks and rich costumes of great beauty. Their gestures are highly stylized and generally slow and dignified except at climaxes in the dance sections, when they may become more vigorous.

Osaka's Kabuki theater is rated the finest in Japan. During the festival, the Kichiemon troupe from Tokyo, now appearing in the United States, gave special performances. A Kabuki dance-comedy, "The Substitute," also being seen in the U.S., was presented by Kanzaburo in the leading role of the young warrior who tries to outwit his shrewish wife.

Osaka is also headquarters for the extraordinary puppet art, probably the most highly developed in the world, in which large dolls are operated by men on stage while the libretto is sung or recited in heightened speech. The musicians sit to one side of the stage. The singer is accompanied by the samisen (three-stringed lute). Programs of special interest were presented at the Bunrakuza in Osaka, the only authentic puppet theater in the country.

A unique Japanese theater exhibition giving a panoramic view of the development of stage art was held. Colorful costumes, ancient masks, and instruments were on loan from temples and museums. Originally brought to Japan from China, Korea, and other Asiatic countries, they were used in temple rituals and folk dances, now almost forgotten, which developed into the various types of Japanese dramas still being performed today, such as No, Kabuki, and the Bunraku puppet plays.

Exciting Performances

The honor of opening the festival went to the Czech Chamber Orchestra from Prague. Although 24 string players perform at concerts without conductor, they achieve an almost faultless ensemble. This is made possible, according to Josef Valch, violinist and director of the ensemble, by the superior musicianship of each player and also by intensive rehearsing. Concentrating mainly on works by Vivaldi, Bach, and Mozart, and modern Czech composers, the group revealed a vibrant tone quality and lively style that resulted in exciting performances.

Other visitors included the Swiss soprano, Maria Stader, accompanied by her husband, Hans Erismann, who also conducted the orchestra when she sang with the local Kansai Symphony; Nicanor Zabaleta, the Spanish harpist; and Pilar Lopez and her Spanish ballet.

The French Theater Group of Madeline Renaud and Jean-Louis Barrault gave, among other plays, Paul Claudel's "Christophe Colomb" with music by Darius Milhaud, and Shakespeare's "Hamlet." Because "Hamlet" is probably as well known in Japan as in the United States—productions of Japanese translations have been given since 1907—it was easily followed by the audience in spite of the language barrier. The modern style of "Christophe Colomb" showed some interesting analogies with classical Japanese No drama in its use of symbolism, heightened speech, and percussion instruments.

The Japan Times
May 31, 1960

DUPLICATE

Gagaku, ancient court music and dance of Japan, was performed yesterday celebrating the centennial of the inauguration of Japan-U.S. relations, at the Korinkaku Mansion, Tokyo, before about 300 American and Japanese guests.

Boston Orchestra Lauded By Envoy as 'Foremost'

American Ambassador Douglas MacArthur II yesterday described the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "foremost" among living cultural treasures of the United States.

The high words of praise were given in his message at the Japan-American centennial Gagaku (Japan's ancient court music and dance) performance held yesterday at the Korinkaku Mansion jointly sponsored by Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai and the American Cultural Center in Tokyo.

Members of the Boston orchestra now performing in Japan were among some 300 Japanese and American guests invited to the performance.

MacArthur said in his message which was read by Minister William Leonhart that the U.S. does not have what are "so aptly called in Japan, 'living cultural treasures'."

"But, if we had, then I am sure that foremost among our living cultural treasures would be the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Dr. Charles Munch. They are now here in Japan, as Kabuki is in the United States, contributing their art to the strengthening of cultural ties between our peoples."

The envoy said many events currently observed in the U.S. and Japan celebrating the centennial of the opening of relations between the two nations "represent a highly auspicious beginning of a second century of even closer ties between our two countries."

Gagaku was performed by Imperial Household Musicians and dancers on a stage which was made in New York, modeled after the stage in the Imperial Household, and used during the Gagaku tour of America last year.

The stage was sent to Sasebo by the U.S. Navy from where the Japan Maritime Self-Defense Force transported it to Yokosuka and then to Tokyo.

Among the guests were Prince and Princess Takamatsu.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,041

MAY 31 1960

Boston Symphony Ends Japan Tour

TOKYO (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra flew to the Philippines today for concert appearances after winding up its tour of Japanese cities. Conductor Charles Munch led a group of more than 100 persons as they left Tokyo International Airport aboard two chartered planes.

Asahi Evening News
June 1, 1960

Boston Orchestra Makes Many Friends in Japan

By Thomas D. Perry Jr.

Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

"We have made many new friends," Charles Munch said in a special statement on behalf of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "The people of our nations have helped to prove once more that international understanding is strengthened through a mutual appreciation of music and the common language of art.

"For all members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for myself I want to thank the thousands of Japanese people who have been so wonderfully kind. The countless acts of individual thoughtfulness and the enthusiastic reception of our music by concert audiences will long be remembered by all of us who return to our homes in Boston. We are most grateful to the Japan Broadcasting Corporation and to the governments of our two countries which helped to make this tour possible."

The 22 concerts in Japan were performed before an estimated concert hall audience of more than 50,000 in cities on all four main islands of the nation. Unnumbered thousands also heard or witnessed the live and delayed radio and television broadcasts by NHK over nation-wide networks.

Signs of welcome and special banners greeted the Symphony's arrival in every city visited in the length and breadth of Japan.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's historic 30-day concert tour of Japan came to an end yesterday with the departure of the musicians for Manila.

Mayors, governors and other official groups presented gifts and mementos in recognition of the Orchestra's visit. Flowers were presented to the leading Orchestra personnel on the station platforms on airports in every city. Other floral tributes were presented to the conductors on the stage at the end of every concert.

The musicians of the Orchestra were besieged everywhere by music students, journalists or everyday music lovers. In dozens of individual and extemporaneous meetings and demonstrations off-stage, the American visitors displayed their instruments or exhibited their particular musical techniques.

Informal sessions arranged by directors of American Cultural Centers in 11 of the 16 cities on the itinerary brought together Japanese music students and Orchestra members who were eager to demonstrate their instruments.

The Boston Players took part in a rehearsal of a university orchestra, a special session at the Tokyo University of Arts, and other informal events. On one occasion, the Boston players invited the members of the NHK Orchestra to a rehearsal conducted by Mr. Munch in Tokyo.

The arrival of the Orchestra in Sapporo coincided with the impact of the devastating tidal wave on the east coast which left thousands homeless. After traveling through the damaged areas in Matsushima on the way to the concert in Sendai, the Orchestra performed Debussy's "La Mer" which contains a passage of musical violence symbolic of the great power of the sea.

At the close of the concert in Sendai, a gift of ¥100,000 from the members of the Orchestra to the relief fund for tidal wave victims was presented on the stage to Yoshio Miura, Governor of Miyagi Prefecture.

Personnel and friends of the Orchestra were saddened by the death of one of the members, John Fiasca, in Fukuoka on the afternoon of the concert there. Mr. Munch directed the Orchestra to stand for a moment of silence before playing the second movement of the Beethoven Eroica symphony, a funeral march, which happened to be scheduled on the program that evening.

American Ambassador Douglas MacArthur II gave an official reception for the group in Tokyo on arrival. The Society of International Cultural Exchange and the Centennial Committee entertained the members on the day before departure. A special visit to the Imperial Palace Grounds was also arranged. The Mayor of Kyoto who had visited Symphony Hall in Boston two years ago invited the Orchestra to a performance of the Miyako Odori on the afternoon of the concert in that city.

BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD

SUNDAY, MAY [illegible], 1960 A PAG[illegible] IV

Boston Symphony Big [illegible] Far East Tour

FLORAL WELCOME for the Boston Symphony on arrival at the Tokyo airport during their five-nation tour.

Impressed Taiwan

To the Editor of The Herald:

This letter will arrive late, and therefore the visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Taiwan will no longer be "news." However, I am certain that an adequate conception of the importance of the visit of the Boston Symphony to this somewhat isolated area of the world, and its impact on the intelligent populace here, will not be adequately communicated to Boston's reading public by the news releases which result from the Symphony's current visit. Therefore this letter.

The orchestra arrived here after its itinerary was modified because of the present trouble in Korea. In other words, Taiwan, the base of the Republic of China, was a last-minute substitute in the schedule of the symphony. In addition, the prices of the tickets to the two concerts were high by local standards, beginning at fifty cents for students and climbing to a top of three dollars.

The term "World famous" is much abused in the United States these days, and there are many persons and institutions so labelled at home which have never been heard of in other parts of the world. Nevertheless, the people of Boston can be proud that they have at least one institution—the Boston Symphony Orchestra—which they can be certain is truly world famous: for despite the double handicap of high admission prices and an unexpected visit, both concerts were completely sold out in 24 hours.

Nor were the capacity crowds disappointed. When I heard that the first concert was going to be introduced by the playing of the Chinese and American national anthems, I was slightly apprehensive that the presentation of the "San Min Chu I," the Chinese national anthem, might leave something to be desired. It is a truly beautiful musical composition, but it is hardly as well known as the "Marseillaise" and some other famous anthems, and the orchestra could not possibly have had much opportunity to rehearse it. However, when the audience stood, Charles Munch raised his baton, and the first notes floated out over the audience, it was obvious that here at last was a musical organization which could wring from the beautiful Chinese anthem every musical and emotional value that is in it. My wife cried unashamedly, and so did our Chinese guest.

The program that evening was fully as the opening rendition presaged, and the tremendously impressed and largely Chinese audience refused to allow the orchestra to quit until three encores had been demanded and cheerfully rendered. Our Chinese guest, who speaks no English, told me later that the visit by the Boston Symphony was easily the most impressive American cultural unit ever seen here.

I examined the local newspapers for critical comments on the performance. All were highly laudatory. Both concerts were carried by several Chinese radio stations and rebroadcast, on tape, by the Armed Forces Radio Service in Taipei.

Boston and indeed all of Massachusetts and our great nation itself can be proud of this truly competent, impressive, and world famous organization. Because of its showing, the name of Boston is on millions of lips in Taiwan today.

Capt. EDMUND E. BALMFORTH
U.S. Army

Taipei, Taiwan

Magnificent in Kyoto

To the Editor of The Herald:

My husband and I have just heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a magnificent concert in Kyoto, Japan. We visited the mayor of this city—the sister city to Boston—who warmly congratulated Dr. Munch and the orchestra on the beautiful concert which he said was one of the highlights of the season and that Boston should be proud of this wonderful orchestra.

We do appreciate you, Dr. Munch and the orchestra, and send our congratulations.

HELEN GROSSMAN

Chestnut Hill
Kyoto, Japan

UNIVERSAL [illegible] INFORMATION SERVICE
Press [illegible]
c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, [illegible], Tokyo
Tel (561) 9431 (代表)
ユニバーサル通信社
[illegible]第一生命分館
[illegible] (561) 9431 (代表)

THE YOMIURI (Tokyo)

Dat. JUN - 1 1960 Ed.

German Embassy Moves To New Location

The German Embassy has a nounced relocation of its ch cery building to 35, Hiroo- Minato-ku, Azabu. The telephone number is 473- Owing to the relocation o offices the embassy will closed from June 1 to skeleton staff, however, attend to urgent matters.

* * *

The Japan Epsilon C No 5732 of Beta Sigm will hold its bimonthly ing at 7.30 this evening Grant Heights Officers There will be a board m at 6.30 pm in the Officers

* * *

The Boston Symphon chestra wound up its to 88

THE MAINICHI (Tokyo)
DAILY NEWS

Dat. JUN - 1 1960 Ed.

Boston Symphony Winds Up Month-Long Tour In Japan

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's historic 30-day concert tour of Japan came to an end on Tuesday, May 31, with the departure of the musicians for Manila. The 111-member party led by Charles Munch, Music Director, Associate Conductor Richard Burgin, and Guest Conductor Aaron Copland will next perform concerts in the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand before returning to Boston June 20.

The Orchestra arrived in Tokyo May 1 after a pair of concerts in Taipei and performed 22 concerts in 16 major Japanese cities during its month-long stay under the auspices of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK). The extensive tour of the Far East is being made in cooperation with the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy. The concert series in Japan was in special recognition of the Centennial Year of American-Japanese relations.

Munch Extends Thanks

"We have made many new friends," Charles Munch said in a special statement on behalf of the Orchestra. "The people of our nations have helped to prove once more that international understanding is strengthed through a mutual appreciation of music and the common language of art.

"For all members of the Boston Symhony Orchestra and for myself I want to thank the thousands of Japanese people who have been so wonderfully kind. The countless acts of individual thoughfulness and the enthusiastic reception of our music by concert audiences will long be remembered by all of us who return to our homes in Boston. We are most grateful to the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK) and to the governments of our two countries which helped to make this tour possible."

The 22 concerts in Japan were performed before an estimated concert hall audience of more than 50,000 in cities on all four main islands of the nation. Unnumbered thousands also heard or witnessed the live and delayed radio and television broadcasts by NHK over nationwide networks.

Altogether, the Boston Symphony presented six concerts in Tokyo, two in Osaka as the concluding events of the International Festival, and one each in Kyoto, Matsuyama, Oita, Yawata, Fukuoka, Hiroshima, Okayama, Nagoya, Shizuoka, Yokohama, Nagaoka, Sapporo, Sendai and Koriyama.

Concert Repertoire

The repertoire performed in Japan by the Boston Symphony Orchestra combined traditional works of the major composers of all periods with contemporary American music. Mr Munch conducted two Beethoven symphonies (3rd and 5th) and symphonies by Brahms (2nd) and by Berlioz (Fantastique), along with other major works by Debussy, Ravel, Roussel and Wagner. In addition, his programs included contemporary works by the American composers — Blackwood, Barber, Dello Joio and Piston.

The distinguished American composer, Aaron Copland, guest conductor for the entire tour of the Far East, presented his own First Symphony and his Suite from "The Tender Land," plus works of Haydn and Purcell.

Richard Burgin, Associate Conductor who is celebrating his 40th year as concert master of the Orchestra, conducted the Tchaikovsky's 5th Symphony, the Adagio from Mahler's 10th Symphony, and a composition of the contemporary American, Leon Kirchner.

During their stay in Japan, the Boston musicians climbed on Mt. Fuji: visited volcanoes in Hokkaido; enjoyed hot baths at famous Japanese hot springs, and sought out every major tourist attraction during three separate series of concerts in Tokyo.

Informal research among the 111 members reveals that more than 75 new cameras, many transistor radios, and countless pearls were purchased during the month.

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

新聞切抜

[illegible] Annex
[illegible] Tokyo
Tel (561) [illegible] (代表)
[illegible]通信社
[illegible]第一生命分館
[illegible] 1 (代表)

THE JAPAN TIMES (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY 3 1 1960 Ed

Gagaku, ancient court music and dance of Japan, was performed yesterday celebrating the centennial of the inauguration of Japan-U.S. relations, at the Korinkaku Mansion, Tokyo, before about 300 American and Japanese guests.

Boston Orchestra Lauded By Envoy as 'Foremost'

American Ambassador Douglas MacArthur II yesterday described the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "foremost" among living cultural treasures of the United States.

The high words of praise were given in his message at the Japan-American centennial Gagaku (Japan's ancient court music and dance) performance held yesterday at the Korinkaku Mansion jointly sponsored by Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai and the American Cultural Center in Tokyo.

Members of the Boston orchestra now performing in Japan were among some 300 Japanese and American guests invited to the performance.

MacArthur said in his message which was read by Minister William Leonhart that the U.S. does not have what are "so aptly called in Japan, 'living cultural treasures'."

"But, if we had, then I am sure that foremost among our living cultural treasures would be the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Dr. Charles Munch. They are now here in Japan, as Kabuki is in the United States, contributing their art to the strengthening of cultural ties between our peoples."

The envoy said many events currently observed in the U.S. and Japan celebrating the centennial of the opening of relations between the two nations "represent a highly auspicious beginning of a second century of even closer ties between our two countries."

Gagaku was performed by Imperial Household Musicians and dancers on a stage which was made in New York, modeled after the stage in the Imperial Household, and used during the Gagaku tour of America last year.

The stage was sent to Sasebo by the U.S. Navy from where the Japan Maritime Self-Defense Force transported it to Yokosuka and then to Tokyo.

Among the guests were Prince and Princess Takamatsu.

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

新聞切抜

c/o Daiichi Life Ins[illegible]
Kyobashi 2-8, [illegible]
Tel (561) [illegible]
ユニバーサル[illegible]社
東京都中央区京橋2−8[illegible]一生命分館
電話京橋 (561) [illegible] (代表)

THE MAINICHI (Tokyo)
DAILY NEWS

Dat. MAY 3 0 1960 Ed.

03

MUSIC CALENDAR

BY Jack Hirano

To round out the brilliant success of their NHK-sponsored tour, the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a farewell concert at Tokyo Metropolitan Gymnasium on Monday, May 30, from 6.30 p.m. For this occasion, conductor Richard Burgin has selected a program of Leon Kirchner's Toccata for Strings, solo winds & percussion, Mahler's Adagio from the 10th symphony and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor Op. 64.

* * *

Under the sponsorship of the Mainichi Shimbun, the noted Japanese pianist Toyoaki Matsuura, who is the first prize winner of the Long-Thibaud Concour, will give a recital at Hibiya Hall on Thursday, June 2, at 6.30 p.m. His program is made up by Schumann's Fantasy Op. 17, Chopin's Nocturn No. 2 and Ballad No. 1 in G minor and other works by Ravel, Mendelssohn and Balakirev.

* * *

A vocal recital by Kaneko Yanagi will be given at Daiichi Seimei Hall on Monday, May 30, at 7 p.m. Masayasu Oshima will assist her at the piano, she will sing works of Schumann, Strauss, Wagner, Rentaro Taki, Ryutaro Hirota and Emiko Nagayo.

* * *

A joint piano recital of Kiyoko Ouchi and Mika Uchida will be presented at Daiichi Seimei Hall on Tuesday May 31, at 7 p.m. The program includes Mozart's Concerto in E major for two pianos, Brahms' Variation on a theme by Haydn for two pianos, Chopin's Ballad No. 2, Nocturn Op. 32, Polonaise and other works of Schumann.

* * *

New works of the contemporary Japanese composer Yoriaki Matsudaira will be performed by Hiroyuki Iwagi conducting the Chamber Orchestra on Tuesday, May 31, at 6.30 p.m., at Sogetsu Kaikan Hall.

* * *

Works of Rossini, Boungiovanni, Bixio, Lama, Cioffi, Mascagni, Donizetti, Cilea, Tosti, Leon Cavallo, Boito and Giordano will be sung by Hiroshi Kawaguchi, tenor, in his solo recital to be given at Yamaha Hall on Thursday, June 2, at 7 p.m. Kimiko Sakabe will be at the piano,

* * *

An "Evening of Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert" will be presented by members of the Kakusei-Kai Vocal Group, including Masanori Tomotake, Shizuko Kodo, Fukiko Suzuki, Michiko Komatsu, Michiko Sagara and Toshiko Saegusa on Wednesday, June 1, at 6.30 p.m. at Daiichi Seimei Hall.

* * *

The 11th subscription concert of the Tokyo Radio Chorus Troupe will be presented at Bunkyo Hall on Sunday June 5, at 6.30 p.m. Under the musical direction of Hideo Saito, they will present an all-Schumann program.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

INCORRECT PAGINATION

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Is the Boston Symphony Orchestra as good as they say?

[illegible] By concert's end, Manilans were unanimous in their lusty bravos and praise for the internationally famous symphony orchestra that is performing for the first time in the Philippines.

And whether it was Richard Burgin, associate conductor, leading the orchestra through the romantic passages of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 or Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, directing the BSO through Haydn's Symphony No. 95, audiences and critics agreed they were listening to one of the world's greatest interpreters of the music masters.

And tonight, as in the past two nights, the Boston Symphony Orchestra—under its Music Director, Charles Munch—will once again show Manila's music lovers why it has been acclaimed as an orchestra of the highest European standards.

The orchestra dates back to 1881 when Henry Lee Higginson, a Bostonian and one-time music student in Vienna, decided to give Boston the best in music by organizing what is today one of the greatest symphony orchestras in the world.

Since 1900, the orchestra has been giving some 200 concerts a year and throughout its history it has played more modern music than the majority of symphony orchestras. It is celebrating its 80th season this year.

Its performance here, presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, is part of the orchestra's 1960 Far Eastern Tour under President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA).

Charles Munch, who will direct the BSO on its last performance in Manila tonight, has been the orchestra's music director since 1949. A conductor of worldwide experience and success, Dr. Munch is considered one of

A dedicated musician, Dr. Munch considers conducting "not a profession at all but a sacred calling, sometimes a priesthood and often a disease—a disease from which the only escape is death."

Years of work and study, according to the BSO Music Director, do not make a conductor of a man "if he is not possessed by an inner exaltation, an all-consuming flame and a magnetism that can bewitch both the musicians of his orchestra and the audience."

The conductor's medium, says Dr. Munch, is not speech but gesture, posture, telepathy and an irresistibly warm radiance.

"Standing on the podium, at the instant when his hand marks the first beat of a symphony by Beethoven or Brahms, the conductor is the cynosure of all eyes, the hearth to which thousands have come for warmth and light. He can only live, let his heart beat, his soul vibrate and his emotions sing

"Scrupulously and conscientiously the conductor analyzes the themes, the harmonies and the orchestration of his scores. All his intelligence and all his senses are always at the service of his art.

"Let no one be astonished then that I consider my work a priesthood, not a profession. ...Like all sacred callings, that of the conductor supposes a total self-renunciation and a profound humility."

Tonight, Dr. Munch will more than portray the conductor's task as he leads the BSO through Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," Piston's Symphony No. 6, and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2.

MANILA AUDIENCE — Crowds jammed the Rizal Memorial Hall to capacity to listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is acclaimed today as one of the great symphony orchestras of the world. During each of the orchestra's performances, the crowd (above) showed their appreciation through thunderous and standing ovation.

DEDICATED MUSICIAN — Exclusive TIMES photographs show: Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, backstage, following the orchestration of scores during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first performance last Wednesday under the direction of Associate Conductor Richard Burgin. Series of photographs pictures Copland backstage, deeply concentrated as he goes through the motions and gestures of a conductor, oblivious of the presence of a TIMES cameraman who captured his actions on film. Copland, as guest conductor, directed the BSO during its second performance in Manila last night. A versatile music writer, he has made significant contributions to musical literature of the orchestra, the films and the theater.

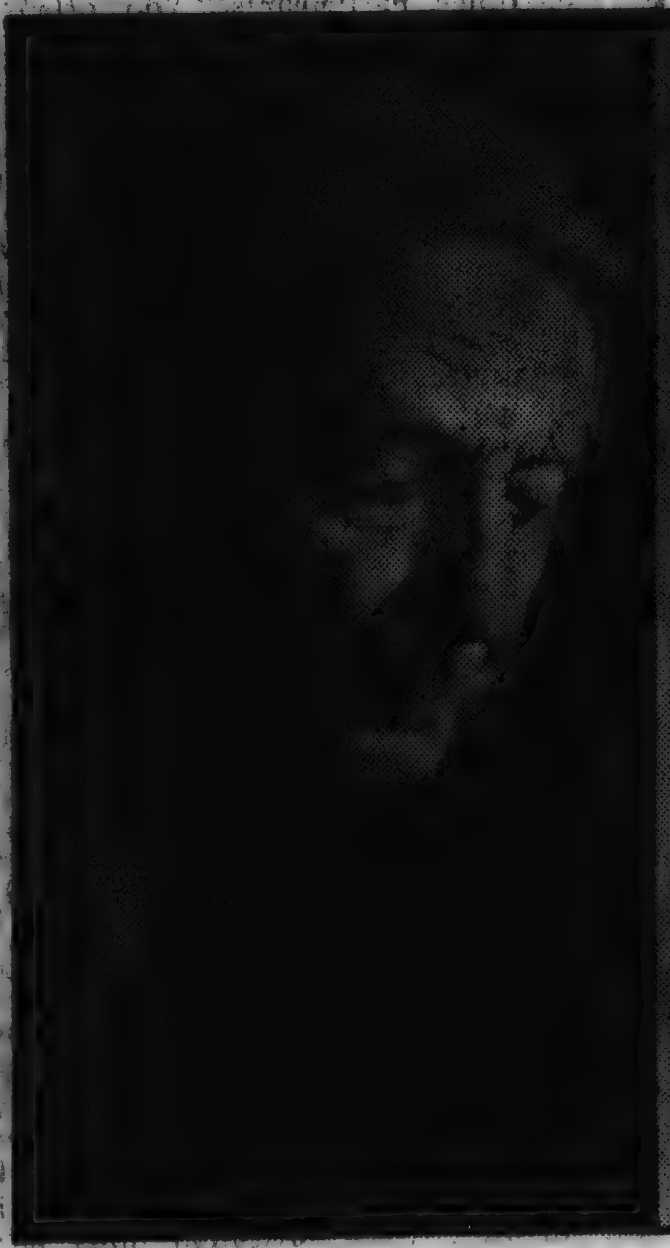
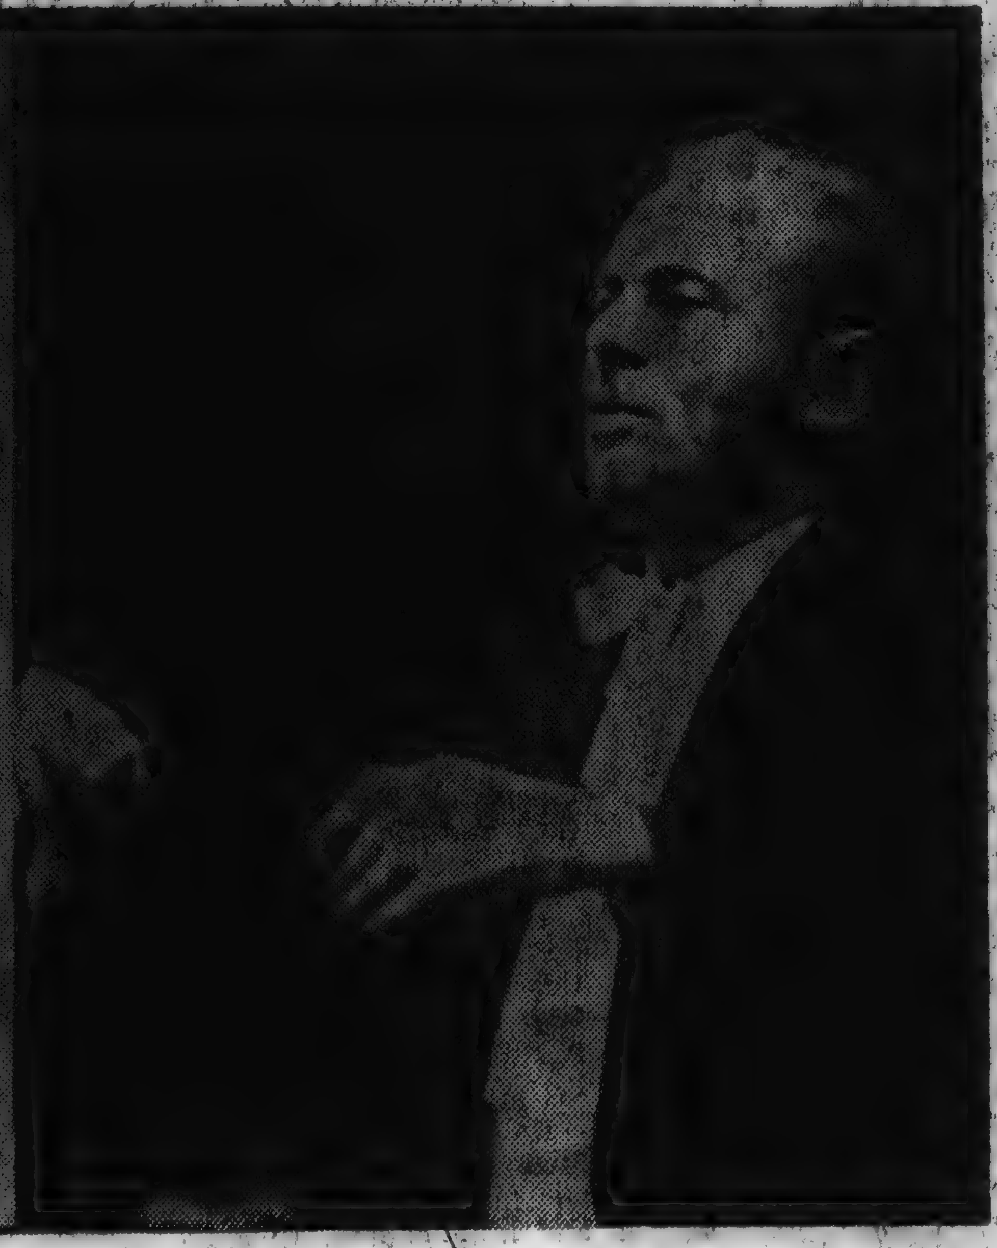
93

The Manila Times
SECTION B
June 3, 1960

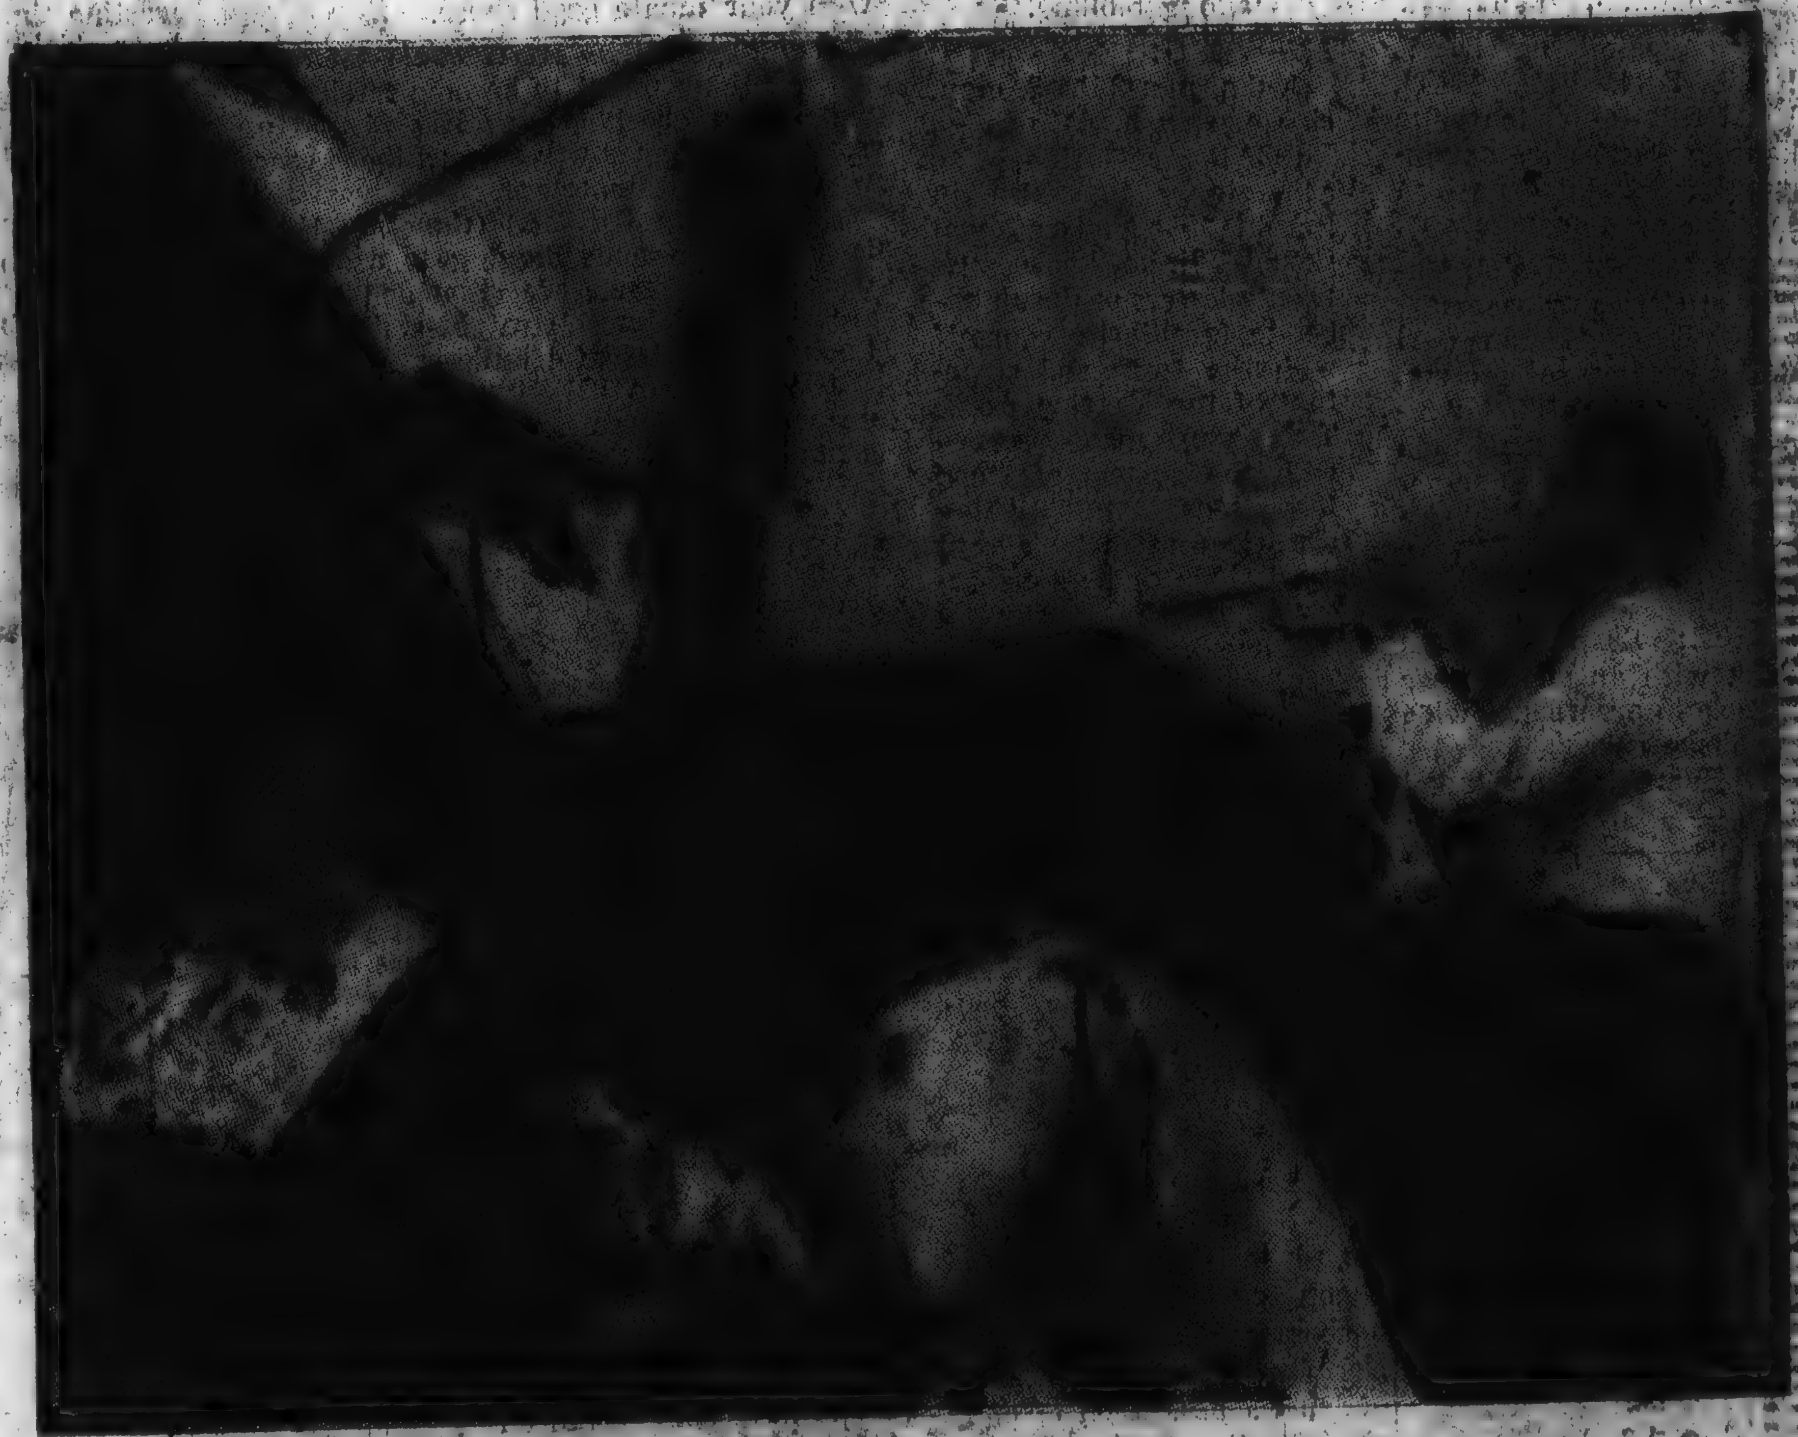
Daily Magazine



MUSIC DIRECTOR, Charles Munch, will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its third and last performance in Manila tonight. He is one of the foremost symphony musicians in the world today.



ASSOCIATE CONDUCTOR, Richard Burgin, has served in this post since 1943. A child prodigy, he was a soloist at 11 with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society, later joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1920 at the age of 27.



MUSICIANS AT WORK — Composite color photograph portrays three of the 100-odd members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as they go through the difficult passages of a symphony during one of their performances held at the Rizal Memorial Hall. The orchestra's performance here, presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, is part of its 1960 Far Eastern Tour made possible through the U.S. President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations.

Boston's famous symphony orchestra in Manila

Is the Boston Symphony Orchestra as good as they say?

To find the answer, Manilans jammed the Rizal Memorial Hall, then sat back and listened. By concert's end, Manilans were unanimous in their lusty bravos and praise for the internationally famous symphony orchestra that is performing for the first time in the Philippines.

[illegible] Richard Burgin, associate con-performance in Manila tonight, has been the orchestra's music director since 1949. A conductor of worldwide experience and success, Dr. Munch is considered one of the foremost symphony musicians in the world.

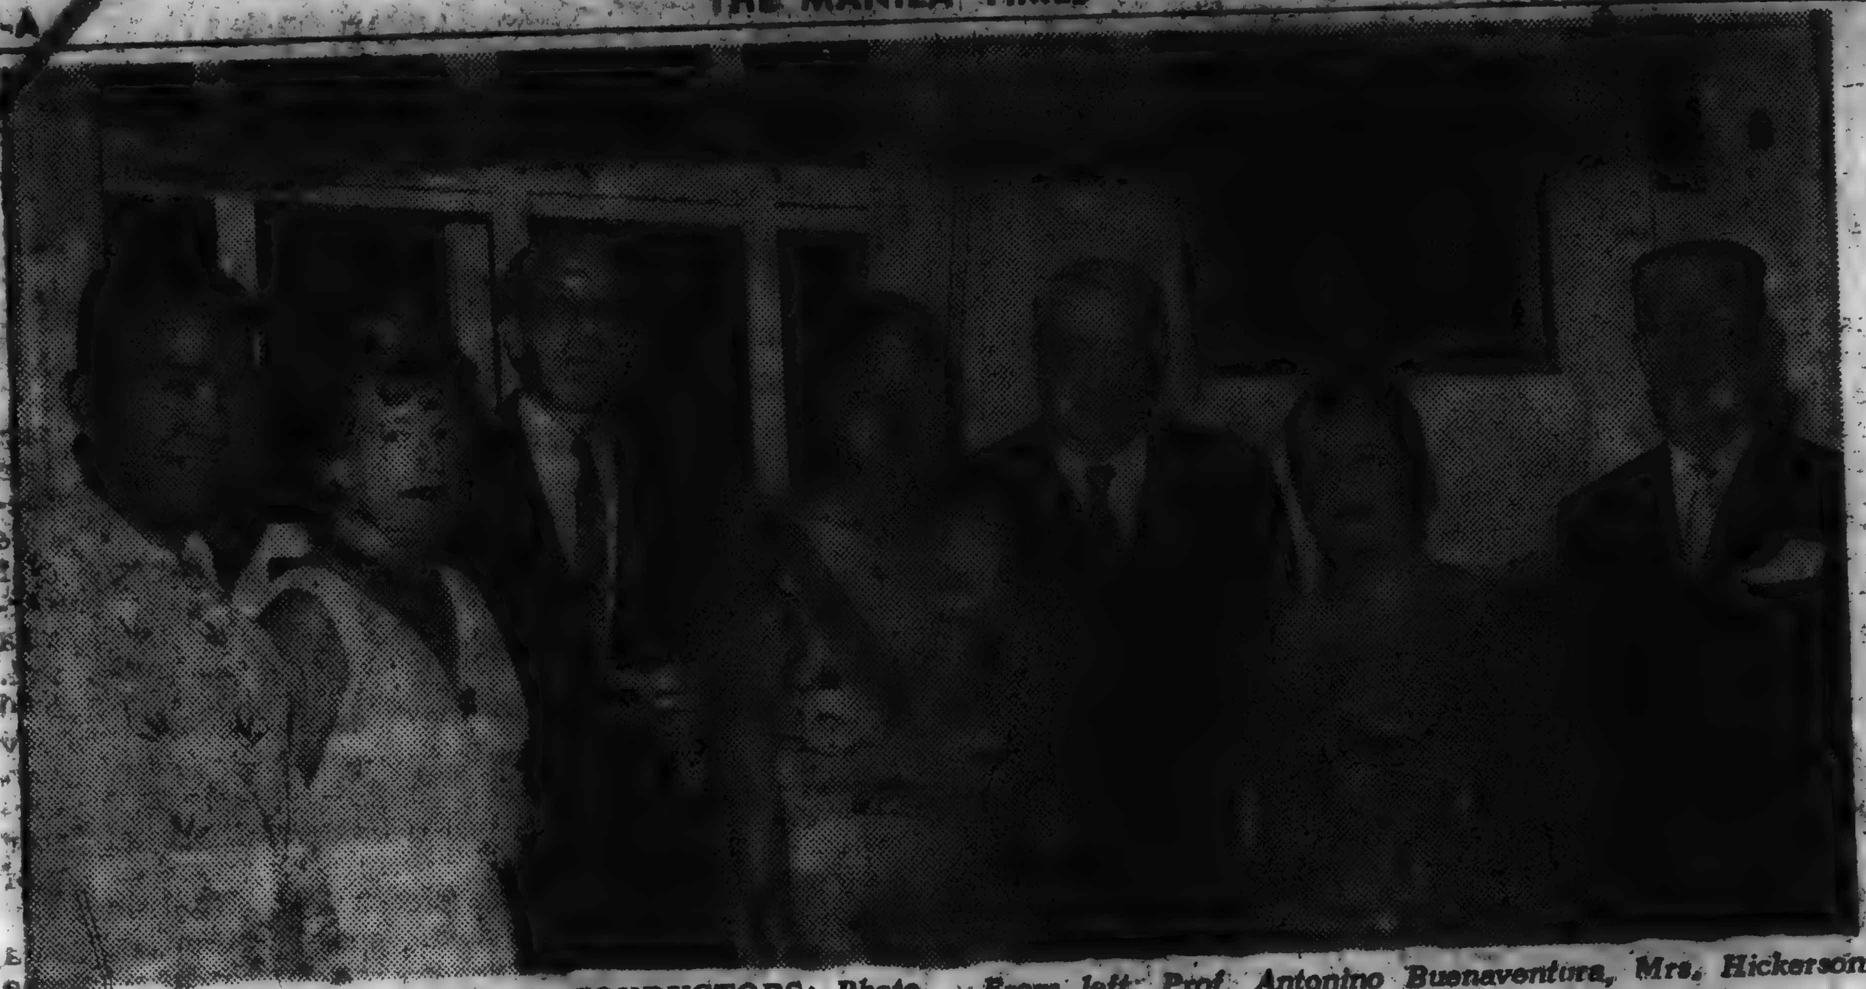
A dedicated musician, Dr. Munch considers conducting "not a profession at all but a sacred calling, sometimes a priesthood and often a disease—a disease from which the only escape is death."

Years of work and study, according to the BSO Mu-

95

6-A THE MANILA TIMES June 2, 1960



FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY CONDUCTORS: Photo was taken at the reception given by US Ambassador and Mrs. J. D. Hickerson late yesterday afternoon at the embassy residence in honor of the Boston symphony conductors. From left: Prof Antonino Buenaventura, Mrs. Hickerson, Aaron Copland, Mrs. Basilio Valdes, Charles Munch, Mrs. Maria Orense Casas and Mr. Hickerson. Richard Burgin who conducted last night's concert was unable to attend.

AMERICA'S LEADING COMPOSER

Copland bats for modern music and applause between movements

By Nati Valentin

Aaron Copland yesterday put himself on the side of people who applaud between movements of a symphony.

But he has a gripe, shared by all other composers of contemporary music: their works are not played enough.

The leading American composer of contemporary music will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's second concert tonight at 8:15 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

In answer to a question put to him during the "meet the press" luncheon of the Manila Overseas Press Club, of which he was guest, Copland said he "would rather have too much than too little," when it comes to audience appreciation.

He declared that applause tends to "relax the tension" after one movement of a symphony is played. He said he believed it to be "a matter of custom" and that, as a boy, he had heard it practised.

Japanese audiences were extremely unified in their reaction, Copland said, and it was a "slow" reaction.

Not so in Russia, where he visited at the invitation of the Russian government, in return for visits to the United States of Russian composers including Shostakovich. "The Russians couldn't have been more cooperative," he said.

As to whether or not he would compose something as a result of his tour in this part of the world, he said he couldn't be sure until he got back home, which will be about June 20. He expressed the hope that the League of Filipino composers, whom he will meet today, will be able to play him some Philippine music.

Elaborating on his comment that contemporary music is not played enough, Copland said that for some curious reason practically [illegible] Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 95 complete tonight's program.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster, and also Brooklyn-born, last night opened the BSO concerts, the third and last of which will be conducted tomorrow by the BSO music director, Charles Munch.

The Manila concerts are presentations of Alfredo Lo[illegible] the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA).

Manila

a Chronicle Thursday, June 2, 1960

A. Copland's repertoire revealed

Aaron Copland, the American composer, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its second concert tonight, June 2 at 8:15 p.m. at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

Tonight's program includes two of the noted composer's own works; First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land.

The complete program follows: Purcell's Fantasias for Strings, No. 2 in B flat major, No. 4 in C minor and Fantasia on One Note in F major; Copland's First Symphony — Prelude, Scherzo and Finale; Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 95 — Allegro, Andante Cantabile, Minuet, Trio and Finale Vivace; and Copland's Suite from "The Tender Land including Introduction and Love Music, Party Scene and The Promise of Loving.

Copland is traveling with the BSO as a guest conductor. The Manila concerts are presentations of Alfredo [illegible] in collaboration with the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA).

Tickets are on sale at Botica Boie, and after six p.m. at the Rizal Memorial Colisuem.

U.S. AMBASSADOR and Mrs. John D. Hickerson were the hosts last night at a reception in honor of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here on a three-day concert tour. From left are: Mrs. Eva Macapagal, the host, Charles Munch, Bernardino Custodio, Mrs. Basilio Valdes, Mrs. Hickerson, Vice President Diosdado Macapagal and Aaron Coplan[illegible] will conduct the concert tonight.

95

FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY CONDUCTORS: Photo was taken at the reception given by US Ambassador and Mrs. I. D. Hickerson late yesterday afternoon at the embassy residence in honor of the Boston symphony conductors. From left: Pro ... Aaron Copland, ... Maria Orense ... who conducted ... Hickerson, ... unch, Mrs. ... rd Burgin ... attend.

AMERICA'S LEADING COMPOSER

Copland bats for mod... and applause between n...

Manila

A. Copland's repertoire revealed

Aaron Copland, the American composer, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its second concert tonight, June 2 at 8:15 p.m. at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

Tonight's program includes two of the noted composer's own works; First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land.

The complete program follows: Purcell's Fantasias for Strings, No. 2 in B flat major, No. 4 in C minor and Fantasia on One Note in F major; Copland's First Symphony — Prelude, Scherzo and Finale; Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 95 — Allegro, Andante Cantabile, Minuet, Trio and Finale Vivace; and Copland's Suite from "The Tender Land including Introduction and Love Music, Party Scene and The Promise of Loving.

Copland is traveling with the BSO as a guest conductor. The Manila concerts are presentations of Alfredo [illegible] in collaboration [illegible] American National Theater and Academy (ANTA).

Tickets are on sale at Botica Boie, and after six p.m. at the Rizal Memorial Colisuem.

U.S. AMBASSADOR and Mrs. John D. Hickerson were the hosts last night at a reception in honor of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here on a three-day concert tour. From left are: Mrs. Eva Macapagal, the host, Charles Munch, Bernardino Custodio, Mrs. Basilio Valdes, Mrs. Hickerson, Vice President Diosdado Macapagal and Aaron Copland [illegible] will conduct the concert toniaht.

America's

From 6-A

everywhere in the world, 75 per cent of the music played is old music.

In his remarks at the MOPC, Copland said he wished to stress that the Boston Symphony is not a cultural mission first, but first a music-making organization.

The Brooklyn-born composer was the first recipient of a Guggenheim fellowship, is the author of three books, has had his works performed extensively throughout the world, particularly in Mexico, Cuba and South America, where his name is widely known, and has written music not only for concertizing but for [illegible] the ballet, and opera. [illegible] he will conduct [illegible] full-length [illegible] The Tender Land, as well as another of his works, First Symphony.

Purcell's Fantasia for [illegible] Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 95 complete tonight's program.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster, and also Brooklyn-born, last night opened the BSO concerts, the third and last of which will be conducted tomorrow by the BSO music director, Charles Munch.

The Manila concerts are presentations of Alfredo Lo- ... the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Thursday, June 2, 1960

THE PHILIPPINES HERALD

Page 5

Ambassador, Mrs. Hickerson Give Reception For BSO Members

MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were honored at an evening reception yesterday by American Ambassador and Mrs. John D. Hickerson at the American embassy residence on Del Pan street, Pasay city. Shown above are (from left) Col. Antonino Buenaventura, Dr. Charles Munch, Mrs. Hickerson, Bernardino Custodio, Aaron Copland, Mrs. Maria Orense Cases and Ambassador Hickerson. (Herald Photo)

just between us

By LYDIA DOLORES CASTILLO

AT THIS writing we have not been to the Boston Symphony orchestra concert (our deadline being earlier than concert time), but we have met several, in fact the leading members, of the group and at once we felt sure of having such a wonderful evening of beautiful music, considering that these men and women appeared to be sensitive artists during the luncheon at the Manila hotel Narra room.

Richard Burgin, the BSO's conductor in its maiden Manila performance, is now on his fortieth year as conductor so that he had acquired quite a wealth of cultural know-how. Charles Munch who takes the baton on the symphony's last performance tomorrow, has been conductor of the BSO for eleven years. Of German descent, he is now a citizen of France and a resident of the United States during the concert season. Aside from music, Mr. Munch displayed some knowledge of analizing a person through his penmanship.

Second night conductor Aaron Copland who failed to make the luncheon because of another engagement, is a native of Brooklyn and he came to fame some thirty-five years ago when the Boston Symphony introduced to the American public his first composition. Since then the orchestra has always included in its repertoire a Copland piece.

For the sidelights of their current Far East tour, we turned to the group's efficient secretary Sally Hempel, an attractive blonde whose fair complexion was heightened by the tangerine-hued barong dress she was wearing. The dress was bought by Miss Hempel only yesterday morning.

The symphony has been travelling since April 26 when they left Boston. Their first Far East concert was to have been held in Korea, but unfortunately they had to cancel it because of the recent internal trouble in that country. In five days, they arranged for performances in Taipeh and their efforts were more than compensated by the very enthusiastic response the people of Free China afforded them.

They have just come from Japan where Miss Hempel noticed that women were treated very much less than men who were waited on and helped with the baggage more than the ladies. It was also here where the group was subjected to very formal press conferences "like it was signing for a peace treaty or something," says BSO manager Thomas P[illegible]y. Japan, the group members agree, is a very musical country.

Of the more than one hundred orchestra members two are women and another alternate is a woman. Olivia Luetche is the harpist, Winifred Winograd is the cellist while Lois Schaefer plays the flute. Their first flutist is not with the orchestra during this trip as she expects a baby in August.

It's been more than a month now that they have been away from home and apparently they are already homesick. Someone nostalgically said they seemed to have been away years and years ago.

Because of very tight schedules, the orchestra staff (manager, secretary) have not had time to really see the places they have been to. They were kept busy arranging for matters pertinent to the concerts. The orchestra men had their full of shopping, though. Mr. Munch, for one, was able to purchase some souvenir items from Japan.

For Friday's concert which will have The president and First Lady as special guests, the orchestra men will wear the Barong Tagalog. It was at this luncheon press conference that they were measured by a tailor specially commissioned by Mr. Lozano for this particular suit.

97

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

新聞切抜

c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9 4 3 1 (代表)

ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋２－８第一生命分館
電話京橋（561）９４３１（代表）

SHIPPING & TRADE NEWS (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY 25 1960 Ed.

63

Descendants of Brooke, Perry

Shown during a guest appearance on NHK's Monday night "My Secret" program are two descendants of early Americans who figured prominently in the first ties between Japan and the United States. They are Professor George Brooke (center), grandson of the former U.S. Navy Captain John Brooke, and Thomas Perry, grandson of Commodore Matthew Perry, and now manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Brooke, and his elder sister, Mrs. [illegible] Brooke Day, received a gift from "Shipping & Trade News" Tuesday afternoon in gratitude for their grandfather's contribution toward Japan-American friendship.

BSO's First Concert Applauded By Manilans

By NESTOR MATA

The famed Boston Symphony orchestra gave a successful first night concert at the packed Rizal Memorial coliseum last evening to the resounding applause, loud and persistent bravas of Manila's music lovers, especially after its performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor, received several minutes-long and standing ovation after the triumphant and jubilant ending of the Fifth Symphony. It was an authoritative reading of the Russian composer's great work.

From the start of the sombre first movement (Andante), to the lyrical and passionate slow movement (Andante cantabile), then to the gliding and graceful valse movement and finally to the heroic and powerful Finale, Burgin showed his mastery of the Tchaikovsky symphony; his very expressive hands drawing out the yearning and unquenchable horn melody from the orchestra.

And when he heard the

(Continued on back page)

97

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-8, Chuoku, Tokyo
Tel.(561) 9481 (代表)

ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋2－8第一生命分館
電話京橋(561) 9481 (代表)

新聞切抜

SHIPPING & TRADE NEWS (Tokyo)

Dat. MAY 25. 1960 Ed.

03

Descendants of Brooke, Perry

Shown during a guest appearance on NHK's Monday night "My Secret" program are two descendants of early Americans who figured prominently in the first ties between Japan and the United States. They are Professor George Brooke (center), grandson of the former U.S. Navy Captain John Brooke, and Thomas Perry, grandson of Commodore Matthew Perry, and now manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Brooke and his elder sister, Mrs. A[illegible] Brooke Day, received a [illegible] from "Shipping & Trade News" Tuesday afternoon in gratitude for their grandfather's contribution toward Japan-American friendship.

BSO's Fi[illegible] Concert Appl[illegible]ns

The famed Boston Symphony orchestra gave a successful first night concert at the packed Rizal Memorial coliseum last evening to the resounding applause, loud and persistent bravas of Manila's music lovers, especially after its performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor, received several minutes-long and standing ovation after the triumphant and jubilant ending of the Fifth Symphony. It was an authoritative reading of the Russian composer's great work.

From the start of the sombre first movement (Andante), to the lyrical and passionate slow movement (Andante cantabile), then to the gliding and graceful valse movement and finally to the heroic and powerful Finale, Burgin showed his mastery of the Tchaikovsky symphony; his very expressive hands drawing out the yearning and unquenchable horn melody from the orchestra.

And when he heard the

(Continued on back page)

The Philippines Herald

Year XL Manila, Philippines, Thursday, June 2, 1960 16 Pages — 1

Boston Symphony Orchestra's First Concert Here Successful

LONG AND LOUD OVATION greeted the Boston Symphony orchestra and its associate conductor Richard Burgin last night at the Rizal Memorial coliseum where it gave its first night concert before Manila's music lovers. The American music group, here for a series of three concerts under the auspices of Impresario Alfredo Lozano (in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy), is shown in upper photo performing Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony in E minor. Lower photo shows Burgin swinging his arms and swaying his body as he led the BSO musicians in a well-applauded rendition of the Russian composer's opus (Story below, Col. 7)

99

Z, Society Editor MANILA BULLETIN, THURS., JUNE 2, 1960

AMBASSADOR and Mrs. John D. Hickerson gave a reception yesterday at their residence on Del Pan in honor of the conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the group are, left to right, Lt. Col. L. G. Cariño, Mrs. Diosdado Macapagal, Ambassador Hickerson (partly covered), Charles Munch, B. Custodio, Mrs. Basilio Valdez, Mrs. Hickerson, Vice President Diosdado Macapagal, and Aaron Copland.

Manilans Thrill To Maiden Performance Of The BSO

By RITA [illegible]

History [illegible] last night as a c[illegible] crowd of [illegible] listened to th[illegible] performance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, with Richard Burgin conducting.

With a two-hour treat of symphonic music, Manilans went home glowing: the famed BSO did not prove a disappointment.

Burgin, grey-haired and calm-meined associate conductor of the 80-year-old symphonic orchestra, displayed an admirable, if not too dramatically impressive, control of the program played capped by Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Op. 64.

Except for Burgin, who wore a white coat, the rest of the male members of the 104-man orchestra, which has three women members, were informally dressed in white shirts. They must have anticipated the heat, for which Manila is famous. But as they went through the heavy passages of Kirchner, Mahler and Tschaikowsky, the BSO members seemed to have forgotten the sweltering heat that was beginning to soak their backs with perspiration.

The performance started 15 minutes later than its scheduled time at 8:15 p.m., with a spirited version of the Philippine National Anthem, which was immediately followed by the American National Anthem.

Huddled on the specially-built stage by architect Cesar Concio, who improvised a canopy above to improve the coliseum's acoustics, the BSO proceeded to the first number on the program, Kirchner's Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion, Dominated by string instruments, this piece seemed to have made Burgin a good vehicle for his specialty. Warsaw-born Burgin, who is active in chamber of music and a teacher, founded the Burgin String Quartet.

With the second piece, Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony, the BSO proved highly sensitive, oozing with somber passages now and then, rising to shrieking pitch then lapsing into somber passages again. This obviously needed good control, which Burgin ably gave, making beads of perspiration trek down his face.

The BSO proved to be at its most inspired moment during the last number of the program — Tschaivkowsky's Fifth Symphony. Said to be [illegible] song against Fate", [illegible] symphony, as played by [illegible] last night, sounded even more fiercely brave as Burgin led the fevered orchestra through the animating first movement, up to the passionate andante cantabile con alcuna licenza, the second movement, hopping to the lighter valse of the third movement, and finally giving with a terrific, deafening finale.

Altogether the BSO gave this "brave song" of a symphony an even more resolute and determined clamor that did not fail to give the audience that wonderful feeling of having triumphed over the forces of Fate.

An appreciative audience made Burgin come back to the podium twice amidst thunderous applause that reached its fevered pitch shortly before the BSO played a delightful encore—the tick-tocking finale of Haydn's Clock Symphony.

The BSO three-day concert performances here are being presented by impressario Alfredo Lozano in co-operation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Tonight's performance will be conducted by Pulitzer prize-winner composer Aaron Copland, who will play, among others, two of his own works.

Copland Wields Baton On Second Night Of Boston Symphony Group

Evening News
16 MAY 1960

Aaron Copland, well-known American composer-conductor and winner of the Pulitzer, Guggenheim and Hollywood's Oscar prizes in music, will lead the visiting 104-man Boston Symphony Orchestra's second night's concert at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 2 at 8:15 p.m.

Copland has selected as his opening number the 16th century work of Purcell, the three Fantasias for Strings, and will be followed by his own composition, the First Symphony, in three movements.

Highlights of the evening's program are two outstanding orchestral works, Haydn's "Symphony in C minor, No. [illegible]" and Copland's Suite from the Opera "The Tender Land" The "Symphony in C minor" was among the first set of the six symphonies which Haydn composed for his first visit to London in 1791, while Copland's Orchestral Suite from his famous Opera "The Tender Land" was composed in the middle thirties. It describes the love complications of a young girl from a rustic family in Alabama who falls in love with a drifter during harvest time.

Tickets to the June 1, 2 and 3 concerts which will all be held at the Rizal Memorial coliseum at 8:15 p.m. are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

A LARGE CROWD of concert-goers turned out last night for the first of three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Rizal Coliseum. Richard Burgin, who conducted last night's concert is shown above as he wielded the baton for Adagio from the Tenth Symphony by Mahler.

100

Party Moods & Etc.

THERE WE WERE yesterday ready to interview Richard Burgin (pronounced boor-gan) the associate director of the famous Boston Symphony orchestra, during a luncheon tendered by Impressario Alfredo Lozano at the Oak room, Manila hotel. But he turned the tables on us by doing most of the asking himself — mainly on Philippine culture: the Philippine drama and music. He was also specially interested on the national language here. Which is understandable as he is something of a linguist. He speaks, besides English, Russian, German, Polish very well, a little French and he reads Swedish and Norwegian.

MR. BURGIN, who conducted at the Boston Symphony's premiere performance here last night, is a most interesting person with stimulating ideas about music. When the subject of music as a profession came up, he said: "A profession is something that pays. But we all know that it isn't so with most of those who depend on music alone for a living. Therefore, music should probably not be included among the professions, but should be thought of only as an art . . . as a mode of expression the way it was when the world was young." He then explained how music became a profession when the technic of projecting the art became more and more complicated. "Maybe the time for a reaction has come," said Burgin. "The art of communicating (one's ideas and emotions through music) shouldn't be so complicated," he added.

When he is not conducting with the BSO, Mr. Burgin teaches at the New England Conservatory of Music and the Boston University violin, conducting and chamber music. (When he joined the BSO in 1920, it was as a violinist, as the orchestra's concert master.) He recently marked his 40th anniversary with BSO. "But I'd rather not talk about that . . . anniversaries show up one's age," he laughingly remarked.

MR. BURGIN is married to Ruth Posset, a violinist of note ("She's THE violinist in the family," he says) who still performs with top symphony orchestras in the United States and in Europe. They have a 16-year-old daughter who, although she plays the piano, refuses to turn concert pianist; and a 13-year-old son whose current main interest is sports. Mr. Burgin was born in Warsaw, but when he was 10, the family moved to Germany where he grew up, then to Russia where he completed his studies. He performed in the Scandinavian countries before going to the United States in 1920 when he was invited to join the BSO.

WE DIDN'T HAVE a chance to talk with conductor Charles Munch but he impressed us as a warm person (unlike another prima dona-ish famous conductor who was here late last year). After the luncheon, asked to say a few words, he delivered only one: "Salamat!" Then he enjoined the other members of the BSO to say it with him. The response was somewhat timid, so he directed them to repeat it, gesturing and commanding as if on the podium: "Fortissimo!" The result was a roar!

FROM MISS SALLY HEMPEL, secretary of the BSO manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr., we learned that to run the orchestra from season to season, it takes a princely sum. By the way, it has the reputation for being "one music group that almost earns enough to make both ends meet." (Incidentally, the BSO has given 4,800 concerts in the last 40 years.)

The orchestra left the United States on this their first Asian tour on April 25 and they expect to be back in time for their famous Tanglewood concert series which starts in July. At this point, Rosario Mazzco, the group's personnel manager, chimed in: "That was years ago. . . ." which shows that they are getting homesick, indeed.

THE THREE WOMEN on the orchestra are Olivia Luetcke, harpist, who showed us finger tips that are not calloused "Because when one has good flesh, one doesn't develop callouses" . . . pleasant faced Winifred Winograd, cellist, who confided that their routine is not really bad, except of course when they are on tours abroad . . . and Lois Schaefer, flutist, who is not a regular member but who took over in place of other staff members who are too old to make the trip.

FOR THEIR FAREWELL performance tomorrow, the BSO members led by the conductor, will wear barong Tagalog. The next day, Saturday, they will be treated to "salo-salo" at the Paez fishponds in Obando by Impressario Lozano who will be assisted by wife Nena Paez Lozano in entertaining the guests.

R.M.O.

US AMBASSADOR AND MRS. John Hickerson gave a reception yesterday at their residence on Del Pan, Pasay in honor of the Boston Symphony orchestra which is here for a series of concerts. Photo shows from left: Col. A. Buenaventura, the hostess, Aaron Copland, composer, Mrs. Rosario Valdez, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, Mrs. Maria Orense de Casas, and Ambassador Hickerson.

Copland Leads BSO [illegible]

Aaron [illegible] American [illegible] conduct [illegible] phony [illegible] second [illegible] 8:1[illegible] mo[illegible]

Th[illegible] two [illegible] ser's [illegible] Symphony [illegible] from his opera, [illegible] der Land. The [illegible] program follows: [illegible] Fantasias for Strings, No. 2 in B flat major, No. 4 in C minor and Fantasia on One Note in F major; Copland's First Symphony —Prelude, Scherzo [illegible] Finale; Haydn's [illegible] Allegro, [illegible] bile, [illegible] nale Vivace; and Copland's Suite from The Te[illegible] Land including Introduction and Love Music, Party Scene and The Promise of Loving.

Copland is traveling with the BSO as a guest conductor. The Manila concerts are presentation of Alfredo Lozano in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA). Tickets are on sale at Botica Boie, and after 6 p.m., at the coliseum.

101

THE PHILIPPINES HERALD

BSO's Conductors, Members Are Feted

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA's three conductors and members were feted yesterday at the Narra room of the Manila Hotel and the Manila Overseas Press club. Top photo was taken during the reception given by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in honor of Dr. Charles Munch, music director of BSO (fifth from left). Also shown in photo are (from left) Olivia Luetche, Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the BSO's manager; Richard Burgin, associate conductor, Lozano, Munch and Thomas D. Perry Jr. Photo at right taken at the MOPC shows (from left) William S. Cox, Mrs. Betty Becker, Aaron Copland, eminent American composer and guest conductor of BSO, and Jim Becker, chief of bureau, Associated Pre

---

BSO's First Concert Applauded . . .

(Continued from page 1)

sweet sounds of the cantabile from the horn and the cellos and the body of other string instruments, Burgin came out with an expressive smile on his lips that brightened his face.

The Tchaikovsky work was also full of turbulence particularly in the first and last movements; Burgin drew out the powerful chords and agitated the orchestra members with great thrusts of his arms, wide swayings of his body and the poundings of his clenched left fist in the air, when he reached the "madlike" Finale which filled the coliseum with the great music of Tchaikovsky.

The first part of last night's program included the Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion by Kirchner, and Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony.

These two works contrasted each other. While the Kirchner opus involved piercing chords and scale-like passages almost hurting to the ear, Mahler's masterpiece contained melodic passages of sweet magnitude, although it was generally sombre from beginning to end.

It seems that the big crowd last evening was not very much satisfied with the first part of the BSO's concert. But it was a highly competent performance. We particularly liked the Mahler composition. But it was the Tchaikovsky opus that really marked the high point of the BSO's debut concert before Manila's music lovers.

The superb performance of the BSO under the masterly baton of Burgin carried away the big crowd that several bursts of applause compelled Burgin to return again and again to the podium to acknowledge the standing ovation and loud bravas of a very appreciative audience.

Giving way to the audience's insistent demand for an encore after the Tchaikovsky opus, Burgin, who also congratulated the BSO's concertmaster and his assistant, returned to the podium and conducted the last movement of Haydn's "Clock" Symphony.

Impresario Alfredo Lozano, who is presenting the Boston Symphony orchestra, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy, also acknowledged (in the concert program) Cesar H. Concio's contribution to last evening's successful performance. Concio, eminent Filipino architect, designed the special acoustical stage and canopy without which the brilliant renditions of the visiting BSO would have been lost in the cavernous coliseum.

Aaron Copland, the American composer, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its second concert tonight at 8:15 p.m. at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

The program includes two of the noted composer's own works — First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land.

The complete program follows: Purcell's Fantasias for Strings, No. 2 in B flat major, No. 4 in C minor and Fantasia on One Note in F major; Copland's First Symphony— Prelude, Scherzo and Finale; Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 95 — Allegro, Andante, Cantabile, Minuet, Trio and Finale Vivace; and Copland's Suite from The Tender Land including Introduction and Love Music, Party Scene and The Promise of Loving.

Copland is traveling with the BSO as a guest conductor.

BSO MAIDEN CONCERT — The famed and venerable Boston Symphony Orchestra rendered its maiden performance opening a series of three concerts before a packed audience of music lovers at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:30 o'clock last night. The 104-man orchestra's string section (above) goes through a delicate passage of one of its scores under the baton of Richard Burgin, associate director. Here in the course of a Far Eastern tour, the 80-year old band had already played in concert halls in Taiwan and Tokyo.

The MANILA CHRONICLE

The People's Newspaper

8 Pages—15 Ctvos.

MANILA, PHILIPPINES, THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 19

TO A FULL HOUSE — Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, wielding the baton in the famed orchestra's Philippine debut at the Rizal Memorial Stadium last night. Tonight's guest conductor will be Aaron Copland, American composer.

Bravos greet Boston symphony

By [illegible] VALENTIN

Manila last night took to its heart the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with nearly 10,000 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, according it thunderous and prolonged applause. Appreciative whistles and shouts of "Bravo!" wrapped up the close of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

In a reciprocal gesture, the Boston Symphony obliged with an encore—the last movement of Haydn's Symphony No. 88 in G major.

Richard Burgin, capping an unequalled 40-year record as concertmaster took the podium for the first of the Boston Symphony's three-night engagement

Turn to 14-A, col. 5

MANILA CHRONICLE 6/2/60

Bravos greet Boston symphony

From page 1

here. Alfred Krips, assistant concertmaster, took Burgin's place among the first violins [illegible]

Burgin, associate conductor of the BSO, acquitted himself admirably, evoking from the Orchestra the fluent tonal unity for which it is famous. The performance was a timely salute to the Filipinos who expect a visit two weeks from now by President Eisenhower, whose International Cultural Program administered by the American National Theater and Academy, and implemented in turn by local Impresario Alfredo Lozano, has made possible its performances in the Philippines.

Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64, brought to full flower the musical assets of the Boston Symphony.

Slighted by Tchaikovsky himself, who thought it his most uninspired work, The Fifth Symphony is sure to have gained many more adherents here, after the BSO. Certainly, this Orchestra, nurtured as it is in the cultural capital of the United States, has helped reaffirm the Fifth's position today as the equal in greatness and even in popularity, of Tchaikovsky's more favored works — the Sixth (Pathetique) and Fourth.

Richly rendered, the romantic second movement, andante cantabile, poured over a hushed audience, to everyone of whom its theme is familiar.

The third movement, which uses a waltz rhythm, was played as intended by the composer — merely a waltz to soothe after the first and second movements which, being more brilliant and agitated, brought forth the Orchestra's full powers.

In the fourth movement, the hope, despair, and struggle after the brief relief, rises to a triumphal and grandiose climax.

As deeply appreciated perhaps, if not more gratifying to most of last night's audience, was Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony.

Tender and romantic, Mahler's Adagio brought out the perfection of the string section of the orchestra. It was a delight to listen to the alternating rhythm of the melody introduced by the violas and its accompaniment, with trills and pizzicatos punctuating the lovely musical interplay.

A tribute perhaps to the strings, solo winds and percussions, was Kirchner's composition of that name, which opened last night's program. It seemed well above ordinary musical understudy.

Taking the podium tonight is Aaron Copland, Ammerica' most outstanding composer today. This important American figure yesterday went on record as favoring applause between movements. Well, he will have it.

Special mention must be made of Architect Cesar Concio's design of the special acoustical stage and canopy.

Boston Symphony Orchestra wins kudos at packed coliseum

By AMANTE [illegible]

The 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra last night won a resounding applause from culture-hungry Manilans who jampacked the Rizal Memorial Coliseum during the opening concert of the famed orchestra on a three-day engagement in Manila.

The audience was enthralled by the performance of the visiting orchestra under the baton of Richard Burgin who conducted the first program. Lasting for two hours, the concert on the opening night featured Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion by Kirchner and Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony.

The "piece de resistance" for the evening was Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Opus 64 featuring the Andante; Allegro con anima; Andante Cantabile con Alcuna Licenza; Valse: Allegro moderato; Finale: Andante Maestoso; Allegro vivace.

Burgin, who guided the concert with adept mastery, had to return three times to the stage, bowing to the resounding applause [illegible] of the audience which lasted for about ten minutes.

The orchestra, in response to the resounding plaudits of the audience, played as an encore piece the Finale of Haydn's Symphony No. 88 in G Major.

The three-day cultural treat is being presented by Alfredo Lozano in association with the International Cultural Program of the United States and administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Cont. on p. 16, col. 7

103

THE DAILY MIRROR, JUNE 2, 1960

MORE OR LESS

Boston Symphony's first night: straight from French horn mouth

By E. A. CRUZ

People who were puzzled by the first number of last night's Boston Symphony concert need not feel apologetic about it. The work, a toccata in the modern manner by a young US composer, irritates some of the musician themselves.

We ran into two of them, both of them French horn players, who told us a thing or two about Mr. Kirchner, the composer of the toccata. "A beatnik type," one of them said.

In the firt place, the Kirchner piece should never have been included in the program. The Rizal Memorial, in spite of the acoustical stage provided especially for the concerts, is much too large for a composition intended to be played by a small orchestra. (Half the players left the stage with their instruments after playing the national anthems and before the toccata, which must have caused not a few in the audience to mutter what the devil was going to happen next).

Our horn players explained that this was due to an apparent miscalculation. The programs had to be planned so far in advance the orchestra management could not possibly have foreseen the conditions at the Rizal Memorial.

Anyway, the rest of the program more than made up for everything, especially the Tchaikovsky. In fact the reaction to this symphony was, if anything, a bit too warm. The slow movement, which was cribbed by Hollywood some years ago and has since become a "song hit," was irresistible. But hardly less so was the symphony as a whole. Tchaikovsky's No. 5 is a surefire number which the more discriminating listeners would wish had been replaced by something less familiar. For them the saving grace of the concert was the excellence of the orchestra itself, which is of course beyond question.

According to the players we talked to, the best part was the horn solo, which seemed really to have impressed them, for it's not every night that a horn player is in top form.

Which of them was the soloist? "Neither. It's some other guy."

Before we parted company, they again deplored the programming on the first night, but strongly advised us not to miss the last, which is tomorrow, when the "Eroica" will be played. "That's simply great," they said with marvelous understatement.

The Evening News

[illegible] DAILY

Editorial and Business Offices: [illegible] tino Torres Manila
Telephones [illegible] -20 62
Member: AP and [illegible] class mail matter at Manila Post [illegible] 1960.

FERNANDO E. V. SISON
Publisher

EDGARDO L. TORDESILLAS
Executive Director

Subscription Rates

	Manila and Suburbs (Thru Carriers)	Provincial Ord. Mail	Airfreight (Thru Agents)
1 mo.	₱ 3.00	₱ 3.00	₱ 4.00
3 mo.	8.50	8.50	11.00
6 mo.	16.00	16.00	20.00
1 yr.	30.00	30.00	36.00

Subscription rates to the U.S.A. and other countries double Manila rates.

Published by the FAR EAST PUBLISHING CORPORATION

Editorials

Boston Institution

MANILA WELCOMES THE ADVENT OF A Boston institution, the venerable Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will assuredly enchant music lovers here during their three-night performance. Graced by the presence of its musical director, famed Charles Munch, the orchestra also boasts of the company of Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin, both solid names in music.

In the last few years, Manila has had the wonderful good fortune of having seen and heard various music and dance ensembles with international reputations of excellence and artistry. This has been made possible by a program of cultural tours sponsored by the American National Theatre and Academy. Over here, we have Impresario Alfredo Lozano to thank for his close cooperation with the ANTA.

The performances here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will certainly be another milestone in artistic experience maintaining as it does the same high level of cultural export from the U.S. Manila is grateful for this rare opportunity and looks forward to more of the same kind of blandishment. It is one luxury that we cannot have too much of, and if the world devoted more effort to such exchange, as the music that the Boston Symphony offers, the world will be better

104

BSO and Richard Burgin

An enthusiastic crowd of several thousands cheered last night at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum when Manila music lovers heard for the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Richard Burgin, BSO associate conductor.

The [illegible] which opened the second movement of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, in E minor, op. 64, the oboe solos from the theme of Mahmler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous) and the moto perpetuo from a movement of Haydn's Gluck Symphony will be long remembered.

The orchestra's andantes and pianissimo (thanks to Architect Cesar Concio who algebraically constructed the stage for better acoustics results were distinct, soft mellow and sometimes mystic.

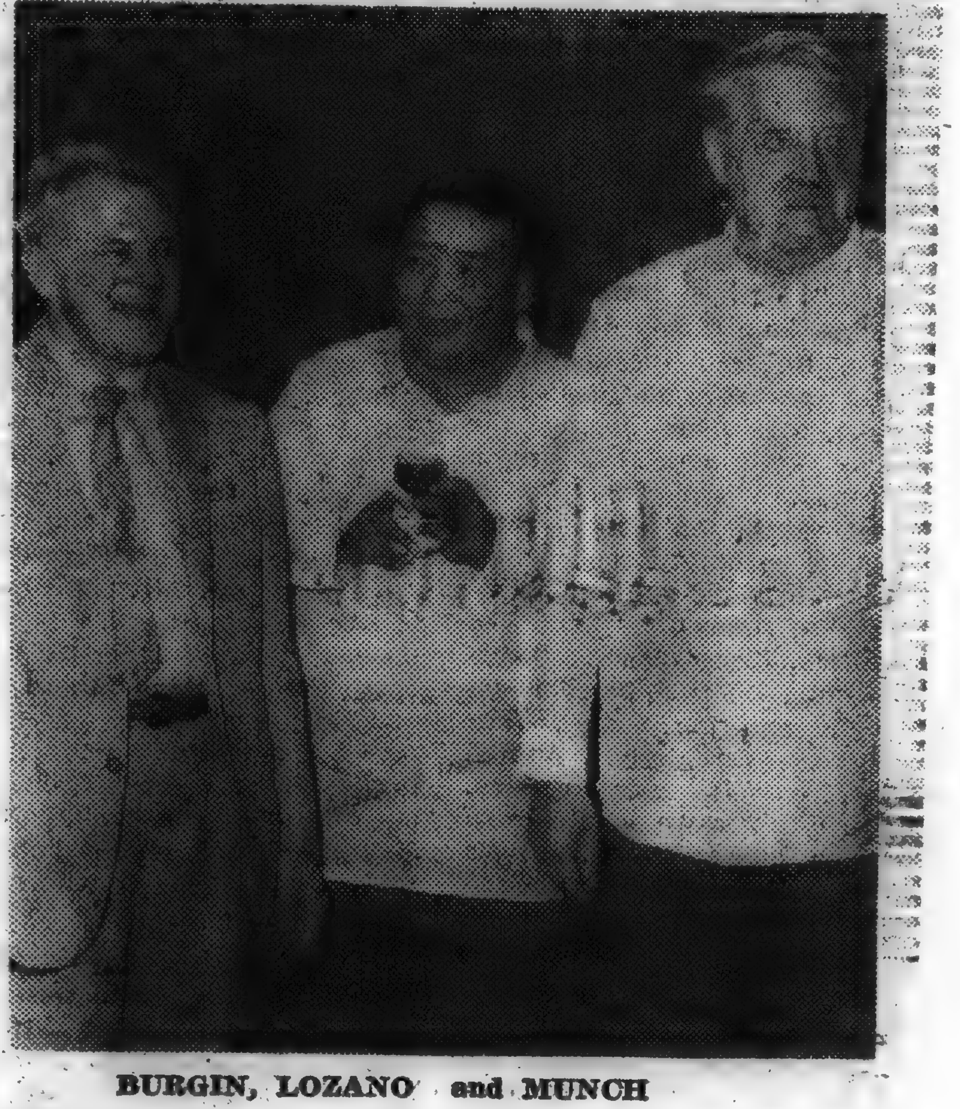
Burgin who stood no less than five feet tall took his place on the podium and held his baton before the 108-man orchestra (in shirt sleeves) with ease but not comfortably so. He accidentally dropped his stick during the first number, Kirchner's Toccata for Strings.

Manila music lovers were better listeners in the sense that in between movements clapping hands which often distract the conductor's musical temperament were held back last night.

Richard Burgin is a very interesting man with a lot of interests. At the press conference at the Narra room of Manila Hotel yesterday noon, Burgin gave several press men a capsule view of music as an art, music to the artist and music for the masses in one sitting.

It would be taken into consideration that Burgin other than conducting the BSO for years (this year is his 40th) is a teacher in music at the Boston University. His many interests were mostly centered on languages. He speaks six—Polish, Russian, French, German, Swedish and English.

Burgin revealed that drama paves the way better understanding of music. He also added that somehow the people the world over has a common means of understanding one another and most often music is the answer.



BURGIN, LOZANO and MUNCH

He showed a personal interest in bringing the music to the mass and asked about present reaction of the Filipino people to long hair music.

"It maybe a grave problem but surely there must be an answer to it," said Burgin about long hair music for the masses.

In Boston, every angle has been tried like open rehearsals which allowed the public to witness the rehearsals of the BSO at a very nominal fee, matinees mostly for students, and several weeks the BSO performs the "pops" concert other than the season of heavy compositions for the masses.

Burgin has gloriously conducted no less than 5000 concerts in his forty years of musical life which started way in 1920 when he joined the BSO as a concertmaster.

He is married to a similarly popular violinist, Ruth Posselt, and they have a girl of 16, who made a deal with her father that she would study piano but would not make a profession out of it and a boy of 13 who is more inclined to sports than music.

Alfredo Lozano, local impresario, has become an institution in his own right. He has proven time and again that the Filipino people has an inborn taste for music and he has not stopped searching for the best always. The coming of the BSO with three world famous conductors, Burgin, Copland and Munch, is one of them.

The BSO performance here was made possible through the International Cultural program of the United States administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Aaron Copland, famous American conductor, will hold the baton for the BSO tonight also at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15.

The program will include Purcel's Fantasias for Strings in three movements, Copland's First Symphony in three movements, Haydn's Symphony in C minor, No. 95 in four movements [illegible] land's orchestral [illegible] the opera "The [illegible] Land" in three move[illegible]

Skin-bleaching facial m

105

a review

Great vitality and rhythm are the BSO's chief assets

Manila Chronicle 5 JUN 1960

By ROSALINDA L. OROSA

Last Friday's final performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch may indeed be regarded as the fitting climax to the previous two concerts conducted by Concertmaster Richard Burgin and Composer Aaron Copland, respectively. For it is with the eminent Dr. Munch that the orchestra has been associated for over a decade, and it is under his guidance that it has taken its place among America's ranking ensembles.

It was a rare privilege to watch the eminent conductor at close range. The moment he went up the podium, the grey-haired, benign-looking, barong Tagalog-clad Dr. Munch at once assumed a paternal (rather than a dictatorial) air with his men. Spirit and animation, flamboyance even, and complete freedom of movement were his marks. He would jump up if the music so moved him, wave his baton to extreme left and extreme right, tracing a wide arc, and show in countless other ways a vitality that might have put a much younger man to shame.

This vitality was likewise conveyed by the orchestral performance, and although it was a musical verve typical of American ensembles, it was set off by this difference: it had refinement and sensibility. Furthermore, one immediately noticed the excellence of the various sections and that of the individual players who distinguished themselves in their respective solo parts.

Music-lovers must be forever grateful that Beethoven kept his E-Flat Major Symphony intact even after his admiration for Napoleon — to whom he had dedicated the work — turned to disillusion. For the monumental, fifty-minute "Eroica" remains unsurpassed as a musical paean.

In his interpretation of this epic, which he conducted without a score, Dr. Munch readily established himself as an extremely subjective artist. What an allegro allegro that first movement was! Dr. Munch's grand and expansive lines at once proclaimed the immensity of the work.

Many among the cognoscenti have never been quite resigned to a funeral march for a second movement, but why object to one composed by a titan who made of it music of poignant and unparalleled solemnity? If the finale which followed the scherzo did not seem as fully satisfying, it could be that this particular sample of Beethoven's creative genius did not come up to the level of the first three movements. Its "formlessness" tends to partake of a combination of seemingly unrelated musical material, but again what other symphony is of such gigantic scope?

Throughout this opus, one enjoyed Dr. Munch's rhythm, a rhythm which was consistently even — one noted such niceties as carefully measured retardandos — and his extraordinary ability to communicate. Each conductor employs his own dynamics to interpret a given score; it was evident that Dr. Munch's own conveyed warmth, feeling, deep emotion.

Every nuance was a part of an over-all design planned with a authoritative, artistic eye. If one somewhat missed the Vienna Philharmonic's "velvety" quality (from the string section) or the full measure of the Vienna Philharmonic's remarkable tonal cohesivness, there was in the BSO's performance a lushness of musical detail that afforded a memorable aural feast.

This is of course a matter of individual taste but it was in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" (Suite No. 2) rather than in Beethoven's "Eroica" that Dr. Munch was particularly impressive. Dr. Munch, who is French, has a reputed predilection for French composers. His overhelming interpretation of Ravel's artistry confirmed, to my mind, this reputation. Here was Ravel's descriptive music played at its best. Here one listened almost ecstatically while the varied and exquisite tonal hues depicted the three sections: Daybreak, Pantomine (between Daphnis and Chloe) and the General Dance.

The woodland scenery unfolds quietly at first: one hears the rippling brook, one "hears" likewise the glistening dew, and the gradual stirring of creatures of the forest, until the sun — in a tremendous crescendo outburst from the orchestra — rises in full glory. In the second part, the mind's eye sees the lovers dancing to the music of Pan's pipe, then, in the finale, leading the shepherds and shepherdesses in a tumultous dance of joy.

Here the climaxes were so overpowering in their fullness that the listener could not have imagined the orchestra capable of giving more. Building up to those crashing sounds was the ultimate in tonal brilliance and volume.

Between the German Beethoven and the French Ravel came the contemporary American composer Walter Piston whose "Symphony No. 6" was interpreted by Dr. Munch with a thorough grasp of modern music. It is a long way from Ives to Piston, yet the intention remains essentially the same: to express that which springs from the heart of America. Piston's "Symphony No. 6" is in a Neo-classic vein, with an obvious influence of Stravinsky. What might be of further interest to present-day composers is how this modern piece has been so successfully expressed in unusually refined idiom.

In ending, one must voice the gratifying thought that what some 15,000 listeners at the Rizal Coliseum were wildly cheering and applauding Friday evening were not members of a basketball team but a conductor and his orchestra. Dr. Munch was called again and again after every number to take a bow. One might add that for a man of his stature and prestige, he showed extreme generosity by giving two encores. A word of warm commendation to Impresario Alfredo Lozano and the ANTA for the BSO concerts, and to architect Cesar Concio for taking charge of the Coliseum's acoustical device.

(Intermittent influenza prevented my attendance at the first two concerts. This personal item — in itself unimportant — is added for those who may have wondered why no earlier reviews have appeared.)

MUSIC & YOU

Manila Times

5 JUN 1960

Boston Symphony concert appraised

By FELIPE P. DE LEON

Words cannot describe the Creator, a statue or a painting cannot portray Him, but a great symphony or a noble requiem can express our attitude of mind, the state of our feelings and emotions toward Him.—Berg.

De Leon

WE were indeed lucky to get a good appraisal of the famed Bostom Symphony Orchestra not only because we were afforded the chance to see actually the people responsible for its making, but also because we were able to perceive the greatness for which it has lived up.

The audience, however, was quite disappointing. It was really embarassing for the conductor to find that the people did not seem to be aware of the ethics in concerts when they entered the hall between movements of a symphony, making a big fuss without even bothering to hush themselves for a while.

Perhaps this habit of being late in any appointment is not that our watches are defective but rather our concept of time has become synonymous with delay or tradiness.

Nevertheless, it is somehow gracious to think that the Filipinos are beginning to make strides toward cultural maturity, as attested by the multitude, and its entailing responsiveness, which had filled up the Rizal coliseum during the orchestra's three-night performances.

PART of a letter sent us by Dr. Antonio J. Molina from New York reads as follows:

"I am now enjoying my million dollar vacation in the beautiful surroundings of Mohawk Road in Schenectady, thanks to the splendid hospitality of Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Goodman. Dr. Goodman is a staff member of the General Electric Research Laboratory. Because of him I was given cordial reception in both the Skidmore College and the Union College of the Union University.

"Professor of Music, Hoyt L. Irwin, was so kind to introduce me to several faculty members and to the student body. Among the faculty members I met were Mr. Stanley E. Saxton, Professor of Organ, Harmony, Counterpoint, Formal Analysis, Instrumentation, and Orchestration; a piano professor, Edward G. Hausman, who had traveled and performed in the Far East. Under the guidance of Prof. Irwin, we had a tour of the campus which was a special privilege, taking into account that this is a college exclusively for women, the same as the former Centro Escolar de Señoritas.

"After a snack in the cafeteria, we were invited to attend the Junior Recital where, to my surprise, I was presented to the audience by Prof. Irwin. Another privilege was given to us when we were invited to stay longer to attend a chorus rehearsal which was ably conducted by Francis S. Carver who, according to Dr. Edgar Curtis, conductor of the Tricity Symphony Orchestra, is one of the finest musicians in that locality.

Munch Thrills Audience With Memorable Music

Evening News

6 JUN 1960

By ADELAIDA R. KATIGBAK

Last [illegible] Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra engulfed thousands of people in music that was memorable.

With bold, sweeping strokes, impeccable reading, dynamic phraseology, with dramatic gestures and pauses that were rich with meaning, with resounding sonorities and beautifully hummed pianissimos, and without benefit of a score, Mr. Munch rendered his initial offering—Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, also known as the Eroica.

This work was purportedly Beethoven's favorite and he dedicated it "to the memory of a great man." The designation "heroic" is by no means to be taken only in the sense of a military hero. Rather, its application is to a full-fledged man — one who loves and grieves and rejoices with dignity and highest rationality. Seen in this light, Mr. Munch's interpretation was very apt.

The second movement particularly was perfectly balanced intellect and emotion. Even in the fugato section where intense grief gives rise to a tremendous sob, one feels that "the full man" never lost control of himself. As this Funeral March was being played, the great hush of people who listened in rapt attention, was almost tangible.

The third movement was a relief from the deep sorrow of the Adagio. Its leggieros were so enchanting we could not help but wish the repeat sign before the Trio was observed.

Even if there were only the Eroica the evening would have been worthwhile. But there were still the Piston Symphony No. 6 (interesting harmony, orchestration) and the "Daphnis et Chloe" music for ballet to increase the evening's pleasure. This latter work is considered by many as Ravel's masterpiece.

The orchestra's vivid interpretation appealed most to the imagination and made the conjuring of nymphs, rivulets and shepherds almost inevitable. The flutist's solo was notable; it was very well executed. Snowy hair flying, the conductor pushed the orchestra to shattering climaxes and a very effective frenzied close.

The applause was thunderous and despite several bows from an obviously exhausted Mr. Munch, refused to let up till the orchestra obliged with an encore and then another.

Charles Munch at the podium presents semingly paradoxical qualities. His ability to concentrate makes him lose himself in the composer's music; one feels Beethoven behind every phrase of the Eroica, and the same is true of Ravel in "Daphnis et Chloe". Yet, this very dedication makes his personality more vitally projected. Could this be one reason for his stature as conductor?

The Boston Symphony Orchestra leaves two invaluable contributions to the Philippine musical scene: excellent performances that serve as inspiration to our music lovers and musicians, and an enrichment of our musical knowledge through their presentation of works which have never been played here before.

Manila Times

OV[illegible] COFFEE

5 JUN 1960

By Teodoro F. Valencia

The Rizal Stadium was filled to capacity when the Boston Symphony Orchestra made its third and final concert the other evening. Manila's social set mingled with the "bakya" crowd to highlight once again that what Manila needs very badly is a concert hall. The tennis stadium was so infernally warm during those concert nights that no one can suspect those who heard the [illegible] to [illegible] Symphony [illegible] was great in its musicianship but that was not what impressed us. The hunger for music in this city is something pathetic. It is only matched by our fanstic attachment to basketball.

• • •

At the Symphony hall in Boston, Mass., U.S.A., the world-famed 104-member Boston Symphony orchestra performs under the baton of music director Charles Munch.

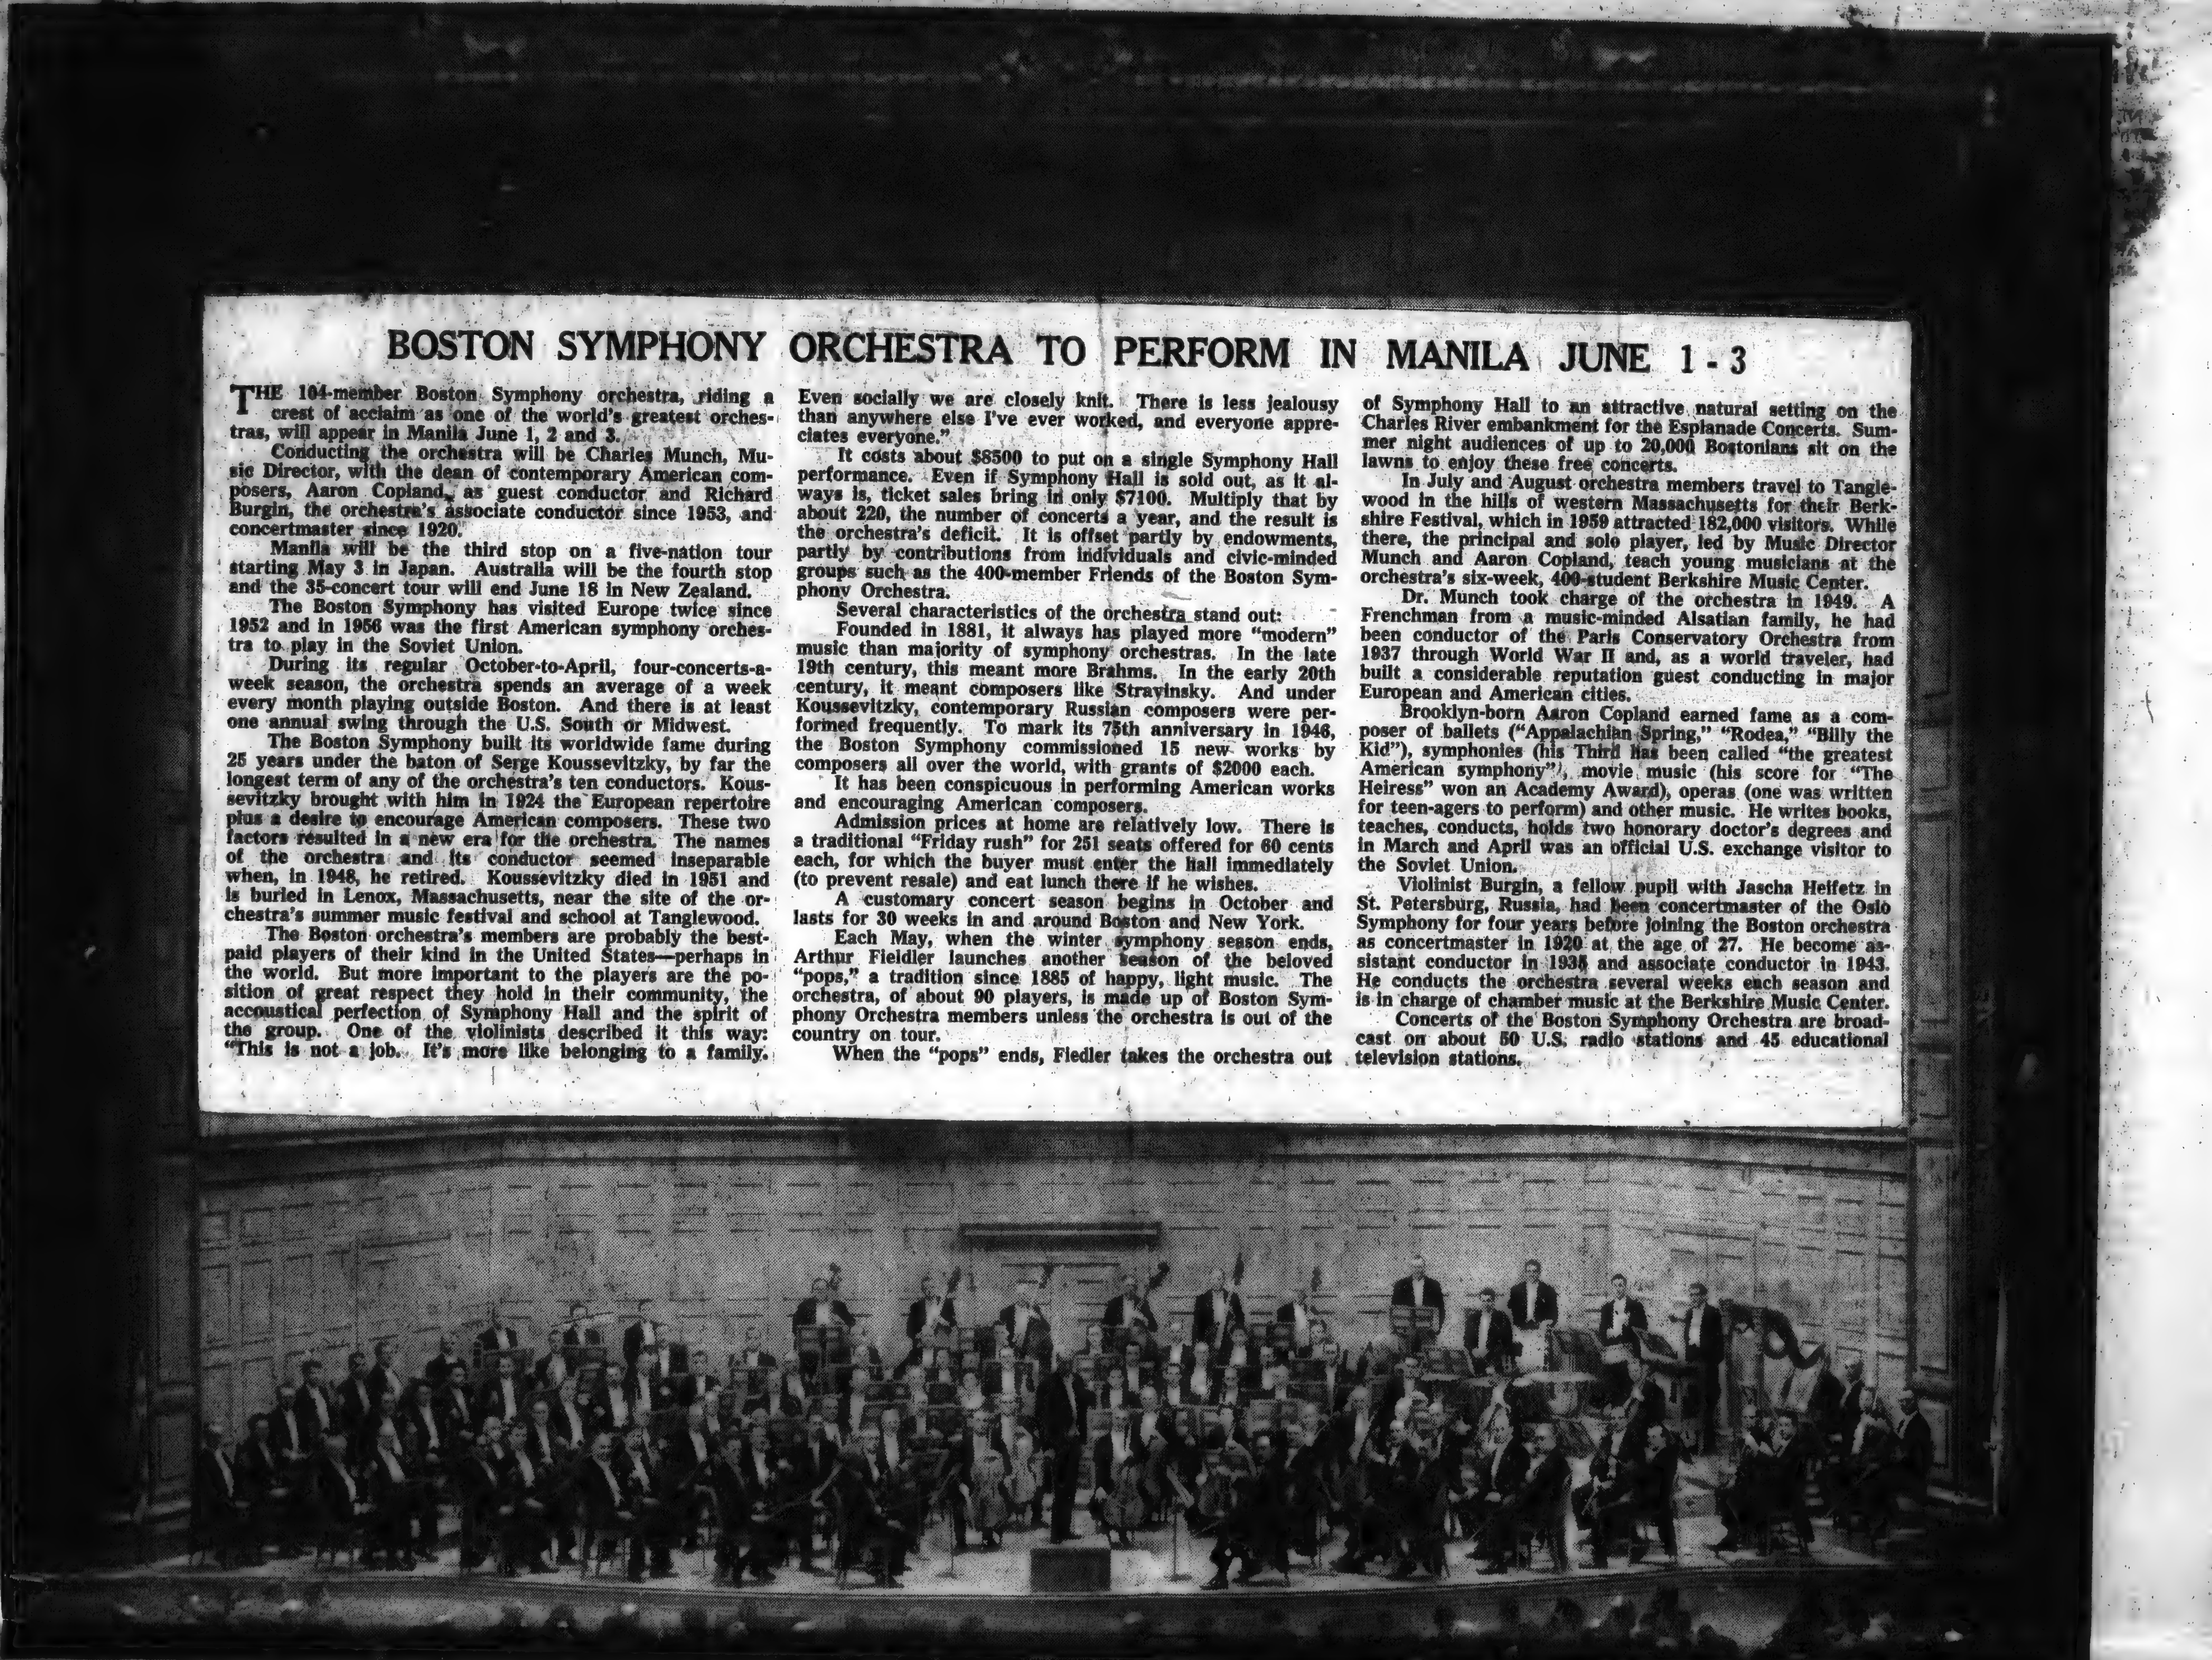
Director Munch confers with concert master Richard Burgin.

Bostonians enjoy good music rendered by the Boston Symphony under the stars along the banks of the Charles river.

Boston Symphony accompanies Pablo Casals during United Nations anniversary.

Munch directs the Boston Symphony during a performance in Leningrad, Russia.

168



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO PERFORM IN MANILA JUNE 1 - 3

THE 104-member Boston Symphony orchestra, riding a crest of acclaim as one of the world's greatest orchestras, will appear in Manila June 1, 2 and 3.

Conducting the orchestra will be Charles Munch, Music Director, with the dean of contemporary American composers, Aaron Copland, as guest conductor and Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor since 1953, and concertmaster since 1920.

Manila will be the third stop on a five-nation tour starting May 3 in Japan. Australia will be the fourth stop and the 35-concert tour will end June 18 in New Zealand.

The Boston Symphony has visited Europe twice since 1952 and in 1956 was the first American symphony orchestra to play in the Soviet Union.

During its regular October-to-April, four-concerts-a-week season, the orchestra spends an average of a week every month playing outside Boston. And there is at least one annual swing through the U.S. South or Midwest.

The Boston Symphony built its worldwide fame during 25 years under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, by far the longest term of any of the orchestra's ten conductors. Koussevitzky brought with him in 1924 the European repertoire plus a desire to encourage American composers. These two factors resulted in a new era for the orchestra. The names of the orchestra and its conductor seemed inseparable when, in 1948, he retired. Koussevitzky died in 1951 and is buried in Lenox, Massachusetts, near the site of the orchestra's summer music festival and school at Tanglewood.

The Boston orchestra's members are probably the best-paid players of their kind in the United States—perhaps in the world. But more important to the players are the position of great respect they hold in their community, the accoustical perfection of Symphony Hall and the spirit of the group. One of the violinists described it this way: "This is not a job. It's more like belonging to a family. Even socially we are closely knit. There is less jealousy than anywhere else I've ever worked, and everyone appreciates everyone."

It costs about $8500 to put on a single Symphony Hall performance. Even if Symphony Hall is sold out, as it always is, ticket sales bring in only $7100. Multiply that by about 220, the number of concerts a year, and the result is the orchestra's deficit. It is offset partly by endowments, partly by contributions from individuals and civic-minded groups such as the 400-member Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Several characteristics of the orchestra stand out:

Founded in 1881, it always has played more "modern" music than majority of symphony orchestras. In the late 19th century, this meant more Brahms. In the early 20th century, it meant composers like Stravinsky. And under Koussevitzky, contemporary Russian composers were performed frequently. To mark its 75th anniversary in 1946, the Boston Symphony commissioned 15 new works by composers all over the world, with grants of $2000 each.

It has been conspicuous in performing American works and encouraging American composers.

Admission prices at home are relatively low. There is a traditional "Friday rush" for 251 seats offered for 60 cents each, for which the buyer must enter the hall immediately (to prevent resale) and eat lunch there if he wishes.

A customary concert season begins in October and lasts for 30 weeks in and around Boston and New York.

Each May, when the winter symphony season ends, Arthur Fieldler launches another season of the beloved "pops," a tradition since 1885 of happy, light music. The orchestra, of about 90 players, is made up of Boston Symphony Orchestra members unless the orchestra is out of the country on tour.

When the "pops" ends, Fiedler takes the orchestra out of Symphony Hall to an attractive natural setting on the Charles River embankment for the Esplanade Concerts. Summer night audiences of up to 20,000 Bostonians sit on the lawns to enjoy these free concerts.

In July and August orchestra members travel to Tanglewood in the hills of western Massachusetts for their Berkshire Festival, which in 1959 attracted 182,000 visitors. While there, the principal and solo player, led by Music Director Munch and Aaron Copland, teach young musicians at the orchestra's six-week, 400-student Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Munch took charge of the orchestra in 1949. A Frenchman from a music-minded Alsatian family, he had been conductor of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra from 1937 through World War II and, as a world traveler, had built a considerable reputation guest conducting in major European and American cities.

Brooklyn-born Aaron Copland earned fame as a composer of ballets ("Appalachian Spring," "Rodea," "Billy the Kid"), symphonies (his Third has been called "the greatest American symphony"), movie music (his score for "The Heiress" won an Academy Award), operas (one was written for teen-agers to perform) and other music. He writes books, teaches, conducts, holds two honorary doctor's degrees and in March and April was an official U.S. exchange visitor to the Soviet Union.

Violinist Burgin, a fellow pupil with Jascha Heifetz in St. Petersburg, Russia, had been concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony for four years before joining the Boston orchestra as concertmaster in 1920 at the age of 27. He become assistant conductor in 1935 and associate conductor in 1943. He conducts the orchestra several weeks each season and is in charge of chamber music at the Berkshire Music Center.

Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are broadcast on about 50 U.S. radio stations and 45 educational television stations.

At the Symphony hall in Boston, Mass., U.S.A., the world-famed 104-member Boston Symphony orchestra performs under the baton of music director Charles Munch.

109

Copland, The Conductor, Is As Impressive As His Music

Evening News 3 JUN 1960

By ADELAIDA R. KATIGBAK

Aaron Copland's appearance on last night's stage aroused provocative thoughts.

His stature as a composer is almost unequalled by any other American. His compositions have won recognition and acclaim the world over. For more than thirty years he has been recognized as an influential figure in spreading, through his works, the gospel of American music. Could he, as conductor, equal his own eminence as composer?

One reads of composers whose works are better interpreted by others. One also reads of composers who are their own best interpreters. To which class does Mr. Copland belong?

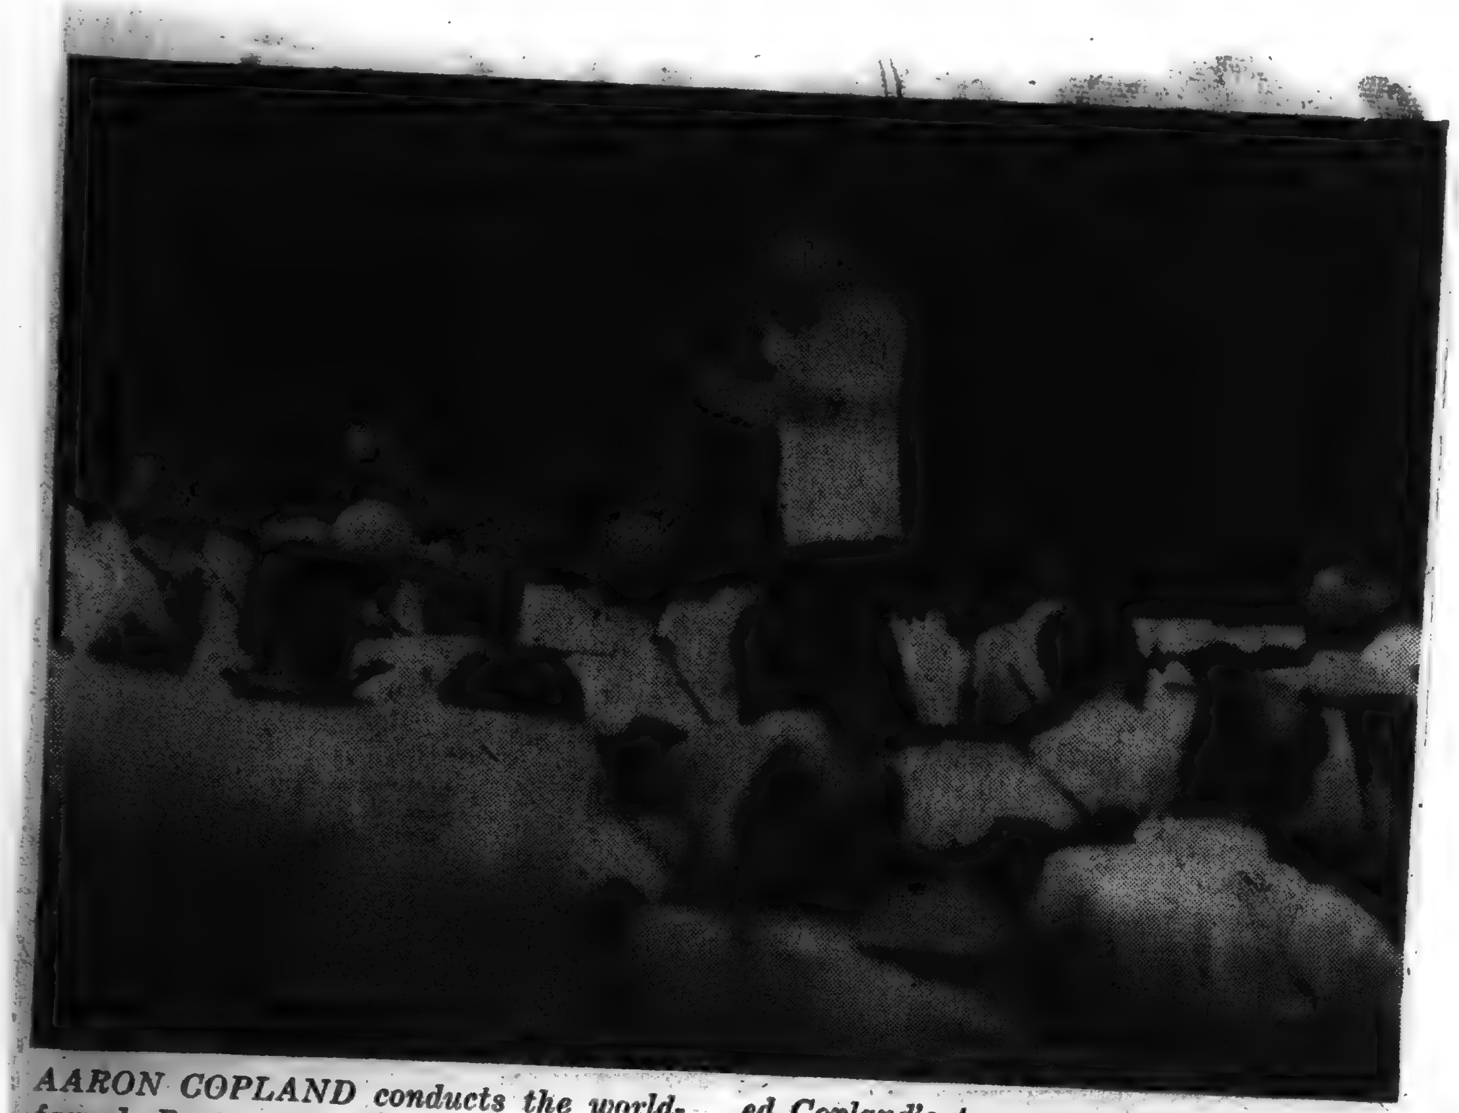
Last night's audience provided a clue. It was difficult to say whether the applause was greater for his conducting or for his works, two of which were performed as part of the program.

Physically, Mr. Copland is tall, lean and spry. He lithely hops up the podium and half-runs down the steps of the stage. He has a warm and ready smile and gives the impression of being a genial man. He has a most fascinating left arm that is fluid and graceful as he gives expression to lyric passages. He has a wrist that snaps the rhythm in crisper passages. He jabs the air with his forefinger to give the cue to the different instruments. He has a winning personality.

Vigor permeates his works and interpretations. Streaks of gray in his hair notwithstanding, he is vibrantly young.

In his symphony and the suite from "The Tender Land," every instruments tonal possibilities were explored with re-

(Continued on page 2)



AARON COPLAND conducts the world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra at its second concert at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. Last night's repertoire included Copland's two compositions, the First Symphony and a suite from his opera, "The Tender Land."

Evening News 3 JUN 1960

Saturday, June 4, 1960
Philippines Herald

here and now

by Cassandra

ALONG EMBASSY ROW

Champagne flowed freely at Ambassador and Mrs. John Hickerson's reception for the three conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the embassy residence last Wednesday. The crowd was made up chiefly of musicians, music lovers, and friends...

Friday, June 10th, being National Day of Portugal and the Fifth Centennary Commemoration of Prince Henry the Navigator, Portuguese Minister and Mrs. Nunes da Silva will host a 6:30-to-8:00 evening reception at their Wright street residence...

An informal dinner for a group of friends will be given by Argentine Minister and Mrs. Alfredo Allende on Monday, June 13th. It starts at 8:00 p.m.

* * *

SYMPHONY SIDELIGHTS

Overheard: "Those Boston Symphony Orchestra members must feel they are playing in a desert. Our local audience is only a trickle compared to the music lovers that listen to them in the United States."

Now we know our cultural barrenness has gone that [illegible] there are still people who applaud after the playing [illegible] Philippine National Anthem?

Clapping between movements on the second night wasn't much. Perhaps, our people are learning the correct concert hall manners little by little.

Aaron Copland's inspired conducting shared equal attention with his modernistic "First Symphony" and "The Tender Land." Changing from a white coat and bow tie to barong tagalog in the second half of the concert, Mr. Copland was greeted with a thunderous ovation.

Most asked question: When can we have a symphony orchestra with the same finesse and musicianship as the Boston Symphony?

Our answer: If and when we're ready to spend for it...

BSO members hold 'the most attractive jobs in America

Manila Chronicle 20 MAY 1960

Expected to arrive in Manila at the end of this month are 102 men and two women who hold "the most attractive musical jobs in America."

These are the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is marking its 80th season with its first tour of the Far East. Due to arrive in Manila in the course of this trip for performances on June 1, 2 and 3, the BSO will be presented at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

At the head of the group will be Charles Munch, its music director, Aaron Copland, American contemporary composer who is traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, associate director and considered the orchestra's most significant acquisition in recent decades. The three will take turns wielding the baton, Burgin on June 1, Copland on June 2, and Munch on June 3.

The rest of the playing members of the orche , represent a selected, literally hand-picked collection of musicians from among thousands whose life aspiration is to be a member of the orchestra, and there are thousands who apply whenever a vacancy occurs.

There is nothing hasty about the way the Boston Symphony takes on a new member, according to Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player and personnel manager of the BSO in addition since 1942. One of Mazzeo's duties is to keep track of musicians throughout the United States who seem to be likely candidates for membership. When a vacancy arises in the BSO, the most promising applicants are notified, assembled and auditioned (from behind a curtain) by a jury.

This is how the process of selecting a musician for a job in the BSO has been described. From four to seven of these candidates are selected by this jury for the next stage of elimination—another audition attended by Munch himself, who may also interview them personally, make them play as he conducts, and sight-read.

The lucky winner is usually in a state of near prostration by the time he is selected, but none ever complains. He has come into what Henry B. Cabot, president of the BSO trustees, calls the "most attractive musical job in America."

Tickets to all the three concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

BSO Man Recalls Pa's Legacy To P.I. Music

Philippines Herald 4 JUN 1960

By [illegible] DE LA CRUZ
[illegible] Staff Member

If the Boston Symphony orchestra got a stirring and enthusiastic welcome from Manilans, it has the father of one of its members to thank for.

Osborne McConathy Jr., a member of the troupe, comes from a family of music lovers. His father, adept at the French horn, was responsible for the publication of a music book widely used in Philippine elementary schools up to the last decade.

McConathy recounts how his father got "involved" in the formulation of the Filipinos' taste for Western music.

"My father was the editor of the song book published by Silver Burdett company," McConathy said. "It started with a decision of the company to edit a music book especially for the Philippines."

McConathy said Charles Griffith, vice president of the company, came over to the islands for specifically that purpose. While here, Griffith was able to make numerous friends from whom he compiled a number of Filipino folk songs, and took these with him back to the U.S.

The book was published in the 1920's. Up to the death of the elder McConathy (12 years ago), the book was used by all elementary school pupils here.

McConathy said his father was a music instructor. He himself plays the French horn.

Commenting on the reaction of the Manila audience to the visiting orchestra, McConathy said "it was wonderful." He gushed over the enthusiastic bravos and applauses showered upon the troupe.

"I wish I could stay more in your country to see for myself all the wonderful things I hear and read about it," he declared.

The Boston Symphony orchestra leaves tonight for Australia.

4 JUN 1960 THE PHILIPPINES HERALD

Garcias Head Audience At BSO Final Performance

THE BOSTON Symphony orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch made its final bow to Manila audiences during a well-applauded concert last night at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. The group's last Manila performance was attended by a large audience headed by President and Mrs. Carlos P. Garcia, Ambassador John D. Hickerson and Mrs. Hickerson. Mrs. Garcia is seen seated behind the President. Others in the group are Mrs. Rosie O. Valencia, Mrs. Ising M. Vazquez and Dr. Daniel Vazquez. (Herald Photo)

PRESIDENT GARCIA is shown congratulating Charles Munch [illegible] farewell performance of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Rizal Memorial stadium, as the First Lady looks on.

B.S.O. Ends Concert Series; Performance Impressive

By RITA GERONA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra capped its series of concerts last night at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum with an exquisitely impressive performance conducted by the BSO musical director, Dr. Charles Munch—leaving no doubt that they have given local music-lovers an experience to treasure.

Highlighting the BSO's farewell performance was the presence of President and Mrs. Garcia, who arrived exactly 15 minutes before the performance began at 8:30 p.m. High-ranking government officials and their well-dressed wives, members of the diplomatic corps, and prominent Manilans were also present.

Well over 12,000 people packed the Coliseum to the hilt including the bleachers area, leaving only the back of the stage unoccupied. Many are of the opinion that last night's crowd was about one of the biggest ever to grace an orchestral performance.

After the preliminary national anthem-playing part, in which Dr. Munch comported himself with an impressive carriage on the podium, the BSO lost no time in striking off the commanding two-note opening of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55, progressing in a sprightly manner to the famous heroic theme.

As the BSO went deeper into the succeeding variations of the theme in the first movement, allegro con brio, Dr. Munch suddenly went overboard, gesticulating with frantic arm-swinging and head-jerking, causing his white locks to tumble all over his head. As he turned to one side to urge the first violins, he showed a profile with furrowed brows, tight mouth and impassioned look, making the audience feel that he was in his best element.

After the first movement, the crowd broke into a long, thunderous applause that Munch, who seemed impatient to go on to the succeeding movement, scanned the crowd with a scowl on his face, his left hand poised on his waist. At this point, late-comers were still sidling to their seats but nevertheless, Munch, after smiling at conductor Richard Burgin, who was first violinist and concert master last night, led the orchestra to the second movement, the famous Funeral March.

The Funeral March was [illegible] the most moving part of the whole [illegible] program and it was here that the BSO would be most remembered for by its local audience.

Like the third lively movement, the last movement was filled with joyous tones, lilting rustlings and horn-calls as the BSO gave full vent to exposing Beethoven's rich and bold ideas that characterize his Herioc Symphony, said to be a "movement to the heroic spirt in man."

Munch came back to the podium twice to acknowledge the applause of a highly appreciative audience.

The second number on the program, Piston's Symphony No. 6, was almost disconcerting after such a wonderful experience with the classical "Eroica." A contemporary composer himself, who, like Copland, went through Parisian tutelage and eventually went home to America to create a new kind of symphonic music, Piston, as revealed last night by the BSO, has jazz-like propensities.

The opening of the Piston's symphony, the fluendo espressivo, produced weird sounds mostly from strings eventually dying out with apreggios on the two harps, one of which was played by a woman, Mrs. Olivia Leutche.

The leggerissimo vivace or the second movement came up with brusque sprints from the violins jarred by ear-tingling hammerings of the percussion intruments. Played in a fast clip, the BSO seemed like it was trying its fastest best to get it over with.

But if the audience was not too fond of Piston's first two movements, they seemed to have sat up and noticed at the third movement, the long adagio sereno, which gave languid, dulcet passages from the violas and 'cellos, deepened by the bass viol and glidding on with slow attempts from the flute accompanied by the harp, then the picolo and the harp, again. Altogether this movement made a serene, soothing music, only to be upset by the last screeching movement, the allegro energico, which was bombarded by percussions and the brasses filling the atmosphere with festivity.

The last number, Ravel's second suite from "Daphnis et Chloe," was a delightful one. Rippling, rambling passages, and a lullaby-sounding part particularly thrilled the audience. But the best yet was the solo by the flute, ably played by James Pappoustsakis. The symphony ended in a festive session with castanets enlivening the air.

Munch gave two encores, the first, the March from Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet; and the second, an excerpt from Wagner's Meistersinger.

Other than Pappoustsakis, Samuel Mayes, who played a moving solo on the 'cello in Piston's Symphony, was also warmly congratulated by Munch right on the stage. Burgin, who did some solo parts as first violinist, also was congratulated by him.

At the close of the performance, President and Mrs. Garcia went to [illegible] of the stage, [illegible] they congratulated Munch, [illegible] was soaking wet with [illegible]ation. Munch presented the President with a gift—a [illegible] recording of the "Eroica."

Manila Times 3 JUN 1960

FAREWELL CONCERT—The Boston Symphony Orchestra in its last performance at the Rizal Memorial last night. At the podium is Charles Munch, BSO music director, in barong Tagalog.

Daily [illegible] 3 JUN 1960

Munch to conduct Boston final concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra caps its three-night engagement in Manila with a final concert conducted by its musical director, Dr. Charles Munch, at 8:15 p.m. at the Rizal Memorial coliseum.

Its maiden performance Wednesday, with Richard Burgin at the podium, was attended by a sizable crowd of first-nighters who gave conductor Burgin and his men heartwarming applause and a standing ovation at the close of the concert. American composer Aaron Copland, traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, wielded the baton last night for the second concert that featured two of Copland's own works, the First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land.

Dr. Munch, member of a distinguished musical family from Strasbourg, France, has been head of the Boston Symphony since 1948 when he was engaged to succeed the famous Serge Koussevitzky. Considered one of the outstanding musicians to come from France, Dr. Munch came to the BSO as a conductor of world-wide experience and success, a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in those centers where the music of the Old World was created and developed.

He inaugurated foreign tours for the Boston Symphony, taking it outside the United States in 1956 for a concert tour of Europe and then again in 1956 when the BSO performed in Leningrad and in Moscow, besides the European capitals, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia. The current tour of the orchestra is its first in the Far East. Scheduled to leave tomorrow, in the afternoon, the BSO is next performing in Australia.

The complete program for tonight follows:

I. Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55 — BEETHOVEN; Allegro con brio; Marcia funebre: Adagio assai; Scherzo: Allegro vivace; Finale: Allegro molto.

Intermission, II. Symphony No. 6 — PISTON; Fluendo espressivo; Leggerissimo vivace; Adagio Sereno; Allegro energico.

III. "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2 — RAVEL; Lever du jour—Pantomine—Danse generale.

Tickets are on sale at Botica Bole, and after 5 p.m. at the coliseum.

VIGORO his body,
musicians upper ph
Symphon
pretation ny, at las concert

'Most Impressive' BSO Concert Led By Munch

Philippines Herald

By NESTOR MATA
Herald-DMHM Staff Member

4 JUN 1960

A smiling Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra captured last night the hearts of Manila's music lovers in the last, but most impressive, of three concerts at the Rizal Memorial coliseum.

From the start of the two fortissimo beats of the full orchestra in the first movement of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, to the modernistic Sixth Symphony of Piston, to Ravel's imagery in the "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2, Dr. Munch and the famed BSO gave such a brilliant performance that they earned a thunderous ovation from the awed audience headed by President and Mrs. Carlos P. Garcia.

Insistent bravos and clappings and shouts for an encore at the end of the program from the jampacked coliseum compelled Dr. Munch and the BSO to play two encores one after the other. First came Berlioz' Hungarian Dance and then the Prelude from the Third Act of Wagner's Meistersingers.

Tired but still smiling happily, Dr. Munch acknowledged the deafening applause of satisfied concert goers. Three times he was called back to the podium. Three times he shared the ovation with the BSO's leading artists headed by concertmaster Richard Burgin, who was the conductor of the BSO's first concert in Manila three nights ago.

The opening fortissimo beats in the Heroic Symphony's first movement (Allegro con brio) immediately displayed Dr. Munch's highly authoritative reading of the Beethoven opus.

Without any score before him, Dr. Munch carried the BSO in what we consider the most inspired rendition of the Third Symphony of the great master. There was the celli play with their superb interpretation of the soft theme. There was the elegiac second theme and finally there was the horn-call evoking the radiant heroic theme once more towards the end of the first movement.

Swinging his baton and swaying his body, the white-haired French conductor led the BSO into the famous Funeral March (Allegro assai), with its mournful chant of the theme melody that ultimately disintegrated into the realm of eternal silence.

Once more, we heard the gay hunting horns in the third movement (Scherzo). This movement was marked by the lively paroxysms at the beginning and the end. Finally, Dr. Munch vigorously entered the Finale (Allegro molto). Here he flailed his arms, jabbed with his baton hand, backoned with his left and pounded the air with clenched fists until he reached the short and vigorous climax leading to the end of the last movement and with it the Heroic Symphony.

It was Beethoven, indeed. And Dr. Munch and the BSO gave us a brilliant interpretation of what has been considered the greatest symphony ever written by a composer.

The Piston Sixth Symphony was politely listened to by the audience after the intermission. This was a very modern American composition. Later, after hearing the Ravel suite, we sensed some kind of affinity between the two, at least in the musical imagery. Perhaps, the boomin[illegible] last movement (Danse generale) was certainly a fitting climax to a very successful evening concert. But the audience was so carried away by the performance that it simply refused to stop clapping and the shouts of "bravos" brought back Dr. Munch to the podium again and again and again. He offered the Berlioz piece for an encore. But the [illegible] gered for more [illegible] led the [illegible] tired [illegible] willin[illegible] the bo[illegible] lude to [illegible] act of the Meistersingers.

Like the big crowd, we [illegible]lly marveled at the genius [illegible] the Boston Symphony Or[illegible]estra and its eminent mu[illegible]c director, Dr. Charles Munch.

After the concert, Dr. Munch was introduced to the President and the First Lady. He gave President and Mrs. Garcia a record of Beethoven's "Eroica".

After their three concerts here, the BSO and its three conductors, Dr. Munch, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin, are scheduled to depart for Australia, part of their Far East concert tour.

Once more, we wish to thank Impresario Alfredo Lozano who presented the BSO in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Munch Leads BSO In Last Conc[illegible]

Philippines Herald

JUN 1960

VIGOROUSLY wielding the baton, swaying his body, and softly calling out to the musicians, Dr. Charles Munch is shown in upper photos as he led the famed Boston Symphony orchestra in a brilliant interpretation of Beethoven's Heroic Symphony, at last night's last but most brilliant concert at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. Lower photo (left) shows Dr. Munch and a part of the orchestra acknowledging the ovation of Manila's concertgoers headed by President and Mrs. Carlos P. Garcia. Photo at lower extreme right shows the smiling Dr. Munch raising his baton during the BSO's rendition of Piston's Sixth Symphony.

112

'Most Impressive' BSO Concert Led By Munch

Philippines Herald

By NESTOR MATA
Herald-DMHM Staff Member

4 JUN 1960

A smiling Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra captured last night the hearts of Manila's music lovers in the last, but most impressive, of three concerts at the Rizal Memorial coliseum.

From the start of the two fortissimo beats of the full orchestra in the first movement of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, to the modernistic Sixth Symphony of Piston, to Ravel's imagery in the "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2, Dr. Munch and the famed BSO gave such a brilliant performance that they earned a thunderous ovation from the awed audience headed by President and Mrs. Carlos P. Garcia.

Insistent bravos and clappings and shouts for an encore at the end of the program from the jampacked coliseum compelled Dr. Munch and the BSO to play two encores one after the other. First came Berlioz' Hungarian Dance and then the Prelude from the Third Act of Wagner's Meistersingers.

Tired but still smiling happily, Dr. Munch acknowledged the deafening applause of satisfied concert goers. Three times he was called back to the podium. Three times he shared the ovation with the BSO's leading artists headed by concertmaster Richard Burgin, who was the conductor of the BSO's first concert in Manila three nights ago.

The opening fortissimo beats in the Heroic Symphony's first movement (Allegro con brio) immediately displayed Dr. Munch's highly authorit[illegible]

Swinging his baton and swaying his body, the white-haired French conductor led the BSO into the famous Funeral March (Allegro assai), with its mournful chant of the theme melody that ultimately disintegrated into the realm of eternal silence.

Once more, we heard the gay hunting horns in the third movement (Scherzo). This movement was marked by the lively paroxysms at the beginning and the end. Finally, Dr. Munch vigorously entered the Finale (Allegro molto). Here he flailed his arms, jabbed with his baton hand, backoned with his left and pounded the air with clenched fists until he reached the short and vigorous climax leading to the end of the last movement and with it the Heroic Symphony.

It was Beethoven, indeed. And Dr. Munch and the BSO gave us a brilliant interpretation of what has been considered the greatest symphony ever written by a composer.

The Piston Sixth Symphony was politely listened to by the audience after the intermission. This was a very modern American composition. Later, after hearing the Ravel suite, we sensed some kind of affinity between the two, at least in the musical imagery. Perhaps, the booming percussions and shimmering harps and shrilling woodwinds and brasses had something to do with our impression. But we certainly would not forget the solo cello,* accompanied by the violas and horns. The cellist was later [illegible] by Dr. Munch to acknowledge the audien[illegible]plause at the [illegible] symphony.

The Ravel [illegible] its rolling kettle [illegible]ined by the full orchestra in one big frenzy at the end of the last movement (Danse generale) was certainly a fitting climax to a very successful evening concert. But the audience was so carried away by the performance that it simply refused to stop clapping and the shouts of "bravos" brought back Dr. Munch to the podium again and again and again. He offered the Berlioz piece for an encore. But the a[illegible]gered for more a[illegible] led the[illegible] tired[illegible] willing[illegible] the bo[illegible] lude to[illegible] of the Meistersingers.

Like the big crowd, we really marveled at the genius of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its eminent music director, Dr. Charles Munch.

After the concert, Dr. Munch was introduced to the President and the First Lady. He gave President and Mrs. Garcia a record of Beethoven's "Eroica".

After their three concerts here, the BSO and its three conductors, Dr. Munch, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin, are scheduled to depart for Australia, part of their Far East concert tour.

Once more, we wish to thank Impresario Alfredo Lozano who presented the BSO in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Munch Leads BSO In Last Conc[illegible]

Philippines Herald

4 JUN 1960

VIGOROUSLY wielding the baton, swaying his body, and softly calling out to the musicians, Dr. Charles Munch is shown in upper photos as he led the famed Boston Symphony orchestra in a brilliant interpretation of Beethoven's Heroic Sympho*ny, at last night's last but most brilliant concert at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. Lower photo (left) shows Dr. Munch and a part of the orchestra acknowledging the ovation of Manila's concertgoers headed by President and Mrs. Carlos P. Garcia. Photo at lower extreme right shows the smiling Dr. Munch raising his baton during the BSO's rendition of Piston's* Sixth Symphony.

Orchestra gets big ovation

Manila Times 4 JUN 1960

By NATI VALENTIN

Superb is the word for Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night. There were moments when their playing defied description.

A most felicitous conductor-orchestra relationship awed and delighted Manila

(Photo on last page)

concert-goers at the third and final performance here of the Boston Symphony.

President and Mrs. Garcia and US Ambassador and Mrs. John Dewey Hickerson headed those present. The Rizal Memorial Coliseum, acoustically improved by Cesar Concio, was filled to the rafters.

Standing ovations brought Dr. Munch front stage again and again. He played two encores: The Damnation of Faust by Berlioz, and the Overture to Meistersinger by Wagner.

Dr. Munch now in his twelfth year as musical director of the Boston Symphony, brought out the virtuosity of the orchestra. But it was more than an orchestral triumph, more than a sonorous blending. It was also the highest type of unity exemplified [illegible] first-rate arti[illegible] ent nationalities who have grown [illegible] roots in Boston and [illegible] naturalized American citizens.

Although Dr. Munch is considered a conductor who considers the music far more important than his role, he made an interesting study as he led the Orchestra through three of the most exacting numbers in any symphonic repertoire. These were Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E flat, "Eroica" Op. 55; a contemporary work, Piston's Symphony No. 6; and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe.

He conducted without a score, except for Piston's Symphony.

Coming out in barong Tagalog, to an acclaim that became tumultuous as the concert progressed, Dr. Munch affably and humbly acknowledged the applause, and became almost immediately the absorbed and sensitive artist.

Gray locks spilling over forehead, Dr. Munch was a dynamic conductor, as he described circular motions with right arm and head. Now he could stretch out his left arm, now put a finger to his lips, now tilt back on his heels, arms flailing for a crescendo. Occasionally, he had the stance of a fencer. Always, always, he held his players in a fascinating and masterful spell.

It was in Daphnis et Chloe that the Orchestra virtually took one's breath away. Here James Pappoutsakis, flutist, gave out with some of the most exquisite solo playing we've heard in a long time. [illegible] too were featured [illegible]ts Bernard Zigh[illegible] Olivia Luetcke.

Richard Bur[illegible]ho conducted the opening concert last Wednesday, was concertmaster.

Described as a "vast musical fr[illegible]," this work, a balle[illegible] from a docu[illegible]nt Greece, the "ancie[illegible]reece" of Ravel's [illegible]

[illegible]uch technical ex[illegible] as the BSO's could have produced the murmur [illegible] rivulets, the haunting mystery and romance of the habitation of Ravel's [illegible] and shepherds.

[illegible]thoven's Eroica, played by Munch with a slightly different tempo, was impressive. Although it had nothing to do wtih Napoleon Bonaparte, it still might have been composed to reflect greatness dreamed of by an artist, and thrown away by such a man as Napoleon.

The Eroica's funebre (funeral march) recalls the death of one of the Boston Symphony's viola players in Japan. Dr. Munch asked for one-minute silence before starting this movement in the Japanese town where the death occurred.

Piston's contemporary piece was perhaps not to the musical taste of many, but it attested nevertheless, to the superb technique of the orchestra for whose members it was written. The work is dedicated to its long-time, late conductor, Koussevitzky, whom Munch replaced.

The coming of the Boston Symphony and the impact of Dr. Munch, and of guest conductor [illegible] land, will long be remembered by Filipinos.

FAREWELL CONCERT—Dr. Charles Munch, famed director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, waves a hand to smother the brasses as he stirs the 104-man band through the intricate passages of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E flat major in last night's farewell performance of the orchestra. President Garcia and the First Lady led the biggest crowd of music lovers yet who thronged to the Rizal Memorial Coliseum to listen to the concert.

President, First Lady attend last BSO concert

Manila Chronicle 4 JUN 1960

By AMANTE F. PAREDES
of the Chronicle staff

Lusty applause by an appreciative audience characterized the farewell performance of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at the Rizal coliseum as Charles Munch, music director of the visiting orchestra, conducted in a vibrant manner three classical compositions.

President and Mrs. Carlos P. Garcia led about 14,000 concert-goers in hearing the last of a three-night engagement, a rare occasion for good entertainment in culture-barren Manila.

The coliseum was filled with people, some of them standing in the aisles in the upper seats and the bleachers. The enchanting strains of Beethoven's "Eroica" were marred by the clapping of hands between movements from the gallery. Director Munch was a bit peeved at the wrong timing of the applause, but seemed unperturbed as he continued directing adeptly the composition.

The first piece which proved to be the most familiar as the audience listened to it in rapt attention was Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica," Opus 55.

The Beethoven masterpiece which is referred to by George Grove as "a portrait of Beethoven himself" was the longest score played by the orchestra in its three-night performance.

Munch dedicated a record of this musical piece as performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to President and Mrs. Garcia when they congratulated the conductor at the end of the concert.

Following the intermis sion, the orchestra play Piston's Symphony N which was commiss by the orchestra itself for an anniversary season. This melody did not evoke much enthusiasm among the listeners.

The same attitude of the audience could be said of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," which was a music set for a ballet in one act. A "choreographic symphony in three parts," this opus contributed much to modern French music which "emphasize in different ways the detached attitude of Ravel towards his art."

As the crowd clapped for an encore, the stocky music director returned to the podium to conduct two lively encores: Berlioz's Hungarian March and Wagner's Second Prelude to the Third Act of Meistersinger.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which came here under the international cultural program of the United States administered by the American National Theatre and Academy, is proceeding today to Australia for performances similar to those it gave in Formosa, Japan and the Philippines. The local performance was presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano.

Ch[illegible] Munch, the music director who is both an [illegible] and string player, [illegible] the hearts of Mani[illegible] as he had been hono[illegible] the United States, Europe including Russia where he conducted concerts in 1956.

Winning plaudits with Munch during their concert tour in the Far East by this symphony orchestra were Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor since 1953, and concertmaster since 1920.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"COURIER MAIL"
Brisbane, Qld.

8 - JUN 196

Big ovation

SYDNEY.—A capacity house of 2300 gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a tremendous ovation at the Town Hall last night.

Ito ang buong pangkat ng Boston Symphony Orchestra na sa tingin lamang ay makaaakit na upang pakinggan ng mga mahilig sa makasining na musika. Ang ikinatatangi ng orkestra simponikang ito ay ang kahandaang "maglingkod" sa mga karaniwang mamamayan na hindi naghihintay ng ano mang gantimpala. Ang BSO ay dadalaw sa Maynila sa papasok na buwan ng Hunyo.

Musika ng mga dakila para sa karaniwang mamamayan

TILA tayo nalalapit sa mga bathala, sa mga anghel, ang mawiwika natin kapag nakaririnig tayo ng magandang tugtugin — maaaring ito'y sa biyulin, sa piyano, sa organo, sa alpa... Nguni't higit na makalangit ang tugtugin kung mapagsasama-sama sa minsang pakikinig ang mga instrumentong iyon. Kaya, kung isang buong orkesta ang ating pakikinggan, hindi na natin iibigin pang mapalayo . . . Iibigin nating huwag nang matapos ang mga tugtuging iyon.

Ganyan ang inaasahang madarama natin sa pagdayo rito ng isang bantog na orkesta simponika — ang Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Hindi na magiging bago sa atin ang ganitong uri ng manunugtog. Sa atin man ay mayroon ding mga orkesta simponika. Mababanggit natin ang Manila Symphony Orchestra. Nariyan din ang mga orkesta simponika ng malalaking pamantasan, tulad ng UP at UST.

Hindi nga bago, sapagka't tulad din ng mga orkesta dito sa atin na nagpaparinig ng mga tugtugin nina Beethoven, Mozart, Schubert, Bach, at iba pang dakilang pangalan sa musika, ang Boston Symphony Orchestra ay hindi tinutustusan ng pamahalaan. Nabubuhay ang orkestang ito sa tangkilik ng bayan—at hindi ng lahat ng mga mamamayan—kundi yaong mahilig lamang sa musika ng dakila.

Subali't ang ganyang pagtangkilik ay hindi nakasasapat sa isang orkestang binubuo ng mga musikong nagsipag-aral at totoong bihasa — 101 lalaki at 3 babaing manunugtog. Tinatayang gumugugol taun-taon ang orkesta ng mga $2,000,000. May isang samahang kumikilos upang mabuhay ang ganitong orkesta. Dito sa atin, sa Maynila, nariyan ang Manila Symphony Society. Sa Boston, naroon ang The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Nguni't sa kabila ng "kagipitan" sa gugulin, hindi nag-atubili ang Boston Orchestra na mag-ambag sa pagpapaunlad ng kultura ng mga bansa. Bilang tulong sa paglinang ng panlasang pangkultura ng isang bagong umuunlad na bansa, tulad ng Pilipinas, pumayag ang Boston Symphony Orchestra na dumalaw sa Maynila.

Ang Boston Symphony Orchtstra ay kinikilalang isa sa iilang pangunahing orkesta simponika sa buong daigdig. Ang pagkatatag nito ay isang maningning na kasaysayang nakaukit sa isip ng bawat isang mamamayan ng Boston. Para sa taga-Boston, ang orkestang ito ay isang institusyon—hindi maaaring pumanaw hanggang may tugtugin ang daigdig.

Isang magandang halimbawa ang Boston Symphony Orhestra para sa atin. Sa Boston, hindi na ipagtatanong kung ano iyan. Hindi na rin dapat usisain kung saan matatagpuan ang orkesta. Madaling matutukoy kung saang panig ng kanilang gusali naroon ang orkesta. Sapagka't sa kabila na katotohanang pinalalakad ng mga pribadong nagmamalasakit ang orkesta, ito'y itinuturing na pambayan. Ang dahilan ay nasa pangyayaring itinuturing ng orkesta na rin na siya'y para sa bayan—kaya kailangan niyang "maglingkod" sa bayan sa pamamagitan ng kanyang mga konsiyerto.

Naging patakaran ng orkesta na tumugtog para sa karaniwang mamamayan. At ang layuning ito ay kanilang tinutupad. Ang kanilang mga konsiyerto ay laging dinudumog ng tao. Mangyari'y mura lamang ang mga tiket na ipinagbibili. Nangyayari pa ngang samantalahin ng ibang "mapangahas" ang pagbibili ng mga tiket. Tulad ng nangyayari sa Rizal Memorial Coliseum natin, kung may basketbol, maraming nagbibili ng tiket nang "mav kung ilang patong" ang halaga.

Ang bunga rin ng layuning makatugtog sa pinakamaraming tao sa pinakamababang halaga — upang maihatid naman sa karaniwang mamamayan ang dakilang musika — naglalakbay sa daigdig ang Boston Symphony Orchestra.

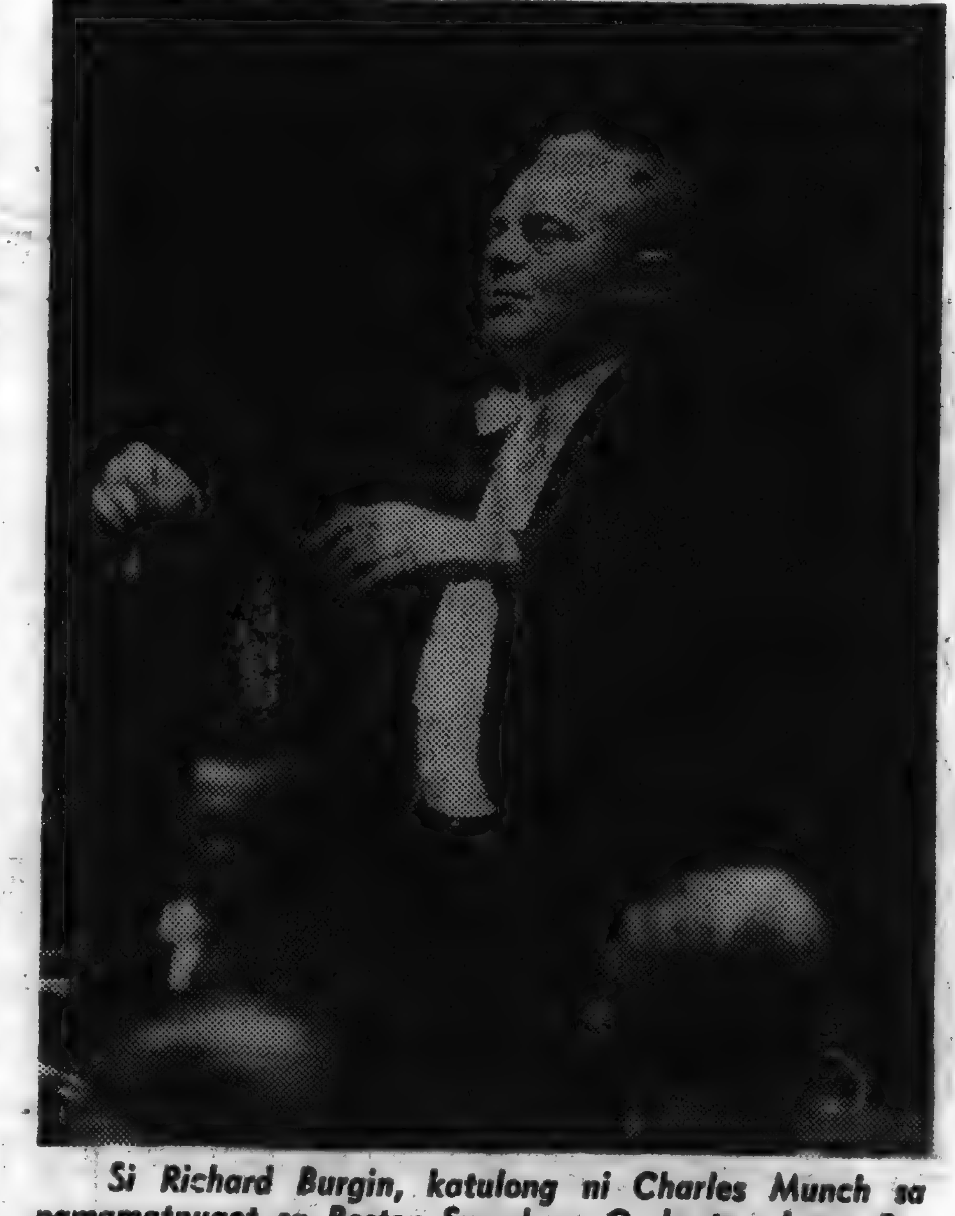
Ang Boston Symphony Orchestra ay nasa kanyang paglalakbay sa Dulong Silangan. Nakatakdang gumanap ang orkesta dito sa atin sa unang linggo ng Hunyo.

Kasama sa paglalakbay na ito ang direktor ng musika ng Boston Symphonv, si Charles Munch Isang Pranses, si Munch ay isa sa along pinagpipitaganang musiko sa kanyang uri sa buong daigdig. Tumanggap siya ng pinakamataas na karangalang Lehiyon ng Karangalan sa Pransiya dahil sa naiambag niya sa larangan ng musika.

Katulong ni Munch si Richard Burgin sa pagiging maestro ng orkesta. Isang Polako, si Burgin ay may sariling pangalan sa musika.

Hindi nagkasiya sa maningning na pamamahala ng dalawa, ipinasya ni Munch na anyayahan ang isa sa lalong bantog at batikang musikong Amerikano. si Aaron Copland. Nagkamit ng napakaraming gantimpala — kabilang ang Oscar, ang New York Critics Music Award, at ang Gantimpalang Pulitzer — si Copland ay lagi nang naaanyayahang maging maes-

(Sundan sa pahina6)



Si Richard Burgin, katulong ni Charles Munch sa pamamatnugot sa Boston Symphony Orchestra. Isang Polako, si Burgin ay kilala sa daigdig at may sariling pangalan sa larangan ng musika.

MAG IN

Ito ang buong pangkat ng Boston Symphony Orchestra na sa tingin lamang ay makaaakit na upang pakinggan ng mga mahilig sa makasining na musika. Ang ikinatatangi ng orkestra simponikang ito ay ang kahandaang "maglingkod" sa mga karaniwang mamamayan na hindi naghihintay ng ano mang gantimpala. Ang BSO ay dadalaw sa Maynila sa papasok na buwan ng Hunyo.

Musika ng mga dakila para sa karaniwang mamamayan

TILA tayo nalalapit sa mga bathala, sa mga anghel, ang mawiwika natin kapag nakaririnig tayo ng magandang tugtugin — maaaring ito'y sa biyulin, sa piyano, sa organo, sa alpa... Nguni't higit na makalangit ang tugtugin kung mapagsasama-sama sa minsang pakikinig ang mga instrumentong iyon. Kaya, kung isang buong orkesta ang ating pakikinggan, hindi na natin iibigin pang mapalayo . . . Iibigin nating huwag nang matapos ang mga tugtuging iyon.

Ganyan ang inaasahang madarama natin sa pagdayo rito ng isang bantog na orkesta simponika — ang Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Hindi na magiging bago sa atin ang ganitong uri ng manunugtog. Sa atin man ay mayroon ding mga orkesta simponika. Mababanggit natin ang Manila Symphony Orchestra. Nariyan din ang mga orkesta simponika ng malalaking pamantasan, tulad ng UP at UST.

Hindi nga bago, sapagka't tulad din ng mga orkesta dito sa atin na nagpapariniig ng mga tugtugin nina Beethoven, Mozart, Schubert, Bach, at iba pang dakilang pangalan sa musika, ang Boston Symphony Orchestra ay hindi tinutustusan ng pamahalaan. Nabubuhay ang orkestang ito sa tangkilik ng bayan—at hindi ng lahat ng mga mamamayan—kundi yaong mahilig lamang sa musika ng dakila.

Subali't ang ganyang pagtangkilik ay hindi nakasasapat sa isang orkestang hinubuo ng mga musikong nagsipag-aral at totoong bihasa — 101 lalaki at 3 babaing manunugtog. Tinatayang gumugugol taun-taon ang orkesta ng mga $2,000,000. May isang samahang kumikilos upang mabuhay ang ganitong orkesta. Dito sa atin, sa Maynila, nariyan ang Manila Symphony Society. Sa Boston, naroon ang The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Nguni't sa kabila ng "kagipitan" sa gugulin, hindi nag-atubili ang Boston Orchestra na mag-ambag sa pagpapaunlad ng kultura ng mga bansa. Bilang tulong sa paglinang ng panlasang pangkultura ng isang bagong umuunlad na bansa, tulad ng Pilipinas, pumayag ang Boston Symphony Orchestra na dumalaw sa Maynila.

Ang Boston Symphony Orchtstra ay kinikilalang isa sa iilang pangunahing orkesta simponika sa buong daigdig. Ang pagkatatag nito ay isang maningning na kasaysayang nakaukit sa isip ng bawat isang mamamayan ng Boston. Para sa taga-Boston, ang orkestang ito ay isang institusyon—hindi maaaring pumanaw hanggang may tugtugin ang daigdig.

Isang magandang halimbawa ang Boston Symphony Orhestra para sa atin. Sa Boston, hindi na ipagtatanong kung ano iyan. Hindi na rin dapat usisain kung saan matatagpuan ang orkesta. Madaling matutukoy kung saang panig ng kanilang gusali naroon ang orkesta. Sapagka't sa kabila na katotohanang pinalalakad ng mga pribadong nagmamalasakit ang orkesta, ito'y itinuturing na pambayan. Ang dahilan ay nasa pangyayaring itinuturing ng orkesta na rin na siya'y para sa bayan—kaya kailangan niyang "maglingkod" sa bayan sa pamamagitan ng kanyang mga konsiyerto.

Naging patakaran ng orkesta na tumugtog para sa karaniwang mamamayan. At ang layuning ito ay kanilang tinutupad. Ang kanilang mga konsiyerto ay laging dinudumog ng tao. Mangyari'y mura lamang ang mga tiket na ipinagbibili. Nangyayari pa ngang samantalahin ng ibang "mapangahas" ang pagbibili ng mga tiket. Tulad ng nangyayari sa Rizal Memorial Coliseum natin, kung may basketbol, maraming nagbibili ng tiket nang "mav kung ilang patong" ang halaga.

Ang bunga rin ng layuning makatugtog sa pinakamaraming tao sa pinakamababang halaga — upang maihatid naman sa karaniwang mamamayan ang dakilang musika — naglalakbay sa daigdig ang Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Ang Boston Symphony Orchestra ay nasa kanyang paglalakbay sa Dulong Silangan. Nakatakdang gumanap ang orkesta dito sa atin sa unang linggo ng Hunyo.

Kasama sa paglalakbay na ito ang direktor ng musika ng Boston Symphonv, si Charles Munch Isang Pranses, si Munch ay isa sa along pinagpipitaganang musiko sa kanyang uri sa buong daigdig. Tumanggap siya ng pinakamataas na karangalang Lehiyon ng Karangalan sa Pransiya dahil sa naiambag niya sa larangan ng musika.

Katulong ni Munch si Richard Burgin sa pagiging maestro ng orkesta. Isang Polako, si Burgin ay may sariling pangalan sa musika.

Hindi nagkasiya sa maningning na pamamahala ng dalawa, ipinasya ni Munch na anyayahan ang isa sa lalong bantog at batikang musikong Amerikano, si Aaron Copland. Nagkamit ng napakaraming gantimpala — kabilang ang Oscar, ang New York Critics Music Award, at ang Gantimpalang Pulitzer — si Copland ay lagi nang naaanyayahang maging maes-

(Sundan sa pahina6)

Si Richard Burgin, katu pamamatnugot sa Boston Sy lako, si Burgin ay kilala sa ngalan sa larangan ng mus

MASIN

TALIBA

BLANK PAGE

digest, "MUSIKANG MGA DAKILA PARA SA KARANIWANG MAMAMAYAN"
Tuesday, May 24, 1960, TALIBA daily magazine

MUSIC OF THE GREAT FOR THE COMMON MAN

Everytime we hear beautiful music played on the piano or the violin or the harp, we seem to be nearer the gods. This music becomes more heavenly if it is played by all those instruments--and many more--together. Listening, we do not wish the music to end.

This is the feeling Manila expects to have when the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra comes here to perform.

Symphony Orchstras are not a novelty here. Manila has its own Manila Symphony Orchestra. Big institutions, like the UP and the UST, have orchestras of their own.

Like our symphony orchestras here, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not subsidized by the government. The orchestra is privately endowed.

Composed of 101 men and 3 women, all fine musicians, the Boston Symphony has an annual budget of $2,000,000, which is partly raised by a music-loving society. In Manila, we have the Manila Symphony Society as the supporter of the symphony orchestra. In Boston, there is the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In an effort to bring great music closer to all men, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is now touring the Far East, eventually performing in Manila in the first week of June.

The Boston Symphony is one of the few great orchestras of the kind in the whole world. It is regarded as a "public institution" in Boston. As such, the orchestra considers performing for the "great masses" one of its objectives.

Concerts presented by the orchestra are all sold-out performance because of low-priced tickets. Some tickets even fall into the handsoof scalpers, just as what happens during the basketball season at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

In pursuance of one of its noble objectives--to play for the common people and therefore aid in exposing them to great music, thus elevating their taste-- the Boston Symphony is coming to Manila.

Conducting the orchestra is Charls Munch, music director, who has been awarded the Legion of Honor, by his country, France, for distinction in music. Assisting him is Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, who is a noted Polish musician himself. Guest conductor is Aaron Copland, one of the best American living composers, who has won the most coveted awards-- the Oscar, New York Critics, Pulitzer-- for distinguished achievements in music.

During the first three days of June, it is expected that the 104 men and 3 famous conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will bring great music to the common man. --#

117

The Philippines Herald | features section

Sunday, May 22, 1960

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, SHOWN PERFORMING A NUMBER WITH DR. CHARLES MUNCH AT THE PODIUM, WILL PLAY IN MANILA JUNE 1, 2 AND 3,

Coming This Way: Music By Masters

MANILANS will see and hear the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra perform music by the masters at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3.

To be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre Academy, this world-acclaimed orchestra will also give renditions of modern American works under the baton of Charles Munch, music director, Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster, and Aaron Copland, guest conductor.

Considered one of the great symphony orchestras of the world, the BSO was established back in the 1870's by an enterprising Bostonian and music lover named Henry Lee Higginson.

Since its debut concert in the Boston Music Hall on October 22, 1881 up to the present, the BSO has won the admiration of American and European music audiences.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been noted for its performance of American works and its encouragement of American composers. Throughout its history, it has played more modern music than the majority of symphony orchestras.

Millions in America and Europe have seen and heard the BSO perform the great works of the masters in concerts, over the radio and television and on recordings. It also became the first American symphony orchestra to play in the Soviet Union.

Munch, the BSO's music director, is one of the foremost symphony conductors in the world. He began his career as a music professor at Strasbourg Conservatory, becoming concertmaster of the Strasbourg Orchestra in 1919. In 1947, he made his debut in the United States with the New York Symphony Society. He became the BSO's music director in 1949.

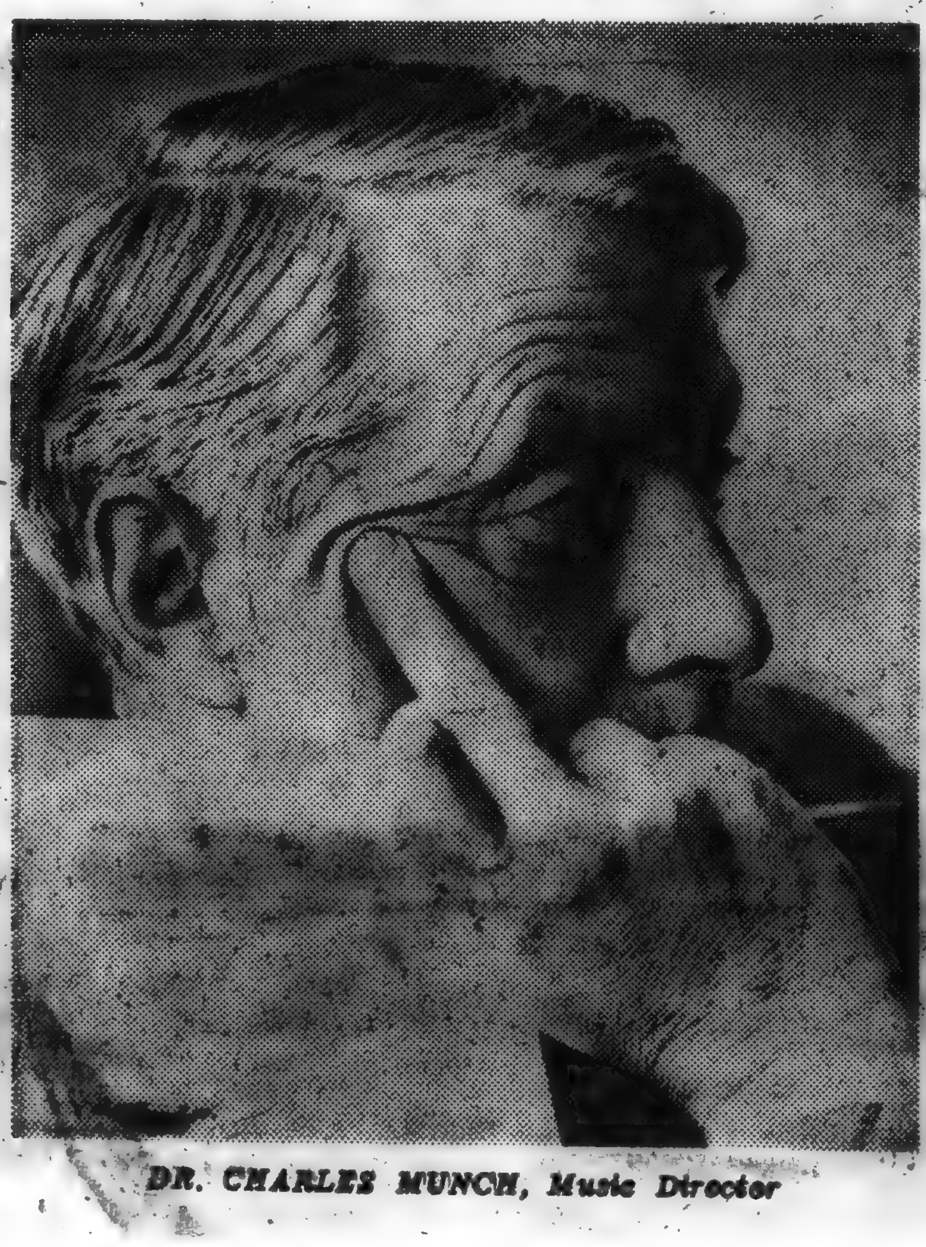
The BSO's guest conductor during its Far Eastern tour, Copland is the dean of American composers. He has made significant contributions to the musical literature of the orchestra, the films and the theater. He is the chairman of the faculty and head, composition department, Berkshire Music Center.

Burgin has been the associate conductor of the BSO since 1943. He joined the BSO in 1920 at the age of 27. He was, at 11, soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. From 1916 to 1920, he was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony Orchestra.

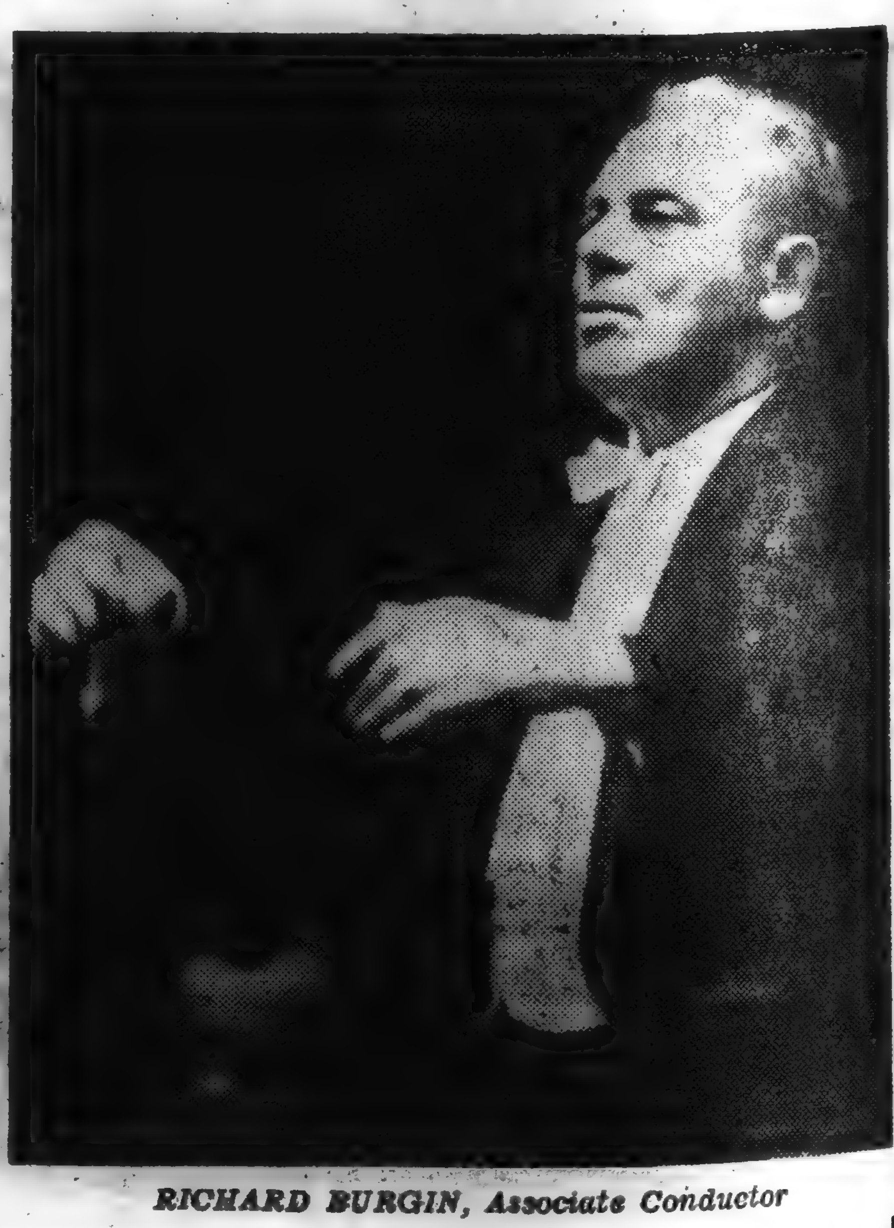
Come June, Manila's music lovers will experience the magnificence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of these three famous conductors.

These Are The Men Who Conduct One Of The World's Greatest Orchestras

AARON COPLAND, Guest Conductor



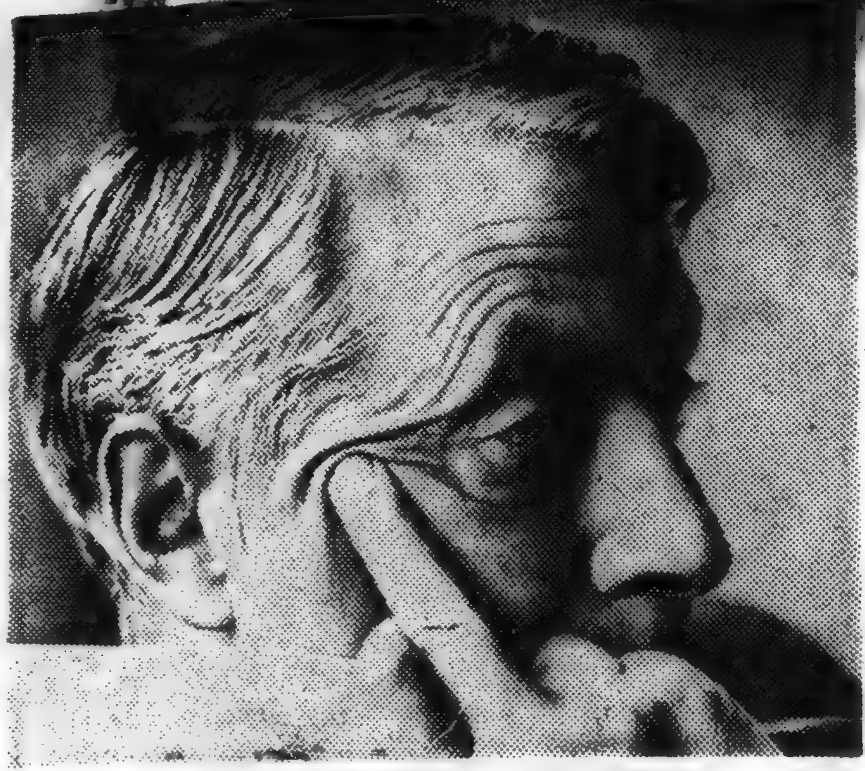
DR. CHARLES MUNCH, Music Director



RICHARD BURGIN, Associate Conductor

The Sunday Chronicle 15 MAY 1960 5

Boston Symphony to perform in Manila



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR — The world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra will give three performances at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum from June 1 to 3 at 8:15 p.m. Impresario Alfredo Lozano announced yesterday. The famous orchestra with Charles Munch (above) conducting, is currently on a month-long tour of Japan where it has been reaping lavish praises for its performances. The 104-man group is now touring Asia under the auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has been drawing lavish praises from music critics of Japan where it is currently on a month-long tour, is scheduled to perform before Manila audiences from June 1 to 3 at 8:15 p.m. at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

Reports of these rave reviews in the Tokyo newspapers have been received in this city by Impresario Alfredo Lozano who is presenting the Boston Symphony's concerts here in conjunction with President Eisenhower's special international program.

Unanimous in their praises, the critics have joined in heaping the Tokyo performances of the orchestra under the baton of Charles Munch, with such superlatives as "magnificent," "extraordinary," "unprecedented," and "terrific."

Typical of these lavish reviews was that of Marcel Grilli, critic of the "Japan Times," after the maiden appearance of the orchestra in Tokyo last May with Munch conducting. Grilli said in part:

"Never before have I witnessed its like in the Hibiya Hall even when other major international orchestras have appeared here, to match this one in warmth, spontaneity and genuine gratitude.

"....Meeting these Bostonians face to face has brought the Japanese a new memorable experience. For, beyond all its virtuoso capabilities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra provides one of those all-too-rare exquisite, civilized pleasures of music making in the highest spheres.

"In every respect, it is the most aristocratic, musically mature and technically distinguished of American symphony ensembles."

The 104-man orchestra, now on a tour of Asia under the auspices of President Eisenhower's special international program, will render three performances in Manila from June 1 to 3.

On its part, the "Asahi Shimbun" has this to say: "The Boston Symphony Orchestra has lived up to its reputation as one of the world's three greatest symphony orchestras.

FOR MUSIC LOVERS

18 MAY 1960

Beethoven, Ravel's compositions featured numbers in BSO concert

An interesting program that includes a well-known symphony by Beethoven, a modern masterpiece by Piston and a rousing choreographic work by Ravel will be the fare in store for concertgoers on June 3, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by its music director Charles Munch, holds its farewell performance here, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

The BSO will be presented in Manila in a series of three concerts, on June 1, 2 and 3, by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy.

The concert on June 3, will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, otherwise known as the Eroica, to be followed by Symphony No. 6 in four movements by the American composer Walter Piston, to close with Ravel's famous choreographic symphony in three parts, Daphnis et Chloe, suite No. 2, a work commissioned by the Ballet Russe.

The Eroica, originally dedicated to Napoleon before the composer, angered at the self-styled Emperor's excessive, ruthless ambition, had torn up the dedication and simply inscribed it "to the memory of a Great Man," was written by Beethoven who was never more completely, more eruptively revolutionary. This was composed during the first triumphant years of the French Republic.

Piston's Sixth Symphony was commissioned by the BSO the Koussevitsky Music Foundation for the group's anniversary season. Piston, born in Maine, 60 years ago, was to write the piece for an orchestra that had grown up with a knew intimately. The first movement, in sonata form, is flowing, expressive; the second, light and fast; the third, a serene adagio; the fourth an energetic finale with two contrasting themes.

Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe, tells the story of the love, tribulations and final union of a shephered and a shepherdess, based on a document of ancient Greece. The second suite, where Daphnis is reunited with chloe, includes, wild, bacchanalian music that ends in joyous tumult. A vast musical fresco, which achieves syphonic homogeniety of style through a strict tonal plan, the [illegible] originally composed [illegible] complete ballet, [illegible] joyed a lusty survi[illegible] concert hall.

T[illegible]e three concerts [illegible] sale at the Boti[illegible]

Philippines Herald 18 [illegible] 1960

Works Of Beethoven [illegible] Ravel Played At BSO Farewell Concert

The Boston symphony orchestra's farewell Manila concert on June 3 will be composed of a well-known symphony by Beethoven, a modern masterpiece by Piston and rousing choreographic work by Ravel. The concert, conducted by its music director Charles Munch, will be held at the Rizal Memorial coliseum.

The BSO will be presented in Manila in a series of three concerts, on June 1, 2 and 3, by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy.

The concert on June 3, will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, otherwise known as the Eroica, to be followed by Symphony No. 6 in four movements by the American composer Walter Piston, to close with Ravel's famous choreographic symphony in three parts, Daphnis et Chloe, suite No. 2, a work commissioned by the Ballet Russe.

The Eroica, originally dedicated to Napoleon before the composer, angered at the self-styled emperor's excessive, ruthless ambition, had torn up the dedication and simply inscribed it "to the memory of a Great Man," was written by Beethoven who was never more completely, more eruptively revolutionary. This was composed during the first triumphant years of the French Republic.

Tickets to the three concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Manila Chronicle Wednesday, May 18, 1960

Last BSO concert to feature Ravel

An interesting program that includes a well-known symphony by Beethoven, a modern masterpiece by Piston and a rousing choreographic work by Ravel will be the fare in store for concert-goers on June 3, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by its music director Charles Munch, holds its farewell performance at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

The BSO will be presented in Manila in a series of three concerts, on June 1, 2 and 3, by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy.

The June 3 concert will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, otherwise known as the "Eroica," to be followed by Symphony No. 6 in four movements by the American composer Walter Piston. It will close with Ravel's famous choreographic symphony in three parts, Daphnis et Chloe, suite No. 2, a work commissioned by the Ballet Russe.

The Eroica was originally dedicated to Napoleon before the composer, angered at the self-styled Emperor's ruthless ambition, tore up the dedication and simply inscribed it "to the memory of a Great Man." It was written by Beethoven, who was never more completely, more eruptively revolutionary and was composed during the first triumphant years of the French Republic.

Piston's "Sixth Symphony" was commissioned by the BSO and the Koussevtisky Music Foundation for the group's anniversary season. Piston, born in Maine, 60 years ago, was to write the piece for an orchestra that he had grown up with and know intimately. The first movement, in sonata form, is flowing, expressive; the second, light and fast; the third, a serene adagio; the four an energetic finale with two contrasting themes.

Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe, tells the story of the love, tribulations and final union of a shepherd and a shepherdess, based on a document of ancient Greece. The second suite, where Daphnis is reunited with Chloe, includes wild, bacchanalian music that ends in joyous tumult. A vast musical fresco, which achieves symphonic homogeniety of style through a strict tonal plan, the piece which was originally composed as a complete ballet, has enjoyed a lusty survival in the concert hall.

Tickets to the three concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

119

May 27, 1960 THE MANILA TIMES

3-NIGHT ENGAGEMENT

Boston Symphony will feature 10 leading composers of 4 eras

Works of 10 leading composers of the classical, romantic, modern and contemporary eras will feature the three-night engagement in Manila of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Three top conductors, including Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, will lead the orchestra.

Burgin wields the baton at the opening concert on June 1, at the Rizal Memorial Stadium. The stadium has been equipped with an acoustical stage to set off the concerts to advantage.

Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, will lead the orchestra on June 2. The third and last performance, on June 3, will have the BSO director, Charles Munch, in the conductor's role.

The complete program follows:

June 1

I. Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion — Kirchner

II. Adagio from the Tenth Symphony — Mahler

III. Symphony No. 5 — Tschaikovsky

June 2

I. Fantasias for Strings — Purcell

II. First Symphony — Copland

III. Symphony No. 95 — Haydn

IV. Orchestra Suite from the Opera, "The Tender Land" — Copland

June 3

I. Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" — Beethoven

II. Symphony No. 6 — [illegible] Daphnis and Chloe, [illegible] 2 — Ravel

[illegible] to these three conc[illegible] which will all be held at [illegible] Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15 p.m., are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Chronicle 21 MAY 1960 7

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — The musical group in photo is the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give a series of three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3. At the podium is Dr. Charles Munch, music director. The BSO's performances here have been arranged by Impresario Lozano, who had previously brought to the Philippines the Vienna Philharmonic and other internationally known cultural groups.

Cantilevered stage set for BSO series

The stage with special cantilevered canopy designed by Architect Cesar H. Concio and built at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum for the Vienna Philharmonic when it performed here last October, will again be used by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is giving a series of three concerts at the Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3.

This cantilevered canopy constructed for acoustical effects, had proved successful for the Vienna Philharmonic performances, improving the acoustics of the Rizal Memorial Coliseum to the satisfaction of the concert-goers.

It also impressed the Vienna musicians, whose spokesman, Helmut Wobisch, writing after their performances to Impresario Alfredo Lozano, said they were happy about the way Rizal Coliseum had been transformed into a first-class concert auditorium with the construction of this special stage.

Lozano presented the Vienna Philharmonic in Manila and is also presenting the Boston Symphony this June, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

A crew is busy assembling the Concio-designed stage in preparation for the coming of the orchestra expected in Manila on May 31. Headed by its music director, Dr. Charles Munch, the group also includes the noted American composer Aaron Copland, and the BSO associate director Richard Burgin, the three of whom will take turns wielding the baton for the series of concerts here. All performances will start at 8:15 p.m.

The BSO, known for its wide and varied repertory, is dipping into its store of musical scores, for choice selections calculated to meet the approval of discriminating Manila audiences. A different program has been prepared for each evening. Tickets are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Philippines Herald 20 MAY 1960

BSO Members Expected To Arrive In Manila At End Of This Month

The Far East tour of the Boston Symphony orchestra marks its 80th season. The group of 102 men and two women who hold "the most attractive musical jobs in America," are expected to arrive in Manila at the end of the month for performances on June 1, 2, and 3.

The BSO will be presented at the Rizal Memorial coliseum by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

At the head of the group will be Charles Munch, its music director, Aaron Copland, American contemporary composer who is traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, associate director and considered the orchestra's most significant acquisition in recent decades. The three will take turns wielding the baton, Burgin on June 1, Copland on June 2, and Munch on June 3.

The rest of the playing members of the orchestra, represent a selected, literally hand-picked collection of musicians from among thousands whose life aspiration is to be a member of the orchestra, and there are thousands who apply whenever a vacancy occurs.

There is nothing hasty about the way the Boston Symphony takes on a new member, according to Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player and personnel manager of the BSO in addition since 1942. One of Mazzeo's duties is to keep track of musicians throughout the United States who seem to be likely candidates for memberships. When a vacancy arises in the BSO, the most promising applicants are notified, assembled and auditioned (from behind a curtain) by a jury. This is how the process of selecting a musician for a job in the BSO has been described. From four to seven of these candidates are selected by this jury for the next stage of elimination — another audition attended by Munch himself, who may also interview them personally, make them play as he conducts, and sight-read. The lucky winner is usually in a state of near prostration by the time he is selected, but none ever complains. He has come into what Henry B. Cabot, president of the BSO trustees, calls the "most attractive musical job in America."

Tickets to all the three concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

BLANK PAGE

121

Aaron Copland (upper photo) is a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is now in the Philippines. Charles Munch (left photo) is the music director. He is considered as one of the foremost symphony musicians the world has ever known.

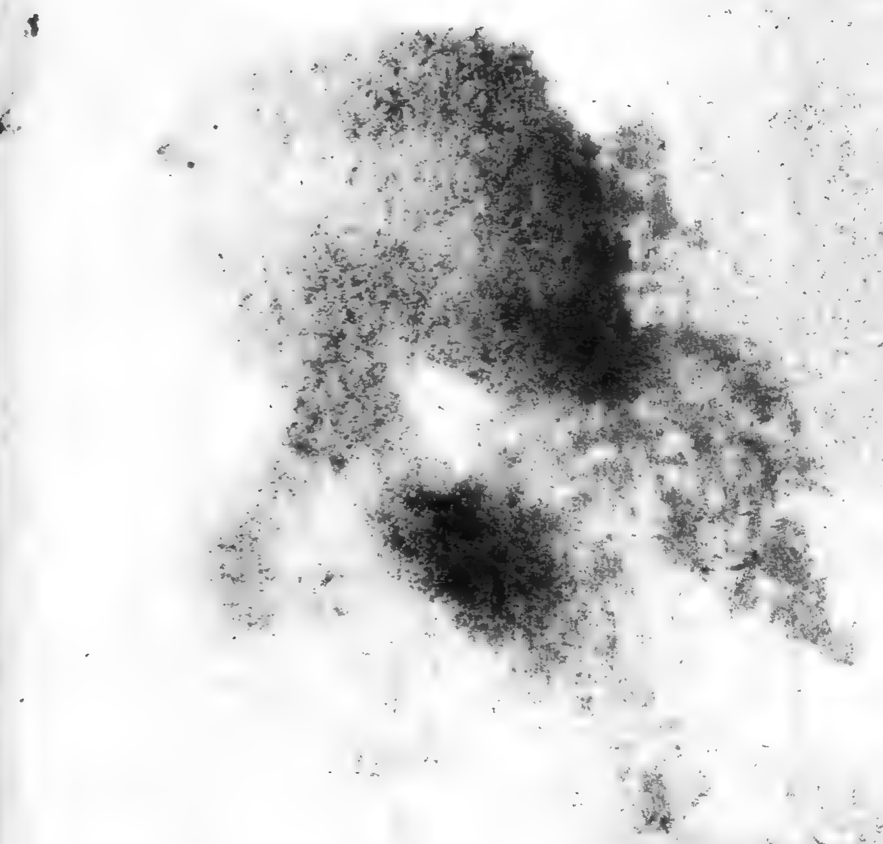
MUSIC FROM BOSTON

AARON COPLAND is a familiar name to lovers of music and when it was learned that he was coming over to the Philippines as a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is just as well known, the cultural segments of the country welcomed the news with great enthusiasm. June 1, 2 and 3 became three of the most important dates in the music calendar because here was an orchestra previously heard only through recordings and now right in our midst. Alfredo Lozano, who has given the Filipinos the best in music from abroad, worked in association with the International Cultural Program of the United States administered by the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA) to bring the distinguished group over for its brief engagement at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum. Millions have seen and heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform music by the masters. The group was much applauded in Europe when it made its two tours to the continent—one in 1952 and the other in 1956.

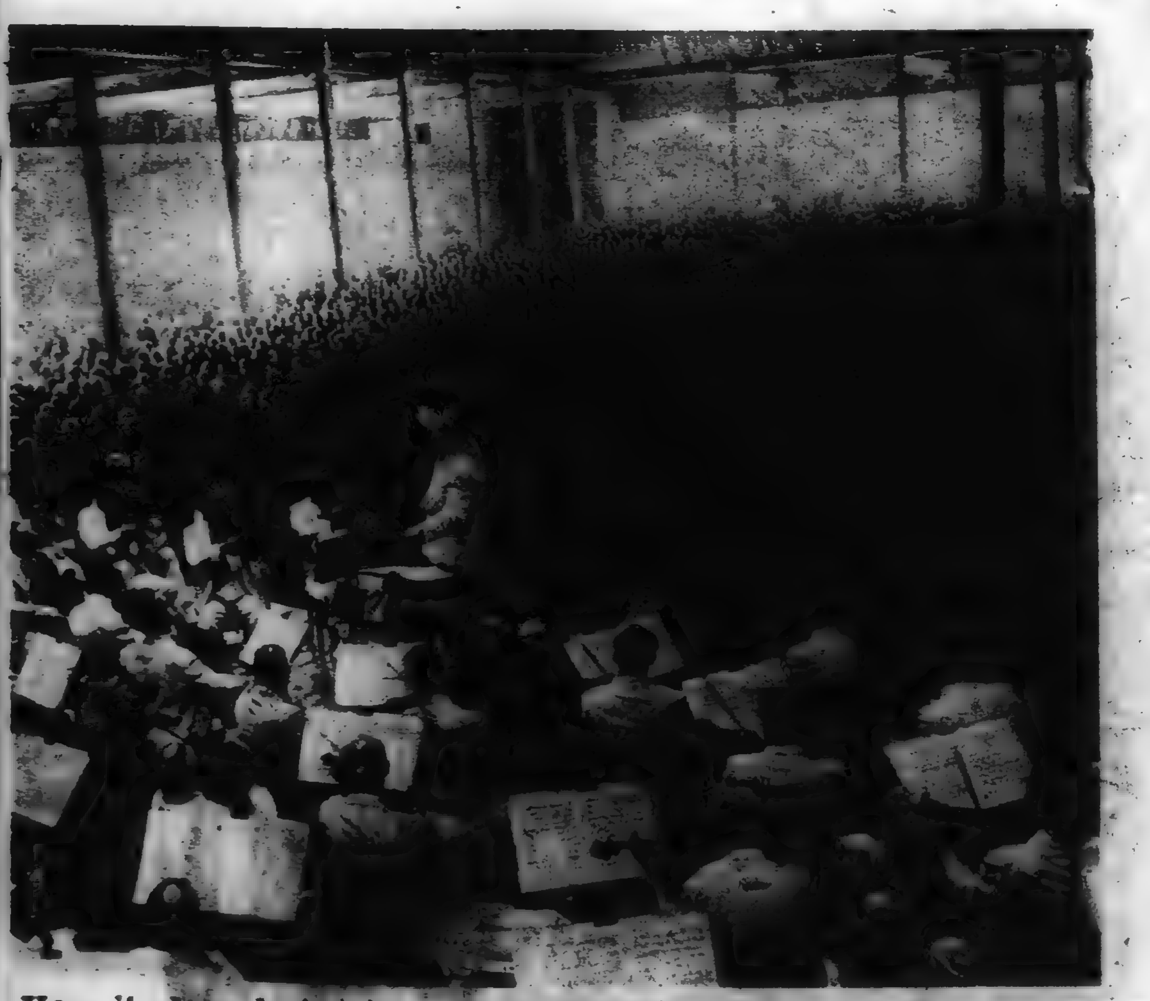
Pablo Casals, world-famous cellist, plays with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the UN.

In Russia the famous orchestra played Beethoven, Piston and Ravel.

June 3, 1960



In the latter year it included in its itinerary the Soviet Union and became the first American orchestra to play in that country. Now Far Eastern audiences are listening to the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its music director, Charles Munch. The permanent home of the orchestra is the Symphony Hall in Boston, which was inaugurated in 1900. Since that time the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been giving about 200 concerts a year. Each May, at the end of the winter season, Arthur Fiedler launches a season of the popular and well-loved Boston "Pops." This has been a tradition since 1885. When this season ends Fiedler takes the orchestra out of the Symphony Hall to a natural setting on the Charles River embankment for the Esplanade Concerts. Summer-night audiences made up of 20,000 Bostonians sit on the lawns to enjoy these free concerts. But the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not only for Bostonians. More countries are being reached by it. Its presence here is a great event.

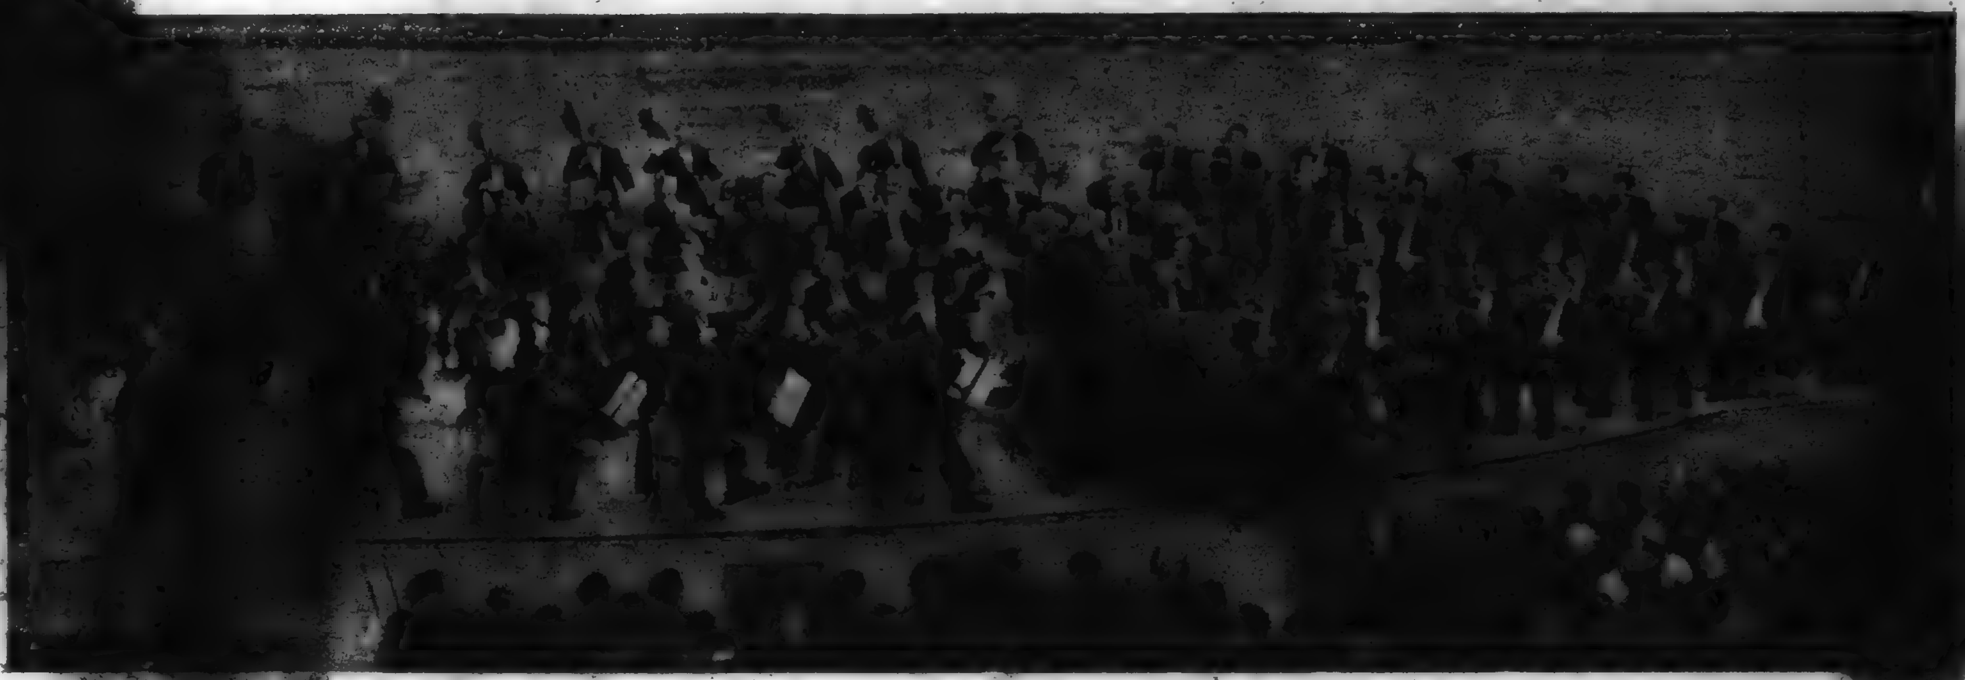


Here it plays during its annual Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood.

A large audience enjoys good music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the stars along the banks of the Charles River (top of page). There is no admission charge for the Esplanade Concerts. Above: The Symphony Hall in Boston. Right: A section of the audience listening to the Esplanade Concerts shows children listening as attentively as their elders.

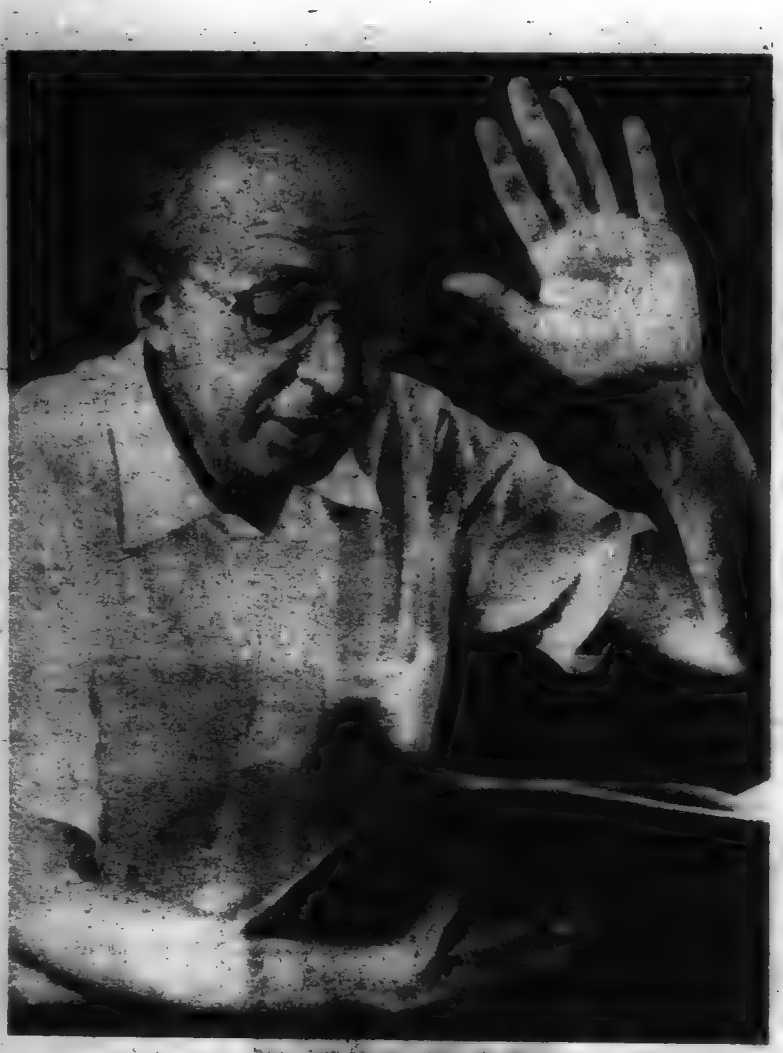
123

This Week (Manila Chronicle) May 22, 1960



A CONSTANT STRIVING FOR PERFECTION

This has placed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first row of American ensembles



AARON COPLAND, generally conceded the distinguished dean of American composers, will be one of three to conduct the BSO on its Manila visit.

103

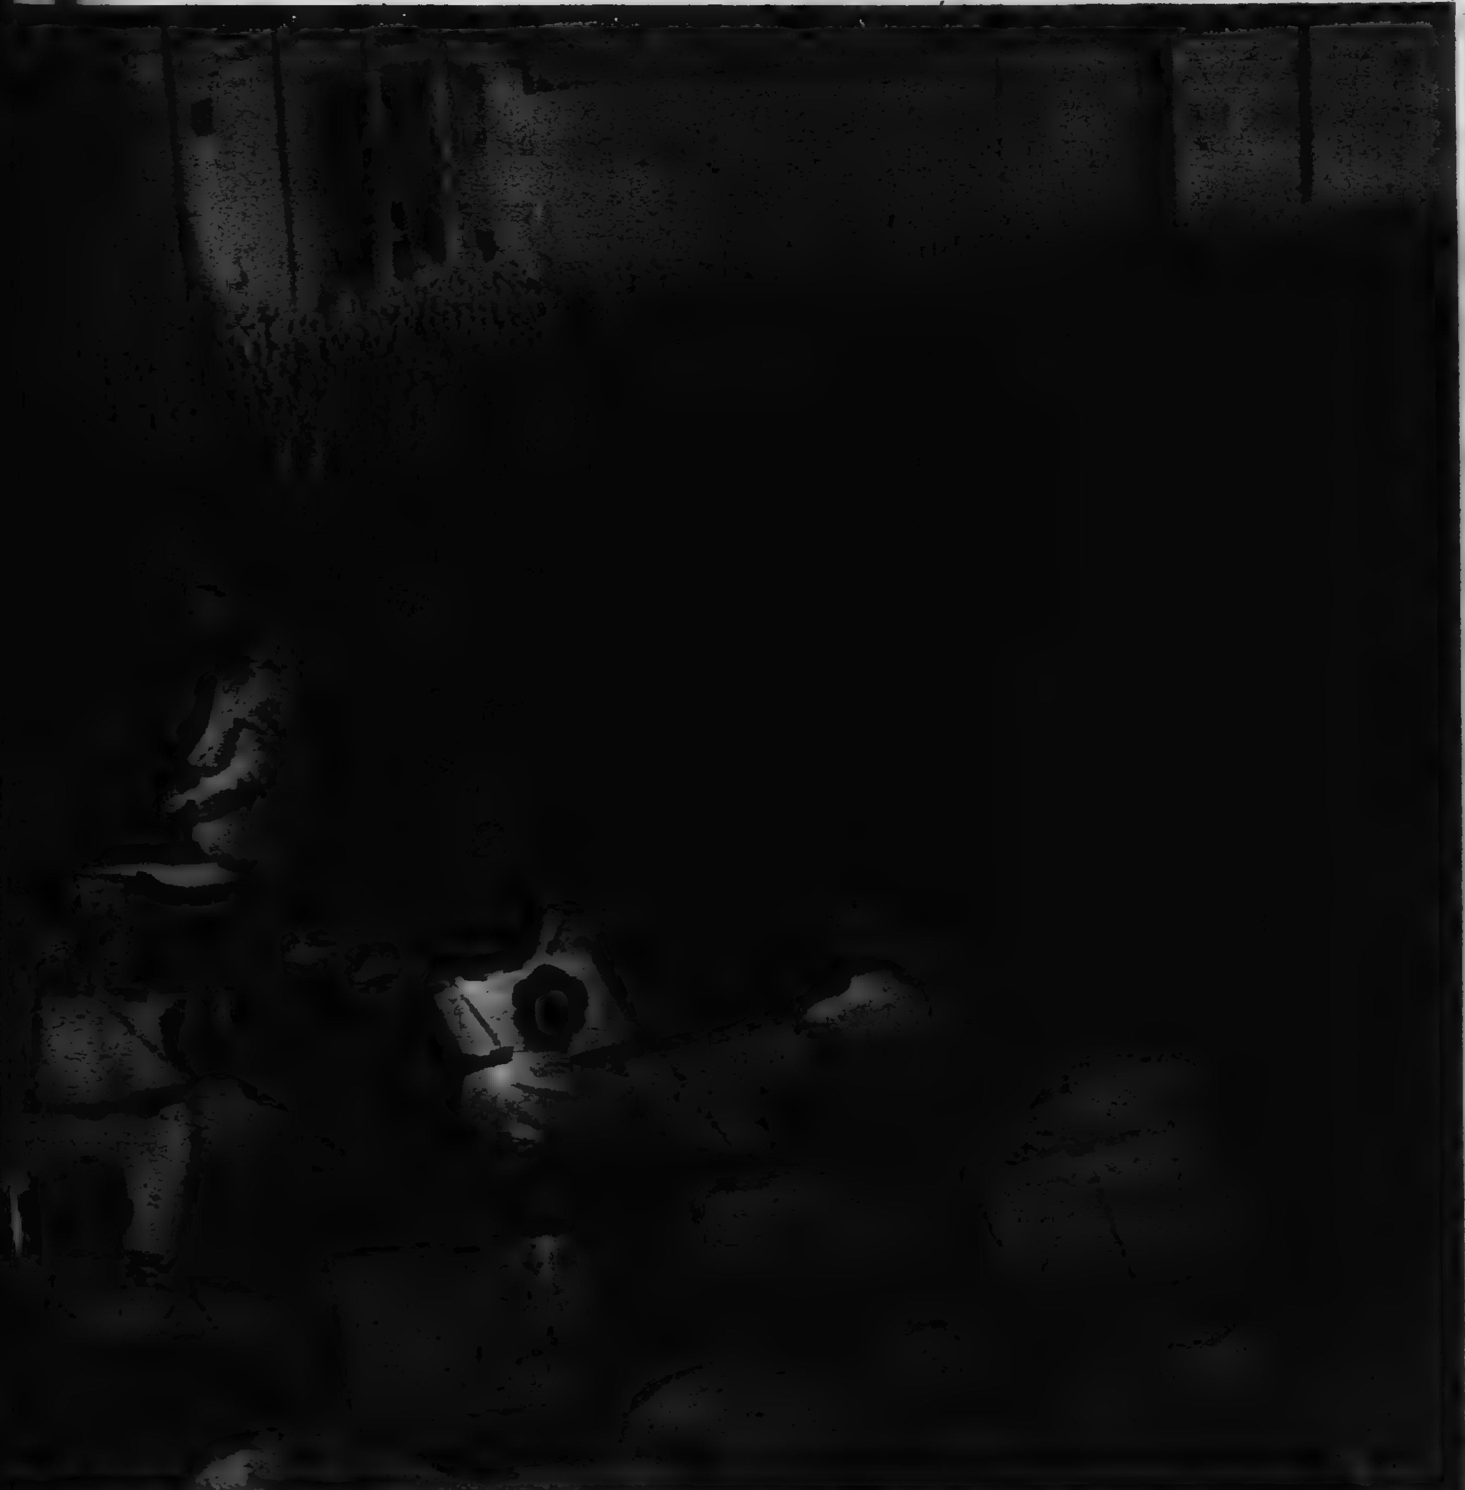
WHEN the ~~104~~-member Boston Symphony Orchestra performs at the Rizal Coliseum on the nights of June 1, 2, and 3, Manilans will be hearing an ensemble whose constant striving for perfection has placed it in the first row of American—and world—orchestras. It will play under the batons of Charles Munch, Serge Koussevitzky's successor as music director; Richard Burgin, concertmaster since 1920 and associate conductor; and Aaron Copland, distinguished dean of American composers.

The orchestra's tour, its third trip abroad since 1952, includes concerts in Japan, May 3-30; Australia, June 5-14; and New Zealand, June 16-18. The tour is being sponsored by the U.S. President's International Program for Cultural Presentations. The Manila performances will be under the management of Impresario Alfredo Lozano.

The current Far East tour of the Boston Symphony will not interfere with its 1960 season in Tanglewood. The group left the U.S. the last week of April, at the end of its 116-concert winter season. but it will be back home not only for the Berkshire Festival and Center but also for the outdoor Esplanade Concerts in Boston in July. Since 1929, summer-night audiences of up to 20,000 have sat on the lawns around Boston's Hatch Memorial Shell to enjoy these free concerts.

Meanwhile, Manilans have great expectation for the Boston Symphony. For Dr. Munch's [illegible], he says, "Our visit to the Far East is a great event in the long history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We are very proud to have been chosen to represent American musical culture."

CHILDREN and their parents gather on the banks of the Charles River for the famous Esplanade Concerts. These were first instituted in 1885.



DURING a rehearsal, Charles Munch, conductor of the BSO, checks a musical point with Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor and concert master since 1920. Munch and Burgin will each conduct a concert in Manila this June.

THE ORCHESTRA, under the direction of Charles Munch, plays for thousands of music lovers in the huge Music Shed during the annual Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

End

125

Science Shrinks Piles
New Way Without Surgery
Stops Itch—Relieves Pain

New York, N.Y. (Special)—For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the astonishing ability to shrink hemorrhoids, stop itching and relieve pain—without surgery.

In case after case, while gently and promptly relieving pain, actual reduction or shrinkage of hemorrhoids took place.

Most amazing of all-this improvement was maintained in cases where doctors' observations were continued over a period of many months.

In fact, results were so thorough that sufferers were able to make such astonishing statements as "Piles have ceased to be a problem!"

Among these sufferers were a wide variety of hemorrhoid conditions, some of them 10 to 20 years' standing.

The secret is a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne) — the discovery of a world-famous research institution. Already, Bio-Dyne is in wide use for healing injured tissue on all parts of the body.

The new healing substance is known under the name of Preparation H* and is on sale in all drug stores in ointment form.

*Reg. Phil. Pat. Office

FORMULA: ACTIVE INGREDIENTS: [illegible]

ARE YOU ANTI-SOCIAL without knowing it?

Why risk "isolating" yourself from friends and business associates when you can now eliminate offensive perspiration odor easily, pleasantly, with Odo-Ro-No Cream Deodorant! Odo-Ro-No dries at once, leaves a pleasant fragrance while actively checking perspiration odor all day long.

ODO-RO-NO CREAM DEODORANT

T. M. — Reg. Phil. Pat. Off.

SAFE LAXATIVE, VITAMIN-ENRICHED METRO CASTORIA with
TIKI-TIKI
MADE PLEASANT-TASTING FOR CHILDREN

FORMULA: [illegible] ounces (88.719 cc.) contains: [illegible], 1.11 gm., Pumpkin Seed [illegible] gm.; [illegible], 0.11 gm.; [illegible] Bicarbonate, 0.44 gm.; [illegible]

Boston's Music Men

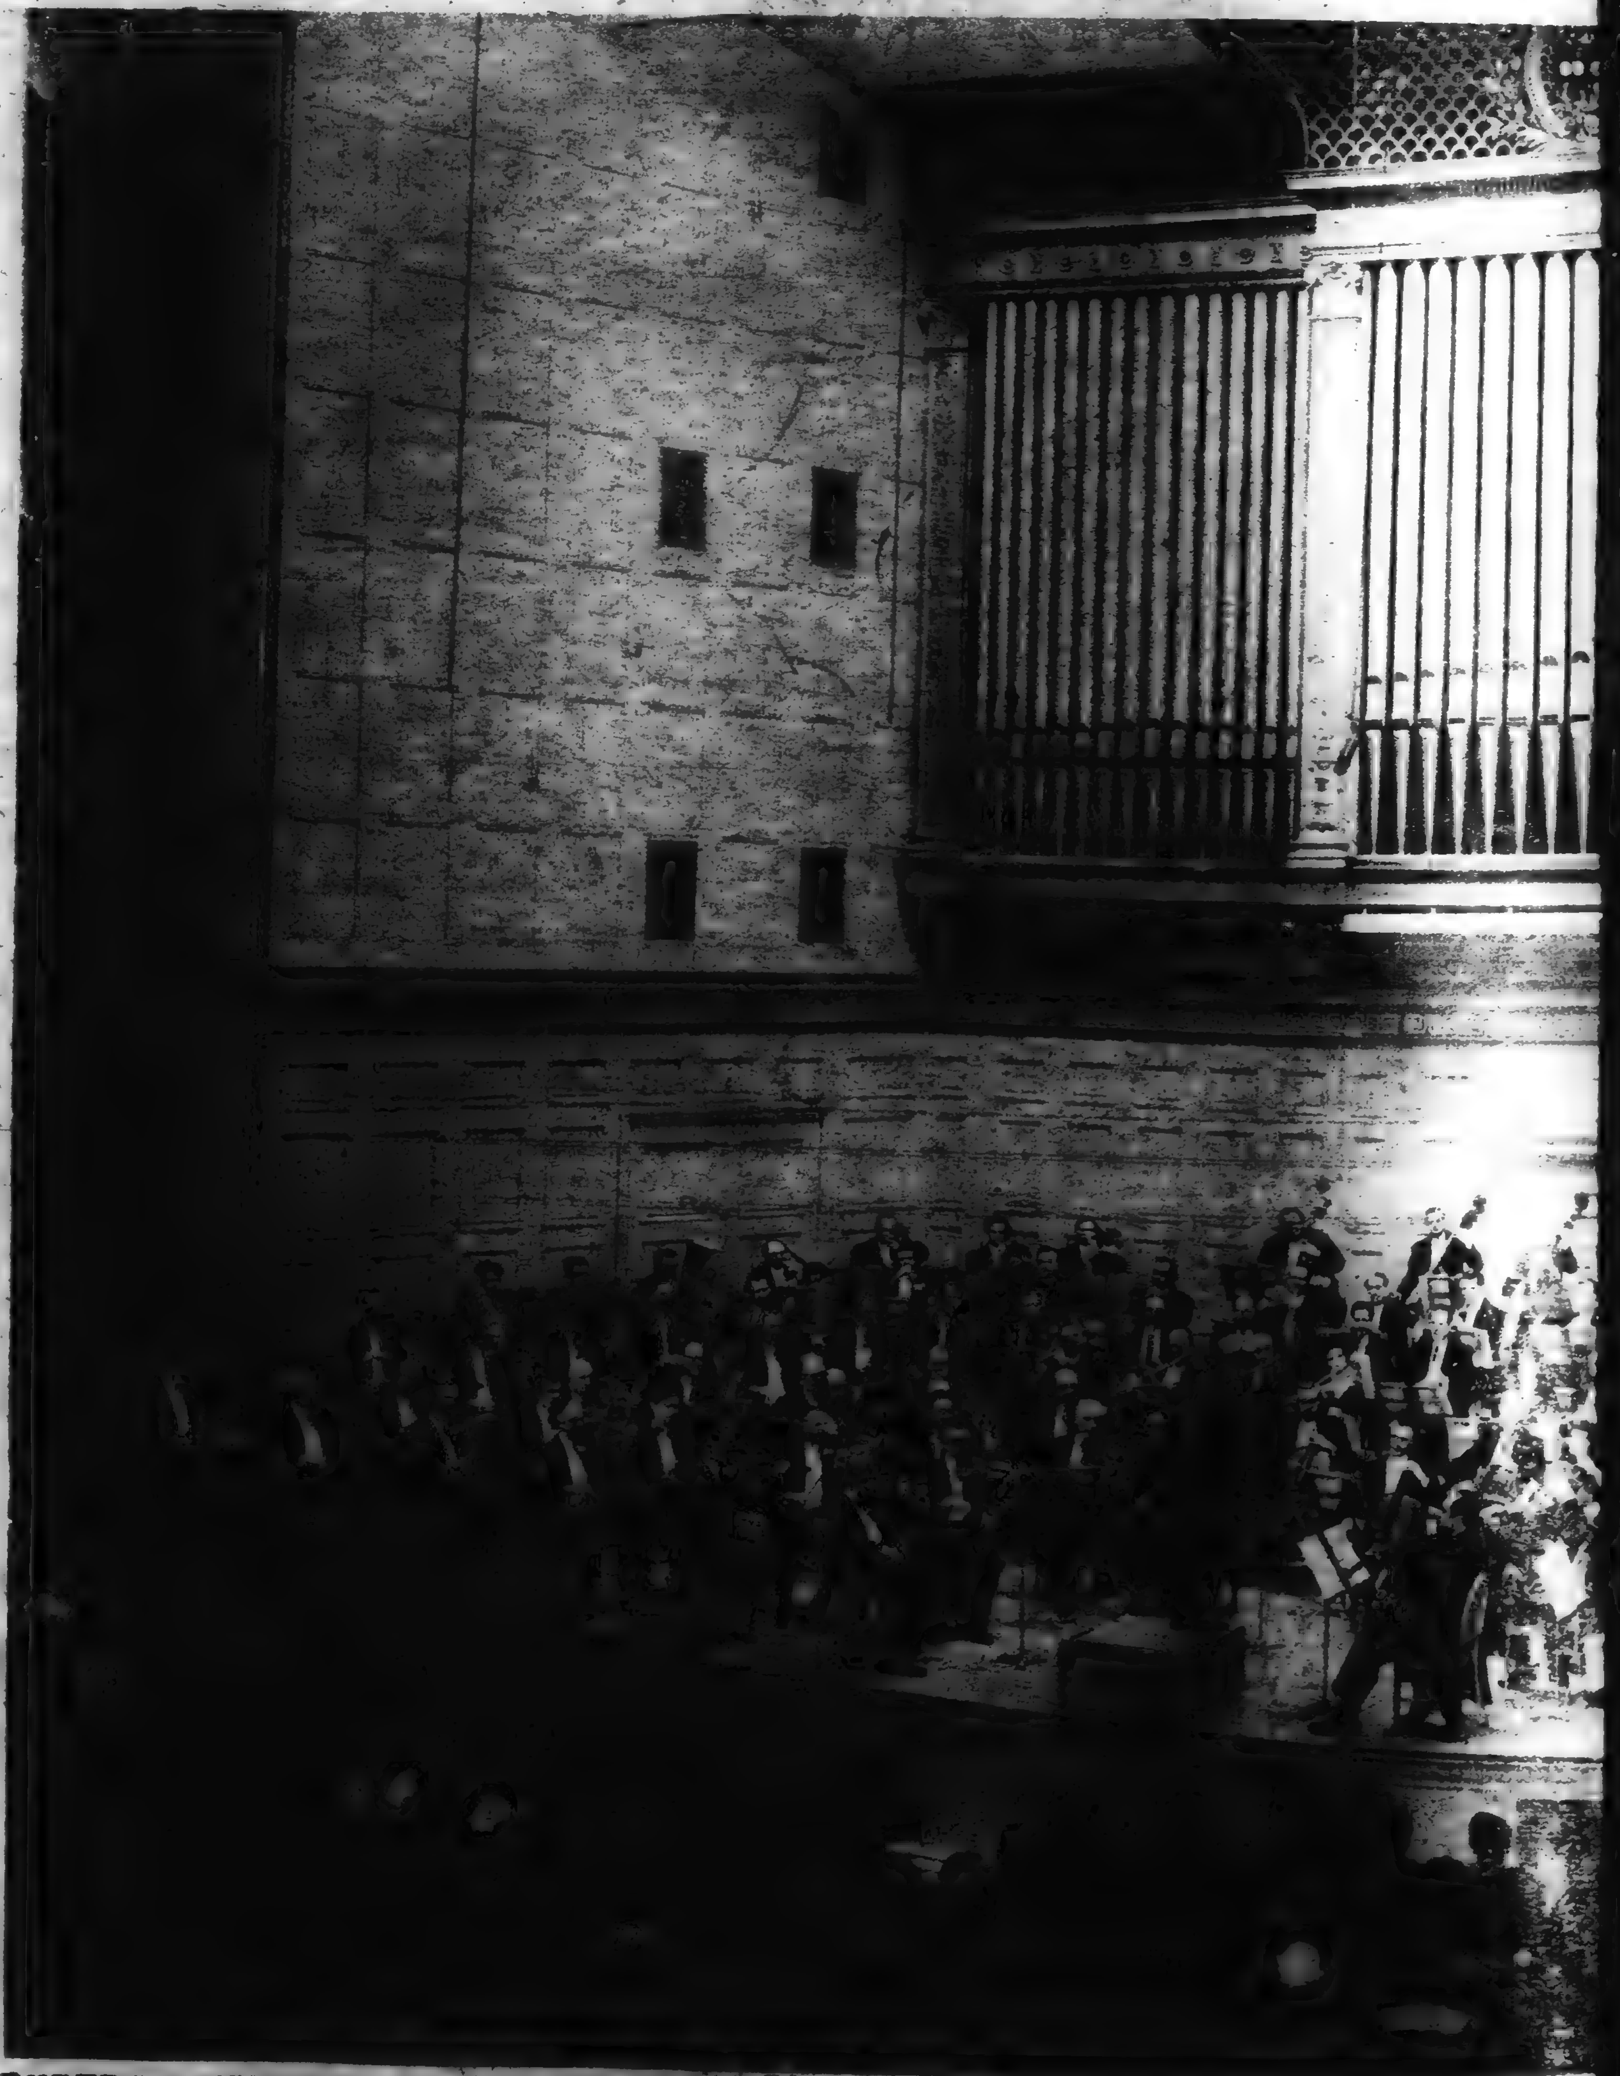
NEXT WEEK, on the first three evenings of June, Manilans will have the opportunity to hear one of the truly great music organizations of the world — the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The 104-member orchestra, which will play in the Rizal Memorial Stadium in Manila June 1, 2 and 3, has a long history. It starts back in the 1870's when a Vienna-educated Bostonian, Henry Lee Higginson, decided to create a symphony orchestra for his city.

Higginson assembled the finest musicians available in the United States [illegible] ope. [illegible] the baton of a young German conductor, George [illegible], the Boston Symphony Orchestra made its debut in the Boston Music Hall on October 22, 1881.

The orchestra became world-famous during the 25 years that Serge Koussevitzky was music director and conductor. When Koussevitzky took over the baton of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1924 he brought with him a knowledge of the European repertoire, plus a strong desire to encourage American composers. The orchestra has long been noted [illegible] performance of American works and, throughout its history, has played more modern music than most major symphonies. To mark its [illegible] anniversary, the Boston Symphony commissioned 15 new works by composers all over the world, awarding $2,000 grants to each.

Koussevitzky's 25 years as conductor was by far the longest period of time, on the podium of any of the orchestra's 10 conductors. He retired in 1948. Following his death in 1951, he was buried in Lenox, Massachusetts



EXPERT MUSICIANS play at their permanent home, Symphony Hall in Boston. The orchestra consists of 101 men and three women who are among the highest paid orches-

May 29, 1960

Men in Manila

… long been noted
…formance of Amer-
… and, throughout
… has played more
…sic than most ma-
…ies. To mark its
…ary, the Boston
… commissioned 15
… by composers all
… world, awarding
…nts to each.
…itzky's 25 years as
… was by far the
…iod of time, on the
…any of the orches-
…nductors. He re-
…48. Following his
…51, he was buried
… Massachusetts

near Tanglewood, site of the orchestra's summer music festival and school.

Annual festival

It is at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts, that the orchestra holds its annual Berkshire Festival in July and August. Last year this music festival attracted 182,000 visitors. Some 400 students attended the six-weeks' Berkshire Music School, learning under leading members of the orchestra, led by Music Director Charles Munch and famed American composer Aaron Copland.

The regular concert season starts in October each year, with the orchestra playing in and around Boston and New York. Since 1900, when the orchestra's permanent home, Symphony Hall, was opened, the Boston Symphony has been giving some 200 concerts a year.

In addition, the orchestra has at least one concert tour through the South and Midwest areas of the United States. It has played concert tours twice in Europe since 1952, and, in 1956, was the first American symphony to play in the Soviet Union.

MUSIC DIRECTOR Charles Munch will be one of three conductors in Manila concerts.

The orchestra consists of 101 men and three women: 34 violins, 12 violas, 12 cellos, 8 basses, 3 flutes, 1 piccolo, 3 oboes, 1 English horn, 3 clarinets, 1 bass clarinet, 3 bassoons, 1 contra bassoon, 6 horns, 4 trumphets, 4 trombones, 1 tuba, 2 timpani, 3 percussion, 2 harps (first harpist being also pianist).

Annual budget

The approximate annual operating budget of the orchestra is $2,000,000, of which approximately 90% is earned by ticket sales, revenue from recordings, radio, television, and broadcasting fees. Probably no other major orchestra in the United States earns such a large percentage of its budget through operations. Inasmuch as it receives no government subsidy for its activities in the United States, it must supplement its earned income by private means. A volunteer organization of civic-minded Bostonians known as The Friends of The Boston Symphony Orchestra makes up the greater part of the annual deficit: in 1958-59 alone it contributed $240,000.

Recordings of this famous orchestra are in steady demand. Since its first recording in Camden, New Jersey in October 1917 and prior to April 1956, more than 30 million records of over 500 works of the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops, its subsidiary, have been made and sold. Since that date, the Boston Symphony alone has recorded more than 50 works.

Members of the Boston Symphony are perhaps the highest-paid orchestral musicians in the world. Certainly, they enjoy about the highest prestige. And, they are no doubt the busiest musicians in the world.

CONTINUED NEXT PAGE

…men and three wom-
…highest paid orches-

…tral musicians in the world. Their activities include radio and TV shows, regular concerts in U.S. and tours around the world.

Enchanting Fragrance

Tweed

LOTION 72°
& COLOGNE

LENTHERIC NEW YORK

PHILIPPINE INDUSTRIAL EXPORT ASSOCIATES, INC.
…SOLANO ST. MANILA … 3-62-94 …

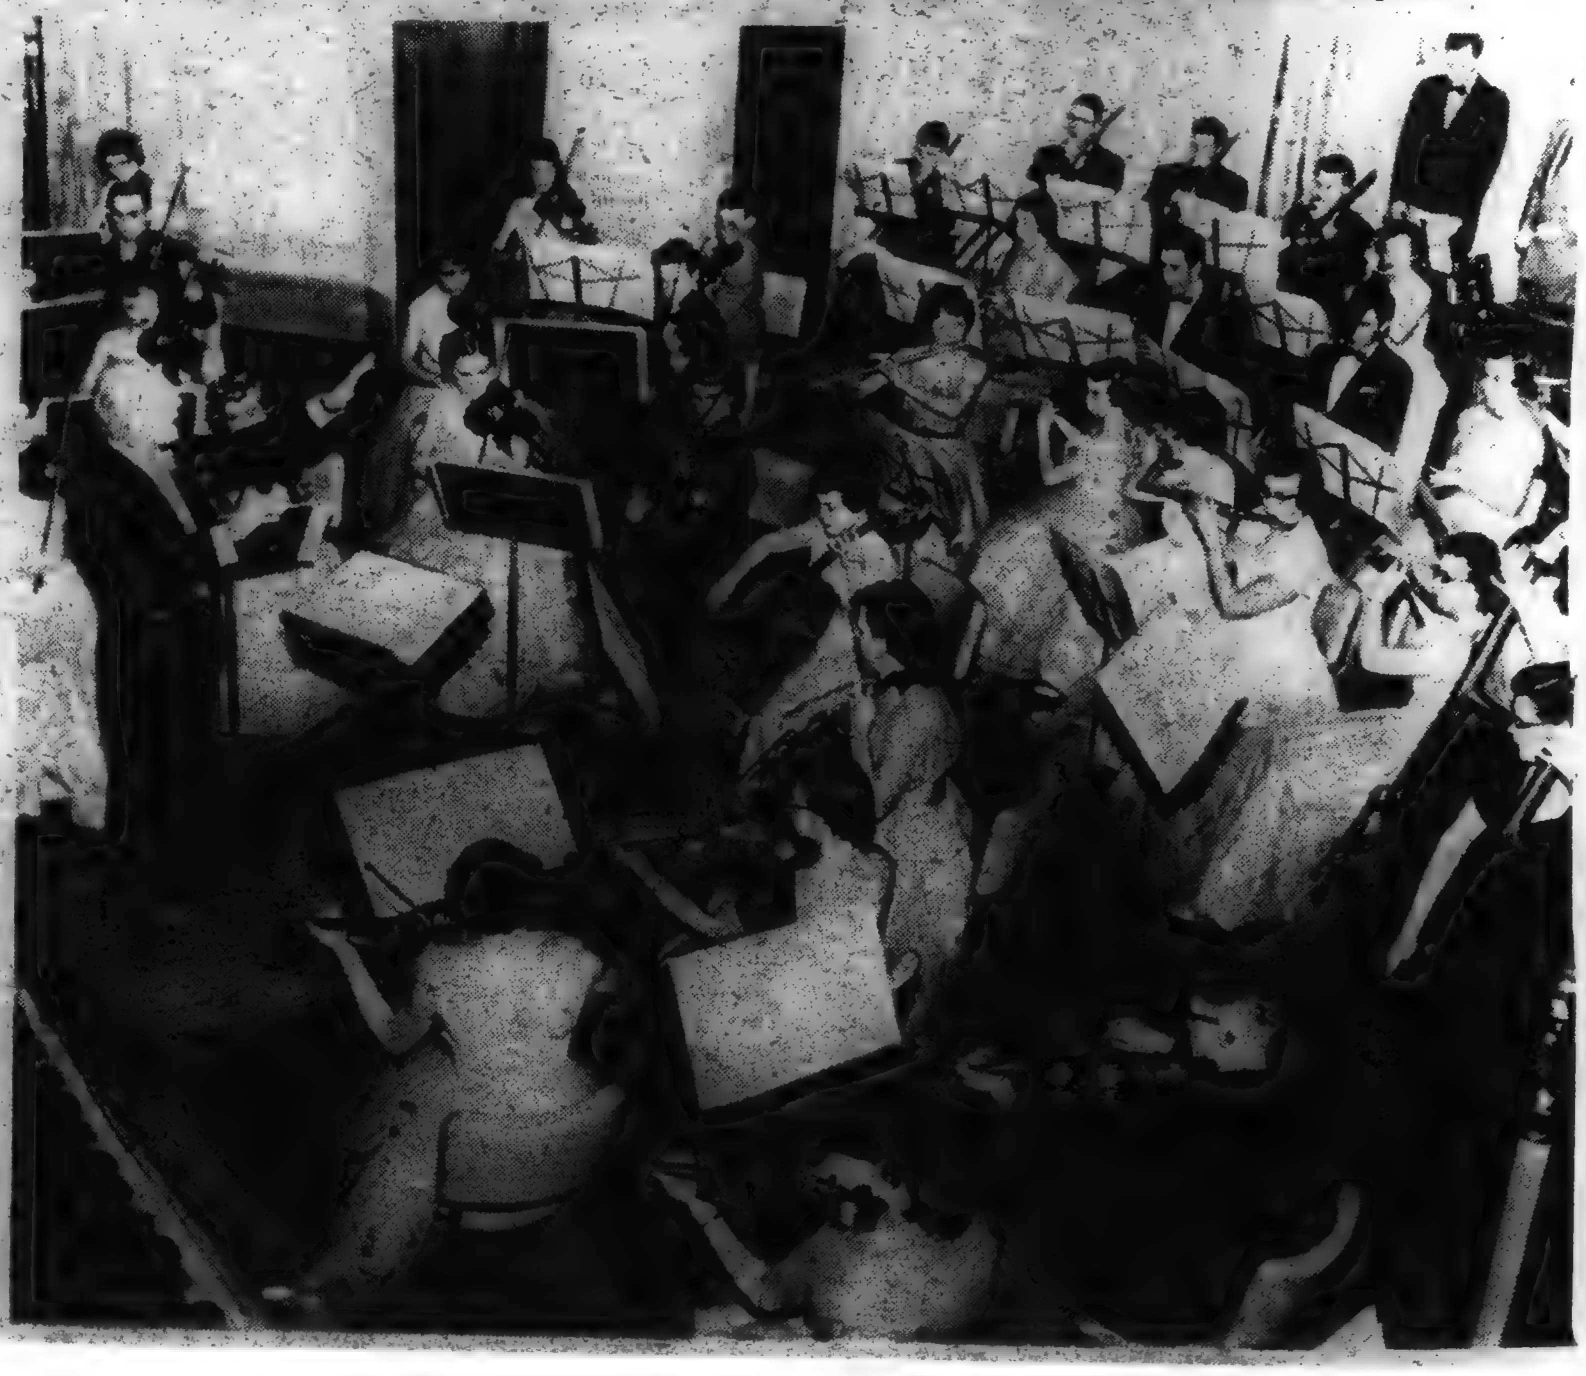
…y 29, 1960

Philippines Herald Magazine Section
May 28, 1960

Boston's Great Musical

MULTI-MILLION-DOLLAR record industry in U.S. and widespread taste for serious music complement each other.

YOUTH Symphony orchestra of the Pacific Northwest, directed by Francis Aranyi, is typical of groups motivated by the enthusiasm for serious music shown by American youth.



128

BOSTON Symphony orchestra performs before as many as 20,000 people at a time during its annual, free Esplanade Concerts outdoors in Boston.

CHARLES MUNCH, distinguished conductor of Boston Symphony orchestra, has been the music director of that famous group for the past 14 years.

PLAYING MUSICAL instruments close enough for kids to get a good look is part of the thousands of youth concerts held all over the U.S. each year.

Institution

THOUSANDS of Manilans will crowd Rizal Memorial Coliseum the first three nights of June to hear the world-famous Boston Symphony orchestra. But the great, swelling sounds of the 104-piece orchestra are more than just beautifully performed music—they are symbolic of the constantly deepening cultural life of the United States.

The Boston orchestra itself is an institution, now in its 79th season. Playing more than 200 concerts a year, its regular season begins in October and runs through April with 116 performances. In May and June, the orchestra plays its beloved "pops" concerts in elegant Symphony Hall. In July, it performs its free, outdoor Esplanade Concerts before as many as 20,000 people at a time. In July and August, its summer school, the Berkshire Music Center, draws students from many countries and its Berkshire Music Festival attracts thousands of music lovers.

The orchestra's players and conductors are at the peak of their profession. Charles Munch, music director since 1949, previously had captured the most prized conducting post in France — directorship of the "Societe des Concerts." He was given the professorship of conducting at the Paris conservatory when his own conducting career was only five years old.

Munch will join Aaron Copland, distinguished dean of American 4000.
composers, and Richard Burgin, the Boston's concertmaster for 40 years and associate conductor in conducting the Manila concerts.

The Boston Symphony orchestra is known and respected around the world. Its current trip, — it is taking the entire musical group and seven tons of baggage to Japan, Taiwan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand — is its third trip abroad since 1952.

What of the little-publicized side of the American culture that makes such an orchestra possible?

Before 1920, performance of

continued next page

129

FamedBostonSymphony Orchestra To Play Here

Philippines Herald 17 MAY 1960

The Boston Symphony orchestra, for the first time in its 80-year history, [illegible] music to the peoples of the Far East next month.

The BSO is coming to Manila for concerts on June 1, 2 and 3 at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. It will be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Its forthcoming Far East tour is subsidized in part by the United States government.

This music group, in the best tradition of great orchestras, has the reputation of being able to almost earn enough to make both ends meet.

But, according to its manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., it never quite accomplishes this and it depends for some of its expenses on public contributions principally, funds raised by the volunteer organization known as the Friends of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The BSO, however, has certainly gone a far way towards independence from the days of its founder, Col. Henry Lee Higginson, who shouldered its yearly deficits from its inception to 1919 when he retired to die a year later. and of Higginson's successor, Ernest Dane, who is known to have contributed $100,000 in one year to the group.

During its 1958-59 season, the BSO made 90 per cent of its budget through ticket sales, revenue from recordings, radio, television and broadcasting fees. It was the highest percentage of the budget earned through operations by a major orchestra in the United States, and, in a field [illegible] earnings of 40-50 per cent are not unusual, certainly a remarkable feat.

Add th[illegible] that the BSO receives [illegible] governmental subsidy whatever for its [illegible] the United States, and the measure of financial stability enjoyed by the group becomes one worthy of note, cultural groups seldom being known for their business sense.

The BSO, however, has not yet reached that point when it will never have to worry about where the expenses for its next concert are coming from. Its earnings going mostly to salaries for the musicians, the orchestra itself is not a solvent entity. As its manager, Perry, once pointed out, "To mount a BSO concert costs $8,500. Selling one out, ordinarily brings $7,100. Multiply the difference by 220, the number of concerts given in a year, and the operating deficit is the result."

But operating deficits are in the tradition of great orchestras. "We are a public service institution," says Perry. "Our duty is to give music to people who need music, of whom there are more and more, and to keep it good. . . . ."

Tickets to the BSO concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Music season starts off with Boston Symphony treat

Manila Times 28 MAY 1960

A major cultural importation is on the way to Manila, bringing a commodity without price — some of the greatest music ever produced by Western civilization. And playing that music will be one of the world's great orchestras, the Boston Symphony.

The orchestra, observing its 80th season with a Far Eastern tour, is coming here from Japan, where it was widely acclaimed both for its reputation and its style.

Manila music lovers will have the added pleasure of comparing it with another great orchestra, the Vienna Philharmonic, which performed here last October. As with the European organization, the American orchestra is being presented by impresario Alfredo Lozano, with the cooperation of the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

The three performances here of the Boston Symphony, on June 1, 2, and 3, may well be the top musical event in this country in 1960, as the engagement of the Vienna Philharmonic was in 1959.

European composers of the classical, romantic and modern schools, and contemporary American musicians, make up the program of the Boston Symphony here. To Mr. Lozano and others who have made this event possible, our congratulations.

Leading [illegible]mposers to be featured [illegible] concert; program released

[illegible] 10 leading composers of the classical, [illegible]mantic, modern and contemporary [illegible] will feature the three-night engag[illegible] in Manila of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Three top conductors, including Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, will lead the orchestra.

Burgin wields the baton at the opening concert on June 1, at the Rizal Memorial Stadium. The stadium has been equipped with an acoustical stage to set off the concerts to advantage.

Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, will lead the orchestra on June 2. The third and last performance, on June 3, will have the BSO director, Charles Munch, in the conductor's role.

The complete program follows: June 1 — Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion, Kirchner; Adagio from the "Tenth Symphony," Mahler; Symphony No. 5, Tschaikovsky.

June 2 — Fantasias for Strings, Purcell; First Symphony, Copland; Symphony No. 95, Haydn; Orchestra Suite from the Opera, "The Tender Land" — Copland.

June 3 — Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," Beethoven; Symphony No. 6, Piston; Daphnia and Chloe, Suite No. 2, Ravel.

Tickets to these three concerts which will all be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15 p.m., are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

BSO season on June 1, 2, 3

Daily Mirror

The arrival here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra end of this month, will give Philippine audiences an opportunity not enjoyed even by many residents of Boston because of the difficulty of obtaining tickets to a regular BSO season concert. BSO winter performances in Boston's Symphony Hall are always sold out well in advance and tickets are bought by the entire season.

It is for this reason that the BSO also schedules out-of-season concerts to give many more an opportunity to attend its concerts. These concerts are held in Tanglewood, in the Berkshire hills in Massachusetts, where it has a six-week season in July and August, in summer on the east bank of the Charles River at the foot of the famed Beacon Hill ,and on occasional tours of the country.

Scheduled to be presented in the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3, by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA), the BSO holds a record in that for a full half-century now, it has effortlessly and regularly sold out its season series tickets ahead of the dates of the concerts.

Now performing in Japan, the BSO is currently on its first tour of the Far East. Its series of three concerts in Manila will be conducted by Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland and Charles Munch, respectively.

Back in Boston they have called attendance at the BSO a "ritual," with the concert-goers always attending an entire series of performances and never shopping for tickets, concert by concert. It is a ritual, however, according to John M. Conly in an article in High Fidelity Magazine, that "derives from a very vital rite, the knowledgeable enjoyment of music, hard to perform without some thousands of trained participants."

Tickets to the performances are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

130

Concert program released

Daily Mirror
12 MAY 1960

Outstanding orchestral works by Tschaikovsky, Mahler and Leon Kirchner will be featured in the opening night concert on June 1 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Richard Burgin, conducting.

The evening's program will open with Kirchner's "Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion," followed by a composition by Gustav Mahler, "Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous)," then Tschaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Op. 64."

The complete program for the evening follows: I. Kirchner — Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion. II. Mahler—Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous).

Intermission — III. Tschaikovsky — Symphony No. 5, in E Minor Op. 64. Andante: Allegro con anima. Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza. Valse: Allegro moderato. Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace.

Tickets to the three concerts scheduled on June 1, 2, and 3 at 8:15 p.m. are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

CULTURAL EVENT

Manila Times

Boston Symphony promises a wide, varied repertoire

9 MAY 1960

The wide repertoire of the distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra should make it ready to comply with the varied audience demands always expected to crop up on a tour of foreign countries, such as it is embarking on this season.

The group, which will be making its first trip to the Orient and Australia, is scheduled to arrive in Manila late this month of May for a series of three concerts to be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy. The Manila concerts are set for 8:15 p.m. June 1, 2 and 3, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

The conductor Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, also a noted contemporary composer, and Charles Munich, music director of the BSO since 1946, will take turns at the podium. Burgin will conduct on June 1, Copland on June 2 and Munch will lead its farewell Manila concert.

Early leaning heavily on German music, a more varied repertory has distinguished the Boston Symphony during the latter half of its 80-season history. Its first conductor being the German George Henschel and its first musicians including many Germans, it was inevitable that the music the Boston Symphony would make at the start of its career, would be cast in the German mold.

But a welcome and inevitable change in the form of a new and more universal repertoire came after

Turn to 19-A

World War I, and with Serge Koussevitsky taking the orchestra over in 1924 and for 25 years thereafter, the BSO began widening its store of concertos, symphonies and other musical works.

Today the repertoire of the Boston group reads like a complete listing of all the great compositions the world has known and it likewise includes master pieces contemporary as well as classic, the premiere performances for which are credited to it.

Tickets [illegible] concerts are now [illegible] the Botica Boie.

Works By Tschaikovsky, Mahler And Kirchner Included In Boston Symphony Orchestra Repertoire

Philippines Herald
17 MAY 1960

Works by Tschaikovsky, Mahler, and Leon Kirchner are included in the June 1 concert repertoire of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. Richard Burgin will handle the baton.

The evening's program will open with Kirchner's "Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion," a short one-movement work divided into four sections, followed by a composition of Gustav Mahler, "Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous)," then topped by piece de resistance, Tschaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Op. 64."

Toccata [illegible] bit contemporary [illegible] written by Leon Kirchner, and first performed [illegible] 1956 in San Francisco. Kirchner was born in Brooklyn (the same birthplace as Aaron Copland, [illegible]

The "Adagio from the Tenth Symphony" of Mahler was published 13 years after the composer's death in 1911. The posthumous work portrays the last thoughts of Mahler, its basic sentiment being the certainty of death, the contempt of death, as the widow puts it.

The program's main piece, The Fifth Symphony of Tschaikovsky, was for some time a controversial work with the composer himself having a "slight" opinion of his composition. Over the years, all the critics, the composer included, have revised their opinions and music audiences everywhere have learned to love the symphony.

THE DAILY MIRROR, APRIL 25, 1960

Boston Symphony schedules three dates

June 1, 2 and 3 are the dates set for the performances here of the 104-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra, due to embark soon on its first tour of the Far East.

The three concerts, to be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:30 in the evening, will be a presentation of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Keenly anticipated by Philippine concert-goers, the occasion will bring to Manila one of America's loved institutions, the Boston Symphony which is celebrating its 80th concert season this year. Organized back in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, a Bostonian who got his musical education in Vienna, the group was America's first "permanent" orchestra devoted solely toward ideal performances of symphonic music. This was something unknown to America until the Boston's first conductor, George Henschel, gave its inaugural concert, Oct. 22, 1881.

The visiting Boston Symphony will be the fourth of the world's major orchestras to come to Manila. Three other famous groups which have held concerts in the city are the Symphony of the Air, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and the Vienna Philharmonic. Big crowd drawers, all three were also presented by Lozano and still stand out in the memory of Manila concert-goers for their outstanding performances.

Starting, by tradition, on the first Friday of October, the winter season for the Boston group consists of 30 weeks. The orchestra gives a total of 116 concerts during the season, including some rehearsals which are open to the public and a score of performances held outside Boston.

Their forthcoming Far East tour will be the first in this part of the world. They have performed in European capitals and was the first Western orchestra to give concerts in Leningrad and Moscow.

Tickets will be placed on sale at the Botica Boie on Wednesday, April 27.

Varied BSO repertory to thrill music lovers

Manila Chronicle
9 MAY 1960

The wide repertoire of the distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra should make it ready to comply with the varied audience demands always expected to crop up on a tour of foreign countries, such as it is embarking on this season.

The group, which will be making its first trip to the Orient and Australia, is scheduled to arrive in Manila late this month for a series of three concerts to be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy. The Manila concerts are set for 8:15 p.m. June 1, 2 and 3, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

The conductors Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, also a noted contemporary composer, and Charles Munch, music director of the BSO since 1946, will take turns at the podium. Burgin will conduct on June 1, Copland on June 2 and Munch will lead its farewell Manila concert.

Leaning heavily on German music earlier, a more varied repertory has distinguished the Boston Symphony during the latter half of its 80-season history. Its first conductor being the German George Henschel and its first musicians including many Germans, it was inevitable that the music the Boston Symphony would make at the start of its career, would be cast in the German mold.

But a welcome and inevitable change in the form of a new and more universal repertoire came after World War I, and with Serge Koussevitzky taking the orchestra over in 1924 and for 25 years thereafter, the BSO began widening its store of concertos, symphonies and other musical works.

Today the repertoire of the Boston group reads like a complete listing of all the great compositions the world has known and it likewise includes masterpieces contemporary as well as classic, the premiere performances for which are credited to it.

Tickets to the three concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

(31

SMALL TALK Manila Times 22 MAY 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra asked for numbers to keep audience awake

By Marcia Westly

—LAST NIGHT... at the reception held by the Army, Naval and Air Attaches, on the occasion of United States Armed Forces Day, the crowd seemed somewhat thinner than usual—not from any lack of enthusiasm for the occasion but from the blast-furnace heat which has finally slowed down Manila's party-going pace. Main topics of conversation at any party these days are: the heat, the virtues of different brands of air-conditioners ("does yours go THUNK?") the Bayanihan dancers ("lovely-lovely") sinus trouble ("oh my aching head") and the humidity ("it's worse in Hongkong") Even the enthusiasm for the imminent arrival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is tempered by the temperature. But music lovers are confident that the programming will be worth the effort of attending; unlike the last visit of a symphony orchestra when the rather banal selections disappointed the audience. This time, Copland should keep 'em awake!

Sked Program Of BSO On June 1

Evening News

Outstanding orchestral works of Tschaikovsky, Mahler and Leon Kirchner will be featured in the opening night concert on June 1 at the Rizal Memorial coliseum of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Richard Burgin conducting.

The evening's program will open with Kirchner's "Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion," a short [illegible] movement work divided into four sections, followed [illegible] composition of Gustav Mahler, "Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous)," with as the piece de resistance. Tschaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Op. 64,"

13 MAY 1960

Manila Times

Performances of Boston orchestra set

25 APR 1960

June 1, 2 and 3 are the dates set for the performances here of the 104-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra, due to embark soon on its first tour of the Far East.

The three concerts, to be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:30 in the evening, will be a presentation of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Keenly anticipated by Philippine concert-goers, the occasion will bring to Manila one of America's loved institutions, the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is celebrating its 80th concert season this year. Organized back in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, a Bostonian who got his musical education in Vienna, the group was America's first "permanent" orchestra devoted solely toward ideal performances of symphonic music. This was something unknown to America until the Boston's first conductor, George Henschel, gave its inaugural concert, Oct. 22, 1881.

The visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the fourth of the world's major orchestras to come to Manila. Three other famous groups which have held concerts in the city are the Symphony of the Air, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and the Vienna Philharmonic. Big crowd drawers, all three were also presented by Lozano and still stand out in the memory of Manila concertgoers for their outstanding performances.

Starting, by tradition, on the first Friday of October, the winter season for the Boston group consists of 30 weeks. The orchestra gives a total of 116 concerts during the season, including some rehearsals which are open to the public and a score of performances held outside Boston.

Their forthcoming Far East tour will be the first in this part of the world. They have performed in European capitals and was the first Western orchestra to give concerts in Leningrad and Moscow.

Tickets will be placed on sale at the Botica Boie on Wednesday, April 27.

Beethoven To Open BSO Concert June 3

MB 18 May 60

An interesting program that includes a well-known symphony by Beethoven, a modern masterpiece by Piston and a rousing choreographic work by Ravel will be the fare in store for concert-goers on June 3, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by its music director Charles Munch, holds its farewell performance here, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

The BSO will be presented in Manila in a series of three concerts, on June 1, 2 and 3, by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy.

The concert on June [illegible] will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, otherwise known as the Eroica, to be followed by Symphony No. 6 in four movements by the American composer Walter Piston, to close with Ravel's famous choreographic symphony in three parts, Daphnis et Chloe, suite No. 2, a work commissioned by the Ballet Russe.

The Eroica, originally dedicated to Napoleon before the composer, angered at the self-styled Emperor's excessive, ruthless ambition, had torn up the dedication and simply inscribed it "to the memory of a Great Man," was written by Beethoven who was never more completely, more eruptively revolutionary. This was composed during the first triumphant years of the French Republic.

Piston's Sixth Symphony was commissioned by the BSO the Koussevitsky Music Foundation for the group's anniversary season. Piston, born in Maine, 60 years ago, was to write the piece for an orchestra that he had grown up with and knew intimately. The first movement, in sonata form, is flowing, expressive; the second, light and fast; the third, a serene adagio; the fourth an energetic finale with two contrasting themes.

Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe, tells the story of the love, tribulations and final union of a shpherd and a shepherdess, based on a document of ancient Greece. The second suite, where Daphnis is reunited with Chloe, includes, wild, bacchanalian music that ends in joyous tumult. A vast musical fresco, which achieves symphonic homogeniety of style through a strict tonal plan, the piece, originally composed as a complete [illegible] has enjoyed a lusty [illegible] the concert [illegible]

Tickets to the three concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Philippines Herald Monday, May 9, 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Meets Varied Demands Of Far East Audience With Wide Repertoire

The Boston Symphony orchestra has a wide repertoire that makes it ready to comply with the varied demands of audiences in different parts of the Far East where the orchestra is going on a tour this season.

The group, which will be making its first trip to the Orient and Australia, is scheduled to arrive in Manila late this month for a series of three concerts to be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

The Manila concerts are set for 8:15 p.m. of June 1, 2 and 3, at the Rizal Memorial coliseum.

The conductors, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, also a noted contemporary composer, and Charles Munch, music director of the BSO since 1946, will take turns at the podium. Mr. Burgin will conduct on June 1, Mr. Copland on June 2 and Mr. Munch will lead its farewell Manila concert.

Early leaning heavily on German music, a more varied repertory has distinguished the Boston Symphony during the latter half of its 80-season history. Its first conductor being the German George Henschel and its first musicians including many Germans, it was inevitable that the music the Boston Symphony would make at the start of its career, would be cast in the German mold.

But a welcome and inevitable change in the form of a new and more universal repertoire came after World War I, and with Serge Kousevitzky taking the orchestra over in 1924 and for 25 years thereafter, the BSO began widening its store of concertos, symphonies and other musical works.

Today the repertoire of the Boston group reads like a complete listing of all the the great compositions the world has known and it likewise includes masterpieces contemporary as well as classic, the premiere performances for which are credited to it.

Tickets to the 3 concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Manila Bulletin 9 MAY

Boston Symphony Orchestra Expected Here Late This Month

The wide repertoire of the distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra should make it ready to comply with the varied audience demands always expected to crop up on a tour of foreign countries, such as it is embarking on this season.

The group, which will be making its first trip to the Orient and Australia, is scheduled to arrive in Manila late this month of May for a series of three concerts to be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy. The Manila concerts are set for 8:15 p.m. June 1, 2 and 3, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

The conductors Richard Burgin, Aaron Coplan, also a noted contemporary composer, and Charles Munch, music director of the BSO since 1946, will take turns at the podium. Burgin will conduct on June 1, Copland on June 2 and Munch will lead its farewell Manila concert.

Early leaning heavily on German music, a more varied repertory has distinguished the Boston Symphony during the latter half of its 80-seaon history. Its first conductor being the German George Henschel and its first musicians including many Germans, it was inevitable that the music the Boston Symphony would make at the start of its career, would be cast in the German mold.

But a welcome and inevitable change in the form of a new and more universal repertoire came after World War I, and with Serge Koussevitzky taking the orchestra over in 1924 and for 25 years thereafter, the BSO began widening its store of concertos, symphonies and other musical works.

Today the repertoire of the Boston group reads like a complete listing of all the great compositions the world has known and it likewise includes masterpieces contemporary as well as classic, the premiere performances for which are credited to it.

Tickets to the three concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

132

May 12, 1960 THE MANILA TIMES 9-A

Tschaikovsky's Fifth featured at Boston symphony performance

Outstanding orchestral works of Tschaikovsky, Mahler and Leon Kirchner, will be featured in the opening night's concert on June 1, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Richard Burgin conducting.

The evening's program will open with Kirchner's "Toccata for Strings Solo Winds and Percussion," a short one movement work divided into four sections, followed by a composition of Gustav Mahler. "Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (posthumus)." then topped by piece de resistance, Tschaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Op. 64."

Toccata is a bit contemporary music written by Leon Kirchner, and first performed in 1956 in San Francisco. Kirchner was born in Brooklyn (the same birthplace as Aaron Copland) in 1919.

The Adagio from the Tenth Symphony of Mahler was published 13 years after the composer's death in 1911. The posthumous work portrays the last thoughts of Mahler, its basic sentiment being the certainty of death the contempt of death, as the widow puts it.

The program's main piece, the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikovsky, was for some time a controversial work with the composer himself having a "slight" opinion of his composition. Over the years, however, all the critics, the composer included, have revised their opinions and music audiences everywhere have learned to love the symphony.

The complete program for the evening follows:

I. Kirchner—Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion
II. Mahler—Adagio from the Tenth Symphnoy (Posthumous)
Intermission
III. Tschaikovsky — Symphony No. 5, in E Minor, Op. 64
Andante: Allegro con anima
Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza
Valse: Allegro moderato
Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace

Tickets for the three concerts scheduled on June 1, 2, and 3 at 8:15 p.m. are now on sale at Botica Boie.

Manila Bulletin 7 MAY 1960 Page 5

Dr. Munch, BSO Director, Will Arrive With Group Next Month

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it comes to the Philippines for a series of performances next month is one of the best French musicians today. He is Dr. Charles Munch who is the director of the Boston orchestra.

Scheduled to conduct the last in a series of three concerts to be held at the Rizal Memorial coliseum at 8:15 p.m. on June 1, 2, and 3, under the auspices of Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and academy, Munch started his first tour of the Far East for the first time in its 80-year history.

Munch, a native of Strasbourg, comes from a distinguished musical family that included an uncle, Eugene, an organ player and teacher whose devotion to Bach knew no bounds. At his deathbed he was reciting passages from a Bach cantata "until his throat could no longer utter a sound." Charles' father and first violin teacher was Ernest, an organist, string player, leader of the St. Guillaume choir in the Strasbourg Cathedral and professor in the conservatory there. Charles himself was one of a family of four brothers and two sisters who were all musicians.

In 1920 young Charles was concertmaster of the Strasbourgh orchestra. Later, for eight years, he was among the first violinists in the Gewandhaus orchestra under Furtwangler and Walter in Leipzig. In 1932 he settled in Paris and conducted concerts for the Straram Orchestra Symphonique de Paris and in 1937 succeeded Philippe Gaubert as conductor of the Paris Conservatory orchestra. In 1946 he visited the United States for the first time, made numerous appearances with the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic as guest conductor, finally was engaged in the spring of 1948 to take over from Koussevitz[illegible] head of the Boston group. He thus came to Boston as a conductor of worldwide experience and success, a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in music centers of the Old World.

Tickets are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Here May 31 For Performances

[illegible] 20 May '60

Expected to arrive in Manila at the end of this month are 102 men and two women who hold "the most attractive musical jobs in America."

These are the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is marking its 80th season with its first tour of the Far East. Due to arrive in Manila in the course of this trip for performances on June 1, 2 and 3, the BSO will be presented at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

At the head of the group will be Charles Munch, its music director, Aaron Copland, American contemporary composer who is traveling with the BSA as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, associate director and considered the orchestra's most significant acquisition in recent decades. The three will take turns wielding the baton, Burgin on June 1, Copland on June 2, and Munch on June 3.

The rest of the playing-members of the orchestra, represent a selected, literally hand-picked collection of musicians from among thousands whose life aspiration is to be a member of the orchestra, and there are thousands who apply whenever a vacancy occurs.

There is nothing hasty about the way the Boston Symphony takes on a new member, according to Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player and personnel manager of the BSO in addition since 1942. One of Mazzeo's duties is to keep track of musicians throughout the United States who seem to be likely candidates for membership. When a vacancy arises in the BSO, the most promising applicants are notified, assembled and auditioned (from behind a curtain) by a jury. This is how the process of selecting a musician for a job in the BSO has been described. From four to seven of these candidates are selected by this jury for the next stage of elimination — another audition attended by Munch himself, who may also interview them personally, make them play as he conducts, and sight-read. The lucky winner is usually in a state of near prostration by the time he is selected, but none ever complains. He has come into what Henry B. Cabot, president of the BSO trustees, calls the "most attractive musical job in America."

Tickets to all the three concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

---

7 MAY 1960 Daily Mirror

Conductor Munch to come

The forthcoming visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra early in June will give Manilans the opportunity to meet one of the foremost musicians to come from France today, Dr. Charles Munch, director of the Boston group.

He is scheduled to conduct the last in a series of three concerts to be held at the Rizal Memorial coliseum at 8:15 p.m. on June 1, 2, and 3, under the auspices of Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Richard Burgin will be the conductor of the first of the three concerts.

He studied the violin in Berlin with Joachim as his teacher. Among his fellow students were Toscha Seidel and the young Joascha Heifetz. Active in chamber music, he founded the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm

---

Announce June Concert Program

Manila Bulletin 13 MAY 1960

Outstanding orchestral works of Tschaikovsky, Mahler and Leon Kirchner will be featured in the opening night concert on June 1, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Richard Burgin conducting.

The evening's program will open with Kirchner's "Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion," a short one movement work divided into four sections, followed by a composition of Gustav Mahler, "Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous)", then topped by piece de resistance, Tschaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Op. 64."

Toccata is a bit contemporary music written by Leon Kirchner, and first performed in 1956 in San Francisco. Kirchner was born in Brooklyn (the same birthplace as Aaron Copland) in 1919.

The Adagio from the Tenth Symphony of Mahler was published 13 years after the composer's death in 1911. The posthumous work portrays the last thoughts of Mahler, its basic sentiment being the certainty of death, the contempt of death, as the widow puts it.

The program's main piece, the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikovsky, was for some time a controversial work with the composer himself having a "slight" opinion of his composition. Over the years, however, all the critics, the composer included, have revised their opinions and music audiences everywhere have learned to love the symphony.

The complete program for the evening follows: Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion by Kirchner; Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous) by Mahler; Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, in E minor Op. 64, Andante: Allegro con anima, Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza, Valse: Allegro moderato, Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace.

133

Philippines Herald
12 MAY 1960

Attending BSO Concerts Considered Rare Opportunity

When the Boston Symphony orchestra performs here next month it is a very rare opportunity Manilans will have as not even all residents of Boston have seen this group perform due to the difficulty of obtaining tickets to a regular BSO concret [illegible]

BSO winter performances in Boston's Symphony hall are always sold out well in advance and tickets are brought by the entire season.

It is for this reason that the BSO also schedules out-of-season concerts to give many more an opportunity to attend its concerts. These cencerts are held in Tanglewood, in the Berkshire hills in Massachusetts, where it has a six-week season in July and August, in summer on the east bank of the Charles River at the foot of the famed Beacon Hill, and on occasional tours of the country.

Scheduled to be presented in the Rizal Memorial coliseum on June 1, 2, and 3, by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA), the BSO holds a record in that for a full half-century now, it has effortlessly and regularly sold out its season series tickets ahead of the dates of the concerts.

Now performing in Japan, the BSO is currently on its first tour of the Far East. Its series of three concerts in Manila will be conducted by Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland and Charles Munch, respectively.

Back in Boston they have called attendance at the BSO a "ritual", with the concert-goers always attending an entire series of performances and never shopping for tickets, concert by concert. It is a ritual, however, according to John M. Conly in an article in High Fidelity Magazine, that "derives from a very vital rite, the knowledgeable enjoyment of music, [illegible] perform without [illegible] thousands of [illegible] participants."

Tickets to the performances are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

BSO slates top pieces for June 1

Manila Chronicle
12 MAY 1960

Outstanding orchestral works of Tschaikovsky, Mahler and Leon Kirchner will be featured in the opening night's concert on June 1, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum of the world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Richard Burgin conducting.

The evening's program will open with Kirchner's Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion, a short one-movement work divided into four sections, followed by a composition of Gustav Mahler, Adagio from the "Tenth Symphony" (posthumous), then topped by piece de resistance, Tschaikovsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Op. 64."

Toccata is a bit contemporary music written by Leon Kirchner and first performed in 1956 in San Francisco. Kirchner was born in Brooklyn, the same birthplace as Aaron Copland, in 1919.

The Adagio from the "Tenth Symphony" of Mahler was published 13 years after the composer's death in 1911. The posthumous work portrays the last thoughts of Mahler, its basic sentiment being the certainty of death, the contempt of death, as the widow puts it.

The program's main piece, the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikovsky, was for opinion of his composition. Over the years, however, all the critics, the composer included, have revised their opinions and music audiences everywhere have learned to love the symphony.

Other numbers of the program are Tschaikovsky's Andante: Allegro con anima, Andante Cantabile con alcuna licenza, Valse: Allegro moderato, Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace.

Tickets to the three concerts scheduled on June 1, 2, and 3 at 8:15 p.m. are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Not All From Boston Can Get Tickets For BSO Concerts

MAB 23 My '60

The arrival here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of this month, will give Philippine audiences an opportunity not enjoyed even by many residents of Boston because of the difficulty of obtaining tickets to a regular BSO season concert. BSO winter performances in Boston's Symphony Hall are always sold out well in advance and tickets are bought by the entire season.

It is for this reason that the BSO also schedules out-of-season concerts to give many more an opportunity to attend its concerts. These concerts are held in Tanglewood, in the Berkshire hills in Massachusetts, where it has a six-week season in July and August, in summer on the east bank of the Charles River at the foot of the famed Beacon Hill, and on occasional tours of the country.

Scheduled to be presented in the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3, by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA), the BSO holds a record in that for a full half-century now, it has effortlessly and regularly sold out its season series tickets ahead of the dates of the concerts.

Now performing in Japan, the BSO is currently on its first tour of the Far East. Its series of three concerts in Manila will be conducted by Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland and Charles Munch, respectively.

Back in Boston they have called attendance at the BSO a "ritual," with the concert-goers always attending an entire series of performances and never shopping for tickets, concert by concert. It is a ritual, however, according to John M. Conly in an article in High Fidelity Magazine, that "derives from a very vital rite, the knowledgeable enjoyment of music, hard to perform without some thousands of trained participants."

Tickets to the performances are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Impresario Lozano reveals Boston Symphony schedule

Manila Chronicle
25 APR 1960

June 1, 2 and 3 are the dates set for the performances here of the 104-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra, due [illegible] tour of the Far East.

The three concerts, to be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:30 p.m. will be a presentation of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Keenly anticipated by Philippine concert-goers, the occasion will bring to Manila one of America's loved institutions, the Boston Symphony, which is celebrating its 80th concert season this year. Organized in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, a Bostonian who got his musical education in Vienna, the group was America's first "permanent" orchestra devoted solely toward ideal performances of symphonic music. This was something unknown to America until the Boston's first conductor, George Henschel, gave its inaugural concert, Oct. 22, 1881.

The visiting Boston Symphony will be the fourth of the world's major orchestras to come to Manila. Three other famous groups which have held concerts in the city are the Symphony of the Air, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and the Vienna Philharmonic. Big crowd drawers, all three were also presented by Lozano and still stand out in the memory of Manila concert-goers for their outstanding performances.

Starting, by tradition, on the first Friday of October, the winter season for the Boston group consists of 30 weeks. The orchestra gives a total of 116 concerts during the season, including some rehearsals which are open to the [illegible] score of performances held outside Boston.

The BSO's forthcoming Far East tour will be the first in this part of the world. It has performed in European capitals and was the first Western orchestra to give concerts in Leningrad and Moscow.

Tickets will be placed on sale at the Botica Boie on Wednesday, April 27.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Sets Performances In Manila For June 1-3

Philippines Herald
25 APR 1960

The 104-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra, due to embark soon on its first tour of the Far East, has set its performances in Manila for June 1-3.

The three concerts, to be held at the Rizal Memorial coliseum at 8:30 in the evening, will be a presentation of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Keenly anticipated by Philippine concert-goers, the occasion will bring to Manila one of America's loved institutions, the Boston Symphony which is celebrating its 80th concert season this year. Organized back in 1881 by Henry Higginson, a Bostonian who got his musical education in Vienna, the group was America's first "permanent" orchestra devoted solely toward ideal performances of symphonic music. This was something unknown to America until the Boston first conductor, George Henschel, gave its inaugural [illegible] October 22, 1881.

The visiting Boston Symphony will be the fourth of the world's major orchestras to come to Manila. Three other famous groups which have held concerts in the city are the Symphony of the Air, tne Los Angeles Philharmonic and the Vienna Philharmonic. Big crowd drawers, all three were also presented by Lozano and still stand out in the memory of Manila concert-goers for their outstanding performances.

Starting, by tradition, on the first Friday of October, the winter season for the Boston group consists of 30 weeks. The orchestra gives a total of 116 concerts during the season, including some rehearsals which are open to the public and a score of performances held outside Boston.

Their forthcoming Far East tour will be the first in this part of the world. They have performed in European capitals and was the first Western orchestra to give concerts in Leningrad and Moscow.

Tickets will be placed on sale at the Botica Boie on Wednesday, April 27.

BSO Plays Works Of 10 Composers

[illegible] 1960

Works of 10 leading composers of the classical, romantic, modern and contemporary eras will feature the three-night engagement in Manila of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Three top conductors, will lead the orchestra.

Burgin wields the baton at the opening concert on June 1, at the Rizal Memorial stadium.

Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, will lead the orchestra on June 2. The third and last performance on June 3, will have the BSC director, Charles Munch, in the conductor's role

The complete program follows:

June 1.
I. Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion ..... Kirchner
II. Adagio from the Tenth Symphony .. Mahler
III. Symphony No. 5 Tschaikovsky
June 2.
I. Fantasias for Strings .. Purcell
II. First Symphony .... Copland
III. Symphony No. 95 .... Haydn
IV. Orchestra Suite from the Opera, "The Tender Land" ..... Copland
June 3.
I. Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" .... Beethoven
II. Symphony No. 6 .... Piston
III. Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2 ...... Ravel

Programs For BSO Concerts Are Listed

Manila Bulletin
27 MAY 1960

Works of ten leading composers of the classical, romantic, modern, and contemporary eras will feature the three-night engagement in Manila of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Three top conductors, including Richard Burgin, associate conductors of the Boston Symphony, will lead the orchestra.

Burgin wields the baton at the opening concert on June 1, at the Rizal Memorial Stadium. The stadium has been equipped with an acoustical stage to set off the concerts to advantage.

Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, will lead the orchestra on June 2. The third and last performance on June 3, will have the BSO director, Charles Munch, in the conductor's role.

The complete program follows:

June 1: Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion by Kirchner; Adagio from the Tenth Symphony by Mahler; and Symphony No. 5 by Tschaikovsky.

June 2: Fantasias for Strings by Purcell; First Symphony by Copland; Symphony No. 95 by Haydn; and Orchestra Suite from the Opera, "The Tender Land"—Copland.

June 3: Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" by Beethoven; Symphony No. 6 by Piston; and Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2 by Ravel.

Tickets to these three concerts which will all be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15 p.m., are now on sale at Botica Boie.

List Dates For Performances Of Boston Orchestra

Manila Bulletin
25 APR 1960

June 1, 2 and 3 are the dates set for the performances here of the 104-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra, due to embark soon on its first tour of the Far East.

The three concerts, to be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:30 in the evening, will be a presentation of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Keenly anticipated by Philippine concert-goers, the occasion will bring to Manila one of America's loved institutions, the Boston Symphony, which is celebrating its 80th concert season this year. Organized back in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, a Bostonian who got his musical education in Vienna, the group was America's first "permanent" orchestra devoted solely toward ideal performances of symphonic music. This was something unknown to America until the Boston's first conductor, George Henschel, gave its inaugural concert, Oct. 22, 1881.

The visiting Boston Symphony will be the fourth of the world's major orchestra to come to Manila. Three other famous groups which have held concerts in the city are the Symphony of the Air, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and the Vienna Philharmonic. Big crowd drawers, all three were also presented by Lozano and still stand out in the memory of Manila concert-goers for their outstanding performances.

Starting, by tradition, on the first Friday of October, the winter season for the Boston group consists of 30 weeks. The orchestra gives a total of 116 concerts during the season, including some rehearsals which are open to the public and a score of performances held outside Boston.

Their forthcoming Far East tour will be the first in this part of the world. They have performed in European capitals and Moscow.

Tickets will be placed on sale at the Botica Boie on Wednesday, April 27.

Daily Mirror

Boston repertoire released

27 MAY 1960

The repertoire of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during its three-night run at the Rizal Memorial coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3, at 8:15 p.m. will [illegible] different every night.

Richard [illegible] Aaron Copland and [illegible] Munch will appear [illegible] each in that order.

The complete [illegible] follows:

June 1

I. Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion — Kirchner; II. Adagio from the Tenth Symphony — Mahler; III. Symphony No. 5 — Tschaikovsky.

June 2

I. Fantasias for Strings — Purcell; II. First Symphony — Copland: III. Symphony No. 95 — Haydn; IV. Orchestra Suite from the Opera, "The Tender Land" — Copland.

June 3

I. Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" — Beethoven; II. Symphony No. 6 — Piston; III. Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2 — Ravel.

Tickets to these three concerts are now on sale at Botica Boie.

Ten Leading Maestros' Compositions Included In BSO R[illegible]

Philippines Herald
2[illegible] MAY 1960

Included in the repertoire of the Boston Symphony orchestra when it gives its Manila performances next month are compositions of ten leading maestros.

Three top conductors, including Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, will lead the orchestra.

Burgin wields the baton at the opening concert on June 1, at the Rizal Memorial stadium. The stadium has been equipped with an acoustical stage to set off the concerts to advantage.

Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, will lead the orchestra on June 2. The third and last performance, on June 3, will have the BSO director, Charles Munch, in the conductor's role.

The [illegible] program follows:

June [illegible] — Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion, Kirhcner; Adagio from the Tenth Symphony, Mahler and Symphony No. 5, Tschaikovsky; June 2—Fantasias for Strings, Purcell; First Symphony, Copland; Symphony No. 95, Haydn and Orchestra Suite from the Opera, "The Tender Land", Copland; June 3—Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," Beethoven; Symphony No. 6, Piston and Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2, Ravel.

Tickets to these three concerts which will be held at the Rizal Memorial coliseum at 8:15 p.m., are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

137

BOSTON'S PRIDE

Manila Times 7 APR 1960

Symphony is due in June

By Nati Valentin

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give three concerts in Manila on June 1, 2 and 3 in the course of a 52-day tour of the Far East and Australia under President Eisenhower's international cultural exchange program.

This was learned yesterday from William Cox, advance tour director and promotions manager of the Boston Symphony, and William H. Morris, cultural attache of the US embassy here.

Three distinguished figures in the American musical world will conduct — Aaron Copland, guest conductor; Richard Burgin, associate conductor, and Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony. The three performances here will be evenly divided among them.

Copland is considered America's greatest living composer (Dance Symphony, Short Symphony, Appalachian Spring, El Salon Mexico).

This will be the major undertaking for 1959-1960 of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has enjoyed a 129-year career. (It was established in 1831 by Henry Lee Higginson.)

For its present members, this will be the longest route (Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand) that they will yet travel between seasons.

With orchestra baggage weighing nine tons, and sheet music baggage stowed in two trunks weighing over 700 lbs., one gets an idea of the problem in travel and physical arrangements.

It would appear that there were three considerations in planning the tour, from what we gleaned at the press conference yesterday. These were:

1) time element. The last days of April, the whole of May and early June is the only period during which the orchestra can be on tour between seasons. On June 19, it returns to America for the Tanglewood Festival;

2) the Japan-American Centennial. This explains why the Boston Symphony is giving 22 concerts in 15 cities of Japan. In Seoul, it is giving only two, in Manila, three, in Australia, seven, and in New Zealand, two;

3) problems like transportation and living arrangements for 114 people, stage dimensions (1800 square feet for the 100 musicians and their instruments and the conductor), the availability of an excellent piano, and theatrical factors such as acoustics.

"I might compare myself to a mine detector, anticipating all the difficulties," Mr. Cox said. Not only has he managed to be seven weeks or so ahead of the Boston Symphony, in every city where it will appear, seeing to all the arrangements — and they are multifarious! — but he assures each city that he would be there when the Boston Symphony actually arrives.

In each place, the orchestra will have "acoustic rehearsals" Mr. Cox said, by which he said he means that they would try out the tonal possibilities.

One thing both Cox and Morris would like to see happen. This is, to bring the real people — those from the provinces — to the Boston Symphony, if the Boston Symphony can't go to them. While appreciating the number of longhair music aficionados, cognoscentis and those who make up the artistic world, the two, however, have visions of people from the provinces flying, taking the boat, coming by the busloads, to the Rizal Memorial Stadium, where Cesar Concio, architect, is even now trying to surpass his efforts in October last year for the Vienna Philharmonic, this time to insure best playing conditions for the world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Philippines Herald 21 MAY 1960

Prepare Special Canopy For BSO's Concerts Here

The stage with special cantilevered canopy designed by Architect Cesar H. Concio and built at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum for the Vienna Philharmonic when it performed here October, will again be used for the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is giving a series of three concerts at the Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3.

This canopy, constructed for acoustical effects, had proved successful for the Vienna Philharmonic performances, improving the acoustics of the Rizal Coliseum to the satisfaction of the concert-goers. It also impressed the Vienna musicians, whose spokesman, Helmut Wobisch, writing after their performances to Impresario Alfredo Lozano, said they were happy about the way Rizal Coliseum had been transformed into a first-class concert auditorium with the construction of this special stage. Lozano presented the Vienna Philharmonic in Manila and he is also presenting the Boston Symphony this June, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

A crew is busy assembling the Concio-designed stage in preparation for the coming of the orchestra expected in Manila on May 31. Headed by its music director, Dr. Charles Munch, the group also includes the noted American composer Aaron Copland, and the BSO associate director Richard Burgin, the three of whom will take turns wielding the baton for the series of concerts here. All performances will start at 8:15 p.m.

The BSO, known for its wide and varied repertory, is dipping into its store of musical scores, for choice selections calculated to meet the approval of discriminating Manila audiences. A different program has been prepared for each evening. Ticket are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Hold Concerts At Rizal Memorial Coliseum

Philippines Herald 18 APR 1960

Impresario Alfredo Lozano will resume his cultural presentations this year, after a summer recess, when he presents the distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra in early June.

The orchestra which is celebrating its eightieth season this year will hold a series of three concerts at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. These concerts of the BSO will be held in collaboration with President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Taking their turns at wielding the baton for the concerts during the tour will be its director, Charles Munch, one of the foremost musicians to come from France; Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the group, and Aarcon Copland, America's leading contemporary composer who is coming along as a guest conductor.

In 1956, at the conclusion of its 75th anniversary, the orchestra made its second foreign tour, this time including Leningrad and Moscow in its itinerary, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia. Concerts were also given in London, Leeds, Edinburgh, Dublin, Cork, Paris, Chartres, Stuttgart, Zurich, Berne, Munich, Vienna, Prague, Copenhagen,, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki.

First established in 1881 in answer to America's need then for an orchestra of the highest European standards, the Boston Symphony has since enjoyed a long and distinguished career as one of the finest symphony groups in the United States. The man who assembled the orchestra, gathering the best musicians available in the United States, and engaging a young German as its first conductor, George Henschel, was Henry Lee Hutchinson of Boston, who had spent several years in Vienna studying music.

Its first concert was held on October 22, 1881 in the Boston music hall. Its conductors since have been, besides George Henschel: Wilhelm Gericke, Artur Nikisch, Emil Paur, Karl Muck, Max Fiedler, Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteaux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch.

Boston Symphony Group Sets 3-Day Performance Here

Evening News 17 APR 1960

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with 100 playing members will arrive on May 31 from Tokyo for a three-day performance at the Rizal Memorial coliseum.

Three famous conductors: Charles Munch, music director; Richard Burgin, associate conductor; and Aaron Copland, guest conductor, will head the orchestra which will play for three consecutive nights starting June 1 to 3.

According to William Cox, tour manager of the famed orchestra, this project is in line with the United States president's program of international cultural exchange. Cox arrived here several weeks ahead of the orchestra to look into the problems that may arise during the scheduled performances and to offer advance remedial measures to ensure a smooth presentation.

There are actually 114 people traveling with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Cox stressed that owing to the great number of members and their musical instruments there is complexity in moving the orchestra from one country to another.

All of the three conductors will perform during the three nights.

The orchestra, which is traveling by air, will be in Korea April 29 for two concerts after which they will fly to Japan where they are scheduled to give 22 performances in the principal cities. From Manila, the BSO will fly to New Zealand. — Flora A. Zaide.

Manila Chronicle Sunday, May 22, 1960

[illegible]

By ROSALINDA [illegible] OROSA

No Fireworks Here. One [illegible] rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orch[illegible] disappointed if he goes there expecting a display of temper, frayed nerves, fireworks, etc. As far as I know, Conductor Charles Munch does not have the volatile temperament of the Frenchman (he is from Alsace-Lorraine), but of course I could be mistaken.

Years ago, whenever time and our studies permitted it, my friends and I would take the subway from Cambridge to Boston to attend BSO rehearsals under the direction of Mr. Munch. These were no ordinary rehearsals for one paid an admission fee to get in. At any rate, one inevitably looked upon these rehearsals as an index to the orchestra's general excellence: there were no uncertainties, no repeats, no hemming. Indeed, one felt these rehearsals were the real thing.

With the coming of the BSO, American Embassy officials will have as large a group to entertain as the Symphony of the Air (1955) and the Los Angeles Philharmonic (1956). On June 1, Ambassador and Mrs. John Hickerson will officially welcome the BSO conductors with a reception at their Del Pan residence.

The following day, Public Affairs Officer and Mrs. Richard Barnsley will honor the orchestra members with a buffet supper at the Seafront Compound. This will be a post-concert affair. As we all know, no member of a respectable orchestra ever eats dinner prior to a concert.

Society

Edited by Rosario M[illegible]

Evening News 30 [illegible]

Boston Symphony Arriving Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is expected to arrive at the Manila International Airport tomorrow at 5:00 p.m. aboard three specially chartered CAT planes. A big welcome awaits them.

At the head of the group, currently touring the Far East and scheduled to give three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, will be the music director, Dr. Charles Munch, Aaron Copland, guest conductor and eminent American composer, and Richard Burgin, associate director.

The BSO has been engaged to perform in Manila on June 1, 2 and 3 by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy. It will be coming directly from Tokyo where the 104-man orchestra is today winding up a 30-concert tour of Japan.

A big crowd composed of Filipino musicians and music lovers is set to welcome the BSO at the airport. The Philippine Constabulary Band will also be on hand to greet the eminent group, America's first permanent symphony orchestra, observing this year its 80th season.

Burgin will conduct the first concert to be given here by the BSO on June 1, while Copland will field the baton on June 2. Munch will be at the podium for the farewell concert on June 3. All performances will start at 8:15 p.m.

Tickets to all the concerts are on sale at the Botica Boie.

Manila Times

BSO arrival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is expected to arrive at the Manila International Airport tomorrow at 5:00 p.m. aboard three specia[illegible] planes.

At the head of the group, currently touring the Far East and scheduled to give three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, will be the music director, Dr. Charles Munch, Aaron Copland, guest conductor and eminent American composer and Richard Burgin, associate director.

The BSO has been engaged to perform in Manila on June 1, 2 and 3 by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy. It will be coming directly from Tokyo where [illegible] orchestra is today winding up a 30-concert [illegible]an.

A big [illegible]ed of [illegible] and mu[illegible] is set to welcome the BSO at the airport. The Philippine Constabulary Band will also be on hand to greet the eminent group, America's first permanent symphony orchestra, observing this year its 80th season.

Burgin will conduct the first concert to be given here by the BSO on June 1, while Copland will wield the baton on June 2. Munch will be at the podium for the farewell concert on June 3. All performances will start at 8:15 p.m.

Tickets to all the concerts are on sale at the Botica Boie.

Manila Bulletin

7 APR 1960

Day and Night

By RITA and CARMEN

THREE LEADING conductors of American orchestras, including Aaron Copland, a music authority in his own right, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of presentations to be held in Manila on June 1, 2 and 3. The two other conductors are Charles Munch and Richard Burgen.

In a press conference held yesterday noon at the Pines Room of the Bay View House, William Cox, advance tour manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who just arrived to make arrangements for the presentations, disclosed that the 100-man orchestra will perform at the Rizal Coliseum. It will be presented by Impressario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre Association, which is working in connection with President Eisenhower's program of fostering goodwill with other nations.

The Philippines is a part of the orchestra's tour of the Far East, which includes Seoul, Tokyo, New Zealand, and Australia.

About nine tons of luggage, including instruments, music sheets and even a portable podium, will be brought in by the group for their Manila performances. So that the Rizal Memorial (which suffers acoustically) will make up for its not being so ideal a place for presentations of this sort, architect Cesar Concio, who had designed a special stage for the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra's performance in the past, will do the same thing for the visiting American orchestral group.

The repertoire to be presented to their Manila audience will be disclosed sometime soon.

[illegible] Bulletin

30 MAY 1960

BSO Expected Here Tomorrow In Three Planes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is expected to arrive at the Manila International Airport tomorrow at 5 p.m. aboard three specially chartered CAT planes.

At the head of the group currently touring the Far East and scheduled to give three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, will be the music director, Dr. Charles Munch, Aaron Copland, guest conductor and eminent American composer, and Richard Burgin, associate director.

The BSO has been engaged to perform in Manila on June 1, 2 and 3 by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre [illegible]my. It will be co[illegible]ly from Tokyo w[illegible] 104-man orchestra [illegible]day winding up a 30-concert tour of Japan.

A big crowd composed of Filipino musicians and music lovers is set to welcome the BSO at the airport. The Philippine Constabulary Band will also be on hand to greet the eminent group, America's first permanent symphony orchestra, observing this year its 80th season.

Burgin will conduct the first concert to be given here by the BSO on June 1, while Copland will wield the baton on June 2, Munch will be at the podium for the farewell concert on June 3. All performances will start at 8:15 p.m.

Tickets to all the concerts are on sale at the Botica Boie.

Day and Night

By RITA and CARMEN

HERE AT LAST [illegible] a cost of $500,000, a [illegible] of the yearly appropriation of the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA) is the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Manila performances, three in all, is part of the concert tour of five countries involving 35 concerts.

The group left Boston on April 25 and will be home again by June 18. Two concerts in Taipeh, 22 in Japan. three in Manila, seven in Australia, and two in New Zealand.

First stop was Taipeh where it held two concerts, after it had changed its itinerary due to the uprising in Seoul, Korea.

In Japan, the BSO held 22 concerts in various cities. Its biggest audience was a crowd of 8,000 students which attended a concert in the Tokyo gymnasium.

Sally Hempel, BSO secretary, recalled how everything turned out in Taipeh with a minimum of preparations for their unscheduled performances there.

Charles Munch and Richard Burgin, music director and associate director, respectively, of the BSO, afforded us an interesting insight into their careers, at the press luncheon given by Impressario Alfredo Lozano, who is presenting the BSO concerts, at the Manila Hotel. [illegible] had no occasion to talk with Aaron Copland as he was a guest speaker at the Overseas Press Club yesterday.

Charles Munch joined the BSO 11 years ago and prior to that was guest conductor for two years. Before join ing the BSO, he was connect ed with the Paris Conserva toire Orchestra as its conduc tor for over ten years. H was born in Strasbourg an son of a conductor there. Hi father conducted the orches tra in which Albert Schwei zer was the organist.

Munch has a place in Par in which he spends his tim when not working with th BSO. He has a collection o old silver of Dutch, Ameri can, French and German ori gin. He collects old porce lain, paintings, originals, by great French masters, and old photographs.

In Japan during the BSO's recent tour, he acquired two treasured tea pots, very ancient, he calls them, and very precious to him.

Richard Burgin, who observed his 40th anniversary with the BSO, is also concert master and first violinist.

Today, he will be first violinist, and tomorrow, too. He is married to Ruth Possett, a younger violinist with whom he has two children—a girl of 16 and a boy of 13.

His daughter has taken up piano lessons with the stipulation that she will not go for it as profession and career. The boy is all out for sports.

Richard Burgin is a lecturer on music at the Boston University and enjoys the work.

THE BSO has three brother and sister groups in it. Brothers are B. Zighera, first harpist, and A. Zighera, first

(Continued on page 11)

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

139

Manila Chronicle 18 APR 1960

Boston Symphony slates 3-concert series in June

The distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebrating its 80th season this year, will hold a series of three concerts in Manila, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, early June, during the course of a Far East tour.

The Manila concerts will be under the management of Impresario Alfredo Lozano who will be resuming his cultural presentations this year after a summer recess. The Boston Symphony concerts will be held in collaboration with President Eisenhower's Special International Program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Taking their turns at wielding the baton for the concerts during the tour will be BSO director, Charles Munch, one of the foremost musicians to come from France; Richard Burgin, associate conductor; and Aaron Copland, America's leading contemporary composer who joined the group as a guest conductor.

In 1956, at the conclusion of its 75th anniversary, the orchestra made its second foreign tour, this time including Leningrad and Moscow in its itinerary, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia. Concerts were also given in London, Leeds, Edinburgh, Dublin, Cork, Paris, Chartres, Stuttgart, Zurich, Berne, Munich, Vienna, Prague, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki.

First established in 1881 in answer to America's need then for an orchestra of the highest European standards, the Boston Symphony has since enjoyed a long and distinguished career as one of the finest symphony groups in the United States. The man who assembled the orchestra, by gathering the best musicians available in the United States, and engaging George Henschel, a young German as its first conductor, was Henry Lee Hutchinson of Boston, who had spent several years in Vienna studying music.

Its first concert was held on October 22, 1881 at the Boston Music Hall. BSO conductors since have been, besides George Henschel: Wilhelm Gericke, Artur Nikisch, Emil Paur, Karl Muck, Max Fiedler, Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteaux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch.

Tickets to the three concerts will be on sale at the Botica Boie next week.

Philippines Herald [illegible] 1960

Big Welcome Awaits Boston Sy[illegible]up

A big w[illegible] the Bos[illegible]stra which w[illegible] Manila Intern[illegible]rport tomorrow at 5 p.m. BSO members will be brought in by three specially chartered CAT planes.

The group of welcomers will include Filipino musicians and music lovers. The Philipine Constabulary band will also be on hand to greet the eminent group, America's first permanent symphony orchestra.

At the head of the group, currently touring the Far East and scheduled to give three concerts at the Rizal Memorial coliseum, will be the music director, Dr. Charles Munch, Aaron Copland, guest conductor and eminent American composer, and Richard Burgin, associate director.

The BSO has been engaged to perform in Manila on June 1, 2 and 3 by Impresario Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy. It will be coming directly from Tokyo where the 104-man orchestra is today winding up a 30-concert tour of Japan.

Mr. Burgin will conduct the first concert to be given here by the BSO on June 1, while Mr. Copland will wield the baton on June 2. Mr Munch will be at the podium for the farewell concert on June 3. All performances will start at 8:15 p.m.

Sunday, May 29, 1960

Philippines Herald

BSO's Arrival Should Focus Interest On Group's Members

The forthcoming arrival here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is holding three concerts at the Rizal Memorial coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3, at 8:15 p.m., should focus interest on the 102-men and 2 women who compose the touring group.

Charles Munch, its director, once described his job as like that of a priest, his greatest responsibility that of keeping the programs and performances good enough to deserve well of its audiences.

How do the rank and file of the BSO look upon their satisfactorily renumerative jobs in the BSO, membership to which has been said to amount to a "gracious way of living?"

"This is not a job," says violinist Harry Dickson. "It's more like belonging to a family. Even socially we are closely knit. There is less jealousy than anywhere else I've ever worked, and everyone appreciates everyone."

"The high morale and spirit of the players," says Noab Bielski, also a violinist, is what lured him away from higher pay in New York TV and radio work.

Leon Burkat, music administrator of the BSO, holds the theory that its players fit in so happily because the jobs themselves, long established, unerringly attract the right people. Even new recruits, he states, very soon exude the air of belonging and will unselfconsciously refer to the orchestra as "Symphony" the same way older Bostonians do. ("I hear Heifetz is coming to town, I wonder if he will appear with the Symphony").

The two women members of the BSO traveling with the group in its first Far Eastern tour are Olivia Hall Luetcke who plays the harp, and Winifred S. Winograd, cellist.

Tickets to the Manila concerts which will be presentations of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy, are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

EXCHANGE OF CULTURE

Manila Times 18 APR 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra slates three Manila concerts

The distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebrating its 80th season this year, will hold a series of three concerts in Manila, at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, early June, during the course of a Far East tour.

The Manila concerts will be under the management of Impresario Alfredo Lozano who will be resuming his cultural presentations this year after a summer recess. The Boston Symphony concerts will be held in collaboration with President Eisenhower's Special International Program for cultural presentations administered by the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Taking their turns at wielding the baton for the concerts during the tour will be its director, Charles Munch, one of the foremost musicians to come from France; Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the group, and Aaron Copland, America's leading contemporary composer who is coming along as a guest conductor.

In 1956, at the conclusion of its 75th anniversary, the orchestra made its second foreign tour, this time including Leningrad and Moscow in its itinerary, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia. Concerts were also given in London, Leeds, Edinburgh, Dublin, Cork, Paris, Chartres, Stuttgart, Zurich, Berne, Munich, Vienna, Prague, Copenhagen, Oslo, Stockholm and Helsinki.

First established in 1881 in answer to America's need then for an orchestra of the highest European standards, the Boston Symphony has since enjoyed a long and distinguished career as one of the finest symphony groups in the United States. The man who assembled the orchestra, gathering the best musicians available in the United States, and engaging a young German as its first conductor, George Henschel, was Henry Lee Hutchinson of Boston, who had spent several years in Vienna studying music.

Its first concert was held on October 22, 1881 in the Boston Music Hall. Its conductors since have been, besides George Henschel: Wilhelm Gericke, Artur Nikisch, Emil Paur, Karl Muck, Max Fiedler, Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteaux, Serge Koussevitsky and Charles Munch.

Tickets to the three concerts will be placed on sale at the Botica Boie next week.

THE DAILY MIRROR, APRIL 7, 1960

Boston orchestra arriving in town

The 100-man world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra is arriving to perform in Manila in June, according to William Cox, advance tour manager of the orchestra, at a press conference held at the Pines room of Bay View House yesterday.

With the team, fourteen staffers plus a 9-ton load of "everything they need" will go with the orchestra on their first Far East tour which will cover a total of 36 performances.

The orchestra is leaving the United States on April 23 for their first two performances at Seoul, Korea and will be followed by 22 concerts in the different cities of Japan, 7 concerts in Australia and finally 2 performances in New Zealand.

In Manila, the orchestra is scheduled for three performances all of which will be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3 inclusive.

Cox also revealed that this is part of US President Dwight D. Eisenhower's goodwill program and will be locally presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre Association (ANTA).

It will be recalled that President Eisenhower's ambassadors of goodwill who were sent to the Philippines in the past were Marian Anderson, Blanche Thebom, the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra and recently the American Dance Jubilee group.

Another special attraction of the forthcoming Boston orchestra will be the three conductors who are traveling with the group. Heading the list is Charles Munch, music director, Richard Burgin, association conductor and concert master and Aaron Copland, popular and famous composer as guest conductor.

Each conductor will hold the baton for the three performances here.

There are four ladies traveling with the team as violinist, cellist, harpist and flutist.

Cox added that nine tons of baggage will not be an easy thing to transport as the orchestra will leave the shores of New York on April 23 and fly directly to Korea, as the first-stop of the 52-day tour of Far East countries.

Breaking down the 9-ton load, Cox said that it will consist of 85 gigantic theatrical trunks weighing about 300 to 700 lbs. each.

The music sheet trunk weighs about 700 lbs. while the bass violin, harp and other heavy instruments weighs about 250 to 300 lbs. a piece.

Finally Cox and William Morris, cultural attache of the US Embassy in the city, said that the 129-year old orchestra has one aim and that is to bring their kind of music to the Filipino people.

Cox left last night for Australia to lay the grounds for the Boston orchestra's arrival there and will be back in the states to accompany the team in their FE tour.

Cesar Concio, architect, is busy mapping out plans in converting the Rizal Memorial tadium into a music hall. Concio designed the shell-shaped stage for the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra sometime ago.

—jo q.

The Manila Chronicle

Encore

By ROSALINDA L. OROSA

7 APR 1960

100 MEN AND 3 CONDUCTORS

After the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays its last concert for the season on April 23, at Symphony Hall, Boston, the entire orchestral equipment will be packed that same evening and transported on vans to New York with the orchestra members following right the next day.

Thus will begin an odyssey which will take them to Far Eastern countries—Korea, Japan and the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand. From here the men fly back to the States on June 19. This tour, to be sponsored by the State Department with the cooperation of ANTA, will actually constitute the orchestra's major undertaking for the year 1959-60. Manila's own end of it will be orchestral performances to be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano on June 1, 2 and 3 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

William Cox, tour manager who arrived here yesterday to make preliminary arrangements, gave the press a rough idea of what the tour will involve. First of all, the orchestra will count with one hundred playing members, three conductors and ten other men who will take care of the non-musical details. The instruments alone, weighing nine tons and packed in eighty-five theatre trunks, will require a special chartered plane. That should be easy to believe when one considers that the sheet music (in two trunks) weighs seven hundred pounds, that a bass violin weighs two hundred fifty pounds, a harp in its case, two hundred pounds, etc. Incidentally, the conductors will each have his own podium flown by plane, likewise.

But enough of the mechanics of the trip for the moment. The three conductors will be Dr. Charles Munch, music director who has been the conductor and music director of the orchestra for the last ten years; Aaron Copland, composer, who will be a guest conductor, and Richard Burgin who has been the orchestra's associate conductor and concert master for the last forty years.

Dr. Munch, whose name by now has become a byword in the field of music, excels in the interpretation of Beethoven and the French composers. Mr. Copland, one of America's leading composers, has written ballet music (Billy the Kid), symphonies (Dance Symphony), chamber music, orchestral and choral works. One of his best known compositions is El Salon Mejico.

A word of warning: Dr. Munch values his privacy greatly, meaning he is a very difficult person to get hold of for interviews (shades of Stravinsky!) As Mr. William Morris puts it, "Bringing Munch over is like taking out a chandelier from Malacañang." Mr. Copland, it seems, is more the extrovert.

The Far Eastern tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be equal in scope and magnitude to its tour of Russia in 1956, during which it played in Moscow and Leningrad after its seventy-fifth season. Its own regular season in Boston is from October to April, after which Arthur Fiedler takes over, with the Symphony Orchestra then becomes the "Pops." In its absence this season, Mr. Fiedler will be playing with a substitute ensemble.

---

102 men, 2 women compose BSO group

Manila Chronicle 29 MAY 1960

The forthcoming [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is hold[illegible] concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, [illegible] 3, at 8:15 p.m. should focus interest on the 102-men and 2 women who compose the touring group.

Charles Munch, its director, once described his job as like that of a priest, his greatest responsibility that of keeping the programs and performances good enough to deserve well of its audiences.

How do the rank and file of the BSO look upon their sastifactorily renumerative jobs in the BSO, membership to which has been said to amount to a "gracious way of living?"

"This is not a job," says violinist Harry Dickson. "It's more like belonging to a family. Even socially we are closely knit. There is less jealousy than anywhere else I've ever worked, and everyone appreciates everyone."

"The high morale and spirit of the players," says Noah Bielski, also a violinist, is what lured him away from higher pay in New York TV and radio work.

Leon Burkat, music administrator of the BSO, holds the theory that its players fit in so happily because the jobs themselves, long established, unerringly attract the right people. Even new recruits, he states, very soon exude the air of belonging and will unselfconsciously refer to the orchestra as "Symphony" the same way older Bostonians do. ("I hear Heifetz is coming to town, I wonder if he will appear with the Symphony.")

The two women members of the BSO traveling with the group in its first Far Eastern tour are Olivia Hall Luetcke who plays the harp, and Winifred S. Winograd, cellist.

Tickets to the Manila concerts which will be presentations of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy, are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Play Before Manilans

Philippines Herald 8 APR 1960

By BETTY V. SEBASTIAN

THE 100-member of Boston Symphony Orchestra no less than three conductors is coming to town.

It will arrive in Manila on May 31 and give three concerts here on June 1, 2, and 3 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

Each program will be conducted by three conductors, namely, Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Aaron Copland, guest conductor and Richard Burgin, the orchestra's regular conductor and concert master, who has been with the orchestra for a number of years.

The Far Eastern tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will start with a concert in Seoul, Korea on April 29, after which they will give 22 performances in Japan, 15 concerts in other cities, three in Manila, seven in Australia and two in New Zealand, making a total of 36 concerts in all. They will return to the U.S. on June -9.

This tour is part of President Eisenhower's cultural program of international and cultural exchange. This is the program's major undertaking for the 1959-1960 season. It will be remembered that it was this same program which sponsored the Far East tour of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra.

The concerts which are being made possible in cooperation with ANTA (American National Theatre and Academy) will have Alfredo Lozano as Manila impresario. Lozano has asked Cesar Concio to draw up the plans for a stage big enough to accommodate the 100-piece orchestra. There are 14 technicians coming with the orchestra.

In a recent press conference William Cox, tour and promotions manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said that the tour had to be fitted in with the orchestra's other concert commitments in the United States.

Transporting a whole orchestra from one continent to another is no easy matter. According to Cox, all the trips will be done by air. The orchestra baggage alone weighs nine tons and requires a special plane. Packed in 85 theatrical trunks are the musical instruments. The music sheets weigh 700 lbs. A bass violin alone as 250 lbs. The orchestra is also taking along its own podium.

There are four ladies in the orchestra who are assigned to the violin, cello, harp and flute sections.

The orchestra has a nurse-secretary whose duties are manifold.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra celebrated its 75th successful concert season this year. A very long concert season, it starts October and ends April. After April this same orchestra becomes the popular Boston Pops Symphony Orchestra. This year, because of the Far Eastern tour,(Arthur Fieldler has been commissioned to prepare another orchestra which would carry on the Boston Pops Symphony concerts.

In 1956 the Boston Symphony Orchestra held a sucessful European tour which included stops in 26 cities. These included five concerts in Moscow and Leningrad where it was warmly received. According to Cox, who accompanies the orchestra in all its tours, there was no need of formal introductions in these two cities. The Russian violinists naturally gravitated towards their American counterparts and vice-versa. Ditto with the other sections of the orchestra, who were most eager to compare musical notes with their Russian colleagues.

While in Manila, the orchestra will hold two acoustical rehearsals at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum. These are informal rehearsals held to give the conductor a chance to gauge the acoustics of the hall.

Since the Boston Symphony Orchestra's main aim is to promote contemporary American music, it will be sure to include in each program at least one American composition of recent vintage. And since Munch leans towards Beethoven and the French composers, the program will also have a preponderance of their music, Aaron Copland, foremost living American composer, will conduct some of his own compositions.

Music aficionados, therefore, will have something to look forward to come June.

Manila Bulletin

80-Year-Old BSO Is Father To The Pops

25 MAY [illegible]

To many [illegible] Symphony ev[illegible] of Boston Pops [illegible] should. The distinguished [illegible] year-old orchestra, coming to Manila on June 1, 2 and 3 in the course of a concert tour of the Far East, is father to the "Pops."

Each spring, in the United States, when the winter season of the Boston Symphony ends, another season of the well-beloved Pops is launched. Inaugurated in 1885 and led by Conductor Arthur Fiedler since 1930, the Boston Pops orchestra, consisting of 90 of the over 100 regular members of the Boston Symphony, has become a national tradition and institution in America. As the Boston Pops, the group plays happy, light music to capacity audiences, seated at refreshments tables on the main floor or in the balconies of the famed Symphony Hall, home of the BSO since 1900.

The transition between Boston Symphony and Boston Pops involves the hurried clearing out of seats from the parquet floor of the Hall, bare minutes after the last notes of the final concert for the winter season of the BSO dies out, and the bringing in of refreshment tables at which the Pops audiences sit, to enjoy music from the orchestra meanwhile sipping light drinks.

The Boston Pops also goes on tour, and may consist of the regular BSO members, unless these are out of the country.

It will be Boston Symphony however and no Pops which will be touring the Far East this spring and stopping over in Manila for a series of three concerts. The concerts will be presentations of Impresario Alfredo Lozano in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy. The three conecrts, to be held in the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, at 8:15 p.m., will be conducted by Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the group, Aaron Copland, noted American contemporary composer who is traveling as a guest conductor of the orchestra, and Charles Munch, its music director.

Tickets to the concerts are now on sale at Botica Boie.

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Coming Revives Memories Of Boston Pops

Philippines Herald

With the coming of the Boston Symphony orchestra memories of the Boston Pops are revived for this distinguished 80-year-old [illegible] is the father to the "Pops."

Each spring, in the United States, when the winter season of the Boston Symphony ends, another season of the well-beloved "Pops" is launched. Inaugurated in 1885 and led by Conductor Arthur Fiedler since 1930, the Boston Pops orchestra, consisting of 90 of the over 100 regular members of the Boston Symphony, has become a national tradition and institution in America. As the Boston Pops, the group plays happy, light music to capacity audiences, seated at refreshments tables on the main floor or in the balconies of the famed Symphony Hall, home of the BSO since 1900.

The transition between Boston Symphony and Boston Pops involves the hurried clearing out of seats from the parquet floor of the hall, bare minutes after the last notes of the final concert for the winter season of the BSO dies out and the bringing in of refreshment tables at which the "Pops" audiences sit, to enjoy music from the orchestra meanwhile sipping light drinks.

The Boston Pops also goes on tour, and may consist of the regular BSO members, unless these are out of the country.

It will be Boston Symphony however and no "Pops" which will be touring the Far East this spring and stopping over in Manila for a series of three concerts. The concerts will be presentations of Impresario Alfredo Lozano in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy. The three concerts, to be held in the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, at 8:15 p.m., will be conducted by Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the group, Aaron Copland, noted American contemporary composer who is traveling as a guest conductor of the orchestra, and Charles Munch, its music director.

Tickets to the concerts are now on sale at Botica Boie.

Manila Chronicle Saturday, May 14, 1960

BSO earns well but never enough

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is coming to Manila for concerts on June 1, 2 and 3, has the reputation of being one music group that almost earns enough to make both ends meet.

It never quite accomplishes it, however, much to the discomfiture of its manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., and it depends for some of its expenses on public contributions, principally, funds raised by the volunteer organization known as the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The BSO, however, has certainly gone a far way towards independence from the days of its founder, Col. Henry Lee Higginson who shouldered its yearly deficits from inception to 1919 when he retired, and of Higginson's successor, Ernest Dane, who is known to have contributed in one year the amount of $100,000 from his own pocket towards the group's expenses.

During its 1958-59 season, the BSO made 90% of its budget through ticket sales, revenue from recordings, radio, television and broadcasting fees. It was the highest percentage of the budget earned through operations by a major orchestra in the United States, and, in a field where earnings of 40-50% are not unusual, certainly a remarkable feat.

The fact that the BSO receives no governmental subsidy whatever for its activities within the United States, makes the measure of financial stability enjoyed by the group noteworthy.

The BSO, however, has not reached the point when it will never have to worry about where the expenses for its next concert will come from. Its earnings going mostly to salaries for musicians, the orchestra itself is not a solvent entity. As its manager, Perry, once pointed out, "To mount a BSO concert costs $8,500. Selling one out, ordinarily brings $7,100. Multiply the difference by 220, the number of concerts given in a year, and the operating deficit is the result."

But operating deficits are in the tradition of great orchestras. "We are a public service institution," says Perry. "Our duty is to give music to people who need music, of whom there are more and more, and to keep it good..."

The BSO will be giving music to people in the Orient, for the first time in its 80 years of operations, in its forthcoming Far East tour, subsidized in part by the United States government.

The Manila concerts, to be held in the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, will be presentations of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Tickets are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Manila Bulletin

14 MAY 1960

BSO Never Earns Enough To Make Both Ends Meet

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is coming to Manila for concerts on July 1, 2, and 3, has the reputation of being one music group that almost earns enough to make both ends meet.

It never quite acomplishes it however, much to the discomfiture of its manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., and it depends for some of its expenses on public contribution principally, funds, raised by the volunteer organization known as the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The BSO however has certainly gone a far way towards independence from the days of its foundation Col. Henry Lee Higginson who shouldered its yearly deficits from inception to 1919 when he retired to die a year later, and of Higinson's successor, Ernest Dane, who is known to have contributed in one year the amount of $100,000 from his own pocket towards the group's expenses.

During its 1958-59 season, the BSO made 90 per cent of its budget earned through ticket sales, revenue from recordings, radio, television and broadcasting fees. It was the highest percentage of the budget earned through operations by a major orchestra in the United States, and in a field where earnings of 40-50 per cent are not unusual, certainly a remarkable feat.

Add the fact that the BSO receives no governmental subsidy whatever for its activities within the United States, and the measure of financial stability enjoyed by the group becomes one worthty of noting, cultural groups seldom being known for their business sense.

The BSO however has not yet reached that point when it will never have to worry about where the expenses for its next concert is coming from. Its earnings going mostly to salaries for the musicians, the orchestra itself is not solvent entity. As its manager, Perry, once pointed out, "To mount a BSO concert cost $8,500. Selling one number of concerts given in a year, and the operating deficit is the result."

But operating deficits are in the tradition of great orchestras. "We are a public service institution," says Perry. "Our duty is to give music to people who need music, of whom there are more and more, and keep it good.."

The BSO will be giving music to people in the Orient, for the first time in its 80 years of operations, in its forthcoming Far East tour, subsidized in part by the United States Government.

The Manila concerts, to be held in the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, will be presentations of Impresario Alfreado Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy. Tickets to these concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Philippines Herald

JUN 1960

ANOTHER unusual treat is in store for music lovers in this country with the scheduled series of performances here of the world-famous Boston Symphony orchestra. Fresh from a successful tour of the Far East, the BSO will give three concerts at the Rizal Memorial coliseum, starting tonight. For the rare privilege of seeing and listening to one of the world's greatest orchestras, we have again to thank our indefatigable impresario, Alfredo Lozano, who has spared neither time, effort nor expense in the effort to bring to this country the best in world cultural entertainment. This time, Mr. Lozano collaborated with the American National Theatre and Academy and the BSO itself, which is observing its 80th season this year with its first tour of the Far East, in availing music lovers here of the unique chance of seeing this famous assemblage of musicians in action.

29 MAY 1960

Manila Times

Society

Edited by G.R. Mendoza

TROUPERS ALL

More on the BSO concert performers

The forthcoming arrival here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is holding three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3, at 8:15 p.m. should focus interest on the 102-men and 2 women who compose the touring group.

Charles Munch, its director, once described his job as like that of a priest, his greatest responsibility that of keeping the programs and performances good enough to deserve well of its audiences.

How do the rank and file of the BSO look upon their satisfactorily renumerative jobs in the BSO, membership to which has been said to amount to a "gracious way of living?"

"This is not a job," says violinist Harry Dickson. "It's more like belonging to a family. Even socially we are closely knit. There is less jealousy than anywhere else I've ever worked, and evryone appreciates everyone."

"The hiph morale and spirit of the players," says Noa Bielski, also a violinist, is what lured him away from higher pay in New (Turn to M-4

More [illegible] BSO

From 6[illegible]

York TV and radio work.

Leon Burkat, music administrator of the BSO, holds the theory that its players fit in so happily because the jobs themselves, long established, unerringly attract the right people. Even new recruits, he states, very soon exude the air of belonging and will unself-consciously refer to the orchestra as "Symphony" the same way older Bostonians do. ("I bear Heifetz is coming to town. I wonder if he will appear with the Symphony").

The two women members of the BSO traveling with the group in its first Far Eastern tour are Olivia Hall Luetcke who plays the harp, and Winifred S. Winograd, cellist

Tickets to the Manila concerts which will be presentation of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy, are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Wednesday, May 25, 1960

Manila Chronicle

Boston Symphony [illegible] of 'Pops'

To [illegible] the Boston Symphony evokes thoughts of the [illegible]ton Pops, as it well should. The distinguished 80-year-old orchestra, which is coming to Manila on June 1, 2 and 3 in the course of a concert tour of the Far East, is in fact, father to the "pops."

Each spring, in the United States, when the winter season of the Boston Symphony ends, another season of the well-beloved Pops is launched.

Inaugurated in 1885 and led by Conductor Arthur Fiedler since 1930, the Boston Pops orchestra, consisting of 90 of the over 100 regular members of the Boston Symphony, has become a national tradition and an institution in America.

As the Boston Pops, the group plays happy and light music to capacity audiences, seated at refreshment tables on the main floor or in the balconies of the famed Symphony Hall, home of the BSO since 1900.

The transition between Boston Symphony and Boston Pops involves the hurried clearing out of seats from the parquet floor of the Hall, barely minutes after the last notes of the final concert for the winter season of the BSO die out, and the bringing in of refreshment tables. The Pops' audiences enjoy the orchestra's music while sipping light drinks.

The Boston Pops also goes on tour, and often consists of regular BSO members, unless these are out of the country.

It will be Boston Symphony, however, and no Pops which will be touring the Far East this spring. The group will stop over in Manila for a series of three concerts, all of while will be presentations of Impresario Alfredo Lozano in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy.

The three concerts, to be held in the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, at 8:15 p.m., will be conducted by Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the group; Aaron Copland, noted American contemporary composer, who is traveling as a guest conductor; and Charles Munch, BSO music director.

Evening News 25 MAY 1960

Boston Symphony Father To Popular Boston Pops

To many people, Boston Symphony evokes thoughts of Boston Pops as it well should. The distinguished 80-year-old orchestra, coming to Manila on June 1, 2 and 3 in the course of a concert tour of the Far East, is father to the 'Pops."

Each spring, in the United States, when the winter season of the Boston Symphony ends, another season of the well-beloved Pops is launched. Inaugurated in 1885 and led by Conductor Arthur Fiedler since 1930, the Boston Pops orchestra, consisting of 90 of the over 100 regular members of the Boston Symphony, has become a national tradition and institution in America. As the Boston Pops, the group plays happy, light music to capacity audiences, seated at refreshments tables on the main floor or in the balconies of the famed Symphony Hall, home of the BSO since 1900.

The transition between Boston Symphony and Boston Pops involves the hurried clearing out of seats from the parquet floor of the Hall, bare minutes after the last notes of the final concert for the winter season of the [illegible] dies out, and the [illegible] in of refres[illegible] tables at which the [illegible] audiences sit, to enj[illegible] music from the orches[illegible]hile sipping light [illegible]

The Boston [illegible] goes on tour, [illegible] may consist of the regular BSO members, unless these are out of the country.

It will be Boston Symphony, however, and no Pops which will be touring the Far East this spring and stopping over in Manila for a series of three concerts. The concerts will be presentations of Impresario Alfredo Lozano in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy. The three concerts, to be held in the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, at 8:15 p.m., will be conducted by Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the group, Aaron Copland, noted American contemporary composer who is traveling as a guest conductor of the orchestra, and Charles Munch, its music director.

Tickets to the concerts are now on sale at Botica Boie.

FEMININE TOUCH

Manila Times 20 MAY 1960

Women musicians in BSO concert

Expected to arrive in Manila at the end of this month are 102 men and two women who hold "the most attractive musical jobs in America."

These are the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is marking its 80th season with its first tour of the Far East. Due to arrive in Manila in the course of this trip for performances on June 1, 2 and 3, the BSO will be presented at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

At the head of the group will be Charles Munch, its music director, Aaron Copland, American contemporary composer who is traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, associate director and considered the orchestra's most significant acquisition in recent decades. The three will take turns wielding the baton, Burgin on June 1, Copland on June 2, and Munch on June 3.

The rest of the playing members of the orchestra, represent a selected, literally hand-picked collection of musicians from among thousands whose life aspiration is to be a member of the orchestra, and there are thousands who apply whenever a vacancy occurs.

There is nothing hasty about the way the Boston Symphony takes on a new member, according to Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet player and personnel manager of the BSO in addition since 1942. One of Mazzeo's duties is to keep track of musicians throughout the United States who seem to be likely candidates for membership. When a vacancy arises in the BSO, the most promising applicants are notified, assembled and auditioned (from behind a curtain) by a jury. This is how the process of selecting a musician for a job in the BSO has been described. From four to seven of these candidates are selected by this jury for the next stage of elimination—another audition attended by Munch himself, who may also interview them personally, make them play as he conducts, and sight-read. The lucky winner is usually in a state of near prostration by the time he is selected, but none ever complains. He has come into what Henry B. Cabot, president of the BSO trustees, calls the "most attractive musical job in America."

Tickets to all the three concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

143

BSO arrives tod[illegible] Tokyo

Manila [illegible]

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is expected at five p.m. today at the Balagbag terminal of the Manila International Airport. The group, consisting of 104 musicians, three conductors and a staff of 11, is flying in directly from Tokyo abroad three specially chartered CAT planes.

Scheduled to give three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3, under the auspices of Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA), the Boston Symphony is observing its 80th season this year with its first tour of the Far East.

At the head of the touring orchestra are Dr. Charles Munch, its music director, Aaron Copland, eminent American composer traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, associate director. The three will take turns conducting the orchestra for its three engagements here, Burgin to be at the podium on June 1, Copland on June 2 and Munch on June 3. All concerts will start at 8:15 p.m.

The activities planned for the visitors, besides the concerts, include a press conference at the MOPC where Copland will be the subject of a meet-the-press gathering on June 1, at 12:30 noon: a reception to be given in honor of orchestra members by U.S. Ambassador and Mrs. John Hickerson from 5:30 to 7 p.m.; an after-concert supper on June 2 for members of the orchestra to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barnsley; a visit to Malacañang (tentative) on June 3, at 10:30 a.m.; a meeting of the League of Composers at the Philippine Women's University, with Copland as guest speaker, at 4 p.m.; and a reception for Copland from 5:30-7 p.m. at the residence of U.S. Cultural Attache William Morris.

Its current tour is the third outside the United States to be undertaken by the BSO, since 1952 when Director Munch took the distinguished American orchestra on its first foreign trip. In that year, the BSO visited Europe at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom and held concerts in Paris, the Hague, Amsterdam, Brussels, Frankfort, Berlin, Strasbourg, Metz, Lyon, Bordeaux and London. Its second foreign tour was made in 1956 when its itinerary included Leningrad and Moscow, the BSO thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia.

America's first permanent orchestra to devote its sole energies to ideal performances of symphony music, the BSO was organized by Henry Lee Higginson, in 1881, in answer to a great need felt in the United States then for a symphony group of the highest European standards.

It held its first concert in the Boston Music Hall on Oct. 22, 1881, with the German George Henschel as conductor. Since then, the BSO has had eleven conductors, and acquired its permanent home, Symphony Hall, where it has held regular concerts every winter. It also owns Tanglewood, where over 180,000 people hear its concerts annually in the summer.

The present director of the BSO, Munch, one of the foremost musicians to come from France, was preceded by the famous Serge Koussevitzky, who enjoyed the longest term to be held by any single conductor in the BSO, from 1924 to 1948, when he retired.

An orchestra with a wide repertoire the BSO has shown range and versatility in its program selections, reviving [illegible]

FIRST NIGHT

Manila Times

1 JUN 1960

Boston symphony before Manilans

The curtain will rise at 8:15 tonight on the maiden performance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which arrived in Manila yesterday for a series of three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, tonight, June 2 and June 3.

Richard Burgin, associate music director of the Boston Symphony group, will conduct the concert this evening. The BSO, now touring this part of the world for the first time in its 80-year existence, will be presented here by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA). It flew in from Tokyo after a 30-concert tour of Japan. It has also performed in Taipei and in Seoul. From Manila the group is flying to Australia.

The complete program for this evening follows:

I. Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion . . . KIRCHNER

II. Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous) . . . . MAHLER

INTERMISSION

III. Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64 . . . TCHAIKOVSKY

Andante: Allegro con anima

Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza

Valse: Allegro moderato

Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace

At 12:30 noon today, America's foremost composer today, Aaron Copland, who is traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, will be guest at a press conference at the MOPC. Later in the afternoon, from 5:30 to 7:00, U.S. Ambassador and Mrs. John D. Hickerson will honor the orchestra members at a reception at their residence on Dewey Boulevard.

First of three concerts slated by BSO tonight

Manila Chronicle

1 JUN 1960

The curtain will rise at 8:15 p.m. today, June 1, on the maiden performance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which arrived in Manila yesterday for a series of three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum starting tonight through June 3.

Richard Burgin, associate music director of the Boston Symphony group, will conduct the concert this evening. The BSO, now touring this part of the world for the first time in its 80-year existence, will be presented here by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

The 104-member orchestra flew in from Tokyo after a 30-concert tour of Japan, and has also performed in Taipei and in Seoul. From Manila the group is flying to Australia.

The complete program for this evening follows:

I. Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion —Kirchner.

II. Adagio from the "Tenth Symphony" (Posthumous) — Mahier.

III. Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64 — Tchaikovsky — Andante: Allegro co nanima, Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza, Valse: Alegro moderato Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace.

At 12:30 p.m. today, America's foremost composer of contemporary times, Aaron Copland, who is traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, will be the guest at a press conference at the MOPC.

Later in the afternoon, from 5:30 to 7 o'clock U.S. Ambassador and Mrs. John D. Hickerson will honor the orchestra members at a reception at their residence on Dewey Boulevard.

BSO expected tomorrow; welcome at airport set

Manila Chronicle

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is expected to arrive at the Manila International Airport tomorrow, May 30, at 5 p.m. aboard three specially chartered CAT planes.

At the head of the group, currently touring the Far East and scheduled to give three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, will be music director, Dr. Charles Munch, Aaron Copland, guest conductor and eminent American composer, Richard Burgin, associate director.

The BSO has been engaged to perform in Manila on June 1, 2 and 3 by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy. It will be coming directly from Tokyo where the 104-man orchestra is today winding up a 30-concert tour of Japan.

A big crowd, composed of Filipino musicians and music lovers, is set to welcome the BSO at the airport. The Philippine Constabulary Band will also be on hand to greet the eminent group, America's first permanent symphony orchestra, which this year observes its 80th season.

Burgin will conduct the first concert to be given here by the BSO on June 1, while Copland will wield the baton on June 2. Munch will be at the podium for the farewell concert on June 3. All performances will start at 8:15 p.m.

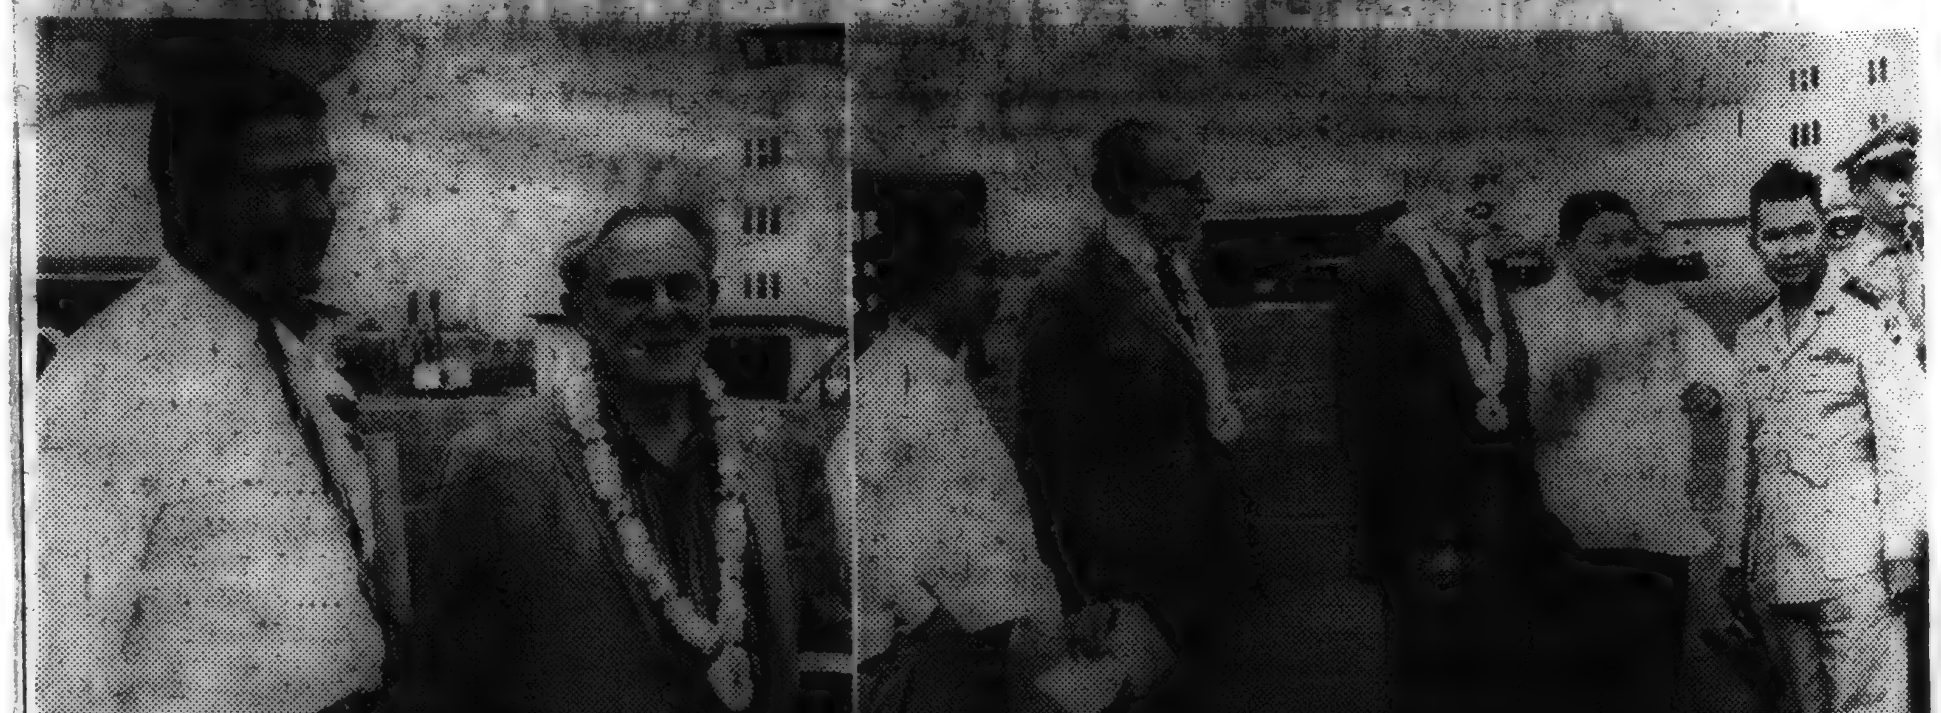
Tickets to all the concerts are on sale at the Botica Boie.

THE PHILIPPINES HERALD

1 JUN 1960

W

Boston Symphony Orchestra Here For Concert Series



THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, with three famous conductors, arrived aboard two chartered planes from Tokyo, yesterday for a series of three concerts here beginning tonight at 8:15 o'clock at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum. The BSO will be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy. The group, which came from successful performances in Tokyo as part of its Far East tour, was headed by Dr. Charles Munch, music director (third from right, photo at right). With Munch are (from right) Col. Antonino Buenaventura, conductor of the Philippine Constabulary band, Lozano, Aaron Copland, eminent American composer and guest conductor, and Prof. Felipe Padilla de Leon, Filipino composer and conductor. Photo at left shows Richard Burgin, (right) associate conductor, who will lead the BSO in its debut concert tonight, and William Morris, American embassy's cultural attaché.

MANILA, P.I.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN TOWN.—One hundred eight members of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived yesterday afternoon aboard two chartered planes from Tokyo for a series of performances at the Rizal Coliseum starting today. Photo shows the group headed by Aaron Copland, composer (second from left); Dr. Charles Munch, music director (fourth from left); T[illegible] Perry, (right), orchestra manag[illegible] Richard Burgin, associate direct[illegible]

1 JUN 1960

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HERE — The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived yesterday in the course of its tour of the Far East. It will give its first concert here tonight at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. From left: R. S. Burnsly of the US embassy, Mrs. Thomas Perry, Prof. Felipe P[illegible]dilla de Leon, Aaron Copland, Miss Liwanag Cruz, Ch[illegible] Munch, Alfredo Lozano, Thomas Perry, orchestra [illegible] and Lt. Col. Antonino Buenaventura.*

1 JUN 1960

BSO ARRIVES FROM TOKYO — The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived at 4:30 yesterday afternoon at the Balagbag terminal of the Manila International Airport for three performances here. The group, composed of 104 musicians, three conductors and a staff of 11, came aboard three specially chartered Civil Air Transport planes. They will perform at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum from June 1 to 3 at 8:15 in the evening. Photo shows officials of the symphony orchestra being greeted upon their arrival at the airport. From left are Felipe Padilla de Leon, Aaron Copland, Charles Munch, Impresario Alfredo Lozano, Charles Bu[illegible] Lt. Col. Antonino Buenaventura, and Bernardino [illegible] (Story on page 8.)

145

BSO Arriving Today For 3 Concerts Here

Philippines Herald
3[illegible] MAY 19[illegible]

The Bos[illegible] Sym[illegible]ny Orchestra is [illegible] 5 p.m. today at th[illegible] terminal of [illegible] International Airpor[illegible] group, consisting of [illegible]sicians, three conductors and a staff of 11, is flying in directly from Tokyo aboard three specially chartered CAT planes.

Scheduled to give three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3, under the auspices of Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA), the Boston Symphony is observing its 80th season this year with its first tour of the Far East.

At the head of the touring orchestra are Dr. Charles Munch, its music director, Aaron Copland, eminent American composer traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, associate director. The three will take turns conducting the orchestra for its three engagements here, Burgin to be at the podium on June 1, Copland on June 2 and Munch on June 3. All concerts will start at 8:15 p.m.

The activities planned for the visitors, besides the concerts, include a press conference at the MOPC where Copland will be the subject of a meet-the-press gathering on June 1, at 12:30 p.m.; a reception to be given in honor of orchestra members by U S Ambassador and Mrs. John D. Hickerson from 5:30 to 7 p.m.; an after-concert supper on June 2, for members of the orchestra, to be given by Mr. and Mrs Richard Barnsley; a visit to Malacañang (tentative) on June 3, at 10:30 a.m.; a meeting of the League of Composers at the Philippine Women's University, with Copland as guest speaker, at 4 p.m.; and a reception for Copland from 5:30 to 7 p.m. at the residence of U.S. Cultural Attache William Morris.

Its current tour is the third outside the United States to be undertaken by the BSO, since 1952 when Director Munch took the distinguished American orchestra on its first foreign trip In that year, the BSO visited Europe at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom and held concerts in Paris, the Hague, Amsterdam, Brussels, Frankfurt, Berlin, Strasbourg, Metz, Lyon, Bordeaux and London. Its second foreign tour was made in 1956 when its itinerary included Leningrad and Moscow, the BSO thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia.

America's first permanent orchestra to devote its sole energies to ideal performances of symphony music, the BSO was organized by Henry Lee Higginson, in 1881, in answer to a great need felt in the United States then for a symphony group of the highest European standards. It held its first concert in the Boston Music Hall on Oct. 22, 1881, with the German George Henschel as conductor. Since then, the BSO has had 11 conductors, and acquired its permanent home, Symphony Hall, where it has held regular concerts every winter, it also owns Tanglewood, where over 180,000 people annually hear its concerts in the summer.

The present director of the BSO, Munch, one of the foremost musicians to come from France, was preceded by the famous Serge Kousevitzky, who enjoyed the longest term to be held by any single conductor in the BSO, from 1924 to 1948, when he retired. An orchestra with a wide repertoire, the BSO has shown range and versatility in its program selections, reviving [illegible] as well as introduc[illegible] deserving contemporary [illegible]

Boston symphony due here today

Manila Times
31 MAY 1960

The Boston symphony orchestra is expected at 5 p.m. today at the Balagbag terminal of the Manila international airport.

The group, consisting of 1[illegible] musicians, three conductors and a staff of 11, is flying in directly from Tokyo for three concerts at the Rizal memorial coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3 under the auspices of Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy, (ANTA).

The Boston symphony is observing its 80th season this year with its first tour of the Far East.

At the head of the touring orchestra are Dr. Charles Munch, its music director, Aaron Copland, eminent American composer traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, associate director.

The three will take turns conducting the orchestra for its three engagements here. Burgin will be at the podium on June 1, Copland on June 2 and Munch on June 3. All concerts will start at 8:15 p.m.

The activities planned for the visitors, besides the concerts, include a press conference at the MOPC where Copland will be the subject of a meet-the-press gathering on June 1, at 12:30 noon; a reception to be given in honor of orchestra members by US Ambassador and Mrs. John D. Hickerson for 5:30 to 7 in the afternoon; an after-concert supper on June 2 for members of the orchestra, to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barnsley; a visit to Malacañang (tentative) on June 3, at 10:30 a.m.; a meeting of the League of Composers at the Philippine Women's university, with Copland as guest speaker, at 4 p.m.; and a reception for Copland from 5:30-7 p.m. at the residence of US Cultural Attache William Morris.

BSO arrives for concerts

Manila Chronicle
[illegible] JUN 19[illegible]

The [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra, he[illegible] by Dr. Charles Munch, [illegible]sic director, shortly before 5 p.m. yesterday aboard two chartered Civil Air Transport planes from Tokyo.

The group, composed of musicians, three conductors and a staff of 10, is scheduled to give a series of three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on three consecutive days, beginning today.

The concert will be held under the auspices of Alfredo Lozano, local impresario, in collaboration with the American National Theater and Academy.

Munch said he found the Asians to be "a very enthusiastic and interested audience." He expressed the hope that the Filipinos would enjoy the repertoire to be presented by the orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra held concert engagements in packed halls in Taiwan and Tokyo. From Manila, the orchestra will proceed to Australia and New Zealand before returning to the United States.

The orchestra is here in the course of a Far East tour. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is observing its 80th season this year.

With Dr. Munch were Aaron Copland, eminent American composer traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, associate director.

The three will take turns in conducting the orchestra in its three performances here. Burgin will be at the podium tonight, Copland on June 2, tomorrow, and Munch on June 3. All concerts will start at 8:15 p.m.

Its current tour is the third outside the U.S. the first took the orchestra to Europe at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom. It held concerts then in Paris, the Hague, Amsterdam, Brussels, Frankfurt, Berlin, London and other places.

SECOND TOUR

In 1956, the orchestra made its second foreign tour. Its itinerary included Leningrad and Moscow, thus making the BSO the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia.

Members of the official party, besides the three conductors, are Thomas Perry, Jr., manager; Mrs. Perry, Norman, S. Shirk, Leonard Burkat, Sarah M. Hempel, Keran M. Chobanian, Roger Toureau, Harvey Genereux, Alfred Robison, Daniel Mariarty and William J. Cox.

The musicians include the following: Victor Alpert, John Barwicki, Minot A. Beale, Stanley W. Benson, Noah Bielski, Theodore E. Brewster, Melvin Bryant, Arthur I. Berv, Jean Cauhape, Bartolomeo Aka Cioffi, Gino Cioffi, Andre Come, Joseph de Pasquale, Jean Constant de Vergie, Samuel Diamond, Harold Farberman, Everett Joseph Firth, Ir[illegible] Fra[illegible]kel, Henry S. Freeman, Armando A. Ghita[illegible], William McHargue, [illegible], Gerard J. Gogu[illegible], [illegible] Gomberg, Einar [illegible] Hansen, Earl L. Hedberg, Martin Hoherman, John A. Holems, George Humphrey;

Bernard Kadinoff, Kauko, E. Kahila, Phillip Kaplan, Richard R. Kapuscinski, Robert L. Karol, Paul F. Keaney, Clarence F. Knudson, Emil Kornsand, Alfred Krips, Jacobus C. Langendoen, Eugene E. Lehner, Jerome J. Lipson, Olivia Hall Luetcke, George Peter Madsen, William C. Marshall, Leslie R. Martin, Vincent J. Mauricci, Pierre E. Mayer, Samuel H. Mayers, Rosario Mazzeo, Osbourne E. McConathy, Saverio Messina, Georges E. Moleux, Leonard G. Moss, William C. Moyer, Laszlo J. Nagy, Micha Nieland, Josfe A. Orosz, Fredy Ostrovsky,, Leo Panasevich, Ernest Panenka, James Pappaoutsakis, Ayrton Pinto;

Richard E. Plaster, Henry Portnoi, Ralph Pottle, Vladimir, Resnikoff, Robert L. Ripley, Sheldon Rotenberg, John Sant Ambrogio, Alfred L. Schneider, Lois Elizabeth Schafer, Harry Shapiro, Roger Shermont, Herman Silberman, Joseph H. Silverstein, Charles J. Schmidt, Kilton V. Smith, Louis M. Spey[illegible] James Stagliano, [illegible] A. Stonestreet, [illegible] S. Tapley, Harold [illegible] Thompson, Felix A. [illegible] L. Voisin, [illegible] nard Zighera, Manue Zung, Francis de Pasquale, Alfred Kishkis, Julius Schulman, Raymond H. Sird and David Wulliger.

The BSO, first American orchestra [illegible] devote its sole energies to ideal performances of symphony music, was organized by Henry Lee Higginson in 1881. It held its first concert in the Boston Music Hall on Oct. 22, 1881 with the German George Henschel as conductor. Since then, the orchestra has had 11 conductors and acquired its permanent home, Symphony Hall, where it has held regular concerts every winter. It also owns Tanglewood, where over 180,000 people annually hear the concerts in the summer.

An orchestra with a wide repertoire, the BSO has shown range and versatility in its program selections, reviving classics as well as introducing deserving contemporary works.

Manila Bulletin

Column Eight

2 JUN 1960

By APOLONIO BATAL[illegible]

Whenever a touring orchestra comes around to play for Manilans, Impresario Alfredo Lozano invites society editors and reporters only for a press conference.

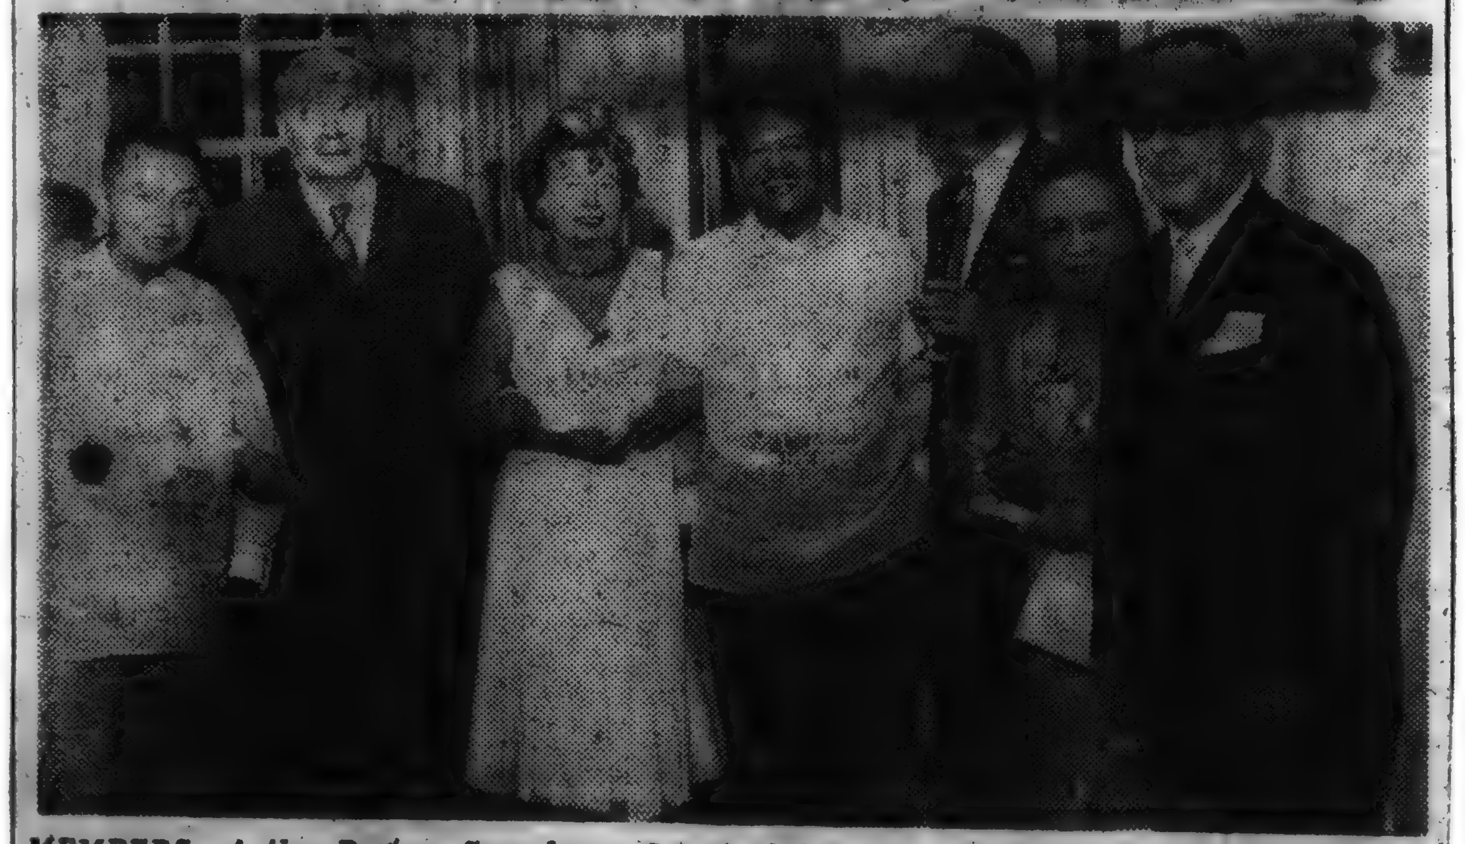
He must believe that only newshens are fond of writing about concerts and music in general.

Well, at any rate, only newspaper girls were present at his press conference at the Narra room yesterday and so it is from girls that we receive the information that members of the Boston Symphony orchestra love our black cigarettes, beer and rum.

The girls say while Von Karajan was haughty and aloof and not beyond breaking a glass, Dr. Charles Munch, B.S.O.'s music director was warm and friendly. Some of the girls may call Dr. Munch "Pops," but Lozano says he is only 42.

THE PHILIPPINES HERALD 2 JUN 1960

Ambassador, Mrs. Hickerson Give Reception For BSO Members



MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were honored at an evening reception yesterday by American Ambassador and Mrs. John D. Hickerson at the American embassy residence on Del Pan street, Pasay city. Shown above are (from left) Col. Antonino Buenaventura, Dr. Charles Munch, Mrs. Hickerson, Bernardino Custodio, Aaron Copland, Mrs. Maria Orense Cases and Ambassador Hickerson. (Herald Photo)

HE WIELDS THE BATON

Manila Times 27 APR 1960

Burgin holds Legion of Honor

Richard Burgin will conduct the first concerts to be given in Manila by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Performance dates are on June 1, 2 and 3, at 8:15 p.m., Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

The famed American orchestra, which is marking its 80th season with an initial tour of the Far East, will be presented in Manila by impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration wtih the American National Theatre and Academy.

Associate conductor of the organization since 1943, Burgin takes over the podium for several weeks during the Boston Symphony's winter season in the United States.

A former child prodigy who first made his public appearance as soloist with the Philharmonic society of his native Warsaw, he first joined the orchestra in 1920 after being concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony. Earlier, he was concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra.

Burgin studied the violin in Berlin with Joachim as his teacher. Among his fellow students were Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz. Active in chamber music, he founded the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm which toured Europe regularly. During his first stay in the United States, he formed a similar quartet in Boston.

His assignment with the Boston Symphony includes charge of chamber music at the Bershire Music Center and a summer school, both entities maintained by the orchestra in Tanglewood.

As conductor for the orchestra, he introduced or reintroduced many compositions to its audiences. Last year, the Bruckner Symphony No. 5 was played by the orchestra for the first time since 1901. In the [illegible] he conducted the Symphony No. 2 by Mahler in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth.

France awarded Burgin the Legion of Honor in 1955. He is married to the American violinist Ruth Posselt. His Manila tint promises an auspicious start for performances of the Boston Symphony here.

Tickets are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

1st BSO concert to be conducted by R. Burgin

Richard Burgin will be the conductor for the first of three concerts to be given in Manila by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled to perform here on June 1, 2, and 3.

The famed American orchestra, which is marking its 80th season with an initial tour of the Far East, will be presented in Manila by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy. The concerts will be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15 p.m.

Associate conductor of the organization since 1943, Burgin takes over the podium for several weeks during the Boston Symphony's winter season in the United States. The former child prodigy made his first public appearance as soloist with the Philharmonic Society of his native Warsaw. He first joined the orchestra in 1920 after a noteworthy career as concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony. Earlier, he had been concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra.

Manila Chronicle 27 APR 1960

Famous conductor tapped for BSO

Manila Times 26 MAY 1960

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's opening night on June 1 at the Rizal memorial coliseum will be conducted by its associate conductor, Richard Burgin, considered one of the best conductors today. He joined the orchestra in 1920 and was appointed assistant conductor in 1935.

Warsaw-born Burgin made his first public appearance at 11 as a soloist with the Warsaw philharmonic society. He studied in Berlin with the famous teacher Joachim. From 1908 to 1912 he was under the tutelage of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg, counting among his classmate Toscha Seidel and Jascha Heifetz. In 1912, he became the concertmaster of the Helsinki orchestra, and from 1916 until 1920 when he was appointed concertmaster of the BSO, at the age of 27, he was with the Oslo symphony in the same capacity.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Burgin was founder of the Burgin string quartet which went on regular tours. In his first year in the United States, he formed the Burgin string quartet in Boston. He has also conducted the new England conservatory orchestra and the Harvard university orchestra. He is at present in charge of chamber music at the summer music school maintained by the BSO in Tanglewood. France made him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1955.

Burgin usually conducts the BSO for several weeks each season in Boston and on tour. He has introduced or re-introduced many compositions to the orchestra's audiences, among them the first performance by the BSO since 1901 of the Bruckner Symphony No. 5, and Mahler's Symphony No. 2, conducted in honor of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth.

The two other conductors who are scheduled to conduct in Manila are Aaron Copland, guest conductor, on June 2 and Charles Munch, music director, on the last and farewell performance of the world famous symphony group on June 3 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

RICHARD BURGIN

Burgin to conduct maiden BSO concert

Manila Chronicle 26 MAY 1960

Warsaw-born, Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as a soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with the famous teacher Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 was under the tutelage of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg, counting among his classmates, Toscha Seidel and Jascha Heifetz. In 1912, he became the concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra, and from 1916 until 1920 when he was appointed concertmaster of the BSO, at the age of 27, he was with the Oslo Symphony in the same capacity.

BURGIN

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Burgin was founder of the Burgin String Quartet which went on regular tours. In his first year in the United States, he formed the Burgin String Quartet in Boston. He has also conducted the New England Conservatory Orchestra and the Harvard University Orchestra.

He is at present in charge of chamber music at the summer music school maintained by the BSO in Tanglewood. France made him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1955.

Burgin usually conducts the BSO for several weeks each season in Boston and on tour. He has introduced or re-introduced many compositions to the Orchestra's audiences, among them the first performance by the BSO since 1901 of the Bruckner Symphony No. 5, and Mahler's Symphony No. 2, conducted in honor of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth.

The two other conductors who are scheduled to conduct in Manila are Aaron Copland, guest conductor, on June 2 and Charles Munch, music director, on the last and farewell performance of the world famous symphony group on June 3 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ARRIVES. Dr. Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, shakes hands with impresario Alfredo Lozano (left) as Mrs. Thomas Perry and Richard Barnsley, U.S. embassy public relations officer, looks on. The Boston Symphony orchestra arrived yesterday and will open its three-day Manila engagement this evening at the Rizal Memorial coliseum with Richard Burgin conducting. Guest conductor Aaron Copland will take his turn tomorrow, and Dr. Munch will conduct Friday.

Manila Bulletin 31 MAY 1960 1 JUN 1960

Daily Mirror 31 MAY 1960

Manila welcomes the BSO

The city welcomes this afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has just completed a successful engagement in Tokyo in the course of its Far Eastern tour. The three performances here, to be held on successive nights at the Rizal Memorial starting tomorrow, are an event to look forward to. This is the orchestra's first tour of the Far East It has already performed in European capitals under the auspices of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, and in Moscow and Leningrad as part of the cultural exchange program between the US and the Soviet Union.

Founded in 1881, the Boston Symphony has earned a name as [illegible] of the world's greatest orchestras [illegible] is only proper, however, it take [illegible] pride in presenting [illegible], and its three programs [illegible] bear witness to this fact.

Accompanying it is Aaron Copland, eminent American composer, who will lead the orchestra in a performance of two of his major works.

For this musical treat, credit is due to the men and the organizations which have made its appearance here possible. Among them are Impresario Alfredo Lozano, the American National Theater and Academy, and of course the Boston Symphony itself.

Welcome Guests 31 MAY 1960

Evening News 31 MAY 1960

Boston Symphony Due Today

The world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is observing its 80th season this year, is scheduled to arrive at 5 p.m. today at the Balagbag terminal of the Manila International Airport for a series of concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 1, 2 and 3.

Conducting its first tour of the Far East, the group consists of 104 musicians, three conductors and a staff of 11, and is headed by Dr. Charles Munch, BSU music director; Aaron Copland, eminent American composer traveling with the touring orchestra as guest conductor; and Richard Burgin, associate director.

The three will take turns conducting the orchestra for its three engagements here, Burgin to be at the podium on June 1, Copland on June 2 and Munch on June 3. All concerts will start at 8:15 p.m.

Local impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theater and Academy, is sponsoring the Manila concerts of the orchestra.

Besides the concerts, the visitors will hold a press conference at the MOPC at 12:30 noon on June 1. They will also be guests at the reception to be tendered in their honor by U.S. Ambassador and Mrs. John D. Hickerson from 5:30 to 7 p.m. on the same day.

An after-concert supper awaits the group on June 2, to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barnsley. Also included in their itinerary are a visit to Malacañang at 10:30 a.m., June 3; at a meeting of the League of Composers at the Philippine Women's university, with Copland as guest speaker, at 4 p.m.; and a reception for Copland from 5:30 to 7 p.m. at the residence of U.S. Cultural Attache William Morris.

147

Richard Burgin To Conduct First Of Three Concerts Here

Manila Bulletin 27 APR 1960

Richard Burgin will be the conductor [illegible] first of three concerts to be given in Manila by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is scheduled to perform [illegible] on June 1, 2, and 3.

The famed American orchestra, which is marking its 80th season with an initial tour of the Far East will be presented in Manila by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy. The concerts will be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15 p.m.

Associate conductor of the organization since 1943, Burgin takes over the podium for several weeks during the Boston Symphony's winter season in the United States. A former child prodigy who first made his public appearance as soloist with the Philharmonic society of his native Warsaw, he first joined the orchestra in 1920 after a noteworthy career as concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony. Earlier, he had been concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra.

Burgin studied the violin in Berlin with Joachim as his teacher. Among his fellow students were Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz. Active in chamber music, he founded the Burgin string quartet in Stockholms which toured Europe regularly. In his first year of residence in the United States, he formed a similar quartet in Boston.

His assignment with the Boston Symphony include charge of chamber music at the Bershire Music Center and a summer school, both entities maintained by the orchestra in Tanglewood.

As conductor for the orchestra, he is known to have introduced or re-introduced many compositions to its audiences. Last year, the Bruckner Symphony No. 5 was played by the orchestra under his lead for the first time since 1901. In the same season he conducted the Symphony No. 2 by Mahler, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth.

France made Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1955. He is marri[illegible] to the Americ[illegible] vi[illegible] Ruth Posselt. His co[illegible]g in Manila, is expe[illegible] [illegible]set off the series of performances of the Boston Symphony here to a distinguished [illegible] Tick[illegible] now on [illegible]le at the Botica Boie.

Z

Concert premiere tonight

Daily Mirror

The pr[illegible] performance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens at the Rizal Memorial coliseum, tonight at 8:15.

Richard Burgin, associate music director of the Boston Symphony group, will conduct this evening. The BSO is being presented here by Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

The complete program for this evening follows: I. Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion — Kirchner; II. Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous) — Mahler.

Intermissio[illegible] Symphony No. [illegible] in [illegible], Op. 64 — Tch[illegible]; Adante: Allegro con anima; Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza; Valse: Allegro moderato; Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace.

Burgin Leads BSO Tonight

Evening News JUN 1960

The curtain will rise at 8:15 p.m. tonight on the premiere performance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which arrived in Manila yesterday for a series of three concerts at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, tonight, June 2 and June 3.

Richard Burgin, associate music director of the Boston Symphony group, will conduct the concert this evening. The BSO, now touring this part of the world for the first time in its 80-year existence, will be presented here by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA). It flew in from Tokyo after a 30-concert tour to Japan, and has also performed in Taipei and in Seoul. From Manila the group is flying to Australia.

The complete program for this evening follows:

I. Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percusion .... Kirchner

II. Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous) Mahler

Intermission

III. Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64 .... Tchaikovsky

An[illegible]nte: Allegro con [illegible]a Andante cantabile con [illegible] licenza

Valse: Allegro mo[illegible]rato

Finale: Andante maestro; Allegro

Bur[illegible]eld Bato[illegible] Co[illegible]t [illegible]ght

[illegible] at [illegible] performance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which arrived in Manila yesterday fo[illegible] series of three concerts at [illegible] Rizal Memorial Coliseum, tonight, June 2 and June 3.

Richard Burgin, associate music director of the Boston Symphony group, will conduct the concert this evening. The BSO, now touring this part of the world for the first time in its 80-year existence, will be presented here by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA). It flew in from Tokyo after a 30-concert tour of Japan and has also performed in Taipeh and in Seoul. From Manila the group is flying to Australia.

The complete program for this evening follows; Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion by Kirchner; Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous) by Mahler; Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64 by Tchaikovsky, Andante: Allegro con anima, Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza, Valse: Allegro moderato, Finale: Andante meastoso; Allegro vivace.

At 12:30 noon today, America's foremost composer of contemporary times, Aaron Copland, who is traveling with the BSO [illegible] guest conductor, will be [illegible] guest at a press [illegible] at the MOPC. Later [illegible] the afternoon, from 5:30 to 7 U.S. Ambassador and Mrs. John D. Hickerson will honor the orchestra at a reception at their residence on Dewey Boulevard.

Society

ACTIVITIES ★ PERSONALITIES

edited by LOURDES PEÑA HENSON

Philippines Herald 1 JUN 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Maiden Performance This Evening

The curtain will rise at 8:15 p.m. tonight on the maiden performance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which arrived in Manila yesterday for a series of three concerts at the Rizal Memorial coliseum, tonight, June 2 and June 3.

Richard Burgin, associate music director of the Boston Symphony group, will conduct the concert this evening. The BSO, now touring this part of the world for the first time in its 80-year existence, will be presented here by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA). It flew in from Tokyo after a 30-concert tour of Japan, and has also performed in Taipei and in Seoul. From Manila the group is flying to Australia.

The compl[illegible] for this evening follows:

I. Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion — Kirchner.

II. Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous) — Mahler.

INTERMISSION

III. Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64 — Tchaikovsky.

Andante: Allegro con anima.

Andante cantabile con alcuna licenza.

Valse: Allegro moderato.

Finale: Andante maestoso; Allegro vivace.

At 12:30 noon today, America's foremost composer of contemporary times, Aaron Copland, who is traveling with the BSO [illegible] guest conductor, will [illegible] guest at a press conference at the MOPC. Later in the afternoon, from 5:30 to 7, U.S. Ambassador and Mrs. John D. Hickerson will honor the orchestra members at a reception at their residence on Dewey Boulevard.

BSO First Manila Concert Will Be Conducted By Richard Burgin

Philippines Herald 28 APR 1960

The Boston Symphony orchestra will be conducted by Richard Burgin when it gives it first Manila concert on June 1 at the Rizal Memorial coliseum at 8:15 p.m. Other Manila performances of the group are set for June 2 and 3.

The famed American orchestra, which is marking its 80th season with an initial tour of the Far East, will be presented in Manila by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theater and Academy.

Associate condu[illegible] of the organization sinc[illegible] 1943, Burgin takes over [illegible] podium for several w[illegible] during the Boston Sym[illegible] winter season in [illegible] United States. A former [illegible] prodigy who first mad[illegible] public appearance a[illegible] soloist with the Philha[illegible] society of his native Warsaw, he first joined the orchestra in 1920 after a noteworthy career as concertmaster [illegible] the Oslo Symphony. Earlier, he had been concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra.

Burgin studied the violin in Berlin with Joachim as his teacher. [illegible] his fellow students were Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz. Active in chamber music, he founded the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm which toured Europe regularly. In his first year of residence in the United States, he formed a similar quartet in Boston.

His assignment with the Boston Symphony include charge of chamber music at the Bershire Music Center and a summer school, both entities maintained by the orchestra in Tanglewood.

As conductor for the orchestra, he is known to have introduced or re-introduced many compositions to its audiences. Last year, the Bruckner Symphony No. 5 was played by the orchestra under his lead for the first time since 1901. In the same season he conducted the Symphony No. 2 by Mahler, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth.

France made Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1955. He is married, to the American violinist Ruth Posselt. His conducting in Manila, is expected t[illegible]set off the series of performances [illegible] the Boston Symphony here to a distinguished start.

Boston Symphony Orchestra wins kudos at packed coliseum

Manila Chronicle 2 JUN 1960

By AMANTE F. PAREDES
of the Chronicle staff

The 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra last night won a resounding applause from culture-hungry Manilans who jampacked the Rizal Memorial Coliseum during the opening concert of the famed orchestra on a three-day engagement in Manila.

The audience was enthralled by the performance of the visiting orchestra under the baton of Richard Burgin who conducted the first program. Lasting for two hours, the concert on the opening night featured Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion by Kirchner and Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony.

The "piece de resistance" for the evening was Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Opus 64 featuring the Andante; Allegro con anima; Andante Cantabile con Alcuna Licenza; Valse: Allegro moderato; Finale: Andante Maestoso; Allegro vivace.

Burgin, who guided the concert with adept mastery, had to return three times to the stage, bowing to the resounding applause of the audience which lasted for about ten minutes.

The orchestra, in response to the resounding plaudits of the audience, played as an encore piece the Finale of Haydn's Symphony No. 88 in G Major.

The three-day cultural treat is being presented by Alfredo Lozano in association with the International Cultural Program of the United States and administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

The concert for tonight will be led by Aaron Copland. The grand finale featuring Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, Eroica, Opus 55; Piston's Symphony No. 6 and Ravel's Daphnis et Chleo, will be played under the baton of Charles Munch, music director.

Last night's musical concert brought together a cross-section of the city's population. The crowd in the bleachers were observed to be more conscious of hearing good music, while those in the reserved seats — composed of Manila's cosmopolitan and elite crowd — were mostly there to "be seen," instead of listening to good music.

Manila is the third stop on a five-country tour which started May 3 in Japan. The orchestra's tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand is being made in cooperation with President Eisenhower's international program for cultural presentations.

Burgin, who conducted last night's symphony concert, is considered one of the "most felicitous acquisitions of the distinguished group the past decades."

The Tocatta is a comparatively short, one-movement work divided into four sections, "the first section being an exposition, the second a development; [illegible] movement which follows, is based on the theme stated by the wind instruments at the outset of the work, while the fourth section provides a recapitulation and a coda."

The movement [illegible] ler's Adagio [illegible] Tenth Symphony [illegible] andante pianissimo [illegible] a fifteen-measure melody for violas alone. Following this movement "is a section slightly slower but with the inner animation of multi-voices." The melancholy quality of the music, however, is relieved "occasionally by trills in the wood-winds or high strings, or pizzicatos to sharpen the persistent rhythem of the accompaniment."

The major musical score for the evening was Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Opus 64 which, according to the composer, is one of his best works compared with his Fourth and Sixth Symphony.

As Burgin made his exit after the last strains of the symphony faded in the hall, the audience shouted "Bravo" in a collective tone, accompanied by endless clapping, till the orchestra played an encore for a few minutes to satisfy the clamor and enthusiasm of the crowd.

All tickets were sold. Many people could not be accommodated and they just stayed outside to hear the strains emanating from the overcrowded hall.

The orchestra founded in 1881 has been playing more "modern" music, according to connoisseurs. It has encouraged American composers by playing their pieces in the world-wide tours.

Editorials

Evening News [illegible] 1960

Boston Institution

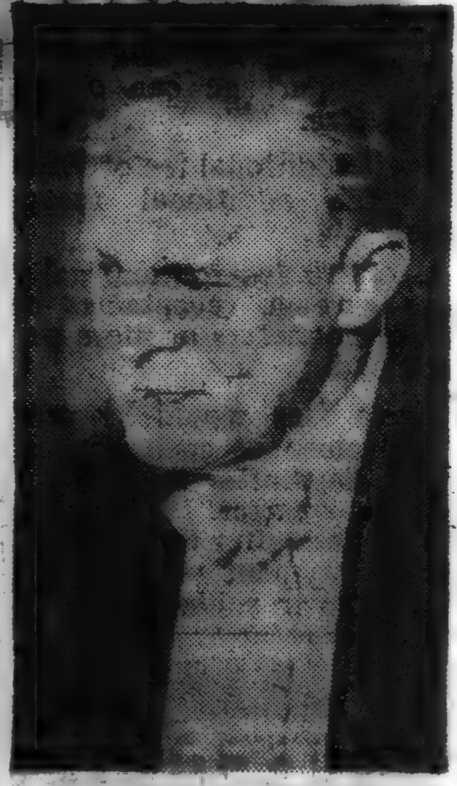
MANILA WELCOMES THE ADVENT OF A Boston institution, the venerable Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will assuredly enchant music lovers here during their three-night performance. Graced by the presence of its musical director, famed Charles Munch, the orchestra also boasts of the company of Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin, both solid names in music.

In the last few years, Manila has had the wonderful good fortune of having seen and heard various music and dance ensembles with international reputations of excellence and artistry. This has been made possible by a program of cultural tours sponsored by the American National Theatre and Academy. Over here, we have Impresario Alfredo Lozano to thank for his close cooperation with the ANTA.

The performances here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will certainly be another milestone in artistic experience maintaining as it does the same high level of cultural export from the U.S. Manila is grateful for this rare opportunity and looks forward to more of the same kind of blandishment. It is one luxury that we cannot have too much of, and if the world devoted more effort to such exchange, as the music that the Boston Symphony offers, the world will be better for it.

Manila Bulletin 26 MAY 1960

Burgin To Conduct Boston Orchestra's Opening Night



RICHARD BURGIN

The Boston Symphony orchestra's opening night next Wednesday at the Rizal Memorial coliseum will be conducted by its associate conductor, Richard Burgin, considered one of the most felicitous acquisitions of the distinguished group in the past decades. He joined the orchestra in 1920 and was appointed assistant conductor in 1935.

Warsaw-born Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as a soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic society. He studied in Berlin with the famous teacher Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 was under the tutelage of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg, counting among his classmates, Toscha Seidel and Jascha Heifetz. In 1912, he became the concertmaster of the Helsinki orchestra, and from 1916 until 1920 when he was appointed concertmaster of the B.S.O., at the age of 27, he was with the Oslo symphony in the same capacity.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Burgin was founder of the Burgin string quartet which went on regular tours, and in his first year in the United States, he formed the Burgin string quartet in Boston. He has also conducted the New England Conservatory orchestra and the Harvard University orchestra. He is at present in charge of chamber music at the summer music school maintained by the B.S.O. in Tanglewood. France made him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1955.

Burgin usually conducts the B.S.O. for several weeks each season in Boston and on tour. He has introduced or re-introduced many compositions to the orchestra's audiences, among them the first performance by the B.S.O. since 1901 of the Bruckner Symphony No. 5, and Mahler's Symphony No. 2, conducted in honor of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth.

The two other conductors who are scheduled to conduct in Manila are Aaron Copland, guest conductor, next Thursday and Charles Munch, music Director, on the last and farewell performance of the world-famous symphony group on June 3 at the Rizal Memorial coliseum.

Philippines Herald Page 5

2 JUN 1960

just between us

By LYDIA DOLORES CASTILLO

AT THIS writing we have not been to the Boston Symphony orchestra concert (our deadline being earlier than concert time), but we have met several, in fact the leading members, of the group and at once we felt sure of having such a wonderful evening of beautiful music, considering that these men and women appeared to be sensitive artists during the luncheon at the Manila hotel Narra room.

Richard Burgin, the BSO's conductor in its maiden Manila performance, is now on his fortieth year as conductor so that he had acquired quite a wealth of cultural know-how. Charles Munch who takes the baton on the symphony's last performance tomorrow, has been conductor of the BSO for eleven years. Of German descent, he is now a citizen of France and a resident of the United States during the concert season. Aside from music, Mr. Munch displayed some knowledge of analizing a person through his penmanship.

Second night conductor Aaron Copland who failed to make the luncheon because of another engagement, is a native of Brooklyn and he came to fame some thirty-five years ago when the Boston Symphony introduced to the American public his first composition. Since then the orchestra has always included in its repertoire a Copland piece.

For the sidelights of their current Far East tour, we turned to the group's efficient secretary Sally Hempel, an attractive blonde whose fair complexion was heightened by the tangerine-hued barong dress she was wearing. The dress was bought by Miss Hempel only yesterday morning.

The symphony has been travelling since April 25 when they left Boston. Their first Far East concert was to have been held in Korea, but unfortunately they had to cancel it because of the recent internal trouble in that country. In five days, they arranged for performances in Taipeh and their efforts were more than compensated by the very enthusiastic response the people of Free China afforded them.

They have just come from Japan where Miss Hempel noticed that women were treated very much less than men who were waited on and helped with the baggage more than the ladies. It was also here where the group was subjected to very formal press conferences "like it was signing for a peace treaty or something," says BSO manager Thomas Perry. Japan, the group members agree, is a very musical country.

Of the more than one hundred orchestra members two are women and another alternate is a woman. Olivia Luetche is the harpist, Winifred Winograd is the cellist while Lois Schaefer plays the flute. Their first flutist is not with the orchestra during this trip as she expects a baby in August.

It's been more than a month now that they have been away from home and apparently they are already homesick. Someone nostalgically said they seemed to have been away years and years ago.

Because of very tight schedules, the orchestra staff (manager, secretary), have not had time to really see the places they have been to. They were kept busy arranging for matters pertinent to the concerts. The orchestra men had their full of shopping, though. Mr. Munch, for one, was able to purchase some souvenir items from Japan.

For Friday's concert which will have The President and First Lady as special guests, the orchestra men will wear the Barong [illegible]. It was at this luncheon press conference that they were measured by a tailor specially commissioned by Mr. Lozano for this particular suit.

Bravos g[illegible] Boston symphony

Manila
2 Jun

By NATI VAL[illegible]N

Manila last night took to its heart the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with nearly 10,000 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, according it thunderous and prolonged applause. Appreciative whistles and shouts of "Bravo!" wrapped up the close of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

In a reciprocal gesture, the Boston Symphony obliged with an encore—the last movement of Haydn's Symphony No. 88 in G major.

Richard Burgin, capping an unequalled 40-year record as concertmaster took the podium for the first of the Boston Symphony's three-night engagement here. Alfred Krips, assistant concertmaster, took Burgin's place among the first violins.

Burgin, associate conductor of the BSO, acquitted himself admirably, evoking from the Orchestra the fluent tonal unity for which it is famous. The performance was a timely salute to the Filipinos who expect a visit two weeks from now by President Eisenhower, whose International Cultural Program administered by the American National Theater and Academy, and implemented in turn by local Impresario Alfredo Lozano, has made possible its performances in the Philippines.

Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. [illegible], brought to full [illegible] the musical assets of the Boston Symphony.

Slighted by Tchaikovsky himself, who thought it his most uninspired work, The Fifth Symphony is sure to have gained many more adherents here after the BSO. Certainly, this Orchestra. nurtured as it is in the cultural capital of the United States, has helped reaffirm the Fifth's position today as the equal in greatness and even in popularity, of Tchaikovsky's more favored works — the Sixth (Pathetique) and Fourth.

Richly rendered, the romantic second movement, andante cantabile, poured over a hushed audience, to everyone of whom its theme is familiar.

The third movement, which uses a waltz rhythm, was played as intended by the composer — merely a waltz to soothe after the first and second movements which, being more brilliant and agitated, brought forth the Orchestra's full powers.

In the fourth movement, the hope, despair, and struggle after the brief relief, rises to a triumphal and grandiose climax.

As deeply appreciated perhaps, if not more gratifying to most of last night's audience, was Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony.

Tender and romantic, Mahler's Adagio brought out the perfection of the string section of the orchestra. It was a delight to listen to the alternating rhythm of the melody introduced by the violas and its accompaniment, with trills and pizzicatos punctuating the lovely musical interplay.

A tribute perhaps to the strings, solo winds and percussion, was Kirchner's composition [illegible] name which opened last night's program. It seemed well above ordinary musical understudy.

Taking the podium tonight is Aaron Copland, America' most outstanding composer today. This important American figure yesterday went on record as favoring applause between movements. Well, he will have it.

Special mention must be made of Architect [illegible] Concio's design of the special acoustical stage and canopy.

BSO MAIDEN CONCERT — The famed and venerable Boston Symphony Orchestra rendered its maiden performance opening a series of three concerts before a packed audience of music lovers at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:30 o'clock last night. The 104-man orchestra's string section (above) goes through a delicate passage of one of its scores under the baton of Richard Burgin, associate director. Here in the course of a Far Eastern tour, the 80-year old band had already played in concert halls in Taiwan and Tokyo.

Manila Chronicle 2 JUN 196

Boston Symphony Orchestra wins kudos at packed coliseum

By AMANTE F. PAREDES
of the Chronicle staff

The 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra last night won a resounding applause from culture-hungry Manilans who jampacked the Rizal Memorial Coliseum during the opening concert of the famed orchestra on a three-day engagement in Manila.

The audience was enthralled by the performance of the visiting orchestra under the baton of Richard Burgin who conducted the first program. Lasting for two hours, the concert on the opening night featured Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion by Kirchner and Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony.

The "piece de resistance" for the evening was Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Opus 64 featuring the Andante; Allegro con anima; Andante Cantabile con Alcuna Licenza; Valse: Allegro moderato; Finale: Andante Maestoso; Allegro vivace.

Burgin, who guided the concert with adept mastery, had to return three times to the stage, bowing to the resounding applause of the audience which lasted for about ten minutes.

The orchestra, in response to the resounding plaudits of the audience, played as an encore piece the Finale of Haydn's Symphony No. 88 in G Major.

The three-day cultural treat is being presented by Alfredo Lozano in association with the International Cultural Program of the United States and administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Cont. on p. 16, col. 7

Crowd applauds first BSO concert

Continued from page 1

The concert for tonight will be led by Aaron Copland. The grand finale featuring Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, Eroica, Opus 55; Piston s Symphony No. 6 and Ravel's Daphnis et Chleo, will be played under the baton of Charles Munch, music director.

Last night's musical concert brought together a cross-section of the city's population. The crowd in the bleachers were observed to be more conscious of hearing good music, while those in the reserved seats — composed of Manila's cosmopolitan and elite crowd — were mostly there to "be seen," instead of listening to good music.

Manila is the third stop on a five-country tour which started May 3 in Japan. The orchestra's tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand is being made in cooperation with President Eisenhower's international program for cultural presentations.

Burgin, who conducted last night's symphony concert, is considered one of the "most felicitous acquisitions of the distinguished group the past decades."

The Tocatta is a comparatively short, one-movement work divided into four sections, "the first section being an exposition, the second a development; a slow movement which follows is based on the theme stated by the wind instruments at the outset of the work, while the fourth section provides a recapitulation and a coda."

The movement for Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony opens andante pianissimo, with a fifteen-measure melody for violas alone. Following this movement "is a section slightly slower but with the inner animation of multi-voices." The melancholy quality of the music, however, is relieved "occasionally by trills in the wood-winds or high strings, or pizzicatos to sharpen the persistent rhythem of the accompaniment."

The major musical score for the evening was Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Opus 64 which, according to the composer, is one of his best works compared with his Fourth and Sixth Symphony.

As Burgin made his exit after the last strains of the symphony faded in the hall, the audience shouted "Bravo" in a collective tone, accompanied by endless clapping, till the orchestra played an encore for a few minutes to satisfy the clamor and enthusiasm of the crowd.

All tickets were sold. Many people could not be accommodated and they just stayed outside to hear the strains emanating from the overcrowded hall.

The orchestra founded in 1881 has been playing more "modern" music, according to connoisseurs. It has encouraged American composers by playing their pieces in the world-wide tours.

Daily Mirror 2 JUN 1960

BSO and Richard Burgin

BURGIN, LOZANO and MUNCH

An enthusiastic crowd of several thousands cheered last night at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum when Manila music lovers heard for the first time the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Richard Burgin, BSO associate conductor.

The violas which opened the second movement of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, in E minor, op. 64, the oboe solos from the theme of Mahmler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony (Posthumous) and the moto perpetuo from a movement of Haydn's Gluck Symphony will be long remembered.

The orchestra's andantes and pianissimo (thanks to Architect Cesar Concio who algebraically constructed the stage for better acoustics results were distinct, soft mellow and sometimes mystic.

Burgin who stood no less than five feet tall took his place on the podium and held his baton before the 108-man orchestra (in shirt sleeves) with ease but not comfortably so. He accidentally dropped his stick during the first number, Kirchner's Toccata for Strings.

Manila music lovers were better listeners in the sense that in between movements clapping hands which often distract the conductor's musical temperament were held back last night.

Richard Burgin is a very interesting man with a lot of interests. At the press conference at the Narra room of Manila Hotel yesterday noon, Burgin gave several press men a capsule view of music as an art, music to the artist and music for the masses in one sitting.

It would be taken into consideration that Burgin other than conducting the BSO for years (this year is his 40th) is a teacher in music at the Boston University. His many interests were mostly centered on languages. He speaks six—Polish, Russian, French, German, Swedish and English.

Burgin revealed that drama paves the way better understanding of music. He also added that somehow the people the world over has a common means of understanding one another and most often music is the answer.

He showed a personal interest in bringing the music to the mass and asked about present reaction of the Filipino people to long hair music.

"It maybe a grave problem but surely there must be an answer to it," said Burgin about long hair music for the masses.

In Boston, every angle has been tried like open rehearsals which allowed the public to witness the rehearsals of the BSO at a very nominal fee, matinees mostly for students, and several weeks the BSO performs the "pops" concert other than the season of heavy compositions for the masses.

Burgin has gloriously conducted no less than 5000 concerts in his forty years of musical life which started way in 1920 when he joined the BSO as a concertmaster.

He is married to a similarly popular violinist, Ruth Posselt, and they have a girl of 16, who made a deal with her father that she would study piano but would not make a profession out of it and a boy of 13 who is more inclined to sports than music.

Alfredo Lozano, local impresario, has become an institution in his own right. He has proven time and again that the Filipino people has an inborn taste for music and he has not stopped searching for the best always. The coming of the BSO with three world famous conductors, Burgin, Copland and Munch, is one of them.

The BSO performance here was made possible through the International Cultural program of the United States administered by the American National Theatre and Academy.

Aaron Copland, famous American conductor, will hold the baton for the BSO tonight also at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15.

The program will include Purcel's Fantasias for Strings in three movements, Copland's First Symphony in three movements, Haydn's Symphony in C minor, No. 95 in four movements and Copland's orchestral Suite from the opera "The Tender Land" in three movements.—Joe

---

A LARGE [illegible] of concert-goers turned out last night for the [illegible] of three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Rizal Coliseum. Richard Burgin, who conducted last night's concert is shown above as he wielded the baton for Adagio from the Tenth Symphony by Mahler.

Manila Bulletin 2 JUN 1960

MORE OR LESS Daily Mirror 2 JUN 1960

Boston Symphony's first night: straight from French horn mouths

By E. A. CRUZ

People who were puzzled by the first number of last night's Boston Symphony concert need not feel apologetic about it. The work, a toccata in the modern manner by a young US composer, irritates some of the musician themselves.

We ran into two of them, both of them French horn players, who told us a thing or two about Mr. Kirchner, the composer of the toccata. "A beatnik type," one of them said.

In the firt place, the Kirchner piece should never have been included in the program. The Rizal Memorial, in spite of the acoustical stage provided especially for the concerts, is much too large for a composition intended to be played by a small orchestra. (Half the players left the stage with their instruments after playing the national anthems and before the toccata, which must have caused not a few in the audience to mutter what the devil was going to happen next).

Our horn players explained that this was due to an apparent miscalculation. The programs had to be planned so far in advance the orchestra management could not possibly have foreseen the conditions at the Rizal Memorial.

Anyway, the rest of the program more than made [illegible] everything, especially the Tchaikovsky. In fact the reaction to this symphony was, if anything, a bit too warm. The slow movement, which was cribbed by Hollywood some years ago and has since become a "song hit," was irresistible. But hardly less [illegible] was the symphony as a whole. Tchaikovsky's No. 5 is a surefire number which the more discriminating listeners would wish had been replaced by something less familiar. For them the saving grace of the concert was the excellence of the orchestra itself, which is of course beyond question.

According to the players we talked to, the best part was the horn solo, which seemed really to have impressed them, for it's not every night that a horn player is in top form.

Which of them was the soloist? "Neither. It's some other guy."

Before we parted company, they again deplored the programming on the first night, but strongly advised us not to miss the last, which is tomorrow, when the "Eroica" will be played. "That's simply great," they said with marvelous understatement.

RESOUNDING APPLAUSE greeted the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Manila Coliseum last night where it performed before Manila's music enthusiasts. Shown above is associate conductor Richard Burgin lifting his arms in a wide arc during the orchestra's rendition of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony

---

Orchestra's Versatility, Daring Charm Reviewer

Evening News 2 JUN 1960

By ADELAIDA R. KATIGBAK

The Boston Symphony Orchestra
The Program
Kirchner — Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion
Mahler — Adagio from the 10th Symphony (Posthumous)
Tchaikowsky — Symphony No. 5 in E minor
Conductor
Richard Burgin

BY 8:15 yesterday evening, a sizable crowd had already congregated at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum. And the variety of people that made up that crowd gave an interesting insight into what makes up the Philippine concert audience. There were the well-heeled formally dressed, regular first-nighters; there were the casual mannered members of the intelligentsia; the diffident students; the wide-eyed representatives of the rank-and-file; there were those who came to be seen; and those who came simply because they love good music.

But diverse as their attitudes and motivations were, when they finally heard the music, they were one in their enthusiastic appreciation of every number.

The choice of the first two numbers, Kirchner's Toccata and Mahler's Adagio, together in one program and performed consecutively, could be called daring. Kirchner is a young composer, comparatively unknown. His idiom is modern and this particular work would require more than one hearing to be fully appreciated; Mahler is rarely performed in the Philippines and cannot therefore be regarded with familiarity.

Yet Mr. Burgin and the Boston did get to communicate. The applause that erupted at the end of the concert was spontaneous and warm. Bravos rang in the hall and Mr. Burgin came out for curtain call after curtain call.

The orchestra was one great, wonderfully polished instrument, which because of its responsiveness became a vibrant extension of the conductor's interpretative personality. It painted vividly, with numerous tone colors at its command; it spoke lucidly through near perfect technique and well architectured phrases. Even the unfamiliar Kirchner opus aroused and upheld the audience's interest because the conductor's leadership was so sure and so authoritative and because the climaxes were so well-planned. Mahler the philosopher and the poet breathed in the orchestra's rendition of his Adagio. The strings sang and the winds emerged nobly and with great dignity. Tchaikovsky was played in the best traditions of romanticism.

Versatility was manifest. Where the Mahler was disciplined, the Tchaikovsky was unashamedly emotional; where in Kirchner dissonance was underscored in the Haydn which was the encore number, consonance was a great part of the charm. Where the set tempo was most appropriate in Haydn the subtle rubatos were most effective in Tchaikovsky.

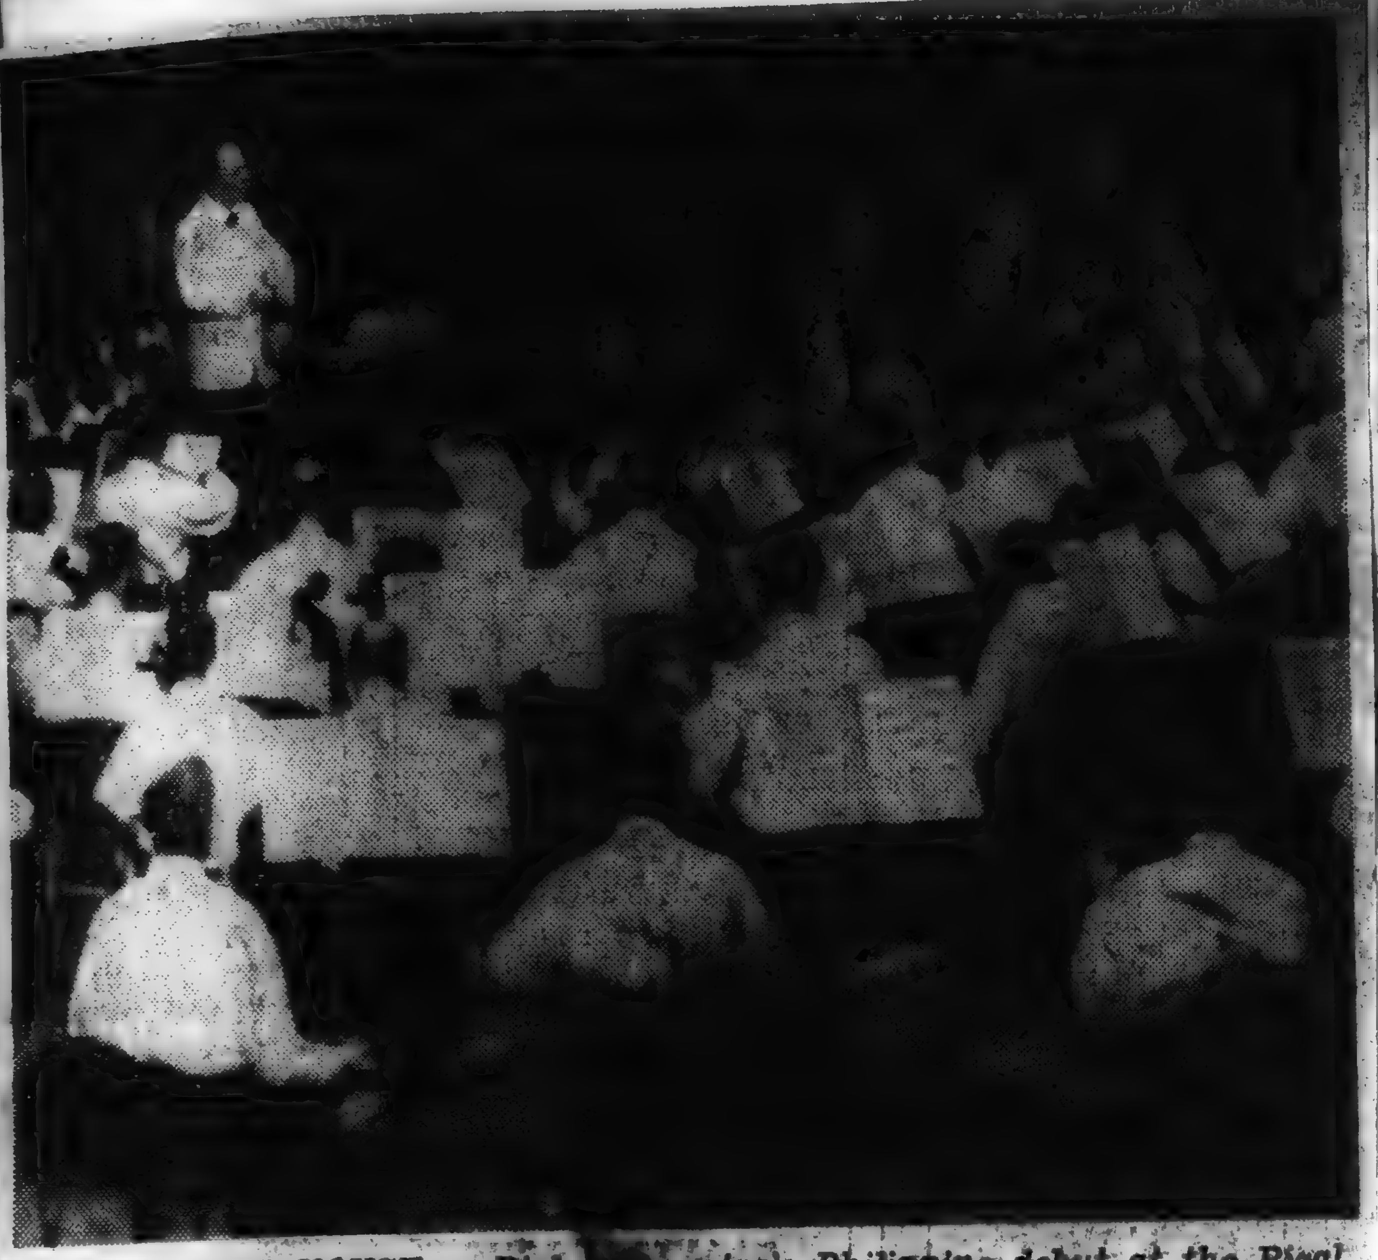
This last number was the highlight of the concert. The first movement exposed the sombre theme that caused this work to be called Tchaikovsky's Fate symphony. The horns, the oboe, the clarinet stirred the listener, as he was embraced by the Andante Cantabile. The handling of the [illegible] which to bring out [illegible] how much—was hi[illegible] and in perfec[illegible]

T[illegible]ment was a prof[illegible]ence. The Walt[illegible] rather restrai[illegible] this but mayb[illegible] just as well because then the reappearance of the symphony's theme became more significant.

The exuberant triumphal last movement with its impressive tuttis provided a fitting climax to an exciting musical evening.

The BSO deserves its reputation as one of the world's greatest. We are grateful we have two more evenings of it to look forwar

152



TO A FULL HOUSE — Richa[illegible] Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, wielding the baton in the famed orches[illegible]tra's Philippine debut at the Rizal Memorial Stadium last night. Tonight's guest conductor will be Aaron Copland, American composer.

BSO's First Concert Applauded By Manilans

Philippines Herald 12 JUN 1960

By NESTOR MATA
[illegible] Staff Member

The famed Boston Symphony orchestra [illegible] successful first [illegible] at the packed Rizal Memorial coliseum last evening to the resounding applause, loud and persistent bravas of Manila's music lovers, especially after its performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor, received several minutes-long and standing ovation after the triumphant and jubilant ending of the Fifth Symphony. It was an authoritative reading of [illegible] composer's great [illegible] from the start of the sombre first movement (Andante), to the lyrical and passionate slow movement (Andante cantabile), then to the gliding and graceful valse movement and finally to the heroic and powerful Finale. Burgin showed his mastery of the Tchaikovsky symphony; his very expressive hands drawing out the yearning and unquenchable horn melody from the orchestra.

And when he heard the sweet sounds of the cantabile from the horn and the cellos and the body of other string instruments, Burgin came out with an expressive smile on his lips that brightened his face.

The Tchaikovsky work was also full of turbulence particularly in the first and last movements; Burgin drew out the powerful chords and agitated the orchestra members with great thrusts of his arms, wide swayings of his body and the poundings of his clenched left fist in the air, when he reached the "madlike" Finale which filled the coliseum with the great music of Tchaikovsky.

The first part of last night's program included the Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion by Kirchner, and Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony.

These two works contrasted each other. While the Kirchner opus involved piercing chords and scale-like passages almost hurting to the ear, Mahler's masterpiece contained melodic passages of sweet magnitude, although it was generally sombre from beginning to end.

It seems that the big crowd last evening was not very much satisfied with the first part of the BSO's concert. But it was a highly competent performance. We particularly liked the Mahler composition. But it was the Tchaikovsky opus that really marked the high point of the BSO's debut concert before Manila's music lovers.

The superb performance of the BSO under the masterly baton of Burgin carried away the big crowd that several bursts of applause compelled Burgin to return again and again to the podium to acknowledge the standing ovation and loud bravas of a very appreciative audience.

Giving way to the audience's insistent demand for an encore after the Tchaikovsky opus, Burgin, who also congratulated the BSO's concertmaster and his assistant, returned to the podium and conducted the last movement of Haydn's "Clock" Symphony.

Impresario Alfredo Lozano, who is presenting the Boston Symphony orchestra, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy, also acknowledged (in the concert program) Cesar H. Concio's contribution to last evening's successful performance. Concio, eminent Filipino architect, designed the special acoustical stage and canopy without which the brilliant renditions of the visiting BSO would have been lost in the cavernous coliseum.

Aaron Copland, the American composer, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its second concert tonight at 8:15 p.m. at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

The program includes two of the noted composer's own works — First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land.

The complete program follows: Purcell's Fantasias for Strings, No. 2 in B flat major, No. 4 in C minor and Fantasia on One Note in F major; Copland's First Symphony— Prelude, Scherzo and Finale; Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 95 — Allegro, Andante, Cantabile, Minuet, Trio and Finale Vivace; and Copland's Suite from The Tender Land including Introduction and Love Music, Party Scene and The Promise of Loving.

Copland is traveling with the BSO as a guest conductor.

Manilans Thrill To Maiden Performance Of The BSO

[illegible] Bulletin [illegible] JUN 1960

By [illegible]

History was made last night as a curious [illegible] around 8,000 Manilans [illegible]ed to the maiden [illegible]ance here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, with Richard Burgin conducting.

With a two-hour treat of symphonic music, Manilans went home glowing: the famed BSO did not prove a disappointment.

Burgin, grey-haired and calm-meined associate conductor of the 80-year-old symphonic orchestra, displayed an admirable, if not too dramatically impressive, control of the program played capped by Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5, in E minor, Op. 64.

Except for Burgin, who wore a white coat, the rest of the male members of the 104-man orchestra, which has three women members, were informally dressed in white shirts. They must have anticipated the heat, for which Manila is famous. But as they went through the heavy passages of Kirchner, Mahler and Tschaikowsky, the BSO members seemed to have forgotten the sweltering heat that was beginning to soak their backs with perspiration.

The performance started 15 minutes later than its scheduled time at 8:15 p.m., with a spirited version of the Philippine National Anthem, which was immediately followed by the American National Anthem.

Huddled on the specially-built stage by architect Cesar Concio, who improvised a canopy above to improve the coliseum's acoustics, the BSO proceeded to the first number on the program, Kirchner's Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion. Dominated by string instruments, this piece seemed to have made Burgin a good vehicle for his specialty. Warsaw-born Burgin, who is active in chamber of music and a teacher, founded the Burgin String Quartet.

With the second piece, Mahler's Adagio from the Tenth Symphony, the BSO proved highly sensitive, oozing with [illegible] passages now [illegible] rising to shriek[illegible] then lapsing into [illegible] passages again. This [illegible] needed good control which Burgin ably gave, [illegible] beads of perspiration trek down his face.

The BSO proved to be at its most inspired [illegible] during the last number of the program — Tschaivkowsky's Fifth Symphony. Said to be a "[illegible] against Fate", [illegible] played by the BSO last night, sounded [illegible] brave as Burgin led the fevered orchestra through the animating first movement, up to the passionate andante cantabile con alcuna licenza, the second movement, hopping to the lighter valse of the third movement, and finally giving with a terrific, deafening finale.

Altogether the BSO gave this "brave song" of a symphony an even more resolute and determined clamor that did not fail to give the audience that wonderful feeling of having triumphed over the forces of Fate.

An appreciative audience made Burgin come back to the podium twice amidst thunderous applause that reached its fevered pitch shortly before the BSO played a delightful encore—the tick-tocking finale of Haydn's Clock Symphony.

The BSO three-day concert performances here are being presented by impressario Alfredo Lozano in co-operation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Tonight's performance will be conducted by Pulitzer prize-winner composer Aaron Copland, who will play, among others, two of his own works.

YOUR TAGALOG CORNER

Manila Times [illegible] JUN 1960

Ang Boston Symphony

Ni [illegible]

Naghahanap kami ng isang [illegible] na katumbas (equivalent) ng BRAVO [illegible] ang isang salitang hight dito para isigaw sa loob ng Rizal Memorial Stadium pagkatapos ng pagtugtog ng Boston Symphony Orchestra. Masayang-masaya si Richard Burgin (ang konduktor sa unang gabi) sa malakas na palakpakan at pagsigaw sa kanila ng bravo! Hindi nila akalain, ang sabi sa amin ng isa, na ang mga Pilipino pala ay marunong kumilala ng mabuting musika. Kaya't ang sagot namin, "Hindi ba ninyo alam na ang tawag sa Pilipinas noon pang unang panahon ay Italyang Munti? (Little Italy).

Ang Pambansang Imno ng Pilipinas (National Anthem) ay nakababagbag ng kalooban (soul-stirring) nang tugtugin ng Boston Symphony. Ibang-iba sa aming nararamdaman kung ito'y tinutugtog ng ating mga banda sa labas ng simbahan sa mga pistang-bayan. Hindi pala kailangan ang maging Pilipino para bigyan ito ng wastong damdamin. Ang kailangan lamang ay mabuting musiko.

Ngayon ang huling gabi ng Boston Symphony dito. Dapat bigyan ng pagkakataon (chance) ni Alfredo Lozano at ng American National Theatre and Academy na marinig sila ng ilang milyong tao sa Pilipinas sa pamamagitan ng kanilang radyo. Ang musika ng Boston Symphony ay panlahat, hindi para lamang sa maaaring magbayad.

* * *

Hangga ngayon ay wala pa kaming pampalit sa Bravo! kaya't para sa Boston Symphony Orchestra at kay Impresaryo Lozano—MABUHAY!

153

Aaron Copland holds baton on Boston's second night

Daily Mirror 16 MAY 1960

Aaron Copland, well-known American composer-conductor and winner of the Pulitzer, Guggenheim and Hollywood's Oscar prizes in music, will lead the visiting 104-man Boston Symphony Orchestra's second night's concert at the Rizal Memorial coliseum on June 2 at 8:15 p.m.

Copland has selected as his opening number the 16th century work of Purcell, the three Fantasias for Strings, and will be followed by his own composition, the First Symphony, in three movements.

Highlights of the evening's program are two outstanding orchestral works, Haydn's "Symphony in C minor, No. 95" and Copland's Suite from the Opera "The Tender Land." The "Symphony in C minor" was among the first set of the six symphonies which Haydn composed for his first visit to London in 1791, while Copland's Orchestral Suite from his famous Opera "The Tender Land" was composed in the middle thirties.

The complete program, with Copland conducting, follows:

[illegible] — Fantasias for Strings No. 2, in B flat Major, No. 4, in C minor, Fantasia on One Note, in F. Major;

II. Copland — First Symphony, Prelude, Scherzo, Finale. Intermission.

III. Haydn — Symphony in C minor, No. 95, Allegro, Andante cantabile, Minute. Trio, Finale: Vivace;

IV. Copland — Orchestral Suite from the Opera "The Tender Land", Introduction and Love Music, Party Scene Finale: The Promise of Loving.

AARON COPLAND TO CONDUCT 2ND CONCERT SERIES

Manila Bulletin [illegible] MAY 1960

Traveling with the Boston Symphony [illegible] during its forthc[illegible] of the Far East [illegible] Copland, [illegible] composer [illegible] contemporary times.

Copland, who has been invited to join the orchestra as guest conductor for the duration of the tour, will be at the podium for the second of a series of three concerts to be given in Manila by the Boston group. The concerts are scheduled on June 1, 2, and 3, at 8:15 p.m. To be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum, they will be presented here by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Brooklyn-born Copland, who studied composition at the Fontainebleau School of Music in France and was for three years, under the tutelage of the known Paris music professor Nadia Boulauger, first conducted the 80-year-old Boston Symphony as guest, in the summer of 1957 at the Berkshire Festival. He has also been guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the Ravinia Festival. He has also conducted the major symphony orchestras in England, Europe, Scandinavia and Central and South America.

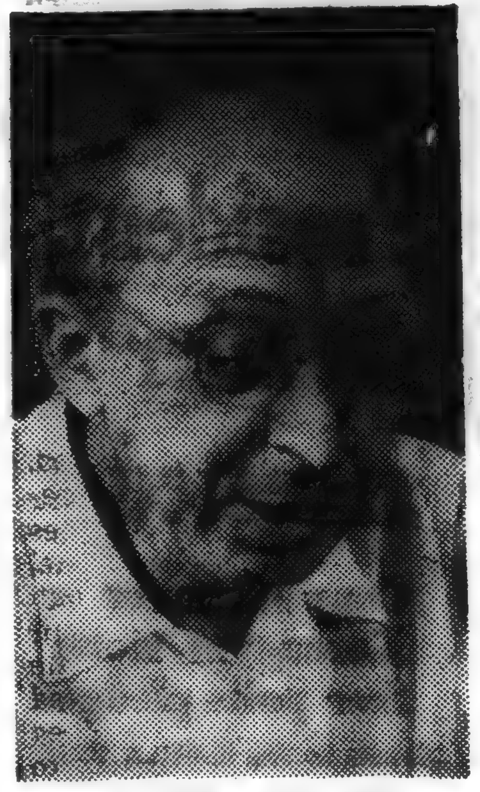
As America's outstanding composer today, Copland has made significant contributions to the music literature of the orchestra, ballet, opera and the films. Of thirty of his works for the orchestra which have been published, there are the Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, the Dance Symphony for which the composer got a $5,000-award from RCA Victor, Danzon Cubano, Symphonic Ode, and the Third Symphony which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and awarded the New York Music Critics Circle award for the best orchestral work during the 1946-47 season.

Among the many honors Copland has received are the Pulitzer Prize, the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences' Oscar, the Gold Medal for Music by the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and honorary degrees of doctor of music by Brandeis University and Princeton University. In making the presentation of the honorary degree at Princeton, the university president said of Copland that he was "[illegible] of the eminent figures [illegible] the development of music... a tireless champion in the cause of contemporary music."

Noted US composer leads Boston Symphony June 2

Manila Times 18 MAY 1960

A famous American composer of contemporary times will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra June 2, for the second of three concerts to be given in the Rizal Memorial Stadium.



AARON COPLAND

He is Aaron Copland, considered the foremost of America's contemporary composers, whose name has been preceded here by his works. A versatile composer, Copland [illegible] made significant contri[illegible] not only to the [illegible] literature of the orchestra, but to ballet, opera and the movies. More than 30 of his works have been published, including his concerto for Piano and Orchestra, which was first performed by the BSO with the composer as the soloist.

The BSO, expected to arrive in Manila on May 31, will be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy, on June 1, 2, and 3.

Copland has received many awards for his works, some of these being an "Oscar" from the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences for the score of [illegible] "The Heiress," a [illegible] RCA [illegible] "Dance Symphony" [illegible] the Pulitzer [illegible] New York Music [illegible] award for his ballet piece "Appalachian Spring."

Boston Orchestra's Second Concert Led By Copland

Philippines Herald 16 MAY 1960

The visiting 104-man Boston Symphony orchestra will be led by Aaron Copland, well-known American composer-conductor and winner of the Pulitzer, Guggenheim and Hollywood's Oscar prizes in music, on its second concert at the Rizal Memorial coliseum on June 2 at 8:15 p.m.

Mr. Copland has selected as his opening number the 16th century work of Purcell the three Fantasias for Strings, and will be followed by his own composition, the First Symphony, in three movements.

Highlights of the evening's program are two outstanding orchestral works, Haydn's "Symphony in C minor, No. 95" and Copland's Suite from the Opera "The Tender Land." The "Symphony in C minor" was among the first set of the six symphonies which Haydn composed for his first visit to London in 1791, while Copland's Orchestral Suite from his famous Opera "The Tender Land" was composed in the middle thirties. It describes the love complications of a young girl from a rustic family in Alabama who falls in love with a drifter during harvest time.

Tickets to the June [illegible] and 3 concerts which will be held at the Rizal Memorial coliseum at 8:15 [illegible] are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Evening News 2 JUN 1960

Copland Leads BSO Tonight

Aaron Copland, the American composer, will conduct the Boston Symphony [illegible] for its second [illegible] tonight at 8:15 [illegible] Rizal Memorial coliseum.

The program includes two of the noted composer's own works, First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land. The complete program follows: Purcell's Fantasias for Strings, No. 2 in B flat major, No. 4 in C minor and Fantasia on One Note in F major; Copland's First Symphony —Prelude, Scherzo and Finale; Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 95 — Allegro, Andante Cantabile, Minuet, Trio and Finale Vivace; and Copland's Suite from The Tender Land including Introduction and Love Music, Party Scene and The Promise of Loving.

Copland is traveling with the BSO as a guest conductor. The Manila concerts are presentation of Alfredo Lozano in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA). Tickets are on sale at Botica Boie, and after 6 p.m., at the coliseum.

THE PHILIPPINES HERALD 2 MAY 1960

BSO Makes Far East Tour With Famed American Composer

Traveling with the Boston Symphony orchestra during its forthcoming Far East tour is [illegible] foremost American composer of contemporary times.

Mr. Coplan, who has been invited to join the orchestra as guest conductor for the duration of the tour, will be at the podium for the second of a series of three concerts to be given in Manila by the Boston group.

The concerts are scheduled on June 1, 2, and 3, at 8:15 p.m. To be held at the Rizal Memorial coliseum, they will be presented here by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Brooklyn-born Copland, who studied composition at the Fontainebleau School of Music in France and was for three years, under the tutelage of the known Paris music professor Nadia Boulauger, first conducted the 80-year-old Boston Symphony as a guest, in the summer of 1957 at the Berkshire Festival. He has also been guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, the National symphony [illegible] in Washington, [illegible] Symphony orchestra and the Chicago Symphony orchestra at the Ravinia Festival. He has also conducted the major symphony orchestra in England, Europe, Scandinavia and Central and South [illegible] outstanding composer, [illegible] has [illegible] contributions to the music literature of the orchestra, ballet, opera and the films. Of thirty of his works for the orchestra which have been published, there are the Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, the Dance Symphony for which the composer got a $5,000–award from RCA Victor, Danzon Cubano, Symphonic Ode, and the Third Symphony which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and awarded the New York Music Critics Circle award for the best orchestral work during the 1946–47 season.

Among the many honors Copland has received are the Pulitzer Prize, the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences' Oscar, the Gold Medal for Music by the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and honorary degrees of doctor of music by Brandeis university and Princeton university. In making the presentation of the honorary degree at Princeton, the university president said of Copland that he was "...one of the [illegible] figures in the development of music ... a tireless champion in the cause of contemporary music."

Tickets to the Manila concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Copland scores with [illegible] pieces at second con[illegible]

By NATI VALENT[illegible]

Aaron Copland, one of America's leading composers, scored a tremendous success last night as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was the second concert of the three-night Manila BSO engagement at the acoustically renovated Rizal Memorial Coliseum. The Orchestra played again to capacity house.

Copland's First Symphony; his encore, Rodeo; and the party scene in the orchestral suite of his opera, The Tender Land, were tremendously successful.

He took three bows after his First Symphony.

Copland, changing into barong Tagalog for the second part, clinched his popularity with the BSO's second-nighters. Even the seasoned orchestra members seemed more relaxed, happier. The audience managed to forget the unbearable heat.

The composer and the conductor were well-integrated in the personality of this distinguished American. It was obvious that Copland has had considerable experience as a conductor. His count: ten years of conducting between 25 to 30 orchestras. Since March alone, he has handled three orchestras in Soviet Russia, two in England, and one in Japan.

Copland conducts with long, flowing movements of the arms, character[illegible] torso movements. He has a mobile face and [illegible] hands.

Occasionally, he gives little precise leaps that add to the dramatic climaxes. Happily, his compelling technique was put to full advantage by a distinctive program which included one 17th century gem, Purcell's Fantasias for Strings, and an 18th century classic, Haydn's Symphony in C minor, No. 95. Samuel Mayes, principal cellist, took a bow as Haydn soloist.

Copland's place among composers of contemporary music is assured. He has brought to Manila the genuine thing. With Copland, our earlier impression was confirmed that the Bostom Symphony is not "playing down," but rather honoring "the natives" with a carefully selected and distinguished repertoire.

His First Symphony cannot but leave an audience, any kind of audience, impressed. It was haunting, tantalizing and dramatic. Its grandiose passages are among the most eloquent we have heard. The gradual crescendos crashed into smashing fortissimos by percussion instruments, a direct contrast to the haunting interweaving themes of oboe, English horn and violas, as well as the flute and solo horn treatments. There are pizzicato accompani[illegible] and [illegible] of trumpets and trombon[illegible]

Copland's [illegible] Tender Land is [illegible] story of hope, simple country joys, and despair.

It tells the story of an American mother on a rural farm whose daughter falls in love with one of two drifters who appear at the farm, but who decides that he prefers a roving life to settling down. Having been jilted, the girl herself runs away from home. The mother's acceptance of this fate is the key to the opera. Now she looks to her younger daughter to continue the family cycle.

The party scene was American as all get out, invoking images of a square dance. It is interestingly syncopated, with a distinctive jazz movement. At the end of the orchestral suite, there is the suggestion of a revivalist hymn.

All told, it was a quality performance.

Manila Chronicle The Manila

2 MAY 1960

Copland to direct 2nd BSO performance

Traveling with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during its forthcoming tour of the Far East will be Aaron Copland, foremost most American contemporary composer.

Copland, who has been invited to join the orchestra as guest conductor for the duration of the tour, will be at the podium for the second of a series of three concerts to be given in Manila by the Boston group. The concerts are scheduled on June 1, 2, and 3, at 8:15 p.m. at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum. The BSO will be presented here by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy.

Brooklyn-born Copland studied composition at the Fontainebleau School of Music in France and was, for three years, under the tutelage of the known Paris music professor Nadia Boulauger. He first conducted the 80-year-old Boston Symphony as a guest, in the summer of 1957 at the Berkshire Festival. He has also been guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the Ravinia Festival.

As America's outstanding composer today, Copland has made significant contributions to the music literature of the orchestra, ballet, opera and films. His works for orchestra which have been published include Concerto for Piano and Orchestra; the Dance Symphony, for which the composer got a $5,000 award from RCA Victor; Danzon Cubano; Symphonic Ode, and the Third Symphony which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and awarded the New [illegible]rk Music Critics [illegible]ward for the best orchestral work during th[illegible] season.

Ti[illegible] the Manila concerts are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

Copland to conduct BSO second concert

Manila Chronicle 28 MAY 1960

A famous American composer of contemporary times will appear in Manila in person to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on June 2, for the second of three concerts to be given in the Rizal Memorial Stadium.

He is Aaron Copland, considered the foremost of America's contemporary composers, whose name has been preceded here by his works. A versatile composer, Copland has made significant contributions not only to the musical literature of the orchestra, but to ballet, opera and movies as well. More than 30 of his works have been published, including his concerto for Piano and Orchestra, which was first performed by the BSO with the composer as the soloist.

Copland will be the guest speaker at the monthly "Meet the Press" luncheon of the Manila Overseas Press Club on Wednesday, June 1.

The BSO, expected to arrive in Manila on May 31, will be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy, on June 1, 2 and 3.

Copland has received many awards for his works, some of these being an "Oscar" from the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences for the score of the movie "The Heiress," a $5,000 award from RCA Victor for his "Dance Symphony," and the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Music Critics award for his ballet piece "Appalachian Spring."

Brooklyn-born, Copland, now in his sixties, received his early education in the public schools of New York. A natural bent for music sent him to France, at the age of 21, to study composition in the Fountainebleau School of Music. He also studied with Nadia Boulanger in Paris, for three years. His compositions were first performed in the United States in 1924.

Traveling as a guest conductor of the BSO for the duration of its current 80th anniversary Far Eastern tour, Copland first appeared with the group in the same capacity in 1957, at the Berkshire Symphony Festival.

He has also been guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, the National Symphony Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the Ravinia Festival. On several occasions he wielded the baton for the major orchestras in England, other European countries on the European continent, Scandinavia and Central and South America.

Active as a teacher and author, Copland is chairman of the faculty and head of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center, lectures extensively, and has written three widely read books, What to listen for in Music, Our New Music and Imagination.

Other honors he has received are the Guggenheim Fellowship, the Gold Medal for Music by the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and honorary doctorates in music by Brandeis and Princeton University. Said the President of Princeton University of Copland, "He is a tireless champion of contemporary music. . .held in the utmost respect and esteem."

For the concert he is conducting at the Rizal Memorial on June 2, Copland is presenting two of his works, First Symphony and Suite from his opera, "The Tender Land." The two other numbers on the program are Three Fantasias for Strings by Henry Purcell and Symphony in C minor by Haydn.

Copland to conduct his own composition

Manila Chronicle [illegible] 1960

Aaron Copland, well-known American composer-conductor and winner of the Pulitzer, and Guggenheim prizes and the Hollywood Oscar for music, will lead the visiting 104-man Boston Symphony Orchestra's second night concert set at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 2 at 8:15 p.m.

For his opening number, Copland has selected the 16th century work of Purcell, Three Fantasias for Strings. This will be followed by Copland's own composition, First Symphony in three movements.

The evening program will be highlighted by two outstanding orchestral works, Haydn's Symphony in C minor, No. 95 and Copland's Suite from the opera "The Tender Land."

Symphony in C minor was the first in a set of six symphonies composed by Haydn for his first to London in 1791. Copland's "The Tender Land" was composed in the middle thirties. It describes the love complications of a young girl from a rustic family in Alabama who falls in love with a drifter during harvest time.

The complete program for June 2 follows: I. Purcell — Fantasias for Strings; No. 2 in B flat Major, No. 4, in C minor, and Fantasia on One Note in F major. II. First Symphony by Copland; Prelude, Scherzo and Finale.

The second portion will open with Haydn's Symphony in C minor, No. 95; Alegro, Andante Cantabile, Minuet: Trio, and Finale, Vivace. Copland's Suite from "The Tender Land," which includes Introduction and Love Music, the Party Scene, and The Promise of Loving, will ring down the curtain.

Tickets to the June 1, 2 and 3 concerts are on sale at the Botica Boie. All concerts will be held at the Rizal Coliseum at 8:15 p.m.

Manila Bulletin

Copland To Lead 104-M[illegible] In June 2 [illegible]

16 MAY 1960

Aaron Cop[illegible] well-known American composer-conductor and winner of the Pulitzer, Guggenheim and Hollywood's Oscar prizes in music, will lead the visiting 104-man Boston Symphony Orchestra's second night's concert at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum on June 2 at 8:15 p.m.

Copland has selected as his opening number the 16th century work of Purcell, the three Fantasias for Strings, and will be followed by his own composition, the First Symphony, in three movements.

Highlights of the evening's program are two outstanding orchestral works, Haydn's "Symphony in C minor, No. 95" and Copland's Suite from the Opera "The Tender Land". The "Symphony in C minor" was among the first set of the six symphonies which Haydn composed for his first visit to London in 1791, while Copland's Orchestral Suite from his famous Opera "The Tender Land" was composed in the middle thirties. It describes the love complications of a young girl from a rustic family in Alabama who falls in love with a drifter during harvest time.

The complete program, with Copland conducting, follows: Purcell's Fantasias for Strings, No, 2, in B flat Major No. 4, in C minor Fantasia on One Note, in F Major; Copland's First Symphony, Prelude Scherzo Finale; Haydn's Symphony in C minor, No. 95, Allegro Andante cantab[illegible] Mi[illegible]et: Trio Finale: Vivace; and Copland's Orchestral Suite from the Opera "The Tender Land" Introducti[illegible] Love Music Party S[illegible] The Promise of [illegible]

Ticke[illegible] the June 1, 2 and 3 concerts which will be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15 p.m. are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

175

Copland, The Conductor, Is As Impressive As His Music

By ADELAIDA R. KATIGBAK

Aaron Copland's appearance on last night's stage aroused provocative thoughts.

His stature as a composer is almost unequalled by any other American. His compositions have won recognition and acclaim the world over. For more than thirty years he has been recognized as an influential figure in spreading, through his works, the gospel of American music. Could he, as conductor, equal his own eminence as composer?

One reads of composers whose works are better interpreted by others. One also reads of composers who are their own best interpreters. To which class does Mr. Copland belong?

Last night's audience provided a clue. It was difficult to say whether the applause was greater for his conducting or for his works, two of which were performed as part of the program.

Physically, Mr. Copland is tall, lean and spry. He lithely hops up the podium and half-runs down the steps of the stage. He has a warm and ready smile and gives the impression of being a genial man. He has a most fascinating left arm that is fluid and [illegible] as he gives expression to lyric passages. He has a wrist that snaps the rhythm in crisper passages. He jabs the air with his forefinger to give the cue to the different instruments. He has a winning personality.

Vigor permeates his works and interpretations. Streaks of gray in his hair notwithstanding, he is vibrantly young.

In his symphony and the suite from "The Tender Land," every instruments tonal possibilities were explored with refreshing results. Rhythm was skillfully exploited. The [illegible] complaint about modern music being indifferent to melody would find no justification here. These works were replete with lyricism. Dissonance was never an end in itself; it was employed only as part of the composer's means of expression and it never obscured, rather it was often used to enhance, his wonderful sense of humor.

While Mr. Copland's music is American, it is also universal. While various influences are evident in his style, this is also truly individual.

The Haydn Symphony No. 95 was presented — a classical gem with exquisite baroque ornamentation. Here was empathy. The conductor easily entered into Haydn's happy temperament and very subtly but very effectively gave it a gentle touch of sophistication.

One was again struck by the successful blending of two factors which could very easily conflict with each other in less perfectly trained groups: the individual excellence of the performers as evidenced by the beautifully executed solos, and the total subjugation of the individual by the whole as evidenced by the wonderful ensemble and the "oneness" achieved by the different sections of the orchestra. For this again we take our hats off to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With expectations whetted by two highly successful presentations, we look forward to this evening and this great orchestra's last concert in the Philippines for this year.

ANOTHER

(Continued from page 1)

settle the dispute. But both groups were apparently determined to abandon all peaceful means.

As a result of the mounting [illegible] students from [illegible] have refused to [illegible] at the Caloocan High School. The parents of these students expressed their fear for the safety of their children.

FILIPINAS MUTUAL FUND
Bid	₱6.08
Asked	₱6.77
Net Asset Value	₱6.23
PEOPLE'S MUTUAL FUND
Bid	₱5.30
Asked	₱5.91
Net Asset Value	₱5.44
INDUSTRIAL MUTUAL FUND

NES HERALD 28 [illegible] 1960

Philippines Herald

Copland to Conduct 2nd BSO Concert June 2

AARON COPLAND

A famous American composer of contemporary times will appear in Manila in person to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on June 2, for the second of hree concerts to be given in he Rizal Memorial Stadium.

He is Aaron Copland, considered the foremost of America's contemporary composers, whose name has been preceded here by his works. A versatile composer, Copland has made significant contributions not only to the musical literature of the orchestra, but to ballet, opera and movies as well. More than 30 of his works have been published, including his concerto for Piano and Orchestra, which was first performed by the BSO with the composer as the soloist.

The BSO, expected to arrive in Manila on May 31, will be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy, on June 1, 2 and 3.

Copland has received many awards for his works, some of these being an "Oscar" from the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences for the score of the movie "The Heiress," a $5,000-award from RCA Victor for his "Dance Symphony," and the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Music Critics award for his ballet piece "Appalachian Spring."

Brooklyn-born, Copland, now in his sixties, received his early education in the public schools of New York. A natural bent for music sent him to France, at the age of 21, to study composition in the Fountainebleu School of Music. He also studied with Nadia Boulanger in Paris for three years. His compositions were first performed in the United States in 1924.

Traveling as a guest conductor of the BSO for the duration of its current 80th anniversary Far Eastern tour, Copland first appeared with the group in the same capacity in 1957, at the Bershire Symphony Festival. He has also been guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, the National Symphony Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the Ravinia Festival. On several occasions he wielded the baton for the major orchestras in England, other European countries on the European continent, Scandinavia and Central and South America.

Active as a teacher and author, Copland is chairman of the faculty and head of the composition department of the Bershire Music Center, lectures extensively, and has written three widely read books—What to Listen for in Music, Our New Music and Music and Imagination.

Other honors he has received are the Guggenheim Fellowship, the Gold [illegible] for Music by the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and honorary doctorates in music by Brandeis and Princeton University. The [illegible] of Princeton said of Copland: "He is a [illegible] champion of contemporary music . . . held in the utmost respect and esteem."

'Coplandish' Music Delights Concertgoers

Philippines Herald 3 JUN 1960

By NESTOR MATA
Herald-DMHM Staff Member

AARON COPLAND

Manila's concert-going public was bombarded last night with "Coplandish" music and was so much delighted it showered Aaron Copland and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Rizal Memorial coliseum with loud bravos and intense applause.

With tall, stoop-shouldered and bespectacled, Brooklyn-born American composer Aaron Copland at the podium, the Boston Symphony offered for its second concert deafening performances of Copland's First Symphony, the Orchestral Suite from Copland's Opera "The Tender Land," and "The Hoe Down" as its lively encore at the concert's end.

The often noisy but occasionally sweet Copland concert opened with Purcell's Fantasies for Strings — No 2 in B flat major and No. 4 in C minor and Fantasia on One Note in F major. These works by the English composer once more gave the BSO's superb string sections an opportunity to exhibit their virtuosity.

And then came what we now relish in calling, the evening's "Coplandish" music. First the First Symphony. Jabbing the air with his left thumb and forefinger and thrashing and slashing with his baton hand, Copland began bombarding Manilans' musical year with his sound images, sometimes sweet (we really wished for more but none came) and more often maddeningly loud and deafening, especially in the tumultuous tuttis, in both the First Symphony and the Orchestral Suite.

But Copland soothe our shattered hearing with his exceedingly sweet musical passages. We remember the solo violin dueting with the sonorous cellos and woodwinds. These alternated with the booming parts of Copland's works, what with the jarring impact brought by the simultaneous playing of the strings, woodwinds, brass and percussion instruments

The Introduction and Love Music, the first movement of the Orchestral Suite, simply won us over to Copland music — at least the sweet Copland. This movement opened with a thundering passage but almost immediately transposed itself into one of the most delightfully melodic movements we have ever heard from

In all three Copland works (the Symphony, Orchestral Suite and the encore), Copland naturally showed an authoritative reading of his compositions. With long arms flailing, Copland seemed to jump up and down the podium, beckoned with his left thumb and forefinger, signaled his pianissimis with his left hand as he led the BSO's highly competent musicians through the difficult passages of his panoramic music. His works appeared Hollywoodish to us.

After the intermission, Copland appeared at the podium dressed in Barong Tagalog. He received the delighted applause of the audience with a wide grin. This [illegible] relief. He wielded the baton in a performance of Haydn's Smphony in C minor, No. 95, a very tame number compared to what we had just gone through. At the end of the four movements (Allegro, Andante cantabile, Minuet: Trio, and Finale: Vivace), Copland acknowledged the audience's ovation and then beckoned to the BSO's leading cellist (who gave a scintillating rendition of the cello solon) to join him in accepting the kudos.

Well, we venture to say that last evening's concert was really delightful, at least, it was quite a new experience to hear the works of the dean of modern American composers.

Tonight we shall see and hear the BSO's music director, Dr. Charles Munch, wield the baton in the BSO's third and last concert in Manila.

The program: [illegible] Symphony No. 3, [illegible] major, "Eroica," Piston's Smphony No. 6 and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.

175

Copland, The Conductor, Is As Impressive As His Music

By ADELAIDA R. KATIGBAK

Aaron Copland's appearance on last night's stage aroused provocative thoughts.

His stature as a composer is almost unequalled by any other American. His compositions have won recognition and acclaim the world over. For more than thirty years he has been recognized as an influential figure in spreading, through his works, the gospel of American music. Could he, as conductor, equal his own eminence as composer?

One reads of composers whose works are better interpreted by others. One also reads of composers who are their own best interpreters. To which class does Mr. Copland belong?

Last night's audience provided a clue. It was difficult to say whether the applause was greater for his conducting or for his works, two of which were performed as part of the program.

Physically, Mr. Copland is tall, lean and spry. He lithely hops up the podium and half-runs down the steps of the stage. He has a warm and ready smile and gives the impression of being a genial man. He has a most fascinating left arm that is fluid and graceful as he gives expression to lyric passages. He has a wrist that snaps the rhythm in crisper passages. He jabs the air with his forefinger to give the cue to the different instruments. He has a winning personality.

Viger permeates his works and interpretations. Streaks of gray in his hair notwithstanding, he is vibrantly young.

In his symphony and the suite from "The Tender Land," every instruments tonal possibilities were explored with refreshing results. Rhythm was skillfully exploited. The [illegible] complaint about modern music being indifferent to melody would find no justification here. These works were replete with lyricism. Dissonance was never an end in itself; it was employed only as part of the composer's means of expression and it never obscured, rather it was often used to enhance, his wonderful sense of humor.

While Mr. Copland's music is American, it is also universal. While various influences are evident in his style, this is also truly individual.

The Haydn Symphony No. 95 was presented — a classical gem with exquisite baroque ornamentation. Here was empathy. The conductor easily entered into Haydn's happy temperament and very subtly but very effectively gave it a gentle touch of sophistication.

One was again struck by the successful blending of two factors which could very easily conflict with each other in less perfectly trained groups: the individual excellence of the performers as evidenced by the beautifully executed solos, and the total subjugation of the individual by the whole as evidenced by the wonderful ensemble and the "oneness" achieved by the different sections of the orchestra. For this again we take our hats off to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With expectations whetted by two highly successful presentations, we look forward to this evening and this great orchestra's last concert in the Philippines for this year.

ANOTHER

(Continued from page 1)

settle the dispute. But both groups were apparently determined to abandon all peaceful means.

As a result of the mounting [illegible] students from [illegible] have refused to [illegible] at the Caloocan High School. The parents of these students expressed their fear for the safety of their children.

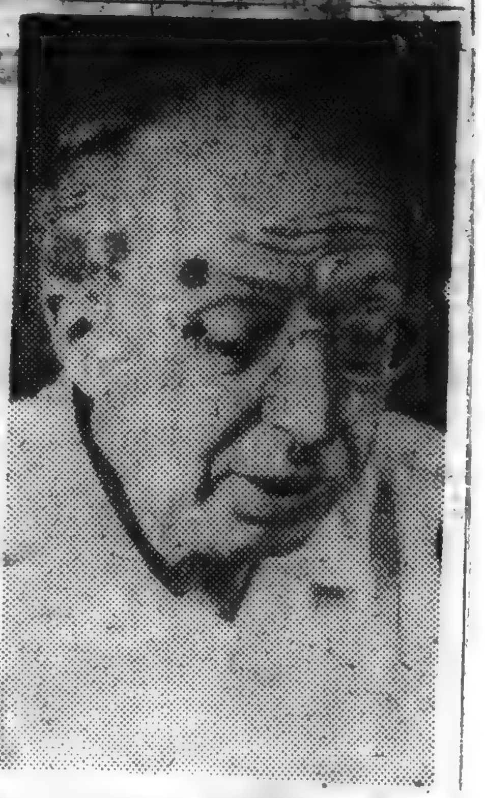
PILIPINAS MUTUAL FUND
Bid	₱6.08
Asked	₱6.77
Net Asset Value	₱6.28
PEOPLE'S MUTUAL FUND
Bid	₱5.30
Asked	₱5.91
Net Asset Value	₱5.44
INDUSTRIAL MUTUAL FUND

NES HERALD 2 8 [illegible] 1960

Philippines Herald

Copland To Conduct 2nd BSO Concert June 2

A famous American composer of contemporary times will appear in Manila in person to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on June 2, for the second of hree concerts to be given in he Rizal Memorial Stadium.



AARON COPLAND

He is Aaron Copland, considered the foremost of America's contemporary composers, whose name has been preceded here by his works. A versatile composer, Copland has made significant contributions not only to the musical literature of the orchestra, but to ballet, opera and movies as well. More than 30 of his works have been published, including his concerto for Piano and Orchestra, which was first performed by the BSO with the composer as the soloist.

The BSO, expected to arrive in Manila on May 31, will be presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano, in collaboration with the American National Theatre and Academy, on June 1, 2 and 3.

Copland has received many awards for his works, some of these being an "Oscar" from the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences for the score of the movie "The Heiress," a $5,000-award from RCA Victor for his "Dance Symphony," and the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Music Critics award for his ballet piece "Appalachian Spring."

Brooklyn-born, Copland, now in his sixties, received his early education in the public schools of New York. A natural bent for music sent him to France, at the age of 21, to study composition in the Fountainebleu School of Music. He also studied with Nadia Boulanger in Paris for three years. His compositions were first performed in the United States in 1924.

Traveling as a guest conductor of the BSO for the duration of its current 80th anniversary Far Eastern tour, Copland first appeared with the group in the same capacity in 1957, at the Bershire Symphony Festival. He has also been guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, the National Symphony Orchestra and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the Ravinia Festival. On several occasions he wielded the baton for the major orchestras in England, other European countries on the European continent, Scandinavia and Central and South America.

Active as a teacher and author, Copland is chairman of the faculty and head of the composition department of the Bershire Music Center, lectures extensively, and has written three widely read books—What to listen for in Music, Our New Music and Music and Imagination.

Other honors he has received are the Guggenheim Fellowship, the Gold [illegible] for Music by the American Academy of Arts and Letters, and honorary doctorates in music by Brandeis and Princeton University. The [illegible] of Princeton said of Copland: "He is a [illegible] champion of contemporary music... held in the utmost respect and esteem."

'Coplandish' Music Delights Concertgoers

Philippines Herald 3 JUN 1960

AARON COPLAND

By NESTOR MATA
Herald-DMHM Staff Member

Manila's concert-going public was bombarded last night with "Coplandish" music and was so much delighted it showered Aaron Copland and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Rizal Memorial coliseum with loud bravos and intense applause.

With tall, stoop-shouldered and bespectacled, Brooklyn-born American composer Aaron Copland at the podium, the Boston Symphony offered for its second concert deafening performances of Copland's First Symphony, the Orchestral Suite from Copland's Opera "The Tender Land," and "The Hoe Down" as its lively encore at the concert's end.

The often noisy but occasionally sweet Copland concert opened with Purcell's Fantasies for Strings — No 2 in B flat major and No. 4 in C minor and Fantasia on One Note in F major. These works by the English composer once more gave the BSO's superb string sections an opportunity to exhibit their virtuosity.

And then came what we now relish in calling, the evening's "Coplandish" music. First the First Symphony. Jabbing the air with his left chestral Suite.

But Copland soothe our shattered hearing with his exceedingly sweet musical passages. We remember the solo violin dueting with the sonorous cellos and woodwinds. These alternated with the booming parts of Copland's works, what with the jarring impact brought by the simultaneous playing of the strings, woodwinds, brass and percussion instruments

The Introduction and Love Music, the first movement of the Orchestral Suite, simply won us over to Copland music — at least the sweet Copland. This movement opened with a thundering passage but almost immediately transposed itself into one of the most delightfully melodic movements we have ever heard from an American composer.

The second movement (Party Scene) was flippant, featured by loud tuttis and sombre passages. And the Finale: The Promise of Living was surprisingly good for all its braying brass and screeching strings and tooting woodwinds and booming kettle drums.

In all three Copland works (the Symphony, Orchestral Suite and the encore), Copland naturally showed an authoritative reading of his compositions. With long arms flailing, Copland seemed to jump up and down the podium, beckoned with his left thumb and forefinger, signaled his pianissimis with his left hand as he led the BSO's highly competent musicians through the difficult passages of his panoramic music. His works appeared Hollywoodish to us.

After the intermission, Copland appeared at the podium dressed in Barong Tagalog. He received the delighted applause of the audience with a wide grin. This [illegible] relief. He wielded the baton in a performance of Haydn's Smphony in C minor, No. 95, a very tame number compared to what we had just gone through. At the end of the four movements (Allegro, Andante cantabile, Minuet: Trio, and Finale: Vivace), Copland acknowledged the audience's ovation and then beckoned to the BSO's leading cellist (who gave a scintillating rendition of the cello solo) to join him in accepting the kudos.

Well, we venture to say that last evening's concert was really delightful, at least, it was quite a new experience to hear the works of the dean of modern American composers.

Tonight we shall see and hear the BSO's music director, Dr. Charles Munch, wield the baton in the BSO's [illegible] and last concert in [illegible].

The program: [illegible] Symphony No. 3 [illegible] major, "Eroica," Pist[illegible] Smphony No. 6 and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.

256

FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY CONDUCTORS: Photo was taken at the reception given by US Ambassador and Mrs. I. D. Hickerson late yesterday afternoon at the embassy residence in honor of the Boston symphony conductors. From left: Prof. Antonino Buenaventura, Mrs. Hickerson, Aaron Copland, Mrs. Basilio Valdes, Charles Munch, Mrs. Maria Orense Casas and Mr. Hickerson. Richard Burgin who conducted last night's concert was unable to attend.

AMERICA'S LEADING COMPOSER

Copland bats for modern music and applause between movements

By Nati Valentin

Aaron Copland yesterday put himself on the side of people who applaud between movements of a symphony.

But he has [illegible], shared by all other composers of contemporary music: their works are not played enough.

The leading American composer of contemporary music will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's second concert tonight at 8:15 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

In answer to a question put to him during the "meet the press' luncheon of the Manila Overseas Press Club, of which he was guest, Copland said he "would rather have too much than too little," when it comes to audience appreciation.

He declared that applause tends to "relax the tension" after one movement of a symphony is played. He said he believed it to be "a matter of custom" and that, as a boy, he had heard it practised.

Japanese audiences were extremely unified in their reaction, Copland said, and it was a "slow" reaction.

Not so in Russia, where he visited at the invitation of the Russian government, in return for visits to the United States of Russian composers including Shostakovich. "The Russians couldn't have been more cooperative," he said.

As to whether or not he would compose something as a result of his tour in this part of the world, he said he couldn't be sure until he got back home, which will be about June 20. He expressed the hope that the League of Filipino composers, whom he will meet today, will be able to play him some Philippine music.

had his works performed extensively throughout the world, particularly in Mexico, Cuba and South America, where his name is widely known, and has written music not only for concertizing but for films, the ballet, and opera. Tonight, he will conduct a suite from his full-length opera, The Tender Land, as well as another of his works, First Symphony.

Purcell's Fantasia for Strings and Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 95 complete tonight's program.

Richard Burgin, associate con[illegible] and [illegible]master, and [illegible] Brooklyn-born, last night [illegible] the BSO con[illegible] [illegible] last of wh[illegible] be conducted tomorrow by the BSO music director, Charles Munch.

The Manila concerts are presentations of Alfredo Lo- the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA),

---

Copland's Contemporary Works Score A Hit With Manilans

Manila Bulletin 3 JUN 1960

By RITA GERONA

Manilans were treated to a new and different kind of music last night with the second performance at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Aaron Copland wielding the baton.

Judging from their spontaneous applause, it seemed that Manilans, who, like most audiences, have a leaning towards the more conventional classical form of symphonic music, liked it — and with gusto.

Copland, interpreting his own compositions, the First Symphony and the Orchestral Suite from the Opera "The Tender Land," seemed like giving birth to new and strange sounds — heard for the first time by local music lovers from an alive source.

Most noteworthy, too, of last night's highlights is the fact that Manilans have, for the first time, heard and seen a composer conduct his own works. Copland is the first visiting musical artist to give life, through the baton, to his own creations.

Performing to an audience, which was as sizable as its first-nighters with Richard Burgin conducting, the BSO, after going through the usual preliminaries of the Philippine and American national anthems, opened up with Purcell's Fantasia for Strings.

This first number, a short, one-movement work that made much use of the strings highlighted by wind instruments at the outset, was rather tame, and Copland, who interpreted it with ordinary carriage, did not in the least give an indication of the surprise he was going to pull in the second number, his First Symphony.

His First Symphony, composed in Paris in the middle of the turbulent Roarin' Twenties, opened with languid passages of the strings accented by few rambling notes on the harp, then developing into an undulating rhythmic theme, which Copland interpreted with graceful swaying gestures of his slender hands.

With the insuing scherzo, Copland brought forth gay, almost comical sounds which he jerked out of the orchestra with his fingers, hands and even elbows. Gradually the music ascends into a fast-paced measure, and one by one, the strings, woodwinds, brass and the percussions joined together coming to a deafening, uproarious climax, making the whole BSO beat and blow with their instruments with tremendous fury.

At this point, Copland was suddenly no longer just the orchestral conductor — he was also the composer, smiling and singing to himself even, as he urged, with frantic thrusts of his baton that almost carried him up in mid-air, the BSO to come to life. And it did—screaming.

The third movement and finale of his first symphonic work, which he calls his Organ Symphony, was highlighted by a couple of duets. The first was by the oboe, exuding with a fleeting melody, and the bass, stumping in accompaniment. The second duet was played by the first violin, played by the concert master, and accompanied by the piano. This last movement ended, after scaling through another heated and uproarious session, with screeching woodwinds and maddening bombardment of the brasses, finally coming to a close with a couple of two short, thumping notes.

Copland was made to come back to the stage twice to acknowledge with outspread arms and a broad, exultant smiles the thick plaudits of an enthusiastic audience.

Coming back to the stage in a barong Tagalog for Hadyn's Symphony in C minor, No. 95, Copland reverted back to the "conductor" in him. Except for the solo of the 'cello, in which the 'cellist ably acquitted himself, and accompanied by staccato notes on the violins, Haydn's Symphony was not particularly impressive to its last night's audience, who made Copland come back to acknowledge its applause only once.

Copland's Orchestral Suite from the "Tender Land" changed the mood of the audience with its almost jazz-like tempo. Its composer, while conducting it, actually looked like he was enjoying it. Now and then, at its prancing, lively passages, Copland would bounce on his heels, his sensitive fingers clawing in mid-air, his face beaming as he actually sings "tut . . . tut" to the music.

Composed between 1952 and 1954, his Suite to the "Tender Land" opera, which has spring harvest time for a setting, revealed the lively American, his [illegible]ling way of life and cocksure outlook for a good, eventful future. It is most representative of Copland's light contemporary music.

For an encore, Copland treated the audience, which, at this point, was rather getting "into the [illegible]" of his light, romantic, modern music, an excerpt from another work of his—the ballet "Rodeo." At its most sprightly point, a section of the audience could not contain itself and they started clapping spontaneously.

As a whole, the BSO concert last night was a novel experience for its audience. It might be said, too, that this gave an indication that contemporary music, which is still struggling for recognition and appreciation, has found a willing audience here.

Tonight's third and last performance of the BSO will be conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, BSO musical director. It will offer as "piece de resistance" Beethoven's much-loved "Eroica."

FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY CONDUCTORS: Photo was taken at the reception given by US Ambassador and Mrs. J. D. Hickerson late yesterday afternoon at the embassy residence in honor of the Boston symphony conductors. From left: Prof. Antonino Buenaventura, Mrs. Hickerson, Aaron Copland, Mrs. Basilio Valdes, Charles Munch, Mrs. Maria Orense Casas and Mr. Hickerson. Richard Burgin who conducted last night's concert was unable to attend.

AMERICA'S LEADING COMPOSER

Copland bats for modern music and applause between movements

By Nati Valentin

Aaron Copland yesterday put himself on the side of people who applaud between movements of [illegible] symphony.

But he has [illegible], shared by all other composers of contemporary music: their works are not played enough.

The leading American composer of contemporary music will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's second concert tonight at 8:15 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

was a "slow" reaction.

Not so in Russia, where he visited at the invitation of the Russian government, in return for visits to the United States of Russian composers including Shostakovich. "The Russians couldn't have been more cooperative," he said.

As to whether or not he would compose something as a result of his tour in this part of the world, he said he couldn't be sure until he got back home, which will be about June 20. He expressed the hope that the League of Filipino composers, whom he will meet today, will be able to play him some Philippine music.

Elaborating on his comment that contemporary music is not played enough, Copland said that for some curious reason, practically everywhere in the world, 75 per cent of the music played is old music.

In his remarks at the MOPC, Copland said he wished to stress that the Boston Symphony is not a cultural mission first, but first a music-making organization.

The Brooklyn-born composer was the first recipient of a Guggenheim fellowship, is the author of three books, has had his works performed extensively throughout the world, particularly in Mexico, Cuba and South America, where his name is widely known, and has written music not only for concertizing but for films, the ballet, and opera. Tonight, he will conduct a suite from his full-length opera, The Tender Land, as well as another of his works, First Symphony.

Purcell's Fantasia for Strings and Haydn's Symphony in C minor No. 95 complete tonight's program.

Richard Burgin, associate con[illegible] and [illegible]master, and [illegible] Brooklyn-born, last night [illegible] the BSO concert, [illegible] third and last of which will be conducted tomorrow by the BSO music director, Charles Munch.

The Manila concerts are presentations of Alfredo Lo- the American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA).

Copland's Contemporary Works Score A Hit With Manilans

Manila Bulletin 3 JUN 1960

By RITA GERONA

Manilans were treated to a new and different kind of music last night with the second performance at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Aaron Copland wielding the baton.

Judging from their spontaneous applause, it seemed that Manilans, who, like most audiences, have a leaning towards the more conventional classical form of symphonic music, liked it — and with gusto.

Copland, interpreting his own compositions, the First Symphony and the Orchestral Suite from the Opera "The Tender Land," seemed like giving birth to new and strange sounds — heard for the first time by local music lovers from an alive source.

Most noteworthy, too, of last night's highlights is the fact that Manilans have, for the first time, heard and seen a composer conduct his own works. Copland is the first visiting musical artist to give life, through the baton, to his own creations.

Performing to an audience, which was as sizable as its first-nighters with Richard Burgin conducting, the BSO, after going through the usual preliminaries of the Philippine and American national anthems, opened up with Purcell's Fantasia for Strings.

This first number, a short, one-movement work that made much use of the strings highlighted by wind instruments at the outset, was rather tame, and Copland, who interpreted it with ordinary carriage, did not in the least give an indication of the surprise he was going to pull in the second number, his First Symphony.

His First Symphony, composed in Paris in the middle of the turbulent Roarin' Twenties, opened with languid passages of the strings accented by few rambling notes on the harp, then developing into an undulating rhythmic theme, which Copland interpreted with graceful swaying gestures of his slender hands.

With the insuing scherzo, Copland brought forth gay, almost comical sounds which he jerked out of the orchestra with his fingers, hands and even elbows. Gradually the music ascends into a fast-paced measure, and one by one, the strings, woodwinds, brass and the percussions joined together coming to a deafening, uproarious climax, making the whole BSO beat and blow with their instruments with tremendous fury.

At this point, Copland was suddenly no longer just the orchestral conductor — he was also the composer, smiling and singing to himself even, as he urged, with frantic thrusts of his baton that almost carried him up in mid-air, the BSO to come to life. And it did—screaming.

The third movement and finale of his first symphonic work, which he calls his Organ Symphony, was highlighted by a couple of duets. The first was by the oboe, exuding with a fleeting melody, and the bass, stumping in accompaniment. The second duet was played by the first violin, played by the concert master, and accompanied by the piano. This last movement ended, after scaling through another heated and uproarious session, with screeching woodwinds and maddening bombardment of the brasses, finally coming to a close with a couple of two short, thumping notes.

Copland was made to come back to the stage twice to acknowledge with outspread arms and a broad, exultant smiles the thick plaudits of an enthusiastic audience.

Coming back to the stage in a barong Tagalog for Hadyn's Symphony in C minor, No. 95, Copland reverted back to the "conductor" in him. Except for the solo of the 'cello, in which the 'cellist ably acquitted himself, and accompanied by staccato notes on the violins, Haydn's Symphony was not particularly impressive to its last night's audience, who made Copland come back to acknowledge its applause only once.

Copland's Orchestral Suite from the "Tender Land" changed the mood of the audience with its almost jazz-like tempo. Its composer, while conducting it, actually looked like he was enjoying it. Now and then, at its prancing, lively passages, Copland would bounce on his heels, his sensitive fingers clawing in mid-air, his face beaming as he actually sings "tut . . . tut" to the music.

Composed between 1952 and 1954, his Suite to the "Tender Land" opera, which has spring harvest time for a setting, revealed the lively American, his [illegible]ling way of life and cocksure outlook for a good, eventful future. It is most representative of Copland's light contemporary music.

For an encore, Copland treated the audience, which, at this point, was rather getting "into the [illegible]" of his light, romantic modern music, an excerpt from another work of his—the ballet "Rodeo." At its most sprightly point, a section of the audience could not contain itself and they started clapping spontaneously.

As a whole, the BSO concert last night was a novel experience for its audience. It might be said, too, that this gave an indication that contemporary music, which is still struggling for recognition and appreciation, has found a willing audience here.

Tonight's third and last performance of the BSO will be conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, BSO musical director. It will offer as "piece de resistance" Beethoven's much-loved "Eroica."

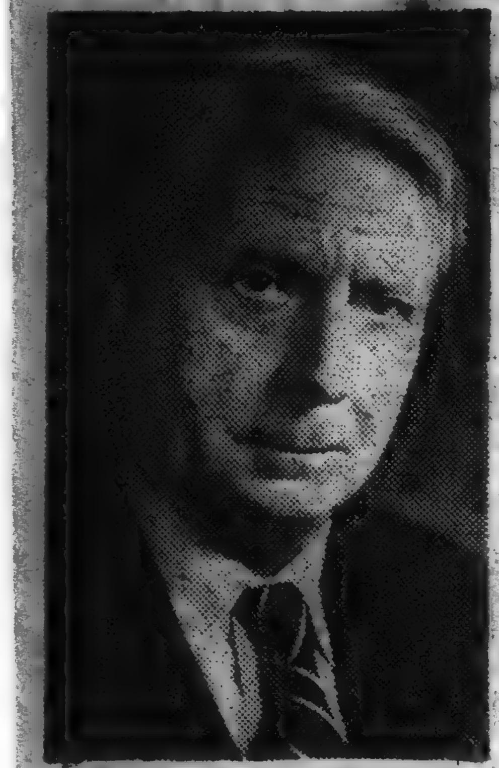
BSO'S OWN MUNCH AT PODIUM

Manila Times

3 JUN 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra's real calibre will be revealed tonight

By Nati Valentin



CHARLES MUNCH — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's musical director has had 11 seasons with the Orchestra, follows a Catholic musical tradition, and is a French musician extraordinaire. He will lead the BSO tonight.

The real calibre of the Boston Symphony Orchestra should show tonight. Its regular conductor, Charles Munch, will wield the baton at 8:15 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

Munch, a Frenchman, has headed the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1948, when the choice fell on him to succeed Serge Koussevitzky, who held the record for the longest term of a single conductor—25 years.

Munch is no ordinary Frenchman. He was in the Resistance movement in his own way, keeping music alive in France and French morale high by indefatigable performances of French music. It is said that he retained only those positions in which he could maintain his political integrity, and that he always turned over his income to the Resistance movement. Munch even refused to permit the Nazis to purge his orchestra on racial grounds, and used his influence to protect French musicians who were in danger of the Gestapo.

Alfredo Lozano, impressario for the Boston Symphony and other ANTA artists who have been here, tells how Munch spoke Tagalog at a press luncheon Wednesday at the Manila Hotel. It is not true, Lozano said, that Munch is as elusive as he is made out to be.

Another fact of interest about Munch — Albert Schweitzer, the great Bach organist and humanitarian, is a relative of the Munch family. His musician father founded the St. Guillaume Chbir.

Munch is said to be temperamentally the opposite of Koussevitzky. Whenever he appeared, Munch was acclaimed extravagantly.

Munch, who started out as a medical student, trained at the Strasbourg Conservatory and first made his mark as a violinist, becoming a professor at the Conservatory and concertmaster of the Orchestra after the first world war.

He became the conductor of the celebrated Societe des Concertes du Conservatoire de Paris.

The second world war over, Munch was the first French conductor invited to conduct in England, which he did with extraordinary success. Thereafter he conducted most of the great orchestras in Europe, the Near East and in South America — the prelude to his new career in the United States with the Boston Symphony.

Munch therefore came to the BSO a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in those centers where the music of the Old World was created and developed. He first made his appearance in the United States with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, on January 25, 1947, playing, for the most part, French works, and those exquisitely.

Munch inaugurated foreign tours for the Boston Symphony, taking it outside the United States in 1956 for a concert tour of Europe and then again in 1956 when the BSO performed in Leningrad and in Moscow, besides other European capitals, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia.

The current tour of the orchestra is its first in the Far East. Scheduled to leave tomorrow, in the afternoon, the BSO will perform next in Australia.

The complete program for tonight follows:

I. Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55 —BEETHOVEN
Allegro con brio
Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
Scherzo: Allegro vivace
Finale: Allegro molto
Intermission
II. Symphony No. 6—PISTON
Fluendno espressivo
Leggerissimo vivace
Adagio sereno
Allegro energico
III. "Daphnis et C[illegible] Suite No. 2—RAVEL
Lever du jour
Pantomine
Danse generale

Tickets are on sale at [illegible]tica Boie, and after 5 p.m the Coliseum.

Munch to conduct Boston final concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra caps its three-night engagement in Manila with a final concert conducted by its musical director, Dr. Charles Munch, at 8:15 p.m. at the Rizal Memorial coliseum.

Its maiden performance Wednesday, with Richard Burgin at the podium, was attended by a sizable crowd of first-nighters who gave conductor Burgin and his men heartwarming applause and a standing ovation at the close of the concert. American composer Aaron Copland, traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, wielded the baton last night for the second concert that featured two of Copland's own works, the First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land.

Dr. Munch, member of a distinguished musical family from Strasbourg, France, has been head of the Boston Symphony since 1948 when he was engaged to succeed the famous Serge Koussevitzky. Considered one of the outstanding musicians to come from France, Dr. Munch came to the BSO as a conductor of world-wide experience and success, a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in those centers where the music of the Old World was created and developed.

He inaugurated foreign tours for the Boston Symphony, taking it outside the United States in 1956 for a concert tour of Europe and then again in 1956 when the BSO performed in Leningrad and in Moscow, besides the European capitals, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia. The current tour of the orchestra is its first in the Far East. Scheduled to leave tomorrow, in the afternoon, the BSO is next performing in Australia.

The complete program for tonight follows:

I. Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55 — BEETHOVEN; Allegro con brio; Marcia funebre: Adagio assai; Scherzo: Allegro vivace; Finale: Allegro molto.

Intermission, II. Symphony No. 6 — PISTON; Fluendo espressivo; Leggerissimo vivace; Adagio Sereno; Allegro energico.

III. "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2 — RAVEL; Lever du jour—Pantomine—Danse generale.

Tickets are on sale at Botica Boie, and after 5 p.m. at the coliseum.

Dr. Charles Munch Conducting 3rd Boston Symphony Concert

Manila Chronicle

7 MAY 1960

The forthcoming visit [illegible] phony Orchestra early this June will [illegible] portunity to meet one of the forem[illegible] rance today, Dr. Charles Mun[illegible] up.

Scheduled to condu[illegible] last in a series of three concerts to be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15 p.m. on June 1, 2, and 3, under the auspices of Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy, Munch started his first tour of the Far East for the first time in its 80-year history.

Munch, a native of Strasbourg, comes from a distinguished musical family that included an uncle, Eugene, an organ player and teacher whose devotion to Bach knew no bounds. At his deathbed he was reciting passages from a Bach cantata "until his throat could no longer utter a sound." Charles' father and first violin teacher was Ernest, an organist, string player, leader of the St. Guillaume choir in the Strasbourg Cathedral and professor in the con[illegible]tory there. Charles himself was one of a family of four brothers and two sisters who were all musical.

In 1920 young Charles was concertmaster of the Strasbourg Orchestra. Later, for eight years, he was among the first violinists in the Gewandhaus Orchestra under Furtwangler and Walter in Leipzig. In 1932 he settled in Paris and conducted concerts for the Straram Orchestra. He founded the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris and in 1937 succeeded Philippe Gaubert as conductor of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. In 1946 he visited the United States for the first time, made numerous appearances with the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic as guest conductor, finally was engaged in the spring of 1948 to take over from Koussevitzky as head of the Boston group. He thus came to Boston as a con[illegible]tor of world-wide exper[illegible] and success, a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in music centers of the Old World.

Tickets are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

157

BSO'S OWN MUNCH AT PODIUM Manila Times

3 JUN 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra's real calibre will be revealed tonight

By Nati Valentin

CHARLES MUNCH — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's musical director has had 11 seasons with the Orchestra, follows a Catholic musical tradition, and is a French musician extraordinaire. He will lead the BSO tonight.

The real calibre of the Boston Symphony Orchestra should show tonight. Its regular conductor, Charles Munch, will wield the baton at 8:15 at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

Munch, a Frenchman, has headed the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1948, when the choice fell on him to succeed Serge Koussevitzky, who held the record for the longest term of a single conductor—25 years.

Munch is no ordinary Frenchman. He was in the Resistance movement in his own way, keeping music alive in France and French morale high by indefatigable performances of French music. It is said that he retained only those positions in which he could maintain his political integrity, and that he always turned over his income to the Resistance movement. Munch even refused to permit the Nazis to purge his orchestra on racial grounds, and used his influence to protect French musicians who were in danger of the Gestapo.

Alfredo Lozano, impressario for the Boston Symphony and other ANTA artists who have been here, tells how Munch spoke Tagalog at a press luncheon Wednesday at the Manila Hotel. It is not true, Lozano said, that Munch is as elusive as he is made out to be.

Another fact of interest about Munch — Albert Schweitzer, the great Bach organist and humanitarian, is a relative of the Munch family. His musician father founded the St. Guillaume Choir.

Munch is said to be temperamentally the opposite of Koussevitzky. Whenever he appeared, Munch was acclaimed extravagantly.

Munch, who started out as a medical student, trained at the Strasbourg Conservatory and first made his mark as a violinist, becoming a professor at the Conservatory and concertmaster of the Orchestra after the first world war.

He became the conductor of the celebrated Societe des Concertes du Conservatoire de Paris.

The second world war over, Munch was the first French conductor invited to conduct in England, which he did with extraordinary success. Thereafter he conducted most of the great orchestras in Europe, the Near East and in South America — the prelude to his new career in the United States with the Boston Symphony.

Munch therefore came to the BSO a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in those centers where the music of the Old World was created and developed. He first made his appearance in the United States with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, on January 25, 1947, playing, for the most part, French works, and those exquisitely.

Munch inaugurated foreign tours for the Boston Symphony, taking it outside the United States in 1956 for a concert tour of Europe and then again in 1956 when the BSO performed in Leningrad and in Moscow, besides other European capitals, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia.

The current tour of the orchestra is its first in the Far East. Scheduled to leave tomorrow, in the afternoon, the BSO will perform next in Australia.

The complete program for tonight follows:

I. Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55 —BEETHOVEN
Allegro con brio
Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
Scherzo: Allegro vivace
Finale: Allegro molto
Intermission
II. Symphony No. 6—PISTON
Fluendno espressivo
Leggerissim[illegible] vivace
Adagio sereno
Allegro ener[illegible]ico
III. "Daphnis et C[illegible] Suite No. 2—RAVEL
Lever du jour
Pantomine
Danse generale

Tickets are o[illegible]sale at [illegible]tica Boie, and after 5 p.m. at the Coliseum.

Dr. Charles Munch Conducting 3rd Boston Symph[illegible] Concert

Manila Chronicle 7 MAY 1960

The forthcoming visit of [illegible] mphony Orchestra early this June will give [illegible] opportunity to meet one of the foremos[illegible] rance today, Dr. Charles Munc[illegible] up.

Scheduled to condu[illegible] last in a series of three concerts to be held at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum at 8:15 p.m. on June 1, 2, and 3, under the auspices of Impresario Alfredo Lozano in cooperation with the American National Theatre and Academy, Munch started his first tour of the Far East for the first time in its 80-year history.

Munch, a native of Strasbourg, comes from a distinguished musical family that included an uncle, Eugene, an organ player and teacher whose devotion to Bach knew no bounds. At his deathbed he was reciting passages from a Bach cantata "until his throat could no longer utter a sound." Charles' father and first violin teacher was Ernest, an organist, string player, leader of the St. Guillaume choir in the Strasbourg Cathedral and professor in the con[illegible]rvatory there. Charles himself was one of a family of four brothers and two sisters who were all musical.

In 1920 young Charles was concertmaster of the Strasbourg Orchestra. Later, for eight years, he was among the first violinists in the Gewandhaus Orchestra under Furtwangler and Walter in Leipzig. In 1932 he settled in Paris and conducted concerts for the Straram Orchestra. He founded the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris and in 1937 succeeded Philippe Gaubert as conductor of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. In 1946 he visited the United States for the first time, made numerous appearances with the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic as guest conductor, finally was engaged in the spring of 1948 to take over from Koussevitzky as head of the Boston group. He thus came to Boston as a con[illegible]tor of world-wide experi[illegible] and success, a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in music centers of the Old World.

Tickets are now on sale at the Botica Boie.

2½ 50
2-50
LIFEBUOY
PINK CASHM
100

[illegible]onduct [illegible]concert

[illegible] Munch, at 8:15 p.m. [illegible]zal Memorial coli[illegible]

[illegible]aden performance [illegible]y, with Richard [illegible]rgin at the podium, was [illegible]ttended by a sizable crowd of first-nighters who gave conductor Burgin and his men heartwarming applause and a standing ovation at the close of the concert. American composer Aaron Copland, traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, wielded the baton last night for the second concert that featured two of Copland's own works, the First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land.

Dr. Munch, member of a distinguished musical family from Strasbourg, France, has been head of the Boston Symphony since 1948 when he was engaged to succeed the famous Serge Koussevitzky. Considered one of the outstanding musicians to come from France, Dr. Munch came to the BSO as a conductor of world-wide experience and success, a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in those centers where the music of the Old World was created and developed.

He inaugurated foreign tours for the Boston Symphony, taking it outside the United States in 1956 for a concert tour of Europe and then again in 1956 when the BSO performed in Leningrad and in Moscow, besides the European capitals, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia. The current tour of the orchestra is its first in the Far East. Scheduled to leave tomorrow, in the afternoon, the BSO is next performing in Australia.

The complete program for tonight follows:

I. Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55 — BEETHOVEN; Allegro con brio; Marcia funebre: Adagio assai; Scherzo: Allegro vivace; Finale: Allegro molto.

Intermission, II. Symphony No. 6 — PISTON; Fluendo espressivo; Leggerissimo vivace; Adagio Sereno; Allegro energico.

III. "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2 — RAVEL; Lever du jour—Pantomine—Danse generale.

Tickets are on sale at Botica Boie, and after 5 p.m. at the coliseum.

Farewell Performance Tonight Of BSO To Be Led By Charles Munch

Evening News [illegible] JUN 1960

The Boston Symphony Orchestra caps its three-night engagement in Manila with a final concert conducted by its musical director, Dr. Charles Munch, at 8:15 p.m. tonight in the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

Its maiden performance Wednesday, with Richard Burgin at the podium, was attended by a sizable crowd of first-nighters who gave conductor Burgin and his men heart-warming applause and a standing ovation at the close of the concert. American composer Aaron Copland traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, wielded the baton last night for the second concert that featured two of Copland's own works, the First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land.

Dr. Munch, member of a distinguished musical family from Strasbourg, France, has been head of the Boston Symphony since 1948 when he was engaged to succeed the famous Serge Koussevitzky. Considered one of the outstanding musicians to come from France, Dr. Munch came to the BSO as a conductor of world-wide experience and success, a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in those centers where the music of the Old World was created and developed.

He inaugurated foreign tours for the Boston Symphony, taking it outside the United States in 1956 for a concert tour of Europe and then again in 1956 when the BSO performed in Leningrad and in Moscow, besides the European capitals, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia. The current tour of the orchestra is its first in the Far East. Scheduled to leave tomorrow, in the afternoon, the BSO is next performing in Australia.

The complete program for tonight follows:

I. Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55 — BEETHOVEN Allegro con brio Marcia funebre: Adagio assai Scherzo: Allegro vivace Finale: Allegro molto
II. Symphony No. 6 — PISTON Fluendo espressivo Leggerissimo vivace Adagio sereno Allegro energico
III. "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2 — RAVEL Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse generale

Tickets are on sale at Botica Boie, and after 5 p.m. at the Coliseum.

THE MANILA TIMES [illegible], 1960

FAREWELL CONCERT—The Boston Symphony Orchestra in its last performance at the Rizal Memorial last night. At the podium is Charles Munch, BSO music director, in barong Tagalog.

PRESIDENT GARCIA is shown congratulating Dr. Charles Munch after last night's farewell performance of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Rizal Memorial stadium, as the First Lady looks on.

B.S.O. Ends Concert Series; Performance Impressive

6/4/60

MANILA BULLETIN

By RITA GERONA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra capped its series of concerts last night at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum with an exquisitely impressive performance conducted by the BSO musical director, Dr. Charles Munch—leaving no doubt that they have given local music-lovers an experience to treasure.

Highlighting the BSO's farewell performance was the presence of President and Mrs. Garcia, who arrived exactly 15 minutes before the performance began at 8:30 p.m. High-ranking government officials and their well-dressed wives, members of the diplomatic corps, and prominent Manilans were also present.

Well over 12,000 people packed the Coliseum to the hilt including the bleachers area, leaving only the back of the stage unoccupied. Many are of the opinion that last night's crowd was about one of the biggest ever to grace an orchestral performance.

After the preliminary national anthem-playing part, in which Dr. Munch comported himself with an impressive carriage on the podium, the BSO lost no time in striking off the commanding two-note opening of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55, progressing in a sprightly manner to the famous heroic theme.

As the BSO went deeper into the succeeding variations of the theme in the first movement, allegro con brio, Dr. Munch suddenly went overboard, gesticulating with frantic arm-swinging and head-jerking, causing his white locks to tumble all over his head. As he turned to one side to urge the first violins, he showed a profile with furrowed brows, tight mouth and impassioned look, making the audience feel that he was in his best element.

After the first movement, the crowd broke into a long, thunderous applause that Munch, who seemed impatient to go on to the succeeding movement, scanned the crowd with a scowl on his face, his left hand poised on his waist. At this point, late-comers were still sidling to their seats but nevertheless, Munch, after smiling at conductor Richard Burgin, who was first violinist and concert master last night, led the orchestra to the second movement, the famous Funeral March.

The Funeral March was about the most moving part of the whole night's program and it was here that the BSO would be most remembered for by its local audience.

Like the third lively movement, the last movement was filled with joyous tones, lilting rustlings and horn-calls as the BSO gave full vent to exposing Beethoven's rich and bold ideas that characterize his Herioc Symphony, said to be a "monument to the heroic spirt human."

Munch came back to the podium twice to acknowledge the applause of a highly appreciative audience.

The second number on the program, Piston's Symphony No. 6, was almost disconcerting after such a wonderful experience with the classical "Eroica." A contemoprary composer himself, who, like Copland, went through Parisian tutelage and eventually went home to America to create a new kind of symphonic music, Piston, as revealed last night by the BSO, has jazz-like propensities.

The opening of the Piston's symphony, the fluendo espressivo, produced weird sounds mostly from strings eventually dying out with apreggios on the two harps, one of which was played by a woman, Mrs. Olivia Leutche.

The leggerissimo vivace or the second movement came up with brusque sprints from the violins jarred by ear-tingling hammerings of the percussion intruments. Played in a fast clip, the BSO seemed like it was trying its fastest best to get it over with.

But if the audience was not too fond of Piston's first two movements, they seemed to have sat up and noticed at the third movement, the long adagio sereno, which gave languid, dulcet passages from the violas and 'cellos, deepened by the bass viol and glidding on with slow attempts from the flute accompanied by the harp, then the picolo and the harp, again. Altogether this movement made a serene, soothing music, only to be upset by the last screeching movement, the allegro energico, which was bombarded by percussions and the brasses filling the atmosphere with festivity.

The last number, Ravel's second suite from "Daphnis et Chloe," was a delightful one. Rippling, rambling passages, and a lullaby-sounding part particularly thrilled the audience. But the best yet was the solo by the flute, ably played by James Pappoustsakis. The symphony ended in a festive session with castanets enlivening the air.

Munch gave two encores, the first, the March from Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet; and the second, an excerpt from Wagner's Meistersinger.

Other than Pappoustsakis, Samuel Mayes, who played a moving solo on the 'cello in Piston's Symphony, was also warmly congratulated by Munch right on the stage. Burgin, who did some solo parts as first violinist, also was congratulated by him.

At the close of the performance, President and Mrs. Garcia went to the foot of the stage, where they congratulated Munch, who was soaking wet with perspiration. Munch presented the Presi-

159

Charles Munch To Lead BSO In Final Concert

The [illegible] Symphony Orchestra caps its [illegible]-night engagement [illegible] with a final concert [illegible] by its musical [illegible] Dr. Charles [illegible] p.m. tonight [illegible] Memorial [illegible].

Its [illegible] performance We[illegible] Richard Burgin [illegible], was attended [illegible] crowd of first-[illegible] gave conductor Burgin [illegible] his men heartwarming applause and a standing ovation at the close of the concert. American composer Aaron Coplan, traveling with the BSO as guest conductor, wielded the baton last night for the second concert that featured two of Copland's own works, the First Symphony and a suite from his opera, The Tender Land.

Dr. Munch, member of a distinguished musical family from Strasbourg, France, has been head of the Boston Symphony since 1948 when he was engaged to succeed the famous Serge Koussevitzky. Considered one of the outstanding musicians to come from France, Dr. Munch came to the BSO as a conductor of world-wide experience and success, a musician of deep-rooted culture attained in those centers where the music of the Old World was created and developed.

He inaugurated foreign tours for the Boston Symphony, taking it outside the United States in 1956 for a concert tour of Europe and then again in 1956 when the LSO performed in Leningrad and in Moscow, besides the European capitals, thus becoming the first Western orchestra to perform in Soviet Russia. The current tour of the orchestra is its first in the Far East. Scheduled to leave tomorrow, in the afternoon, the BSO is next performing in Australia.

The complete program for tonight follows: Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroico," Op. 55 by Beethoven, Allegro con brio, Marcia funebre: Adagio assai, Scherzo: Allegro vivace, Finale: Allegro molto; Symphony No. 6 by Piston, Fluendo espressivo, Leggerissimo vivace, Adagio sereno, Allegro energico; "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2 by Ravel, Lever du jour—Pantomime—Danse generale.

Tickets are on sale at Botica Boie, and after 6 p.m. at the Coliseum.

Orchestra gets big ovation

By NATI VALENTIN

Superb is the word for Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night. There were moments when their playing defied description.

A most felicitous conductor-orchestra relationship awed and delighted Manila

(Photo on last page)

concert-goers at the third and final performance here of the Boston Symphony.

President and Mrs. Garcia [illegible] US [illegible]ssador and [illegible] [illegible]vey Hickerson h[illegible] those present. The Rizal Memorial Coliseum, acoustically improved by Cesar Co[illegible],

Turn to 8-A, col. 3

Orchestra gets big ovation

From page 1

was filled to the rafters.

[illegible] played two encores. The Damnation of Faust by Berlioz, and the Overture to Meistersinger by Wagner.

Dr. Munch, now in his twelfth year as musical director of the Boston Symphony, brought out the virtuosity of the orchestra. But it was more than an orchestral triumph, more than a sonorous blending. It was also the highest type of unity exemplified by first-rate artists of different nationalities who have grown musical roots in Boston and become naturalized American citizens.

Although Dr. Munch is [illegible] a conductor who considers the music far more important than his role, he made an interesting study as he led the Orchestra through three of the most exacting numbers in any symphonic repertoire. These were Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E flat, "Eroica" Op. 55; a contemporary work, Piston's Symphony No. 6; and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe.

He conducted without a score, except for Piston's Symphony.

Coming out in barong Tagalog, to an acclaim that became tumultuous as the concert progressed, Dr. Munch affably and humbly acknowledged the applause, and became almost immediately the absorbed and sensitive artist.

Gray locks spilling over forehead, Dr. Munch was a dynamic conductor, as he described circular motions with right arm and head. Now he would stretch out his left arm, now put a finger to his lips, now tilt back on his heels, arms flailing for a crescendo. Occasionally, he had the stance of a fencer. Always, always he held his players in a fascinating and masterful spell.

It was in Daphnis et Chloe that the Orchestra virtually took one's breath away. Here J[illegible] Pappoutsakis, flutist, [illegible] out with some of the [illegible] exquisite solo playing [illegible] in a long time. [illegible] were featured BSO h[illegible] Bernard Zighera [illegible] Olivia Luetcke.

Richard Burgin who conducted the opening concert last Wednesday, was concertmaster.

Described as a "vast musical fresco," this work, a ballet, comes from a document of ancient Greece, the "ancient Greece" of Ravel's dreams.

Only such technical excellence as the BSO's could have produced the murmur of rivulets, the haunting mystery and romance of the habitation of Ravel's nymphs and shepherds.

Beethoven's Eroica, played by Munch with a slightly different tempo, was impressive. Although it had nothing to do wtih Napoleon Bonaparte, it still might have been composed to reflect greatness dreamed of by an artist, and thrown away by such a man as Napoleon.

The Eroica's funebre (funeral march) recalls the death of one of the Boston Symphony's viola players in Japan. Dr. Munch asked for one-minute silence before starting this movement in the Japanese [illegible] where the death occurred.

Piston's contem[illegible] piece was perhaps no[illegible] the musical taste of ma[illegible], but it attested neverthele[illegible] to the superb tech[illegible]ue of the orchestra f[illegible] whose members it was [illegible]ten. The work is de[illegible]ed to its long-time, [illegible] conductor, Koussev[illegible], whom Munch replaced.

The com[illegible] Boston Symphony and the impact of [illegible], and of guest conductor A[illegible] Copland, will long be remembered by Filipinos.

The Manila Chronicle Saturday, June 4, 1960

FAREWELL CONCERT—Dr. Charles Munch, famed director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, waves a hand to smother the brasses as he stirs the 104-man band through the intricate passages of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E flat major in last night's farewell performance of the orchestra. President Garcia and the First Lady led the biggest crowd of music lovers yet who thronged to the Rizal Memorial Coliseum to listen to the concert.

President, First Lady attend last BSO concert

By AMANTE F. PAREDES
of the Chronicle staff

Lusty applause by an appreciative audience characterized the farewell performance of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at the Rizal coliseum as Charles Munch, music director of the visiting orchestra, conducted in a vibrant manner three classical compositions.

President and Mrs. Carlos P. Garcia led about 14,000 concert-goers in hearing the last of a three-night engagement, a rare occasion for good entertainment in culture-barren Manila.

The coliseum was filled with people, some of them standing in the aisles in the upper seats and the bleachers. The enchanting strains of Beethoven's "Eroica" were marred by the clapping of hands between movements from the gallery. Director Munch was a bit peeved at the wrong timing of the applause, but seemed unperturbed as he continued directing [illegible] the composition.

The first piece which proved to be the most familiar as the audience listened to it in rapt attention was Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Eroica," Opus 55.

The Beethoven masterpiece which is referred to by George Grove as "a portrait of Beethoven himself" was the longest score played by the orchestra in its three-night performance.

Munch dedicated a record of this musical piece as performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to President and Mrs. Garcia when they congratulated the conductor at the end of the concert.

Following the intermission, the orchestra played Piston's Symphony No. 5 which was commissioned by the orchestra itself for an anniversary season. This melody did not evoke much enthusiasm among the listeners.

The same attitude of the audience could be said of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," which was a music set for a ballet in one act. A "choreographic symphony in three parts," this opus contributed much to modern French music which "emphasize in different ways the detached attitude of Ravel towards his art."

As the crowd clapped for an encore, the stocky music director returned to the podium to conduct two lively encores: Berlioz's Hungarian March and Wagner's Second Prelude to the Third Act of Meistersinger.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which came here under the international cultural program of the United States administered by the American National Theatre and Academy, is proceeding today to Australia for performances similar to those it gave in Formosa, Japan and the Philippines. The local performance was presented by Impresario Alfredo Lozano.

Charles Munch, the music director who is both an organist and string player, won the hearts of Manilans as he had been honored in the United States, Europe including Russia where he conducted concerts in 1956.

Winning plaudits with Munch during their concert tour in the Far East by this symphony orchestra were Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, as guest conductor, and Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor since 1953, and concertmaster since 1920.

Garcia Guests At BSO Concerts

Philipp[illegible] [illegible] MAY 1960

PRESIDENT AND MRS. CARLOS P. GARCIA will be guest of honor at the forthcoming Manila performances of the famed 104-man Boston Symphony orchestra on June 1, 2 and 3 at the Rizal Memorial coliseum. Impresario Alfredo Lozano, called on the First Lady yesterday. He is explaining the varied programs to be presented by the Boston group to local audiences. Standing is Miss Pacita Noel, social secretary of Mrs. Garcia.

161

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

JUN 4 1960

BOSTONIANS IN MANILA

Symphony Wins Ovation From 5,000 After First Concert

MANILA, June 2 (AP)—A capacity throng of more than 5,000 persons gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a five-minute standing ovation Wednesday night after its Philippine debut.

Music critics here called the concert "inspired" and "enthralling." Assistant Conductor Richard Burgin, who conducted, was praised for "adept mastery" and "admirable control."

Manila's Sports Coliseum was turned into a concert hall for the occasion. Because of the 90-degree heat, the members of the orchestra played in shirtsleeves.

The program consisted of Leon Kirchner's Toccata, the "Adagio" movement of Mahler's Tenth Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Aaron Copland, the composer, will conduct the second concert tonight and Charles Munch will end the local series tomorrow night.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513

JUN 3 1960

Boston Symphony Hailed in Manila

MANILA (AP)—A record Manila concert audience of more than 8000 rocked Manila's sports coliseum with thunderous applause tonight during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's final performance here.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012

JUN 4 1960

8000 in Manila Cheer Symphony

MANILA (AP)—A record Manila concert audience of more than 8000 rocked Manila's sports coliseum with thunderous applause last night during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's final performance here.

The crowd spilled over into the aisles, corridors and exits in 90-plus heat as Charles Munch, wearing a cool native-style Filiuino shirt, conducted the Pacific touring orchestra through Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, Piston's Sixth Symyhony and Ravel's Dapinis and Chloe Suite Two.

The orchestra flies to Australia tonight.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,367

JUN 2 1960

Shirtsleeved Boston Symphony Cheered by 5,000 in Manila

MANILA (AP) — A capacity crowd of more than 5,000 gave the Boston Symphony a five-minute standing ovation last night following its Philippine debut.

Local music critics called the concert "inspired" and "enthralling." Assistant conductor Richard Burgin, who conducted, was praised for "adept mastery" and "admirable control."

Manila's Sports Coliseum was turned into a concert hall by a massive acoustical overhang behind the stage. Because of the 90-degree heat, the orchestra played in shirtsleeves.

The program consisted of Leon Kirchner's Toccata, the adagio movement of Mahler's tenth Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Composer Aaron Copland will conduct the second Concert tonight and Charles Munch will conclude the local series Friday night.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,001

JUN 2 1960

Boston Symphony Hailed at Manila

MANILA (AP) — A capacity crowd of more than 5000 gave the Boston Symphony a five-minute standing ovation last night following its Philippine debut.

Local music critics called the concert "inspired" and "enthralling." Assistant Conductor Richard Burgin, who conducted, was praised for "adept mastery" and "admirable control."

Manila's Sports Coliseum was turned into a concert hall by a massive acoustical overhang behind the stage. Because of the 90-degree heat, the orchestra played in shirtsleeves.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

JUN 2 1960

5000 Cheer Our Symphony In Philippines

MANILA, June 2 (AP)—A capacity crowd of more than 5000 gave the Boston Symphony a five-minute standing ovation last night following its philippine debut.

Local music critics called the concert "inspired" and "enthralling." Assistant Conductor Richard Burgin, who conducted, was praised for "adept mastery" and "admirable control."

Manila's sports coliseum was turned into a concert hall by a massive acoustical overhang behind the stage. Because of the 90-degree heat, the orchestra played in shirtsleeves.

The program consisted of Leon Kirchner's Toccata, the Adagio movement of Mahler's 10th Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Composer Aaron Copland will conduct the second concert tonight and Charles Munch will conclude the local series Friday night.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208

JUN 2 1960

Symphony Gets Ovation

MANILA, June 2 (AP)—A capacity crowd of more than 5,000 gave the Boston Symphony a 5-minute standing ovation last night following its Philippine debut. The program consisted of Leon Kirchner's Toccata, the Adagio Movement of Mahler's 10th Symphony and Tchaikovsky's 1st Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen (e)
LACONIA, N. H.
Circ. 5,865

JUN 2 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY REACHES MANILA

MANILA (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived here today aboard two chartered planes from Tokyo.

The group, led by Conductor Charles Munch, is in the course of its first tour of the Far East. It will give three concerts in Manila.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 37,868

JUN 4 1960

BostonSymphony GetsRaveNotices

MANILA (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra flies to Australia today, trailing a stream of rave notices on its three Manila performances.

Music critics hailed the orchestra's final concert here last night as "superb" and "exquisitely impressive."

The reviews echoed the thunderous ovation given the orchestra by a record Manila concert audience of more than 8,000 headed by President and Mrs. Carlos Garcia.

Conductor Charles Munch presented the Garcias with a recording by the orchestra of Beethoven's third ("Eroica symphony, highlight of concert.

Munch drew cheers from the crowd when he appeared in a native style Filipino shirt calculated to offset the 90-plus degree heat inside the closed stadium.

The 108-man orchestra is scheduled to tour New Zealand after Australia, in the windup of its Pacific trip.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

JUN 3 1960

BOSTONIANS IN MANILA

Symphony Wins Ovation From 5,000 After First Concert

MANILA, June 2 (AP)—A capacity throng of more than 5,000 persons gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a five-minute standing ovation last night after its Philippine debut.

Music critics here called the concert "inspired" and "enthralling." Assistant Conductor Richard Burgin, who conducted, was praised for "adept mastery" and "admirable control."

Manila's Sports Coliseum was turned into a concert hall for the occasion. Because of the 90-degree heat, the members of the orchestra played in shirtsleeves.

The program consisted of Leon Kirchner's Toccata, the "Adagio" movement of Mahler's Tenth Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Aaron Copland, the composer, will conduct the second concert tonight and Charles Munch will end the local series tomorrow night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 398,886

JUN 5 1960

Boston Symphony Off to Australia

MANILA, June 4 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra flies to Australia today, trailing a stream of rave notices on its three Manila performances.

Music critics hailed the orchestra's final concert here last night as "superb" and "exquisitely impressive." The reviews echoed the thunderous ovation given the orchestra by a record Manila concert audience of more than 8000, headed by President and Mrs. Carlos Garcia.

Conductor Charles Munch presented the Garcias with a recording by the orchestra of Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") Symphony, highlight of concert.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 45,338

JUN 4 1960

Boston Symphony, Conductor Copland Acclaimed In Manila

MANILA, P.I. (Reuters)—Composer - conductor Aaron Copland and the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday won enthusiastic acclaim from Manila critics.

Copland conducted the touring Boston orchestra in the second of its three engagements in Manila.

The program included Copland's first symphony, "Rodeo," and the party scene in his opera "The Tender Land." Other items were Purcell's "Fantasia For Strings" and Haydn's "Symphony in C Minor Number Five."

The Manila Times critic said: "With Copland, our earlier impression was confirmed that the Boston Symphony is not 'playing down' but rather honoring 'the natives' with a carefully-selected and distinguished repertoire."

The Manila Daily Bulletin critic described the performance as "a new and different kind of music" and added: "Copland is the first visiting musical artist to give life, through the baton, to his own creations."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,958

JUN 4 1960

The Boston Symphony Orchestra displayed its artistic wares before a capacity audience of 5000 at Manila, capital of the Philippines, Wednesday evening and was given a five minute ovation as it closed its program with Tschaikovsky's Fifth Symphony. The concert was presented in the spacious Manila Sports Coliseum but evidently that building has not yet been air-conditioned. The 90 degree heat in the building led to the doffing of the formal coats and appearance of the artists in their shirt-sleeves.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
JUN 2 1960

Boston Symphony Entrances Manila

MANILA (AP) — A capacity crowd of more than 5,000 gave the Boston Symphony a five-minute standing ovation last night following its Phillipine debut.

Local music critics called the concert "inspired" and "enthralling." Assistant conductor Richard Burgin, who conducted, was praised for "adept mastery" and "admirable control."

Manila's sports coliseum was turned into a concert hall by a massive acoustical overhand behind the stage. Because of the 90-degree heat, the orchestra played in shirtsleeves.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 142,534
JUN 2 - 1960

Manila Acclaims Boston Symphony

Manila — (AP) — A capacity crowd of more than 5,000 gave the Boston Symphony a five-minute standing ovation last night after its Philippine debut.

Local music critics called the concert "inspired" and "enthralling." Assistant Conductor Richard Burgin, who conducted, was praised for "adept mastery" and "admirable control."

The program consisted of Leon Kirchner's Toccata, the adagio movement of Mahler's 10th Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Composer Aaron Copland will conduct the second concert tonight and Charles Munch will conclude the local series Friday night.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
JUN 3 1960

Late Bulletins

WASHINGTON (AP)—A Senate Interior Subcommittee today tentatively set the week of June 13 for hearings on a bill to create a Cape Cod, Mass., national seashore park.

WASHINGTON (UPI)—House officials indicated today they may call in auditors to check questioned expense accounts of congressmen accused of having spent public funds in bars and nightclubs and on vacation cruises.

MANILA (AP)—A record Manila concert audience of more than 8,000 rocked Manila's Sports Coliseum with thunderous applause tonight during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's final performance here.

UORFOLK, Va. (AP)—A 100-foot Navy tugboat capsized and sank in 40 feet of water while assisting the oiler Pawcatuck t oget under way in the Elizabeth River. The nine men aboard the tug were rescued. None was hurt.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 680,319
JUN 4 1960

BOSTONIANS IN MANILA

Symphony Wins Ovation From 5,000 After First Concert

MANILA, June 2 (AP)—A capacity throng of more than 5,000 persons gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a five-minute standing ovation Wednesday night after its Philippine debut.

Music critics here called the concert "inspired" and "enthralling." Assistant Conductor Richard Burgin, who conducted, was praised for "adept mastery" and "admirable control."

Manila's Sports Coliseum was turned into a concert hall for the occasion. Because of the 90-degree heat, the members of the orchestra played in shirtsleeves.

The program consisted of Leon Kirchner's Toccata, the "Adagio" movement of Mahler's Tenth Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Aaron Copland, the composer, will conduct the second concert tonight and Charles Munch will end the local series tomorrow night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 106,090
JUN 5 - 1960

Boston Symphony Cheered By 8,000 In Manila Finale

MANILA (AP) — A record Manila concert audience of more than 8,000 rocked Manila's Sports Coliseum with thunderous applause Friday night during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's final performance here.

The crowd spilled over into the aisles, corridors and exits in 90 plus heat as Charles Munch, wearing a cool native-style Filipino shirt, conducted the Pacific touring orchestra through Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, Piston's Sixth Symphony and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite Two.

The enthusiastic audience interrupted movements with scattered clapping and the end of each number brought the listeners to their feet. The finale was capped by a 10-minute standing ovation that wrung two encores from the tired, perspiration-drenched orchestra, ending with the rousing Meistersinger Overture.

The United States Weather Bureau is 90 years old this year.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 453,664
JUN 5 - 1960

Hub Symphony Flies to Thrill Aussies

MANILA (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra flew to Australia yesterday, trail- a stream of rave notices on its three Manila performances.

Music critics hailed the orchestra's final concert here as "superb" and "exquisitely impressive."

The reviews echoed the thunderous ovation given the orchestra by a record Manila concert audience of more than 8000 headed by President and Mrs. Carlos Garcia.

Conductor Charles Munch presented the Garcias with a recording by the orchestra of Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") symphony, highlight of the concert.

Munch drew cheers from the crowd when he appeared in a native style Filipino shirt calculated to offset the 90-plus degree heat inside the closed stadium.

(63

EZ, Society Editor MANILA BULLETIN, THURS., JUNE 2, 1960

AMBASSADOR and Mrs. John D. Hickerson gave a reception yesterday at their residence on Del Pan in honor of the conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the group are, left to right, Lt. Col. L. G. Cariño, Mrs. Diosdado Macapagal, Ambassador Hickerson (partly covered), Charles Munch, B. Custodio, Mrs. Basilio Valdez, Mrs. Hickerson, Vice President Diosdado Macapagal, and Aaron Copland.

THE PHILIPPINES HERALD 2 JUN 1960

BSO's Conductors, Members Are Feted

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA's three conductors and members were feted yesterday at the Narra room of the Manila Hotel and the Manila Overseas Press club. Top photo was taken during the reception given by Impresario Alfredo Lozano in honor of Dr. Charles Munch, music director of BSO (fifth from left). Also shown in photo are (from left) Olivia Luetche, Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the BSO's manager; Richard Burgin, associate conductor, Lozano, Munch and Thomas D. Perry Jr. Photo at right taken at the MOPC shows (from left) William S. Cox, Mrs. Betty Becker, Aaron Copland; eminent American composer and guest conductor of BSO, and Jim Becker, chief of bureau, Associated Press.

164

KEEPING IN TONE

THE BIG STRETCH as Dr. Charles Munch, 68, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, did his daily physical jerks at his Brisbane hotel yesterday morning. Dr. Munch regularly exercises, particularly before conducting.

BOSTON MUSIC WINS CHEERS

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra conquered its first Australian audience completely in the City Hall last night. And the packed audience's reaction made the orchestra certain it is going to enjoy its 10-day Australian tour.

Everything was "marvellous" for conductor Charles Munch after he had just finished the second encore of the night to a tumult of applause.

The audience? "Marvellous," he said. The hall? "Marvellous too."

Dr. Munch said he had been very happy with the acoustics of the hall from his position on the podium.

Leading American composer Aaron Copland, who sat in the audience, described the hall as [illegible] derful "after some [illegible] halls the [illegible] been in rec[illegible] said the s[illegible] sounded qu[illegible] as usual.

A total of [illegible] concert-goers crowded into the hall. The choir [illegible] facing the conductor [illegible] full. Some music-lovers sat on extra seats placed in the aisles, and even on the orchestra platform itself.

The audience, which included the Governor (Sir Henry Abel Smith), brought Dr. Munch back four times after the Beethoven "Eroica" Symphony, and there were cheers after the brilliance of the Ravel "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2.

Even a totally unfamiliar new American work, Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, had a warm reception.

[illegible] encores the orchestra [illegible] Wagner's "Master-[illegible]" Overture [illegible] the [illegible] Rakoczy March.

[illegible] American Ambassador to Australia (Mr. William J. Sebald) told the audience the United [illegible] was very happy to [illegible] one of its main cultural assets to Australia.

Concert one to remember

BY DR. W. LOVELOCK

IT is difficult to speak of the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra except in superlatives; the trouble is that one's stock of them is inadequate.

At the City Hall last evening they gave us, under the direction of their conductor Charles Munch, such playing as I have not heard for many a long day, and which I hardly hope to hear again for an equally long time.

It is needless to speak of the quality of their attack, balance, blending and integration of tone — such matters can be taken for granted in any first-class orchestra.

Beautiful tone

What impressed one was the simply lovely sound which Dr. Munch obtained, whether in piano or forte, whether in Beethoven or Piston or Ravel. In every department beauty of tone is pre-eminent, and every soloist is an artist of fine calibre.

Dr. Munch's reading of the Eroica Symphony is as convincing as I have ever heard; it has breath of conception, intimacy of detail, and an intensity, especially in parts of the Funeral March, which I have rarely heard equalled.

One hesitates to single out any particular player or players, but I cannot forbear to remark on the artistry of the solo oboe, and on the simply gorgeous playing of the horns in the trio of the Scherzo.

Effective work

We rarely have the opportunity of hearing works by Contemporary American composers, and the 6th Symphony of Walter Piston, which opened the second half of the concert, was awaited with considerable interest.

It is an impressive and enormously effective work, brilliantly scored (as one would expect from one who has written one of the best modern books on orchestration) and structurally sound.

Despite its occasional asperities, it is evident that the composer is of true "romantic" descent, and is not afraid to write a melody which has real emotional meaning. The Scherzo is a fantastically brilliant piece of writing.

Superb playing

The formal programme ended with the second series of the "orchestral fragments" from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe". Although I have already used the adjective "gorgeous", it is the only one I can find to describe the performance. The playing of every section of the orchtra was superb.

The tremendous ovation which followed induced generosity in the shape of two encores—an extract from the finale of "Meistersinger" and the "Rakoczy" March, the latter being almost unbearably [illegible].

The thanks of all music-lovers [illegible] to Dr. Munch and the orchestra, who spared themselves not at all but also to the A.B.C., which made their visit possible. It is all too rarely that such an experience [illegible] come our way; our delight will long be remembered.

BLANK PAGE

166

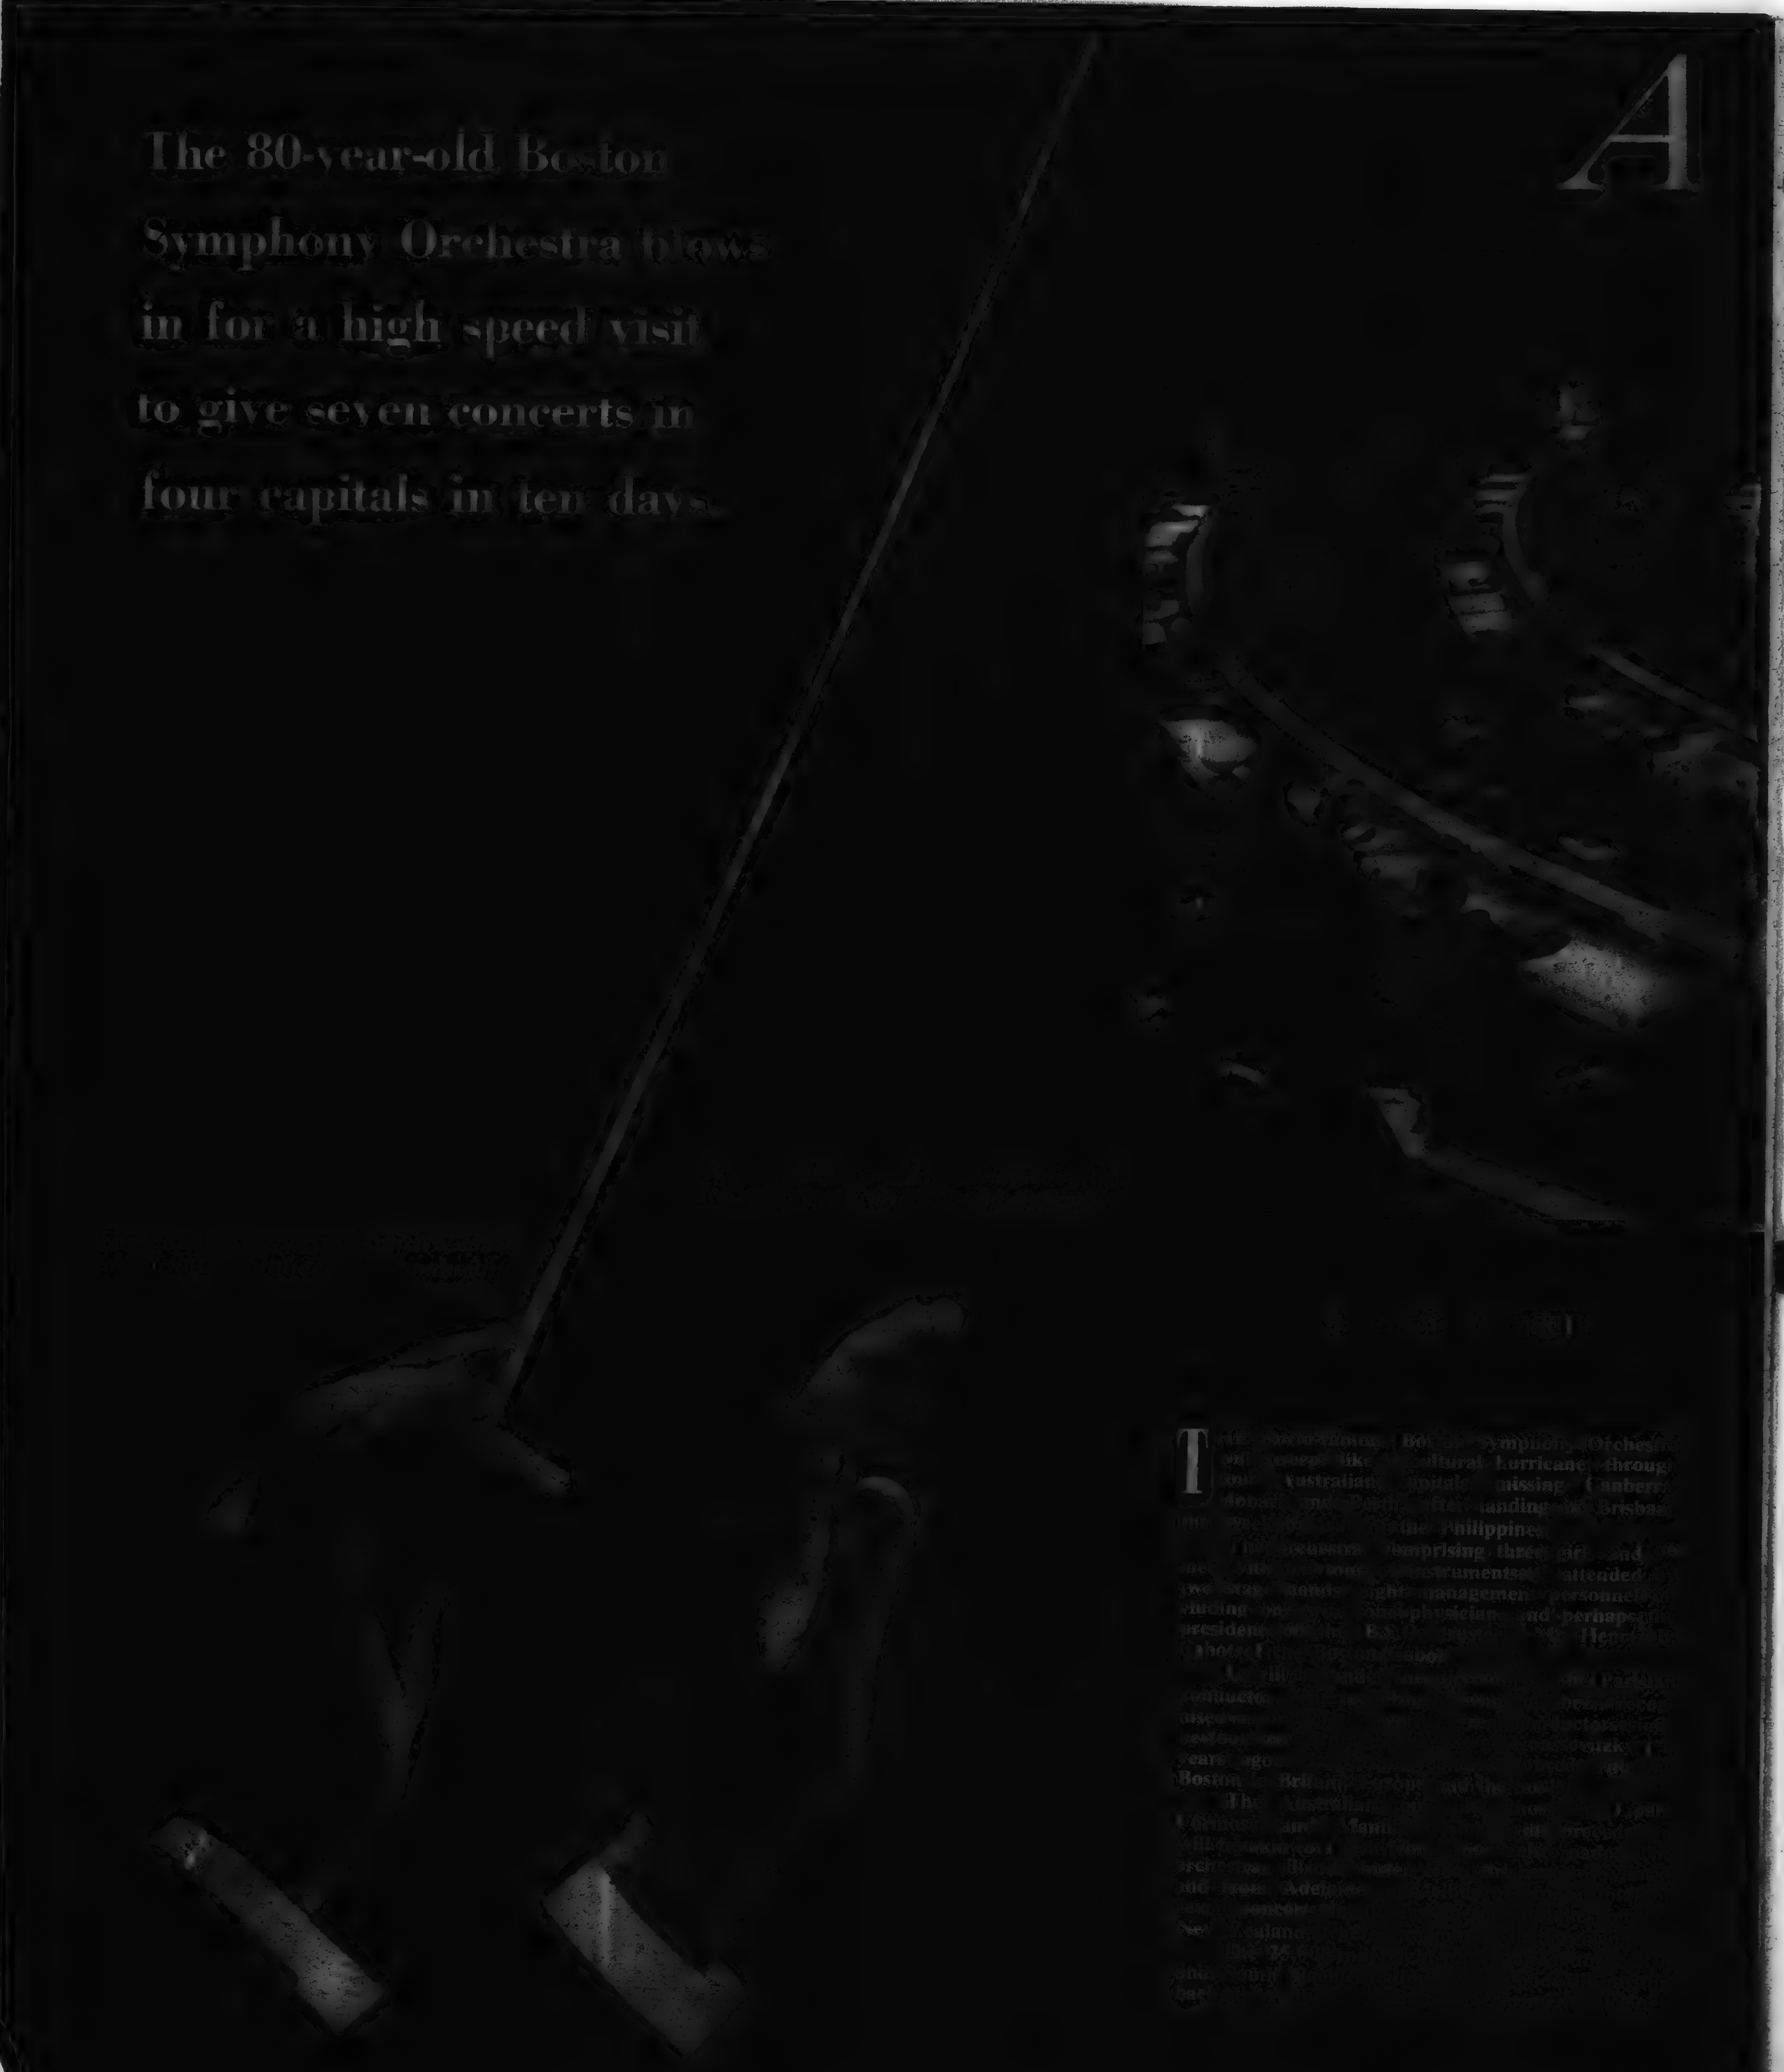
Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

Sydney, N.S.W



A

The 80-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra blows in for a high speed visit to give seven concerts in four capitals in ten days.

THE world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will sweep like a cultural hurricane through four Australian capitals, missing Canberra, Hobart and Perth, after landing in Brisbane [illegible] the Philippines.

The orchestra, comprising three girls and [illegible] men with [illegible] instruments, is attended by two stage hands, eight management personnel, including [illegible] physician, and perhaps the president of the B.S.O. trustees, Mr. Henry Cabot [illegible] Boston Cabot.

[illegible] conductor [illegible] years ago [illegible] Boston in Britain, Europe and the [illegible]

The Australian [illegible] Formosa and Manila [illegible] will [illegible] orchestra [illegible] and from Adelaide [illegible] concert [illegible] New Zealand [illegible]

The 25 [illegible] and [illegible] has [illegible] and desperation

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
Sydney, N.S.W

hurricane

Munch puts the comp orchestra second, the

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From

Sydney, N.S.W

'hurricane' of music

Munch puts the composer first, the orchestra second, the conductor last

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

Sydney, N.S.W

HURRICANE OF MUSIC [illegible]

President Eisenhower's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations. This backing, however, only gets the orchestra to and from our cities and does not cover costs. The Australian Broadcasting Commission, which is managing the tour here, will look after the rest.

Air travel within Australia, with two DC6s and a DC4 freighter, will cost more than £5,000 alone and there are other expensive headaches. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, or the B.S.O. as it is called for short, has a traditional way of seating its instrumentalists which, unlike that of other orchestras, is not allowed to be changed.

"We either play this way," the Trustees say, "or we do not play at all." Perhaps this special arrangement with the violas, for instance, in front of the cellos, accounts partly for that "jewels-and-velvet sonority" which has always been claimed as a characteristic of the B.S.O.

Anyhow, the orchestra seated in its special way will not fit on to the Brisbane City Hall stage and as the acoustics of the Brisbane Stadium are not suitable for symphony music, the A.B.C. has had to make structural alterations to the City Hall.

In Sydney there will be two concerts at the Town Hall and one at the Stadium where the acoustics are near perfect. But for the Stadium concert (as before when the Czech Philharmonic played there last year) the A.B.C. will have to build a stage one end and move three sections of seats so that they face the orchestra.

In Adelaide where the B.S.O. will give one concert at the Wayville Centenary Hall the major problem will be finding suitable first-class accommodation for the entourage of 115 Bostonians.

But in Melbourne where the two final concerts will be given, one at the Town Hall and the other at the Olympic Swimming Pool, the A.B.C. will be involved in further structural expenses to convert the swimming pool. The idea of using the Myer Music Shell had to be abandoned because of the uncertainty of weather and temperature during a Melbourne winter.

The seven concerts are expected to attract a total seat buying audience of more than 27,000 music lovers. But with seats from only 5/ to £2/2/ the gross box-office will not be more than £25,000 so the A.B.C. does not expect to make a big turnover on the tour.

The expense, of course, is completely justifiable apart from which millions of radio listeners will hear all the programs for nothing and there will be a telecast of the Stadium concert from Sydney and from the Melbourne pool.

Like other great cultural enterprises, the Boston Symphony has never been concerned about making money (or losing it) since it was founded just on 80 years ago by Major Henry Lee Higginson, a millionaire Boston banker with a passion for good music.

Higginson, who studied the piano in Vienna, made the B.S.O. his yacht, his racing stable, his art gallery and his penthouse escape from the boredom of big business.

"Never mind the blasted balance sheet," he once roared at a nervous accountant, "charge the deficit to profit and loss and forget the loss, for it does not really exist!"

Years later when the B.S.O. had become a corporation governed by a board of trustees the late Serge Koussevitzky carried on the Higginson tradition but in different language. When a trustee raised the question of the deficit on one occasion Koussevitzky said:

"My dear zir, music is a paraseet that takes many many moneys!"

A million dollar income

The orchestra actually earns or collects a gross income of round about two million dollars yearly but its upkeep and expenses are colossal and none of its 103 musicians receives less than 7,000 dollars or about £A60 per week.

Naturally they are paid more than this when travelling and they are among the world's best paid, most pampered, musicians. The trustees of the B.S.O. insist that they stay only at first-class hotels and travel first while the American Musicians' Union demands that they have a break of two complete days when they do not travel, play or rehearse after every five days of work whether this is just travelling or not. It was this detail in the orchestra's working arrangements which made it impossible for the A.B.C. to send the Boston Symphony to Perth.

Back in America the orchestra possesses not only its own home, the famous Symphony Hall opened in 1900, but since the middle 1930s it has had its own summer residence at Tanglewood, in the romantic Berkshires of West Massachusetts.

Tanglewood consists of 210 acres of beautiful woods, meadows and gardens stretching down to the shores of an ornamental lake, which were deeded to the B.S.O. by the owners on condition that the orchestra used the property for a summer symphonic festival and to encourage the already existing Berkshire Summer Festival.

Anyone who wonders how the fastidious Boston Symphony Orchestra could have been persuaded to play in a stadium and a swimming pool in Australia will find an explanation in the fact that the Tanglewood Summer Festival was at first held in a big circus tent.

In principle the Trustees of the B.S.O. have always taken the attitude that God willing, the acoustics up to specification, and first-class return travel guaranteed, the orchestra would play in Hell if by so doing the largest number of people could hear the best music. So when Koussevitzky was asked if the Boston would be allowed to play in a tent he replied:

"My dear zir, vy not if the acoustics is good?"

Of course, there were plans to build something more durable but these did not eventuate till the festival of 1937 when a terrific thunder storm let loose a deluge on the tent while the orchestra was performing.

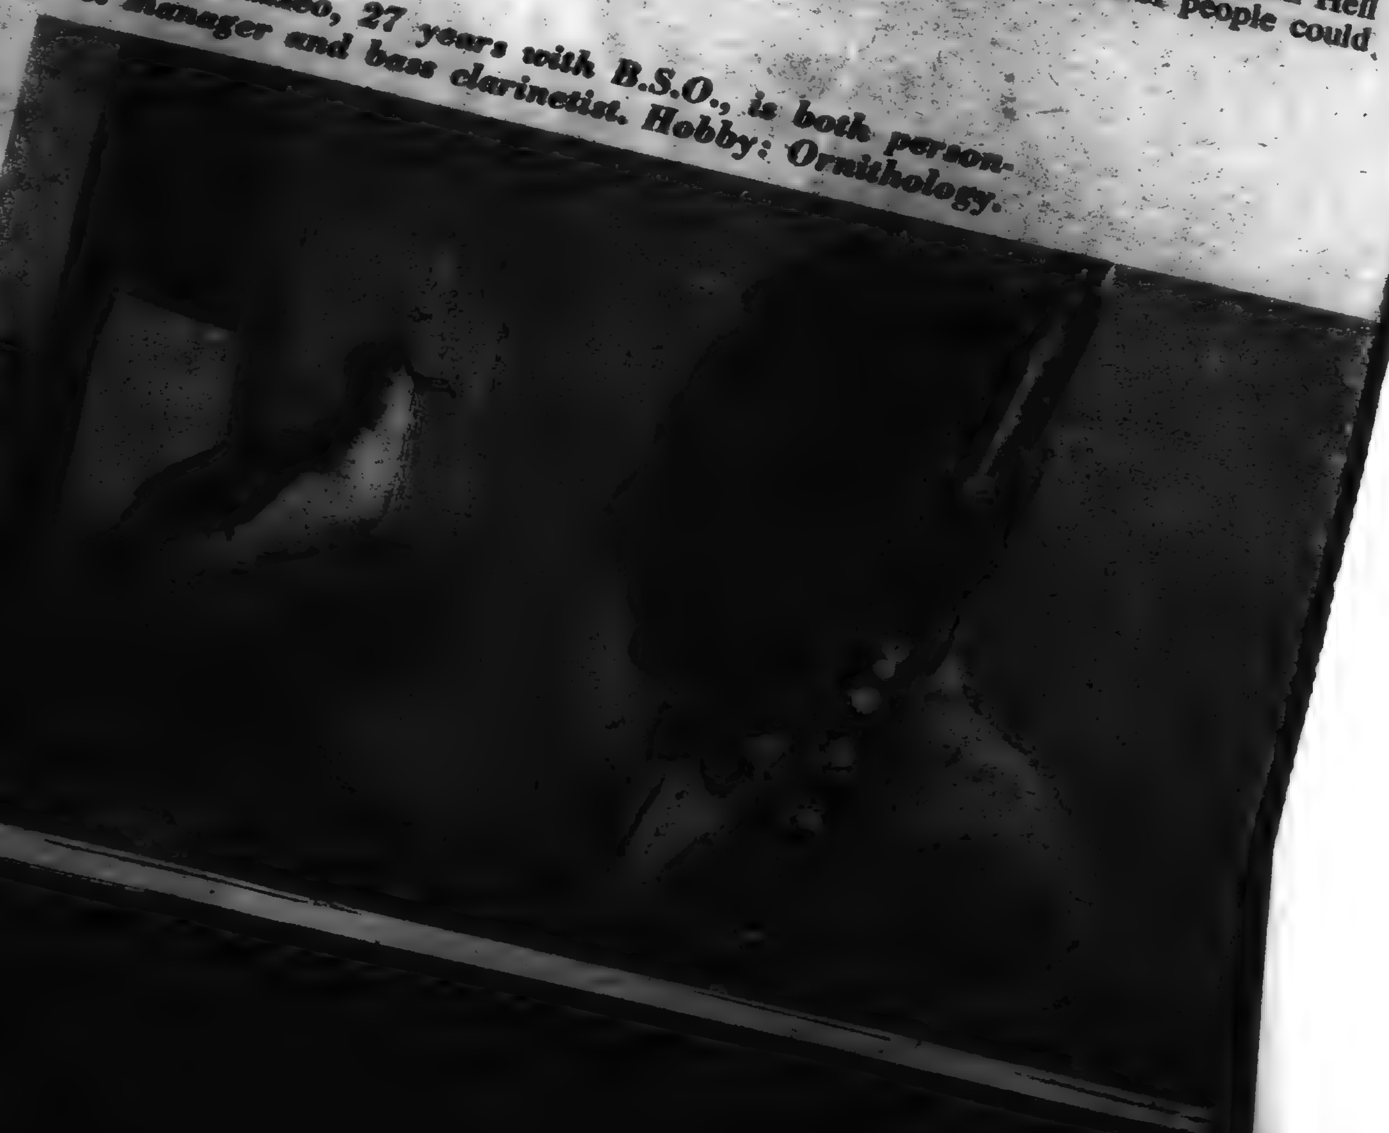
The B.S.O. had been playing a symphonic variation of Wagner's Siegfried which consists of forest murmurs with the call of a bird. Thunder and a cloudburst battering on the top of the tent were most inappropriate but it was not until one of the French horns began spouting water that the concert was abandoned.

After that the money was quickly raised to build what is now known as "The Shed." It was designed by the late Eliel Saarinen, father of the Eero Saarinen who came to Australia in 1956 as one of the judges of the N.S.W. Government's world-wide architectural competition for the Sydney Opera House design.

The designer of the Tanglewood "Shed" had also designed the Kleinhaus Music Hall at Buffalo. His aim was to achieve perfect acoustics and a union of function with austere beauty. "The Shed" has no walls so the entire auditorium is free from dead spots and echoes. Music can be heard perfectly from every seat as well as for hundreds of yards all round the open structure on the lawns.

Every orchestra has a hard worked secretary and Sally Hempel is the Boston's.

Rosario Mazzeo, 27 years with B.S.O., is both personnel manager and bass clarinetist. Hobby: Ornithology.



Shifting a big orchestra on tour is a colossal business. Above players use trunks as dressing rooms. Right, Bernard Zighera, first harp, dresses in the harp's trunk.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

Sydney, N.S.W

As a result between 80,000 and 100,000 people can listen to the Boston Symphony playing in "The Shed" without amplifiers being used.

The Berkshire Summer Festival has now become one of the big annual events of American cultural life. Masses of music lovers and students arrive at Tanglewood and many of them camp in tents by the lake or in the woods throughout the season.

A Music Centre enrols students by the thousand. It offers opportunities for the practice and contemplation of music in its best aspects and brings students into association with the leading artists and scholars of the day.

Maurice Adams, of our New York office writes: The Boston Symphony's visit to Australia is its second president's cultural mission in six years. The choice of the B.S.O. is significant for two reasons. First, by unanimous critical acclaim—both in the U.S. and abroad—it is the finest symphony orchestra in the United States and ranks among the top three in the world. Secondly, it is representative of the "melting pot" that is America: 38 of its 105 members are foreign-born, though they are now naturalised American citizens or about to become so.

Moreover, ever since it was founded in 1881, the Boston Symphony has enjoyed a vast international reputation. At first, under the influence of predominantly German conductors, its complexion was decidedly German. This era lasted until the outbreak of World War I, when the then German conductor, Karl Muck, was interned as an enemy alien, and all German instrumentalists not yet naturalised were forced to leave the orchestra.

Pierre Monteux, the French conductor, now 85, then took over the destinies of the orchestra, and changed its complexion almost overnight. A large number of the instrumentalists were then French, and the repertoire included a number of French as well as Russian composers. This decidedly was the "French" era.

The third and so far last transformation occurred in 1924, when the Russian conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, took over the musical throne which he occupied for a record 25 years. Under Koussevitzky, and now under Munch, who succeeded him in 1949, the orchestra's repertoire has included an ever larger number of American works.

The leading contemporary American composer, Aaron Copland, has guest conducted the Boston Symphony a number of times. He is coming hear the best music. So when Koussevitzky was asked if the Boston would be allowed to play in a tent he replied:

"My dear zir, vy not if the acoustics is good?"

Of course, there were plans to build something more durable but these did not eventuate till the festival of 1937 when a terrific thunder storm let loose a deluge on the tent while the orchestra was performing.

The B.S.O. had been playing a symphonic variation of Wagner's Siegfried which consists of forest murmurs with the call of a bird. Thunder and a cloudburst battering on the top of the tent were most inappropriate but it was not until one of the French horns began spouting water that the concert was abandoned.

After that the money was quickly raised to build what is now known as "The Shed." It was designed by the late Eliel Saarinen, father of the Eero Saarinen who came to Australia in 1956 as one of the judges of the N.S.W. Government's world-wide architectural competition for the Sydney Opera House design.

The designer of the Tanglewood "Shed" had also designed the Kleinhaus Music Hall at Buffalo. His aim was to achieve perfect acoustics and a union of function with austere beauty. "The Shed" has no walls so the entire auditorium is free from dead spots and echoes. Music can be heard perfectly from every seat as well as for hundreds of yards all round the open structure on the lawns.

Shifting a big orchestra on tour is a colossal business. Above players use trunks as dressing rooms. Right, Bernard Zighera, first harp, dresses in the harp's trunk.

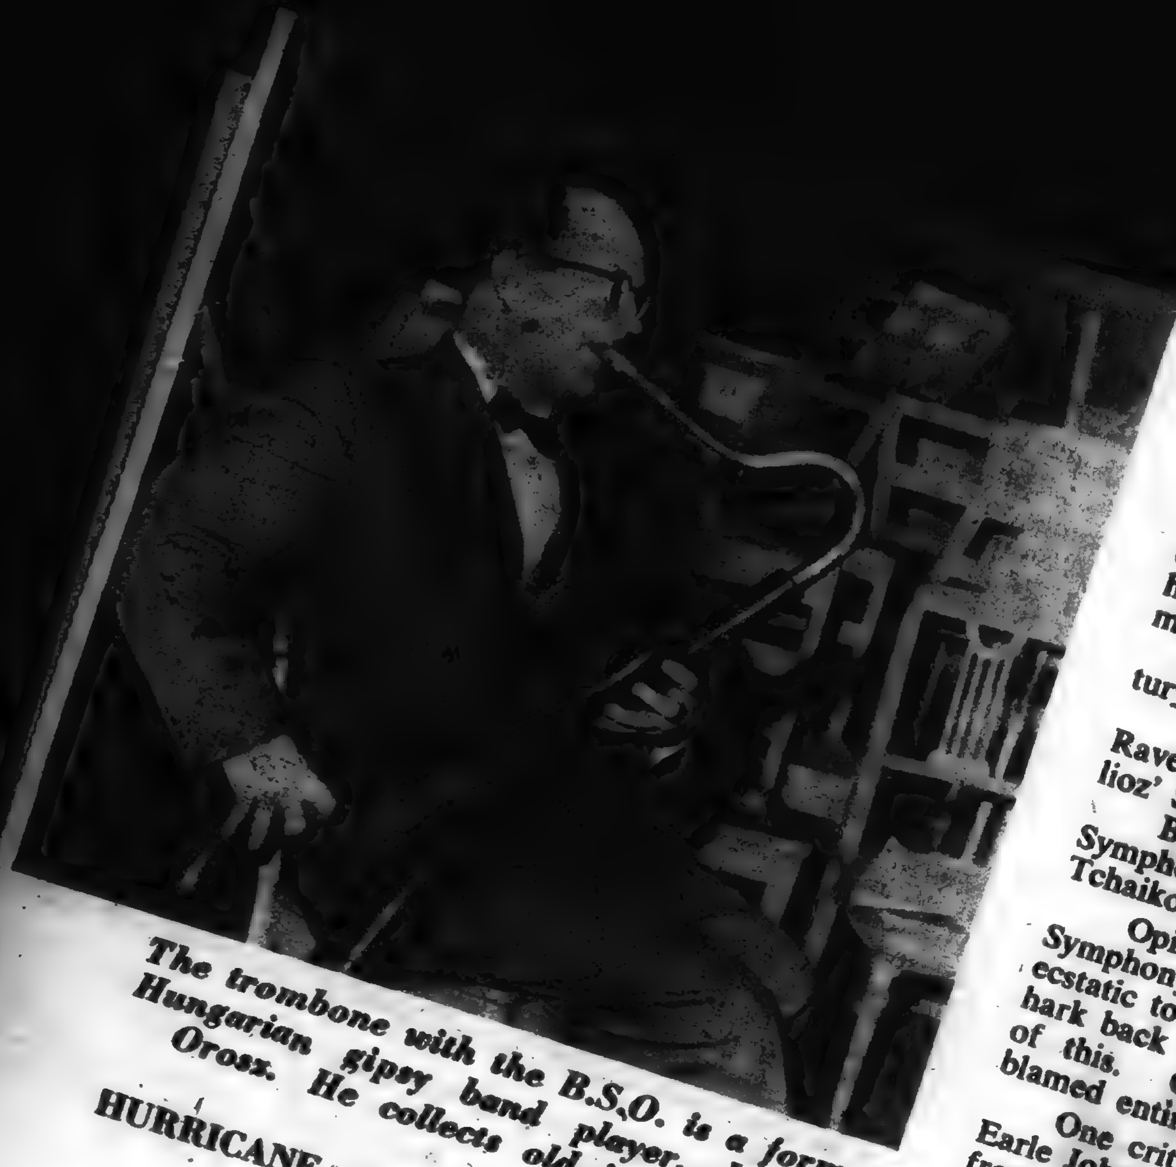
Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 513

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTING

Melbourne, Victoria

From

Sydney, N.S.W



The trombone with the B.S.O. is a former Hungarian gipsy band player, Josef A. Orosz. He collects old instruments.

HURRICANE OF MUSIC (cont.)

to Australia as Guest Conductor at Dr Munch's invitation. Australians will be able to hear several works by Copland, who will conduct in Sydney and Adelaide.

Dr Munch, according to the A.B.C.'s concert manager in Sydney, is expected to conduct four concerts—the first in Brisbane, two in Sydney and one in Melbourne. Part of two concerts—one in Sydney and the other in Adelaide—will be conducted by Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor and its leader for the past 40 years.

The repertoire of the entire eight-weeks tour reflects the cosmopolitan complexion of the orchestra.

It includes:

Eight works by seven American composers, including Aaron Copland's Symphony No. 1, and a suite from his opera "The Tender Land." The other American composer whose works will be heard are Samuel Barber, Easley Blackwood, Norman dello Joio, Leon Kirchner and Walter Piston.

The Fantasias by England's seventeenth-century composer, Henry Purcell.

Three French works — Debussy's La Mer; Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe, suite No. 2; and Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique.

Beethoven's symphonies No. 3 and 5; Brahms' Symphony No. 2; Haydn's Symphony No. 95; Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5.

Opinions about the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra vary from the subjectively ecstatic to the objectively impolite. But one has to hark back to the Koussevitzky era to get the hang of this. Charles Munch cannot be praised or blamed entirely for what the B.S.O. is today.

One critic admirer of Serge Koussevitzky, H. Earle Johnson, wrote: "It takes a master to extract from the orchestra that famous Boston fortissimo, brimful of brilliant sonority, strong as a thunderclap, yet flexible and noble in quality of sound; or its counterpart, a pianissimo like a thin thread of shining silk yet like a nerve vibrant with the breath of life.

"The velvet-like softness and smoothness of the darkly tinged Boston string section or its radiant brightness, reflecting as it were rays of the sunlight streaming forth from the elastic bows of its small and large fiddles, have been admired in many cities. Here is no mechanical perfection but the appearance of a living organism, fully animated, soulful, persuasive and intensely interesting to the listener at every moment."

On the other hand the critic of the "New York Herald Tribune" once wrote:

"By making an end instead of means of beautiful tone, Dr Koussevitzky often underemphasises the task of a conductor which is the correctness and force of his interpretations of the music.

"In giving up the double-bass (Dr K. was once a double-bass player) he did not cease be a virtuoso. He but substituted for it the rich, mu voiced instrument that we call the orchestra. A like a virtuoso he brought to his new instrume his own 'personality,' his characteristic style an tone.

"Sensuous beauty of tone and intensity of expression have, indeed, become so habitual wit the Boston Symphony under Dr Koussevitzky tha a visiting guest conductor is often embarrassed with riches.

"Dr Koussevitzky pays a price for the unvarying beauty and tension with which he requires the orchestra to play. As the orchestra has become more and more refined and the conductor more and more sure of himself, the weakness of his method has become increasingly apparent.

"The B.S.O. is overtrained and has been for several years. Its form is perfect, but it does not communicate. The music it plays never seems to be about anything except how beautifully the B.S.O. can play."

The heritage of Koussevitzky

Charles Munch has had to both live up to and live down the world-wide reputation created for the Boston Symphony in the 25 years of Koussevitzky's directorship. Musical opinion seems to agree that he was well chosen for this difficult role.

Coming from a musical family, he is a brother-in-law of doctor-organist-philosopher, Albert Schweitzer, he had been a conductor in Paris for more than 15 years before his appointment to the Boston. In 1948 he toured America as conductor of the French National Orchestra and he was several times a Boston guest conductor.

Unlike Koussevitzky who was accused of having used the B.S.O. as an instrument to express his own virtuoso talents, Charles Munch believes in allowing the composer to communicate what he has been trying to express by writing the music. So he attaches great importance to the study of the score and no matter how many times he has played something, he approaches each performance as though it were his first sight of the music.

The Boston Trustees, who ought to know their business, feel that Charles Munch is ideal for the task of directing the orchestra in an age of improved musical appreciation. Perhaps the be cation of his success is that last year RCA the recording company which handles the discs, presented Dr Munch with a diamond- baton in honour of his tenth anniversary a tor — a token of gratitude for the num best-selling records he had helped them to

A new York critic wrote of his conduc Berlioz' Requiem at his tenth anniversary, " grand and glorious performance. There overdriving, the tempos were as the compo tended, the tone poised, never exaggerat coarse."

Music lovers everywhere have better ta day than they had even 10 years ago as a of their opportunities to do more listening t music through radio, TV and improved r This applies especially to Australia.

Heaviest BSP is 340lb, six foot, Leslie Martin, double bass, seen with Olivia Luhtke, the harpist.

THE WAY TO HAIR BEAUTY BY

Vitapointe OF PARIS

Glowing Gleaming Loveliness in just one minute

No shampooing needed—just spread ¼ inch of Vitapointe in a thin film evenly over your palm.

Dip (but don't rub) the bristles of your brush in the Vitapointe film on your palm.

Brush your hair to shining, flashing beauty in just one minute. Then feel its new, silky-soft, supple texture.

VITAPOINTE is a dressing and conditioning cream which acts on the hair in exactly the same way as the precious oil called sebum which is manufactured by nature in the glands of the scalp. Sebum nourishes your hair. So does Vitapointe.

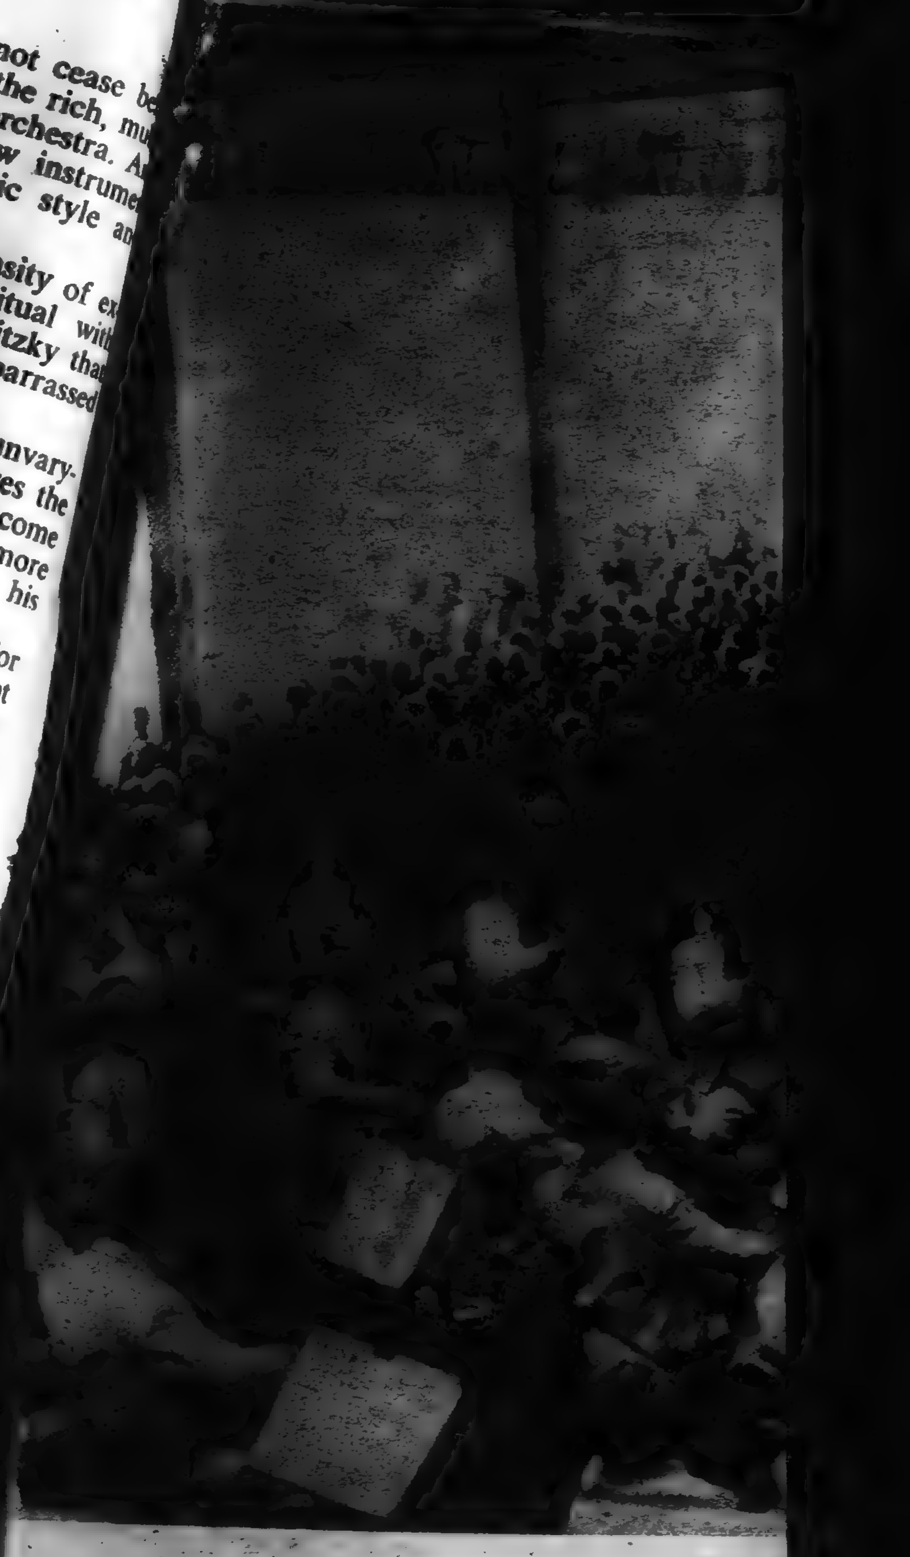
Frequent washing, perming—especially if unskilled—setting, tinting and other treatments, seabathing, sun and wind, all steal sebum from the hair. Ill-nourished hair soon becomes dull, brittle, lifeless and split at the ends, and never looks well-groomed. But when Vitapointe is applied, hair regains its suppleness and health and all its shining natural beauty.

Vitapointe OF PARIS

V.62.20

The Perfect CREAM HAIRDRESS & CONDITIONER

A 7/6 tube lasts two months.



Charl each

Catching up with world mus

When the Boston Symphony Orchestr born in 1881, Queen Victoria was on the and Sir Henry Parkes was having prelimina cussions with the heads of other Australian about the necessity for Federation.

Opera and choral music was the main fare in Australia from 1850 and it was in ciation with the Melba-John McCormack sea 1911 for J. C. Williamson that the first big seas orchestra came to play here.

From then to last year when the Czech harmonic was brought out by the A.B.C. n sized overseas symphony orchestra had visit The Boyd Neel Orchestra was a string ens of 18 players.

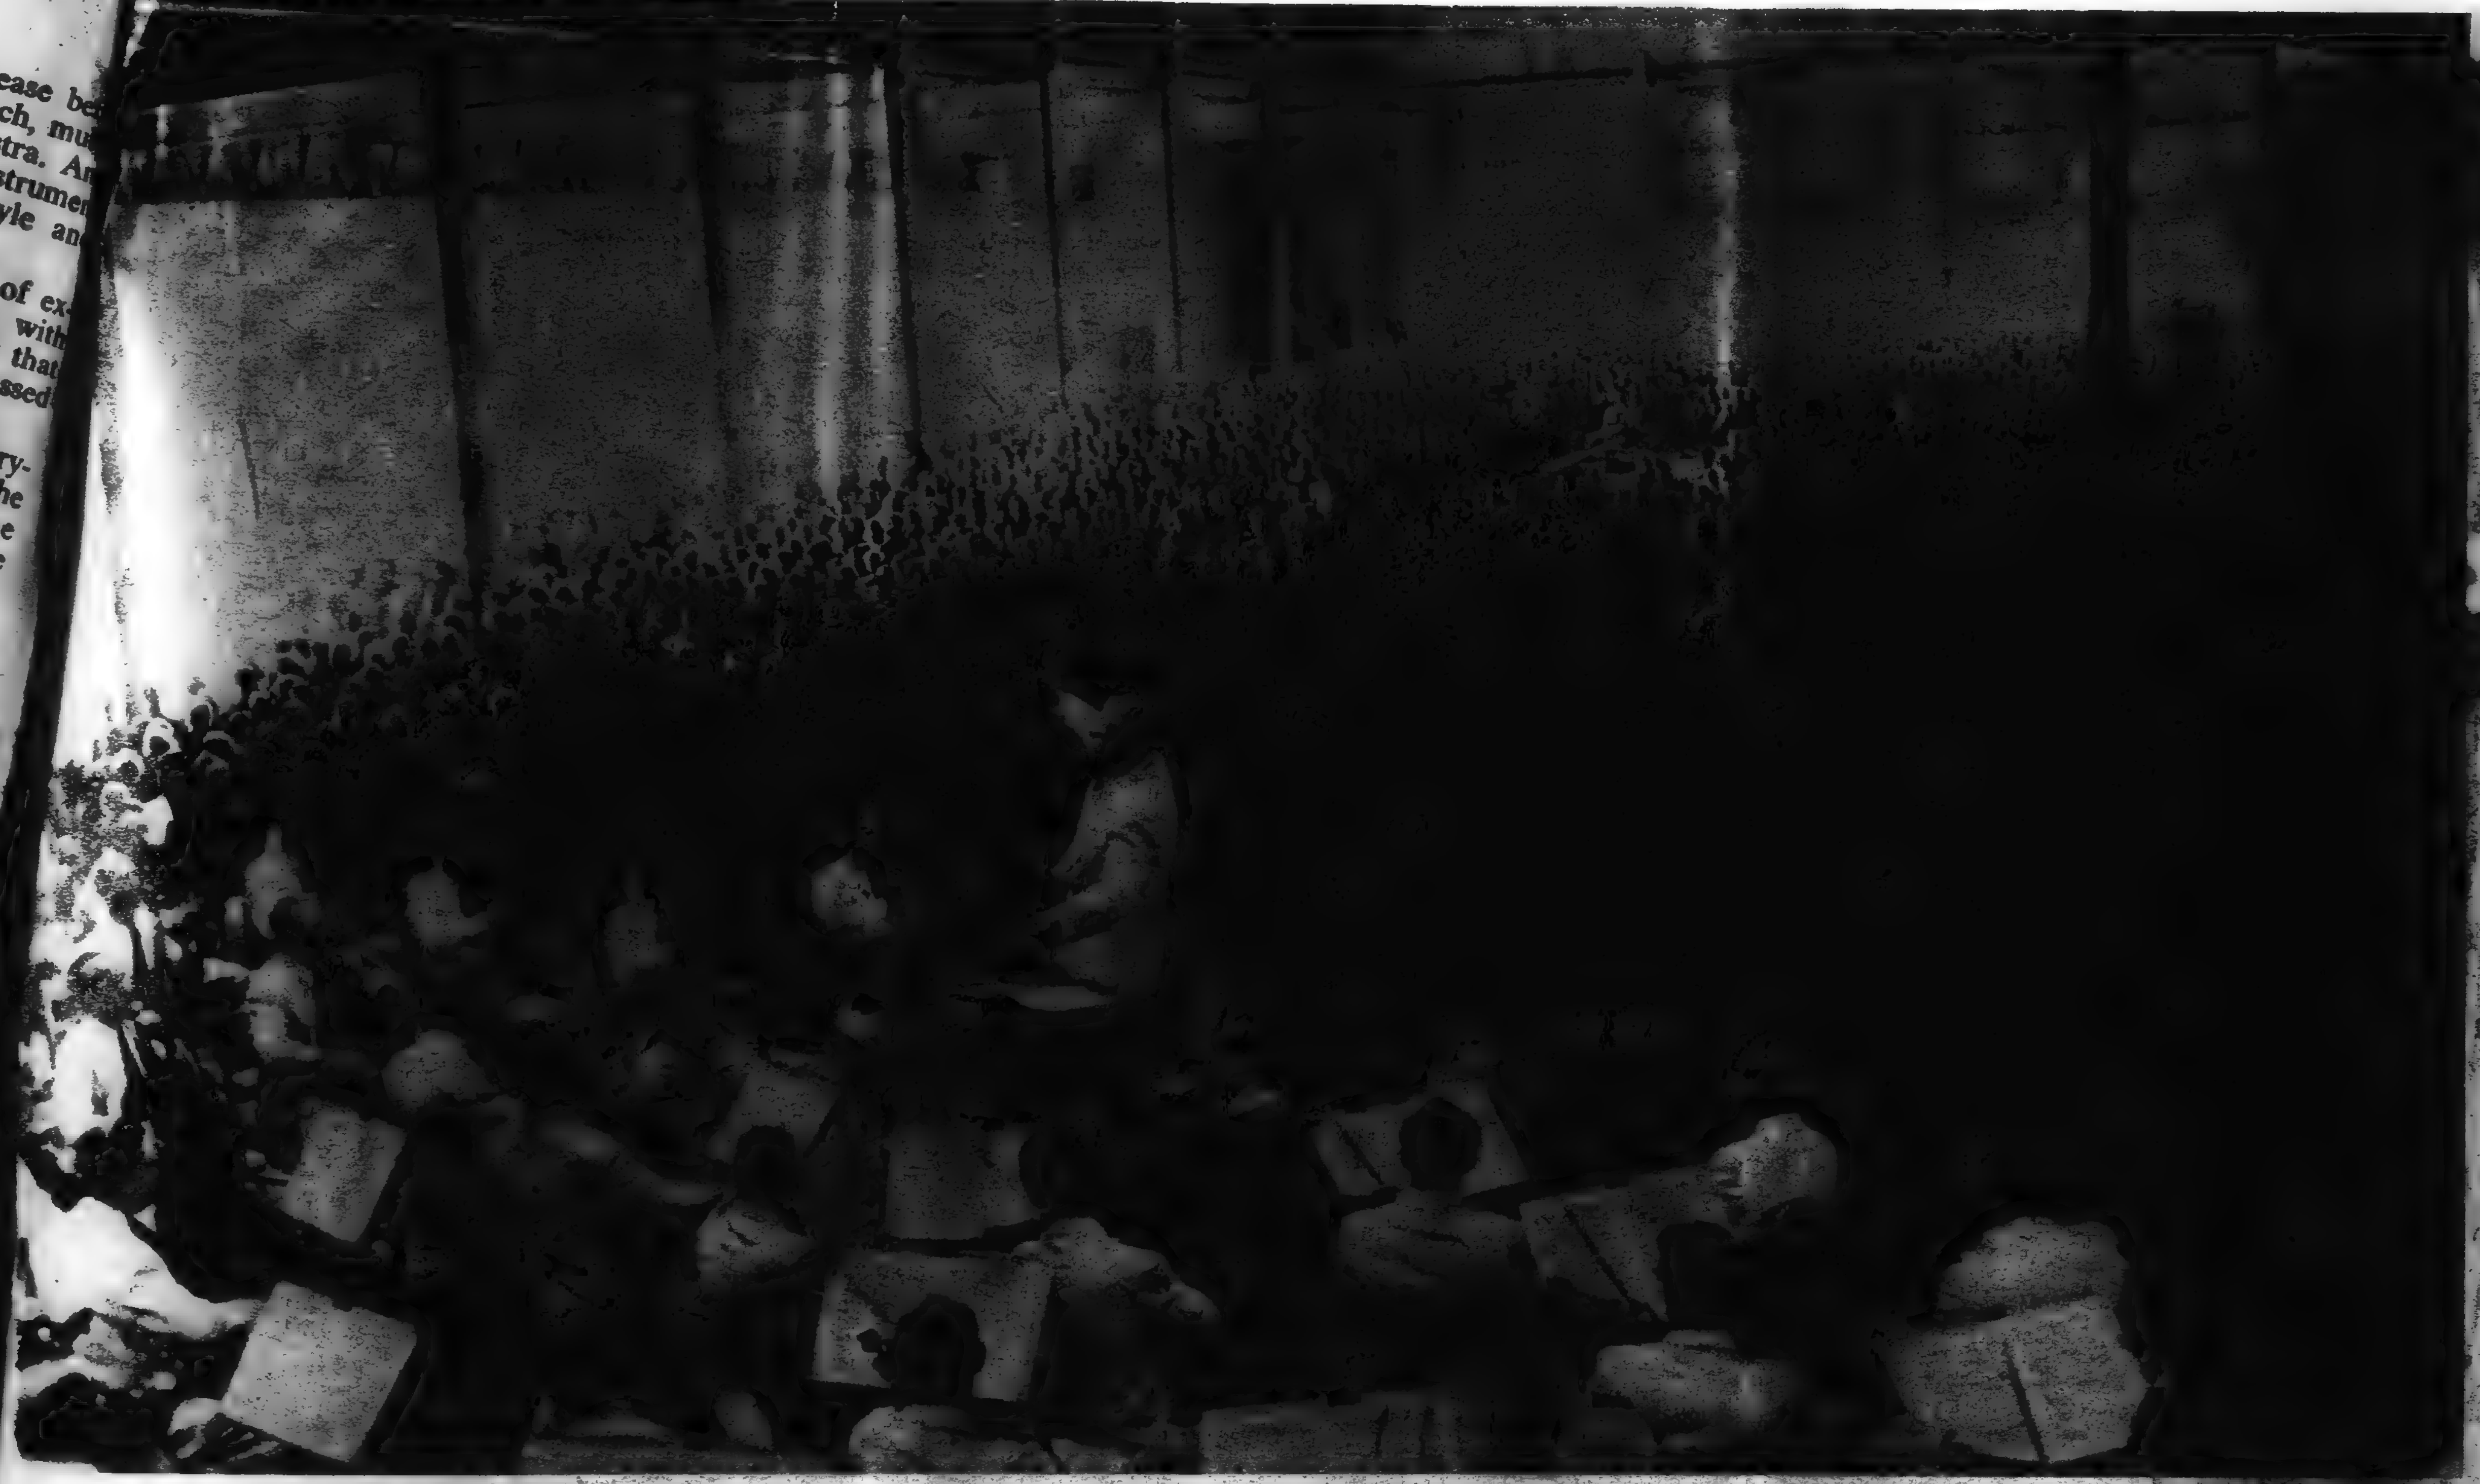
Australian appreciation of symphony began to grow after World War I along wi development of radio. Meanwhile every had formed its part-time symphony orc [illegible] musicians who [illegible] teaching at the variou

[illegible] 1936 [illegible] -time orchestras we [illegible] that the A.B.C. was able to inaugu [illegible] inviting guest conductors to com [illegible] with our musicians. The first of thes

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From

Sydney, N.S.W



Charles Munch conducts the B.S.O. in "The Shed" at Tanglewood, the summer resort of the orchestra where each year a music camp is held in Arcadian conditions in association with the Berkshire Festivals of Arts.

proved musical appreciation. Perhaps the best indication of his success is that last year RCA-Victor, the recording company which handles the Boston discs, presented Dr Munch with a diamond-studded baton in honour of his tenth anniversary as director — a token of gratitude for the number of best-selling records he had helped them to make.

A new York critic wrote of his conducting of Berlioz' Requiem at his tenth anniversary, "A truly grand and glorious performance. There was no overdriving, the tempos were as the composer intended, the tone poised, never exaggerated nor coarse."

Music lovers everywhere have better taste today than they had even 10 years ago as a result of their opportunities to do more listening to good music through radio, TV and improved records. This applies especially to Australia.

Catching up with world music

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra was born in 1881, Queen Victoria was on the throne and Sir Henry Parkes was having preliminary discussions with the heads of other Australian States about the necessity for Federation.

Opera and choral music was the main musical fare in Australia from 1850 and it was in association with the Melba-John McCormack season of 1911 for J. C. Williamson that the first big overseas orchestra came to play here.

From then to last year when the Czech Philharmonic was brought out by the A.B.C. no full-sized overseas symphony orchestra had visited us. The Boyd Neel Orchestra was a string ensemble of 18 players.

Australian appreciation of symphony music began to grow after World War I along with the development of radio. Meanwhile every capital city had formed its part-time symphony orchestra [illegible] musicians who earned [illegible] teaching at the various con- [illegible]

By 1934 [illegible] time orchestras were so good that the A.B.C. was able to inaugurate a [illegible] of inviting guest conductors to come out [illegible] with our musicians. The first of these was Sir Hamilton Harty.

Up to 1946 when the Sydney Symphony Orchestra of 82 musicians became Australia's first full-time orchestra, seven eminent conductors had come here, Sir Malcolm Sargent, Georg Schneevoigt, Georg Szell, Sir Thomas Beecham, Antal Dorati, Eugene Ormandy and Sir Ernest McMillan, of Canada.

Since then, among the top conductors who have visited Australia, we have had Walter Susskind, Rafael Kubelik, Paul Klecki, Otto Klemperer, Sir John Barbirolli, Juan Jose Castro, Hans Schmitt-Isserstedt, Josef Kripps, Constantin Silvestri and others. In this period Sir Eugene Goossens became conductor of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra and director of the N.S.W. State Conservatorium of Music.

And since then also, so great is the demand for good music in Australia [illegible] has its permanent symphony orch[illegible] on some basis similar to that of [illegible] phony which is financed by [illegible] the Australian Broadcasting Com[illegible] City Council, and the N.S.W. Gov[illegible]

Ralph Gomber, principal oboe, sharpens double reed between pauses during a rehearsal.

WHY SUFFER FR
RHEUMATI

The revolutionary discovery by the eminent English Research Chemist, Douglas Curzon, that uric acid has NOTHING WHATSOEVER TO DO WITH THE PAIN, swelling and stiffness associated with Rheumatism, has brought comforting relief to many sufferers.

Actually the [illegible] condition in [illegible] ating in the [illegible] of the leg. This [illegible] of the muscle [illegible] swelling of [illegible] results in [illegible] coming lo[illegible] parts of th[illegible]

RELIEVES THE PAIN AND PURIFIES

To remove the cause, whether it be Rheumatism, Neuritis, Sciatica or Synovitis, the poison must be removed from the blood. Then the pain goes and the nervous system rebuilds itself, and the sufferer is freed from these agonising maladies.

Prove this [illegible] at our [illegible] Douglas C[illegible] without del[illegible] 5d. postage [illegible] your first [illegible] without obligation [illegible] Send for free treatment [illegible] and end the pain.

FIRST TREATMENT ENTIR

COUPON
For free treatment fill in your name and address and send to us with a 4d. stamp.
NAME..
BLOCK LETTERS
ADDRESS..

The Controller,
Anglo-Australian [illegible]
PIX 4.6.60

---

en American composers,
's Symphony No. 1, and he Tender Land." The whose works will be asley Blackwood, Norner and Walter Piston.
nd's seventeenth-cen-
l.

Debussy's La Mer;
ite No. 2; and Ber-

3 and 5; Brahms'
mphony No. 95;

of the Boston
he subjectively
But one has to get the hang e praised or today.

sevitzky, H. r to extract
fortissimo, thunder-
of sound;
n thread
vith the ess of r its f the s of l in but nig

once a double-bass player) he did not cease be a virtuoso. He but substituted for it the rich, mu voiced instrument that we call the orchestra. A like a virtuoso he brought to his new instrume his own 'personality,' his characteristic style an tone.

"Sensuous beauty of tone and intensity of expression have, indeed, become so habitual with the Boston Symphony under Dr Koussevitzky that a visiting guest conductor is often embarrassed with riches.

"Dr Koussevitzky pays a price for the unvarying beauty and tension with which he requires the orchestra to play. As the orchestra has become more and more refined and the conductor more and more sure of himself, the weakness of his method has become increasingly apparent.

"The B.S.O. is overtrained and has been for several years. Its form is perfect, but it does not communicate. The music it plays never seems to be about anything except how beautifully the B.S.O. can play."

The heritage of Koussevitzky

Charles Munch has had to both live up to and live down the world-wide reputation created for the Boston Symphony in the 25 years of Koussevitzky's directorship. Musical opinion seems to agree that he was well chosen for this difficult role.

Coming from a musical family, he is a brother-in-law of doctor-organist-philosopher, Albert Schweitzer, he had been a conductor in Paris for more than 15 years before his appointment to the Boston. In 1948 he toured America as conductor of the French National Orchestra and he was several times a Boston guest conductor.

Unlike Koussevitzky who was accused of having used the B.S.O. as an instrument to express his own virtuoso talents, Charles Munch believes in allowing the composer to communicate what he has been trying to express by writing the music. So he attaches great importance to the study of the score and no matter how many times he has played something, he approaches each performance as though it were his first sight of the music.

The Boston Trustees, who ought to know their business, feel that Charles Munch is ideal for the ask of directing the orchestra in an age of im-

ARTICLE PEELED AWAY

147

FRIDAY DAILY TELEGRAPH MARCH 4, 1960

HE'LL BE THE CONDUCTOR

MR. CHARLES MUNCH, who will be the principal conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its Australian tour in June. Mr. Munch is the orchestra's musical director.

Boston Symphony

SYDNEY TO HEAR TOP ORCHESTRA

One of the world's greatest orchestras, the Boston Symphony, will give seven concerts in Australia in June.

Mr. Charles Munch, the orchestra's musical director, will be principal conductor for the Australian tour.

Aaron Copland, probably America's best - known living composer, will be guest conductor.

The American Ambassador (Mr. Sebald) released news of the orchestra's visit yesterday.

He said the orchestra would visit Australia under the sponsorship of President Eisenhower's programme for cultural exchange.

The A.B.C. would manage the orchestra on its Australian tour.

The orchestra would arrive in Brisbane on June 5, Mr. Sebald said.

Chartered planes would bring 117 members of the orchestra and 16,000lb. of baggage (including instruments).

First concert

The general manager of the A.B.C. (Mr. Charles Moses) said the Boston Symphony Orchestra would give its first concert in Brisbane, followed by three concerts in Sydney, one in Adelaide and two in Melbourne.

The orchestra would give two concerts at the Sydney Town Hall and a third "economy" performance at the Sydney Stadium.

Mr. Moses said special student concessions for the Stadium concert would reduce tickets to as low as 5/.

Top price for the Stadium performance would be 30/, and top price at the Town Hall would be £2/2/.

The orchestra would visit Australia while making a Far East tour, 'Mr. Moses said.

The orchestra also would visit Korea, the Philippines and New Zealand.

It would leave Australia for New Zealand on June 15.

Mr. Moses said he was delighted that Mr. Sebald had been able to arrange the tour.

The musical director of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra (Dr. Nicolai Malko) said yesterday it would be a good idea to send the Sydney orchestra on a world tour.

World tour

Dr. Malko yesterday returned to Sydney from San Francisco by Qantas jet after a three-month world tour.

While overseas Dr. Malko conducted the Tokio Philharmonic Orchestra in Tokio, Osaka and Nagoya.

In Copenhagen he conducted a performance of Stravinsky's opera Oedipus Rex with Australian tenor William Herbert singing the leading role of Oedipus.

He also conducted the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra in London in several studio performances and for TV at the Festival Hall.

Dr. Malko said there were only a few really good symphony orchestras in the world.

Both the Sydney and Melbourne Symphony Orchestras [illegible] among these.

A[illegible] would favor sending [illegible] Sydney Symphony Orchestra on an overseas [illegible] said it was not for him to suggest it.

FAMOUS ORCHESTRA WILL PL

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra of 117 players will tour Australia [illegible], giving [illegible] in Sydney, two in Melbourne and one each in [illegible] and Adelaide [illegible].

Aaron Copland, the famous American composer, will accompany the orchestra as guest conductor and probably conduct some of his own works.

Charles Munch, [illegible] orchestra's musical di principal condu

The players chartered three aircraft for th
bring 16,000 lb including instr them.

This is the fir time America visited Australi

It is part o includes New Philippines, Ja

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

MAR 1960

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 159,988
MAR 4 1960

World News in Brief

Reports from correspondents of The Christian Science Monitor, the Associated Press, and Reuters

Moscow: Liberian Swap Trip Set

Soviet Premier Khrushchev has accepted an invitation from President Tubman to visit Liberia, the Soviet news agency Tass has reported. President Tubman also has accepted a return invitation to visit the Soviet Union.

Austria: Hungarian Teens Flee

Two teen-age Hungarians crossed the frontier to Austria and freedom during the night of March 2, then turned back for their friend who had stepped on a mine, injuring his foot and releasing rockets and flares. They carried him to safety through the icy waters of the Einser Canal and over a wire fence despite the glare of searchlights.

Australia: Boston Music Tour Set

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Australia in June as part of ~~its Far Eastern tour,~~ American Ambassador William Sebald and Charles Moses, general manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, have announced. The orchestra is to visit Japan, the Philippines, Korea, and New Zealand during its Asian tour.

Uganda: Trouble Order Renewed

The government of this British African protectorate has renewed an order naming the eastern district of Bukedi "a disturbed area" in the face of continued unrest among Africans there. There is active opposition to the restoration of chiefs and local administration disrupted after tax riots two months ago.

Warsaw: Pair Face Fraud Charge

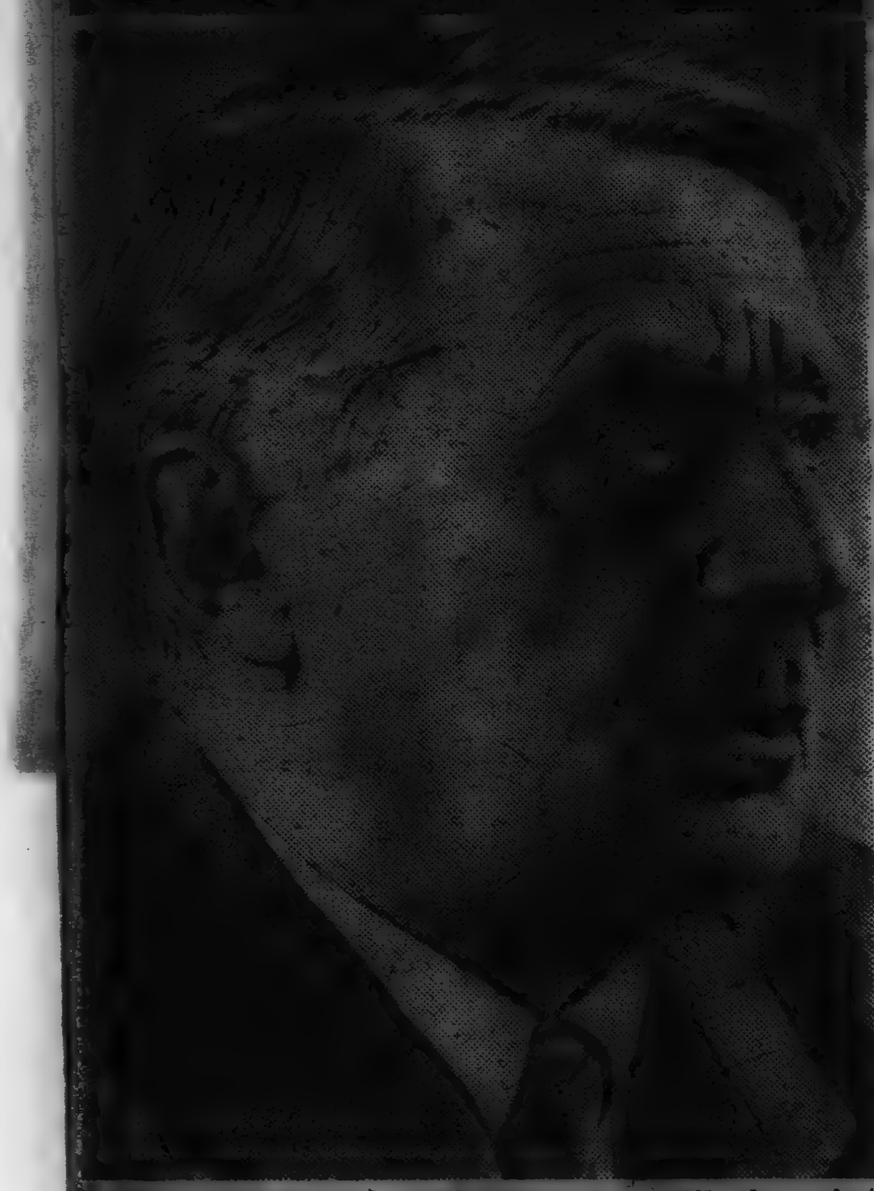
A Polish employee of the American embassy and his wife have been arrested by Polish police on charges of defrauding potential emigrants to the United States. The husband allegedly had a letter which said he worked for the American embassy and "did his job for special payment."

ARTICLE PEELED AWAY

187

FRIDAY DAILY TELEGRAPH MARCH 4, 1960

HE'LL BE THE CONDUCTOR



MR. CHARLES MUNCH, who will be the principal conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its Australian tour in June. Mr. Munch is the orchestra's musical director.

Boston Symphony

[illegible] TO HEA[illegible] TOP ORCHESTRA

One of the world's greatest orchestras, the Boston Symphony, will give seven concerts in Australia in June.

Mr. Charles Munch, the orchestra's musical director, will be principal conductor for the Australian tour.

Aaron Copland, probably America's best-known living composer, will be guest conductor.

The American Ambassador (Mr. Sebald) released news of the orchestra's visit yesterday.

He said the orchestra would visit Australia under the sponsorship of President Eisenhower's programme for cultural exchange.

The A.B.C. would manage the orchestra on its Australian tour.

The orchestra would arrive in Brisbane on June 5, Mr. Sebald said.

Chartered planes would bring 117 members of the orchestra and 16,000lb. of baggage (including instruments).

First concert

The general manager of the A.B.C. (Mr. Charles Moses) said the Boston Symphony Orchestra would give its first concert in Brisbane, followed by three concerts in Sydney, one in Adelaide and two in Melbourne.

The orchestra would give two concerts at the Sydney Town Hall and a third "economy" performance at the Sydney Stadium.

Mr. Moses said special student concessions for the Stadium concert would reduce tickets to as low as 5/.

Top price for the Stadium performance would be 30/, and top price at the Town Hall would be £2/2/.

The orchestra would visit Australia while making a Far East tour, Mr. Moses said.

The orchestra also would visit Korea, the Philippines and New Zealand.

It would leave Australia for New Zealand on June 15.

Mr. Moses said he was delighted that Mr. Sebald had been able to arrange the tour.

The musical director of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra (Dr. Nicolai Malko) said yesterday it would be a good idea to send the Sydney orchestra on a world tour.

World tour

Dr. Malko yesterday returned to Sydney from San Francisco by Qantas jet after a three-month world tour.

While overseas Dr. Malko conducted the Tokio Philharmonic Orchestra in Tokio, Osaka and Nagoya.

In Copenhagen he conducted a performance of Stravinsky's opera Oedipus Rex with Australian tenor William Herbert singing the leading role of Oedipus.

He also conducted the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra in London in several studio performances and for TV at the Festival Hall.

Dr. Malko said there were only a few really good symphony orchestras in the world.

Both the Sydney and Melbourne Symphony Orc[illegible] among these.

A[illegible] would favor sending [illegible]dney Symoverseas [illegible] said it phony Orchestra on an was not for him to suggest it.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From "SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

MAR 1960 4

FAMOUS [illegible] WILL PL[illegible]

THE [illegible] Symphony Orchestra [illegible] players will tour [illegible] month, giving [illegible] Sydney, two in [illegible] and one each in [illegible] and Adelaide [illegible]

Aaron Cop[illegible], the famous American [illegible], will accompany [illegible] orchestra as guest [illegible] and probably conduct some of his own works.

Charles Munch, [illegible] orchestra's musical di principal conduc

The [illegible] players, chartered three aircraft for the bring 16,000 lb. including instru

[illegible] is the firs [illegible] American [illegible] visited Australia

It is part o includes New Philippines, Jap will be have

-ANA

, will gage,

with top-has that and, the d Korea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 159,988

MAR 4 1960

World News in Brief

Reports from correspondents of The Christian Science Monitor, the Associated Press, and Reuters

Moscow: Liberian Swap Trip Set

Soviet Premier Khrushchev has accepted an invitation from President Tubman to visit Liberia, the Soviet news agency Tass has reported. President Tubman also has accepted a return invitation to visit the Soviet Union.

Austria: Hungarian Teens Flee

Two teen-age Hungarians crossed the frontier to Austria and freedom during the night of March 2, then turned back for their friend who had stepped on a mine, injuring his foot and releasing rockets and flares. They carried him to safety through the icy waters of the Einser Canal and over a wire fence despite the glare of searchlights.

Australia: Boston Music Tour Set

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Australia in June as part of its Far Eastern tour, American Ambassador William Sebald and Charles Moses, general manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, have announced. The orchestra is to visit Japan, the Philippines, Korea, and New Zealand during its Asian tour.

Uganda: Trouble Order Renewed

The government of this British African protectorate has renewed an order naming the eastern district of Bukedi "a disturbed area" in the face of continued unrest among Africans there. There is active opposition to the restoration [illegible] chiefs and local administration disrupted after tax riots two months ago.

Warsaw: Pair Face Fraud Charge

A Polish employee of the American embassy and his wife have been arrested by Polish police on charges of defrauding potential emigrants to the United States. The husband allegedly had a letter which said he worked for the American embassy and "did his job for special payment."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"TELEGRAPH"
4 MAR
Sydney, N.S.W.

Its orchestra is the pride of Boston

by MARTIN LONG

AN American journalist once said that in Boston the leader of the orchestra was more important than the mayor.

By leader he meant, of course, what we would call the conductor. In a few months this very important Bostonian, Charles Munch, will bring his world-renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra to play to us in Sydney.

Boston is one of the American cities that, rightly or wrongly, suggest a personality to the minds of non-Americans.

Boston, we always think, stands four-square for conservatism in every department.

But its orchestra, which plays such an important part in its civic and social life, has been anything but conservative in its influence on American musical taste.

In the last 40 years of its 78-year life it has been in the forefront among American orchestras in introducing new works. Many works by leading modern composers have been especially commissioned for it.

In its early days its first conductor, Sir George Henschel, aroused opposition by playing the music of that dangerous modernist, Wagner.

And when it makes its Australian tour it will have as its guest conductor the best known of modern (and modernist) American composers, Aaron Copland.

The Boston Symphony gave its first concert in October, 1881. It was founded by a music-loving banker named Major Henry Lee Higginson, who paid the orchestra's deficits every year thereafter until he died in 1919.

Higginson's taste in music, like that of nearly all the American musical patrons of that period, was almost exclusively German.

He hired a succession of German conductors, among them Nikisch, Paur and Max Fiedler.

A turning-point in the orchestra's history came in 1918 when a French conductor, Henri Rabaud, was appointed to succeed a German conductor in the same 12 months that Higginson handed over the control of the orchestra to a board of trustees.

Rabaud and his French successor, Pierre Monteaux brought a new, French tone to the orchestra and a new repertoire to the Boston audiences.

Koussevitsky continued the "modernist" tradition when he took over the orchestra in 1924. He won over the supposedly conservative Bostonians so effectively that the orchestra began to set the pace in up-to-dateness for other leading orchestras.

DURING Koussevitsky's reign visiting conductors used to take over the orchestra for a two-week period in the middle of the season. One of the earliest of these guest conductors was the 33-year-old Eugene Goossens.

Charles Munch, Alsatian-born and Paris-trained, took over the baton when Koussevitsky retired in 1949.

Munch began his musical career as a violinist and was 41 when he conducted his first orchestra in 1932. It was Madame Munch, an heiress of the Nestle chocolate-making firm, who hired the hall and orchestra.

During the Nazi occupation (though legally German by birth) he evaded all conducting offers from the Nazis and secretly turned the proceeds of his concerts to the French Underground.

Today Munch rehearses his players in a mixture of English, German and French. This could almost be symbolic of the mingling of national traditions in this orchestra and in American music generally.

It will be interesting to compare the product of this composite American tradition with recent memories of the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra — a European orchestra with a fervently national tradition.

From
"AGE"
4 MAR 1960 Melbourne, Vic.

Noted American Orchestra to Tour Australia

SYDNEY, Thursday. — One of the world's leading orchestras, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Australia in June and give two concerts at Melbourne's Olympic Pool.

It will be the first Australian visit by an American orchestra.

Announcement of the tour was made jointly yesterday by the American Ambassador (Mr. William Sebald) and the general manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission (Mr. Charles Moses).

Aaron Copland, one of America's best-known living composers, will accompany the orchestra as guest conductor and is expected to conduct some of his own works.

The orchestra's musical director, Charles Munch, will be principal conductor for the Australian tour, which is part of a Far Eastern tour, which will take the players to Japan, the Philippines, Korea and New Zealand.

The orchestra's first concert will be in Brisbane, on June 5, and it will then play in Sydney and Adelaide before going to Melbourne.

Mr. Moses said yesterday, "The Boston Symphony is widely held to be the greatest orchestra in the world.

"This is one of the most important events in music since the setting up of our own symphony orchestras."

Mr. Moses said that originally it had been planned to give three concerts in Melbourne, but because of the orchestra's schedule, one concert had to be cut from the proposed eight.

Mr. MUNCH.

"We felt we were justified in leaving Sydney with three concerts, because there are about 16,000 subscribers here, as opposed to Melbourne's 12,000," he said.

The 117 players in the orchestra will arrive in Brisbane by chartered plane, and will bring 16,000 lb. of baggage, including instruments.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"BORDER MORNING MAIL"
Albury, N.S.W.

Boston Symphony Orchestra to tour Australia

SYDNEY, Thurs.: The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Australia this year, the American Ambassador to Australia (Mr. Sebald) said today.

The Australia visit would be part of a Far Eastern tour by the orchestra, which includes Japan, Korea, the Philippines and New Zealand.

Mr. Sebald said the orchestra would arrive in Brisbane on June 5 from Manila.

It is planned to give the first concert in Brisbane followed by three in Sydney, one in Adelaide and two in Melbourne.

The Boston Symphony is recognised as one of the world's greatest orchestras.

Charles Munch, the orchestra musical director, will be conductor for the Australian tour, with Aaron Copland, probably America's best known living composer, as guest conductor.

The 117 members of the orchestra will arrive by chartered planes and bring 16,000 lb. of baggage and instruments.

The orchestra was founded in 1881 by Major Henry Lee Higginson, a successful banker with musical inclinations.

The orchestra has toured several times outside America and played at Moscow in 1956

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"ADVERTISER"
Geelong, Vic.
MAR 1960

VISIT BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Sydney, Thursday. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Australia this year, the American Ambassador to Australia (Mr. Sebald) said today.

The Australian visit would be part of a far Eastern tour by the orchestra which would include Japan, Korea and the Philippines and New Zealand.

Mr. Sebald said the orchestra would arrive in Brisbane on June 5 from Manila.

It is planned to give the first concert in Brisbane followed by three in Sydney, one in Adelaide, and two in Melbourne.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is recognised as one of the world's greatest orchestras.

Charles Munch, the orchestra musical director, will be conductor for the Australian tour with Aaron Copland probably America's best-known living composer, as guest conductor.

The 117 members of the orchestra will arrive by chartered 'planes and bring 16,000 lb. of baggage and instruments. —

169

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

5 MAR 1960

AUSTRALIANS TO HEAR U.S. SYMPHONIES

From Our Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK, March 4.—Australians will be introduced to some major symphonic works by American composers when the Boston Symphony Orchestra tours the Commonwealth early in June.

The orchestra, regarded by critics as the finest in the United States, is scheduled to arrive in Brisbane on June 5 and to give eight concerts in 10 days.

The itinerary calls for appearances in Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide and Brisbane.

The repertoire has not yet been fully worked out, but Dr Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra for 11 years, said today:

"The planning of the program will represent the things this orchestra and this country can do best.

"We propose to present works by American composers—probably one at each concert—as well as those of the great acknowledged masters such as Beethoven, Brahms and Tchaikowsky."

Part Of Asian Tour

The American composers whose works will be heard will include William Schuman, Walter Piston and Aaron Copeland.

Mr Copeland will travel with the orchestra as an associate conductor.

The Australian visit is part of a South-East Asian tour, to last eight weeks, under President Eisenhower's special international program for cultural presentations.

The tour is the longest and most expensive undertaking of this type. It will cost the U.S. Government more than 500,000 dollars (£223,200)—or a quarter of the total annual budget of two million dollars set aside for U.S. cultural activities abroad.

This will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra's third tour overseas, having visited Europe in 1952, and Russia in 1956.

"Pioneer" Orchestra

"Ours is a sort of pioneer orchestra," said Dr Munch. "We were the first major American symphony orchestra to visit Russia, and will be the first to visit Australia, Japan and Korea."

The 69-year-old, white-haired conductor, who has been described as "sitting on the nation's most prestigious musical throne," is not an American citizen.

He was born in Strassbourg, Alsace, and was drafted into the German Army in World War I.

When Hitler came to power, Dr Munch left Germany and settled in Paris. He eventually obtained French citizenship, which he holds still.

He made his debut as a conductor with the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris in 1932. The next year he married Genevieve Maury, chocolate heiress, who helped to finance his conducting career.

Mrs Munch died in 1956.

Dr Munch was active as a guest conductor in England and on the Continent. He founded the Paris Philharmonic Orchestra in 1935 and in 1938 became director of the Societe des Concerts de Conservatoire.

During World War II, Dr Munch aided and protected French musicians and assisted the French underground movement. He was made an Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1940 and promoted to Commander in 1952.

He holds honorary degrees from Boston College and Boston, Harvard and Tufts Universities.

He made his American debut in 1947 with the New York Philharmonic, gained immediate critical acclaim, and repeated his successes for the next two years.

He enjoyed special favour in Boston, where his style of conducting and his orientation toward the French school was in line with the tradition established by the late Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In 1949, Mr Koussevitsky retired from the orchestra after 25 years, and it was no surprise when Dr Munch was named his successor.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

4 MAR 1960

Australian Visit By Boston Orchestra

CHARLES MUNCH

AARON COPLAND

One of the world's leading orchestras, the Boston Symphony, will tour Australia in June and give three concerts in Sydney.

The orchestra will be the first United States orchestra to visit Australia.

One of America's best-known living composers, Aaron Copland, will accompany the orchestra as guest conductor.

He will probably conduct some of his own works.

The orchestra's musical director, Charles Munch, will be principal conductor for the Australian tour, which is part of a Far Eastern tour including Japan, the Philippines, Korea and New Zealand.

The tour was announced jointly yesterday by the U.S. Ambassador to Australia, Mr William Sebald, and the general manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, Mr Charles Moses.

Student Concessions

The A.B.C. will manage the orchestra's concerts in Australia.

The orchestra will arrive in Brisbane on June 5, and give a concert at the City Hall on the following night.

It will give concerts at the Sydney Town Hall on June 7 and 8, and at the Stadium on June 9.

The orchestra will then play in Adelaide on June 11, and give its final concerts on June 13 and 14 at the Olympic Pool in Melbourne.

Prices for the Sydney concerts will range from 10/ to £2/2/ for the Town Hall concerts and 5/ to £1/10/ for the Stadium concert.

There will be concessions for students at the Stadium concert.

14,000 Seats At Concerts

Mr Moses said yesterday: "The Boston Symphony is widely held to be the greatest orchestra in the world.

"This is one of the most important events in music since the setting up of our own symphony orchestras."

Mr Moses said that present subscribers to the A.B.C. orchestral concerts would be given first opportunity of applying for the 14,000 seats which will be available for the orchestra's Sydney concerts.

"After all, these are the people who have supported orchestral music in this city," he said.

Mr Moses said tickets would not be sold as a series.

Music-lovers would be able to buy seats for individual concerts.

Mr Moses said it had been planned to give three concerts in Melbourne but one concert had to be cut from the proposed eight because of the orchestra's schedule.

"We felt we were justified in leaving Sydney with three concerts because there are about 16,000 subscribers here, as opposed to Melbourne's 12,000," he said.

Mr Moses said A.B.C. negotiations for the tour began in July last year.

The tour will be partly subsidised by the President's Program, which sponsors American cultural tours to foreign countries.

The 117 players in the orchestra will arrive in Brisbane by chartered plane with 16,000lb of luggage, including instruments.

All its concerts will be broadcast, and there will be a telecast of the Stadium concert in Sydney.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"EXAMINER"
Launceston, Tas.

4 MAR 1960

ORCHESTRA FOR TOUR

SYDNEY — The 117-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra will tour Australia this year.

The orchestra will arrive in Brisbane on June 5 from Manila and give three concerts in Sydney, one in Adelaide and two in Melbourne under A.B.C. management.

Sydney Sundays: "Lonely Days"

After the public discussion in recent weeks it is clear that the great majority of people in New South Wales would welcome—or not object to—the commercial presentation of films on a Sunday. Opposition to the change could, of course, be expected to continue from a group of sincere religious leaders who believe that the opening of the cinemas would be another damaging inroad by the godless upon the sacredness of the sabbath. But the leaders of the major Churches, men also of the highest sincerity, do not feel that Sunday film-showings must lead to moral disaster. The Anglican Archbishop of Sydney would not oppose them, though he would be sorry to see them come. The Roman Catholic Church believes that Sunday night films are "all right," so long as members of the faith have carried out their obligations of worship.

Lay leaders in the community have increasingly accepted the necessity of illuminating the Sunday gloom of Sydney with the kind of entertainment to which most great capitals are accustomed. The Lord Mayor on Friday made a timely contribution to the campaign for more legitimate diversion when he underlined the fact that "Sundays for many Sydney people are lonely days." A member of the board of the Theatre Managers' Association has revealed that 90 per cent of its membership support Sunday screenings. If, as public debate has amply shown, there is widespread readiness for amendment of the Acts which govern Sunday observance, why does the Government hold back? Perhaps no one can gauge the deep thoughts of that hesitant thinker, Mr Kelly, but probably the main opposition to be overcome now is that which is entrenched in the cinemas themselves, notably in the hidebound leadership of the theatrical employees.

Sydney Morning Herald
March 7, 1960

170

The Sydney Morning Herald

2 FRIDAY, MARCH 4, 1960

Front Page

Australian Visit By Boston Orchestra

CHARLES MUNCH

AARON COPLAND

One of the world's leading orchestras, the Boston Symphony, will tour Australia in June and give three concerts in Sydney.

The orchestra will be the first United States orchestra to visit Australia.

One of America's best-known living composers, Aaron Copland, will accompany the orchestra as guest conductor.

He will probably conduct some of his own works.

The orchestra's musical director, Charles Munch, will be principal conductor for the Australian tour, which is part of a Far Eastern tour including Japan, the Philippines, Korea and New Zealand.

The tour was announced jointly yesterday by the U.S. Ambassador to Australia, Mr William Sebald, and the general manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, Mr Charles Moses.

would not be sold as a series.

Music-lovers would be able to buy seats for individual concerts.

Mr Moses said it had been planned to give three concerts in Melbourne but one concert had to be cut from the proposed eight because of the orchestra's schedule.

"We felt we were justified in leaving Sydney with three concerts because there are about 16,000 subscribers here, as opposed to Melbourne's 12,000," he said.

Mr Moses said A.B.C. negotiations for the tour began in July last year.

The tour will be partly subsidised by the President's Program, which sponsors American cultural tours to foreign countries.

The 117 players in the orchestra will arrive in Brisbane by chartered plane with 16,000lb of luggage, including instruments.

All its concerts will be broadcast, and there will be a telecast of the Stadium concert in Sydney.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

7 MAR 1960

Boston's Orchestra Is ... tional'

FROM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT IN NEW YORK

E KOUSSEVITZKY—the Boston Symphony Orchestra eached "a peak of polished perfection" under him.

word—in programming,
of soloists and guest con-

ks to this rule, each con-added something to the a's sheen.

Vienna Opera's bearded n Gericke "gave to the a its excellent habits and during two periods—1884 and 1898 to 1906, Mr Higwrote later. Gericke, he aught those violins to sing
ns sing in Vienna alone."

pe's greatest conductor, the ungarian Arthur Nikisch
3), taught it how to
" and perhaps he taught
l. Richard Strauss, guest or at a rehearsal in 1904,
"You play that finely, but too finely. I want some ss here."

Berlin Opera's Karl Muck, ok over the orchestra's direction from 1906 to 1918, gave the orchestra, according to a critic, "a living voice."

Muck's successor, the Frenchman Pierre Monteux, let it sing modern music—Stravinsky, Falla, Honegger, Milhaud.

Then, in 1924, the Russian Serge Koussevitzky, a magic figure in Europe, began what was to be the longest term for a single conductor—25 years. Under his stern but benevolent rule, the Boston Symphony reached a peak of polished perfection, and American composers, subsidised and encouraged with commissions, found a new home.

The performances of the Boston Symphony became legendary under his baton—a model of symphonic virtuosity. The names of the orchestra and its conductor (who died in 1951) seemed inseparable when, in 1948, he decided to retire.

The trustees' choice then fell on Charles Munch, who was one of France's foremost musicians, and who had been the conductor of four orchestras in Paris.

Dr Munch has worked indefatigably in the past 11 years in the United States and abroad. His appearances have invariably aroused critical acclaim — so much so that one critic described the orchestra's triumphs as "monotonous."

Cultural Exchanges

The Boston Symphony will complete its 1959-60 season of more than 100 engagements in 20 American cities before it leaves for Korea on April 29 on the first leg of its tour.

The orchestra, in Dr Munch's words, is now a "pioneer" group in the program for cultural exchanges. He took the orchestra on two world tours—in 1952 and again in 1956, when it became the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia.

The "New York Times" correspondent cabled after the first concert in Moscow: "The Soviet Union's musical elite gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a tumultuous reception tonight, culminating in a 10-minute standing ovation after the orchestra had played two encores. The outburst of acclaim in Moscow's packed Conservatory surpassed anything the orchestra—or Moscow—had ever experienced."

BIG AIRLIFT FOR ORCHESTRA

Symphony From Boston

Four airlines have co-operated to fly the Boston Symphony Orchestra to New Zealand in one of the largest individual airlifts organised in the country.

With 107 players and their instruments, ranging from piccolos and flutes to tympani and two harps, the orchestra arrived at Wellington yesterday in four aircraft—two for players, two for instruments.

Tons of Baggage

The 10 tons of baggage—93 pieces—includes a special podium designed for the conductor, Charles Munch.

The orchestra will play in Wellington tonight and will fly to Auckland in three chartered planes tomorrow morning.

After a concert in the Town Hall tomorrow night the orchestra is to attend a mayoral reception. The first of the aircraft chartered for instruments will leave Whenuapai at 3 a.m. on Saturday. The players are to leave later on Saturday.

Cultural Tour

The orchestra is the first leading American group to visit New Zealand under the President's Cultural Programme, which subsidises foreign tours by American organisations. It played seven concerts in 10 days in Australia.

Working on a big business scale, the orchestra has an income from concerts, broadcasts and royalties exceeding £500,000 a year, but its expenses run to more than £600,000.

Each player receives at least £2500 a year, and most earn substantially more for their 46-week season. The minimum cost of a single concert is £3036. The orchestra's annual loss is made up by gifts.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Auckland, N.Z.

16 JUN 1960

The United States Ambassador, Mr F. R. Russell (left) with the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, in Wellington yesterday. —Herald wire photo

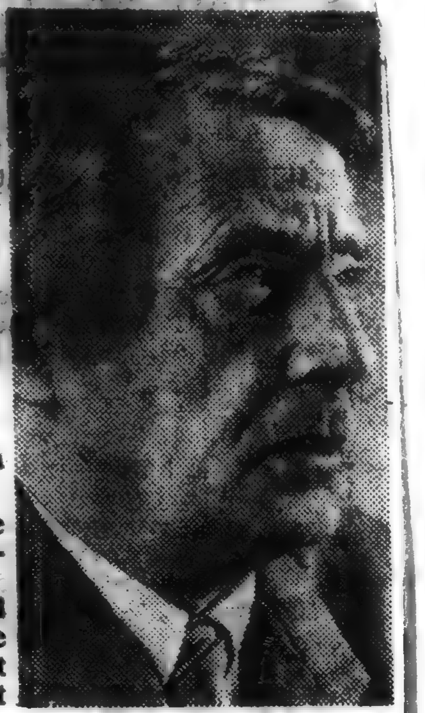
170

The Sydney Morning Herald

2 FRIDAY, MARCH 4, 1960

From Page

Australian Visit By Boston Orchestra



CHARLES MUNCH

One of the world's leading orchestras, the Boston Symphony, will tour Australia in June and give three concerts in Sydney.

The orchestra will be the first United States orchestra to visit Australia.

One of America's best-known living composers, Aaron Copland, will accompany the orchestra as guest conductor.

He will probably conduct some of his own works.

The orchestra's musical director, Charles Munch, will be principal conductor for the Australian tour, which is part of a Far Eastern tour including Japan, the Philippines, Korea and New Zealand.

The tour was announced jointly yesterday by the U.S. Ambassador to Australia, Mr William Sebald, and the general manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, Mr Charles Moses.

Tickets would not be sold as a series.

Music-lovers would be able to buy seats for individual concerts.

Mr Moses said it had been planned to give three concerts in Melbourne but one concert had to be cut from the proposed eight because of the orchestra's schedule.

"We felt we were justified in leaving Sydney with three concerts because there are about 16,000 subscribers here, as opposed to Melbourne's 12,000," he said.

Mr Moses said A.B.C. negotiations for the tour began in July last year.

The tour will be partly subsidised by the President's Program, which sponsors American cultural tours to foreign countries.

The 117 players in the orchestra will arrive in Brisbane by chartered plane with 16,000lb of luggage, including instruments.

All its concerts will be broadcast, and there will be a telecast of the Stadium concert in Sydney.

AARON COPLAND

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

7 MAR 1960

Boston's Orchestra Is 'International'

FROM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT IN NEW YORK

THE old adage that music knows no frontiers is no more strikingly reflected than in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give seven concerts in Australia early in June.

None of the conductors who have directed the Boston Symphony since its founding 79 years ago has been American. The orchestra's tenth (and present) conductor, Dr Charles Munch (pronounced "Moonsh"), is French, and—as at present composed—only 69 of the orchestra's 105 members are Americans.

This "internationalisation" of what is unquestionably America's finest symphony orchestra follows a tradition that goes back to the days when Central Europe virtually dominated the music world.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY—the Boston Symphony Orchestra reached "a peak of polished perfection" under him.

Orchestra's Origins

The orchestra owes its creation to an unfortunate accident in Vienna which prevented a promising young Bostonian from becoming a concert pianist just over 100 years ago. The young pianist, Henry L. Higginson, son of a prominent Boston banker, turned his frustration over a permanently injured hand into assembling, more than 20 years later, a permanent symphony orchestra.

Mr Higginson followed the family tradition of banking, but in 1881 he gathered together the best musicians he could obtain in Germany and Austria. He chose a young German conductor, George Henschel, to lead them, and announced concerts in downtown Boston.

Mr Higginson built his orchestra with a watchful eye in the following years. The Boston Symphony was not a musical "society" which met periodically to make music together, but a permanently maintained organisation of skilled musicians.

His main contribution, which the orchestra's [illegible] follow scrupulously to this day, was to establish the principle that the conductor must be "the boss" in every sense of the word—in programming, choice of soloists and guest conductors.

Thanks to this rule, each conductor added something to the orchestra's sheen.

The Vienna Opera's bearded Wilhelm Gericke "gave to the orchestra its excellent habits and ideals" during two periods—1884 to 1889 and 1898 to 1906, Mr Higginson wrote later. Gericke, he said, "taught those violins to sing as violins sing in Vienna alone."

Europe's greatest conductor, the fiery Hungarian Arthur Nikisch (1889-93), taught it how to "poetise," and perhaps he taught too well. Richard Strauss, guest conductor at a rehearsal in 1904, growled: "You play that finely, but a little too finely. I want some roughness here."

The Berlin Opera's Karl Muck, who took over the orchestra's direction from 1906 to 1918, gave the orchestra, according to a critic, "a living voice."

Muck's successor, the Frenchman Pierre Monteux, let it sing modern music—Stravinsky, Falla, Honegger, Milhaud.

Then, in 1924, the Russian Serge Koussevitzky, a magic figure in Europe, began what was to be the longest term for a single conductor—25 years. Under his stern but benevolent rule, the Boston Symphony reached a peak of polished perfection, and American composers, subsidised and encouraged with commissions, found a new home.

The performances of the Boston Symphony became legendary under his baton—a model of symphonic virtuosity. The names of the orchestra and its conductor (who died in 1951) seemed inseparable when, in 1948, he decided to retire.

The trustees' choice then fell on Charles Munch, who was one of France's foremost musicians, and who had been the conductor of four orchestras in Paris.

Dr Munch has worked indefatigably in the past 11 years in the United States and abroad. His appearances have invariably aroused critical acclaim — so much so that one critic described the orchestra's triumphs as "monotonous."

Cultural Exchanges

The Boston Symphony will complete its 1959-60 season of more than 100 engagements in 20 American cities before it leaves for Korea on April 29 on the first leg of its tour.

The orchestra, in Dr Munch's words, is now a "pioneer" group in the program for cultural exchanges. He took the orchestra on two world tours—in 1952 and again in 1956, when it became the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia.

The "New York Times" correspondent cabled after [illegible] first concert in Moscow: "The Soviet Union's musical elite gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a tumultuous reception tonight, culminating in a 10-minute standing ovation after the orchestra had played two encores. The outburst of acclaim in Moscow's packed Conservatory surpassed anything the orchestra—or Moscow—had ever experienced."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Auckland, N.Z.

16 JUN 1960

BIG AIRLIFT FOR ORCHESTRA

Symphony From Boston

Four airlines have co-operated to fly the Boston Symphony Orchestra to New Zealand in one of the largest individual airlifts organised in the country.

With 107 players and their instruments, ranging from piccolos and flutes to tympani and two harps, the orchestra arrived at Wellington yesterday in four aircraft—two for players, two for instruments.

Tons of Baggage

The 10 tons of baggage—93 pieces—includes a special podium designed for the conductor, Charles Munch.

The orchestra will play in Wellington tonight and will fly to Auckland in three chartered planes tomorrow morning.

The United States Ambassador, Mr F. R. Russell (left) with the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, in Wellington yesterday.

—Herald wire photo

171

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"WEST AUSTRALIAN"

Perth, W.A.

12 MAR 1960

CULTURAL COLD-SHOULDER

The Australian Broadcasting Commission and the United States Government have not tried hard enough to keep Perth in the Australian itinerary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Even if the U.S. Administration, as sponsor of the orchestra's Pacific tour, had good reasons for confining the stay in Australia to nine days, there is no justification for excluding Perth.

The old bogey of distance cannot be raised this time because by chartered aircraft it is quicker to fly from Manila to Perth than it is to fly from Manila to Brisbane, where the orchestra will open its tour. And it takes less than four hours to fly from Perth to Adelaide.

According to the United States Information Service the duration of the Australian tour—reported to be from June 5 to 14—has not yet been confirmed. So, unless there are more compelling reasons than those already given, the itinerary should be revised to include Perth. If the dates cannot be extended, the Sydney performances should be cut from three to two to give Perth the benefit of one concert.

The Boston Symphony is one of the finest orchestras in the world. To deny Perth an opportunity to hear it would be an affront to music-lovers. It would also be a breach of faith on the part of the A.B.C., whose duty it is to further the cultural interests of the nation as a whole.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

7 MAR 1960 Perth, W.A.

Sad Note

ONCE again that wicked old villain, the Nullarbor Plain, has done us in the eye.

Perth's music lovers are out on a limb, because the distance factor has made it too costly for the Boston Symphony Orchestra to include this third of the continent in their Australian tour.

I called the Australian Broadcasting Commission headquarters in Melbourne, but all they could suggest was that I get in touch with the American consul.

The ABC, they explained, was only managing the tour for the American Government.

So I telephoned the friendly American Consul in Perth, BUCK BACKE.

"Perth is a place they just don't know enough about yet," Backe said sadly. "Why not ring the U.S. Information Service in Canberra?"

So I rang USIS and spoke to publicity officer LE VAN ROBERTS.

And Roberts told me that Perth missed having the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the proverbial whisker.

They were to have flown to Perth from Singapore and opened their concert tour here.

But the itinerary was changed, [illegible] Singapore was cut [illegible] and their route no[illegible] from Manila to [illegible]bane.

And, [illegible]gh they're going as far as Adelaide, the cost of transporting 116 bodies and 16,000lb. of baggage . . .

Well, it's the same old story.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MERCURY"

Hobart, Tas.

4 MAR 1960

CIRC

MUSIC LOVERS' TREAT

SYDNEY. — The 117-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra would tour Australia this year, the United States Ambassador to Australia (Mr. William Sebald) said in Sydney yesterday.

The orchestra will arrive in Brisbane on June 5 from Manila and give three concerts in Sydney, one in Adelaide, and two in Melbourne.

The general manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission (Mr. Charles Moses) said the concerts would be given under A.B.C. management.

The Australian visit is part of the orchestra's tour of the Far East, including Korea, the Philippines, and New Zealand.

The Boston Symphony is widely recognised by musical opinion as being the world's greatest orchestra.

Its many tours outside America include a visit to the Soviet Union in 1956.

The orchestra's musical director, Charles Munch, will be principal conductor for the Australian tour.

Aaron Copland, probably America's best known living composer, will be guest conductor.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor, also will conduct some Australian concerts.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"WEST AUSTRALIAN"

Perth, W.A.

11 MAR 1960

ORCHESTRA TO MISS PERTH

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will not be coming to Perth on its Australian tour, because the U.S. Government has curtailed the orchestra's time in Australia.

Originally the orchestra was scheduled to play in Perth.

The general manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, Charles Moses told the Perth office that Perth had been dropped from the itinerary when it was decided that the orchestra would remain in Australia only nine days (from June [illegible] to 14).

Originally it was suggested that the orchestra would do a three-week season in Australia. This was apparently curtailed to include a New Zealand tour, Mr. Moses said.

The shorter visit to Australia now meant that the orchestra would be able to give only seven concerts.

American union rules allowed the orchestra to play only once a day and only five days a week.

172

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Auckland, N.Z.

8 MAR 1960

Aaron Copland

Noted U.S. Composer To Conduct

Press Assn Wellington

The American composer Aaron Copland will appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its performances at Wellington and Auckland on June 16 and 17.

The American Embassy announced this yesterday in conjunction with the National Broadcasting Service.

The principal conductor will be Charles Munch, music director, and the associate conductor Richard Burgen. The orchestra will consist of 192 musicians and the total party will number 117.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will fly to New Zealand after a Far Eastern tour, and appearances at Brisbane, Sydney, Adelaide and Melbourne.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Perth, W.A.

9 MAR 1960

Guess What?

HERE we go again!

I'd hardly finished writing that melancholy piece about the Boston Symphony Orchestra which ISN'T coming to Perth when I noticed that the Sadlers Wells Company was going to do an Australian tour.

Now, in my book, an Australian tour means a tour of that continent which stretches from Fremantle to Sydney and from Cape York to Hobart.

MUSIC and THEATRES

Sy[illegible]g Herald
March 9th
1960

Bostonian's Tour May Set Example

By The "Herald's" Music And Drama Critics

The news that the Boston Symphony is coming to Australia—if only for a brief period—has created an air of excitement about international cultural exchanges, coming as it did on top of the news that a French company, the Vieux-Colombier Theatre, is to visit us.

9-3-60

THE excitement is useful because, as in both cases Government money is helping to pay for the tours, it follows that France and America—not to mention Russia—believe that there is some national gain, in friendship, or prestige, to be won from exporting "culture" in the form of orchestras, actors, or dancers.

And if this is a useful policy for these countries, why not for Australia?

When the A.B.C.'s general manager, Mr Charles Moses, announced the Boston Symphony's visit, he said it would "revive" discussions about an overseas tour by an Australian orchestra. He may only have meant the abortive attempt made in 1951 to exchange the Halle Orchestra for the Sydney Symphony (this fell through because the Halle could not raise enough money) but he clearly implied that there had been more recent discussions than this.

One of the problems inevitably raised in this kind of discussion is money. Who will pay for any losses? Who will at least guarantee the fares and living costs?

In the case of the Boston Symphony, a fund called the President's Program will subsidise the tour; in our case, Mr Menzies, as Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs (and in both offices presumably concerned with Australia's impact, both cultural and political, on overseas countries), might be persuaded to set up some similar fund.

Another question is: where would an orchestra, opera company, or theatre group tour? Some of our more romantic and old-fashioned cultural administrators believe that Australian companies should go to Britain and to Europe, because our artists could then benefit from their contacts with the great traditions and so on.

On the other hand, there are others who believe that there is a lucrative touring circuit right on our doorstep—a circuit which would not only provide good financial returns, but also achieve the political function which seems to be now inseparable from this kind of artistic activity.

These people believe we should [illegible] the [illegible] Australian orchestra could easily play Singapore, Manila, Tokyo, Honolulu, [illegible] Vancouver, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Auckland and Wellington, in a kind of pan-Pacific cultural mission.

It would be equally possible for a group of actors like the Trust Players, or an opera company.

* * *

WITH next week's Australian premiere of Strauss' "Salome" exciting great expectations, conductor Karl Rankl and the Elizabethan Trust might be giving more than a passing thought to the possibility of adding such things as Strauss' "Electra" and Berg's "Wozzeck" to the season's repertoire.

Why not? Sydney soprano Marea Wolkowsky, home on a six-month visit, has sung the star roles in these operas in many German centres in recent years, so that some of the casting difficulties of "Electra" and "Wozzeck" are already solved.

* * *

THE Sydney branch of the International Society for Contemporary Music is organising two more concerts at the Conservatorium.

Musica Nova, which gave an admirable Australian premiere of Schoenberg's "Pierrot Lunaire," a few months ago, will give a recital on April 2.

The program includes a flute sonata by Pierre Boulez, some Webern songs, and a string quartet by Bernard Wagenaar.

Marilyn Richardson, who confidently and lucidly managed the difficult vocal part of "Pierrot," will sing the Webern songs, and the Australia Quartet will play the Wagenaar.

There will also be a performance by a small instrumental group of Webern's arrangement of Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony.

On May 14, the Hoffman String Quartet will play the second quartet of Ernest Bloch, the first quartet of Bartok, and either the C Major Benjamin Britten work or a new quartet by Goffredo Petrassi.

* * *

TWO ventures being planned by the Phillip Street Theatre are an interstate tour, with a revue composed of favourite numbers from all its shows of the past six years, and a new Australian musical show ("Mistress Money"), by the same team which made Phillip Street's outstanding Christmas show, "Ride On A Broomstick" — Eleanor Witcombe, John McKellar and Dot Mendoza.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"WEST AUSTRALIAN"

Perth, W.A.

15 MAR 1960

MARCH 15, 1960.

Some Feel Snub In Orchestra Omission

Leaders of Perth's cultural activities yesterday expressed disappointment or disgust that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will not visit Perth during its Australian tour.

They were varied in their suggestions as to how West Australians could prevent a similar happening.

Adult Education Board director Hew Roberts said that West Australians had shown an active interest in good music by producing a Festival of Perth long before any other capital city, and in having two symphony orchestras before the A.B.C. developed its own.

"It seems unfair," he said, "that simply because of geography—about which West Australians can do nothing—they will be unable to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Mr. Roberts suggested a special Commonwealth subsidy to give everyone an equal opportunity of seeing and hearing such outstanding visiting musicians.

Professor Frank Callaway, professor of music at the University of W.A., said: "One might have thought that Perth would have priority on this occasion because it was omitted from the itinerary of the Czechoslovakian Philharmonic Orchestra and the Czechoslovakian Wind Ensemble last year and some visiting soloists."

PUBLIC OUTCRY

Deputy-director of Adult Education Board John Birman, said that the only way to stop Perth being missed again was by a public outcry.

Mr. Birman said that if part of the job of such organisations as the A.B.C. and the Elizabethan Theatre Trust was to promote culture throughout Australia, then it was a public scandal that such attractions as the Boston Symphony Orchestra should visit the Eastern States and not here.

- Australian Broadcasting Commission general manager Charles Moses said on Sunday that costs would be increased if the 117 members of the orchestra and their eight tons of equipment were sent to Perth by air. American authorities had insisted that the concerts should be arranged to give the greatest number of people the opportunity to hear the orchestra.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"WEST AUSTRALIAN"
Perth, W.A.

16 MAR 1960

Wrong To Omit W.A. —Premier

Premier Brand yesterday expressed disappointment that the Boston Symphony Orchestra would not come to Perth during its Australian tour.

All too often, Perth and W.A. seemed to be the first to be excluded from the itineraries of eminent visitors to Australia, the Premier said.

West Australians were entitled to some real consideration when there was an opportunity of hearing such artists as the players in the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

West Australians had responded well in the past in supporting entertainment of this nature and there was evidence that such a world-famous combination would have found good support here.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

31 MAR 1960

Symphony Orchestra Telecast

The Boston Symphony Orchestra probably will be telecast during one of its two Melbourne concerts in the Olympic Pool on June 13 and 14.

The 100-strong orchestra is conducted by Charles Munch.

Aaron Copland, famed American composer, will be guest conductor during the orchestra's Australian tour.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"News",
Darwi
N

14 APR 19

THE NORTHERN T

5DR PROGRAMME
HIGHLIGHTS
DARWIN
A
B
C

The ABC has arranged many special programs for Good Friday.

The first one, Meditation Upon A Cross, a B.B.C. program of readings of scriptures and verse and including carols for the Passiontide, will be broadcast at 8.30 a.m.

At 2 p.m. a program called Holiday In Italy will present songs with orchestra, marimba and accordeon accompaniment.

Then at 2.45 the world-renowned Marlene Dietrich will sing some German songs, including Lili Marlene. The great violinist Alfredo Campoli may be heard in a recital of well known pieces at 3.30.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is to perform in Australia soon, will be heard at 4.10. At 5.30 the One hundred and One Strings will play several attractive tunes from Gershwin's Porgy and Bess.

EASTER FEATURE

Father Genesius Jones and the Julian Singers, together with a group of actors and instrumentalists, "proclaims the Noble Triumph of Calvary" in a half-hour feature, The Faithful Tree at 6.45 p.m. Father Jones' script is based on the Roman Liturgy for Good Friday.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

30 MAR 1960

Music in the Air— Literally

SYDNEY, Tuesday. — A separate aircraft will be needed to transport the eight tons of baggage — mostly musical instruments —which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will bring to Australia in June.

Another two aircraft will be chartered to fly the 115-member orchestra between Australian capital cities.

The orchestra will begin the first of seven Australian concerts at Brisbane on June 6.

It will then visit Sydney for three performances, Adelaide and Melbourne, for its final concert on June 14.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"WEST AUSTRALIAN"
Perth, W.A.

21 MAR 1960

It's Time We Got Our Cultural Dues

... SAYS FRANCIS KING

THE protests against the cancellation of the scheduled visit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have focussed attention on a more than usually blatant example of a very widespread attitude.

Western Australia tends still to be regarded as a backwater, pleasant and friendly, perhaps, but not ranked with other States by the cultural powers-that-be.

A national institution like the Elizabethan Theatre Trust, subsidised by the taxpayer to the extent of £110,000 per annum, including £50,000 from the Commonwealth Government and £5,000 from our State Government, can make £40,000 profit on the Bolshoi Ballet season and still not extend the tour to W.A.

Nor did they send "Kolo" —the Yugoslav National Ballet Company—or the 1959 opera season with Sylvia Fisher and Ronald Dowd in "Peter Grimes," "Lohengrin," "Fidelio," "Carmen" and th "Barber of Seville."

Of the trust's subsidised funds, £120,000 was absorbed by one season of opera and by the Australian musical "Lola Montez."

From that expenditure, Perth got "Madame Butterfly" which, by all reports, made a fairly small loss.

On the credit side, the trust sponsored three plays at the Playhouse—"Man and Superman," "Long Day's Journey Into Night" and "Fire On The Wind"—and lent to the Festival of Perth committee (at full cost) producers and costumes for "Dalgerie."

It agreed to pay any losses on "Dalgerie" over £1,000; but since the losses were £890, they were born by the festival.

The trust also sent the profitable "Tintookies," a puppet show.

The Elizabethan Theatre Trust is dedicated to the promotion of drama, opera and ballet in Australia, and has done much in the Eastern States to encourage activities that cannot be maintained as commercial ventures.

In view of Western Australia's contribution and far greater need for subsidies, have we really received our fair share of the year's activities?

The attitude behind this starving of Western Australia is in part a hangover from the days—not so distant—when a visiting musical group could be relied on to attract little audience and less money. This state of affairs has gone.

The same excuse was used when Perth was excluded from the itinerary of the Pascal and Koerkert Quartets in 1955, who were then visiting the major cities of Australia, New Zealand and Indonesia.

However, when the Music Council, by guaranteeing audiences, persuaded the Australian Broadcasting Commission to go to the expense of bringing the Robert Masters Quartet to Perth, the three recitals were sold out.

Since then the musical community has backed the Amadeus and Smetana Quartets with full houses and the latter, at the end of the tour, said the audience response here was the most exciting they had received in Australia.

Encouraged, the A.B.C. is bringing two more chamber groups during the year and we have an interesting celebrity season ahead of us.

W.A. CLAIM

However, in view of the fact that Perth has missed the Czech Philharmonic, the Czech Wind Ensemble, David Oistrakh and Daniel Barenboim in the past 18 months, and will not hear conductors Georges Tzipine and John Hopkins, singers Joan Hammond and Ken Neate, pianists Glenn Gould and Eva Bernathova and cellist Mstislav Rostropovich, this year, isn't it about time the A.B.C. took a new look at its responsibilities in this State?

The principle at stake is whether we are to be culturally rationed according to population and distance, or given our due as a junior but responsible and certainly responsive member of the Commonwealth.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 8 MAR 1960

● Boston venue

EVERY music-lover in Melbourne must be in complete agreement with your music critic and the various correspondents who have emphasised that the holding of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in the Olympic swimming stadium means that nobody will be able to hear the orchestra as it should be heard.

If the ABC persists in these plans it will earn the lasting contempt and opprobrium of us all—to say nothing of the members of the orchestra.

The visit of this orchestra to Australia is a tremendous highlight in our musical history.

As a substitute for the Town Hall, could the concerts be given in the Palais Theatre, St. Kilda? I believe this theatre has more seats than the Town Hall, and the National Theatre's recent opera performances there showed that the acoustics are suitable.

I put forward this suggestion for the ABC's consideration as being a more practical solution than the Olympic swimming stadium.

—Gilbert Prince, Marne-st., South Yarra.

IF several thousand music - lovers feel so strongly about the aesthetic error of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at the Olympic swimming stadium that they refuse to buy tickets for such concerts, their transfer to the Town Hall would be assured.

I, for one, would readily pay to hear the Boston Orchestra in the Town Hall, but would refuse to listen to it in the swimming pool.

—J. O. N. Perkins, Riddle-st., Bentleigh.

I FEEL that the Festival Hall, with its capacity for 7500 and its excellent acoustics, is the most suitable place for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Melbourne concerts.

—(Mrs) T. M. Schlemmer, Pembroke-rd., Balwyn.

MUSIC And THEATRES

Sydney Morning Herald
Mar. 15
1960.

Overseas Interest In Scriven Show

By The "Herald's" Music and Drama Critics

Puppeteer Peter Scriven has just returned to Sydney after an overseas trip aimed at interesting people on Broadway and in London in "Bright Side," the musical which he and Eric Rasdall have written.

THE results seem to be promising. "I worked on the book of the show in New York," says Scriven, "and I have interested a director and a producer who has taken an option on it.

"If it is performed here it will have an American director. London is also interested."

Scriven is now trying to arrange for an Australian production, and is simultaneously working on his marionette adaptation of Norman Lindsay's classic children's story, "The Magic Pudding."

Working to drawings and sketches provided by Norman Lindsay, Scriven and his staff are already at work making the marionettes for the production, which is scheduled to open later this year. It might also go to London—with the "Tintookies"—for the Christmas season, a very rewarding time for theatre people who can provide good entertainment for children.

* * *

FOR some people the Adelaide Festival will involve a great deal more than a pleasurable round of concerts, plays and opera.

One group—made up of composers, critics and scholars—will be going there to work as well, at the UNESCO Seminar for Composers, to be held at the Elder Conservatorium concurrently with the last week of the festival.

The seminar will undertake a lot of useful work. It will help people variously interested in the problems of Australian composers, and composition generally, to establish contact with each other; it will consider—in discussion sessions — the ways in which Australian composition might be stimulated and more widely publicised; and it will discuss and hear performances of contemporary Australian music.

The seminar, to be directed by Professor G. Loughlin, Ormond Professor of Music in Melbourne, has been thoroughly organised by a representative working party led by Professor John Bishop, of Adelaide.

There will be three sessions a day, one of which will be open to the public, and four public concerts of Australian music.

* * *

A GLANCE at the program reveals some interesting events. On the first day, for example, the seminar will break up into small study groups to discuss subjects as diverse as string textures and twentieth-century counterpoint, new material to be drawn from primitive music, and the planning of orchestral writing.

The concerts of Australian music (made possible through the help of the Australasian Performing Right Association) include works by Felix Werder, Meta Overman, George Dreyfus, Miriam Hyde and Margaret Sutherland.

The seminar working committee has also made it possible for some scores to be reproduced. Altogether, it seems an admirably worthwhile event, which could easily have more far-reaching effects than any other single Festival activity.

THE announcement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's plan to tour Australia is great and exciting news; the contribution this orchestra can make to our own performing and listening standards may even be greater than the huge contribution made by the Czech Philharmonic concerts here last year.

Is Boston's the world's best orchestra, though, as so many reputable people claim? There is much to support the claim in the orchestra's work, but—so far as one can safely generalise from a few hearings of all the world's [illegible] orchestras—it has a [illegible] great deal to beat in both the Berlin Philharmonic and the Philadelphia.

Conductor Charles Munch and the Bostonians will be given a wonderful welcome, but one can also be rather sad that Eugene Ormandy, who strove for so long to find opportunities to bring his Philadelphians to Australia, is to see the great opportunity go [illegible] rivals.

The welcome for Aaron Copland (as associate conductor) will be generous, too, perhaps more in recognition of the remarkable leadership he has been able to give to American-made composition through a lifetime of ardent and dynamic advocacy than in recognition of his own gifts as a composer of somewhat arid style and Hollywood sound-track inspiration.

There is some interesting material in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's official biography, passed around the other day when the news of its visit was announced. It points out, for example, that a "truly interested and judicious" audience grew—in the early days—from the innovations of conductors, particularly George Henschel, who was attacked for being a modernist (he was devoted to Brahms and Wagner).

It points out, too, that one of the reasons for the orchestra's present pre-eminence is that while Americans were just discovering a taste for symphonic music, and were listening largely to Beethoven, Brahms and Tchaikovsky, Serge Koussevitzky struck out boldly to average three new works in every two programs.

"Koussevitzky was giving the Boston listeners something they still have, which is valuable and rare," says the biography.

(79

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 600,319

APR 16 1960

Boston Symphony on Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with 117 members is touring Australia in June, 1961, with concerts at Brisbane, Adelaide, Sydney and Melbourne.

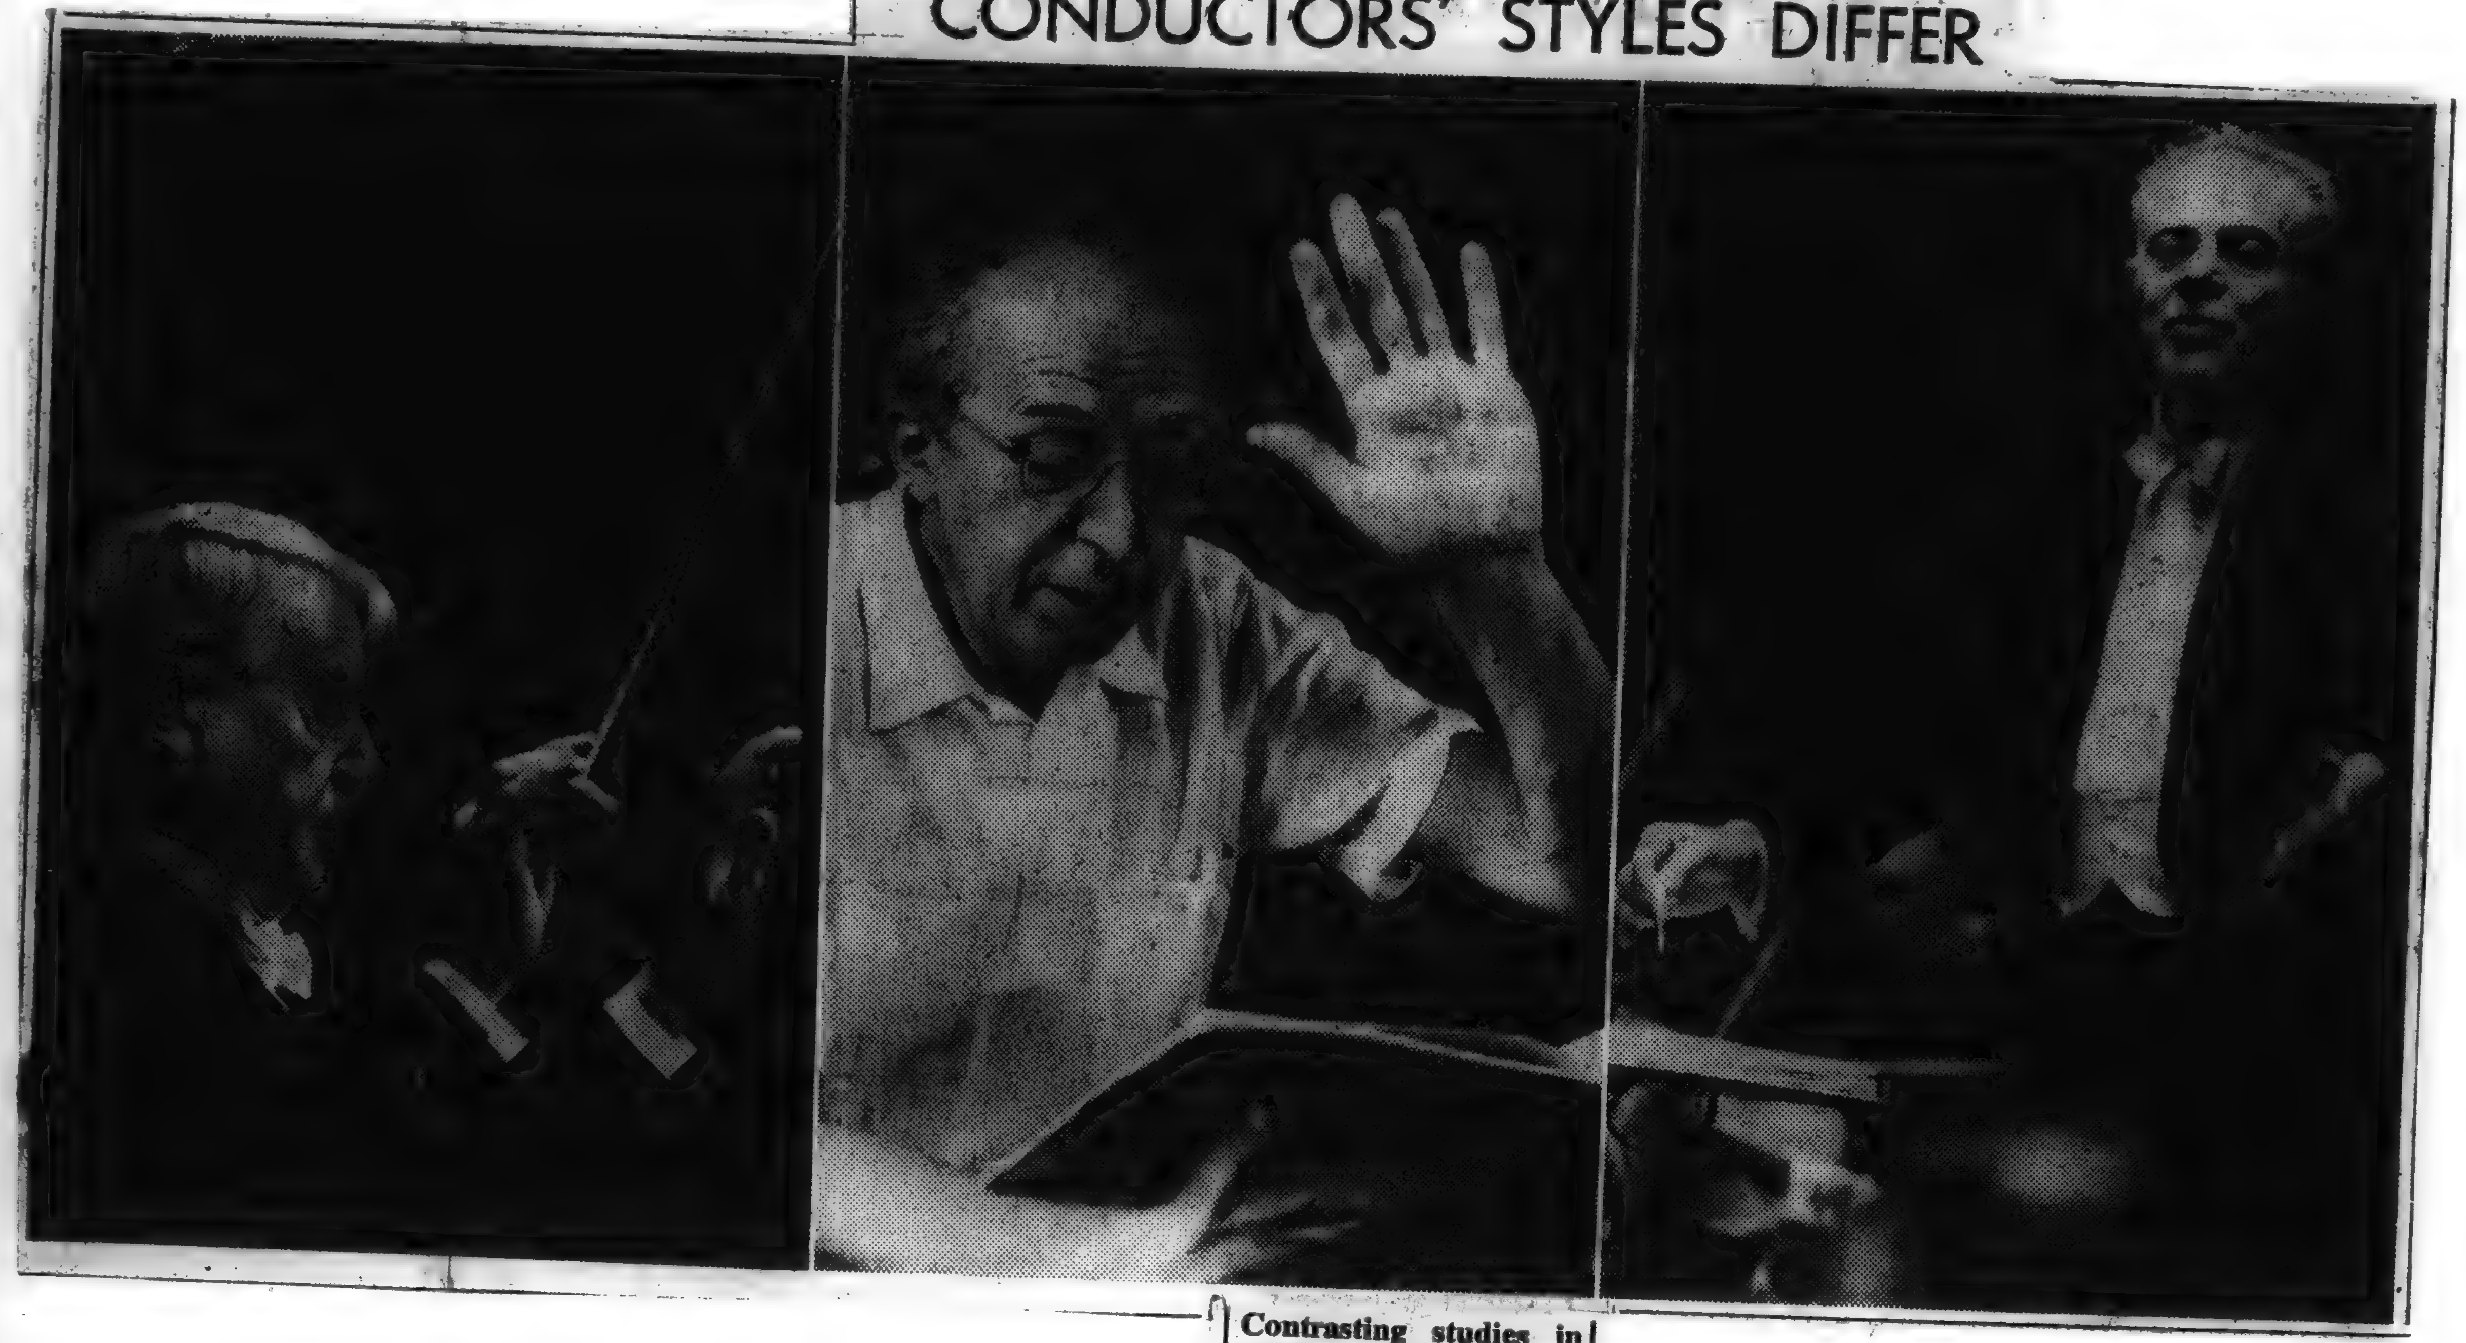
Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

2 APR 1960

circ

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONDUCTORS' STYLES DIFFER



Contrasting studies in concentration are seen in these portraits of the three conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra's musical director and principal conductor of the tour, Charles Munch (left) is calmly authoritative. Composer Aaron Copland (centre) is informal, but uncompromisingly forthright. Richard Burgin (right) is gently cajoling. The conductors will lead the orchestra in three concerts in Sydney in June.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"SUN"
Melbourne, Vic.

5 APR 1960

CIRC

THE ABC has received a movement order from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are bringing 85 theatrical trunks, total weight, 16,000 lb. They recommend that four Army-type trucks be provided to shift the trunks and that one of the trucks be fitted with a power-operated tailboard to lift the heavier equipment. The party will consist of 115 to 120 persons, including three conductors, three stage hands and a doctor.

Well, the Australian cricket team found it necessary to take its own doctor to Pakistan. You never know what you might run into in these strange countries.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"SUN-HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

10 APR 1960

No sour note

MELBOURNE, Saturday. — Visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra members are not likely to be asked to pay a £5 union fee each.

The 117 members of the orchestra will tour Australia next June.

A demand by the Musicians' Union that the 110 members of the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra should pay the fee to become visiting members during their tour caused a stir last September.

Finally the union withdrew the demand and made the visitors honorary members.

The general secretary of the union, Mr C. M. Wheatland, said today that the Federal executive was still considering the question of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's visit.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

11 APR 1960

Whirlwind

WHEN Bostonian William J. Cox flew (the word is appropriate) in and out of Melbourne at the week end, we had our first indirect contact with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, due to invade us. 115-strong, next June

Mr. Cox, the orchestra's advance tour manager, is passing like a whirlwind through Japan, Korea, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand—the places on its coming itinerary.

On his 20,000-mile circuit, he hit Brisbane on Wednesday, Sydney on Thursday and Melbourne on Saturday, before taking off for New Zealand.

In his 18 hours in Melbourne, Mr. Cox fitted in a concert in the Melbourne Town Hall ("your orchestra is first-class"), a thorough inspection of the hotel where the entire Boston orchestra will stay, and a visit to the Olympic Pool where it will play.

Though he had no opportunity to hear an orchestra at the pool (which is enjoying Garden week at the moment), he apparently gained enough idea of its acoustics to suggest the erection of a colored canopy—rather like a tent fly—above the orchestra platform.

The A.B.C. which is arranging the concerts will oblige.

126

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

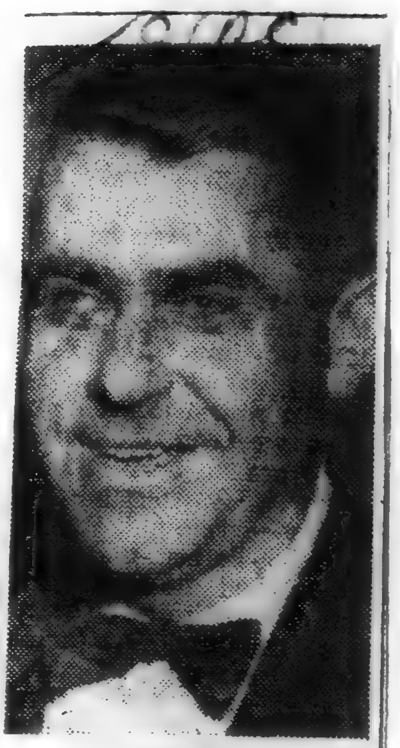
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

APR 1960



MR COX

CHECKING TOUR BY ORCHESTRA

The advance manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~Mr~~ William J. Cox, arrived in Sydney yesterday to confer with the A.B.C. on the orchestra's tour, which begins in Brisbane on June 6.

Mr Cox said the tour would be the longest the orchestra had undertaken, and that its members were looking forward to it.

Mr Cox's conferences will deal with the mechanical arrangements of the tour. The orchestra will travel in Australia by air.

Mr Cox intends to inspect the concert halls where the orchestra is scheduled to play.

He said it was not likely that any Australian soloists would appear with the orchestra. This was because the orchestra's tight schedule would not allow enough time for special rehearsals.

Last night Mr Cox attended the Sydney Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Sydney Town Hall.

MR COX

Checking Up On Orchestra's Tour

The advance manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr William J. Cox, arrived in Sydney yesterday to confer with the A.B.C. on the orchestra's tour, which begins in Brisbane on June 6.

Mr Cox said the tour would be the longest the orchestra had undertaken, and that its members were looking forward to it.

Mr Cox's conferences will deal with the mechanical arrangements of the tour. The orchestra will travel in Australia by air.

Mr Cox intends to inspect the concert halls where the orchestra is scheduled to play.

He said it was not likely that any Australian soloists would appear with the orchestra. This was because the orchestra's tight schedule would not allow enough time for special rehearsals.

Last night Mr Cox attended the Sydney Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Sydney Town Hall.

Later, he said the Boston orchestra might find people sitting in the organ-gallery seats at the Town Hall "a little disconcerting."

He described the Sydney orchestra as "well disciplined."

As far as he could tell, the acoustics of the Town Hall were excellent.

Mr Cox said the Town Hall was similar to the Boston Symphony Hall—"except, of course, the interior decorating," but they had the same floor layout and disposition of side-gallery seats.

SYDNEY MORNING HERALD.
FRIDAY APRIL 8TH 1960

FRIDAY DAILY TELEGRAPH APRIL 8. 1960

Long tour for Boston Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour of the Eastern Hemisphere will be the longest it has undertaken.

The advance manager (Mr. William J. Cox) said this in Sydney yesterday.

Mr. Cox arrived from Manila to arrange details of the orchestra's visit to Australia and New Zealand in June.

Beginning on April 25, the 117-piece orchestra will make a 10-week tour of Korea, Japan, Manila, Australia and New Zealand.

It will give 36 concerts, including eight in Australia.

The orchestra will arrive in Brisbane on June 5.

Mr. Cox said the orchestra's second longest tour was in Europe in 1956 when it celebrated its 75th year by giving 28 concerts.

It was the first American orchestra to visit Russia, playing to enthusiastic audiences in Moscow and Leningrad.

The orchestra's music director (Mr. Charles Munch) will be principal conductor.

Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin will be associate conductors.

MUSIC And THEATRES

Sydney Will Hear Composer Conduct

By the "Herald" Music and Drama critics

Sydney music lovers will hear Aaron Copland conduct two of his own works—the first symphony, and the suite from "The Tender Land," when the Boston Symphony visits Australia in June.

Copland will conduct the third and final concert in Sydney, on June 9, and the rest of the program is a Purcell string fantasy and Haydn's 95th symphony. The only other concert he will conduct—with the same program—will be in Melbourne.

Charles Munch will conduct the first concert in Sydney, and Richard Burgin the second; Munch's program is the "Fantastic" Symphony of Berlioz, Norman Dello Joio's "Variations, Chaconne and Finale," and Roussel's second suite from "Bacchus and Ariane."

Burgin's program is a Toccata by Leon Kirchner, the Adagio from Mahler's unfinished tenth symphony, and Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony.

Sydney is not to hear Brahms or Beethoven, which go to Adelaide and Melbourne respectively, nor will it hear the orchestra's great showpiece, the second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," which will be played at the opening concert of the tour in Brisbane on June 6. This concert also includes Beethoven's third symphony.

From the look of the programs the Boston Symphony planners seem to regard Sydney as a slightly more sophisticated city, musically, than the others it is visiting. And the Tchaikovsky apart, we should be grateful not only for the orchestra's visit, but also for the music it is bringing us.

★ ★ ★

THE University of Sydney is planning to have a series of carillon recitals this year on Sunday afternoons at 3 p.m.

The carillon is not nearly the formidable instrument many music-lovers imagine. Provided one sits in the right place—in the quadrangle opposite the tower or, for the more rapid and brilliant music, outside the quadrangle—an afternoon's carillon listening can be extremely satisfying.

PROFESSOR BURNARD

For one thing, there are no strictures on seating positions; listeners can wander about to their heart's content. The only stipulation is that the listening distance should be at least equal to the height of the tower—or a little more.

Music ranges from original compositions to transcriptions from Arne, Purcell, Scarlatti and Mozart. Among original music is a carillon tune by the late Robert Dalley-Scarlett, whose widow has donated the Brisbane musicians' library of scores and reference-books to the university.

Alex Burnard, Professor of Harmony and Composition at Sydney Conservatorium, is represented by "Four Experiments for Carillon."

University carillonist John Gordon heads the list of recitalists. Honorary carillonists taking part are J. Lindsay Gordon, Marjorie Oakes, Hazel Dawson and Errol Lea-Scarlett.

Programs setting out the dates of the recitals and the music to be played are available from the Department of Music at the university.

★ ★ ★

THE Arts Council is claiming an Australian record for the tour it has planned for the company from the Independent Theatre, which is taking "A View From the Bridge" to the country late in April.

The tour will last five months, will take the company to 101 country towns in N.S.W. and Queensland, and will cover more than 9,000 miles—all of them to be travelled in the Arts Council's new travelling theatre unit, which is being built.

The tour will take the company as far north as Cairns and the Atherton Tableland, as far west as Broken Hill, and as far south as Cabramurra and Albury. Before it goes, the company will give three performances at the Independent, beginning on April 21.

★ ★ ★

PETER KENNA'S play, "The Slaughter of St. Teresa's Day," televised last week by the A.B.C., adds another figure to the ranks of the indomitable aunts and grannies who appeal to much of our playwrights.

In this case, Aunt Essie was played by Alma Butterfield, who gave a splendid performance in a role which, although not obviously rewarding, strikingly repaid the skill she brought to it.

★ ★ ★

JOHN TASKER, who directed the lively and inventive production of Sartre's important play, "Lucifer and the Lord," for Sydney University Dramatic Society, believes that the Wallace Theatre production may easily have been the first ever in English.

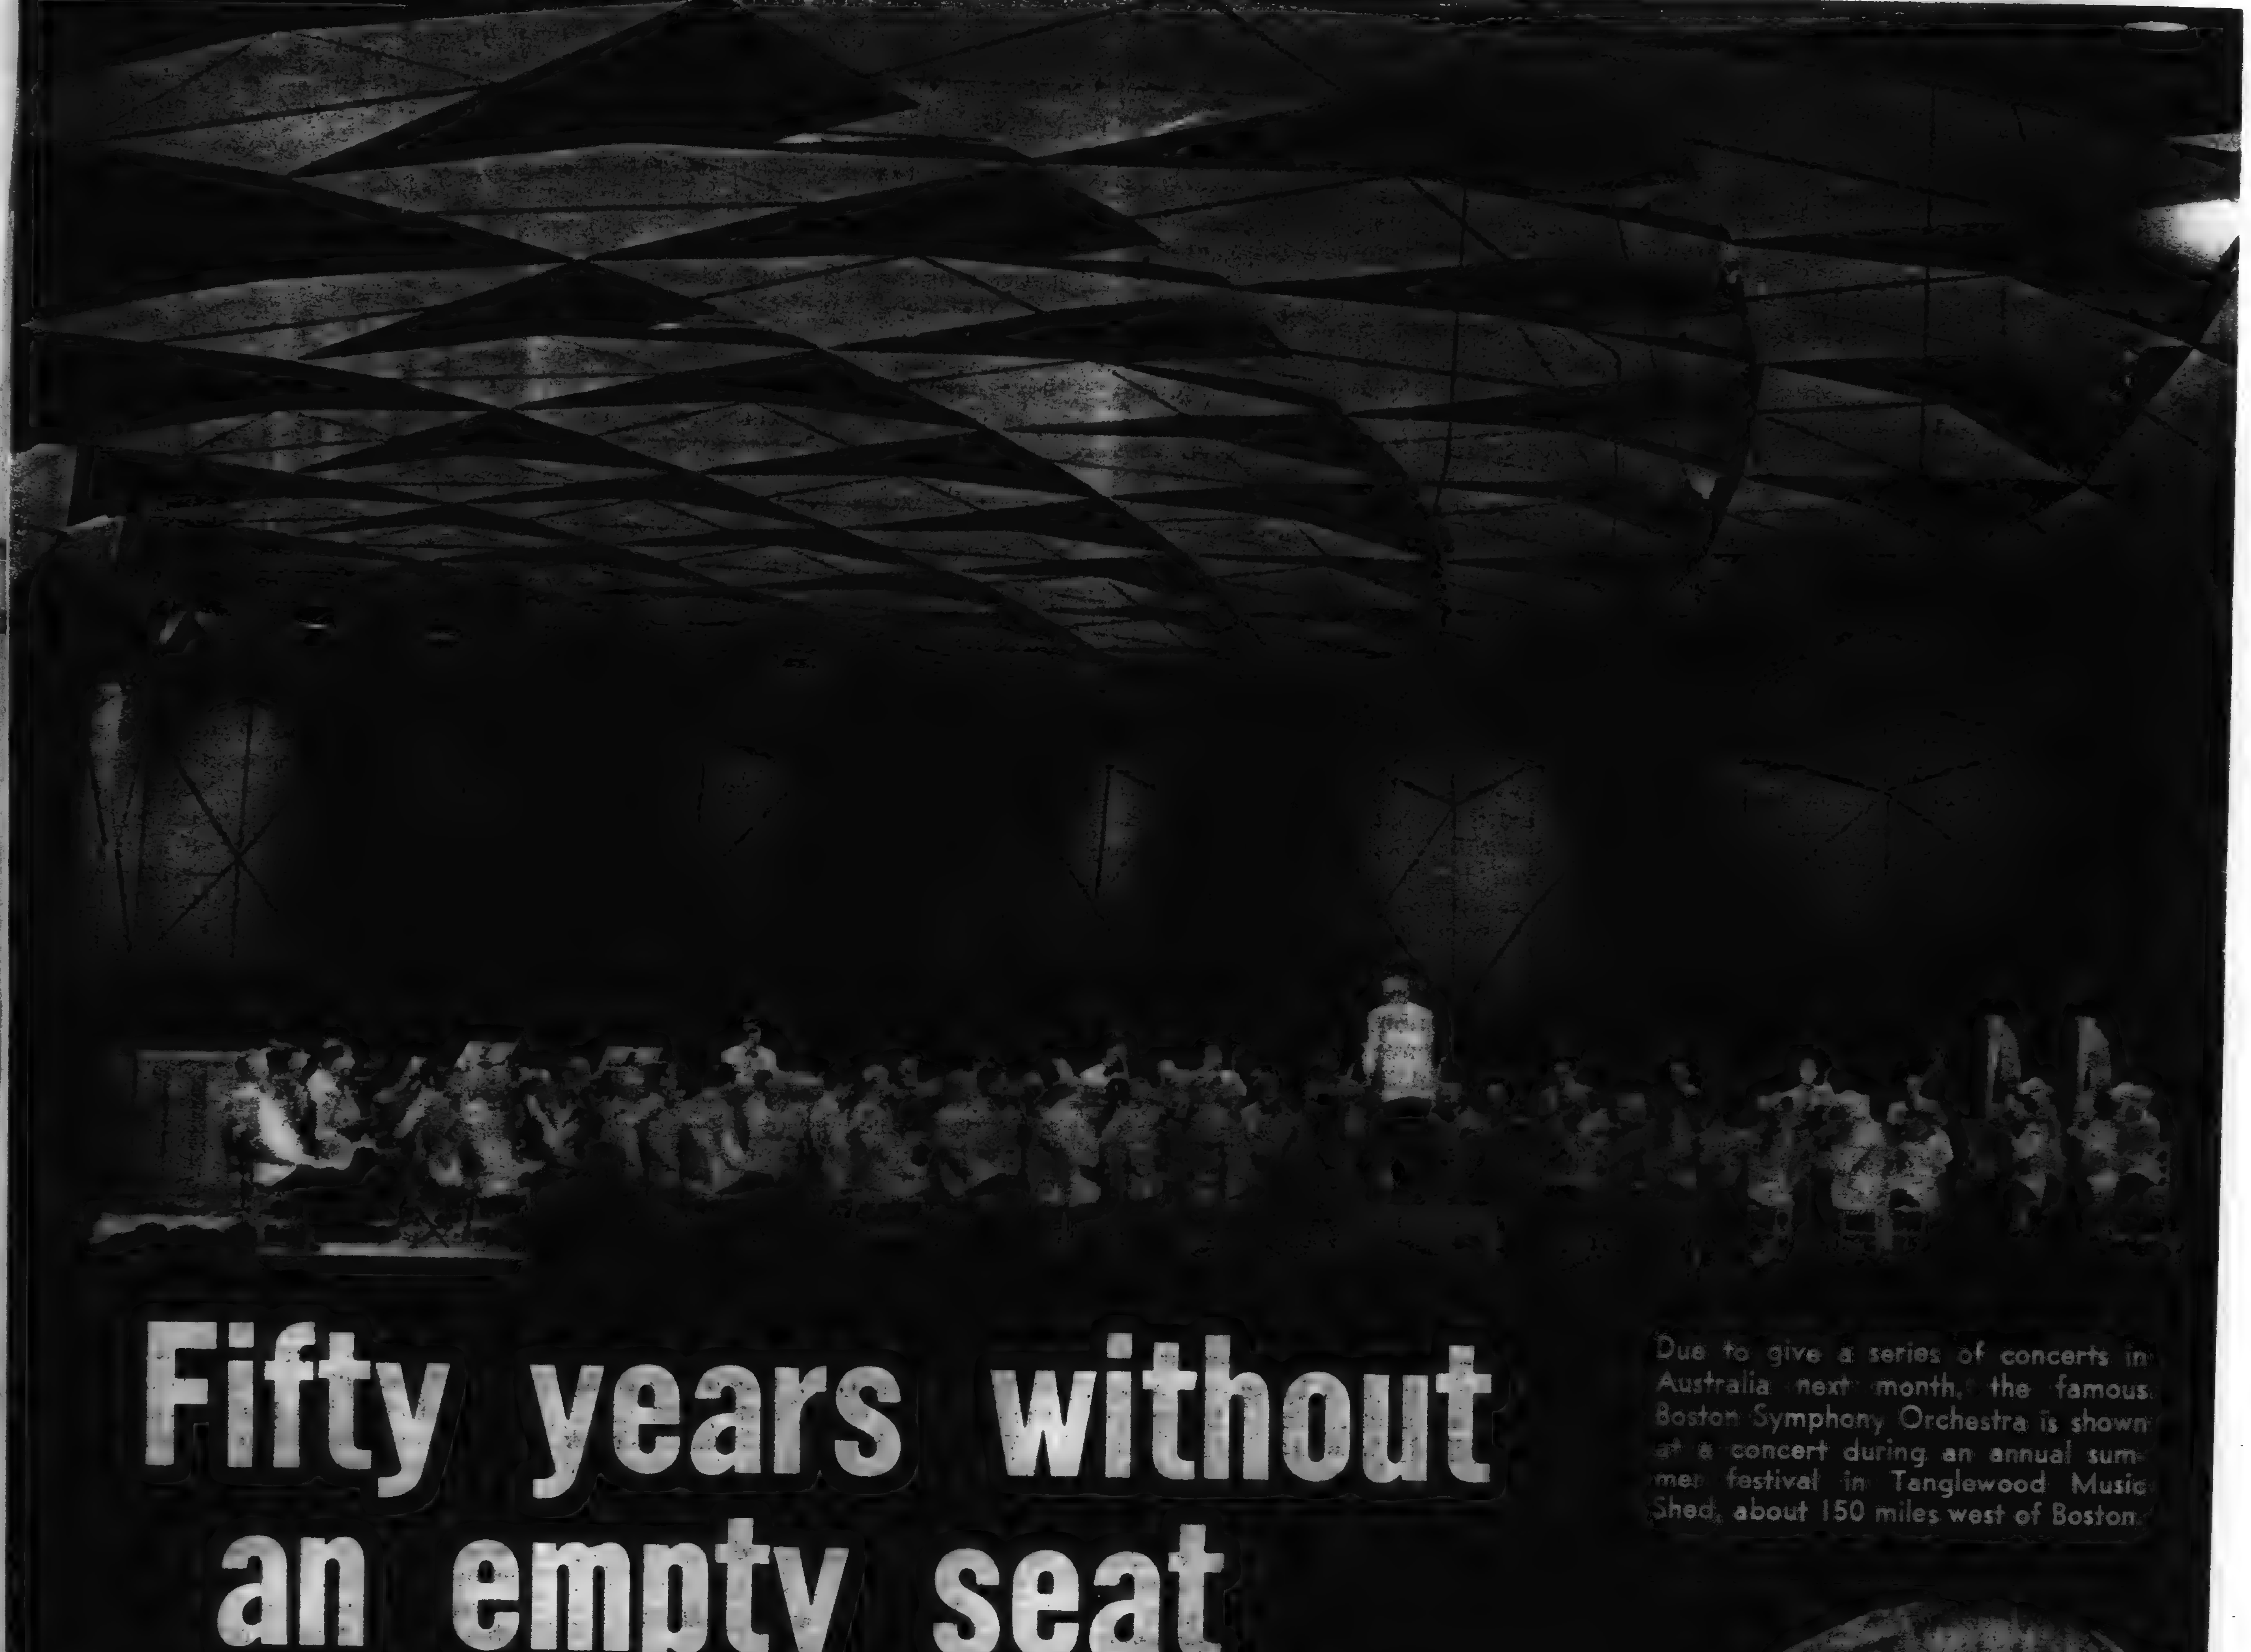
He has heard from London that the Stratford-on-Avon company is planning the English premiere soon, and that a New York production is being discussed.

Mr Tasker believes it unlikely that the play would have been produced in English anywhere else, and is modestly claiming a quite significant "first" for S.U.D.S. Anyone who saw the production would probably agree that they deserve it.

SYDNEY MORNING HERALD
TUES. MARCH 29TH 1960.

127

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
People
Sydney, N.S.W.
11 MAY 1960



Fifty years without an empty seat

Due to give a series of concerts in Australia next month, the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra is shown at a concert during an annual summer festival in Tanglewood Music Shed, about 150 miles west of Boston.

By MAURICE ADAMS

NEXT MONTH AUSTRALIA WILL HAVE A CHANCE TO HEAR "THE FINEST MUSIC ON EARTH"

ONE of the world's most famous musical organisations, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be in Australia within the next few weeks, has not played to an empty seat in the past 50 years.

The orchestra's tour, under the management of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, begins in Brisbane on June 6 and includes seven concerts.

Already the orchestra has toured Britain, Europe and the Soviet Union, as part of U.S. President Eisenhower's idea that cultural missions help to improve international relations. This year the orchestra is on a 25,000-mile Pacific tour that includes South Korea, Japan and the Philippines. After its Australian appearances, it will go to New Zealand.

In Boston, the home of the orchestra, its music is described as "the finest this side of Heaven." Those fortunate enough to hear it have literally to go underground on the city's electric trains, which all stop at a station which is called, appropriately, Symphony.

At street level is the orchestra's imposing home, a structure with an eight-column facade reminiscent of an ancient Athenian theatre. To Bostonians this is known and revered with almost religious fervour as Symphony Hall. Its three-tiered gilded auditorium seats 2631 persons.

For a visitor or stranger to be allowed to cross one of its four portals to one of its regular concerts is something akin to a miracle.

The miracle is necessary because the 79-year-old orchestra, having achieved the majestic eminence of a glittering cultural institution in what is known as "the Athens of America," no Bostonian worth his or her tea would be found dead without a subscription ticket to one of its five annual concert series.

A vacant seat outside the magic circle of subscribers is rare indeed.

The orchestra, 117 strong including players and other personnel with seven tons of luggage, equipment and instruments, arrives in Brisbane by charter planes on June 5 and will give its first Australian concert there on June 6, followed by concerts in Sydney on June 7, 8 and 9, Adelaide June 10, Melbourne June 13 and 14.

In Australia, as everywhere else, one man will stand out — its 6ft-tall, silver-haired conductor, Charles Munch, who inherited the Boston Symphony's leadership in 1949.

Despite the honours, academic awards and bouquets with which he has been showered these past 11 years, Charles Munch, 68, is a shy, retiring widower with a boyish charm and a modesty which his friends find appalling. "I am a conductor only because I am too stupid to be anything else," he has been quoted as saying.

Actually, his entire life now seems in retrospect to have been an arduous preparation for what he is — one of the greatest living conductors.

He seemed to have had as little chance of escaping his career as the sons of Johann Sebastian Bach. Like Bach, his father, Ernest Munch, pro-

The orchestra [illegible] Charles Munch, 68, is rated [illegible] of the world's greatest [illegible] is a shy, retiring [illegible] boyish charm.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

127

“Does Australian beer mix with lo[illegible] Ca[illegible]e?”

fessor of music at the Strasbourg Conservatory, was an organist. And like Bach, Charles Munch's first music teacher — organ, piano and violin — was his father.

Because he was born in Alsace, lying between those two great musical — and often enemy — countries, France and Germany, Munch's early life consisted of creating harmony not only in musical arrangements but in the stark reality of everyday life.

Bred in the traditions of both countries, Munch, a French citizen for the past 30 years, is the personification of this double culture. Like his music, he too is a blend of Germanic perfectionism and French romanticism.

His father was a staunch Alsatian with a name derived from the German Monch, meaning monk. He was also an austere Protestant — a man whose stern gaze was firmly riveted on his family of six children, music and God. His mother, Celestine Simon, was the daughter of a French Protestant minister in Paris.

Because of his devotion to the music of the great French composers, Berlioz, Debussy, Roussel or Honegger, Munch has been described as “Gallic to his fingertips.”

Great Bach authority

The music of Bach, however, is his Bible, a natural result of a boyhood steeped in the music of that master, conducted by his father in Strasbourg, and his uncle, Eugene Munch, who produced the cantatas and passions of Bach in the Cathedral at Mulhouse.

Albert Schweitzer, the philosopher and greatest living authority on Bach, was a pupil of Munch's uncle, as well as a close friend of the Munch family, a friendship which resulted in the marriage of Albert's brother to Charles' sister, Emma.

At 21, Charles contemplated a medical career and went to Paris to study. But soon he was devoting all his time to his violin under the French master Lucien Capet.

World War I found him holidaying with his family in Strasbourg, where he was caught in the draft and conscripted into the Kaiser's army. He was wounded at Verdun and demobilised after the armistice. He was 26.

He returned to Paris a few years later where he obtained French citizenship—and eventual fame as conductor. In 1933 he married Genevieve Maury, a Swiss novelist and heiress to one of the founders of the Nestle chocolate company.

Mrs Munch, who died in 1956, was instrumental in launching her husband's career as a conductor. She hired both the hall and the very first orchestra that her violinist-husband ever conducted.

Famous matinee idol

Success was assured when the critics acclaimed the virtuosity of this unknown conductor. Offers poured in from other Paris orchestras, and fans gathered around. Among the instrumentalists, the women and girls who jammed the front rows to admire “Le beau Charles” were called “Les Munchettes.” In the following years his fame as conductor was matched only by his fame as a matinee idol.

In 1948, a French magazine conducted a poll asking 10,000 Parisiennes the question: “What man would you like to have dinner with tonight if you could make your choice?” Munch ran second only to Winston Churchill, and away ahead of such film stars as Gary Cooper and Jean Marais.

On the podium Munch is not known as a man of temper, but he is human enough to be provoked. Shortly after he took over the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra in 1937—a post he held till 1946—a drunken trombonist disrupted the calm of a Beethoven adagio with a terrific blast. Everyone, audience and musicians alike, was outraged and Munch expressed his feelings in no uncertain manner.

Next evening, just before the second performance, a smiling Charles Munch walked on stage with a large bottle of potent raspberry brandy in his hand. Before audience and orchestra, he handed it to the flabbergasted trombonist with the words, “I treated you pretty roughly last night. Here's some consolation.”

When he went to Boston, he found an orchestra which had been disciplined [illegible] ng the 25 years' s[illegible] his predecessor, Russ[illegible] Koussevitzky. The Bostonians found their new leader “the most economical rehearser we ever had.” Unlike Koussevitzky, Munch does not believe in making the orchestra repeat passages until they play them by rote.

As one of his musicians remarked, “After all, if you were to repeat a speech, you wouldn't try always to repeat the same words or in exactly the same way. Your inflections might be different.”

Munch's major contribution to the Boston Symphony—other than maintaining the high standing it has enjoyed for decades—has been the addition of American works in his repertoire.

He is particularly devoted to the works of Aaron Copland, America's foremost composer, whose association with the Boston Symphony dates back to 1927. Copland is coming to Australia at Munch's invitation as a guest conductor to conduct some of his major compositions.

The American composer has little in common with the French conductor other than his dedication to music and the fact that the one, like the other, began his professional career in Paris at the age of 21.

In background and upbringing, however, the two men offer striking differences. In tastes, too: Munch likes the French cuisine; Copland is addicted to Chinese cooking.

Munch was born in a family devoted to the tradition of music making. Copland was born in Brooklyn in 1900 in a family of Russian migrants struggling to make ends meet.

When he was 11, Copland's elder sister began teaching him the piano, and by the time he was 15, he had decided he was going to become a composer no matter what.

Debussy and Ravel

He studied harmony, counterpoint and composition in New York for a few years, until he persuaded his parents to part with the family savings so that he could go away to pursue his studies in France.

He became the first student to enrol in the newly established Conservatoire American at Fontainbleau, where he came under the influence of the music of Debussy and Ravel. Of greater importance, however, was his association with Nadia Boulanger, the brilliant woman teacher who had had enormous influence on numerous composers of our time.

Home of the orchestra, Symphony Hall has an eight-column facade reminiscent of an Athenian theatre. Its three-tiered auditorium seats 2,631.

When he returned to the United States in 1924 he soon gathered an impressive number of “firsts.” He was the first American composer, whose first work—a Symphony for Organ and Orchestra — was performed by the New York Symphony Orchestra, with his former teacher, Miss Boulanger, as organ soloist.

He was the first composer to be awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship, and the first American to compose works not only for orchestra, but also for the ballet, opera, the stage and the screen.

Chinese restaurants

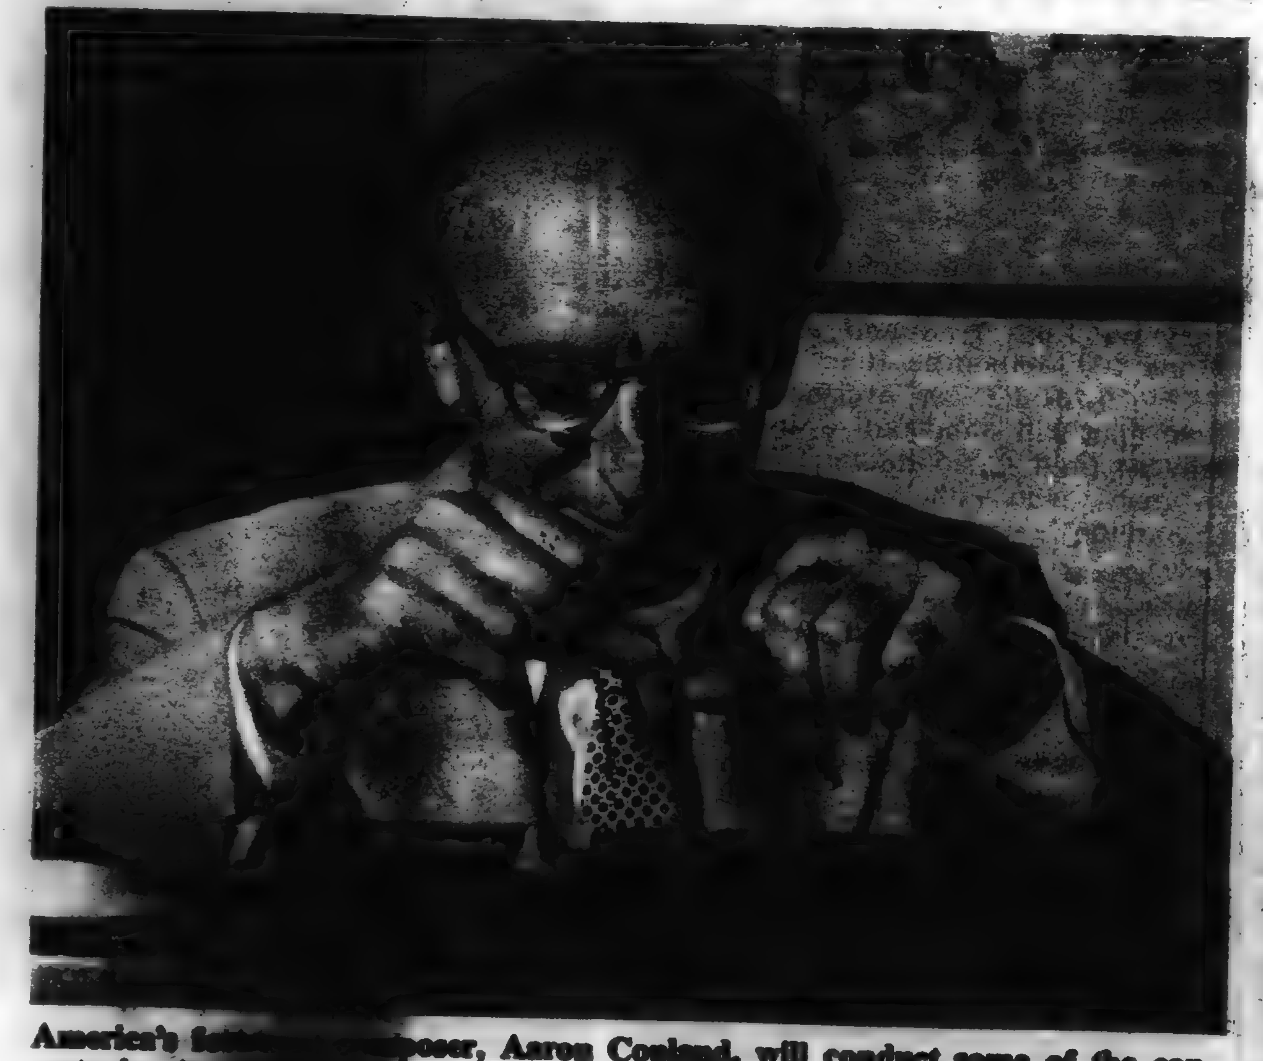
A bachelor, Copland now has more than 150 works to his credit and a great string of prizes, honours and awards of importance.

Copland's opera, “The Tender Land,” excerpts of which will be heard in Australia, has had several performances in the United States and has been recorded by the Boston Symphony under his direction.

In addition to the Boston Symphony which he first conducted, as Charles Munch's guest, in 1957, Copland has guest-conducted the symphony orchestras of New York, Washington, St. Louis and Chicago, as well as the major orchestras in England, Europe and Scandinavia, and in Central and South America.

Like Munch and the Boston Symphony, this will be Copland's first visit to Australia and New Zealand. “But,” says Copland, whose only hobbies are travel and music, “I hope in this jet age it won't be my last—that is if the Australians would like to have me back. I hear there are some good Chinese restaurants in Sydney.

“How does that potent Australian beer mix with lobster Cantonese?” he asks. #



America's [illegible]mposer, Aaron Copland, will conduct some of the concerts in A[illegible]rpts of his “The Tender Land” will be presented.

Three conductors spanned 41 of the orchestra's 79 years—Pierre Monteux (left), Serge Koussevitzky and Munch. Koussevitzky succeeded Monteux in 1924, Munch took over from Koussevitzky in 1949. Koussevitzky died in 1951.

128

From

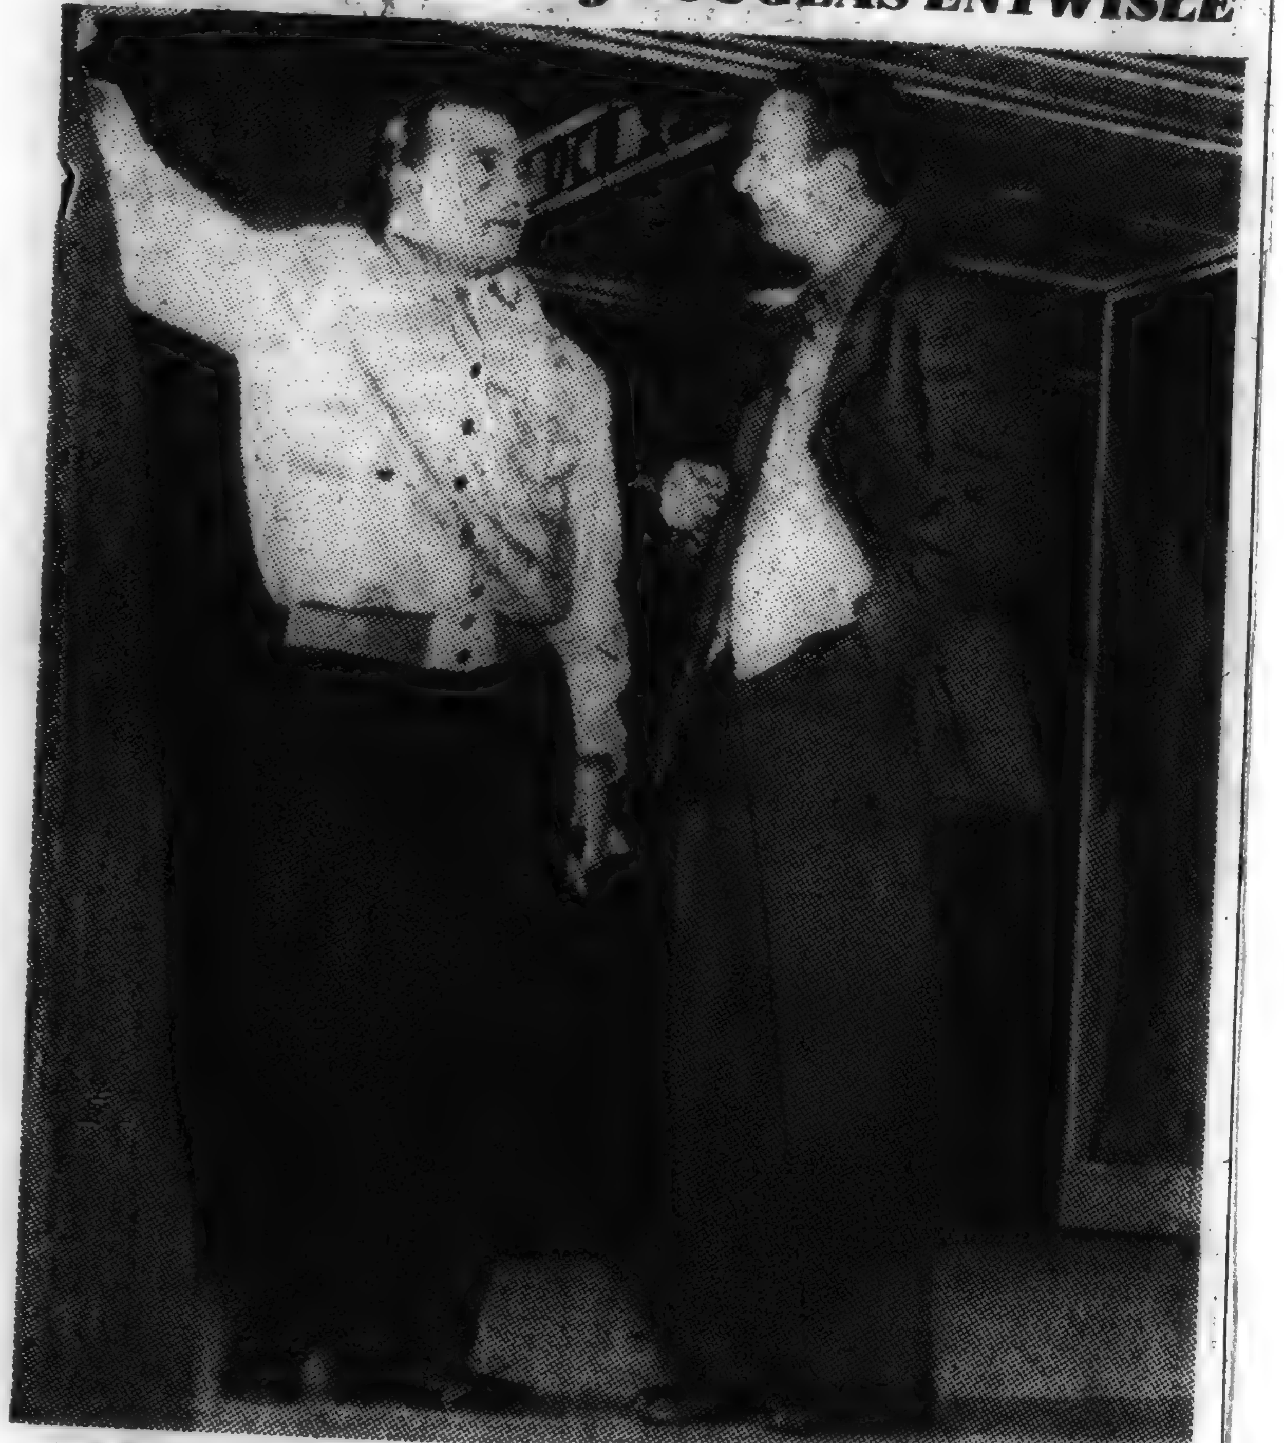
"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

2 JUN 1960

RECORD REVIEW

By DOUGLAS ENTWISLE



The late Jean Baptiste "Django" Reinhardt (above left) was one of the few Continental musicians to leave his mark on the jazz world and he was such a phenomenal artist that he achieved international standing as a guitarist although he had lost use of two fingers of his left hand as the result of a fire when he was 18. "Django Reinhardt" (Pye ILP1007) is set displaying his talent with two Quintets, neither the original, but groups in which his guitar shines. He wrote nine of the 14 tunes.

A cheap way into history

TO commemorate the coming visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra a special 12-inch LP of musical history has been issued at a very special price of 15/6!

This is easily the lowest price yet for such a record and, if you're interested in such a history which records can provide so well, it's a little money well spent. The disc's number is RCA SP12.

The disc traces the history of the orchestra from its earliest recording days under Karl Muck, through its noteable years under Serge Koussevitsky to today under Charles Munch and gives snippets of their records as illustrations.

Good editing

One of the neatest parts on the record is right at the end of side one where, by careful editing, the orchestra may be heard playing Berlioz' "Rakoczy March" as recorded in 1917 with Muck, 1940 with Koussevitsky and in 1954 with Munch.

Side two of the disc traces the story of the [illegible] Orchestra ([illegible] up from [illegible] Boston [illegible] their [illegible] conductor [illegible] Fiedler is heard speaking on several aspects of their activity.

One of the most interesting parts of this side is at the beginning, where [illegible] tells the story of how they came to make the spectacularly successful record of the tango "Jealousy."

Done in 1956

Actually the disc was produced for the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary in 1956.

England's current top comedian Tony Hancock gets on to the record shelves with a disc of two of his BBC "Hancock's Half-hours" (Pye, PLP-1039).

Hancock is for ever struggling against someone or something, and in these two shows, "Wild Man In The Woods" and "A Sunday Afternoon At Home," he tackles the cost of living, tourists, next-door neighbors and a dull Sunday.

Things sometimes get a bit confused, but although Tony doesn't always win, he does succeed in giving plenty of laughs. The

---

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

2 JUN 1960

Music fills every seat in 50 years

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives its first Australian concert in Brisbane on Monday night, has not played to an empty seat in the last 50 years.

The 63 concerts it gives every year in Boston (U.S.A.) itself are booked out long before each season begins.

Only a few seats are put aside for door sales to give students and young music-lovers a chance to hear the orchestra.

The Boston Symphony occupies a central place in its city's affairs.

Even the subway station nearest to the orchestra's own Symphony Hall is named Symphony.

Its players have the status of celebrities in smart society.

And Boston's music-lovers make private gifts of about 240,000 dollars a year to help keep the orchestra going.

Total cost of maintaining the orchestra is about £1 million a year.

Its current tour of Japan, Korea, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand is costing more than 500,000 dollars (£223,200).

The United States Government is paying for the tour out of a "cultural exchange" fund established by President Eisenhower.

The orchestra's programme for its Brisbane concert gives no chance to complain that we are being given small-town treatment.

Works chosen

It is exactly the same as the programme with which the Boston Orchestra opened its triumphant Russian tour in Moscow in 1956.

It consists of a standard classical work, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, a famous orchestral showpiece, Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2, and a contemporary American work, the Sixth Symphony of Walter Piston.

Directing the Brisbane concert will be the orchestra's chief conductor, Charles Munch (pronounced Moonsh), 68, successor to Serge Koussevitzky, Pierre Monteux, and other great names.

Munch, a skilled violinist, owed his first big chance as a conductor to his marriage to Genevieve Maury, a Swiss novelist and heiress to one of the founders of the Nestle company.

Paris success

His wife hired an orchestra and a hall for him in Paris. The concert was such a success that he acquired a reputation overnight.

He has been chief conductor of the Boston Orchestra, one of the most coveted posts in the musical world, since 1949.

Total travelling party for the Boston tour is about 120.

This includes more than 100 players, three conductors, a management staff of five, three stage hands, and a doctor.

Travelling with the orchestra is the distinguished American composer Aaron Copland.

His "El Salon Mexico" has been played in Brisbane.

FOOTNOTE: Fifty 42/6 seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Brisbane City Hall concert next Monday night are still unsold.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

30 APR 1960

SEVERAL recordings made by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival in America will be broadcast from 5CL at 8.45 p.m. on Tuesday.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in Mozart's "Prague" Symphnoy, and Pierre Monteux will conduct it in "L'Apres-Midi d'un Faune" (Debussy) and Introduction and Wedding March from "Coq d'or" (Rimsky-Korsakov).

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

3 MAY 1960

RECORDINGS made by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival in America will be broadcast tonight at 9.15 on 3AR.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

14 APR 1960 Auckland, N.Z.

TIGHT FIT FOR U.S. ORCHESTRA

The Auckland Town Hall was only just big enough to accommodate the 115-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra, said the advance tour manager, Mr W. J. Cox, who arrived in Auckland by air yesterday.

Mr Cox came to complete arrangements for a visit by the orchestra in June during a tour of the Far East and Australia. Two concerts will be given in New Zealand.

Mr Cox said the orchestra would arrive at Wellington on June 15 in three aircraft from Melbourne. They would present a concert there on June 16 and another in the Auckland Town Hall on June 17.

Baggage, including instruments, which would be carried in a special aircraft, would weigh more than nine tons. About 83 large trunks would be needed.

The visit by the orchestra is being sponsored by the New Zealand Broadcasting Service and is subsidised by the American State Department.

Mr Cox met the Mayor of Auckland, Mr D. M. Robinson, yesterday morning. A Mayoral reception and dinner party will be held for the orchestra before it leaves for the United States.

"I hope I get a seat by the window," said Mr Cox, as he rushed through Tasman Airways' booking office. "I haven't seen much of New Zealand as yet."

He left Auckland for Sydney at 1 p.m. on the first stage of his journey to Japan.

U.S. Composer Not Coming

Press Assn Wellington

The American composer Aaron Copland, who was to have appeared as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New Zealand, has had to cancel the arrangement.

The advance manager of the orchestra, Mr W. J. Cox, said in Wellington that, because of other commitments, Mr Copland would be unable to visit New Zealand with the orchestra.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

4 MAY 1960 Melbourne, Vic.

Herald, 4/5/60 — P.3

In BLACK and WHITE

QUITE a finger-cramping business trying to sort out some of these new telephone numbers. We dialled a UM number today and got a ghostly voice advising us to ring 013. Tried 013 and another voice told us to ring 5107.

Girl on 5107 told us to try the new phone book if we knew the name and address, or the old pink pages supplement.

We ran our number down eventually, but there's a new sense of adventure about all this dialling. One of these days we have a feeling a girl's sultry voice is going to answer, seductively drawling: "Oh, hullo, this is Elsa!"

★

SOME crate, this U.S. missile-carrying cruiser Helena (after the capital of Montana — pronounced "Montanna." Helena's equipped with 300 telephones, a hobby shop, soda fountain, television sets all over the place, and a library which includes all the latest American best-sellers, most of which haven't arrived in the bookshops here yet.

Engines develop 120,000 horsepower, and the ship's generators provide enough power to serve a city of 50,000 people. Should think they probably have just as many amenities in this ultra-modern warship as they do back home in Helena (pronounced Hell-'na).

★

CHARLES Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its second concert here — the one in the pool on June 14. Richard Burgin will be the conductor for the first concert, in the Town Hall on June 13.

American composer Aaron Copland may take over as conductor in other States, but he will not be heard in Melbourne.

★

ARREST of all those students earlier seemed to inspire Sydney university students to brighter efforts at the expense of the visiting U.S. sailors last night. Two attractive girl students lured two ratings of the USS Canberra to the University veterinary school, where they locked them in a dog kennel — and demanded a ransom of 1/ a head of officers and crew of the Canberra, for the students' Olympic team fund.

Another batch of male students bombarded the atomic submarine Halibut with 4d. rockets.

★

THIS changing Australia. Member asked one of the committeemen of the Beaumaris RSL branch if he could bring his friend Herman along to the club the other night. Explained Herman was all right. He'd served in the Middle East.

"Sure thing," said the committeeman. "What was his unit?"

Member's reply: "7th Panzer Regiment."

★

LIFE in Toorak goes on, even in 1960. Among today's "Houses, Land, etc." ads.: "Toorak. Most favored road . . . two-storey small mansion house of 14 rooms, including staff quarters, central heating, tennis court . . ."

Sounds quite a nice little shack for £45,000.

—E. W. Tipping

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

1 6 APR 1960

BOSTON ORCHESTRA MANAGER AT SHOW

The tour manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr William Cox, was an interested spectator at yesterday's contests in the Showground woodchopping arena.

"We have nothing like this in the States, although woodchopping competitions are held in some timber districts," Mr Cox said.

"They are not so well organised, however, or so efficiently conducted as this.

"Here you have colour, excitement, athletic skill and wonderful atmosphere."

Mr Cox said the various U.S. State fairs were "second-rate" compared with the Sydney Royal Show.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give seven concerts in Australia, including three in Sydney commencing in June.

Good Day For Tom Kirk

Mr Cox presented the winner's trophy and sash to champion axeman and sawyer Tom Kirk, of Mount Wilson, N.S.W., following Kirk's win in the final of the single handed 15-inch handicap sawing.

Kirk won in 32.9 seconds—well over his 1958 record of 27.7.

It was a good day for Kirk who had been surprisingly omitted from the Australian team which was beaten by New Zealand earlier this week.

Besides the sawing honors, he also won the final of the 12-inch log hard-hitting by one blow from Victorian Jack O'Toole.

He then took his heat of the championship standing cut on 15-inch timber.

O'Toole amazed officials by failing to gain a place in this heat—an event in which he was well favoured.

O'Toole should have tied with Kirk in the hard-hitting final.

However, his log split lengthwise as his last hit drew level with Kirk's main of 22.

This necessitated another light blow to completely sever his log.

Major placings in the thrilling handicap tree-felling final went to Tasmanians.

The three Youd brothers—Doug, Ray and Merv—were all competitors in this event and Mervyn won from the back mark of 70 seconds from Ray Shepherd, also of Tasmania, with Ray Youd third.

Mervyn Youd's time of 2 minutes 4½ seconds was excellent under the gusty conditions, although he failed to improve on his 1958 record time of 2m 2.2s.

The teams relay held in the main ring was won by N.S.W. captained by Ron Greentree, of Canowindra.

Today's woodchop events include tree-felling at 12.10 p.m. and several finals of championship axe and saw contests.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

WILLIAM J. COX, advance manager for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, flew in and flew out of town during the week-end. To help the acoustics at the Olympic Swimming Stadium, he plans to erect a large canopy over the conductor and orchestra.

On Saturday he visited the pool with Ray Humphrey, the ABC concert manager, and Arthur Winter, the ABC assistant manager. It was Garden Week and bless me, if they didn't have to pay 3/ to get in. How's that for educating an American! Bring him here to look at a hall for symphonic music that is a swimming pool full of flowers.

Burrelle's

ESTABLISHED 1888

BArclay 7-5371

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

165 Church Street – New York

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

MAY 21 1960

The Cash Box

AUSTRALIA

Falling in line with a similar move recently made by several other major labels, Mercury Records here have upped the retail price of their singles from 9/3d. to 1o/. (a shade more than one dollar) effective from the 1st May. The increase applies to Mercury, Clef, Verve, Astor and the Hi-Fi Record labels.

In a special promotion drive on their huge range of material by Mantovani, E.M.I. have declared "May is Mantovani Month." Mantovani is one of the best represented recording artists in this country, having thirty-three albums and fourteen EP's currently available in Australia. To support dealer efforts in their Mantovani campaign, E.M.I. have produced special Mantovani catalogues, a Mantovani/May calendar for use and display by retailers, multi-colored streamers, special Mantovani window display pieces, a wide range of LP and EP covers for dealer use and a press advertising campaign which covers all Australian states. This Mantovani sales action for the month of May is under the direct supervision of E.M.I.'s national record sales manager, [illegible]st.

With the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra scheduled for a concert tour of Australia in June, RCA Records are starting on a drive to promote records of the Orchestra—they already have seven albums on the market.

Frankie Davidson's new W & G single, which couples "I Care For You" and "You're Driving Me Crazy," is starting to make plenty of sales noise in each state. Davidson recently performed the number on Johnny O'Keefe's "Six O'Clock Rock" TV show which is shown in all the major states of this country. Ron Gillespie, top man with W & G, says he has high hopes for the release of "I Care For You" in several overseas countries, including the United States.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

4 MAY 1960 Melbourne, Vic.

Herald, 4/5/60 — P.3

In BLACK and WHITE

QUITE a finger-cramping business trying to sort out some of these new telephone numbers. We dialled a UM number today and got a ghostly voice advising us to ring 013. Tried 013 and another voice told us to ring 5107.

Girl on 5107 told us to try the new phone book if we knew the name and address, or the old pink pages supplement.

We ran our number down eventually, but there's a new sense of adventure about all this dialling. One of these days we have a feeling a girl's sultry voice is going to answer, seductively drawling: "Oh, hullo, this is Elsa!"

★

SOME crate, this U.S. missile-carrying cruiser Helena (after the capital of Montana — pronounced "Montanna." Helena's equipped with 300 telephones, a hobby shop, soda fountain, television sets all over the place, and a library which includes all the latest American best-sellers, most of which haven't arrived in the bookshops here yet.

Engines develop 120,000 horsepower, and the ship's generators provide enough power to serve a city of 50,000 people. Should think they probably have just as many amenities in this ultra-modern warship as they do back home in Helena (pronounced Hell-na).

★

CHARLES Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its second concert here — the one in the pool on June 14. Richard Burgin will be the conductor for the first concert, in the Town Hall on June 13.

American composer Aaron Copland may take over as conductor in other States, but he will not be heard in Melbourne.

★

ARREST of all those students earlier seemed to inspire Sydney university students to brighter efforts at the expense of the visiting U.S. sailors last night. Two attractive girl students lured two ratings of the USS Canberra to the University veterinary school, where they locked them in a dog kennel — and demanded a ransom of 1/ a head of officers and crew of the Canberra, for the students' Olympic team fund.

Another batch of male students bombarded the atomic submarine Halibut with 4d. rockets.

★

THIS changing Australia. Member asked one of the committeemen of the Beaumaris RSL branch if he could bring his friend Herman along to the club the other night. Explained Herman was all right. He'd served in the Middle East.

"Sure thing," said the committeeman. "What was his unit?"

Member's reply: "7th Panzer Regiment."

★

LIFE in Toorak goes on, even in 1960.

Among today's "Houses, Land, etc." ads: "Toorak. [illegible] favored road . . . [illegible]-storey small mansion [illegible] of 18 rooms, including staff quarters, [illegible] heating, tennis court."

Sounds quite a nice little shack for £45,000.

—E. W. Tipping

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

16 APR 1960

BOSTON ORCHESTRA MANAGER AT SHOW

The tour manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr William Cox, was an interested spectator at yesterday's contests in the Showground woodchopping arena.

"We have nothing like this in the States, although woodchopping competitions are held in some timber districts," Mr Cox said.

"They are not so well organised, however, or so efficiently conducted as this.

"Here you have colour, excitement, athletic skill and wonderful atmosphere."

Mr Cox said the various U.S. "State fairs" were "second-rate" compared with the Sydney Royal Show.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give seven concerts in Australia including three in Sydney commencing in June.

Good Day For Tom Kirk

Mr Cox presented the winner's trophy and sash to champion axeman and sawyer Tom Kirk, of Mount Wilson, N.S.W., following Kirk's win in the final of the single handed 15-inch handicap sawing.

Kirk won in 32.9 seconds —well over his 1958 record of 27.7.

It was a good day for Kirk who had been surprisingly omitted from the Australian team which was beaten by New Zealand earlier this week.

Besides the sawing honors, he also won the final of the 12-inch log hard-hitting by one blow from Victorian Jack O'Toole.

He then took his heat of the championship standing out on 15-inch timber.

O'Toole amazed officials by failing to gain a place in this heat—an event in which he was well favoured.

O'Toole should have tied with Kirk in the hard-hitting final.

However, his log split lengthwise as his last hit drew level with Kirk's main of 22.

This necessitated another light blow to completely sever his log.

Major placings in the thrilling handicap tree-felling final went to Tasmanians.

The three Youd brothers —Doug, Ray and Mervyn— were all competitors in the event and Mervyn won from the back mark of 70 seconds from Ray Shepherd, also of Tasmania, with Ray Youd third.

Mervyn Youd's time of 2 minutes 4½ seconds was excellent under the gusty conditions, although he failed to improve on his 1958 record time of 2m 2.2s.

The teams relay held in the main ring was won by N.S.W. captained by Ron Greentree, of Canowindra.

Today's woodchop events include tree-felling at 12.10 p.m. and several finals of championship axe and saw contests.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

[illegible]

WILLIAM J. COX, advance manager for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, flew in and flew out of town during the week-end. To help the acoustics at the Olympic Swimming Stadium, he plans to erect a large canopy over the conductor and orchestra.

On Saturday he visited the pool with Ray Humphrey, the ABC concert manager, and Arthur Winter, the ABC assistant manager. It was Garden Week and bless me, if they didn't have to pay 3/ to get in. How's that for educating an American! Bring him here to look at a hall for symphonic music that is a swimming pool full of flowers.

Burrelle's

ESTABLISHED 1888

BArclay 7-5371

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

165 Church Street – New York

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

MAY 21 1960

AUSTRALIA

Falling in line with a similar move recently made by several other major labels, Mercury Records here have upped the retail price of their singles from 9/3d. to 10/. (a shade more than one dollar) effective from the 1st May. The increase applies to Mercury, Clef, Verve, Astor and the Hi-Fi Record labels.

In a special promotion drive on their huge range of material [illegible] Mantovani, E.M.I. have declared "May is Mantovani Month." Mantovani is [illegible] the best represented recording artists in this country, having thirty-[illegible] and fourteen EP's currently available in Australia. To support dealer efforts in their Mantovani campaign, E.M.I. have produced special Mantovani catalogues, a Mantovani/May calendar for use and display by retail[illegible] multi-colored streamers, special Mantovani window display pieces, a wid[illegible] LP and EP covers for dealer use and a press advertising campaig[illegible] all Australian states. This Mantovani sales action for the mont[illegible] under the direct supervision of E.M.I.'s national record sales mana[illegible]st.

With the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra scheduled fo[illegible] tour of Australia in June, RCA Records are starting on a drive to pr[illegible] records of the Orchestra—they already have seven albums on the market.

Frankie Davidson's new W & G single, which couples "I Care For You" and "You're Driving Me Crazy," is starting to make plenty of sales noise in each state. Davidson recently performed the number on Johnny O'Keefe's "Six O'Clock Rock" TV show which is shown in all the major states of this country. Ron Gillespie, top man with W & G, says he has high hopes for the release of "I Care For You" in several overseas countries, including the United States.

180

The Sydney Morning Herald, Tues., April 12, 1960 11

MUSIC And THEATRES

Shakespeare For The Schools

By The "Herald" Music And Theatre Critics.

The Young Elizabethan Players will present two plays of Shakespeare to thousands of schoolchildren in N.S.W. and Queensland centres during an eight-month tour which began yesterday.

MISS MARSHALL

The Young Elizabethan—a professional company of young actors—is travelling in the Arts Council's mobile theatre.

They will present condensed versions of "Twelfth Night" and "Richard II" in N.S.W. and "The Merchant of Venice" and "Hamlet" in Queensland. These plays have been set for examinations this year.

The company will travel at least 8,000 miles, carrying with it lighting equipment, scenery, costumes and props.

It will play in the Sydney metropolitan area in May and April, in N.S.W. country centres in June, July and August, and in Queensland until November.

The company's first performance was at North Sydney Boys' High School yesterday.

Producer for the company is John V. Trevor, who has adapted the plays so that they can be performed in just over an hour, while preserving as much of the main threads of plot and verse as possible.

The tour has been organised by the Australian Elizabethan Theatre Trust and the Arts Council of Australia in association with the National Institute of Dramatic Art.

To cope with the demand for performances, a second company will also tour Victoria, South Australia and Tasmania this year.

* * *

AN interesting development in the forthcoming tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a possible announcement by conductor Charles Munch about scholarships for young Australian musicians to Tanglewood, Boston.

Tanglewood is a summer school catering for professional musicians. Its auditorium seats 5,000 and thousands more can sit in the grounds outside without the need for amplification.

During the course, classes in various branches of music are conducted: Charles Munch, for instance, takes the conducting class and Aaron Copland the class on composition.

Conductor Leonard Bernstein was for a period associated with Tanglewood, until other commitments forced him to give it up.

If the scheme eventuates, scholarships will be worth about £150.

It might be possible to arrange some sort of reciprocal scheme so that Australian and American students could be interchanged.

* * *

CANADIAN soprano Lois Marshall will have a busy time in Sydney during May and June.

In May, she will appear thrice with other soloists and and the Hurlstone Choral Society in Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony, conducted by Nicolai Malko.

Her two concerts at the Conservatorium in June will include "O Had I Jubal's Lyre" (Handel), "An Evening Hymn" and "Hark, The Echoing Air" (Purcell), some Schumann, Debussy, Duparc, Strauss and Samuel Barber.

The barber songs—"Rain Has Fallen," "Sleep Now" and "I Hear An Army"—are set to poems of James Joyce.

At a later recital Miss Marshall will include a bracket of seventeenth and eighteenth century English songs; several Schubert lieder; a Constanze aria from Mozart's "Il Seraglio;" and songs by Mahler, Debussy and Gounod.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

10 MAY 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra coming to BRISBANE . . .

From OLIVER HARVEY

SYDNEY. — A Cleveland (U.S.A.) journalist once wrote: "In Boston the leader of the orchestra is more important than the Mayor."

In Brisbane's City Hall on June 6, tall, sensitive, handsome Charles Munch, the leader — or rather, conductor — will open an Australia-wide tour with his world famous orchestra.

The 117-piece orchestra will be the first United States orchestra to visit Australia. The Australian Broadcasting Commission will manage its concerts in Australia.

Triumphs

Dr. Munch (pronounced "Moonsh") is the orchestra's 10th conductor in its 79-year-old life.

His appearances have invariably aroused critical acclaim, so much so that one critic described the orchestra's triumphs as "monotonous."

The Boston Symphony gave its first concert in October, 1881. It was founded by a music-loving banker, Henry Lee Higginson.

Higginson, destined by background for a solid Bostonian banking career, had in his youth a passionate fondness for music and went to Vienna to study the piano.

But while there he received an arm injury which ended his piano playing. So he returned to America and to banking.

By the age of 47 he turned his frustration over his permanently injured arm into assembling a symphony orchestra. He paid the orchestra's deficits every year until he died in 1919.

Higginson hired conductors, gave them a free hand, stood by them. His taste in music, like that of nearly all the American musical patrons of that period, was almost exclusively German.

But the turning point in the orchestra's history came in 1924. The Russian Serge Koussevitzky, a magic figure in Europe, began what was to be the longest term for a single conductor—25 years.

And under his stern, but benevolent rule, the Boston Symphony reached a peak of polished perfection.

American composers, subsidised and encouraged with commissions, had found a new home.

Koussevitzky won over the supposedly conservative Bostonians so effectively that the orchestra began to set the pace in up-to-dateness for other leading orchestras.

French

The names of the orchestra and its conductor (who died in 1951), seemed inseparable when, in 1948, he decided to retire. The trustees' choice then fell on Munch, one of France's foremost musicians who had been the conductor of four orchestras in Paris.

THE ORCHESTRA, IN DR. MUNCH'S WORDS IS NOW A PIONEER GROUP IN A PROGRAMME FOR CULTURAL EXCHANGE.

He took the orchestra on two world tours — in 1952, and again in 1956, when it became the first American symphony orchestra to perform in Russia.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

T. V. Week

Melbourne, Vic.

9 JUN 1960

World-famous BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, which will visit Australia as part of a Far Eastern tour, will be seen in a direct telecast from the Olympic Pool on ABV2 from 7.55 to 8.55 on Tuesday night, June 14. The item to be telecast will be "Symphonie Fantastique," under the baton of conductor CHARLES MUNCH.

181

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALiAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From "SUN-HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

22 [illegible] 1960

Price tumble for Boston LP

AUSTRALIA'S cheapest LP will go on sale next week—a recording of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A 12-inch platter with two full sides, it will be 15/6—about £2 below the usual price.

RCA are using the visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to stage the boldest promotion scheme yet seen among local record companies.

Are they throwing down the gauntlet to their traditional rivals, American Columbia, which recently bought a controlling interest in its Australian outlet, Coronet.

There's plenty of scope for competition — in the form of occasional low price inducements — among the record companies.

Not so much for the sake of the habitual record collector. He has shown in the past that he will happily pay through the nose for the disc he wants.

Price tumbling stunts could, however, produce new customers.

For the Boston Symphony record, the orchestra has waived performing royalties and mechanical rights payments—all in the interests of promotion.

At 15/6, fans will get the memorial disc made in America in 1956 to celebrate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the orchestra (RCA SP-12).

Historical gems from the orchestra's past are heard.

Serge Koussevitzky plays double bass on a rare recording of Beethoven's Minuet in G.

The orchestra's first recording, in 1916, is repeated on the disc.

In a composite track, we hear the Rakoczy March played by the 1917 orchestra led by Karl Muck, the 1940 orchestra under Koussevitzky, and the 1954 orchestra under Dr Charles Munch.

There is a narration by Milton Cross. The disc is the sort of thing to spur the interest of both the devotee and the record collector seeking a break from dreary hit-parade music.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

21 MAY 1960

N.Z. HERALD
(Auckland)
Circulation approx. 180,000
Auckland Province.

Expensive Music

Sir,—The price of 42s 6d for preferential bookings for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert is outrageously excessive.

If it be said that New Zealand audiences have to pay for the expense of bringing the orchestra here, the answer is that their stay should have been prolonged to allow more than two audiences in this country to hear them.

Nor should it be pleaded that if we want good music we must pay such a price for it. To hear the best British and foreign orchestras in the Royal Festival Hall in London it is possible to obtain good seats for less than 10s.

I have long objected to the preferential booking system as practised in Auckland. Unless one works or lives near Queen Street it is not possible to obtain seats for shows by any other method. This time the limit has been overstepped, and I shall leave others to enjoy the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

DAVID HUNT.

Otahuhu.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From "MERCURY"

Hobart, Tas.

21 MAY 1960

Boston

Page 22—The Saturday Evening Mercury, May 21, 1960

GOLDEN AGE OF SONG

Records
John Stafford reviews
the new discs

WE read constantly these days about the so called Golden Age of Singing, which is supposed to have been during the first decade of this century. It may be a coincidence that this was also the first significant period of the gramophone's history—though I would not care to hazard a guess that there is any connection between the two.

For that matter, I have no intention of starting a Caruso versus The Rest controversy, but my personal feeling is that the Golden Age of Singers is, in fact, the present.

It is more than 12 months since Sydney singer Joan Sutherland set London on fire with her portrayal of Lucia in Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor," and now at last we can hear why.

A Decca recording of operatic arias by Joan Sutherland which has just been released on mono and stereo has two excerpts from this opera, with arias by Verdi as well.

This is really great singing, youthful but mature, and should give devotees of the earlier Golden Age plenty to think about.

We have reason to be proud of the fast-growing tradition of Australian singers, and this latest addition should help to dispel the still existent feeling of inferiority when we talk about the "Arts." (Decca Mono LXTA [illegible] Stereo SXLA 2159).

SOME while ago I reviewed a Coronet record originating from Boston of music by Bach played by E. Power Biggs with orchestra — and very nice it was, too. One of the solo trumpets was played by Roger Voisin, who is, I believe, still a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From "MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

FOR PEOPLE who hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Stadium instead of in the Town Hall the compensation for harder seats is in better sound.

ABC officials who say they used the Czech orchestra as a guinea pig (this was the first orchestra to play in the Stadium) claim their technicians discovered that the hall was almost perfect acoustically.

Because of the large area of "air" in the Stadium and lack of curtains and seat cushions sound is not absorbed and lost.

* * *

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From "TELEGRAPH"

Brisbane, Qld.

27 MAY 1960

Concert People who do not have preferential booking rights probably will not be able to get seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert on June 6. The ABC would do the public a great favor if they televised this concert. Why keep it for a privileged few thousand? — E. N. (Taringa).

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635
MAY 28 1960

A 'Heavy' Symphony

The Boston Symphony Or~~chestra is going to tour in Australia in June, 1960.~~ It will use three aircraft for its 115 members plus nine tons of musical equipment, including 700 pounds of sheet music.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From "MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

27 MAY 1960

The Boston Concert

Sir,—The A.B.C. advertised ("Herald," May 24) a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Stadium, saying that for the Town Hall concerts tickets were sold out.

I could not believe my eyes, as these concerts were never advertised as being open for bookings, and I think I express the astonishment of thousands of disgusted music-lovers at the A.B.C.'s attitude. If their excuse is that season-ticket holders get first preference, why is it that for years I have tried in vain to obtain two season tickets and why doesn't the A.B.C. open another series of season tickets for the people who were unsuccessful 15 years ago?

E. LASLO.

Neutral Bay.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

24 MAY 1960
FREEDOM
(Wellington)
Circulation approx. 32,000
N.Z. National Party Weekly.

FREEDOM, TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1960

The world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will visit New Zealand for a two-concert tour in June, plays to a Leningrad audience during a recent Russian tour. On the podium is Charles Munch who will conduct the orchestra in its performances in this country.

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S N.Z. PROGRAMMES

The programmes chosen by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are so good that the joy of listening to them will lessen disappointment that this outstanding combination can perform only twice in this country.

At the Wellington concert, on June 16, the orchestra will present Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique", Dello Joio's "Variations Chaconne And Finale" and the "Baachus Et Arianne" of Roussel.

In Auckland, on the following night, Beethoven's glorious "Eroica" will be heard, as well as the "Symphony No. 6" by Piston and Ravel's "Daphnis And Chloe", second suite.

The orchestra's reputation exists in two dimensions. Seen from outside its home city it towers imposingly as one of the greatest instruments of artistc utterance developed by any civilisation. By contrast, from certain viewpoints within Boston, the orchestra is seen simply as a Boston institution, comparable to the public gardens and the codfish business. The citizens exercise a bland air of proprietorship about it.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by Major Henry Lee Higginson, a banker with a passionate attachment to music. He was 47 when he founded the orchestra, and paid its annual deficits till the year before his death in 1919.

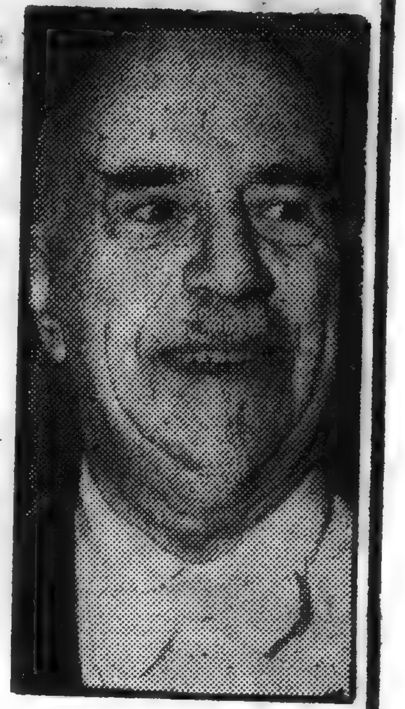
Just how far this dream of the major has travelled can best be reduced to lay terms by reporting that in Boston one of underground railway stations is named "Symphony."

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.
25 MAY 1960

MUSIC OF THE WEEK

By Frank Harris



BEECHAM . . . lollipops master.

Armenian-born Aram Khachaturian is one of those odd examples of a composer who showed no early talent for, nor interest in music.

Although he came from a race said to have "a sixth sense" for music, he didn't look sideways at a wandering crochet until he was 19 when he marched round to the studio of Gnesis, student of Rimsky-Korsakov, pounded on the door and clamored, "I want to be a composer."

Just how he came to that big decision still seems much of a mystery.

Fortunately Gnesin realised that even if the urge had come pretty late, it was none the less genuine, and he started Khachaturian on the career which led to world fame with his ballet suites and the Piano and Violin Concertos.

Excitement

The main characteristics of the Khachaturian Piano Concerto are, a whip-lash violence in the cliamactic passages, as well as a generous out-pouring of exotically - aired romantic passages, based on unusual Armenian rhythms—just the thing for staid Englishmen who have always loved it.

An intriguing touch is in the slow movement part for the flexatone, a sort of "musical saw" which produces a whimpering, whistling tone.

Pianist Mindru Katz, who put a wallop into his recent recording of the Beethoven Emperor, serves this music brilliantly on a Pye recording, in which the Khachaturian Concerto is coupled with the Prokofieff Concerto No. 1. Sir Adrian Boult conducts the London Philharmonic. Bright sound adds to the exhilaration of the music.

★ ★ ★

It is depressing to see that the new R.C.A. disc (12in.) by violinist Heifetz has for its No. 1 side the Mendelssohn Concerto, now approaching a sickening point of repetition, but exciting to find that, instead of the usual flip recording of the Bruch, Paganini or Saint-Saens Concertos, it is tied in with the Prokofieff Concerto No. 2.

Things seem to be looking up since Oistrakh featured Prokofieff during his visit here. Heifetz seems to agree. His Mendelssohn is a slick so-so job; his Prokofieff is inspired, with a sharp, cutting edge to the lyricism that gives it a diamond brightness.

★ ★ ★

A Musical History of the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops (RCA 12in) is a frankly promotional discs for the visit of the Boston Symphony. Price is cut to 15/6, and it's full of those irritating snippets of music. Yet the laugh is it could become a collector's piece because the narration telling the history of the orchestra is tied in so much with the history of recording, dating back to 1917 when they made "the first experimental recording of a great orchestra," with the players dying in a heat of over 100 degrees, and soloists obliged to dash from their seats and play into a special horn . . . Quite a fascinating fifteen bobs' worth.

★ ★ ★

Organ Concert, with Austin C. Lovelace at the pedals, is another of those stereo Concert-Discs from Concertapes Inc. in which the accent, unfortunately, is on sound brilliance. It's a lopsided accent, for instance, in this case where an appealing recital program of Bach, Schroeder, D'Aquin, and Peeters, is jazzed up in second rate style. Sound, of course, is tops, if you want just that. Careless packaging puts the disc in a fully-sealed packet, with a list of works showing (most of them in German) but not a word to Bessie about the composers.

Enthusiasm

Lollipops Beecham waves an enthusiastic baton with the Royal Philharmonic again for Coronet's Beecham Encores (12in.), in a round-up of Berlioz "Trojans" music, the Sibelius Karelia march and Tempest Suite music, and the Rimsky - Korsakov Coq D'Or march. Trust Beecham, too, to fossick out such a charming introductory novelty as Massenet's Sleep of the Virgin. Sound bright, and enthusiasm infectious.

★ ★ ★

Stereo is a setting worthy of the magnificent voice of soprano Eileen Farrell. Coronet's stereo reissue of Arias in the Great Tradition (12in) gives added dramatic intensity to a record that was impressive even in its mono form. Arias from Beethoven's Fidelio, Weber, Gluck and Cherubini (Medea) — all "big" numbers. Max Rudolf conducts.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

27 MAY 1960

What People Value

THREE HUNDRED well-known Melbourne people have been asked to select their most cherished possession to be displayed at an exhibition in the Myer Mural Hall annexe to aid the Royal Children's Hospital building appeal. The "cherished possessions," however, cannot include their spouse, their children or their pets.

Among the articles to be shown are many lovely pieces of silver from the period of George II and George III, old laces, the running shoes worn by Herb Elliott when he ran his record mile, a racing print of Ascot in the last century, a tiny model cannon and a small, rare Chinese fete rug.

A beaten silver cup, presented to Dame Nellie Melba by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be displayed by Mrs. N. McPherson Smith.

The Speaker of the Legislative Assembly (Sir William McDonald) will lend the Speaker's wig which has been worn for the past 50 years.

Sir Charles Lowe's cherished possession is a gold sovereign case he won for debating as a young man.

The exhibition was the idea of Mrs. T. O. M. Edwards, a member of Mrs. Henry Bolte's committee working for the appeal.

Following a private viewing on the morning of Monday, May 30, the exhibition will be open to the public from 1 p.m. that day until June 4.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

2 6 MAY 1960

THE COURIER-MAIL THURSDAY MAY 26 1960 23

Queued at dawn

GOOD seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in the City Hall on June 6, are still available, although people began queueing at 4.30 a.m. yesterday to book seats.

A special preferential booking period for A.B.C. Celebrity and Youth series subscribers began yesterday morning, and 250 people were queued in Queen Street when the box office opened at Palings at 8.15 a.m., half an hour early.

People were still waiting for bookings at midday, but an A.B.C. spokesman said they slackened in the afternoon.

Bookings for the general public will open next Wednesday, but it is not likely that any seats will be available.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Brisbane, Qld.

25 MAY 1960

Boston queue party

SOME QUEUED 7 HOURS FOR SEATS

People queued in Queen Street for seven hours today to booke seats for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in the City Hall on June 6.

The first arrival, at 4.30 a.m., was Mr. T. E. Hambling, of Homestead Street, Moorooka. Picture ↑ shows him (right) heading the queue.

At 7.30 a.m. more than 200 people had formed a queue from Palings to George Street.

Many sat on portable chairs, drank tea from vacuum flasks and ate sandwiches as they waited for the box office to open at 8.30 a.m.

At 11.30 the queue still stretched almost to George Street.

At 12.30 p.m. it had disappeared, but more than 50 were still crowded around the box office counter seeking seats.

Seats are still available

An ABC spokesman said this morning that 2300 preferential seats were available today for subscribers to the ABC's celebrity and youth series.

A Palings spokesman said this afternoon that seats were still available.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will arrive in Brisbane on June 5 and will give only one concert.

It will be the first Australian appearance following a tour of the Far East.

The orchestra consists of 115 members, including four women. It is carrying eight tons of equipment and is travelling in three specially chartered planes.

In Brisbane they will present Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, Piston's Symphony No. 6 and Ravel's Suite Daphnis and Chloe No. 2.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

27 MAY 19

Many queue to buy seats

People queued today for n extra 300 tickets at 10/6 ach for the concert by he Boston Symphony Or-hestra on June 11.

The extra seats were ade available when the original 2,700 seats were ooked outi n three days.

Some seats are still vailable at Allan's.

REDUCTION
RATIO
16x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

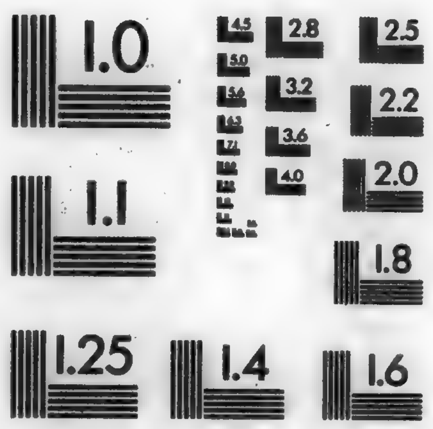
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

A5

A4

A3

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

184

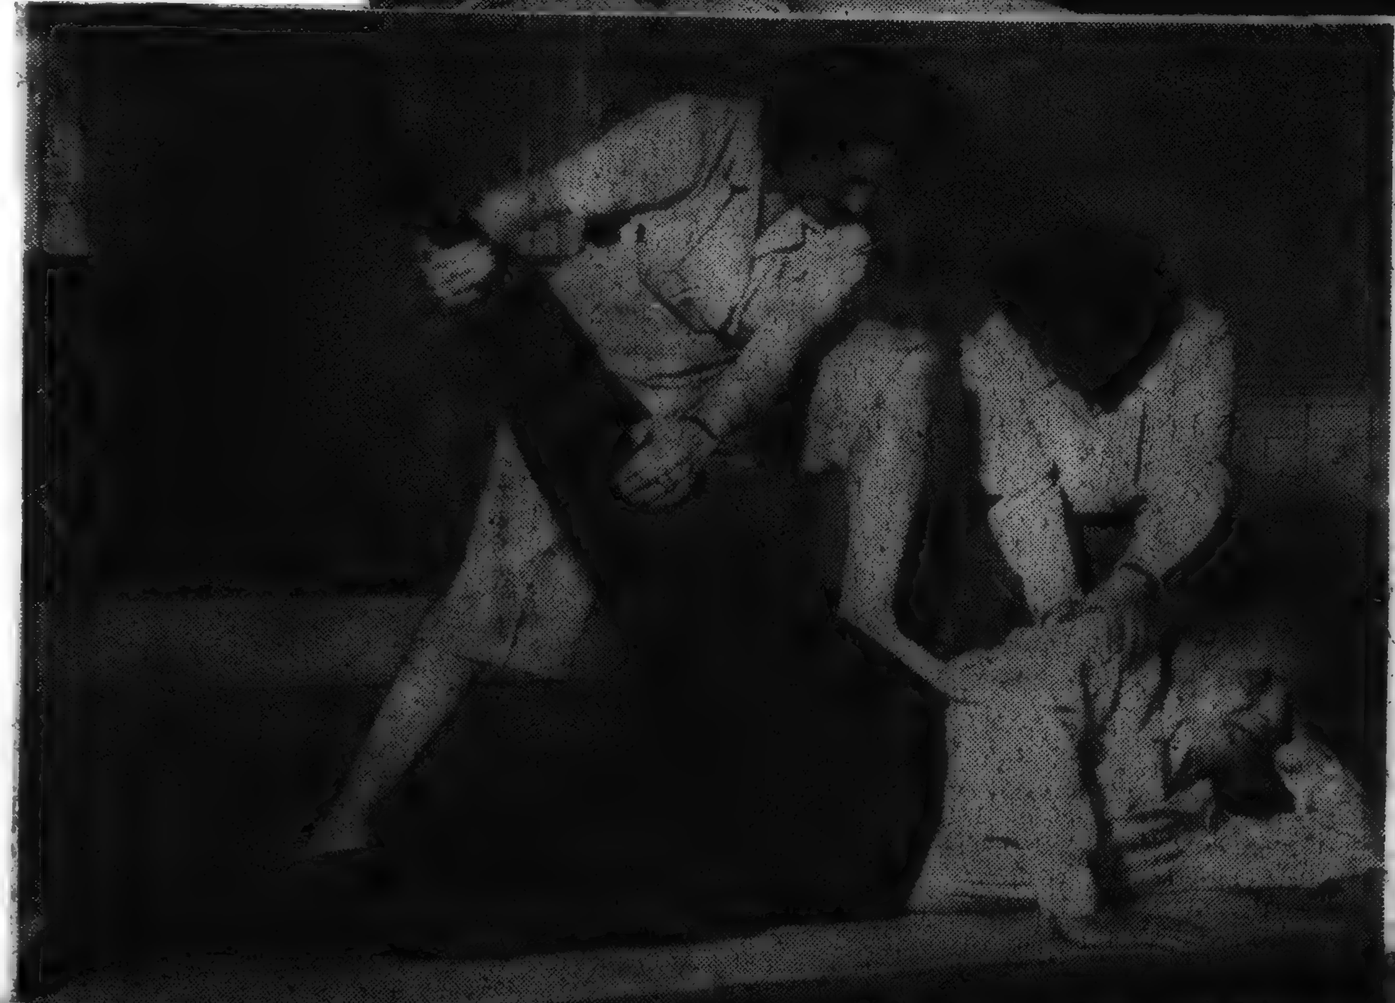
Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

2 6 MAY 1960

The Boston S. O. In Hours Of Ease



Dr Munch's housekeeper, CECILE, pours sherry. The conductor watches his diet carefully, and never drinks wine with his meals on concert days. "Imagine a conductor at work with a stomach-ache or a cold!" he says. "He loses a large part of his powers. He muddles through to seek the comfort of an armchair and aspirin or bicarbonate of soda."

Left:

DR MUNCH takes great care of his health, and believes in exercise. Here he is relaxing, being assis- [illegible]tching exercise.

MR and MRS MICHEL SASSON practising scales. Mr Sasson is the son of French parents, and was a child prodigy. He played in small chamber music groups in France, England and Egypt. His wife is working for her bachelor's degree in music, and teaches the violin. Right: Even when bers of the Symphony they are not playing in concerts, the mem-Orchestra like to play "for fun," and to entertain themselves and each other. MR and MRS AYRTON PINTO, both Mexicans, play South American ballads on their guitar.

Below:

When the orchestra is travelling between engagements chess is one of the most popular games for passing the itme. Here MR and MRS ANTHONY AMBROGIO Junr. aim for a checkmate.

OLIVIA LUETCKE, the orchestra's harpist, is often hidden from the audience's view. However, her size means that, after the concert, she can step inside her harp case and use it for a private dressing-room. On one occasion, a well-meaning person slammed and locked the door of the harp-case with Miss Luetcke inside it. She had the key, and the lock had to be forced to release her.

When The Music Is Over . . .

IF WE THOUGHT about it at all, after the spell-binding sounds have melted into air, some of us would probably see a great orchestra as a sort of collection of magicians.

Magicians who capture or create sounds that tell us of beauty beyond our own imagining, sounds that toss and tumble us in thunderous oceans of feeling we would never brave alone.

By the time the spell is ended, when the golden bubbles and curves of sound have died away in our minds, and our feet are back on the floor again, the music-makers are usually back in their drrssing-rooms, putting away their instruments.

Then, of course, they become once more mortal men and women like ourselves, neither more interesting nor less.

And just like ourselves, the music-makers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have a wide variety of spare-time interests, and follow many different roads to relaxation.

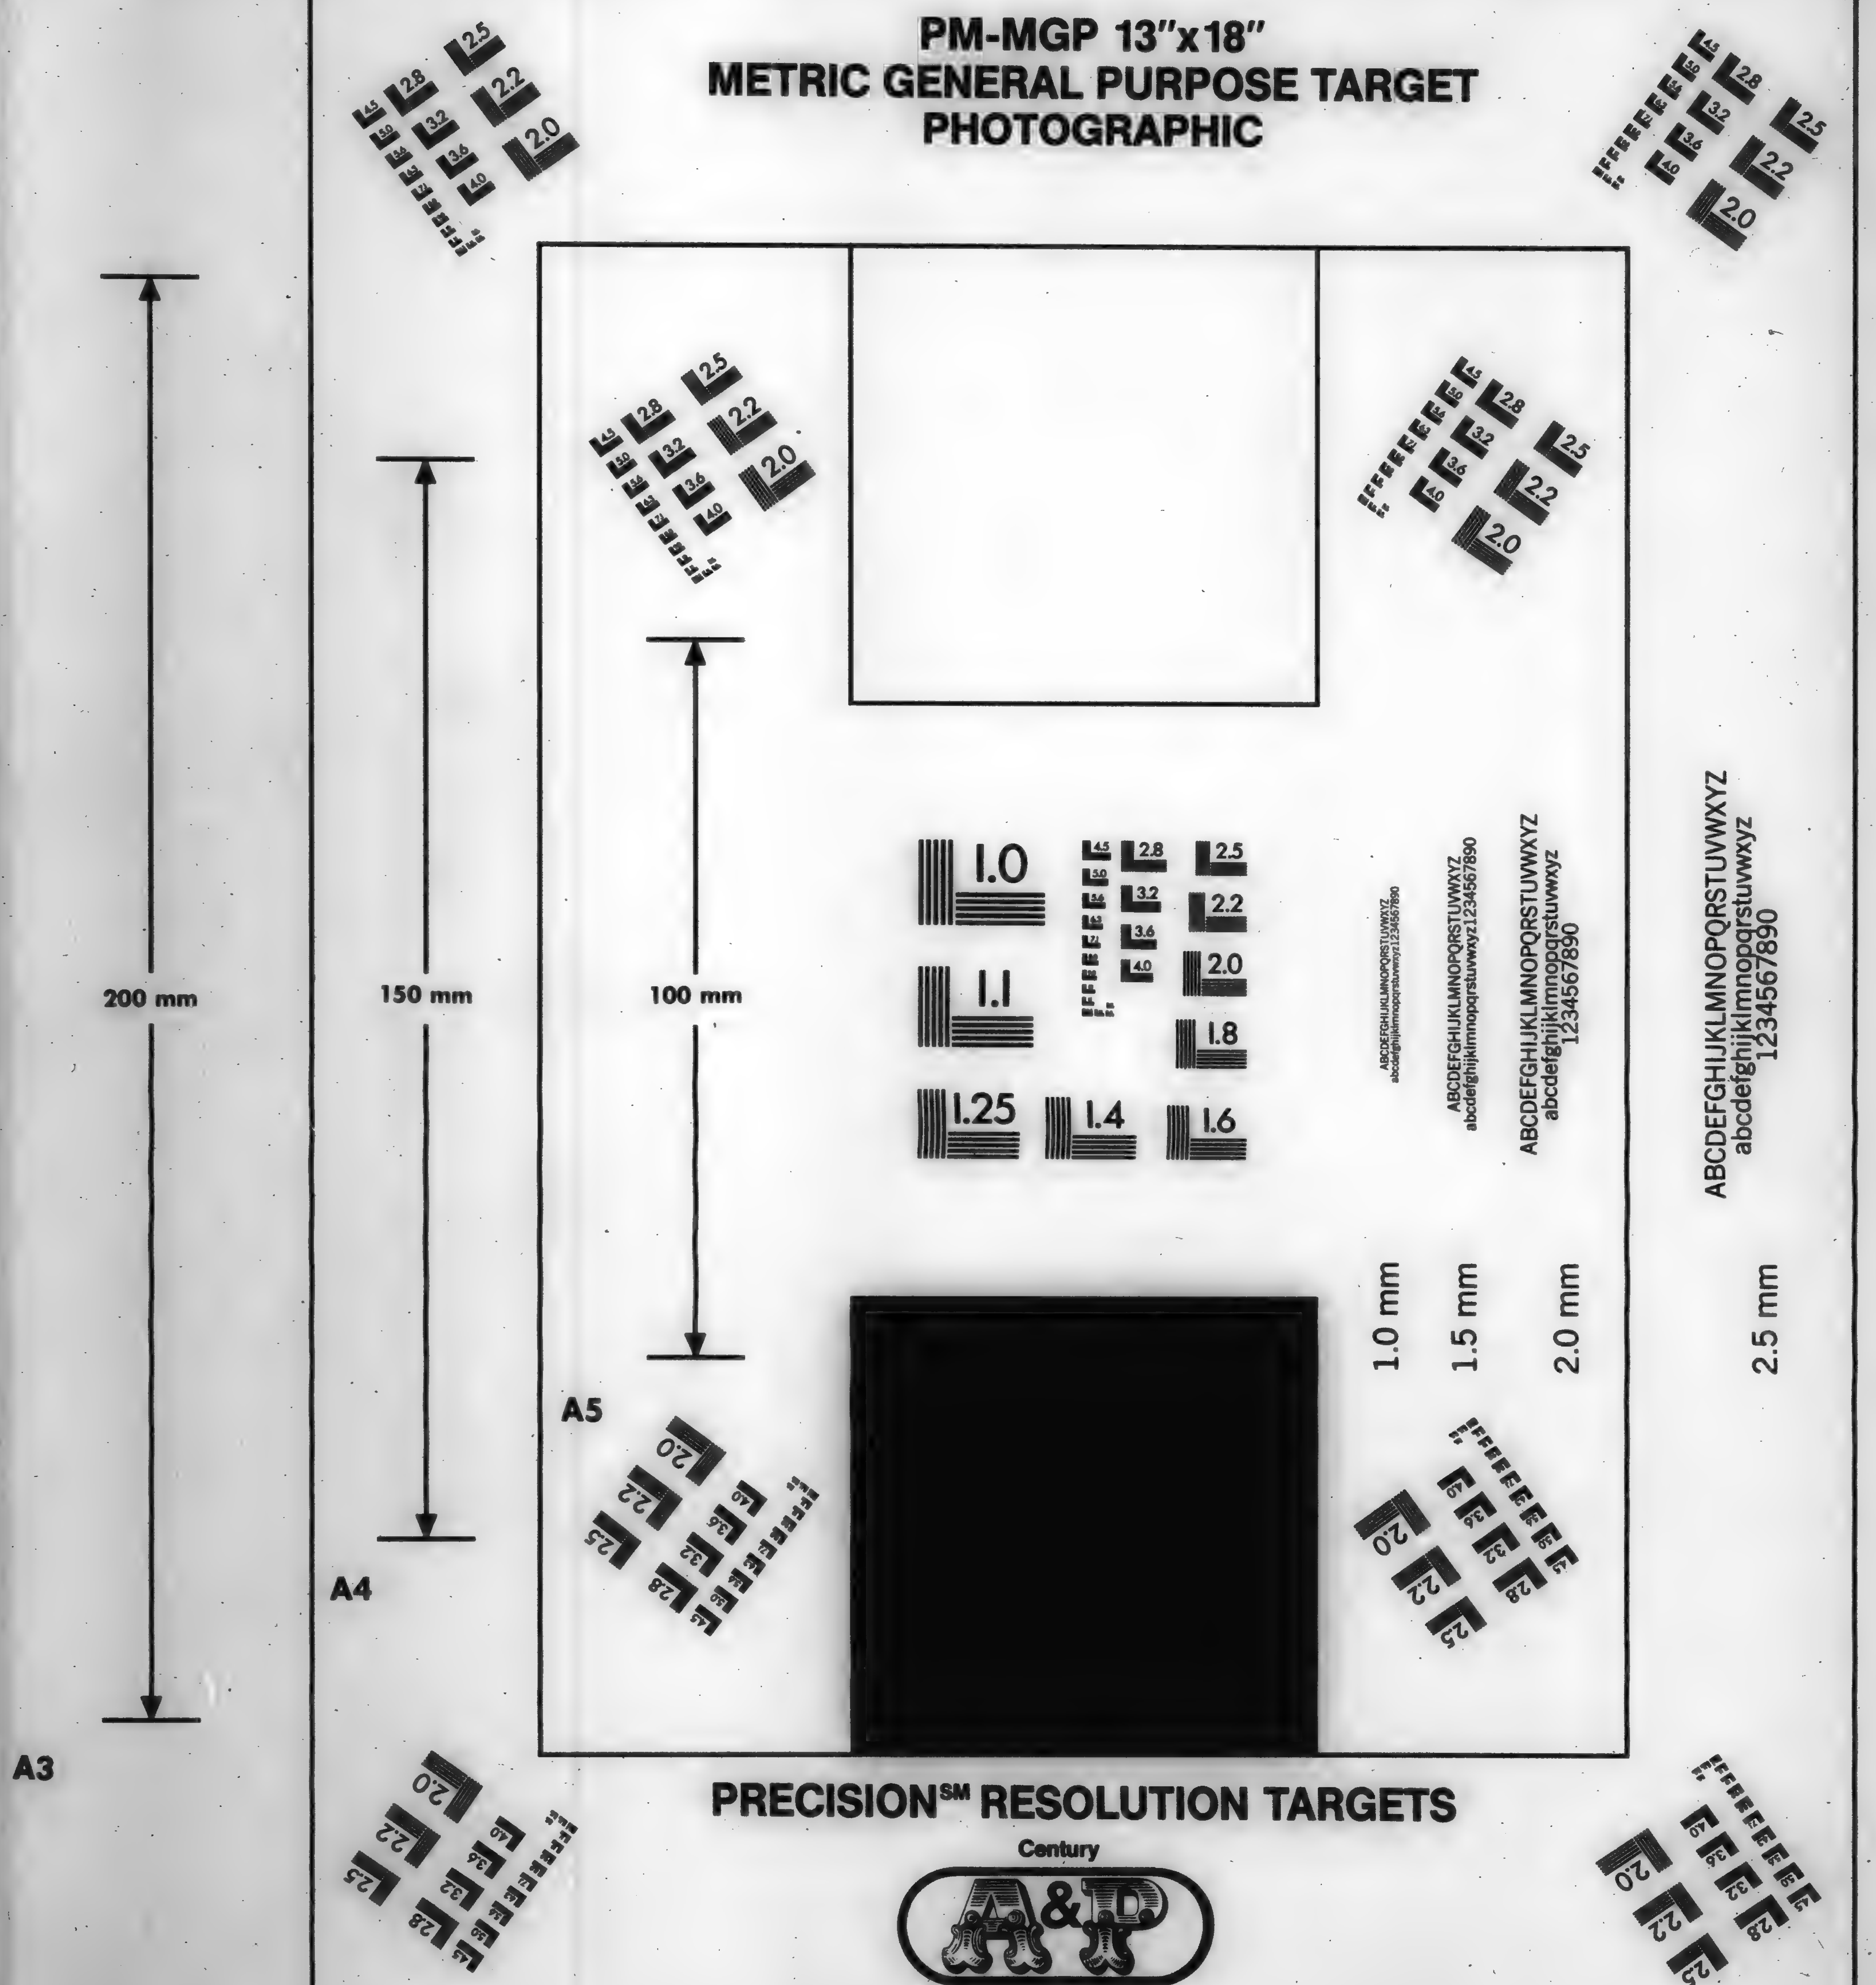
Conductor Munch sometimes relaxes on the floor, and does exercises. Trombonist Josef A. Orosz (he was once a player in a Hungarian Gipsy band) haunts instrument-makers in search of old instruments to add to his collection. Clarinetist Rasario Mazzeo is a bird-watcher.

When Mrs Olivia Hall Luetcke puts her harp back in its case she probably begins to wonder what the puppies are doing at home, because she and her daughter breed Chihuahuas.

And violinist Ayrton Pinto finds relaxation in listening to his wife play South American music.

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

26 MAY 1960

Bost

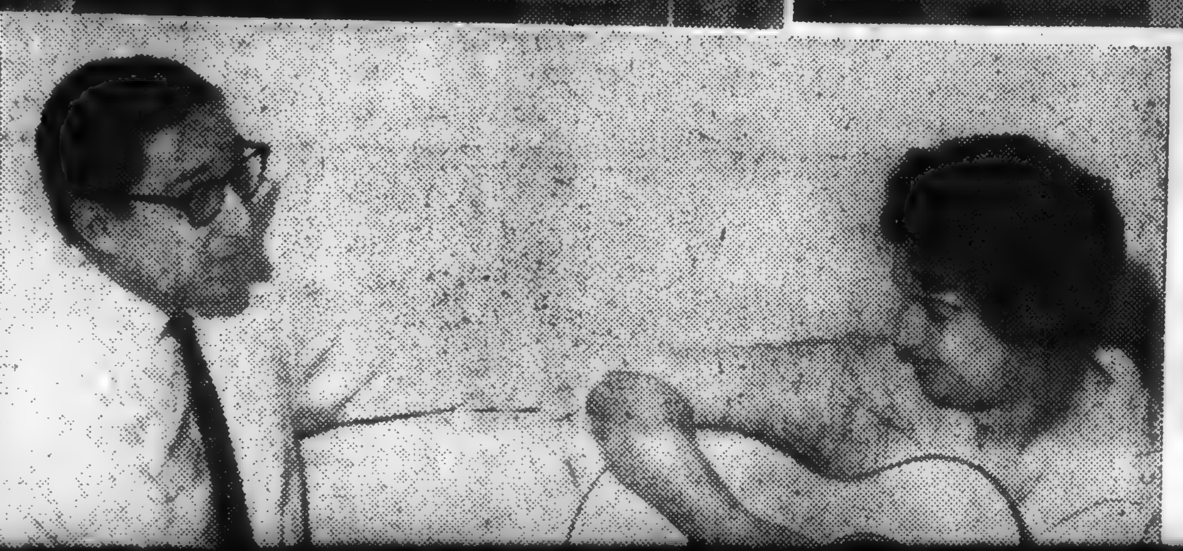
The Boston S. O. In Hours Of Ease

Dr Munch's housekeeper, CECILE, pours sherry. The conductor watches his diet carefully, and never drinks wine with his meals on concert days. "Imagine a conductor at work with a stomach-ache or a cold!" he says. "He loses a large part of his powers. He muddles through to seek the comfort of an armchair and aspirin or bicarbonate of soda."

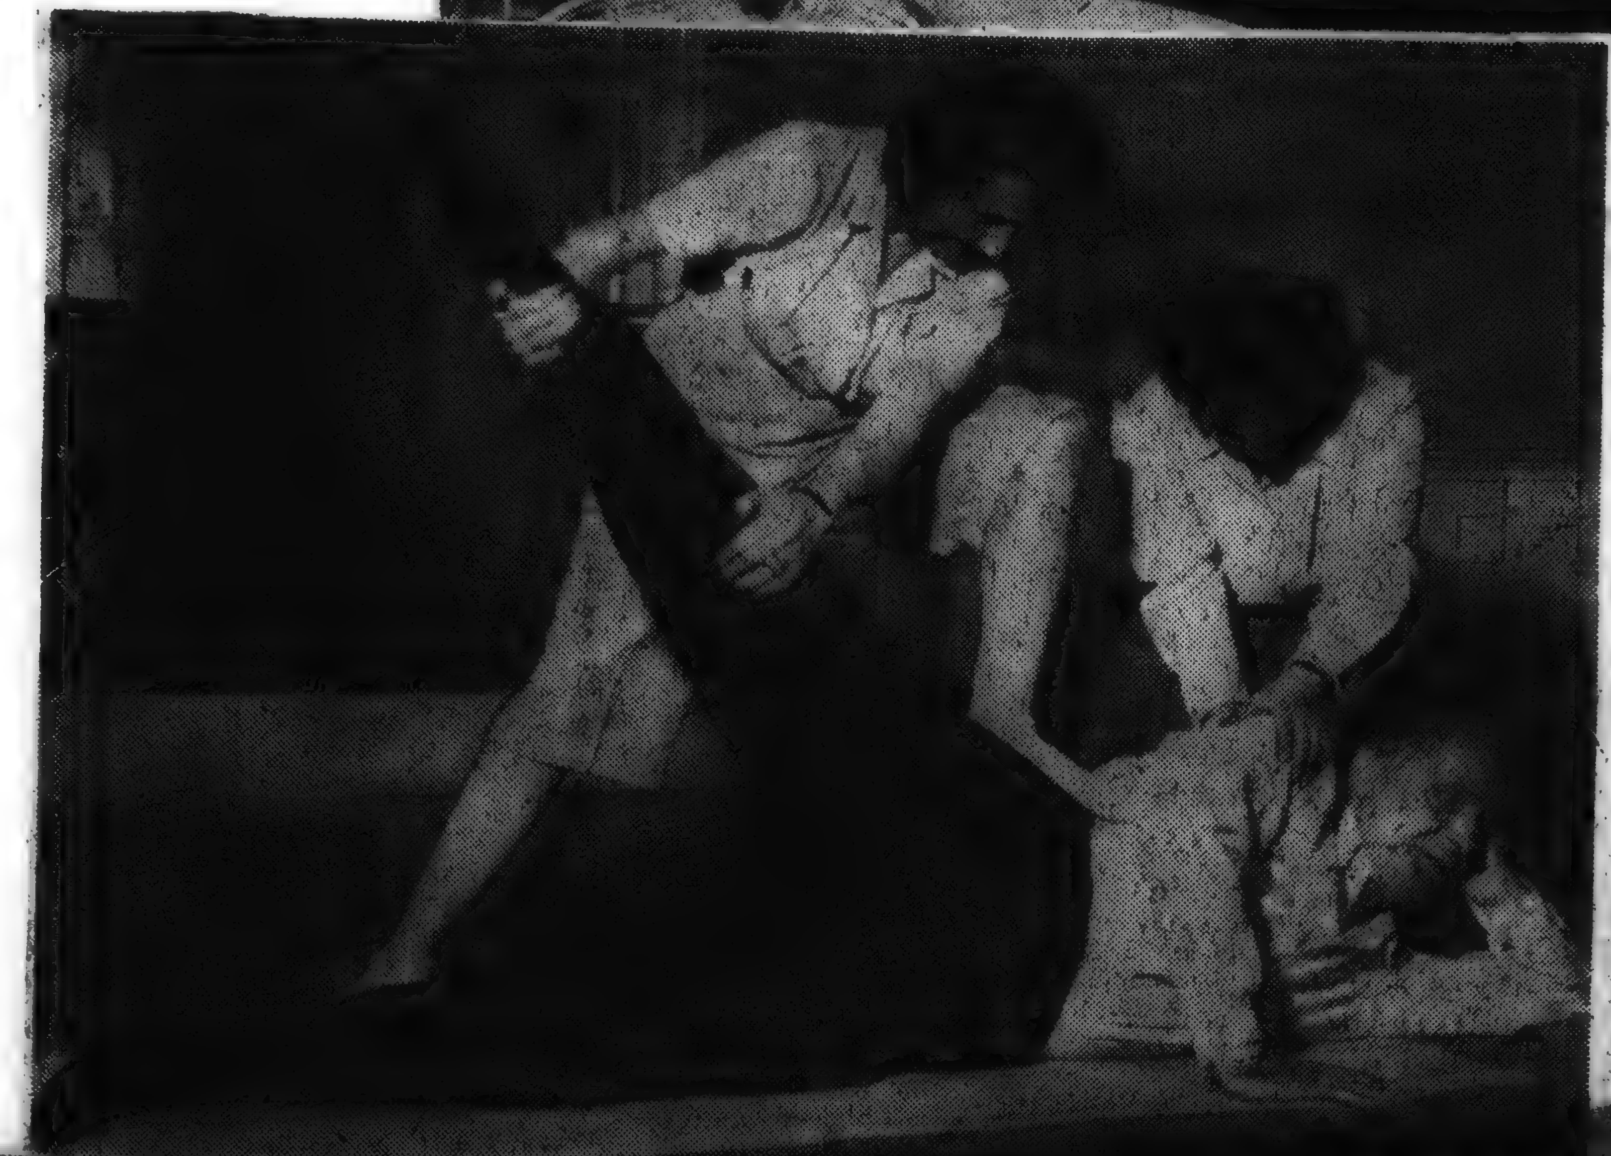
Left:

DR MUNCH takes great care of his health, and believes in exercise. Here he is relaxing, being assisted [illegible] stretching exercise.

MR and MRS MICHEL SASSON practising scales. Mr Sasson is the son of French parents, and was a child prodigy. He played in small chamber music groups in France, England and Egypt. His wife is working for her bachelor's degree in music, and teaches the violin. Right: Even when bers of the Symphony they are not playing in concerts, the mem-Orchestra like to play



OLIVIA LUETCKE, the orchestra's harpist, is often hidden from the audience's view. However, her size means that, after the concert



Dr Munch's housekeeper, CECILE, pours sherry. The conductor watches his diet carefully, and never drinks wine with his meals on concert days. "Imagine a conductor at work with a stomach-ache or a cold!" he says. "He loses a large part of his powers. He muddles through to seek the comfort of an armchair and aspirin or bicarbonate of soda."

Left:

DR MUNCH takes great care of his health, and believes in exercise. Here he is relaxing, being assis- [illegible] exercise.

MR and MRS MICHEL SASSON practising scales. Mr Sasson is the son of French parents, and was a child prodigy. He played in small chamber music groups in France, England and Egypt. His wife is working for her bachelor's degree in music, and teaches the violin.

Right: Even when bers of the Symphony they are not playing in concerts, the mem- Orchestra like to play "for fun," and to entertain themselves and each other. MR and MRS AYRTON PINTO, both Mexicans, play South American ballads on their guitar.

Below:

When the orchestra is travelling between engagements chess is one of the most popular games for passing the itme. Here MR and MRS ANTHONY AMBROGIO Junr. aim for a checkmate.

OLIVIA LUETCKE, the orchestra's harpist, is often hidden from the audience's view. However, her size means that, after the concert, she can step inside her harp case and use it for a private dressing-room. On one occasion, a well-meaning person slammed and locked the door of the harp-case with Miss Luetcke inside it. She had the key, and the lock had to be forced to release her.

When The Music Is Over ...

IF WE THOUGHT about it at all, after the spell-binding sounds have melted into air, some of us would probably see a great orchestra as a sort of collection of magicians.

Magicians who capture or create sounds that tell us of beauty beyond our own imagining, sounds that toss and tumble us in thunderous oceans of feeling we would never brave alone.

By the time the spell is ended, when the golden bubbles and curves of sound have died away in our minds, and our feet are back on the floor again, the music-makers are usually back in their drrssing-rooms, putting away their instruments.

Then, of course, they become once more mortal men and women like ourselves, neither more interesting nor less.

And just like ourselves, the music-makers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have a wide variety of spare-time interests, and follow many different roads to relaxation.

Conductor Munch sometimes relaxes on the floor, and does exercises. Trombonist Josef A. Orosz (he was once a player in a Hungarian Gipsy band) haunts instrument-makers in search of old instruments to add to his collection. Clarinetist Rasario Mazzeo is a bird-watcher.

When Mrs Olivia Hall Luetcke puts her harp back in its case she probably begins to wonder what the puppies are doing at home, because she and her daughter breed Chihuahuas.

And violinist Ayrton Pinto finds relaxation in listening to his wife play South American music.

185

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

28 MAY 1960

Famous Thriller To Be Heard Again

RADIO GUIDE . . . by EUGENE LUMBERS

THE classic thriller, "Night Must Fall," will be broadcast from 5CL at 3.30 p.m. tomorrow.

This play by Emlyn Williams tells the story of Danny, a young, illiterate Welshman with great natural charm and a way with women, who uses these gifts as a means to murder.

The author shows the workings of Danny's mind as he conceals one murder and plots another.

Yet the play has a leavening of humor, along with its analysis of behaviour, its melodrama and thrills.

▲ ▲ ▲

"WORLD Without End," by J. B. Warner, a drama of people surviving a nuclear explosion and becoming the only life left on earth, will be broadcast from 5AN at 7.30 p.m. in "Monday Night Theatre."

Five men who man a weather station in the Arctic, protected by the thick mass of ice and snow which covers their hut, survive a nuclear blast which destroys all other life.

The story deals with their reaction as individuals to the catastrophe.

▲ ▲ ▲

"THE Door of Opportunity" is the Somerset Maugham story chosen by 5AD for presentation in "Theatretime With Somerset Maugham," to be heard at 7.30 p.m. on Wednesday

It deals with a District Officer in Malaya suddenly faced with the need to make a dramatic decision.

▲ ▲ ▲

"MEDICAL File," a new series of half-hour dramas based on case histories of leading hospitals and research centres, will begin from 5 AD at 8 p.m on Wednesday.

The first story in the series deals with smallpox.

▲ ▲ ▲

A description of the running of England's racing classic, the Derby, will be broadcast from 5CL at 7.10 a.m. on Thursday.

▲ ▲ ▲

THERE will be a number of interesting musical presentations from national stations next week.

Recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of its performance of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathetique," and Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 at the 1959 Berkshire Festival in America will be broadcast from 5AN at 1.30 p.m. on Monday.

Recently received by the ABC, a recording of works by contemporary Israeli composers played by the Kol Israel Orchestra (the orchestra of the Israel broadcasting organisation) will be heard from 5AN at 8.45 p.m. on Tuesday.

This programme will include "Psalm" from Symphony No. 1 by Paul Ben-Haim, conducted by Karel Salomon. Josef Kaminski will conduct his own "Ballad for Harp and Orchestra," with Klana Sarvis as the harpist.

Heinz Freudenthal will conduct "Pastoral and Dance," from Symphony No. 1 by Shlome Joffe.

The recordings were supplied to the ABC by Kol Israel.

A recording of Mendelssohn's "Concerto for Two Pianos," made at the 1959 Mendelssohn Festival in Germany to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the birth of the composer, will be broadcast from 5AN at 6.45 p.m. on Wednesday.

The pianists are Dieter Zehlin and Gunter Kootz, who perform the work with the Radio Berlin Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Rolf Kleinert.

The recording was sent to the ABC by the German Democratic Radio.

The Mexican National Symhony Orchestra made concert history at London's Festival Hall in September, 1958, when it was called upon to repeat an item immediately after playing it.

A recording of the concert was made by the BBC and will be broadcast from 5AN at 8.30 p.m. on Wednesday.

The four works played are by contemporary composers who were born in Mexico or lived there.

Two items, "Homage to Garcia Lorca" and Symphonic Suite, "Fishing Nets," are by Silvestre Revueltas, who was an important figure in the musical life of Mexico and taught at its National Conservatorium after a period of cultural work in Spain during the Civil War.

The symphony orchestra of Hessischer Rundfunk in Frankfurt will play Praeludium and Fugue Op. 36 by a contemporary German composer, Walter Braunfels, who died in 1954, from 5AN at 10 p.m. on Thursday.

An orchestra on the move

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra members had really been looking forward to Brisbane after sleeping — or staying awake — in plane seats and in Japanese inns with headrests made from rice hulls, the orchestra's manager's wife said yesterday.

Tall, slim, charming, Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, jnr., and her husband arrived in Brisbane with the orchestra yesterday. The orchestra will give its first Australian performance on this tour here.

Before arriving in Australia the orchestra gave concerts in Taiwan, Japan, and Manila. "We're very happy to be here after the intense heat of Manila," Mrs. Perry said.

Hostess

Mrs. Perry doesn't always accompany her husband when he is travelling with the orchestra. "But I've been fortunate enough to accompany him on the last three tours, including this one," she said.

Being official social hostess for the orchestra keeps Mrs. Perry very busy while the orchestra is on tour.

During the rest of the year, despite duties most women do not have to cope with, she manages to find time for more interests than many women.

Her official duties include answering the telephone and writing all the "thank-you" letters for hospitality the orchestra receives on tour.

She takes a keen interest in the garden of more than an acre which surrounds their Hingham, Boston, home, is a trustee of a library in Hingham, works with handicapped children, and is sending home a series of articles to a Boston newspaper.

"I would very much like to see your botanic gardens and museum. I understand you have a very good art collection," she said.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry have two sons, Doane, almost 18, and Rodney, 15, who are boarders at Exeter Academy, Hampshire, Massachusetts.

Pride

There was a hint of maternal pride in Mrs. Perry's voice as she confessed that Doane (Thomas D. Perry III) had just been accepted for entry into Yale University — where his father was a student—in September.

Mrs. Perry finds it "great fun" working and travelling with the orchestra, which she describes as a "wonderful group."

WEEK

sbane organisations for this

11 a.m., Rifle Range Hall, Boundary Street. Q.W.E.L. Convention, luncheon 12.30 p.m., fork dinner and debate 5.30 p.m., City Buildings, Edward Street. District Nursing Association monthly bridge, 1 p.m., Nurses' Headquarters, Milton. Red Cross Ascot—Hamilton Branch bring-and-buy and garden party, 2 p.m., home of Lady Tooth, Eldernell Avenue, Hamilton. Y.W.C.A. All-Association Council meeting, 7 p.m., 278 Adelaide Street. Royal Overseas League Younger Members' Group square dancing, 7.45 p.m., League Rooms, Eagle Street. Brisbane Women's Club musical evening, 8 p.m., Club rooms.

★ ★ ★

FRIDAY: Q.C.W.A. Fortitude Valley Branch monthly meeting, 10.30 a.m., Rifle Range Hall, Boundary Street. Q.W.E.L. Convention, discussion meeting, 10.30 a.m., luncheon, 12.45 p.m., City Buildings, Edward Street. Methodist Home Missions Society Women's Auxiliary annual fete, 11 a.m., Wesley House, Ann Street. Lady Mayoress' Bridge Club benefit, 12.30 p.m., City Hall.

★ ★ ★

SATURDAY: Final day Lady Mayoress' Social and Welfare Committee exhibition of portraits by Trygve Torma in aid of World Refugee Appeal, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., Reception Room, City Hall. Association of Civilian Widows, Brisbane Branch, general meeting, 2 p.m., Martin Building, 158 Roma Street.

Advertisement

Be More Attractive

However beautiful you are, here is a way to being even more attractive. A way to make your complexion really radiate loveliness with a glorious pinky look. You do this by smoothing on a pink entration milk which drinks in moisture and then turns white, draining out millions of microscopic particles which have become deeply buried in the skin. The complexion emerges gloriously soft, blemish free and wrinkle smoothed. Ask your chemist for entration milk (11/6) and have a beautiful complexion in a few days.

KELVIN CONVALESCENT HOME
CERTIFICATED SISTERS ONLY
Vacancies for single 2 or 3 bedrooms spacious.
Sun rooms and lovely grounds. Phone 2 4821.
Address: 96 Herston Rd., Kelvin Grove.

Courier-Mail June 6
page 9

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

16 MAY 1960

U.S. Orchestra Member Dies

TOKIO, May 15.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, John Fiasca died yesterday in Fukuoka, Southern Japan following a heart attack.

Fiasca, 37 a viola player was found in the hotel where the orchestra was staying yesterday morning. —A.A.P. Reuters.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

STRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

om

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

2 JUN 1960

Herald, 2/6/60 — I.J

In BLACK and WHITE

[illegible] to her friend. "There's Festival Hall," we heard her saying, "where they have the boxing. Then there's the Swimming Stadium where they're having the Boston Symphony Orchestra and they've just had the professional tennis. And the Sidney Myer Music Bowl where they had the circus in summer . . ."

Sounds screwy, doesn't it?

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

5 - MAY 1960

HEAVY MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra of 117 players has chartered a special aircraft to bring 17,000 lb. of musical instruments to Adelaide on June 10.

Ansett-ANA's SA manager, Mr. R. F. Johns, today said orchestra members would fly from Sydney in two other chartered aircraft.

The orchestra will give one Adelaide concert at Centennial Hall, Wayville, on June 11 before flying to New Zealand.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 369.809

MAR 4 1960

Boston Symphony To Tour Australia

SYDNEY, Australia, (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin a seven-concert tour of Australia June 5, U.S. Ambassador William J. Sebald announced.

The orchestra, arriving from Manila, will give its first performance in Brisbane. Three concerts will be given here, one in Adelaide and two in Melbourne before flying to New Zealand.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"LISTENER-IN"

Melbourne, Vic.

4 JUN 1960

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first American orchestra to visit Australia, will arrive in Sydney this week and will be heard in two national broadcasts. Conducted by Charles Munch, the orchestra will feature Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique from 3LO-7ZR at 8 o'clock on Tuesday night, June 7; and "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance" (Samuel Barber) and Debussy's "La Mer" from the same stations at 8 o'clock on Thursday night, June 9.

AUSTRAL NGS

From

"MOR HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

-2 JUN 1960

Four-day Visit By Gov.-Gen.

CANBERRA, Wednesday.—The Governor-General, Lord Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil, will arrive in Sydney next Saturday for a four-day visit.

On Sunday, Lord Dunrossil will attend a morning service at St. James', city, for the Order of St. Michael and St. George, of which he is a member.

On Monday, he will attend a dinner for members of the order.

On Tuesday evening he and Lady Dunrossil will attend a performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Sydney Town Hall.

Est. 19 ne: MU 5133

AUST TTINGS

From

"SUNDAY TIMES"

Perth, W.A.

29 MAY 1960

THE history of the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops Orchestra will be heard in Sunday Serenade at 9.30 tonight from KY.

The orchestra conducted by Karl Muck, Serge Koussevitsky, Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler will play Jalousie, Morning Journals Waltz, Circus Parade and Ta Ra Ra Boom Deay.

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

30 MAY 1960

CLASSICAL MUSIC The Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance at Rushcutter Bay Stadium will be telecast by ABN 2 from 8 o'clock to 9 o'clock on Wednesday night, June 8. The orchestra will play Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

-2 JUN 1960

A SLIGHT case of embarrassment in Mt. Isa.

General Electric, who built the new multi-million-pound power station for Mt. Isa Mines, put the plant into commission on Tuesday afternoon. And at night they held a cocktail party to celebrate the event.

Only trouble was that shortly after the party started, the power failed.

Telegrams of congratulation on the commissioning of the plant were read by match-light—that is, until someone managed to find a CANDLE!

IN a similar line, Bill Paddon runs a petrol station in the Valley. It's quite an affair—batteries of bowsers and square yard after square yard of concrete apron. When Bill arrived to start work yesterday morning he found quite a little crowd of his regulars waiting for him—and had to explain shamefacedly that on his way in from Gordon Park he'd run out of petrol.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will arrive in Brisbane on Sunday morning with its conductor Charles Munch—famous in Europe not only for his musical accomplishment but also as a matinee idol. In fact, a Parisian magazine polled 10,000 Frenchmen in 1948, asking whom they would like to dine with that night if they had the choice. Munch ran second only to Winston Churchill, and way out in front of all the film stars!

MAYBE you've noticed this trend in business these days to have all chiefs and no indians. Keith Barry, of Clayfield, was down south the other day and came upon one firm where the message boy was called the "Errands Manager" and the lift driver the "Vertical Transport Manager."

DON Murray, of Coorparoo, is travelling around the globe with the Old Collegiate cricket team. And recently when he was at a party in Washington a woman came up to him saying she'd heard he was from Brisbane. She knew it was expecting a lot, but did he know a good friend of hers who lived in Brisbane, Mr. Lou Murray?

"Yes, I'm acquainted with him," said Don. "He's my FATHER."

IN [illegible] classification of well[illegible] [illegible] streets [illegible] Terrace opposite [illegible] Police Barracks is — SHERIFF Street!

John Elliott

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

7 MAY 1960

The Week In Wireless

RIGOLETTO AS PRESENTED by the Elizabethan Theatre Trust and broadcast by the ABC during last week end made good listening.

Perhaps in quality it was something less than the previous broadcast of Richard Strauss's Salome, which would have been well received anywhere in the world, but the differing nature of the two operas could have accounted for some of the disparity. Those fine Salome artists, too, were not in the cast.

Rigoletto is grand music and by reason of the story and its treatment, always appeals to me as being above most of Verdi's operas.

Donald Smith as the Duke carried off the chief honors with well-tempered tenor tones. Ronal Jackson (Rigoletto), Glenda Raymond (Gilda) and the rest of the cast and orchestra did well.

Other music included Alfredo Campoli in the William Walton Violin Concerto with the Sydney Orchestra under Sir Malcolm Sargent; Mozart's C Minor Piano Concerto; the Boston Orchestra in Mozart's Prague Symphony; Sydney and Sir Malcolm Sargent again in the Vaughan Williams London Symphony, and a delightful half hour with Fernando Valenti, harpsichordist, in six Scarlatti sonatas.

British music, like British weather, is often rather cold, and not very productive of the ecstatic warmth that comes [illegible] heat of other and sunnier [illegible].

Walton's concerto is rather like that and has all the British mannerisms of aloofness, formality, politeness and sterling worth which can be admired but still leave us rather cold.

It was the Sunday Music Lovers' Hour that gave us Mozart's C Minor Piano Concerto (Clifford Curzon and the London Symphony). Dr. Floyd's panegyrics about it were not exaggerated. This is the best Mozart, and the first movement always suggests to me that Brahms loved it because something in it seems to crop up in his best work. Curzon is a fine pianist.

The six Scarlatti Sonatas came from a recording which seems to have disappeared from the catalogue. Valenti is a true artist. His harpsichord is exquisitely played and the little sonatas are gems.

The ABC is advertising the coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by playing its recordings. We had 45 minutes of this orchestra on Tuesday night in which Charles Munch conducted Mozart's "Prague" Symphony. Whether it was the recording (Americans are not always faultless in their techniques) or whether it was one of the orchestra's bad days, I know not, but if there ever was heavy-handed Mozart, this was it.

Ibsen's Rosmersholm in Monday Night Theatre from 3LO came through remarkably well and served to show the low state to which dramatic writing in this century has fallen. This is the kind of stuff in which every word tells and reveals. The actors did not always rise to the subtleties of the characterisations, but what a treat it was to hear genius on the air again.

An absolute low in speech recording came from 3AR on Tuesday night during the Any Questions session. For half an hour I strove in vain to find coherence in question and answer and failed every time. By contrast the news that followed was so clear it seemed like music.

By Ariel.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

17 MAY 1960

RECORDINGS by the Boston Symphony Orchestra made at the 1959 Berkshire Festival in America will be heard on 3AR tonight at 9.15.

★

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

16 MAY 1960

MEMBER of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, John Fiasca, died in Fukuoka, southern Japan, following a heart attack.—(A.A.P.)

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

6 MAY 1960

Boston Orchestra On June 11

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first full oversea symphony orchestra ever to play in Adelaide, will give a concert in the Centennial Hall, Wayville, on June 11.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's musical director, will be the principal conductor and Aaron Copland, the US composer, guest conductor.

The orchestra consists of 100 players.

186

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRAL[illegible]GS

and Dance of Vengeance" (Samuel Barber) and Debussy's "La Mer" from the same stations at 8 o'clock on Thursday night, June 9.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

-2 JUN 1960

Four-day

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUNDAY TIMES"

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

30 MAY 1960

CLASSICAL MUSIC The Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance at Rushcutter Bay Stadium will be telecast by ABN 2 from 8 o'clock to 9 o'clock on Wednesday night, June 8. The orchestra will play Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor.

---

gency, Inc.

2-4200

09

1960 phony stralia

lia, (UPI)—

hony Orches-

seven-concert

June 5, U.S. am J. Sebald

arriving from its first per-

Brisbane. Three

given here, one two in Mel-

flying to N

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

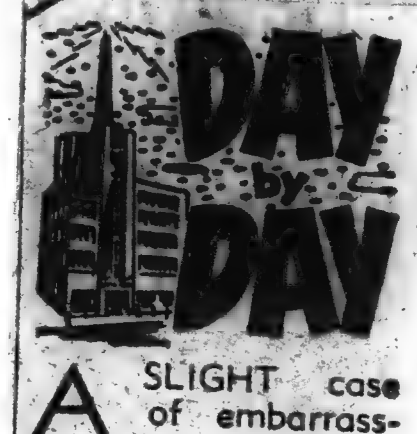
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

-2 JUN 1960



A SLIGHT case of embarrassment in Mt. Isa.

General Electric, who built the new multi-million-pound power station for Mt. Isa Mines, put the plant into commission on Tuesday afternoon. And at night they held a cocktail party to celebrate the event.

Only trouble was that shortly after the party started, the power failed.

Telegrams of congratulation on the commissioning of the plant were read by match-light—that is, until someone managed to find a CANDLE!

IN a similar line, Bill Paddon runs a petrol station in the Valley. It's quite an affair—batteries of bowsers and square yard after square yard of concrete apron. When Bill arrived to start work yesterday morning he found quite a little crowd of his regulars waiting for him—and had to explain shamefacedly that on his way in from Gordon Park he'd run out of petrol.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will arrive in Brisbane on Sunday morning with its conductor Charles Munch—famous in Europe not only for his musical accomplishment but also as a matinee idol. In fact, a Parisian magazine polled 10,000 Frenchmen in 1948, asking whom they would like to dine with that night if they had the choice. Munch ran second only to Winston Churchill, and way out in front of all the film stars!

MAYBE you've noticed this trend in business these days to have all chiefs and no indians. Keith Barry, of Clayfield, was down south the other day and came upon one firm where the message boy was called the "Errands Manager" and the lift driver the "Vertical Transport Manager."

DON Murray, of Coorparoo, is travelling around the globe with the Old Collegiate cricket team. And recently when he was at a party in Washington a woman came up to him saying she'd heard he was from Brisbane. She knew it was expecting a lot, but did he know a good friend of hers who lived in Brisbane, Mr. Lou Murray?

"Yes, I'm acquainted with him," said Don. "He's my FATHER."

IN a classification of well- [illegible] streets, [illegible] Terrace opposite [illegible] Police Barracks [illegible] — SHERIFF Street!

John Elliott

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

7 MAY 196

The Week In Wireless

RIGOLETTO AS PRESENTED by the Elizabethan Theatre Trust and broadcast by the ABC during last week end made good listening.

Perhaps in quality it was something less than the previous broadcast of Richard Strauss's Salome, which would have been well received anywhere in the world, but the differing nature of the two operas could have accounted for some of the disparity. Those fine Salome artists, too, were not in the cast.

Rigoletto is grand music and by reason of the story and its treatment, always appeals to me as being above most of Verdi's operas.

Donald Smith as the Duke carried off the chief honors with well-tempered tenor tones. Ronal Jackson (Rigoletto), Glenda Raymond (Gilda) and the rest of the cast and orchestra did well.

Other music included Alfredo Campoli in the William Walton Violin Concerto with the Sydney Orchestra under Sir Malcolm Sargent; Mozart's C Minor Piano Concerto; the Boston Orchestra in Mozart's Prague Symphony; Sydney and Sir Malcolm Sargent again in the Vaughan Williams London Symphony, and a delightful half hour with Fernando Valenti, harpsichordist, in six Scarlatti sonatas.

British music, like British weather, is often rather cold, and not very productive of the ecstatic warmth that comes from the drier heat of other and sunnier lands.

Walton's concerto is rather like that and has all the British mannerisms of aloofness, formality, politeness and sterling worth which can be admired but still leave us rather cold.

It was the Sunday Music Lovers' Hour that gave us Mozart's C Minor Piano Concerto (Clifford Curzon and the London Symphony). Dr. Floyd's panegyrics about it were not exaggerated. This is the best Mozart, and the first movement always suggests to me that Brahms loved it because something in it seems to crop up in his best work. Curzon is a fine pianist.

The six Scarlatti Sonatas came from a recording which seems to have disappeared from the catalogue. Valenti is a true artist. His harpsichord is exquisitely played and the little sonatas are gems.

The ABC is advertising the coming of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by playing its recordings. We had 45 minutes of this orchestra on Tuesday night in which Charles Munch conducted Mozart's "Prague" Symphony. Whether it was the recording (Americans are not always faultless in their techniques) or whether it was one of the orchestra's bad days, I know not, but if there ever was heavy-handed Mozart, this was it.

Ibsen's Rosmersholm in Monday Night Theatre from 3LO came through remarkably well and served to show the low state to which dramatic writing in this century has fallen. This is the kind of stuff in which every word tells and reveals. The actors did not always rise to the subtleties of the characterisations, but what a treat it was to hear genius on the air again.

An absolute low in speech recording came from 3AR on Tuesday night during the Any Questions session. For half an hour I strove in vain to find coherence in question and answer and failed every time. By contrast the news that followed was so clear it seemed like music.

By Ariel.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

17 MAY 1960

RECORDINGS by the Boston Symphony Orchestra made at the 1959 Berkshire Festival in America will be heard on 3AR tonight at 9.15.

★

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

16 MAY 1960

MEMBER of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, John Fiasca, died in Fukuoka, southern Japan, following a heart attack.—(A.A.P.)

★ ★ ★

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

6 MAY 1960

Boston Orchestra On June 11

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first full oversea symphony orchestra ever to play in Adelaide, will give a concert in the Centennial Hall, Wayville, on June 11.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's musical director, will be the principal conductor and Aaron Copland, the US composer, guest conductor.

The orchestra consists of 100 players.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MERCURY"

Hobart, Tas.

- 4 JUN 1960

Most welcome this week is a lovely record of eight overtures written for Handel's operas and oratorios, played by the Bamberg Symphony Orchestra conducted by Rolf Reinhardt. (Vox APL 11380).

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra comes tantalisingly close to Tasmania next week, and no doubt there will be a lot of concerts relayed by the A.B.C. (Let's hope we are spared the whistles and crackles that the gremlins usually reserve for such occasions!) —A remarkable bargain issued to commemorate the visit has been released in Australia by R.C.A. in the form of a musical history of both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops orchestras — the latter is better known to us as the Boston Promenade.

It is a 12in. LP costing no more than a 45 and containing excerpts from records made by the orchestra from "pre-electric" times to the present day.

The only slight disadvantage is the main commentator, who seems a little out of step with things, pronouncing Koussevitsky's Christian name as if it were a material used in men's suits and Berlioz in a way that would have rocked the crew of the French frigate Francis Garnier. To his credit he has obviously rehearsed "Gregor Piatigorsky" very carefully.

The record has a rather interesting musical oddity in the form of Koussevitsky's recording of the Beethoven Minuet in G played by him on the double bass — the instrument with which he began his musical career. I'd like to see more orchestral biographies like this, particularly at this price.

BOSTON SYMPHONY TELECAST

The visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature in a direct one - hour telecast from the Stadium, Rushcutter Bay on Channel 2, ABN, tonight at 8 o'clock.

The orchestra will play Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor and will be conducted by the Associate Conductor and Concertmaster, Richard Burgin.

The 115-member Boston Symphony Orchestra is making a tour of the Far East under President Eisenhower's programme for encouraging cultural visits to other countries.

Before their arrival in Australia they played in Japan, Korea and the Philippines.

Richard Burgin joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1920 as concertmaster.

He studied the violin as a child and was considered a prodigy, making his debut with the Warsaw Philharmonic at the age of 11.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Brisbane, Qld.

1 JUN 1960

LATECOMER LOCK-OUT

Latecomers at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's City Hall concert on Monday night will be locked out until the interval at 9 p.m.

The concert starts at 8 p.m. The ABC's concert manager, Mr. T. Butler, said today that the audience should be seated by 7.50 p.m.

The queue at Paling's box office today for the general public was small and quiet compared with last week's rush by concert subscribers who have preferential booking rights.

Some of the 300 seats left are improvised on the stage and at the front on each side of the dress circle.

Stage being enlarged

Work at the City Hall began today to prepare the auditorium for the concert.

The stage is being enlarged by 900 square feet, to extend it 12 ft. towards the audience.

The stage lighting will be increased to the intensity of sunlight by extra floodlights and spotlights.

The 115 - member orchestra will arrive from Manila by airliners early on Sunday morning.

A special DC4 freighter will carry their eight tons of equipment.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From

- JUN 1960

"BULLETIN,"

Sydney, N.S.W.

June 1, 1960 The Bulletin 23

TALKIES
THEATRE
MUSIC
ART

SUNDRY SHOWS

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

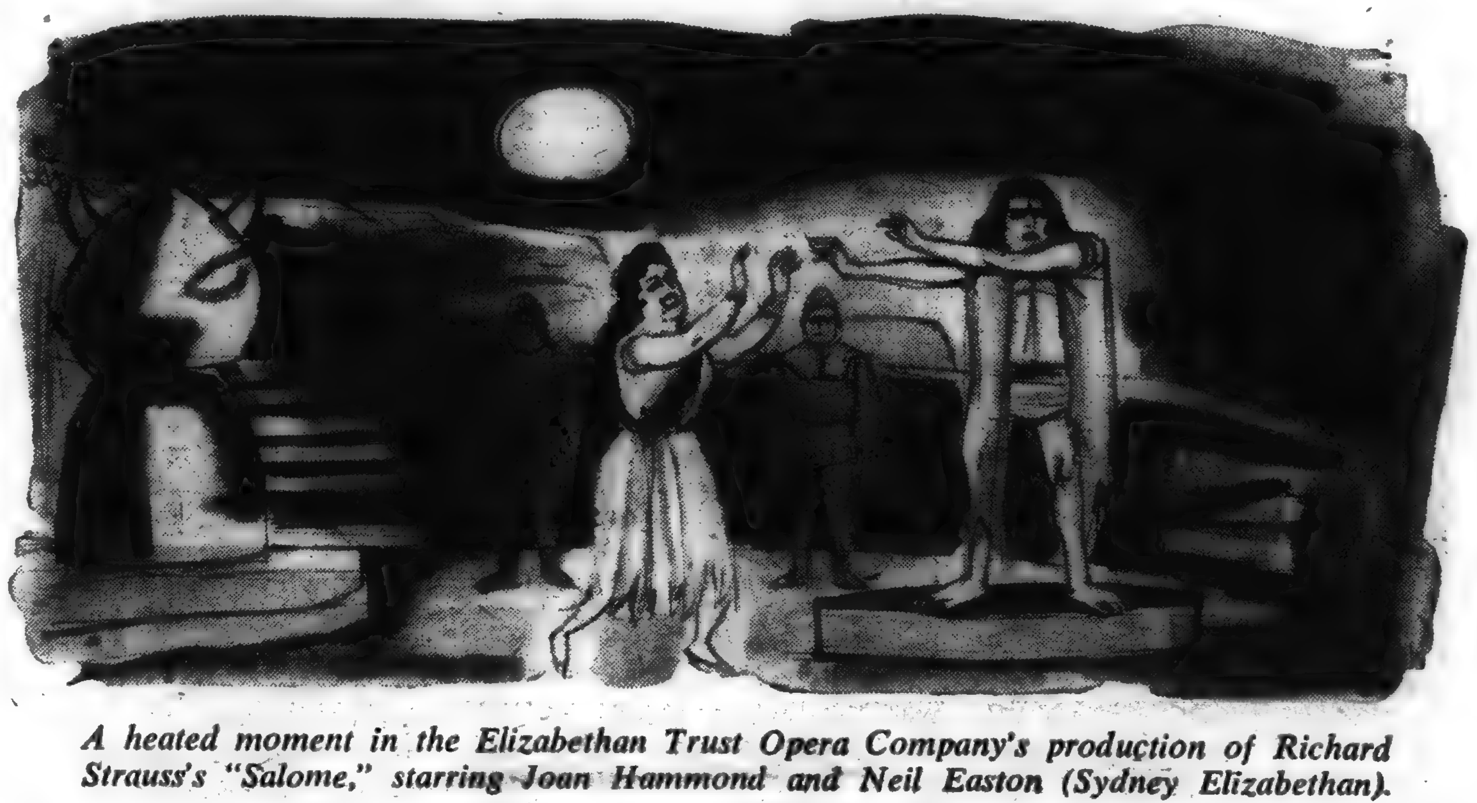
WHEN Charles Münch signals the first powerful chords of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony at the first Australian concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on June 6 (Brisbane) he will be introducing an orchestra that has claimed the title of world's best more often than any other.

This honor is no doubt shared by several great orchestras, and for different reasons. The Boston players could not be said to outdo the Vienna Philharmonic in Mozart or the Amsterdam Orchestra in Brahms; but their brilliance in all kinds of music from Bach to Bartók has been a revelation to us for many years through recordings, and no one can doubt that we will be hearing one of the finest-sounding ensembles the world of music has yet seen.

The Boston always admits the public to some of its rehearsals. In this way it trains its audience of the future, for by spending hours in the workroom of the master-craftsmen of music the student gets something worth all the music-appreciation lessons in the world.

This kind of thing has helped to build a great bond of affection between the orchestra and Bostonians, giving even the unmusical citizen a feeling that the orchestra is common property. And this spirit has been growing up ever since 1881, when a private citizen, Major Henry Higginson, founded the orchestra out of a devotion to music and the profits of a shrewd head in the banking business.

Ever since, through a succession of private supporters and conductors, the Boston has been one of the elect among orchestras, paying its musicians highly and hiring only the best.



A heated moment in the Elizabethan Trust Opera Company's production of Richard Strauss's "Salome," starring Joan Hammond and Neil Easton (Sydney Elizabethan).

The players who assembled under the legendary Koussevitsky (1924-1949) were handpicked from the best orchestras in Europe, with French wind-players and many Germans among the brass. For a time it was a French - German orchestra rather than an American one. The foreign importations stayed beyond their contract time, and many of them produced brilliant pupils. Now the orchestra is as distinctively Bostonian as Harvard University, and the family atmosphere is very strong in its ranks.

Still entirely financed by private subscriptions, the Boston Orchestra works hard, giving 24 Friday-afternoon and Saturday concerts in Boston and five in Carnegie Hall, New York. The event of its year is undoubtedly the Berkshire Festival, set among the glades of Nathaniel Hawthorne's enchanted Tanglewood, in Massachusetts. Here, in July and August, the orchestra gives concerts in a huge building to some 6000 listeners. The principal players take master-classes for some 400 young musicans, prospective instrumentalists or conductors.

Charles Münch, present head of the Boston Symphony, is a precise craftsman, French by birth and choice, though his birthplace, Alsace, made him at one time technically a German citizen. He was drafted into the German Army in World War I. War II he spent in Paris as a conductor, using his earnings and his country house for Resistance activities that earned him the Legion of Honor.

Münch is a relation of Albert Schweitzer and, like Schweitzer, is steeped in the music of Bach as a result of the family tradition of organ-playing. Nevertheless, he continues the Boston tradition of fulfilling its obligation to history by playing as much new music as possible. There has been no alteration of this policy for the Australian tour.

The programmes for Australia have been chosen to show-off all departments of the orchestra. Australian cities outside Sydney and Melbourne too rarely have the opportunity to hear music played by an orchestra with the full complement of strings that Wagner, Strauss and Debussy required; and the Boston Orchestra plays romantic composers with that wonderful pulsating string-tone that gives life to music which otherwise sounds limp.

The Boston visit may show us that some of our own orchestras are better than we thought. After the visit of the splendid Czech Orchestra last year, some were heard to say that what was remarkable was

188

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

2 JUN 1960

National Relay of Concert by the Boston Orchestra

The first Australia-wide broadcast of a concert to be given in Australia by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relayed from the Sydney Town Hall through LO, at 8 p.m., Tuesday, June 7.

Charles Munch, resident musical director of the orchestra, will conduct the Symphonie Fantastique by Berlioz.

The final Sydney performance by the orchestra, also from the town hall, will be relayed through LO at 8 p.m., Thursday, June 9.

The orchestra will present Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance by the American composer Samuel Barber, and Three Symphonic Sketches ("La Mer") by Debussy.

Part of the orchestra's concert from Melbourne's new Olympic Pool on Tuesday, June [illegible], will be telecast direct by ABV-2 at 9.15 p.m.

The Australian visit by the orchestra is part of President Eisenhower's cultural exchange plan between U.S.A. and the Far East.

The [illegible] of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the [illegible] Pops Orchestra [illegible] of a low-priced record released in Australia to coincide with the visit.

The 12-inch record will sell at 15/6.

Philippines Herald

Boston Symphony Off For Brisbane, Australia

The Boston Symphony orchestra departed Saturday night aboard two chartered planes for Brisbane, Australia, after a successful three-day performance at the Rizal coliseum.

The 110-man symphony was headed by Charles Munch, musical director; Aaron Copland, guest conductor; and Richard Burgin, assistant conductor.

Before boarding his plane, Munch said he saw in the Filipino people "a warm heart for good music."

"I was very much impressed by your people's enthusiasm and interest in music," he said.

6 JUN 1960

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra has reached Brisbane and undoubtedly it is the greatest American invasion since the Coral Sea Battle celebrations. There are 108 players and they are rather better paid than the sailors. The minimum wage for the musicians works out at £3118 a year. They are flying round the country in two aircraft and they have another stuffed to capacity with violins, double basses, harps, cellos, tam tams, that sort of thing.

They have everything, even down to the conductor's podium. Charles Munch is just like a politician, he takes along his own platform.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

4 - JUN 1960

Consul As Host

The US Consul (Mr. John Campbell Ausland) and Mrs. Ausland have sent out invitations to a reception in honor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

They will entertain in the South Australian Hotel at 10.30 p.m. next Saturday.

BSO departs for Australia

Manila Chronicle

6 JUN 1960

The Boston Symphony Orchestra departed Saturday night aboard two chartered planes for Brisbane, Australia, after a successful three-day performance at the Rizal Coliseum in Manila.

The 110-man symphony was headed by Charles Munch, musical director; Aaron Copland, guest conductor; and Richard Burgin, assistant conductor.

Before boarding his plane, Munch said he saw in the Filipino people "a warm heart for good music."

"I was very much impressed by your people's enthusiasm and interest in music," he said.

Manila Bulletin

Boston Orchestra

6 JUN 1960

The Boston Symphony orchestra departed last night for Australia after a three-day concert series at the Rizal Memorial stadium. Before boarding his plane music director Charles Munch said he saw in the Filipino people "a warm heart for good music. I was very much impressed by your people's enthusiasm and interest in music."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

Airliners Fly In Famous Orchestra

BRISBANE, Sunday. — One of the world's most famous orchestra, the Boston Symphony, arrived here today.

Three aircraft brought the 108 members' £100,000 worth of instruments and 20,000 lb. of baggage to Brisbane Airport.

The orchestra will give its first Australian concert here tomorrow night, starting a 10-day tour which will take them to Sydney and Melbourne.

With the orchestra were two of music's "big men"—top-rated conductor Dr. Charles Munch and American composer Aaron Copland.

Dr. Munch said the tours were not "cultural propaganda" but were dedicated purely to making music.

However, he hoped the tours were doing some good towards international relations.

Trouble has stalked the orchestra so far during its tour.

In Japan the tidal wave struck during their stay.

They had to cancel concerts in South Korea because of the riots, and a typhoon missed them by only two days in the Phillipines.

Best news for Australian musicians was that Aaron Copland will study Australian works during his stay here.

Musicians here said today that his sponsorship would lead to international recognition of composers.

Fifteen different nationalities are represented in the orchestra. Oldest member is Henri Gilard, 71, a bass player.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

Three planes flew orchestra in BRISBANE, Sun. — The 108 members of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in Brisbane from the Philippines today.

They will give their first Australian concert in Brisbane tomorrow night.

The musicians travelled, 54 to a plane, in a Qantas Electra and a Flying Tiger Line Constellation.

Baggage weighing 20,000 lb. arrived in a third plane, a freighter from Formosa, with the Nationalist Chinese flag painted on its tail.

The conductor, Dr Charles Munch, said that the tour was not intended to be "cultural propaganda."

"We are here to make music first," he added.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Brisbane, Qld.

4 JUN 1960

Players in mass airlift

Boston Symphony Orchestra and its property will arrive in three aircraft tomorrow for a concert in the City Hall on Monday night.

A Constellation carrying 5[illegible] people, including the [illegible] director, Mr. Charles [illegible] the guest conductor, Mr. Aaron Copland, [illegible] the manager, [illegible] Perry, jun., will [illegible] at 10.5 a.m.

An [illegible] carrying another [illegible] persons will arrive an hour later.

A DC4 freighter carrying 17,500 lb. of luggage, including instruments, will also arrive tomorrow.

To have State reception

The orchestra will come from Manila, in the Philippine Islands.

After the concert the orchestra will be given a State reception at Parliament House.

Its instruments are worth at least £100,000.

189

~~Sydney Morning Herald~~

June 6-1960

BOSTON'S BIG MUSICIAN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra of 108 members arrived in Brisbane yesterday in two planes from the Philippines.

They occupied 109 seats—two for the double bass player, 24-stone Leslie R. Martin.

Mr Martin is pictured above talking to Barry [illegible], 4, of Camp Hill, at the airport.

A third plane carried the orchestra's 20,000lb of luggage.

The orchestra will start its season in Brisbane tonight and will be in Australia for 16 days.

Since it left Boston it has played in Japan, Formosa and the Philippines.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

3 WOMEN, 114 MEN

TWO sisters, cellist Mrs Winifred Winograd, and flautist Miss Lois Schaefer, are among the three women musicians who arrived in Melbourne with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday.

The third woman is Mrs Olivia Luetcke, a harpist.

Mrs Winograd is the first permanent woman player in the orchestra's string section.

Formerly first cellist in the Fort Wayne Philharmonic Orchestra in Indiana, she was the only woman among 13 musicians who auditioned for the post three years ago.

"I felt I was being rather 'forward' in trying for the job," she laughed yesterday.

"But Charles Munch, our conductor, is less prejudiced than most against women players, and the men in the orchestra accepted me very quickly."

Miss Schaefer joined the orchestra to replace another woman flautist who was unable to make the trip.

She lives in New York, where she plays in the theatre-size orchestra at the New York City Centre of Music and Drama.

"This is a kind of experimental theatre which produces annual seasons of opera, ballet, drama and musical comedy," Miss Schaefer explained.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

18 MAY 1960

Three Women in Boston Orchestra

THERE will be only three women among the 117 players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it arrives in Australia next month.

They are Mrs. Winifred Winograd ('cellist), Miss Lois Schaefer (flautist) and Mrs. Olivia Hall Luetcke (harpist).

However, there are two other women travelling in the specially chartered plane which is bringing the orchestra on its tour of the Far East and Australia. The manager, Mr. Thomas D. Perry, jun., will be accompanied by his wife and his secretary, Miss Sally Hempel. Miss Hempel is also a registered nurse.

Mrs. Leutcke, the harpist, is one of the few Americans actually born in New York City; most New Yorkers gravitate there from somewhere else.

Suburban Colonial

She and her teenage daughter now live in a large colonial house in suburban Boston, where they raise Chihuahuas. Their dogs have been awarded many prizes at dog shows.

The flautist (or, as the Americans say, flutist), Miss Schaefer, is first flute with the New York City Centre Opera Company's Orchestra. But Dr. Charles Munch invited her to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra for this tour of the Far East and Australia.

She has been soloist with many American orchestras, including the Chicago Symphony and the Boston Pops. Miss Schaefer is a sister of 'cellist, Mrs. Winifred Winograd.

Mrs. Winograd was the first woman string player ever engaged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She joined it in 1957. She studied with Gregor Piatigorsky, at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia and at the Boston Symphony's summer school of music, the Berkshire Music Centre. She has a teenage son called Nicky.

Gardening Her Hobby

The manager and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, live in suburban Hingham, [illegible] miles from Boston, in a large Victorian house surrounded by an acre or so of lawns and gardens.

Mrs. Perry's hobby is looking after the garden, and caring for their large shaggy dog, Gus (short for Argus, of the hundred eyes). Their two sons, Doane, 17, and [illegible], [illegible], are pupils at a New England preparatory school.

It is Mrs. Perry's job to be "first lady" at the orchestra's many social functions, and she always attends the Friday matinee concerts.

Miss Hempel, who comes from Illinois in the mid-west, has been Mr. Perry's secretary for three years and a half. Before that, besides working as a nurse, she was for a time an air hostess.

The orchestra will give two concerts in Melbourne — the first on June 13 in Melbourne Town Hall, and the second on June 14 at the Olympic Swimming Pool.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

5 JUN 1960

Music to Brisbane by plane

Boston Symphony Orchestra will descend discordantly on Brisbane this morning with the whine of aircraft, the rumble of 85 heavy trunks, and the chatter of 100 musicians.

Two aircraft carrying the musicians will arrive at 10 a.m.

Waiting for them will be 10 tons of luggage flown in earlier containing even their own podium and conductor's music stand.

The party will include three conductors, a management staff of five, three stage hands — and a physician. And there's a United Nation flavour to it.

The second clarinet player is from Niagara Falls, a flautist is from the United Arab Republic, there's an Austrian-born bassoon player, violinists from Russia and Poland, and the English Horn player comes from France.

Ten of the Boston Orchestra members were born in Boston.

The musicians earn no less than 7000 dollars (£3118) a year (many earn more) and this is about what the average concert sell-out brings in—enough to pay one musician for a year.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

14 MAY 1960

Two sisters in orchestra

TWO sisters are among the three women in the 117-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra that arrives in Australia next month.

They are Mrs Winifred Winograd (cellist) and Miss Lois Schaefer (flautist). Third woman is Mrs Olivia Hall Luetcke (harpist).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

JUN 1960

Three Planes Bring Boston Orchestra

American composer Aaron Copland (left), and the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, at the Brisbane Airport after they arrived from Manila yesterday.

A big welcome for Boston Symphony Orchestra double-bass player Leslie R. ("Tiny") Martin came from Barry Edington, 4, of Camp Hill. "Tiny," who weighs 24 stone, sat in two plane seats on the flight from Manila

BRISBANE, June 5.

The 108 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ended an overnight flight from Manila at Brisbane Airport today and will make their Australian debut in Brisbane tomorrow night.

They will play in Adelaide on Saturday.

They travelled, 54 to a plane, in a Qantas Electra and a Flying Tiger Line Constellation, and baggage weighing 20,000 lb. arrived in a third plane, a Civil Air Transport freighter from Formosa, with the Nationalist Chinese flag painted on its tail.

The players hope nothing happens to Australia while they are here.

Riots forced them to abandon their Korean visit and go to Formosa instead.

Tidal waves struck Japan while there, and they missed a typhoon in Manila by only two days.

"Mes amis" was the delighted response of the conductor (Dr. Charles Munch) to the waves of the people who watched him drive from the airport.

At 68, Dr. Munch is leading the orchestra on his third overseas tour.

He rejected any attempt to describe the tours as "cultural propaganda."

"We are here to make music first," he said.

American composer Aaron Copland, 59, arrived with a huge black box under one arm. It was full of presents from Japan.

While in Australia he will examine scores and listen to tape recordings of works by leading Australian composers.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

11 JUN 1960

Orchestra In Big Airlift

The arrival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Adelaide Airport yesterday afternoon was the biggest airlift of its kind into Adelaide since the Sydney and Melbourne Symphony Orchestras flew to the Arts Festival in March.

The 104 members of the US orchestra flew from Sydney in two aircraft and crowded the passenger terminal almost to capacity at a peak traffic hour.

Their 10 tons of instruments arrived during the morning in two air freighters.

The orchestra, which will give the fifth concert in its Australian tour at the Centennial Hall tonight, has been travelling almost continuously for the past seven weeks.

It was to have opened its Pacific tour in Korea, but as conductor-composer Aaron Copland expressed it, "the revolution there got in the way."

Mr. Copland said that, musically, the tour had been highly successful, but the orchestra seemed to hit trouble spots all the way.

The orchestra's musical director (Charles Munch) did not make the trip to Adelaide.

Instead tonight's concert will be conducted by Mr. Copland, who has made frequent appearances as guest conductor with leading US orchestras.

The programme will include a suite from his opera "The Tender Land."

Now 60, Mr. Copland was born in Brooklyn, of Russian parents and has been called the "dean of American composers."

In 1945 he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Critics' Award for his score of the ballet "Appalachian Spring."

Mr. Copland yesterday expressed great interest in the recent Arts Festival in Adelaide and said that the Boston orchestra had appeared at several such festivals overseas, including Edinburgh's.

The orchestra has only three women among its members. They are Miss Olivia Luetcke (harp) and two sisters, Mrs. Winifred Winograd (cello) and Miss Lois Schafer (flute).

Tomorrow morning, members of the orchestra will be taken to the Tintara winery at McLaren Vale for a tour of the cellars followed by a barbecue luncheon.

'Phone: MU 5133

RESS CUTTINGS

, Victoria

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

7 JUN 1960

MEET THE BOSTON'S DOUBLE BASS

MR LESLIE MARTIN, double bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stops to say hello to Barry Edington, 4, on his arrival in Brisbane with the orchestra to start their Australian season. Mr Martin weighs 24 stone, and is booked to occupy two plane seats whenever the orchestra flies. A packed house gave the orchestra a big reception after its first concert in the City Hall last night.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

25 MAY

Boston seats sell today

Bookings for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's one-night concert in the City Hall on June 6 will open for A.B.C. concert subscribers at 8.45 this morning.

Celebrity and Youth series subscribers are being given a special preferential booking period beginning from this morning and extending until next Tuesday.

Bookings for the general public will open from Wednesday, June 1. All bookings will be at Paling's, Queen Street.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.

UN 1960

Three Planes Bring Boston Orchestra

American composer Aaron Copland (left), an Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, Dr. Munch, at the Brisbane Airport after they arri Manila yesterday.

BRISBANE, June 5.

The 108 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ended an overnight flight from Manila at Brisbane Airport today and will ma their Australian debu Brisbane tomorrow

They will play laide on Saturda

They travelle plane, in a Qa and a Flyin Constellatio weighing in a thi Air Tr from Natio pain in

A big welcome for Boston Symphony Orchestra double-bass player Leslie R. ("Tiny") Martin came from Barry Edington, 4, of Camp Hill. "Tiny," who weighs 24 stone, sat in two plane seats on the flight from Manila

FAMOUS FOR 70 YEARS FOR BEATING COUGHS AND COLDS

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.

1 JUN 1960

Orchestra In Big Airlift

The arrival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Adelaide Airport yesterday afternoon was the biggest airlift of its kind into Adelaide since the Sydney and Melbourne Symphony Orchestras flew to the Arts Festival in March.

The 104 members of the US orchestra flew from Sydney in two aircraft and crowded the passenger terminal almost to capacity at a peak traffic hour.

Their 10 tons of instruments arrived during the morning in two air freighters.

The orchestra, which will give the fifth concert in its Australian tour at the Centennial Hall tonight, has been travelling almost continuously for the past seven weeks.

It was to have opened its Pacific tour in Korea, but as conductor-composer Aaron Copland expressed it, "the revolution there got in the way."

Mr. Copland said that, musically, the tour had been highly successful, but the orchestra seemed to hit trouble spots all the way.

The orchestra's musical director (Charles Munch) did not make the trip to Adelaide.

Instead tonight's concert will be conducted by Mr. Copland, who has made frequent appearances as guest conductor with leading US orchestras.

The programme will include a suite from his opera "The Tender Land."

Now 60, Mr. Copland was born in Brooklyn, of Russian parents and has been called the "dean of American composers."

In 1945 he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Critics' Award for his score of the ballet "Appalachian Spring."

Mr. Copland yesterday expressed great interest in the recent Arts Festival in Adelaide and said that the Boston orchestra had appeared at several such festivals overseas, including Edinburgh's.

The orchestra has only three women among its members. They are Miss Olivia Luetcke (harp) and two sisters, Mrs. Winifred Winograd (cello) and Miss Lois Schafer (flute).

Tomorrow morning, members of the orchestra will be taken to the Tintara winery at McLaren Vale for a tour of the cellars followed by a barbecue luncheon.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"SUN"
Melbourne, Vic.

7 JUN

MEET THE BOSTON'S DOUBLE BASS

← MR LESLIE MARTIN, double bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stops to say hello to Barry Edington, 4, on his arrival in Brisbane with the orchestra to start their Australian season. — Mr Martin weighs 24 stone, and is booked to occupy two plane seats whenever the orchestra flies. A packed house gave the orchestra a big reception after its first concert in the City Hall last night.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"COURIER MAIL"
Brisbane, Qld.

25 MAY

Boston seats sell today

Bookings for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's one-night concert in the City Hall on June 6 will open for A.B.C. concert subscribers at 8.45 this morning.

Celebrity and Youth series subscribers are being given a special preferential booking period beginning from this morning and extending until next Tuesday.

Bookings for the general public will open from Wednesday, June 1. All bookings will be at Paling's, Queen Street.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

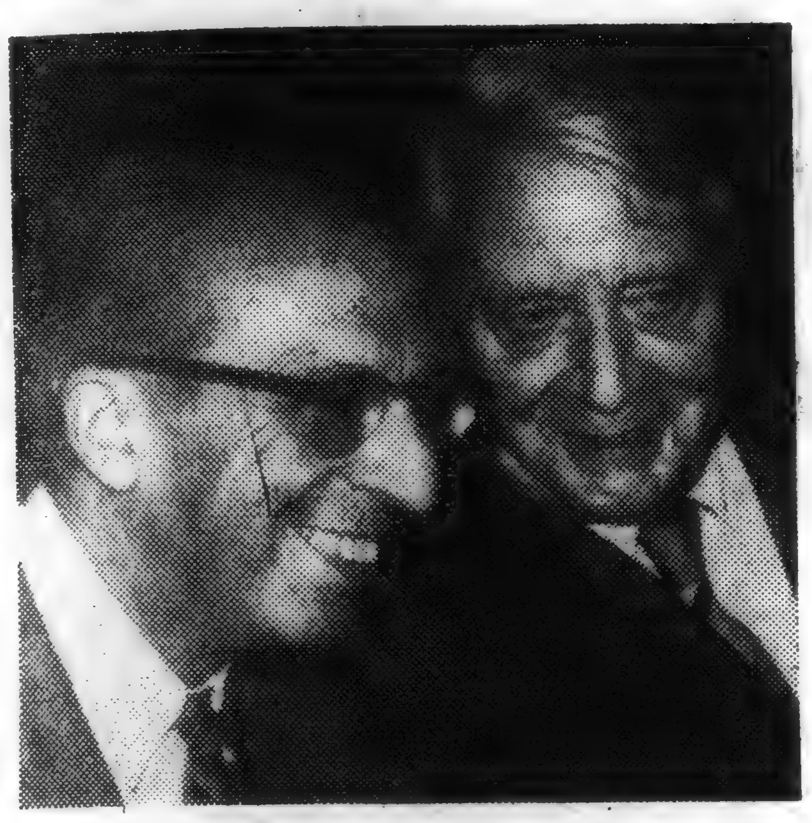
From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

6 JUN 1960

Three Planes Bring Boston Orchestra



American composer Aaron Copland (left), and the Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, at the Brisbane Airport after they arrived from Manila yesterday.

BRISBANE, June 5.

The 108 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ended an overnight flight from Manila at Brisbane Airport today and will make their Australian debut in Brisbane tomorrow night.

They will play in Adelaide on Saturday.

They travelled 54 to a plane, in a Qantas Electra and a Flying Tiger Line Constellation, and baggage weighing 20,000 lb. arrived in a third plane, a Civil Air Transport freighter from Formosa, with the Nationalist Chinese flag painted on its tail.

The players hope nothing happens to Australia while they are here.

Riots forced them to abandon their Korean visit and go to Formosa instead.

Tidal waves struck Japan while there, and they missed a typhoon in Manila by only two days.

"Mes amis" was the delighted response of the conductor (Dr. Charles Munch) to the waves of the people who watched him drive from the airport.

At 68, Dr. Munch is leading the orchestra on his third overseas tour.

He rejected any attempt to describe the tours as "cultural propaganda."

"We are here to make music first," he said.

American composer Aaron Copland, 59, arrived with a huge black box under one arm. It was full of presents from Japan.

While in Australia he will examine scores and listen to tape recordings of works by leading Australian composers.

A big welcome for Boston Symphony Orchestra double-bass player Leslie R. ("Tiny") Martin came from Barry Edington, 4, of Camp Hill. "Tiny," who weighs 24 stone, sat in two plane seats on the flight from Manila

---

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

11 JUN 1960

Orchestra In Big Airlift

The arrival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Adelaide Airport yesterday afternoon was the biggest airlift of its kind into Adelaide since the Sydney and Melbourne Symphony Orchestras flew to the Arts Festival in March.

The 104 members of the US orchestra flew from Sydney in two aircraft and crowded the passenger terminal almost to capacity at a peak traffic hour.

Their 10 tons of instruments arrived during the morning in two air freighters.

The orchestra, which will give the fifth concert in its Australian tour at the Centennial Hall tonight, has been travelling almost continuously for the past seven weeks.

It was to have opened its Pacific tour in Korea, but as conductor-composer Aaron Copland expressed it, "the revolution there got in the way."

Mr. Copland said that, musically, the tour had been highly successful, but the orchestra seemed to hit trouble spots all the way.

The orchestra's musical director (Charles Munch) did not make the trip to Adelaide.

Instead tonight's concert will be conducted by Mr. Copland, who has made frequent appearances as guest conductor with leading US orchestras.

The programme will include a suite from his opera "The Tender Land."

Now 60, Mr. Copland was born in Brooklyn, of Russian parents and has been called the "dean of American composers."

In 1945 he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Critics' Award for his score of the ballet "Appalachian Spring."

Mr. Copland yesterday expressed great interest in the recent Arts Festival in Adelaide and said that the Boston orchestra had appeared at several such festivals overseas, including Edinburgh's.

The orchestra has only three women among its members. They are Miss Olivia Luetcke (harp) and two sisters, Mrs. Winifred Winograd (cello) and Miss Lois Schafer (flute).

Tomorrow morning, members of the orchestra will be taken to the Tintara winery at McLaren Vale for a tour of the cellars followed by a barbecue luncheon.

'Phone: MU 5133

RESS CUTTINGS

, Victoria

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

7 JUN 1960

MEET THE BOSTON'S DOUBLE BASS

MR LESLIE MARTIN, double bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stops to say hello to Barry Edington, 4, on his arrival in Brisbane with the orchestra to start their Australian season. Mr Martin weighs 24 stone, and is booked to occupy two plane seats whenever the orchestra flies. A packed house gave the orchestra a big reception after its first concert in the City Hall last night.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

25 MAY

Boston seats sell today

Bookings for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's one-night concert in the City Hall on June 6 will open for A.B.C. concert subscribers at 8.45 this morning.

Celebrity and Youth series subscribers are being given a special preferential booking period beginning from this morning and extending until next Tuesday.

Bookings for the general public will open from Wednesday, June 1. All bookings will be at Paling's, Queen Street.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

JUN 1960

Three Planes Bring Boston Orchestra

American composer Aaron Copland (left), and Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, Dr. C Munch, at the Brisbane Airport after they arri Manila yesterday.

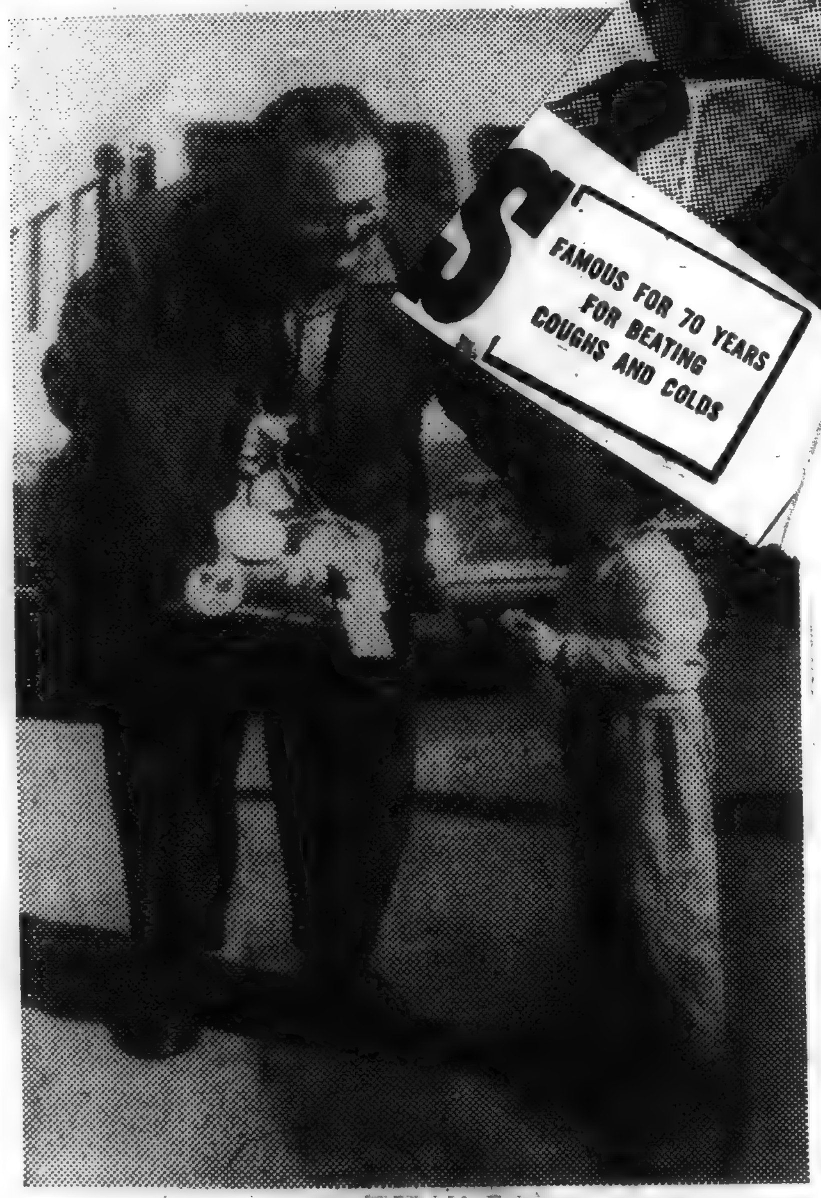
BRISBANE, June 5.

The 108 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ended an overnight flight from Manila at Brisbane Airport today and will ma their Australian debu Brisbane tomorrow n

They will play in laide on Saturday

They travelled plane, in a Qan and a Flying Constellation weighing 2 in a thir Air Tr from Nation paint

T in w



A big welcome for Boston Symphony Orchestra double-bass player Leslie R. ("Tiny") Martin came from Barry Edington, 4, of Camp Hill. "Tiny," who weighs 24 stone, sat in two plane seats on the flight from Manila

FAMOUS FOR 70 YEARS FOR BEATING COUGHS AND COLDS

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

11 JUN 1960

Orchestra In Big Airlift

The arrival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Adelaide Airport yesterday afternoon was the biggest airlift of its kind into Adelaide since the Sydney and Melbourne Symphony Orchestras flew to the Arts Festival in March.

The 104 members of the US orchestra flew from Sydney in two aircraft and crowded the passenger terminal almost to capacity at a peak traffic hour.

Their 10 tons of instruments arrived during the morning in two air freighters.

The orchestra, which will give the fifth concert in its Australian tour at the Centennial Hall tonight, has been travelling almost continuously for the past seven weeks.

It was to have opened its Pacific tour in Korea, but as conductor-composer Aaron Copland expressed it, "the revolution there got in the way."

Mr. Copland said that, musically, the tour had been highly successful, but the orchestra seemed to hit trouble spots all the way.

The orchestra's musical director (Charles Munch) did not make the trip to Adelaide.

Instead tonight's concert will be conducted by Mr. Copland, who has made frequent appearances as guest conductor with leading US orchestras.

The programme will include a suite from his opera "The Tender Land."

Now 60, Mr. Copland was born in Brooklyn, of Russian parents and has been called the "dean of American composers."

In 1945 he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Critics' Award for his score of the ballet "Appalachian Spring."

Mr. Copland yesterday expressed great interest in the recent Arts Festival in Adelaide and said that the Boston orchestra had appeared at several such festivals overseas, including Edinburgh's.

The orchestra has only three women among its members. They are Miss Olivia Luetcke (harp) and two sisters, Mrs. Winifred Winograd (cello) and Miss Lois Schafer (flute).

Tomorrow morning, members of the orchestra will be taken to the Tintara winery at McLaren Vale for a tour of the cellars followed by a barbecue luncheon.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

7 JUN

MEET THE BOSTON'S DOUBLE BASS

MR LESLIE MARTIN, double bass player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stops to say hello to Barry Edington, 4, on his arrival in Brisbane with the orchestra to start their Australian season. Mr Martin weighs 24 stone, and is booked to occupy two plane seats whenever the orchestra flies. A packed house gave the orchestra a big reception after its first concert in the City Hall last night.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

25 MAY

Boston seats sell today

Bookings for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's one-night concert in the City Hall on June 6 will open for A.B.C. concert subscribers at 8.45 this morning.

Celebrity and Youth series subscribers are being given a special preferential booking period beginning from this morning and extending until next Tuesday.

Bookings for the general public will open from Wednesday, June 1. All bookings will be at Paling's, Queen Street.

191

1904 'Phone: MU 5133
STRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

rom
"SUNDAY MAIL"
Adelaide, S.A.

14 MAY 1960

Bost

Great orchestra..

By a Staff Reporter

"This is the greatest orchestra in the world," said a leading Russian violinist after the Boston Symphony Orchestra had played in Moscow in 1956.

And it is this orchestra that Adelaide is to hear, giving one performance, in the Centennial Hall, on June 11.

The 100-piece orchestra is the largest from overseas ever to visit Australia.

Many factors have gone into making the orchestra great since it was founded in 1881.

High among them was the late Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra's conductor for an unforgettable 25 years from 1924 to 1949.

Koussevitsky, a Russian Jew, was a citizen of the international world of music, and his influence on the Boston Symphony was immense.

Not that all was sweetness and light—far from it.

In his early years particularly, Koussevitsky was unpopular with his musicians for a variety of reasons.

FEUDS

Those years were colorful, to say the least, and feuds, fights, and short and long range sniping between conductor, musicians, and the orchestra's administration became commonplace.

Koussevitsky was slow to get the hang of the English language—which didn't help matters.

Here are two illustrations from the many stories told of him.

Expressing dissatisfaction with the way a passage had been played, Koussevitsky would say: "I will repeat it hundred times until I will not have it right."

Another time the conductor took to one of the musicians, and when the man went to reply, said excitedly: "Yes, yes, I don't know anything!"

To which the musician replied, with complete poise: "I discovered that some time ago."

But despite the pulling this way and the other, Koussevitsky's superb musicianship and his unflagging determination to make the Boston Symphony one of the most outstanding in the world, won out.

The orchestra now gives more than 200 concerts a year in its native United States.

AARON COPLAND . . . to conduct here.

It will arrive in SA on June 10 in three specially chartered aircraft, two to carry the 115 members and management, and the other to carry instruments and baggage.

The orchestra has been brought to Australia by the ABC, after a goodwill tour of Asian countries.

It will be under the baton of famous composer-conductor Aaron Copland, a Pulitzer Prize and Academy Award winner.

During its 80 years the orchestra has come under more influences than most musical bodies.

It was founded by philanthropist Major Henry Lee Higginson, and the comment was often made that the orchestra knew more German music than any German, and then more French music than any Frenchman.

Major Higginson pursued a policy whereby he hired conductors, gave them a free hand and stood by them while they wooed Boston's favors.

On this basis conductors came and went.

Among them were George Henschel, who drew fire for his attachment to the modernism of Brahms and Wagner, Wilhelm Gericke, Artur Nikisch, Emil Paur, Max Fiedler, and Karl Muck.

But World War I. broke out and conductor Karl Muck was interned as an alien, Major Higginson resigned, and Frenchman Henri Rabaud became musical director.

FLAIR

A period of French influence followed culminating in Pierre Monteux, who finished his term in a dispute with the newly formed American Federation of Musicians.

A special flair was needed to abate the distrust with which Boston was now apt to regard its orchestra.

The man with the flair was Koussevitsky.

It was a day of great splendor for American orchestras.

- Stokowski headed the Philadelphia.
- Toscanini was with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony.

The Boston was not over-available and this enhanced its appeal. People strove for tickets to its concerts in Boston and on its extensive tours.

The orchestra's musical director since 1949 has been Charles Munch, who once described his job as that of a "priest."

Cont. on opp. page.

e concert next month

From opposite page.

In more mundane terms, he describes his greatest responsibility as keeping the programs and performances good enough to deserve well of the people of Boston.

But it is not only the people of Boston who benefit.

The orchestra is the most-travelled of all U.S. orchestras, ranging over the whole of the U.S. and on tours to Edinburgh, London, Dublin, and the Continent.

This volume of music-making costs money. To mount just one concert takes about £3,800.

The annual operating budget is about £887,232, of which the orchestra earns 90 per cent.

FRIENDS

The deficit is made up by an organisation known as the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by endowments and contributions.

A member of one of Boston's oldest families, Henry Cabot, is one of the main trustees of the Friends' organisation.

He explains his exertions by saying: "It's exciting, it's good fun, and it's a privilege."

In spite of the omnipresent deficit, the orchestra has proceeded confidently about its business of providing more and better music.

GIVING a sound-shell concert under the stars for the citizens is the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra. Scene is the banks of the Charles River, Boston, Massachusetts.

BOSTON HAS A HISTORY

Aaron Copland, , who will conduct here, has been called "The Dean of American Composers."

He was born in Brooklyn in 1900 and at the age of 21 went to Paris to study at the Fontainebleau School of Music.

His works have been performed extensively throughout the world and his ballet and film scores are widely known.

Present day jazz has had a marked influence on his works, such as the score for the ballet, "Appalachian Spring."

FURTHER

To accommodate the great orchestra in Adelaide's largest hall, the stage will be extended into the main floor area.

A special acoustic backdrop will also be built so the music will sound as near-perfect as possible.

Members of the orchestra will stop over in Adelaide during the weekend and leave for Melbourne on June 13.

Bookings for the performance open to ABC season ticket holders on Monday, and to the general public a week later on June 23.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872

JUN 7 - 1960

SYMPHONY IN BRISBANE

Brisbane, Australia — (Reuters) — The touring Boston Symphony Orchestra last night captivated its first Australian audience at a concert in Brisbane city hall.

—Advertisement

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.

19 MAY 1960

Airline which will fly the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Sydney to Adelaide for its concert here on June 11, is turning on what it terms a "typical" Australian lunch for the musicians. Menu is Australian sherry, kangaroo tail soup, baked barramundi, Australian white wine, Australian cheeses and Australian champagne. Typical? Of course. Just the sort of meal any of us might have at any drop of the hat.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

7 × JUN 1960

Orchestra arrives

The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in Sydney today for the opening tonight of its season at the Sydney Town Hall.

The orchestra wil play under the direction of Charles Munch.

Guests at tonight's performance will include the Governor-General (Lord Dunrossil) and Lady Dunrossil.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.

7 × JUN 1960

Arrival Of Boston Orchestra

The 108 members of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra would arrive in Adelaide in two airliners on Friday afternoon, the manager of the ABC in SA (Mr. J. S. Miller) said yesterday.

Two transport planes would bring the orchestra's 20,000 lb. of instruments and baggage.

The orchestra will give its one Adelaide concert in the Centennial Hall, Wayville, on Saturday night.

Mr. Miller said that the orchestra's programme for Saturday night would be Symphony No. 95 in C Minor (Haydn), Suite from the opera "The Tender Land" (Aaron Copland), and Symphony No. 5 in E Minor (Tschaikowsky).

The Adelaide concert would be conducted by the Pulitzer Prize-winning conductor-composer Aaron Copland.

Plans for the orchestra's concert had been booked out less than three days after general bookings opened, Mr. Miller said.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

191

1904 'Phone: MU 5133
STRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

om "SUNDAY MAIL"
Adelaide, S.A.

14 MAY 1960

to give Adelaide concert next month

GIVING a sound-shell concert under the stars for the citizens is the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra. Scene is the banks of the Charles River, Boston, Massachusetts.

From opposite page.

In more mundane terms, he describes his greatest responsibility as keeping the programs and performances good enough to deserve well of the people of Boston.

But it is not only the people of Boston who benefit.

The orchestra is the most-travelled of all U.S. orchestras, ranging over the whole of the U.S. and on tours to Edinburgh, London, Dublin, and the Continent.

This volume of music-making costs money. To mount just one concert takes about £3,800.

The annual operating budget is about £887,232, of which the orchestra earns 90 per cent.

FRIENDS

The deficit is made up by an organisation known as the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by endowments and contributions.

A member of one of Boston's oldest families, Henry Cabot, is one of the main trustees of the Friends' organisation.

He explains his exertions by saying: "It's exciting, it's good fun, and it's a privilege."

In spite of the omnipresent deficit, the orchestra has proceeded confidently about its business of providing more and better music.

BOSTON HAS A HISTORY

Aaron Copland, who will conduct here, has been called "The Dean of American Composers."

He was born in Brooklyn in 1900 and at the age of 21 went to Paris to study at the Fontainebleau School of Music.

His works have been performed extensively throughout the world and his ballet and film scores are widely known.

Present day jazz has had a marked influence on his works, such as the score for the ballet, "Appalachian Spring."

FURTHER

To accommodate the great orchestra in Adelaide's largest hall, the stage will be extended into the main floor area.

A special acoustic backdrop will also be built so the music will sound as near-perfect as possible.

Members of the orchestra will stop over in Adelaide during the weekend and leave for Melbourne on June 13.

Bookings for the performance open to ABC season ticket holders on Monday, and to the general public a week later on June 23.

91,000 AN SEETHED

- When this instalment ope Dempsey-Carpentier figh first million-dollar gate soon to take place.

French heavyweight fight star Georges Carpentier and I had ust finished our ound of golf and vere back in the ocker room. Carpentier smiled at ne and said:

"Jack, when our ight is done I hope ve will still be such ood friends."

We had worked ip a mild sweat acking around the ourse.

Carpentier stripped lown for a shower, and for the first time I could understand how he had knocked out some of those fighters overseas.

He had tremendous arms and legs, the sign of a puncher.

We had signed for either $300,000 or 50 per ent. of the gate. But a veek before the fight Kearns waived the 50 per ent.

"Just give us the 00,000 and we'll be appy," he said. Tex ickard, the promoter, as glad to oblige. As it urned out, our decision ost us $150,000.

The crowd started oming when the sun ose on July 2, and eople were still coming hen the fight started hat afternoon.

It was scheduled for 3 'clock, but at 1, the chief f police and the fire hief came to the place where I was waiting.

"It looks as if the arena's going to fall down," one of them said. "It's beginning to sway to and fro. Rickard wants to put the fight on before it ollapses and hurts a pentier for one second, no matter what has been written. He went as soon as I could arrange it.

When I was introduced, the only response from my 91,000 fellow Americans was a little applause and a low murmur.

I heard a man with a bull voice yell, "I hope you get killed." But when Carpentier was introduced they went wild.

Carpentier, to my surprise, had a terrific right. It landed high on my left cheekbone in the second.

If he had hit me on the chin there is a good chance he would have knocked me down, and a fair chance he would have knocked me out.

He followed it up like a real professional. He bounced five in a row off my head before I could hit him.

But then I hit him a right in the mouth, and I thought I had hi beaten.

In the fourth I hit h with a left hook and went down for n Another left sent down again, and whi was falling, I nailed with a right. Tim seconds of the round.

Georges had sho the courage any could show. H fought until he v conscious.

But I was pret about the way t had behaved, him and practica ing me. No ma you've got, you crowd to like y hill" in Sa then one fashionable hood.

This, I My moth gipsy mo and had bly hard

Now s and I h vants to They vous. S I got "Mo and Ange "You nice

THE SUND MA MAG

4200

---

rnal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872

JUN 7- 1960

tione transoceanic flight.

SYMPHONY IN BRISBANE

Brisbane, Australia — (Reuters) — The touring Boston Symphony Orchestra last night captivated its first Australian audience at a concert in Brisbane city hall.

—Advertisement

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.

1 9 MAY 1960

Airline which will fly the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Sydney to Adelaide for its concert here on June 11, is turning on what it terms a "typical" Australian lunch for the musicians. Menu is Australian sherry, kangaroo tail soup, baked barramundi, Australian white wine, Australian cheeses and Australian champagne. Typical? Of course. Just the sort of meal any of us might have at any drop of the hat.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

7 × JUN 1960

Orchestra arrives

The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in Sydney today for the 4opening tonight of its season at the Sydney Town Hall.

The orchestra wil play under the direction of Charles Munch.

Guests at tonight's performance will include the Governor-General (Lord Dunrossil) and Lady Dunrossil.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.

7 × JUN 1960

Arrival Of Boston Orchestra

The 108 members of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra would arrive in Adelaide in two airliners on Friday afternoon, the manager of the ABC in SA (Mr. J. S. Miller) said yesterday.

Two transport planes would bring the orchestra's 20,000 lb. of instruments and baggage.

The orchestra will give its one Adelaide concert in the Centennial Hall, Wayville, on Saturday night.

Mr. Miller said that the orchestra's programme for Saturday night would be Symphony No. 95 in C Minor (Haydn), Suite from the opera "The Tender Land" (Aaron Copland), and Symphony No. 5 in E Minor (Tschaikowsky).

The Adelaide concert would be conducted by the Pulitzer Prize-winning conductor-composer Aaron Copland.

Plans for the orchestra's concert had been booked out less than three days after general bookings opened, Mr. Miller said.

192

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

7 x JUN 1960 Adelaide, S.A.

Boston Symphony's Notable History

FROM A NEW YORK CORRESPONDENT

The old adage that music knows no frontiers is no more strikingly reflected than in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has arrived in Australia to give a series of concerts, including one in Adelaide on Saturday night.

NONE of the conductors who have directed the Boston Symphony since its founding 79 years ago has been American. The orchestra's tenth (and present) conductor, Dr. Charles Munch (pronounced "Moonsh"), is French, and—as at present composed—only 69 of the orchestra's 105 members are Americans.

This "internationalisation" of what is unquestionably America's finest symphony orchestra follows a tradition that goes back to the days when Central Europe virtually dominated the music world.

The orchestra owes its creation to an unfortunate accident in Vienna which prevented a promising young Bostonian from becoming a concert pianist just over 100 years ago. The young pianist, Henry L. Higginson, son of a leading Boston banker, turned his frustration over a permanently injured hand into assembling, more than 20 years later, a permanent symphony orchestra.

Mr. Higginson followed the family tradition of banking, but in 1881 he gathered together the best musicians he could obtain in Germany and Austria. He chose a young German conductor, George Henschel, to lead them, and announced concerts in downtown Boston.

Mr. Higginson built his orchestra with a watchful eye in the following years. The Boston Symphony was not a musical "society" which met periodically to make music together, but a permanently maintained organisation of skilled musicians.

☆

His main contribution, which the orchestra's trustees follow scrupulously to this day, was to establish the principle that the conductor must be "the boss" in every sense of the word—in programming, choice of soloists and guest conductors.

Thanks to this rule, each conductor added something to the orchestra's sheen.

The Vienna Opera's bearded Wilhelm Gericke "gave to the orchestra its excellent habits and ideals" during two periods—1884 to 1889 and 1898 to 1906, Mr. Higginson wrote later. Gericke, he said, "taught those violins to sing as violins sing in Vienna alone."

Europe's greatest conductor, the fiery Hungarian Arthur Nikisch (1889-93) taught how to "poetise," and perhaps he taught too well. Richard Strauss, guest conductor at a rehearsal in 1904, growled: "You play that finely, but a little too finely. I want some roughness here."

The Berlin Opera's Karl Muck, who took over the orchestra's direction from 1906 to 1918, gave the orchestra, according to a critic, "a living voice."

Muck's successor, the Frenchman Pierre Monteux, let it sing modern music — Stravinsky, Falla, Honegger, Milhaud.

Then, in 1924, the Russian Serge Koussevitzky, a magic figure in Europe, began what was to be the longest term for a single conductor — 25 years. Under his stern but benevolent rule, the Boston Symphony reached a peak of polished perfection, and American composers, subsidised and encouraged with commissions, found a new home.

☆

The performances of the Boston Symphony became legendary under his baton—a model of symphonic virtuosity. The names of the orchestra and its conductor (who died in 1951) seemed inseparable when, in 1948, he decided to retire.

The [illegible] choice then fell on Charles Munch, who was one of France's foremost musicians, and who had been the conductor of four orchestras in Paris.

Dr. Munch has worked indefatigably in the past 11 years in the United States and abroad. His appearances have invariably aroused critical acclaim—so much so that one critic described the orchestra's triumph as "monotonous."

The Boston Symphony completed its 1959-60 season of more than 100 engagements in 20 American cities before it left for Korea on April 29 on the first leg of its tour.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MERCURY"

Hobart, Tas.

Space Music Taped

SYDNEY.—Some young American composers were experimenting with electronics as a means of producing music without the use of microphones or similar equipment.

Mr. Aaron Copland, guest conductor and composer with the 107-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra, said this in Sydney yesterday.

The orchestra is making a nine-day visit to Australia.

Mr. Copland said electronic music produced without the use of microphones was impressed electronically on to tape and not recorded.

This system of producing music was revolutionary and was, perhaps, an indirect product of the space era.

It sounded unreal, as if it was coming from outer space.

"It would be suitable music to play for space fiction," he said.

Mr. Copland was unable to explain technically how music could be placed on tape without recording it first through a microphone.

However, he said it was worked on the principle of controlling static noise in the air to make the sounds conform to a musical pattern.

Manila Chronicle Monday, June 6, 1960

Seriously SPEAKING

BY I. P. SOLIONGCO

Thirteen thousand people listening to a concert consisting of one well-known piece and two more or less unfamiliar ones is a spectacle that is rare even in the cultural centers of Europe and America.

And yet, there was such a spectacle in the Rizal Memorial Stadium the other night when Dr. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the eloquent cerebrations of Walter Piston and the seductive sounds of Maurice Ravel.

What was proved that night is that not all the inhabitants of the capital of the Republic are votaries at the shrine of Neil Sedaka and that—and this is most important—the culturally inclined are not incapable of detecting excellence.

The United States government, which sponsored the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here, and Impresario Alfredo Lozano under whose management the orchestra performed, should be commended for the spectacle we have mentioned. They have proved the point that in this city of jeepney drivers and ward politicians the voice of the unlettered and the uncouth is not always dominant. We suggest that this reservoir for culture be exploited to the full if only to reach the more barbarous portion of the population by osmosis and contamination.

But the cultural life of a community cannot exclusively be musical. It should be as well-rounded as possible and it should include everything that will enrich the life of the people and make them receptive to what are known as the finer things of life.

It is for this reason that we suggest that the United States government send here American dramatic troupes to enable the Filipinos who have not had the chance to visit American or European cultural centers to sample American achievements on the stage. We understand that the United States government has done this in various European countries and there is no reason why it cannot do this in the Philippines.

After all, the best that has been done in the United States is not confined to music. The Bad Seed and Winterset, Mourning Becomes Electra and Long Day's Journey into Night are as noble specimens of the American cultural effort as the works of Copland and Harris and Piston.

An American dramatic troupe on the Philippine boards will not be, to be sure, as attractive to the population as, say, the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But it will have special audience in the colleges and universities. Certainly it will be as effective a purveyor of American civilization as a pianist or a singer or a violinist.

All this is not in deprecation of what has been done in the way of fomenting closer cultural ties between the Philippines and the United States. But if this purpose is to be served fully, there should be some variety. (6-6-60)

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 513

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTIN

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, V

7 JUN 196

Few book for pool

With a week to go, bookings for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Olympic Swimming Stadium on June 14, are only one-third of capacity.

The famed orchestra played to a capacity audience in Brisbane last night, and is expected to play to another in Sydney tonight.

It plans a two-night stop in Melbourne.

The June 13 performance at the Town Hall — capacity about 2500 — was booked out the first day of bookings, June 2.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Brisbane, Qld.

2 JUN 19

Envoy to attend concert

The United States Ambassador to Australia, Mr. W. J. Sebald, will arrive in Brisbane on Monday to attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Australian concert.

After the concert he will be among guests of the Premier, Mr. Nicklin, at a reception at Parliament House.

The 113 members of the orchestra will arrive at Eagle Farm airport from Manila on Sunday at 10 a.m.

The American Consul in Brisbane, Mr. John O'Grady, will be at the airport to greet them. The arrival scenes will be televised.

20 seats still available

Today there were 20 seats still to be sold for the one concert the orchestra will give in Brisbane.

The second half of the program will be broadcast, but the concert will not be televised.

The orchestra will leave for Sydney on Tuesday. Members will stay at Lennons in Brisbane.

192

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"ADVERTISER"
7 × JUN 1960 Adelaide, S.A.

Boston Symphony's Notable History

FROM A NEW YORK CORRESPONDENT

The old adage that music knows no frontiers is no more strikingly reflected than in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has arrived in Australia to give a series of concerts, including one in Adelaide on Saturday night.

NONE of the conductors who have directed the Boston Symphony since its founding 79 years ago has been American. The orchestra's tenth (and present) conductor, Dr. Charles Munch (pronounced "Moonsh"), is French, and—as at present composed—only 69 of the orchestra's 105 members are Americans.

This "internationalisation" of what is unquestionably America's finest symphony orchestra follows a tradition that goes back to the days when Central Europe virtually dominated the music world.

The orchestra owes its creation to an unfortunate accident in Vienna which prevented a promising young Bostonian from becoming a concert pianist just over 100 years ago. The young pianist, Henry L. Higginson, son of a leading Boston banker, turned his frustration over a permanently injured hand into assembling, more than 20 years later, a permanent symphony orchestra.

Mr. Higginson followed the family tradition of banking, but in 1881 he gathered together the best musicians he could obtain in Germany and Austria. He chose a young German conductor, George Henschel, to lead them, and announced concerts in downtown Boston.

Mr. Higginson built his orchestra with a watchful eye in the following years. The Boston Symphony was not a musical "society" which met periodically to make music together, but a permanently maintained organisation of skilled musicians.

☆

His main contribution, which the orchestra's trustees follow scrupulously to this day, was to establish the principle that the conductor must be "the boss" in every sense of the word—in programming, choice of soloists and guest conductors.

Thanks to this rule, each conductor added something to the orchestra's sheen.

The Vienna Opera's bearded Wilhelm Gericke "gave to the orchestra its excellent habits and ideals" during two periods—1884 to 1889 and 1898 to 1906, Mr. Higginson wrote later. Gericke, he said, "taught those violins to sing as violins sing in Vienna alone."

Europe's greatest conductor, the fiery Hungarian Arthur Nikisch (1889-93) taught how to "poetise," and perhaps he taught too well. Richard Strauss, guest conductor at a rehearsal in 1904, growled: "You play that finely, but a little too finely. I want some roughness here."

The Berlin Opera's Karl Muck, who took over the orchestra's direction from 1906 to 1918, gave the orchestra, according to a critic, "a living voice."

Muck's successor, the Frenchman Pierre Monteux, let it sing modern music—Stravinsky, Falla, Honegger, Milhaud.

Then, in 1924, the Russian Serge Koussevitzky, a magic figure in Europe, began what was to be the longest term for a single conductor — 25 years. Under his stern but benevolent rule, the Boston Symphony reached a peak of polished perfection, and American composers, subsidised and encouraged with commissions, found a new home.

☆

The performances of the Boston Symphony became legendary under his baton—a model of symphonic virtuosity. The names of the orchestra and its conductor (who died in 1951) seemed inseparable when, in 1948, he decided to retire.

The [illegible] choice then fell on Charles Munch, who was one of France's foremost musicians, and who had been the conductor of four orchestras in Paris.

Dr. Munch has worked indefatigably in the past 11 years in the United States and abroad. His appearances have invariably aroused critical acclaim—so much so that one critic described the orchestra's triumph as "monotonous."

The Boston Symphony completed its 1959-60 season of more than 100 engagements in 20 American cities before it left for Korea on April 29 on the first leg of its tour.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MERCURY"
Hobart, Tas.

Space Music Taped

SYDNEY.—Some young American composers were experimenting with electronics as a means of producing music without the use of microphones or similar equipment.

Mr. Aaron Copland, guest conductor and composer with the 107-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra, said this in Sydney yesterday.

The orchestra is making a nine-day visit to Australia.

Mr. Copland said electronic music produced without the use of microphones was impressed electronically on to tape and not recorded.

This system of producing music was revolutionary and was, perhaps, an indirect product of the space era.

It sounded unreal, as if it was coming from outer space.

"It would be suitable music to play for space fiction," he said.

Mr. Copland was unable to explain technically how music could be placed on tape without recording it first through a microphone.

However, he said it was worked on the principle of controlling static noise in the air to make the sounds conform to a musical pattern.

Manila Chronicle Monday, June 6, 1960

Seriously SPEAKING

BY I. P. SOLIONGCO

Thirteen thousand people listening to a concert consisting of one well-known piece and two more or less unfamiliar ones is a spectacle that is rare even in the cultural centers of Europe and America.

And yet, there was such a spectacle in the Rizal Memorial Stadium the other night when Dr. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the eloquent cerebrations of Walter Piston and the seductive sounds of Maurice Ravel.

What was proved that night is that not all the inhabitants of the capital of the Republic are votaries at the shrine of Neil Sedaka and that—and this is most important—the culturally inclined are not incapable of detecting excellence.

The United States government, which sponsored the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here, and Impresario Alfredo Lozano under whose management the orchestra performed, should be commended for the spectacle we have mentioned. They have proved the point that in this city of jeepney drivers and ward politicians the voice of the unlettered and the uncouth is not always dominant. We suggest that this reservoir for culture be exploited to the full if only to reach the more barbarous portion of the population by osmosis and contamination.

But the cultural life of a community cannot exclusively be musical. It should be as well-rounded as possible and it should include everything that will enrich the life of the people and make them receptive to what are known as the finer things of life.

It is for this reason that we suggest that the United States government send here American dramatic troupes to enable the Filipinos who have not had the chance to visit American or European cultural centers to sample American achievements on the stage. We understand that the United States government has done this in various European countries and there is no reason why it cannot do this in the Philippines.

After all, the best that has been done in the United States is not confined to music. The Bad Seed and Winterset, Mourning Becomes Electra and Long Day's Journey into Night are as noble specimens of the American cultural effort as the works of Copland and Harris and Piston.

An American dramatic troupe on the Philippine boards will not be, to be sure, as attractive to the population as, say, the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But it will have special audience in the colleges and universities. Certainly it will be as effective a purveyor of American civilization as a pianist or a singer or a violinist.

All this is not in deprecation of what has been done in the way of fomenting closer cultural ties between the Philippines and the United States. But if this purpose is to be served fully, there should be some variety.

(6-6-60)

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"HERALD"
Melbourne, Vic.
7 JUN 1960

Few book for pool

With a week to go, bookings for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Olympic Swimming Stadium on June 14, are only one-third of capacity.

The famed orchestra played to a capacity audience in Brisbane last night, and is expected to play to another in Sydney tonight.

It plans a two-night stop in Melbourne.

The June 13 performance at the Town Hall — capacity about 2500 — was booked out the first day of bookings, June 2.

'Phone: MU 5133

I PRESS CUTTINGS
bourne, Victoria

LEGRAPH"
Brisbane, Qld.

ıvoy to ttend concert

The United States Ambassador to Australia, Mr. W. J. Sebald, will arrive in Brisbane on Monday to attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Australian concert.

After the concert he will be among guests of the Premier, Mr. Nicklin, at a reception at Parliament House.

The 113 members of the orchestra will arrive at Eagle Farm airport from Manila on Sunday at 10 a.m.

The American Consul in Brisbane, Mr. John O'Grady, will be at the airport to greet them. The arrival scenes will be televised.

20 seats still available

Today there were 20 seats still to be sold for the one concert the orchestra will give in Brisbane.

The second half of the program will be broadcast, but the concert will not be televised.

The orchestra will leave for Sydney on Tuesday. Members will stay at Lennons in Brisbane.

193

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

6 × JUN 1960

An orchestra on the move

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra members had really been looking forward to Brisbane after sleeping — or staying awake — in plane seats and in Japanese inns with headrests made from rice hulls, the orchestra's manager's wife said yesterday.

Tall, slim, charming, Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, jnr., and her husband arrived in Brisbane with the orchestra yesterday. The orchestra will give its first Australian performance on this tour here.

Before arriving in Australia the orchestra gave concerts in Taiwan, Japan, and Manila. "We're very happy to be here after the intense heat of Manila," Mrs. Perry said.

Hostess

Mrs. Perry doesn't always accompany her husband when he is travelling with the orchestra. "But I've been fortunate enough to accompany him on the last three tours, including this one," she said.

Being official social hostess for the orchestra keeps Mrs. Perry very busy while the orchestra is on tour.

During the rest of the year, despite duties most women do not have to cope with, she manages to find time for more interests than many women.

Her official duties include answering the telephone and writing all the "thank-you" letters for hospitality the orchestra receives on tour.

She takes a keen interest in the garden of more than an acre which surrounds their Hingham, Boston, home, is a trustee of a library in Hingham, works with handicapped children, and is sending home a series of articles to a Boston newspaper.

"I would very much like to see your botanic gardens and museum. I understand you have a very good art collection," she said.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry have two sons, Doane, almost 18, and Rodney, 15, who are boarders at Exeter Academy, Hampshire, Massachusetts.

Pride

There was a hint of maternal pride in Mrs. Perry's voice as she confessed that Doane (Thomas D. Perry III) had just been accepted for entry into Yale University — where his father was a student—in September.

Mrs. Perry finds it "great fun" working and travelling with the orchestra, which she describes as a "wonderful group."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SPECTATOR"

Hamilton, Vic.

Entire Concert for Broadcast

On Thursday, June 9, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its final Sydney concert at the town hall.

This performance will include works by Samuel Barber, Debussy and Brahms.

3WV and 3WL will broadcast the entire concert commencing at 8 p.m.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

6 JUN 1960 Sydney, N.S.W.

11.

Boston Symphony Orchestra arrives

BRISBANE, Sun. — The world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in Brisbane today.

Three aircraft brought the orchestra's 108 members, instruments worth £100,000 and 20,000lb. of personal baggage.

The orchestra will give its first Australian concert tomorrow night in Brisbane.

This will begin a 10-day tour, which will take the orchestra to Sydney and Melbourne.

Two of music's "big men," conductor Dr. Charles Munch and American composer Aaron Copland are with the orchestra.

Mr. Copland will study Australian works.

Brisbane musicians said today his sponsorship could bring these works international recognition.

Tidal waves

The orchestra was in Japan, when it was struck by the tidal wave created by the Chilean earthquakes.

It cancelled a scheduled tour of South Korea because of riots which were sweeping the country.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUNDAY TIMES"

Perth, W.A.

5 × JUN 1960

This Week in RADIO

Musical feast from concerts

By GEORGE WILLIAMS, The Sunday Times Radio Writer

THE first U.S. symphony orchestra to play in Australia arrives in Brisbane today, and WF listeners this week will hear three concerts of its tour.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to Australia as part of President Eisenhower's program to encourage cultural exchange.

On WF at 8.15 p.m. Tuesday and 8 p.m. Thursday, Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in two concerts from Sydney Town Hall.

Tuesday's broadcast will include Symphonie Fantastique (Berlioz), and on Thursday Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance, and Three Symphonic Sketches (Debussy) will be played.

On Wednesday at 9.15 p.m. Aaron Copland will conduct two of his own compositions—Symphony Suite No. 1 and Suite from the opera, The Tender Land.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

3 JUN 1960

Orchestral party

The ABC will hold an informal party for members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Swiss Inn Home Cafe, Kings Cross, after their Stadium concert on Wednesday.

The general manager of the A.B.C., Mr. Charles Moses, and Mrs. Moses will receive the 150 guests.

Official guests will include Sir Richard and Lady Boyer, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Lowndes, Sir Bernard and Lady Heinze, Dr. and Mrs. Nicolai Malko and the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr Thomas Perry, and Mrs Perry.

A typical Australian menu has been planned for the visitors, including kangaroo tail soup, Sydney oysters, Australian fillet steak, South Australian champagne and Hunter River claret.

From

"MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

5 × JUN 1960

Page 31

RECORDS by Hugh Bingham

History of the Boston

DID you know . . . that the Boston Symphony Orchestra made America's first "talking box" symphonic record in 1916 . . . that the recording was of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony . . . and that each player performed directly into a recording horn — or raced forward to do so . . .

Did you also know that . . . the orchestra's first electrical recording was Beethoven's "Pastoral" . . . that dynamic Russian-born conductor Serge Koussevitsky revitalised the strings and the repertoire . . . and once gave a rectial in which he played Beethoven's Minuet in G on a DOUBLE BASS!

Tour Russia

And you probably do know that the Boston Symphony consists of 101 men and 3 women, that its present conductor is Charles Munch; that — in 1956 —it was the first western orchestra to tour the Soviet Union.

To present this fascinating mixture of historic detail and friendly storytelling is the purpose of a special RCA long-play record issued this week—in time for the Australian tour of the Boston.

The record is "A Musical History of the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops."

It is narrated by Milton Cross—and the tracks go back to that first "talking box" recording of Tchaikovsky's Fourth.

The second side relates to the "Pops"—and its conductor Arthur Fiedler, for 31 years director of this off-shoot of the full orchestra.

Light music

Fiedler has been more than a conductor. Through his canny programming, his sponsoring of American music, and his special ability to ferret out wonderful but forgotten light music, the "Pops" moved out from Boston traditions to world fame.

I've kept the best news about this record to the last—it's price. It's been costed down to an astonishing 15/6 compared with the normal £2/17/6.

How? Publishers, orchestra, conductors, copyright holders simply gave up their due to make a low-cost commemorative issue possible.

If the Boston Symphony disc hadn't come up this week, this column would have featured instead one of the finest Stereo discs yet issued.

It's of America's ballet cowboy music—Aaron Copland's "Billy the Kid" and "Rodeo." This long-needed coupling is recorded by Morton Gould and his orchestra.

Love story

There is nothing "horse opera-ish" about Copland's music. He was determined to avoid cowboy heroics in his description of William Bonney, the Brooklyn-born desperado who terrified the West in the 1870's.

So instead "The Kid" tells more of the pioneer spirit of a restless people moving across a tough continent.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"ADVERTISER"
7 x JUN 1960 Adelaide, S.A.

Boston Symphony's Notable History

FROM A NEW YORK CORRESPONDENT

The old adage that music knows no frontiers is no more strikingly reflected than in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has arrived in Australia to give a series of concerts, including one in Adelaide on Saturday night.

NONE of the conductors who have directed the Boston Symphony since its founding 79 years ago has been American. The orchestra's tenth (and present) conductor, Dr. Charles Munch (pronounced "Moonsh"), is French, and—as at present composed—only 69 of the orchestra's 105 members are Americans.

This "internationalisation" of what is unquestionably America's finest symphony orchestra follows a tradition that goes back to the days when Central Europe virtually dominated the music world.

The orchestra owes its creation to an unfortunate accident in Vienna which prevented a promising young Bostonian from becoming a concert pianist just over 100 years ago. The young pianist, Henry L. Higginson, son of a leading Boston banker, turned his frustration over a permanently injured hand into assembling, more than 20 years later, a permanent symphony orchestra.

Mr. Higginson followed the family tradition of banking, but in 1881 he gathered together the best musicians he could obtain in Germany and Austria. He chose a young German conductor, George Henschel, to lead them, and announced concerts in downtown Boston.

Mr. Higginson built his orchestra with a watchful eye in the following years. The Boston Symphony was not a musical "society" which met periodically to make music together, but a permanently maintained organisation of skilled musicians.

☆

His main contribution, which the orchestra's trustees follow scrupulously to this day, was to establish the principle that the conductor must be "the boss" in every sense of the word—in programming, choice of soloists and guest conductors.

Thanks to this rule, each conductor added something to the orchestra's sheen.

The Vienna Opera's bearded Wilhelm Gericke "gave to the orchestra its excellent habits and ideals" during two periods—1884 to 1889 and 1898 to 1906, Mr. Higginson wrote later. Gericke, he said, "taught those violins to sing as violins sing in Vienna alone."

Europe's greatest conductor, the fiery Hungarian Arthur Nikisch (1889-93) taught how to "poetise," and perhaps he taught too well. Richard Strauss, guest conductor at a rehearsal in 1904, growled: "You play that finely, but a little too finely. I want some roughness here."

The Berlin Opera's Karl Muck, who took over the orchestra's direction from 1906 to 1918, gave the orchestra, according to a critic, "a living voice."

Muck's successor, the Frenchman Pierre Monteux, let it sing modern music—Stravinsky, Falla, Honegger, Milhaud.

Then, in 1924, the Russian Serge Koussevitzky, a magic figure in Europe, began what was to be the longest term for a single conductor — 25 years. Under his stern but benevolent rule, the Boston Symphony reached a peak of polished perfection, and American composers, subsidised and encouraged with commissions, found a new home.

☆

The performances of the Boston Symphony became legendary under his baton—a model of symphonic virtuosity. The names of the orchestra and its conductor (who died in 1951) seemed inseparable when, in 1948, he decided to retire.

The [illegible] choice then fell on Charles Munch, who was one of France's foremost musicians, and who had been the conductor of four orchestras in Paris.

Dr. Munch has worked indefatigably in the past 11 years in the United States and abroad. His appearances have invariably aroused critical acclaim—so much so that one critic described the orchestra's triumph as "monotonous."

The Boston Symphony completed its 1959-60 season of more than 100 engagements in 20 American cities before it left for Korea on April 29 on the first leg of its tour.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MERCURY"
Hobart, Tas.

Space Music Taped

SYDNEY.—Some young American composers were experimenting with electronics as a means of producing music without the use of microphones or similar equipment.

Mr. Aaron Copland, guest conductor and composer with the 107-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra, said this in Sydney yesterday.

The orchestra is making a nine-day visit to Australia.

Mr. Copland said electronic music produced without the use of microphones was impressed electronically on to tape and not recorded.

This system of producing music was revolutionary and was, perhaps, an indirect product of the space era.

It sounded unreal, as if it was coming from outer space.

"It would be suitable music to play for space fiction," he said.

Mr. Copland was unable to explain technically how music could be placed on tape without recording it first through a microphone.

However, he said it was worked on the principle of controlling static noise in the air to make the sounds conform to a musical pattern.

Manila Chronicle Monday, June 6, 1960

Seriously SPEAKING

BY I. P. SOLIONGCO

Thirteen thousand people listening to a concert consisting of one well-known piece and two more or less unfamiliar ones is a spectacle that is rare even in the cultural centers of Europe and America.

And yet, there was such a spectacle in the Rizal Memorial Stadium the other night when Dr. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the eloquent cerebrations of Walter Piston and the seductive sounds of Maurice Ravel.

What was proved that night is that not all the inhabitants of the capital of the Republic are votaries at the shrine of Neil Sedaka and that—and this is most important—the culturally inclined are not incapable of detecting excellence.

The United States government, which sponsored the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here, and Impresario Alfredo Lozano under whose management the orchestra performed, should be commended for the spectacle we have mentioned. They have proved the point that in this city of jeepney drivers and ward politicians the voice of the unlettered and the uncouth is not always dominant. We suggest that this reservoir for culture be exploited to the full if only to reach the more barbarous portion of the population by osmosis and contamination.

But the cultural life of a community cannot exclusively be musical. It should be as well-rounded as possible and it should include everything that will enrich the life of the people and make them receptive to what are known as the finer things of life.

It is for this reason that we suggest that the United States government send here American dramatic troupes to enable the Filipinos who have not had the chance to visit American or European cultural centers to sample American achievements on the stage. We understand that the United States government has done this in various European countries and there is no reason why it cannot do this in the Philippines.

After all, the best that has been done in the United States is not confined to music. The Bad Seed and Winterset, Mourning Becomes Electra and Long Day's Journey into Night are as noble specimens of the American cultural effort as the works of Copland and Harris and Piston.

An American dramatic troupe on the Philippine boards will not be, to be sure, as attractive to the population as, say, the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But it will have special audience in the colleges and universities. Certainly it will be as effective a purveyor of American civilization as a pianist or a singer or a violinist.

All this is not in deprecation of what has been done in the way of fomenting closer cultural ties between the Philippines and the United States. But if this purpose is to be served fully, there should be some variety. (6-6-60)

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"HERALD"
Melbourne, Vic.
7 JUN 1960

Few book for pool

With a week to go, bookings for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Olympic Swimming Stadium on June 14, are only one-third of capacity.

The famed orchestra played to a capacity audience in Brisbane last night, and is expected to play to another in Sydney tonight.

It plans a two-night stop in Melbourne.

The June 13 performance at the Town Hall — capacity about 2500 — was booked out the first day of bookings, June 2.

'Phone: MU 5133

I PRESS CUTTINGS
bourne, Victoria

LEGRAPH"
Brisbane, Qld.

voy to ttend concert

The United States Ambassador to Australia, Mr. W. J. Sebald, will arrive in Brisbane on Monday to attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Australian concert.

After the concert he will be among guests of the Premier, Mr. Nicklin, at a reception at Parliament House.

The 113 members of the orchestra will arrive at Eagle Farm airport from Manila on Sunday at 10 a.m.

The American Consu in Brisbane, Mr. John O'Grady, will be at the airport to greet them. The arrival scenes will be televised.

20 seats still available

Today there were 20 seats still to be sold for the one concert the orchestra will give in Brisbane.

The second half of the program will be broadcast, but the concert will not be televised.

The orchestra will leave for Sydney on Tuesday. Members will sta at Lennons in Brisbane.

193

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

6× JUN 1960

An orchestra on the move

BOSTON Symphony Orchestra members had really been looking forward to Brisbane after sleeping — or staying awake — in plane seats and in Japanese inns with headrests made from rice hulls, the orchestra's manager's wife said yesterday.

Tall, slim, charming, Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, jnr., and her husband arrived in Brisbane with the orchestra yesterday. The orchestra will give its first Australian performance on this tour here.

Before arriving in Australia the orchestra gave concerts in Taiwan, Japan, and Manila. "We're very happy to be here after the intense heat of Manila," Mrs. Perry said.

Hostess

Mrs. Perry doesn't always accompany her husband when he is travelling with the orchestra. "But I've been fortunate enough to accompany him on the last three tours, including this one," she said.

Being official social hostess for the orchestra keeps Mrs. Perry very busy while the orchestra is on tour.

During the rest of the year, despite duties most women do not have to cope with, she manages to find time for more interests than many women.

Her official duties include answering the telephone and writing all the "thank-you" letters for hospitality the orchestra receives on tour.

She takes a keen interest in the garden of more than an acre which surrounds their Hingham, Boston, home, is a trustee of a library in Hingham, works with handicapped children, and is sending home a series of articles to a Boston newspaper.

"I would very much like to see your botanic gardens and museum. I understand you have a very good art collection," she said.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry have two sons, Doane, almost 18, and Rodney, 15, who are boarders at Exeter Academy, Hampshire, Massachusetts.

Pride

There was a hint of maternal pride in Mrs. Perry's voice as she confessed that Doane (Thomas D. Perry III) had just been accepted for entry into Yale University — where his father was a student—in September.

Mrs. Perry finds it "great fun" working and travelling with the orchestra, which she describes as a "wonderful group."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SPECTATOR"

Hamilton, Vic.

[illegible]

Entire Concert for Broadcast

On Thursday, June 9, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its final Sydney concert at the town hall.

This performance will include works by Samuel Barber, Debussy and Brahms.

3WV and 3WL will broadcast the entire concert commencing at 8 p.m.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

6 JUN 1960 Sydney, N.S.W.

11.

Boston Symphony Orchestra arrives

BRISBANE, Sun. — The world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in Brisbane today.

Three aircraft brought the orchestra's 108 members, instruments worth £100,000 and 20,000lb. of personal baggage.

The orchestra will give its first Australian concert tomorrow night in Brisbane.

This will begin a 10-day tour, which will take the orchestra to Sydney and Melbourne.

Two of music's "big men," conductor Dr. Charles Munch and American composer Aaron Copland are with the orchestra.

Mr. Copland will study Australian works.

Brisbane musicians said today his sponsorship could bring these works international recognition.

Tidal waves

The orchestra was in Japan when it was struck by the tidal wave created by the Chilean earthquakes.

It cancelled a scheduled tour of South Korea because of riots which were sweeping the country.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUNDAY TIMES"

Perth, W.A.

5× JUN 1960

This Week in RADIO

Musical feast from concerts

By GEORGE WILLIAMS, The Sunday Times Radio Writer

THE first U.S. symphony orchestra to play in Australia arrives in Brisbane today, and WF listeners this week will hear three concerts of its tour.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to Australia as part of President Eisenhower's program to encourage cultural exchange.

On WF at 8.15 p.m. Tuesday and 8 p.m. Thursday, Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in two concerts from Sydney Town Hall.

Tuesday's broadcast will include Symphonie [illegible] (Berlioz), and on Thursday Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance, and Three Symphonic Sketches (Debussy) will be played.

On Wednesday at 9.15 p.m. Aaron Copland will conduct two of his own compositions—Symphony Suite No. 1 and Suite from the opera, The Tender Land.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

3 JUN 1960

Orchestral party

The ABC will hold an informal party for members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Swiss Inn Home Cafe, Kings Cross, after their Stadium concert on Wednesday.

The general manager of the A.B.C., Mr. Charles Moses, and Mrs. Moses will receive the 150 guests.

Official guests will include Sir Richard and Lady Boyer, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Lowndes, Sir Bernard and Lady Heinze, Dr. and Mrs. Nicolai Malko and the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr.

Thomas Perry, and Mrs. Perry.

A typical Australian menu has been planned for the visitors, including kangaroo tail soup, Sydney oysters, Australian fillet steak, South Australian champagne and Hunter River claret.

From

"MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

5× JUN 1960

Page 31

RECORDS by Hugh Bingham

History of the Boston

DID you know . . . that the Boston Symphony Orchestra made America's first "talking box" symphonic record in 1916 . . . that the recording was of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony . . . and that each player performed directly into a recording horn — or raced forward to do so . . .

Did you also know that . . . the orchestra's first electrical recording was Beethoven's "Pastoral" . . . that dynamic Russian-born conductor Serge Koussevitsky revitalised the strings and the repertoire . . . and once gave a rectial in which he played Beethoven's Minuet in G on a DOUBLE BASS!

Tour Russia

And you probably do know that the Boston Symphony consists of 101 men and 3 women, that its present conductor is Charles Munch; that — in 1956 —it was the first western orchestra to tour the Soviet Union.

To present this fascinating mixture of historic detail and friendly story-telling is the purpose of a special RCA long-play record issued this week—in time for the Australian tour of the Boston.

The record is "A Musical History of the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops."

It is narrated by Milton Cross—and the tracks go back to that first "talking box" recording of Tchaikovsky's Fourth.

The second side relates to the "Pops"—and its conductor Arthur Fiedler, for 31 years director of this off-shoot of the full orchestra.

Light music

Fiedler has been more than a conductor. Through his canny programming, his sponsoring of American music, and his special ability to ferret out wonderful but forgotten light music, the "Pops" moved out from Boston traditions to world fame.

I've kept the best news about this record to the last—it's price. It's been costed down to an astonishing 15/6 compared with the normal £2/17/6.

How? Publishers, orchestra, conductors, copyright holders simply gave up their due to make a low-cost commemorative issue possible.

If the Boston Symphony disc hadn't come up this week, this column would have featured instead one of the finest Stereo discs yet issued.

It's of America's ballet cowboy music—Aaron Copland's "Billy the Kid" and "Rodeo." This long-needed coupling is recorded by Morton Gould and his orchestra.

Love story

There is nothing "horse opera-ish" about Copland's music. He was determined to avoid cowboy heroics in his description of William Bonney, the Brooklyn-born desperado who terrified the West in the 1870's.

So instead "The Kid" tells more of the pioneer spirit of a restless people moving across a tough continent.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

1960

THIS week, one of the world's great orchestras, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will visit Australia.

The first American orchestra to come to Australia, it will arrive by air from Manila on Monday, and will give a concert in the Brisbane City Hall on Monday night.

The first all States broadcast will be heard from 5AN at 7.30 p.m. on Tuesday.

In this performance Charles Munch will conduct "Symphony Fantastique" (Berlioz).

On Thursday, Munch will conduct the orchestra in its final Sydney concert at the Town Hall.

"Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance," by Samuel Barber, the American composer, and "La Mer" (Debussy) will be broadcast from 5AN at 7.30 p.m.

The Australian visit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is part of a tour the orchestra is making of the Far East under the terms of President Eisenhower's Programme, which encourages cultural visits to countries outside America.

On its tour the orchestra has played in Japan, Formosa, the Philippines, and after its Australian visit will go to New Zealand.

This is one of the many overseas tours it has made under the President's Programme.

Founded in 1881, it is the second oldest symphonic organisation in the United States.

The present Musical Director, Charles Munch, is one of a line of distinguished permanent conductors who have guided this orchestra, which gives 220 concerts a year.

Est. 1904 'Phone

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUT

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Brisba

6 JUN 1960

TONING-UP

Dr. Keran Chobanian (right), of Boston, the physician accompanying the Boston Symphony Orchestra, dispenses to cello player Mischa Nieland for a cold from his £900 medicine chest. The orchestra will give its one Brisbane concert in the City Hall tonight.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

6 JUN 1960

THE NEWS

End this highbrow stranglehold on Adelaide's music

John Fahey's article in The News, "Pops Go the People," on Saturday was a humorous fantasy. But it has aroused so much argument and enthusiasm this weekend that it may lead to a revolution in South Australian music.

The arrival of the fabulous 110-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra to play in Centennial Hall on Saturday night lends point to the needs of tens of thousands of South Australians who are starved for [illegible] popular music they crave from Adela[illegible] many admirable musicians.

The SA Symphony Orchestra has 45 players. This does not mean there are only 45 musicians of sufficient standard. It means that neither the City Fathers nor the ABC has yet tapped the real money that music commands.

For years the good, cultured highbrows of Adelaide have exerted an understandable but tyrannical and essentially narrow control over what music can be dispensed by our only sizeable orchestra.

So, each month, thousands of pounds go to music from the pockets of Adelaide's lovers of popular music. But it all goes to the platter merchants, the disc retailers, and the big world-wide recording houses. Not sixpence of it goes to promote, pay for, or publicise our local musicians.

Professors of music and authorities on symphony music know much more about music than the ordinary citizen.

But there is no reason on God's green earth why they should strive perpetually to ram their educated highbrow tastes down his unappreciative, ignorant throat.

For every keen music lover who craves for Bach's "Brandenburgs," Beethoven's symphonies, or Wagner's super-gods, there are two dozen who get immense pleasure from very much simpler, lighter music.

Some of us—despite music teachers—even float a little off the ground as we listen to such "common" pops as Pinza or Tozzi singing "Some Enchanted Evening" or "Bali Ha'i." In our ignorance, blissful if uncultured, we do not pretend indifference when Julie Andrews sings "I Could Have Danced All Night."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

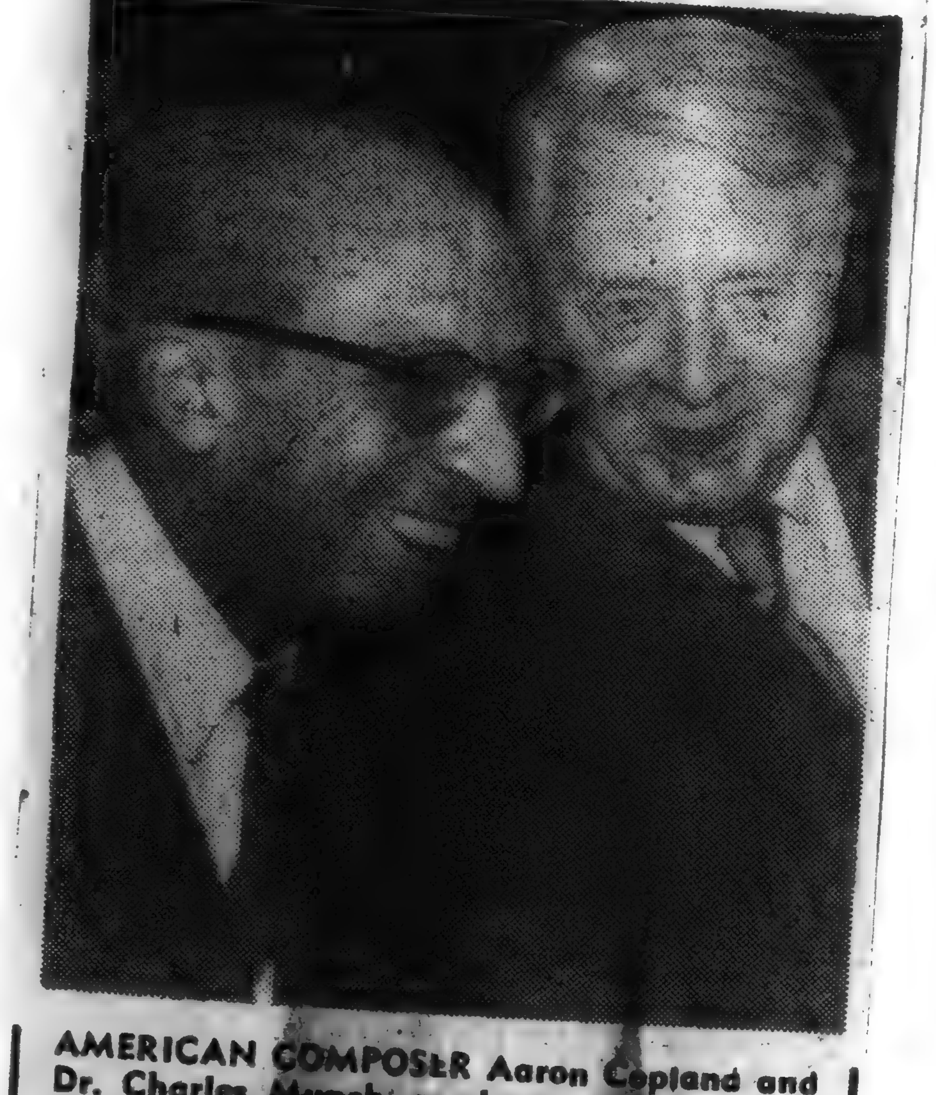
From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

6 JUN 1960

Arrived in Brisbane



AMERICAN COMPOSER Aaron Copland and Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the airport in Brisbane after their arrival from Manila yesterday. The orchestra will give two concerts in Melbourne next week — at Melbourne Town Hall on June 13, and at the Olympic swimming pool on June 14. (Picturegram).

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Bris

7 JUN 1960

SLEEP SHADE

Be[illegible] Boston Sym[illegible] Orchestra [illegible] for Sydney [illegible] two shilling [illegible] and a penny [illegible] eyes provided [illegible]rary "black-out" for William Meyer, a trombone player, who enjoyed some sunbaking at Eagle Farm airport while waiting to board his plane. At least one other player admitted to weariness after last night's Brisbane concert.

194

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.

1960

THIS week, one of the world's great orchestras, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will visit Australia.

The first American orchestra to come to Australia, it will arrive by air from Manila on Monday, and will give a concert in the Brisbane City Hall on Monday night.

The first all States broadcast will be heard from 5AN at 7.30 p.m. on Tuesday.

In this performance Charles Munch will conduct "Symphony Fantastique" (Berlioz).

On Thursday, Munch will conduct the orchestra in its final Sydney concert at the Town Hall.

"Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance," by Samuel Barber, the American composer, and "La Mer" (Debussy) will be broadcast from 5AN at 7.30 p.m.

The Australian visit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is part of a tour the orchestra is making of the Far East under the terms of President Eisenhower's Programme, which encourages cultural visits to countries outside America.

On its tour the orchestra has played in Japan, Formosa, the Philippines, and after its Australian visit will go to New Zealand.

This is one of the many overseas tours it has made under the President's Programme.

Founded in 1881, it is the second oldest symphonic organisation in the United States.

The present Musical Director, Charles Munch, is one of a line of distinguished permanent conductors who have guided this orchestra, which gives 220 concerts a year.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"TELEGRAPH"
Brisbane, Qld.

6 JUN 1960

TONING-UP

↑ Dr. Keran Chobanian (right), of Boston, the physician accompanying the Boston Symphony Orchestra, dispenses to cello player Mischa Nieland for a cold from his £900 medicine chest. The orchestra will give its one Brisbane concert in the City Hall tonight.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

6 JUN 1960

Arrived in Brisbane

AMERICAN COMPOSER Aaron Copland and Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the airport in Brisbane after their arrival from Manila yesterday. The orchestra will give two concerts in Melbourne next week — at Melbourne Town Hall on June 1[illegible] and at the Olympic swimming pool on June 14. (Picturegram).

From
"TELEGRAPH"
Brisbane, Qld.

7 JUN 1960

SLEEP SHADE

↑ Be[illegible] Boston Sym[illegible] Orchestra [illegible] for Sydney [illegible] two shilling [illegible]nd a penny [illegible] eyes provided [illegible]rary "black-out" for William Moyer, a trombone player, who enjoyed some sunbaking at Eagle Farm airport while waiting to board his plane. At least one other player admitted to weariness after last night's Brisbane concert.

'Phone: MU 5133

CUTTINGS

aide, S.A.

THE NEWS

End this highbrow stranglehold on Adelaide's music

John Fahey's article in The News, "Pops Go the People," on Saturday was a humorous fantasy. But it has aroused so much argument and enthusiasm this weekend that it may lead to a revolution in South Australian music.

The arrival of the fabulous 110-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra to play in Centennial Hall on Saturday night lends point to the needs of tens of thousands of South Australians who are starved for the popular music they crave from Adela[illegible] many admirable musicians.

The SA Symphony Orchestra has 4[illegible] players. This does not mean there ar[illegible] only 45 musicians of sufficient standard. It means that neither the City Fathers nor the ABC has yet tapped the real money that music commands.

For years the good, cultured highbrows of Adelaide have exerted an understandable but tyrannical and essentially narrow control over what music can be dispensed by our only sizeable orchestra.

So, each month, thousands of pounds [illegible]o to music from the pockets of Adelaide's [illegible]vers of popular music. But it all goes to [illegible] platter merchants, the disc retailers, [illegible] the big world-wide recording houses. [illegible]ixpence of it goes to promote, pay for, [illegible]licise our local musicians.

[illegible]essors of music and authorities on [illegible]y music know much more about [illegible]an the ordinary citizen.

[illegible]re is no reason on God's green [illegible] they should strive perpetually [illegible]ir educated highbrow tastes [illegible]ppreciative, ignorant throat.

[illegible]een music lover who craves [illegible]randenburgs," Beethoven's [illegible] Wagner's super-gods, there [illegible]ho get immense pleasure [illegible] simpler, lighter music.

[illegible] spite music teachers— [illegible] off the ground as we [illegible] pops as Pinza [illegible]ne Enchanted Even[illegible]. In our ignorance, [illegible]ultured, we do not pretend [illegible] when Julie Andrews sings "I [illegible] Have Danced All Night."

TIGHT BINDING

195

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Geelong, Vic.

17 MAY 19

RECORD DIGEST -- -- -- By Tom Ramsey

Bach's Brandenburg's

My enthusiasm this week was absorbed by admirable recordings of concertos – from Bach's complete Brandenburg's to an interesting collection of trumpet concertos on Pye and Ace of Clubs.

And seeing that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit Melbourne soon I was especially enthralled to hear it accompany the great violinist, Jascha Heifetz in Mendelssohn and Prokofieff.

First of all we shall deal with Decca's Brandenburg's, by the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra and Soloists under Karl Munchinger (LXTA-5512/3). Here every detail of the Bach instrumentation is revealed.

The blending and intelligent balancing of the various solo passages show off the instrumental colors impeccably. This attention to minute has not prevented the conductor from keeping a tight but resilient grip on the rhythms, nor does he overlook the remarkable expressions of the music.

Each recording has an intimate acoustic and reproduces smoothly, with exemplary clarity. In all they are a most desirable and satisfactory set of performances.

TRUMPET CONCERTOS (Pye ILC-5001) features works by Purcell and Haydn by the Ensemble of Ancient Instruments conducted by Pierre Davevey, and works of Vivaldi, Torelli and Clarke by the Collegium Musicum under Roland Douatte. An intriguing selection I must say. The Vivaldi "Concerto for Two Trumpets" is a lovely piece of music and here it is splendidly played by soloists Roger Delmotte and Albert Adriano. All performers were, I thought, thoroughly good and the recording as a whole made a very lasting impression.

"MUSIC FOR TRUMPET AND ORCHESTRA" (Ace Of Clubs ACLA-56) is in a similar vein to the Pye recording with works by Haydn, Vivaldi and Purcell.

The Unicorn Concert Orchestra with trumpet soloists Roger Voisin and Armando Ghitalla offer a vividly presented recording and some of the playing will set your blood tingling.

~~THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA~~ is under its principal conductor Charles Munch and offers some really exhilirating violin playing by the veteran Heifetz on R.C.A. (L16222).

It is interesting to hote that Heifetz first played the Mendelssohn Concerto 52 years ago — when he was seven years old. It is amazing to think that after 52 years here he is again, playing the same concerto, right in our lounge rooms. What a glowingly alive performance it is too. So is his playing in the Prokofieff No. 2 Concerto in G Minor. This record is a must for all. The accompaniment by the Boston Symphony is first-rate. Heifetz's violin, by the way, is a Stradivarius, made in Cremona in 1741 and valued at £25,000.

S.M.H. June 6-60

TOP MUSICIANS

The American composer, Aaron Copland (left), and the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr Charles Munch, after they arrived in Brisbane from the Philippines yesterday. Mr Copland will travel with the orchestra during its Australian season.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

6 - JUN 19

Boston Symphony concert

VICE-REGAL PARTY

The Governor-General, Viscount Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil, will attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Sydney concert, in the Sydney Town Hall on Tuesday night.

Other guests in the official party will include the Chairman of the A.B.C., Sir Richard Boyer, and Lady Boyer, the director of the Sydney Conservatorium, Sir Bernard Heinze, and Lady Heinze, and the musical director and conductor of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Nicolai Malko, and Mrs. Malko.

The manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Thomas Perry, and Mrs. Perry, and ABC Commissioner Mr. A. G. Lowndes and Mrs. Lowndes will also be in the official party.

The Governor (Lieut-General Sir Eric Woodward) and Lady Woodward, who are to be official guests at the concert at the Stadium on Wednesday night, will also attend the third concert, in the Sydney Town Hall, on Thursday night, as guests of the U.S. Ambassador (Mr. William J. Sebald).

The Premier (Mr. R. J. Heffron) and Mrs. Heffron, the Acting-Minister for External Affairs (Sir Garfield Barwick) and Lady Barwick, the Federal president of the Australian-American Association (Mr. E. K. White) and Mrs. White, and the State president (Mr. R. Keith Yorston) and Mrs. Yorston, U.S. Consul Mr. Orray Taft and Mrs. Taft, the Chief Justice (Dr. H. V. Evatt) and Mrs. Evatt and the chairman of the Sydney Symphony Orchestral Committee (Lady Lloyd Jones) and Mr. Charles Lloyd Jones will be among the guests in Mr. Sebald's party.

After the concert Mr. and Mrs. Taft plan to entertain at a supper party in the U.S. Consul-General's residence, Craigend, Darling Point.

The United States Information Officer, Mr. Richard Joyce and Mrs. Joyce will entertain officials accompanying the Boston Symphony Orchestra at their Vaucluse home before the concert on Tuesday.

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

9 - JUN 1960

Bostonians Play To 5,000 Crowd

If Senator McCarthy had been alive to hear how "Russian" the Boston Symphony Orchestra was to be in Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony at the Stadium last night, he might well have hailed them all before the Senate Committee for a witch-hunt as furious as Salem's.

The Russian atmosphere was set at once by the weather, and most of the orchestra, rugged up in overcoats as they played, blew upon cold hands and drummed cold feet to provide an additional counterpoint for a score already colourful enough to display the magnificent resources of heart and skill that this orchestra had to devote to it.

With an audience of more than 5,000 people shivering with a combination of excitement and cold, the whole event reminded one of the two little islands near Boston that go by the names of Great Misery and Little Misery, the weather casting itself as the first and Tchaikovsky's ghost (happier than in the "Pathetique") casting itself as the second.

Still, so far as weather goes, Bostonians ought to be among the most philosophic people in the world—Mark Twain once counted 124 different kinds of weather in their home town within a space of 30 hours.

GORGEOUS STRINGS

aluation of the performance ductor Richard s not possible seat a few feet

from the conductor and the rear desks of the first violins. String tone was quite gorgeous, but brass and timpani shot their messages high overhead to come to earth in remoter quarters of the Stadium.

The applause was deafening—at the Stadium. It was clear that there was a very definite meaning for the KO in Tchaikovsky's name.

Composer Aaron Copland conducted two of his own works in the second half—a symphony from his youth when, like most young composers, he was hoping to sound middle-aged; and a three-movement opera-derived orchestral suite from later life ("The Tender Land") where, true to the eternal paradox, the impulse was to be young.

Both proved thoroughly presentable works of, perhaps, no great durability. A powerful rhythmic sense—as in the spiky off-beat chirpings of the symphony's scherzo, and the county-fair dance around the prize pumpkins in the suite's finale—and a rich feeling for orchestral colour were considerable consolation for the patent lack of thematic invention of any notable order.—L.B.

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

"Outer Space" Music Made Electronically

Some young American composers were experimenting with electronics and producing music which sounded as if it was coming from outer space, the American composer Aaron Copland said yesterday.

Mr Copland is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrived in Sydney from Brisbane yesterday in three chartered Ansett-A.N.A. airliners.

He said electronic music was impressed on to tape without the use of microphones.

This system of producing music was revolutionary and, perhaps, an indirect product of the space era.

This music sounded unreal.

"It would be suitable music to play for space fiction," he said.

"Research work into this type of musical production made a great advance when the R.C.A. Victor Company invented an electronic device called a synthesiser."

"It produces electronic sounds much quicker than by older methods."

Mr Copland said three American composers who were carrying out this research work were Otto Luening and Vladimir Ussachevsky, both of Columbia University, and Milton Babbitt of Princeton University.

Mr Copland said rock 'n' roll was just a temporary phase, but jazz had come to stay.

TIGHT BINDING

195

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"ADVERTISER"
Geelong, Vic.

17 MAY 1960

RECORD DIGEST -- -- -- By Tom Ramsey

Bach's Brandenburg's

My enthusiasm this week was absorbed by admirable recordings of concertos — from Bach's complete Brandenburg's to an interesting collection of trumpet concertos on Pye and Ace of Clubs.

And seeing that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will visit Melbourne soon I was especially enthralled to hear it accompany the great violinist, Jascha Heifetz in Mendelssohn and Prokofieff.

First of all we shall deal with Decca's Brandenburg's, by the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra and Soloists under Karl Munchinger (LXTA-5512/3). Here every detail of the Bach instrumentation is revealed.

The blending and intelligent balancing of the various solo passages show off the instrumental colors impeccably. This attention to minute has not prevented the conductor from keeping a tight but resilient grip on the rhythms, nor does he overlook the remarkable expressions of the music.

Each recording has an intimate acoustic and reproduces smoothly, with exemplary clarity. In all they are a most desirable and satisfactory set of performances.

TRUMPET CONCERTOS (Pye ILC-5001) features works by Purcell and Haydn by the Ensemble of Ancient Instruments conducted by Pierre Davevey, and works of Vivaldi, Torelli and Clarke by the Collegium Musicum under Roland Douatte. An intriguing selection I must say. The Vivaldi "Concerto for Two Trumpets" is a lovely piece of music and here it is splendidly played by soloists Roger Delmotte and Albert Adriano. All performers were, I thought, thoroughly good and the recording as a whole made a very lasting impression.

"MUSIC FOR TRUMPET AND ORCHESTRA" (Ace Of Clubs ACLA-56) is in a similar vein to the Pye recording with works by Haydn, Vivaldi and Purcell.

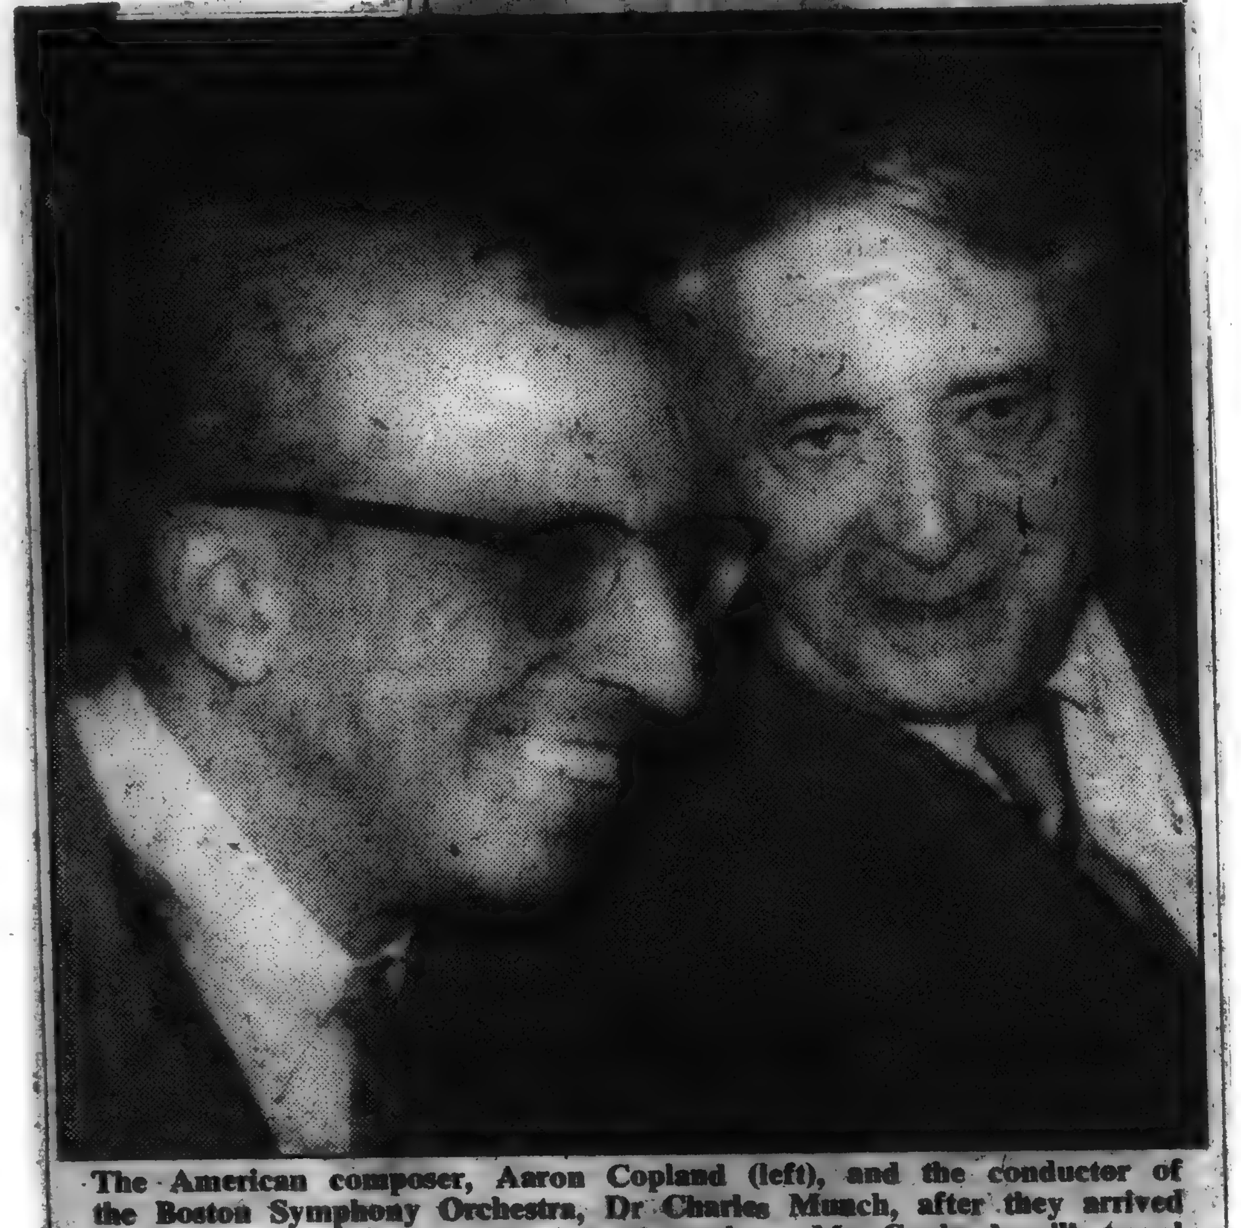
The Unicorn Concert Orchestra with trumpet soloists Roger Voisin and Armando Ghitalla offer a vividly presented recording and some of the playing will set your blood tingling.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is under its principal conductor Charles Munch and offers some really exhilirating violin playing by the veteran Heifetz on R.C.A. (L16222).

It is interesting to hote that Heifetz first played the Mendelssohn Concerto 52 years ago — when he was seven years old. It is amazing to think that after 52 years here he is again, playing the same concerto, right in our lounge rooms. What a glowingly alive performance it is too. So is his playing in the Prokofieff No. 2 Concerto in G Minor. This record is a must for all. The accompaniment by the Boston Symphony is first-rate. Heifetz's violin, by the way, is a Stradivarius, made in Cremona in 1741 and valued at £25,000.

S.M.H. June 6-60

TOP MUSICIANS



The American composer, Aaron Copland (left), and the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr Charles Munch, after they arrived in Brisbane from the Philippines yesterday. Mr Copland will travel with the orchestra during its Australian season.

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

5 JUN 1960

Boston Symphony conce

VICE-REGAL PARTY

The Governor-General, Viscount Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil, will attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Sydney concert, in the Sydney Town Hall on Tuesday night.

Other guests in the official party will include the Chairman of the A.B.C., Sir Richard Boyer, and Lady Boyer, the director of the Sydney Conservatorium, Sir Bernard Heinze, and Lady Heinze, and the musical director and conductor of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Nicolai Malko, and Mrs. Malko.

The manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Thomas Perry, and Mrs. Perry, and ABC Commissioner Mr. A. G. Lowndes and Mrs. Lowndes will also be in the official party.

The Governor (Lieut-General Sir Eric Woodward) and Lady Woodward, who are to be official guests at the concert at the Stadium on Wednesday night, will also attend the third concert, in the Sydney Town Hall, on Thursday night, as guests of the U.S. Ambassador (Mr. William J. Sebald).

The Premier (Mr. R. J. Heffron) and Mrs. Heffron, the Acting-Minister for External Affairs (Sir Garfield Barwick) and Lady Barwick, the Federal president of the Australian-American Association (Mr E. K. White) and Mrs White, and the State president (Mr. R. Keith Yorston) and Mrs. Yorston, U.S. Consul Mr. Orray Taft and Mrs. Taft, the Chief Justice (Dr. H. V. Evatt) and Mrs. Evatt, and the chairman of the Sydney Symphony Orchestral Committee (Lady Lloyd Jones) arranged in conjunction with the opening of new Knox Private in Double Bay, toda opening is timed p.m.

Judy Cass man, Elsie William

Boston Symphony Orchestra at their [illegible] before the [illegible] Tuesday.

From
"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

9 - JUN 1960

Bostonians Play To 5,000 Crowd

If Senator McCarthy had been alive to hear how "Russian" the Boston Symphony Orchestra was to be in Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony at the Stadium last night, he might well have hailed them all before the Senate Committee for a witch-hunt as furious as Salem's.

The Russian atmosphere was set at once by the weather, and most of the orchestra, rugged up in overcoats as they played, blew upon cold hands and drummed cold feet to provide an additional counterpoint for a score already colourful enough to display the magnificent resources of heart and skill that this orchestra had to devote to it.

With an audience of more than 5,000 people shivering with a combination of excitement and cold, the whole event reminded one of the two little islands near Boston that go by the names of Great Misery and Little Misery, the weather casting itself as the first and Tchaikovsky's ghost (happier than in the "Pathetique") casting itself as the second.

Still, so far as weather goes, Bostonians ought to be among the most philosophic people in the world—Mark Twain once counted 124 different kinds of weather in their home town within a space of 30 hours.

GORGEOUS STRINGS

Close evaluation of the Tchaikovsky performance under conductor Richard Burgin was not possible from our seat a few feet from the conductor and the rear desks of the first violins. String tone was quite gorgeous, but brass and timpani shot their messages high overhead to come to earth in remoter quarters of the Stadium.

The applause was deafening—at the Stadium. It was clear that there was a very definite meaning for the KO in Tchaikovsky's name.

Composer Aaron Copland conducted two of his own works in the second half—a symphony from his youth when, like most young composers, he was hoping to sound middle-aged; and a three-movement opera-derived orchestral suite from later life ("The Tender Land") where, true to the eternal paradox, the impulse was to be young.

Both proved thoroughly presentable works of, perhaps, no great durability. A powerful rhythmic sense—as in the spiky off-beat chirpings of the symphony's scherzo, and the county-fair dance around the prize pumpkins in the suite's finale—and a rich feeling for orchestral colour were considerable consolation for the patent lack of thematic invention of any notable order.—L.B.

From
"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

"Outer Space" Music Made Electronically

Some young American composers were experimenting [illegible] electronics and producing music which sounded as if it was [illegible] from outer space, the American composer Aaron Copland [illegible] yesterday.

Mr Copland is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrived in Sydney from Brisbane yesterday in three [illegible] Ansett-A.N.A. [illegible]

He said electronic music was impressed on to tape without the use of microphones.

This system of producing music was revolutionary and, perhaps, an indirect product of the space era.

This music sounded unreal.

"It would be suitable music to play for space fiction," he said.

"Research work into this type of musical production made a great advance when the R.C.A. Victor Company invented an electronic device called a synthesiser."

"It produces electronic sounds much quicker [illegible] by older methods."

Mr Copland said the American composers [illegible] were carrying out this research work were Otto Lu[illegible] ing and Vladimir Ussach[illegible] sky, both of Columbia University, and Milton [illegible] of Princeton University.

Mr Copland said rock [illegible] roll was just a [illegible] phase, but jazz had come to stay.

New York

Sydney Morning Herald

PRICE, 5d

One Hundred And Thirtieth Year Of Publication · 48 PAGES · SYDNEY, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1960

SUN: Today rises 6.55, sets 4.53.
MOON: Rises 3.59 p.m., sets 4.52 a.m.
TIDES (Fort Denison): High 6.58 a.m. (4ft 10in), 7.21 p.m. (6ft 2in). Low, 0.56 a.m. (11in), 12.49 p.m. (10in).

THE MUSICIANS FROM BOSTON

The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in Sydney from Brisbane yesterday and had their first look at Sydney from a bus that took them from Kingsford Smith airport, Mascot, to the city. A trombonist, Josef Orosz (top left), sat quietly, clutching a wicker basket. E. Paneka (top right), who plays the bassoon and arrived in Sydney wearing a Digger's hat, poked his head through a window for a better view. Leslie Martin (above), the 24-stone double bass player, sat gingerly—on two bus seats.

Orchestra Packs Town Hall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played to a capacity house at its opening concert in Sydney at the Town Hall last night.

The concert, which was attended by the Governor-General, Lord Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil, had all the glitter of a theatre "first night."

The audience of 2,300 regular Sydney concert-goers gave the orchestra a tremendous ovation, especially for its brilliant performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantasque, the principal work on the program.

The second part of the program consisted of works by Dello Joio and Roussel.

The orchestra arrived for its three-day visit only yesterday.

Tonight, at Sydney Stadium, it will play to an audience expected to number between [illegible] and 7,000.

The last [illegible] concert by the world-renowned orchestra will be at the Town Hall tomorrow night. This has been fully booked out [illegible]

Est. 1904 · 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

7 JUN

THERE has been surprise that plans are going ahead for a performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Olympic Swimming Stadium. Folk have been deciding whether the best seats would be at the deep or the shallow end. But as one man said: "It's not so surprising really. It would be a better story if the orchestra had a swim at the Town Hall.

—Keith Dunstan

Est. 1904 · 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

ONE ORCHESTRA, THREE PLANES

THE 104 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by their conductor, Charles Munch, trooped through Mascot terminal at noon yesterday.

Munch, stern-faced and grey-haired beneath his homburg, walked steadfastly to a waiting car. No, he could not answer questions; he was tired. He had conducted last night in Brisbane, and would do so again in Sydney tonight.

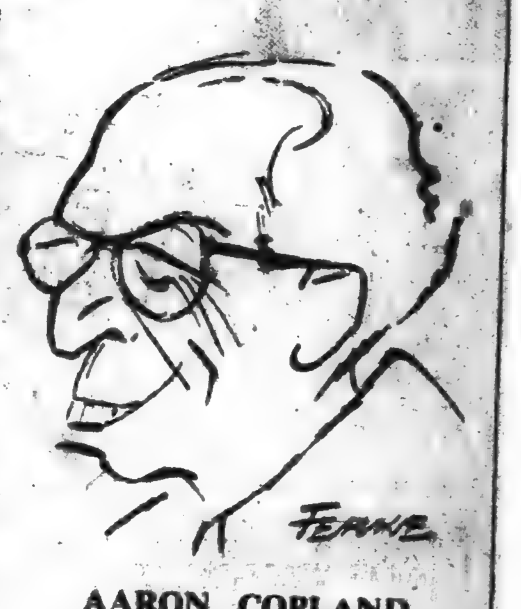
But Aaron Copland, looking like a benign raven in his long black coat, had time to spare.

Of all serious American composers, this 60-year-old native of Brooklyn is unquestionably the best known abroad. But he is not the only one. Mr Copland is as ready to talk about America's other composers as he is to point out that Boston is only one of 30 major symphony orchestras in the United States.

By A STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Walter Piston, Roger Sessions, Roy Harris, Virgil Thomson, Samuel Barber, William Schuman, and of course Copland himself; all these, in Mr Copland's view, add up to a recognisable American school. "Harris and Schuman, for example, tend to write an optimistic and straightforward form of music," he said yesterday. "It is rhythmic, and it has large forms. It is the reflection of a big country."

Much of Mr Copland's own work also reflects a big country, and like many another American composer he has made use both of folk themes (his 1954 opera, "The Tender Land") and to a lesser extent jazz (the second movement of Symphony No. 1).



AARON COPLAND

Has he started work on another opera? "You don't just start an opera. You work at it for years, and then suddenly one night it all collapses on you. You think twice before you start an opera—if you're smart."

The last of the musicians were now passing through the terminal. Mr Copland moved over to the television cameras, and an A.B.C. official introduced Mr Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concert master. "Ask him about Malko," said the man from the A.B.C. Yes, Mr Burgin knew Dr Malko of old. They had been fellow students at the conservatoire in St. Petersburg.

Over in the corner, Mr Copland was now facing the cameras. ". . . We need three planes, two for the men and one for luggage. Unless you've seen an orchestra on the move, with all the tympani and harps, you can never imagine what goes into the giving of a concert."

197

Est. 1904 Phone MU

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From

Truth

5 × JUN 1960 Brisbane, Qld.

The famous banker's band comes to Brisbane

CHARLES MUNCH

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrives in Brisbane this morning, once was known as "The Banker's Band."

The orchestra will play its first Australian concert to a sell-out City Hall audience to-morrow night.

Its founder, Major H. L. Higginson, of Boston, was a successful banker — but not by choice.

His family were bankers and he was expected to follow in the tradition.

But he had a passionate love of music which took him to Vienna, where he studied the piano.

An arm injury put an abrupt end to his piano playing and he returned to the United States—and banking.

As a banker he proved such a success that, in 1881 at the age of 47, he was able to create and finance the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For nearly 40 years he met its deficits every year until his death in 1919.

Before this, however, he retired from active management of the orchestra's affairs and a corporation took over direction.

In 1934, Henry Cabot and his fellow trustees founded the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to help maintain it by contributions.

It is now financed partly by income and endowments and partly by contributions from its friends.

The orchestra's musical director since 1949 has been Charles Munch, who will be principal conductor for the Australian tour.

Guest conductor will be Aaron Copland, probably America's best known living composer.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor, will also conduct some of the Australian concerts.

No one in the orchestra earns less than £3150 a year at regular orchestra work.

The more important members, of course, make substantially more.

It costs £3800 to organise a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert.

A sell-out in the United States usually brings in £3100.

The deficit of £800 multiplied by 220 concerts a year gives a grand annual deficit of £176,000.

Friends and wellwishers see to it that the money is found.

Henry Cabot, whose family is one of the oldest in Boston says: "It's a privilege to be associated with the orchestra—even in the lowly role of raising money."

Boston—indeed all America—is proud of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was written years ago that in Boston the leader of the orchestra is more important than the mayor.

Charles Munch, however, is a shy man who dislikes after-concert receptions and other formal occasions.

The Boston Symphony is the second oldest orchestra in the United States. But it has a truly universal musical outlook.

Its visit here is the first to Australia by any great American orchestra.

Its presentation is one of the most ambitious projects ever undertaken by the A.B.C.

The 10-day tour is part of the Eisenhower program to encourage cultural visits overseas.

The Boston Symphony, which has the longest season of any American orchestra, giving an average of 220 concerts a year, was the first western orchestra to appear in the Soviet Union.

The conclusion of its opening concert in Leningrad's Philharmonic Hall in 1956 was marked by an unforgettable outburst of demonstrative enthusiasm.

The clamorous call for more, continuing for eight minutes, was silenced only by the encore.

There were similar outbursts in Moscow, where the orchestra was acclaimed by Russian musicians including David Oistrakh, Shostakovich, Kabalevsky and Khachaturian.

To mark its 75th anniversary, the orchestra, in association with the Koussevitsky Music Foundation of the U.S. Library of Congress, commissioned 15 new works by composers all over the world.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"LISTENER-IN"

Melbourne, Vic.

4 - JUN 1960

Brahms' First Symphony week's finest broadcast

Last week's more substantial items included a brilliant piano concerto, a performance of "The Magic Flute," and an evening devoted to "The Damnation of Faust."

But, to my mind, the week's finest broadcast—and this covers interpretation and performance as well as reproduction—came from none of these, but from one of the most familiar items of the standard concert repertoire.

This was the First Symphony of Brahms as played by Sir Malcolm Sargent and the VSO on Wednesday night. The powerful opening of this symphony usually sounds so massive and confused that I had come to the conclusion that the sound is too big and complex for a mere microphone to handle.

But in this performance the conductor, presumably without giving the microphone a thought, tidied up the complexities and strengthened the outlines, so that the whole work gained in power and nobility — and was actually easier to listen to.

At a time when some conductors are seeking individuality by highlighting subordinate and unsuspected details, Sir Melcolm seems to be doing very well on the opposite tack — by judiciously suppressing excessive detail in the interests of clarity.

The recording of "The Magic Flute," as performed by the Elizabethan Theatre Trust Company, was another example of an opera like some brilliant tropical fish, losing all its [illegible] taken from its proper environment.

Of course, the fact that it was performed in English made the opera a little easier to follow; but with some operas this sensible proceeding seems to be a liability rather than an improvement — at least when they are heard in cold blood.

Not that the music itself suffered. The reproduction was better than in some of the earlier broadcasts, and the singing, although varied in quality, was excellent on occasions. The soprano Valda Bagnal was outstanding.

The highlights of next week's programs should be the first broadcast by the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Sydney, and the concerts by the VSO with Lois Marshall, the Canadian soprano, as guest soloist.

S. G. DUNN

This week's laurels to:

SIR MALCOLM SARGENT for his interpretation of the Brahms First Symphony with the VSO (Wednesday, 3LO).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

31 MAY 1960

Bostonians' Accent On France, U.S.

By "The Herald" Music and Theatre Critics.

IT is not surprising that the emphasis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's programs in Sydney next week will be on music from France and the United States.

The conductor, Charles Munch, is a Frenchman and the tour is a cultural mission financed by Washington.

Conspicuous among the American works chosen for performance here are Aaron Copland's first symphony and his "Tender Land" suite, both of which will be conducted by the composer at the Stadium concert on June 8, and Samuel Barber's "Medea," which Charles Munch will conduct at the final Town Hall concert on June 9.

French music will include Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique" at next Tuesday's opening concert by Munch, and Debussy's "La Mer" two nights later.

The second oldest symphonic organisation in the United States (it was founded in 1881), the Boston Symphony Orchestra averages 220 concerts a year—the longest season of any American orchestra.

The character of the orchestra is so distinct that American composer-critic Virgil Thomson was able, 14 years ahead, to predict that Charles Munch, whom he had heard conducting in Paris, would one day lead the Boston.

* * *

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

9 - JUN

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, now in Australia, has several fine LPs out this week, notably a 15/6 LP that RCA put out to introduce the famous orchestra to us lucky disc-users. It went like hot cakes, the second pressing has gone too, and the third has just hit town.

Besides this cheap sampler, there's a regular LP called The French Touch by the Boston under Charles Munch, its regular conductor. The Sorcerer's Apprentice, of Dukas, and Saint-Saens' Omphale's Spinning Wheel are one side, Ravel's Mother Goose Suite, the other. All this fairy stuff makes surprisingly good music, an entity with variety. L 16227.

★

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"COURIER MAIL"
Brisbane, Qld.

6 x JUN 1960

From Boston to Brisbane

BIG WELCOME at Brisbane Airport yesterday for Boston Symphony Orchestra double-bass player Leslie R. ("Tiny") Martin came from Barry Edington, 4, of Camp Hill. "Tiny", 24 stone, sat in two plane seats on the orchestra's flight from Manila.

There will be no slip

CITY HALL stage extensions will be thoroughly mopped before tonight's first Australian concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — to make sure conductor Charles Munch and his musicians don't slip.

Workmen surfaced the extensions with hardboard laid shiny side up.

Wetting the smooth hardboard will make it less slippery for Dr. Munch when he comes out to take his place on his own portable, canvas-covered podium.

Cello and double bass players will rest their instrument pegs in drilled wooden blocks to prevent them skidding.

Special planes

Lighting for the orchestra will be twice as powerful as that for normal City Hall orchestral concerts.

The 108 members of the Boston "music party" ended an overnight flight from Manila, capital of the Philippines, at Brisbane Airport yesterday.

They travelled, 54 to a plane, in a Qantas Electra and a Flying Tiger Line Constellation.

Baggage weighing 20,000-lb. arrived in a third plane, a Civil Air Transport freighter from Formosa, with the Nationalist China flag painted on its tail.

The players hope nothing happens to Australia while they are here.

Revolutionary riots forced them to abandon their Korean visit and go to Formosa instead.

Japan death

Tidal waves struck Japan while they were there. And they missed a typhoon in Manila by only two days.

But the orchestra has suffered only one casualty so far. A viola player died in Japan.

A violin insured for 8000 dollars belonging to concertmaster Richard L. Burgin was damaged in Formosa, but can be repaired.

Many of the players were laden with Asian souvenirs as they filed through a quick Customs clearance.

Violinist George Zazofsky struggled with a big square parcel containing an outsize monkey-wood salad bowl from Manila.

"I bought it in a moment of madness," he said. He will lump it back to Waban, Massachusetts.

Wants oddity

Clarinettist Felix A. Viscuglia shouldered a 16-stringed Chinese harp he bought in Formosa for 20 dollars American.

He picked up a balalaika when the orchestra was in Russia. Now he is hoping to find something distinctive in Australia.

Birth-places of the players represent 15 different nationalities. Oldest of them is bass-player Henry Girard, who will be 72 this month.

WARM-UP in the winter sun at Brisbane Airport yesterday for these members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are (from left) Ayrton Pinto (violin), Olivia Luetcke (harp), and Robert Karol (viola).

From
"COURIER MAIL"
Brisbane, Qld.

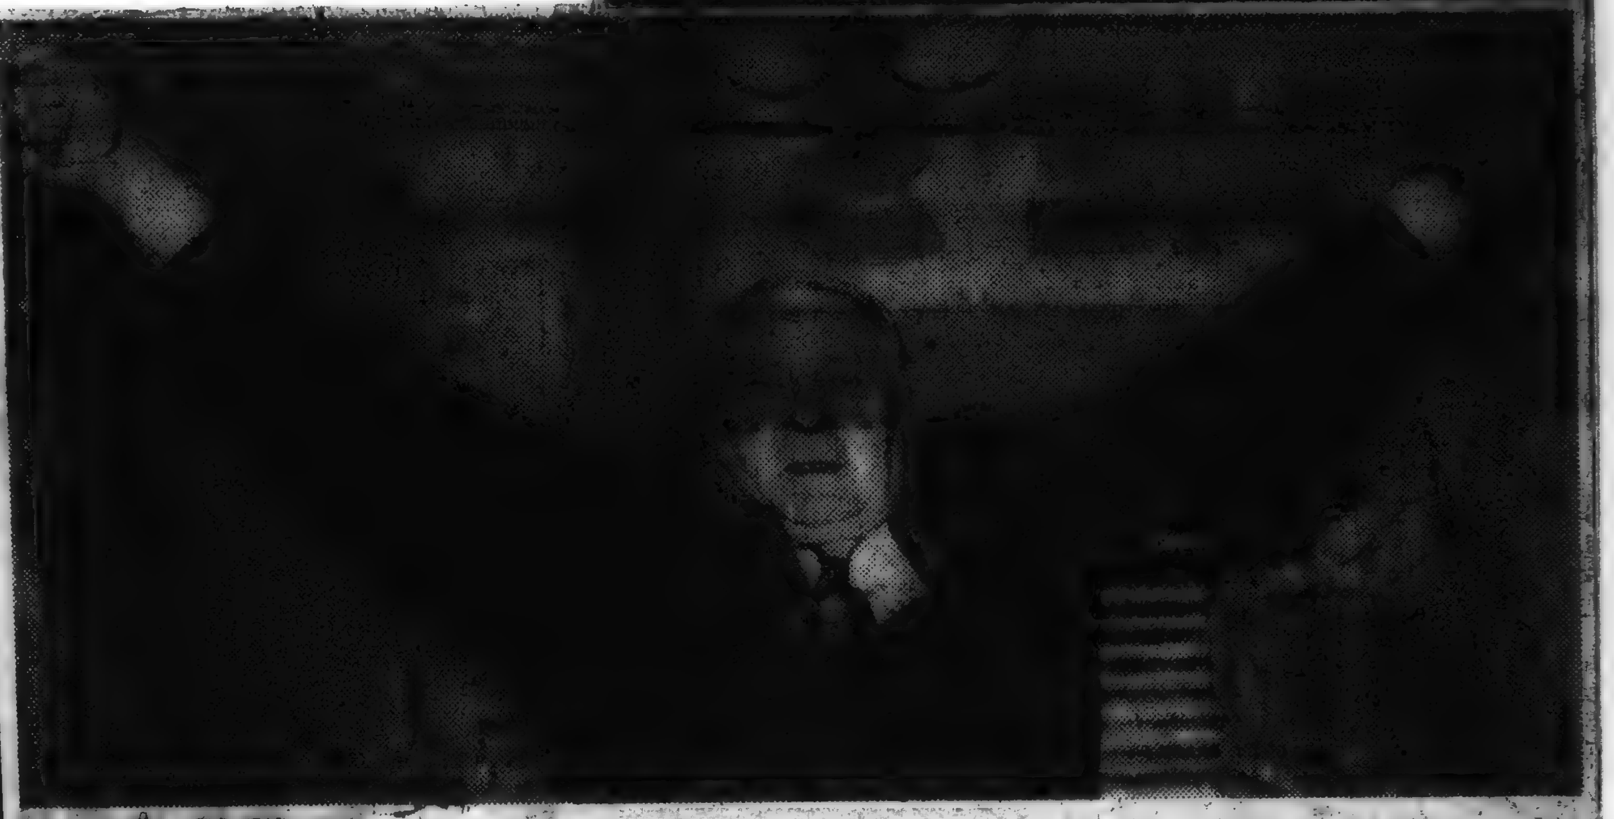
198

7 JUN 1960

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

allans

KEEPING IN TONE



THE BIG STRETCH as Dr. Charles Munch, 68, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, did his daily physical jerks at his Brisbane hotel yesterday morning. Dr. Munch regularly exercises, particularly before conducting.

BOSTON MUSIC WINS CHEERS

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra conquered its first Australian audience completely in the City Hall last night. And the packed audience's reaction made the orchestra certain it is going to enjoy its 10-day Australian tour.

Everything was "marvellous" for conductor Charles Munch after he had just finished the second encore of the night to a tumult of applause.

The audience? "Marvellous," he said. The hall? "Marvellous too."

Dr. Munch said he had been very happy with the acoustics of the hall from his position on the podium.

Leading American composer Aaron Copland, who sat in the audience, described the hall as wonderful "after some of the halls the orchestra has been in recently." But he said the strings had not sounded quite as brilliant as usual.

A total of 2330 concert-goers crowded into the hall. The choir seats facing the conductor were full. Some music-lovers sat on extra seats placed in the aisles, and even on the orchestra platform itself.

The audience, which included the Governor (Sir Henry Abel Smith), brought Dr. Munch back four times after the Beethoven "Eroica" Symphony, and there were cheers after the brilliance of the Ravel "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2.

Even a totally unfamiliar new American work, Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, had a warm reception.

As encores the orchestra played Wagner's "Mastersingers" Overture and the Berlioz Rakoczy March.

The American Ambassador to Australia (Mr. William J. Sebald) told the audience the United States was very happy to bring one of its main cultural assets to Australia.

Concert one to remember

BY DR. W. LOVELOCK

IT is difficult to speak of the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra except in superlatives; the trouble is that one's stock of them is inadequate.

At the City Hall last evening they gave us, under the direction of their conductor Charles Munch, such playing as I have not heard for many a long day, and which I hardly hope to hear again for an equally long time.

It is needless to speak of the quality of their attack, balance, blending and integration of tone — such matters can be taken for granted in any first-class orchestra.

Beautiful tone

What impressed one was the simply lovely sound which Dr. Munch obtained, whether in piano or forte, whether in Beethoven or Piston or Ravel. In every department beauty of tone is pre-eminent, and every soloist is an artist of fine calibre.

Dr. Munch's reading of the Eroica Symphony is as convincing as I have ever heard; it has breadth of conception, intimacy of detail, and an intensity, especially in parts of the Funeral March, which I have rarely heard equalled.

One hesitates to single out any particular player or players. But I cannot forbear to remark on the artistry of the solo oboe, and on the simply gorgeous playing of the horns in the trio of the Scherzo.

Effective work

We rarely have the opportunity of hearing works by Contemporary American composers, and the 6th Symphony of Walter Piston, which opened the second half of the concert, was awaited with considerable interest.

It is an impressive and enormously effective work, brilliantly scored (as one would expect from one who has written one of the best modern books on orchestration) and structurally sound.

Despite its occasional asperities, it is evident that the composer is of true "romantic" descent, and is not afraid to write a melody which has real emotional meaning. The Scherzo is a fantastically brilliant piece of writing.

Superb playing

The formal programme ended with the second series of the "orchestral fragments" from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe". Although I have already used the adjective "gorgeous" it is the only one I can find to describe the performance. The playing of every section of the orchestra was superb.

The tremendous ovation which followed induced generosity in the shape of two encores—an extract from the finale of "Meistersinger" and the "Rakoczy" March, the latter being almost unbearably exciting.

The thanks of all music-lovers must go not only to Dr. Munch and the orchestra, who spared themselves not at all, but also to the A.B.C., which made their visit possible. It is all too rarely that such an experience can come our way; our delight will long be remembered.

PASTE OVER

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"LISTENER-IN"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 1 JUN 1960

MUSIC ON THE AIR

RECORDED BY S. G. DUNN

Attack was unnecessary

Since Saturday night's concert by Georges Tzipine and the VSO, Melbourne critics have been very much in the news — so that Monday night's broadcast of the same program took on an added interest.

I only hope those listeners who tuned in to the second concert to judge for themselves fared better than I did. My reception was marred by an undercurrent of vague noises, apparently confined to 3LO's wavelength, which effectively covered all impressionistic subtleties.

In any case, as Mr Tzipine wishes to bar me, together with the other Melbourne critics from his concerts . . . he has had only one adverse notice, and no previous mention in this column . . . I will confine myself to commending the beautiful, single-minded singing of Lois Marshall, whose performance of Debussy's "Air de Lia" was the highlight of the concert.

This leaves me in a position to comment briefly on the unfortunate relationship between the average artist and the critic.

Mr Tzipine, on the strength of one adverse notice, seems to have joined those artists who regard any critic as their natural enemy — unless he is "constructive."

I wonder if this same critic is still his natural enemy when he gives the artist valuable publicity in the form of quotable rave notices — or perhaps this is what Tzipine means by the word "constructive."

Whether this particular criticism was right or wrong, Mr Tzipine's violent, undiscriminating attack on Melbourne critics suggests that it was the pretext, rather than the cause of his outburst.

The outstanding event next week will be the visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the appearance of Alfredo Campoli in the Thursday night Youth Concert.

This week's laurels to:

LOIS MARSHALL, for [illegible] singing with the VSO in Saturday night's concert (3LO).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 369,809

JUN 8 - 1960

2300 Aussies Hail Hub Symphony

SYDNEY, Australia — (AP) A capacity audience of 2,300 in Sydney town hall gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a tumultuous reception. Gov. Gen. Lord Dunrossil was among the many distinguished members of the audience.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

9 - JUN 1960

IN the audience at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the City Hall were (left to right) Miss Diana [illegible], of Ascot, [illegible] Wiltshire, of [illegible], and Miss Jill [illegible]brick, of Tarinaa.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

7 JUN 1960

Composer

THE Camerata Society scored something of a scoop as far as visiting American composer Mr Aaron Copland is concerned.

On Sunday the society will hold its first recital in its new musical "headquarters," the Lyceum Club.

MR. AARON COPLAND . . . . here for own quartet.

The programme will comprise two works by Melbourne composers Margaret Sutherland and Noel Nickson and a quartet for piano and strings by Mr. Copland.

By coincidence, Mr. Copland is in Australia with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for which he is guest conductor.

And, to the society's delight, he has rearranged his schedule so that he can be in Melbourne on Sunday to attend the recital.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

8 JUN 1960

"Jazz is Here to Stay"

SYDNEY, Tuesday. — Rock 'n' roll may disappear, but not jazz, according to noted composer Aaron Copland, who arrived in Sydney today with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Copland, composer and guest conductor with the 107-piece orchestra, is known as the "Dean of American Composers."

"Jazz is here to stay," he said. "It is a very permanent thing. Just try to stop it.

"Rock 'n' roll? After all, it's only one phase of jazz."

He said the middle movement of his Symphony No. 1 was jazz-inspired.

Members brought with them 10 tons of luggage, including one ton of sheet music.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 × JUN 1960

Women's News and Views

DUNROSSILS SEE "BOSTON"

The Governor General, Viscount Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil attended the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchstra at the Sydney Town Hall last night.

Mr. Charles Moses, General Manager of the ABC and Mrs. Moses, received the official party.

Among the guests were the musical director and conductor of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra (Dr. Nicolai Malko) and Mrs. Malko; the chairman of the Australian Broadcasting Commission (Sir Richard Boyer) and Lady Boyer; the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Mr. Thomas Perry, Jnr.) and Mrs. Perry; and ABC Commissioner Mr. A. G. Lowndes and Mrs. Lowndes.

Also in the capacity audience were Mr. Justice Macfarlan and Mrs. Macfarlan, of Neutral Bay, Mrs. Macfarlan wearing a blonde mink wrap over her short black wool dress; Lady Plowman; visiting French pianist Phillippe Entremont; Mr. and Mrs. Eric Kennedy, of Edgecliff, and their daughter Joan; Mr. and Mrs. Selby Davidson, of Warrawee; and Mr. and Mrs. John Carter, of Turramurra.

Both Mrs. Davidson and Mrs. Carter wore fur stoles over short black dresses.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Russell and their daughter Jane, Mrs. Rowley Walker and Diana Alexander and her fiance, Peter King, were also there.

The Boston Symphony will play again tonight at the Stadium, and tomorrow night the final Sydney concert will be held at the Town Hall.

● MRS. CAMPBELL SCOTT, of Darling Point, wore a lightweight woollen coat and a black and white checked dress when she attended the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Town Hall last night.

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

26 APR 1960

FOG DELAYS ORCHESTRA

BOSTON, Tues. (UPI).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra left for the Far East yesterday after fog at Logan Airport delayed for almost three hours the take-off of 89 musicians.

The orchestra has scheduled concerts for Taipeh (Formosa) next Friday and Saturday, 22 concerts in Japan in May, and visits to Australia and New Zealand.

200

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

5 × JUN 1960

Glamour at Symphony Concert

BRISBANE women, in brilliant coloured brocades, silks and velvets, worn with fur stoles, will make tomorrow night's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in the City Hall one of the fashion highlights of the year.

Seasoned concert-goers who regard tomorrow night's programme as the musical treat of the year are planning to wear some of their most glamorous evening wear.

The Governor (Sir Henry Abel Smith) and Lady May, will be among the guests at an after-concert supper party at Parliament House. Host and hostess will be the Premier (Mr. Nicklin) and Mrs. Nicklin.

A full length gown of deep blue brocade will be worn by Mrs. Rudolf Pekarek, who will be accompanied by Mrs. George White. Mrs. Pekarek will carry a petit point evening bag sent to her from Vienna.

Mrs. White's short evening gown in grey silk taffeta will feature a full skirt and draped bodice with a V back.

Mrs. David Feisman will wear a mink stole over her gown of black, silver, and gold French brocade. She will add black accessories.

Regular concert-goer, Mrs. Arthur Sharman, who will be accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Brian Armstrong, will wear a Kingfisher blue brocade gown with matching stole and silver grey accessories.

Mrs. Armstrong has chosen a street length, simply cut autumn toned velvet frock.

★

THE ground floor of Mt. Olivet Hospital was turned into a huge bazaar yesterday afternoon for the third annual fête held at the hospital.

Rain prevented the stalls from being set up in the garden so hospital staff and fete organisers converted the ground floor into an arcade.

More than 750 people crowded into the grounds and hospital to buy from the dozens of variety stalls.

The fete was officially opened at 3 p.m. by the Co.-Adjutor Archbishop (Archbishop O'Donnell) and continued until 10 p.m. yesterday.

★

YESTERDAY'S rain did not dampen the enthusiasm of the 1500 people who attended the annual garden fete at the Virginia [illegible] School.

The stalls, which were planned for the open, were set up under the shelter of the school and the organised displays took place when the rain had cleared.

Proceeds will aid the school amenities fund and tuck shop building fund.

Boston put on a U.S. show

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in its Sydney debut in the Town Hall last night, almost made it an all-American show.

At one stage it looked as if the curtain-raising Star-Spangled Banner, blazing with pride and fervor, was going to be the prize of the night.

Certainly there was not much else to touch it in the first half. The Berlioz Symphonie Fantastique was brilliant, but surely should have spread more of its magic.

In the Berlioz, the massive string section was oversharp and bright, the woodwinds occasionally coarse; but the brasses came through unscathed and showed a magnificent brightness and preci[illegible] sharpened the feeling that everything was geared up to an overpowering Hollywoodish weight of tone.

But the second half showed a remarkable recovery from these disappointments, and here again the highest peak was reached in the Variations, Chaconne and Finale, by New York-born Norman Dello Joio—another American triumph.

One could feel the sheer fervor that was poured into this opulently sensuous piece, and for the first time there was some feeling of fine control from conductor Charles Munch, quite different from the technicolor clamor of most of the show.

There were times when the excessive crowd-pleasing thunders made one look back with nostalgic relish to some of the best performances of our own Sydney Symphony orchestra, where there has been much more suppleness of expression.

The orchestra again was happier in the final selection, the Bacchus et Ariane ballet second suite, by Roussel, with its lilting color changes gradually deepening in tone and tempo until the mood is swallowed up in a great blaze of sound. This Vistasound finale won ecstatic applause.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 × JUN 1960

Women's News and Views

The Governor General, VISCOUNT DUNROSSIL and LADY DUNROSSIL, were welcomed by the General Manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, MR. CHARLES MOSES and MRS. MOSES, on their arrival at the Town Hall last night for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 × JUN 1960

MUSIC OF THE WEEK

By Frank Harris

Australian-born Percy Grainger was one of the original disc detectives of music.

Bitten with the folk-song collecting bug like Bartok (they were born only a year apart) he used to flourish a music notebook and jot down the songs as he tracked the old-timers at wharfsend, dead-ends, and villages elbowed out of the way by Time.

But Grainger, who was a frightening little ball of energy, got tired of the old pencil, soon was trotting round with one of the early phonographs, with a set of wax cylinders, recording those folksy voices "straight." No doubt, now, at 78 he's tottering round with a tape recorder.

In 1905 he rampaged into England's Lincolnshire, waxed a bundle of folksy recordings and turned some of the charming tunes into his Lincolnshire Posy suite, now given its first recording on Mercury's Winds in Hi-Fi (12in.) with Frederick Fennell conducting the classy Eastman Wind Ensemble.

Why write for winds and brasses? Grainger wrote one of his first compositions for wind instruments, did a wartime band stint with the U.S. Army.

This recording swiftly proves his originality and is a fine lead-in to this unique disc which is tops both on Hi-Fi and music grounds.

It also takes in the premiere performance of Rogers' Three Japanese Dances, and features Milhaud's Suite Francaise and the Richard Strauss E Flat Serenade.

★ ★ ★

The Boston Symphony on disc is a different proposition: R.C.A. honors the visit with one of their best discs yet of this orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, giving the Ravel Mother Goose Suite, Dukas' Sorcerer's Apprentice, and Omphale's Spinning Wheel, by Saint - Saens (R.C.A. stereo, 12in.). A sensuous spinning brightness in the sound, and Munch plays it with such lushness he seems reluctant to let it finish.

On the lighter side, Arthur Fiedler conducts the Boston Pops in the crackling chirpiness of the Hershy Kay Cakewalk and Stars and Stripes ballets (R.C.A. Stereo 12in.), and a rip-roaring round-up of Marches in Hi-Fi (R.C.A. mono 12in.). Bright sound in each of these discs.

BELARSKY . . . folk song specials.

Sidor Belarsky, who has performed with Toscanini and Rodzinski, is an enthusiastic collector of folk songs and specially features Yiddish and Israeli folk songs at his recitals. Critics in Melbourne commented on the power and richness of his voice.

CONCERT

When visiting bass-baritone Sidor Belarsky gives a recital at the Conservatorium on Saturday week night, there will be a couple of important friends in the audience—Sydney Symphony conductor Nicolai Malko and Mrs. Malko.

When Malko was director of Leningrad State Conservatorium, the young Belarsky was an outstanding student who came under his baton. They have met since on tour travels, but this will be their first greeting in some years.

32 DAILY MIRROR, WE

201

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"
Melbourne, Vic.

COMPOSER TO HEAR HER PLAY

PIANIST Margaret Schofield, mother of two children, is practising this week for the next Camerata Recital at the Lyceum Club next Sunday at 3 p.m.

She will be the pianist in Aaroon Copland's Quartet for Piano and Strings.

And Aaron Copland, in Australia as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be at the concert.

This will be the third time Miss Schofield has played the work in public.

"I find that the only time I can practise is at night when the children are asleep," said Miss Schofield, who, in private life is Mrs Donald Cochrane, of Kew. Her children are Andrew, 5, and Fiona, 2.

Miss Schofield's husband, Professor Donald Cochrane, Professor of Commerce at Melbourne University, is on a six-weeks lecture tour of Pakistan, the Philippines and Thailand.

"When my husband is at home he works in his study until 1 a.m. while I practise," she said.

"Next year is my husband's year off from his studies, so we plan to travel with our children to England, Europe and America.

"I would love to do some work at the BBC, where I worked for two years from 1947-49."

↑ PIANIST Margaret Schofield (Mrs Donald Cochrane) pictured with her two children, Andrew, 5, and Fiona, 2, at their home in Kew.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

9 JUN 1960

ENGLISH composer Benjamin Britten, who will be heard in Talking About Music, from LO, at 10.15 p.m., Sunday, June 12. RIGHT: Mrs. Oliva Luetcke, Boston Symphony Orchestra harpist. The orchestra is featured in a "live" telecast from the new Olympic Pool through ABV-2, at 7.55 p.m., Tuesday, June 14.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"
Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

BOSTON SYMPHONY TELECAST

The visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature in a direct one - hour telecast from the Stadium, Rushcutter Bay on Channel 2, ABN, tonight at 8 o'clock.

The orchestra will play Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor and will be conducted by the Associate Conductor and Concertmaster, Richard Burgin.

The 115-member Boston Symphony Orchestra is making a tour of the Far East under President Eisenhower's programme for encouraging cultural visits to other countries.

Before their arrival in Australia they played in Japan, Korea [illegible] the Philippines.

Richard Burgin joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1920 as concertmaster.

He studied the violin as a child and was considered a prodigy, making his debut with the Warsaw Philharmonic at the age of 11.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • [illegible] 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. [illegible]

JUN 8 1960

Boston Symphony Given Warm Sydney Reception

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — A capacity audience of 2300 in Sydney Town Hall gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a tumultuous reception Tuesday night.

The orchestra arrived Tuesday after visits to Japan and the Philippines. It gives a concert today in Sydney Stadium where a 7000 strong audience is expected.

Est. 1904 'Pho

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"
Sydney, N.S.W.

9 - JUN 1960

CONTACT

With Jim Macdougall

GOOD MORNING! [illegible] one-third of the 100-strong Boston Symphony Orchestra last night played their concert at the Stadium wearing topcoats over their white ties and tails.

One of the oddest sights I have ever seen was the leader of the orchestra sawing away in his blue raincoat.

Speed the Opera House and central heating!

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.

8 × JUN 1960

Electronics In Music

SYDNEY, June 7.

Some young American composers were experimenting with electronics as a means of producing music without the use of microphones or similar equipment, Mr. Aaron Copland, guest conductor and composer with the 107-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra, said in Sydney today.

He arrived at Kingsford Smith Airport in one of three chartered airliners which brought the full orchestra from Brisbane.

The orchestra is making a nine-day visit to Australia.

It will play in Adelaide on Saturday night with Mr. Copland as its conductor.

Mr. Copland said electronic music produced without the use of microphones was impressed electronically on to tape and not recorded.

This system of producing music was revolutionary and was, perhaps, an indirect product of the space era.

He had heard some of this music. It sounded unreal, as if it was coming from outer space.

"It would be suitable music to play for space fiction," he said.

Static Noise

Mr. Copland was unable to explain technically how music could be placed on tape without recording it first through a microphone.

However, he said it was worked on the principle of controlling static noise in the air to make the sounds conform to a musical pattern.

"Research work into this type of musical production made a great advance when the ACA Victor Company invented an electronic device called a synthesizer," Mr Copland said.

"It produces electronic sounds in a way which is much quicker to produce than those produced by older methods. By using this equipment, production of a piece of electronic music which used to take three months can now be written in three minutes.

"The Ford Foundation has recently made a grant of $200,000 (£76,600) available for further experiments with the synthesizer".

Research

Three US composers who were carrying out this research work were Otto Lueing, Vladimir Ussachevsky, both of Columbia University, and Milton Babbitt, of Princeton University.

Mr. Copland said jazz music had come to stay, but rock-'n-roll was just a temporary phase which one day would symbolise the 1950's.

"If you don't think jazz has come to stay, just try and stop it," Mr. Copland said.

"My first symphony has an influence of jazz in its middle movement. Some of my earlier works were also affected by jazz elements."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"
Brisbane, Qld.

8 - JUN 1960

ON THE AIR TODAY

★ QR KQ QG BC BK BH ★

THE dramatic disappearance of a noted German biochemist is investigated by the Missing Persons Bureau in "Address Unknown" at 8 p.m. on 4BK, The Courier-Mail Station.

Aircraft documents showed that Professor Karl Grossman, or a person using his ticket, had boarded a plane in Berlin, yet he was missing when the plane landed in London.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra may be heard at 9.15 this evening from 4QR.

"I Flew for Bismarck," starring Dick Bentley, famous English comedian at present in Australia, may be heard from 4QG at [illegible] p.m.

1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

"TELEGRAPH"
Brisbane, Qld.

7 JUN 1960

CONCERT WAS EXCITING

Under the vigorous leadership of Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the City Hall last night gave Brisbane one of its most exciting concerts.

The orchestra showed technical resources considerably more vast than those of the Czech Philharmonic and Sydney Symphony, other major orchestras which visited Brisbane last year.

This strength was evident throughout all sections, and enabled the orchestra to produce a beauty of tone with a snap and precision normally heard in Brisbane only on gramophone records.

One of the most intense readings of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony was distinguished by a power and elegance in the strings, particularly in the cellos and basses, and exquisite horn to unfamiliar to Brisban concertgoers.

American compos Piston's colorful an high-minded, but n heavy, Sixth Sympho gave the orchestra a fu ther opportunity to di play its technical skill.

But the highlight o the program wa Ravel's Daphnis an Chloe Ballet fragment

Charles Munch show in this work the appreci tion for absolute no values and the feeling atmosphere that recall the performances of th master of French i pressionists, Walt Gieseking. — F.J.B.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "COURIER MAIL"
Brisbane, Qld.

6 × JUN 1960

THEY KNOW THE SCORE

AMERICAN composer Aaron Copland, 59, and Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor Dr. Charles Munch, 68, at Brisbane Airport after their arrival from Manila yesterday. The orchestra will give a concert in the City Hall tonight.

"MES AMIS," SAID FRENCH MAESTRO

"MES amis" (my friends) . . . was the delighted response of Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor Charles Munch to the waves of the people who watched him drive from Brisbane Airport yesterday.

Dr. Munch, who joined the orchestra from Paris and still prefers to speak French, waved back.

He also posed patiently for amateur photographers.

Everything about Brisbane put the celebrated conductor, sometimes described as temperamentally "difficult," in a good humour.

He exclaimed over the flowering poinsettias, admired the drive from the airport, and nodded approvingly at the City Hall (where he will conduct the Boston orchestra's only Brisbane concert tonight).

Loved sunshine

Most of all, he loved the perfect Queensland winter sunshine, dry and not too hot.

"I would be glad to pay for this air after the thick air we have been having," he said.

For his concert in steamy Manila in the Philippines on Friday night, Dr. Munch conducted in an open-necked Filipino "tagalog" shirt.

The men of his famous orchestra also played in shirts and took their ties off.

No propaganda

At 68, Dr. Munch, tall (6ft.), furrow-browed, and grey haired, is leading the Boston orchestra on his third overseas tour.

He rejected any attempt to describe the tour as "cultural propaganda."

"We are here to make music first," he said.

Did goodwill tours improve international relations in a lasting way? "I hope so," he said.

In Japan, Formosa, and the Philippines, the Boston played to enthusiastic capacity audiences.

Dr. Munch said: "We were very surprised at the knowledge of these peoples of the Western music." Mozart, Beethoven, and Brahms were favourites in Japan.

Travelling with Dr. Munch is his personal aide, M. Roger Toureau, 57, who acts as valet and secretary.

M. Toureau was firm when officials suggested he was in the wrong car: "Where the maestro goes, I go," he said.

No, it wasn't a music box

AMERICAN composer Aaron Copland, 59, stringy, grey-haired, and cheerful, arrived in Brisbane yesterday with a huge black box under one arm.

The box didn't contain Copland's latest score for full orchestra.

It was full of presents from Japan.

Copland, widely-regarded as the best living American composer, is travelling with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

His visit could mean good fortune for some Australian composers.

BEGAN IN TEENS

While here he will examine scores and listen to tape-recordings of works by leading Australian composers.

Copland's sponsorship of any of these works in America would be a big step towards international recognition.

The child of Russian-born parents in Brooklyn, he began composing in his teens.

He studied in Paris and began writing works in a fiercely modern style.

"Some of them were hissed," he said with a grin yesterday.

MELLOWER, NOW

But Copland's music has grown mellower as he has grown older and often draws on American folksong idiom.

His best-known works are ballet scores: "Billy the Kid," "Rodeo," and the Pulitzer Prize-winning "Appalachian Spring."

He is now one of the 10 "serious" composers in the United States who can live off performance and recording royalties for their own music.

He has written about 30 works of all kinds. His latest is a chamber music composition for nine strings.

Mr. Copland will conduct some of his own music at the Boston orchestra's concerts in Sydney and Melbourne.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "TELEGRAPH"
Brisbane, Qld.

Concert 'should have been shown'

AXE to Channel Two for its decision (in the face of all the ABC organisation's flag-waving for culture) not to televise the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert.

Its act in suddenly tossing quality entertainment overboard qualifies for the title "Boston TV-party."

I hope we have no more of it.

A milestone in Brisbane's musical history such as this deserved to be brought to as many people as possible particularly, as seats for the concert were restricted mainly to preferential ticket holders. — G. B., Indooroopilly.

203

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

JUN 19[illegible]

MR. AARON COPLAND, American composer and guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] seen in clay by Finey.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

6 - JUN 1960

IN OTHER CITIES

Growth Of City Brings Pride — And Worry

From Our Staff Representative

MELBOURNE, June 5.

The people of this city never seem quite sure whether to laugh or cry over its turbulent growth.

Almost daily figures are released showing that Melbourne is progressing faster than its arch-rival, Sydney, in some aspect or another.

And whilst the hearts of Melbourne officials are bursting with pride over this dizzy development, their heads are bursting with the headaches of trying to cope with its problems.

The chief planner of the Victorian Board of Works (Mr. J. A. Hepburn) told the Parliamentary Committee on decentralisation the other day that Melbourne would have a population of 2.5m. in 20 years.

"I can't see the growth of Melbourne being stopped; it can be controlled, but it can't be stopped, he said, with what seems like a fairly typical mixture of pride and despair.

At about the same time, his colleagues from the Board of Works were informing 30-odd residents of the closely populated Richmond area that a proposed new eastern freeway would pass through their houses.

The freeway is certainly needed to clear the growing volume of traffic which pours in and out of the city from the exploding eastern suburbs.

But the board has twice changed the route of the freeway after protests from affected householders and councils, and it is likely that the vehemence of the protests from those affected by this latest proposal will bring further reconsiderations.

* * *

A particularly unpopular aspect of the latest route is that it will slice through several parks, involving an oval and eight or nine playing fields.

MELBOURNE LETTER

It seems more than coincidental that five leading citizens chose last week to form a committee of tree-lovers to plan a public campaign to make Victoria the "Garden State of Australia."

Its three aims are to:

- Enlist public support to prevent further spoiling of parklands and trees.
- Encourage the planting of tens of thousands of new trees.
- Create new parks and sanctuaries.

It is to be hoped this organisation can devise some system whereby traffic and trees can co-exist as this old war reaches it summit.

Lawbreakers

With traffic problems being aired, it was strange to hear this week police telling schoolchildren to break the law.

This happened after "Disgusted Mother of Nine" wrote to the editor of a daily paper to say that a policeman had told children during a lecture at her local school that they must ride their scooters on the road, as it was against the law to ride them on the footpath.

A higher police official responded by admitting that in this case "the law is a ass" and that children should ignore it and continue to ride their scooters on the safe footpaths.

Like other drivers, though, they should be careful of pedestrians, he warned.

Overhaul

With life so confusing a four-storey £170,000 super reconditioning centre for men and women which will open tomorrow should do well.

This atom-age version of the old gym has an underground car park, plastic indoor plants, piped music to every floor, squash courts, coffee bar, steam baths (with scented steam), hairdressing for men and women, lockers, wall-to-wall carpets and TV on every floor.

After this, it won't seem in the least strange that we have wrestling in the Festival Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and professional tennis in the Olympic Swimming Pool, and a circus in the Sidney Myer Music Bowl.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208

JUN 8 - 1960

Sydney Hails Orchestra

SYDNEY, Australia, June 8 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra received a hearty reception last night from a capacity audience of 2,300 in Sydney Town Hall. The orchestra will perform today in Sydney stadium before an expected audience of 7,000.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 142,535

[illegible] - 1960

AUSSIES HAIL SYMPHONY

Sydney, Australia — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra received a hearty reception last night from a capacity audience of 2,300 in Sydney Town Hall. The orchestra will perform today in Sydney Stadium before an expected audience of 7,000.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

6 × JUN 1960

A 60-minute direct telecast of a performance by the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented by ABN 2 at 8 o'clock on Wednesday night.

The orchestra will be playing from the Sydney Stadium at Rushcutter Bay.

The 115 - member orchestra is making a tour of the Far East under President Eisenhower's program for encouraging cultural visits to foreign countries.

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TELECAST

Richard Burgin, who joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1920, will conduct the first half of the Stadium telecast.

From

"SUNDAY TIMES"

Perth, W

5 × JUN 1960

• AARON COPLAND — This leading U.S. composer will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Sydney on Wednesday night.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750

JUN 7 - 1960

Australia Hails Hub Symphony

MELBOURNE, Australia, June 7 (Reuters)—The touring Boston Symphony Orchestra was greeted by capacity audiences and high praise with its opening concert in Sydney today.

An audience of 2300, which included Governor - General Viscount Dunrossil and Lady Dunrossil, gave the orchestra a tremendous ovation at the Sydney Town Hall.

The orchestra plays tonight at Sydney Stadium to an audience of 5000 and 7000. The Australian tour opened last night in Brisbane.

The Sydney morning Herald music critic described today's concert as a master stroke for American diplomacy and for music.

"This mighty orchestra . . . plays with the precision of a machine yet nowhere does this have the effect of submerging the enormous human warmth which these men give their music. . . ."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"GUARDIAN"

Swan Hill, Vic.

JUN 1960

Boston Symphony Orchestra Broadcast

On Thursday, June 9, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its final Sydney concert at the Town Hall.

This performance will include works by Samuel Barber Debussy, Brahms.

3WV and 3WL will broadcast the entire concert, which will commence at 8.00 p.m.

Est. 1904

AUSTR

S

From

NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

7 - JUN 1960

Boston program announced

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony at its Centennial Hall concert on Saturday night.

Haydn's Symphony No. 95 and Aaron Copland's "The Tender Land" suite also will be played.

The ABC manager in SA, Mr. J. S. Miller, announced this today.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen (e)

LACONIA, N. H.

Circ. 5,865

JUN 8 - 1960

2300 Aussies Hail Hub Symphony

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — A capacity audience of 2,300 in Sidney town hall gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a tumultuous reception. Gov. Gen. Lord Dunrossil was among the many distinguished members of the audience.

Agency, Inc.

mond 2-4200

Register (e)

NEW HAVEN, Conn.

Circ. 99,236

JUN 8 - 1960

SYDNEY GREETS ORCHESTRA

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra received a hearty receptio Tuesday night from a capacit audience of 2,300 in Sydne Town Hall. The orchestra wi perform today in Sydney Sta dium before an expeted aud ence of 7,000.

From

"SUN-HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

☆ ★ ☆

THE visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra will be featured in a direct one-hour telecast from Rushcutter Bay Stadium next Wednesday night (ABN 2, 8 o'clock).

It will play the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 5 in E minor, with Richard Burgin as conductor.

The 115-member orchestra, in Australia for seven concerts, is touring the Far East under President Eisenhower's program for cultural visits to other countries.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster, was a child prodigy violinist and made his debut with the Warsaw Philharmonic at the age of 11.

Est. 1

AUST

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

9 JUN 1960

Composer Aaron Copland Interview in Spotlight

American composer Aaron Copland, who is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during its Australian tour, will be interviewed by Charles Buttrose and Franz Holford in ABV-2's Spotlight at 8.30 p.m., Sunday, June 12.

Alan Manning will be chairman.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

TREMENDOUS OVATION FOR ORCHESTRA

Dr Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Philharmonic Orchestra, acknowledges thunderous applause from an audience of 2,300 after the orchestra's first performance in the Sydney Town Hall last night.

The concert, which was attended by the Governor-General, Lord Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil, had all the glitter of a theatre "first night."

The capacity audience of regular Sydney concert-goers gave the orchestra a tremendous ovation, especially for its brilliant performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, the principal work on the program.

The second part of the program consisted of works by Dello Joio and Roussel.

The orchestra arrived for its three-day visit only yesterday.

Tonight, at Sydney Stadium, it will play to an audience expected to number between 5,000 and 7,000.

The last Sydney concert by the world-renowned orchestra will be at the Town Hall tomorrow night. This has been fully booked out by regular concert-goers.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

9 JUN 1960

Relay of Boston Orch. Concert

A performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relayed direct by ABV-2 from the new Olympic Pool, at 7.55 p.m., Tuesday, June 14.

204

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"GUARDIAN"

Swan Hill, Vic.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

7 - JUN 1960

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen (e)
LACONIA, N. H.
Circ. 5,865

12-59

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN-HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

JUN 1960

Composer Aaron Copland Interview in Spotlight

American composer Aaron Copland, who is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during its Australian tour, will be interviewed by Charles Buttrose and Franz Holford in ABV-2's Spotlight at 8.30 p.m., Sunday, June 12.

Alan Manning will be chairman.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

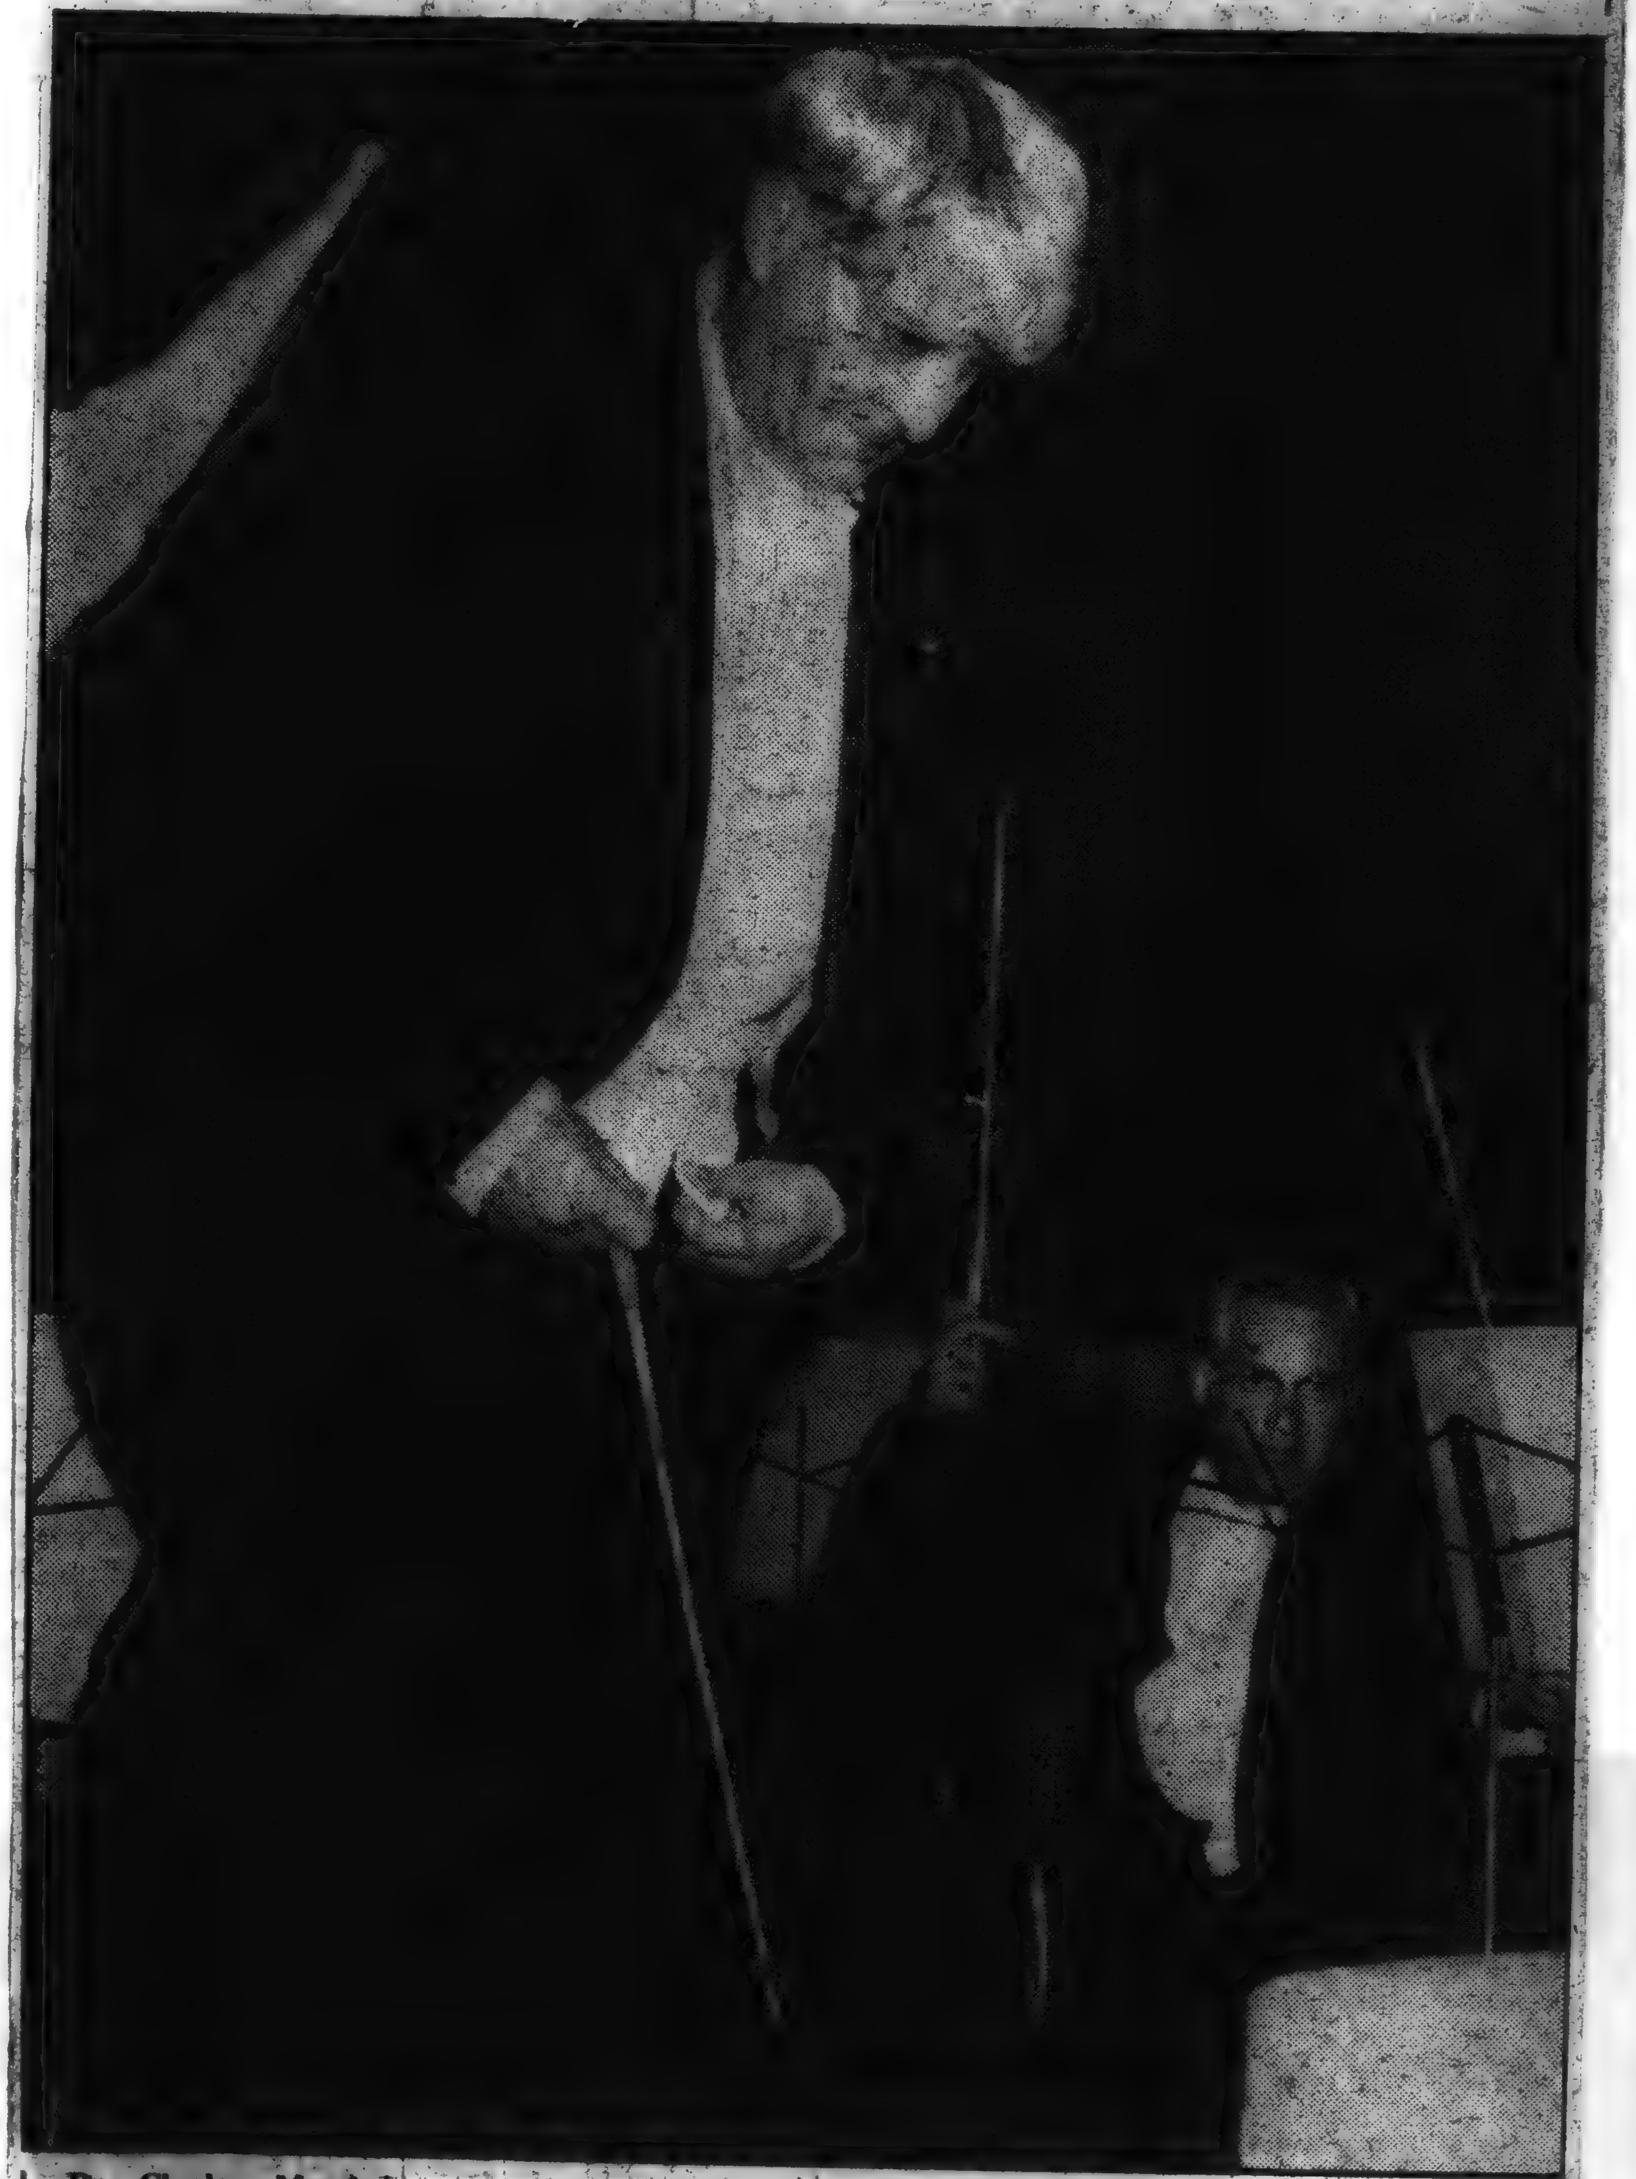
From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

TREMENDOUS OVATION FOR ORCHESTRA



Dr Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Philharmonic Orchestra, acknowledges thunderous applause from an audience of 2,300 after the orchestra's first performance in the Sydney Town Hall last night.

The concert, which was attended by the Governor-General, Lord Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil, had all the glitter of a theatre "first night."

The capacity audience of regular Sydney concert-goers gave the orchestra a tremendous ovation, especially for its brilliant performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, the principal work on the program.

The second part of the program consisted of works by Dello Joio and Roussel.

The orchestra arrived for its three-day visit only yesterday.

Tonight, at Sydney Stadium, it will play to an audience expected to number between 5,000 and 7,000.

The last Sydney concert by the world-renowned orchestra will be at the Town Hall tomorrow night. This has been fully booked out by regular concert-goers.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

9 JUN 1960

Relay of Boston Orch. Concert

A performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relayed direct by ABV-2 from the new Olympic Pool, at 7.55 p.m., Tuesday, June 14.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

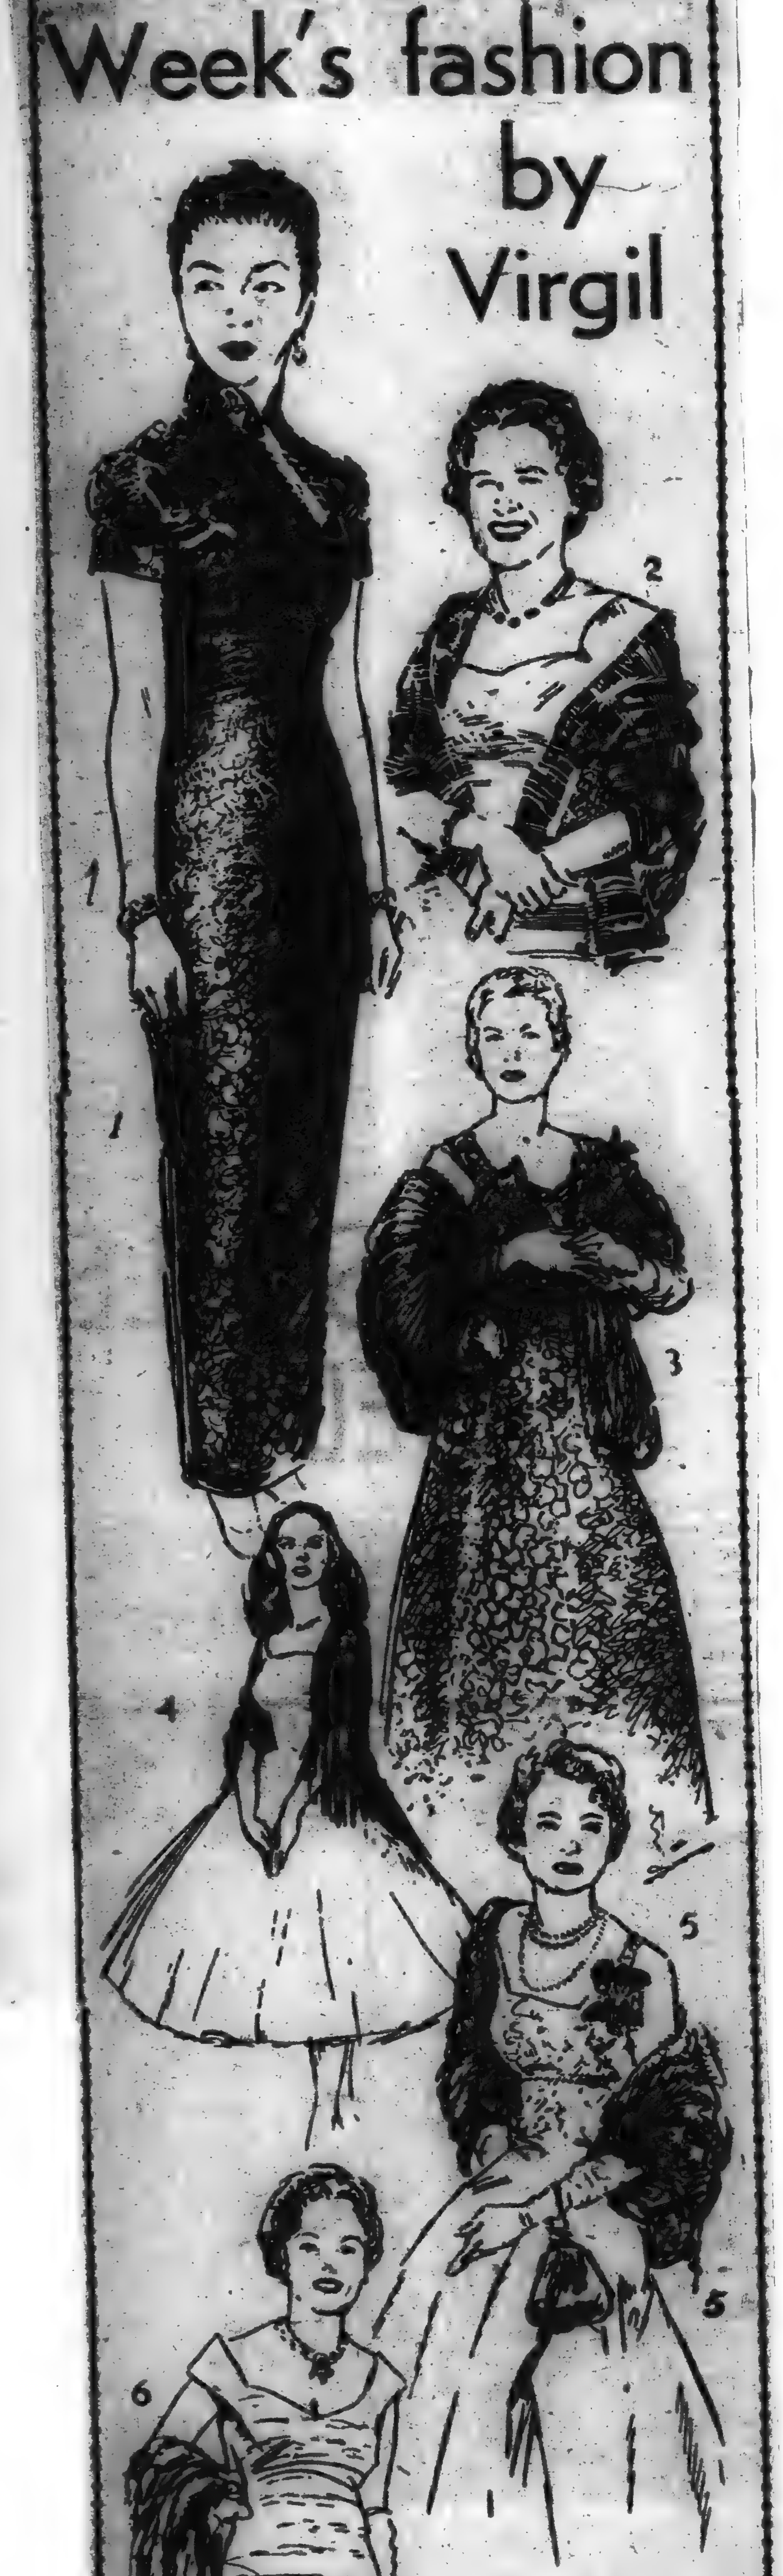
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

9 × JUN 1960 Sydney, N.S.W.

Week's fashion by Virgil



Virgil was at the Trocadero [illegible] night for the Dragon Festival Ball and at the Town Hall for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert. At the ball, 1. Mme Chen Chih Mei chose a dress of dazzling silve lame, 3. MRS. LINDSAY ROSE'S dress was black and gold brocaded satin, 4. THELMA SMITH, highlighted her gown with a fringed spanish shawl, and 6. MRS. MEL LAWTON wore a white and gold brocade gown. Attending the Concert, 2. MRS. THOMAS PERRY covered her satin dress with an Indian stole of multi-colored striped silk, and 5. LADY DUNROSSIL, wore a faille gown with [illegible] embroidered bodice.

34 DAILY MIRROR, THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1960 34

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

8 JUN 1960 Sydney, N.S.W

ORCHESTRA, CONDUCTOR TOP BLEND

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, filled the Town Hall with gorgeous sound last night.

It was music with a bloom on it.

Present were all the characteristics one would expect to find in one of the world's greatest orchestras.

The string tone was always vital, without a hint of slackness, the woodwind featured accomplished soloists, the brass glittered like brass should, and peerless unanimity everywhere governed attack and release.

The players reflected, too, their conductor's unjaded approach to every score he presented.

The general level of volume suggested that the musicians — nearly 100 of them — are used to playing in larger halls than that provided for them last night.

There were moments when this listener was almost overwhelmed by the waves of sound that poured over him.

Really whispering pianissimos were rare; but, when they did come, were entrancingly delicate in texture and inflection.

Munch's splendidly nervous reading of the first movement of Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony realised all the fever the composer sought to exprsess but left his long, melodic line undistorted.

I have heard the Valse treated more delicately, though its added weight last night fitted it well into the overall pattern of the interpretation.

The desolate pipings of the Scene In The Meadow gave way to a March To The Scaffold that was perhaps rather more ecstatic than ominous.

And real bells, instead of the usual tubular ones, clanged through the Witches' Sabbath with the sharpness of beaten anvils.

It was an exhilarating experience—if slightly exhausting.

Modern touch

The second half introduced a pleasant suite by American composer Norman Dello Joio, consisting of Variations on a Plainsong chant, a Chaconne and a Finale, all expertly put together in a [illegible] that might [illegible] called [illegible]."

Even under the [illegible] examination of a [illegible]ing there was much that was melodious enough to please the ear, and ingenious enough, in structure and rhythm, to exercise the mind.

The Second Suite from Roussel's ballet, Bacchus et Ariane, "came off" despite its divorce from the stage spectacle it was designed to illustrate.

Sensuous melodies emerging with controlled voluptuousness alternated with muscular allegros delivered with incomparable brilliance.

It was a superb display of virtuosity.—JULIAN RUSSELL.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

9 × JUN 1960

RUGGED UP ORCHESTRA WAS "HOT"

An audience of 6000, half of them rugged up, listened in holy silence at the Stadium last night to the Boston Symphony, half of whom were also rugged up in raincoats.

There were no peanut chewers, or throwers, no chatterers, no mad foot tappers, as with the Stadium jazz crowds. But there was one common link—at the end of each item the big crowd roared and stamped approvals with a much gusto as the pop fans.

Whether it was the nippiness of the weather, the change of conductors, or just the sheer horrible barnlike informality of the place, it was a different orchestra, freer, defter and better in performance than on the opening night.

Not that this made it a particularly great orchestra, or anywhere in the same class as the Czech Philharmonic, which also triumphed in the Stadium.

Deputy conductor Richard Burgin offered quite an impressive Tchaikowsky Symphony No. 5, but the big boy of the night was famous composer Aaron Copland, who conducted his own First Symphony and the Tender Land Suite.

Copland's Symphony was ingenious, brilliant, and satisfying, though more like a ballet than a symphony; Tender Land had too many echoes of his more famous ballets, two of which supplied him with wildly applauded encores.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

9 - JUN 1960

His Excellency the Governor presided at a meeting of the Executive Council yesterday morning.

His Excellency the Governor yesterday received Captain C. C. Stevens, R.N.Z.N., H.M.A.S. Watson.

His Excellency the Governor and Lady Woodward, attended by members of the personal staff, were present yesterday evening at a concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Stadium, Rushcutter Bay.

His Excellency the Governor and Lady Woodward, attended by members of the personal staff, were present at the Mater Misericordiae Hospital annual ball at the Trocadero yesterday evening.

● Australian supper . . . Sydney oysters, kangaroo tail soup, Woolloomooloo steaks, Woomera Bomb, and Australian wines and beer were served at an informal supper party at the Swiss Inn, Kings Cross, after the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Sydney Stadium last night . . . the management of the A.B.C. gave the party and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were among the 150 guests . . . they included the orchestra's manager (Mr. Thomas Perry) and Mrs. Perry, composer and guest conductor, Aaron Copeland, conductor Richard Burgin, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Moses, Sir Richard and Lady Boyer, and Sir Bernard and Lady [illegible]

DAILY TELEGRAPH JUNE 9, 1960

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

- JUN 1960

THURSDAY DAILY TELEGRAPH JUNE 9, 1960

Stadium: Boston Symphony Orchestra

2 CONCERTS IN ONE —BOTH MEMORABLE

Last night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Rushcutter Bay Stadium was in effect two concerts—each one in its very different way a memorable and stimulating experience.

In the first half there was a rich and exciting performance of Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony conducted by Richard Burgin.

In the post-interval half composer-conductor Aaron Copland presented two of his leanly athletic compositions.

Copland is probably America's best-known composer, and his authoritative interpretation of his own music, with the co-operation of such a superb instrument as this orchestra, may turn out to be one of the most lasting impressions of the series, despite the more spectacular performances preceding it.

The Copland works were his first symphony, written in Paris in 1924, and the suite from the opera "The Tender Land," written 30 years later.

The symphony wears on the surface the fashions of nineteen-twenties Paris.

Its astringent, neo-classical style suggests middle-period Stravinsky and the school of Nadia Boulanger (to whom it is dedicated).

But hearing it now one can extract from it the enduring Copland traits—the spare, economical scoring, the linear and somewhat cerebral approach, the energetic, jerky rhythms and gritty harmonies.

As he conducted it, one was never conscious of the aridity that appears in some performances of his music.

It was often sinewy and consciously anti-romantic, but never merely dry.

The "Tender Land" suite belongs to the popular, folksy style that Copland has developed alongside his more "intellectual" style.

It is simple, engaging music, though its blandness begins to pall a little after a while.

The Tchaikovsky symphony displayed, though in slightly lesser degree, the brilliance and panache that marked the Charles Munch performances of the evening before.

Even in this ultra-romantic music the orchestral tone tended to be keen and assertive rather than lush.

A special citation is due to the brass players for keeping their lips unfailingly true in the arctic temperatures of the Stadium. (A proportion of the players kept their overcoats on, and I don't blame them.)

—M.L.

'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

Composer Copland

Conductor Burgin

Sounds strange

Two top musicians esterday brought ews of mechanical usic to Sydney.

The way they explained t to me, I gathered that a ew brutal technicians are rying [illegible] lot of fine fiddlers [illegible].

The [illegible] artistry in automation was brought by two of the Big Three of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is here to show us America's better half.

When the orchestra's planes touched down after a [illegible] stop in Brisbane, musical director CHARLES MUNCH popped dark glasses over his eyes, pulled down the brim of his hat and declared: "Today I am not [illegible]. No interviews."

But the associate conductor, RICHARD BURGIN, and composer AARON COPLAND, who also will wave the baton for us, talked with me about musical progress.

Mr. Burgin said he hadn't heard much recently of Concrete Music—the strange noises which assaulted our ears a few years ago.

This is the "music," you may remember, which Frenchman PIERRE SCHAEFFER originated about 1949 — real music placed on a tape recorder, distorted by speeds, then rearranged to suit the composer's fancy.

The latest craze, Mr. Copland told me, was electrical music.

He didn't know how this was made, but it was something like radio static being recorded on tapes, under control.

"It's something like music from outer space," explained Mr. Copland.

"But it's too early to say yet if it is worthwhile. It's certainly interesting."

So interesting, apparently, that a big motor firm has given three university musicologists 200,000 dollars to study it.

Finally, these great musicians told me about computer music—pieces composed by feeding a lot of notes into an electronic brain, setting the dials, and getting back a simple tune.

"All of these experiments are an attempt to escape from conformism," explained Mr. Burgin.

Me, I'm a terrible conformist. I still prefer BACH, HANDY or GERSHWIN.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

9 - JUN 1960

Sydney's Talking About...

★ MILK-O . . . Firemen back at work . . . Record prices at the stud sheep sales . . . Sammy Davis's engagement . . . The Madigan-Marshall fight result . . . Menzies in New York . . . the Boston Symphony Orchestra—and the Melbourne music critics.

★HOW THE GOVERNOR, Lieut-General Sir Eric Woodward, and Lady Woodward will attend one-and-a-half of the concerts the Boston Symphony Orchestra is giving.

They attended the first half of the second concert last night, then left for the Mater Ball where they were guests of honour.

Tonight they will be guests of the American Ambassador, Mr William Sebald, at the third concert.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 196

Splendour Of "The Boston" Music-making

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch made a new legion of excited friends with the splendour of the music-making in its first Sydney concert last night.

No music-lover could have come away from its performances of Berlioz, Della Joio and Roussel without counting the whole brilliant occasion a masterstroke of diplomacy for America—and for music itself.

The huge audience, quite forgetting a familiar inhibition that to applaud thunderously might betray some shameful lack of musical choosiness, went right overboard just as emphatically as a certain cargo of tea went overboard in Boston Harbour in 1774. This was no tea-party; it was all banquet.

This mighty orchestra, with a character quite distinct from those of the very few other great orchestras in the world which might be thought to rival it in reach and fire, plays with the precision of a machine—yet nowhere does this have the effect of submerging the enormous human warmth which these men give to music in their quest for this same perfection of finish.

What is the distinctive character, the thing which—after deciding that its players in all sections are most of them virtuosi—allows the experienced hearer to know at once, in the most overwhelming sonorities or string hushes or sprinkles of harp, that this is the Boston orchestra, not the Philadelphia, not the Berlin, not the Czech Philharmonic?

BRED DECORUM

All have matchless discipline, all have dozens of virtuoso talents in the complex of tone, all have sensational resources for spreading colour or enunciating faiths or dissecting problems—but this Boston Symphony, with all that, has a bred decorum which excludes all cheapness from its work, all Hollywood luxuriation and over-statement.

It is not merely a reflection of the old New Englander traditions and pedigrees and the Beacon Street punctilio, for Boston now—and this orchestra—is as multi-racial as any other big American city. But it is as if, for this symphony's work, representatives from half the big musical peoples of the world had found a way of passing tempers and hearts through a filter of Endicott's making, and Quincy's, and Emerson's, and Holmes'.

The Berlioz Symphonie Fantastique was played in the only way possible for an orchestra of such breeding as this. At the extremes, there are two kinds of approach to the "Fantastique"; one which takes all its cues from the facts of the composer's romantically grotesque life and makes the music fit the extravagantly melodramatic legend of the man, and one which takes all its cues from the music itself to find the great Delacroix-hued drama that is alive in the music.

MUSIC FIRST

Last night's performance, of course, made the second approach. The whispered despair of the strings at the opening, the surge and ebb of shuddering strings against the wailing of the horns, the plaintive clarinet solo which led into a most vehement climax with every trumpet on the bray—all this was music first, and autobiography supplementarily.

The later movements, too, with their forlorn and lonely cowherd pipings and their guillotine and their toothless cackles on the Brocken, left no doubts as to why Munch is counted as the greatest living exponent of this score. The use of real bells in the last movement was a novelty here; but one rather wished they had been offstage, so excessively did the vigour of the bell-ringer and the tone-colour he produced dominate the proceedings.

The other large work—also French—was Roussel's "Bacchus and Ariadne" ballet suite, and this orchestra caught all its colour as shafts of light are caught in fountain spray. Its final Bacchanale was sheer dithyramb, all the joys of a world of wine and kisses in full furious eruption.

Brilliances of sectional play were countless, but nothing excelled the arabesquing flutes with silver tone spinning, you'd think, at the speed of light.

ANCIENT-MODERN

American Norman Della Joio was represented in this program by his Variations, Chaconne and Finale devised from an old liturgical theme—a work which combines ancient chorale attitudes with spicy modern secularity in a thoroughly convincing way.

The playing was as brilliant as the instrumentation itself, nothing being more expertly done than the opening of the last movement, where an explosion on the drums shaded itself down so cleverly to softness that the passing of its thought to pizzicato strings was completed almost without trace of a "seam."—L.B.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

[illegible] - JUN 1960

THURSDAY DAILY TELEGRAPH JUNE 9, 1960

Stadium: Boston Symphony Orchestra

2 CONCERTS IN ONE —BOTH MEMORABLE

Last night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Rushcutter Bay Stadium was in effect two concerts—each one in its very different way a memorable and stimulating experience.

In the first half there was a rich and exciting performance of Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony conducted by Richard Burgin.

In the post-interval half composer-conductor Aaron Copland presented two of his leanly athletic compositions.

Copland is probably America's best-known composer, and his authoritative interpretation of his own music, with the co-operation of such a superb instrument as this orchestra, may turn out to be one of the most lasting impressions of the series, despite the more spectacular performances preceding it.

The Copland works were his first symphony, written in Paris in 1924, and the suite from the opera "The Tender Land," written 30 years later.

The symphony wears on the surface the fashions of nineteen-twenties Paris.

Its astringent, neo-classical style suggests middle-period Stravinsky and the school of Nadia Boulanger (to whom it is dedicated).

But hearing it now one can extract from it the enduring Copland traits—the spare, economical scoring, the linear and somewhat cerebral approach, the energetic, jerky rhythms and gritty harmonies.

As he conducted it, one was never conscious of the aridity that appears in some performances of his music.

It was often sinewy and consciously anti-romantic, but never merely dry.

The "Tender Land" suite belongs to the popular, folksy style that Copland has developed alongside his more "intellectual" style.

It is simple, engaging music, though its blandness begins to pall a little after a while.

The Tchaikovsky symphony displayed, though in slightly lesser degree, the brilliance and panache that marked the Charles Munch performances of the evening before.

Even in this ultra-romantic music the orchestral tone tended to be keen and assertive rather than lush.

A special citation is due to the brass players for keeping their lips unfailingly true in the arctic temperatures of the Stadium. (A proportion of the players kept their overcoats on, and I don't blame them.)

—[illegible]

'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

Composer Copland

Conductor Burgin

Sounds strange

Two top musicians yesterday brought news of mechanical music to Sydney.

The way they explained it to me, I gathered that a few brutal technicians are trying [illegible] a lot of fine fiddlers [illegible].

The [illegible] artistry in automation was brought by two of the Big Three of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is here to show us America's better half.

When the orchestra's plane touched down after a [illegible] stop in Brisbane, musical director CHARLES MUNCH popped dark glasses over his eyes, pulled down the brim of his hat and declared: "Today I am not [illegible]. No interviews."

But [illegible] conductor [illegible] BURGIN, and composer AARON COPLAND, who also will [illegible] baton for us, talked with me about musical progress.

Mr. Burgin said he hadn't heard much recently of Concrete Music—the strange noises which assaulted our ears a few years ago.

This is the "music," you may remember, which Frenchman PIERRE SCHAEFFER originated about 1949 — real music placed on a tape recorder, distorted by speeds, then rearranged to suit the composer's fancy.

The latest craze, Mr. Copland told me, was electrical music.

He didn't know how this was made, but it was something like radio static being recorded on tapes under control.

"It's something like music from outer space," explained Mr. Copland.

"But it's too early to say yet if it is worthwhile. It's certainly interesting."

So interesting, apparently, that a big motor firm has given three university musicologists 200,000 dollars to study it.

Finally, these great musicians told me about computer music—pieces composed by feeding a lot of notes into an electronic brain, setting the dials, and getting back a simple tune.

"All of these experiments are an attempt to escape from conformism," explained Mr. Burgin.

Me, I'm a terrible conformist. I still prefer BACH, HANDY or GERSHWIN.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 196[illegible]

Splendour Of "The Boston" Music-making

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch made a new legion of excited friends with the splendour of the music-making in its first Sydney concert last night.

No music-lover could have come away from its performances of Berlioz, Della Joio and Roussel without counting the whole brilliant occasion a masterstroke of diplomacy for America—and for music itself.

The huge audience, quite forgetting a familiar inhibition that to applaud thunderously might betray some shameful lack of musical choosiness, went right overboard just as emphatically as a certain cargo of tea went overboard in Boston Harbour in 1774. This was no tea-party; it was all banquet.

This mighty orchestra, with a character quite distinct from those of the very few other great orchestras in the world which might be thought to rival it in reach and fire, plays with the precision of a machine—yet nowhere does this have the effect of submerging the enormous human warmth which these men give to music in their quest for this same perfection of finish.

What is the distinctive character, the thing which—after deciding that its players in all sections are most of them virtuosi—allows the experienced hearer to know at once, in the most overwhelming sonorities or string hushes or sprinkles of harp, that this is the Boston orchestra, not the Philadelphia, not the Berlin, not the Czech Philharmonic?

BRED DECORUM

All have matchless discipline, all have dozens of virtuoso talents in the complex of tone, all have sensational resources for spreading colour or enunciating faiths or dissecting problems—but this Boston Symphony, with all that, has a bred decorum which excludes all cheapness from its work, all Hollywood luxuriation and over-statement.

It is not merely a reflection of the old New Englander traditions and pedigrees and the Beacon Street punctilio. [illegible] Boston now—and this orchestra—is as multi-racial as any other big American city. But it is as if, for this symphony's work, representatives from half the big musical peoples of the world had found a way of passing tempers and hearts through a filter of Endicott's making, and Quincy's, and Emerson's, and [illegible].

The Berlioz Symphonie Fantastique was [illegible] in the only way possible for an orchestra of such breeding as theirs. At the extremes, there are two kinds of approach to the "Fantastique": one which takes all its cues from the facts of the composer's romantically grotesque life and makes the music fit the extravagantly melodramatic legend of the man, and one which takes all its cues from the music itself to find the great Delacroix-hued drama that is alive in the music.

MUSIC FIRST

Last night's performance, of course, [illegible] approach. The [illegible] despair of the strings at the opening, the surge and ebb of shuddering strings against the wailing of the horns, the plaintive clarinet solo which led into a most vehement climax with every trumpet on the bray—all this was music first, and autobiography supplementarily.

The later movements, too, with their forlorn and lonely cowherd pipings and their guillotine and their toothless cackles on the Brocken, left no doubts as to why Munch is counted as the greatest living exponent of this score. The use of real bells in the last movement was a novelty here; but one rather wished they had been offstage, so excessively did the vigour of the bell-ringer and the tone-colour he produced dominate the proceedings.

The other large work—also French—was Roussel's "Bacchus and Ariadne" ballet suite, and this orchestra caught all its colour as shafts of light are caught in fountain spray. Its final Bacchanale was sheer dithyramb, all the joys of a world of wine and kisses in full furious eruption.

Brilliances of sectional play were countless, but nothing excelled the arabesquing flutes with silver tone spinning, you'd think, at the speed of light.

ANCIENT-MODERN

American Norman Della Joio was represented in this program by his Variations, Chaconne and Finale devised from an old liturgical theme—a work which combines ancient chorale attitudes with spicy modern secularity in a thoroughly convincing way.

The playing was as brilliant as the instrumentation itself, nothing being more expertly done than the opening of the last movement, where an explosion on the drums shaded itself down so cleverly to softness that the passing of its thought to pizzicato strings was completed almost without trace of a "seam."—L.B.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

9 - JUN 1960

Sydney's Talking About...

★ MILK-O . . . Firemen back at work . . . Record prices at the stud sheep sales . . . Sammy Davis's engagement . . . The Madigan-Marshall fight result . . . Menzies in New York . . . the Boston Symphony Orchestra—and the Melbourne music critics.

★HOW THE GOVERNOR, Lieut-General Sir Eric Woodward, and Lady Woodward will attend one-and-a-half of the concerts the Boston Symphony Orchestra is giving.

They attended the first half of the second concert last night, then left for the Mater Ball where they were guests of honour.

Tonight they will be guests of the American Ambassador, Mr William Sebald, at the third concert.

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

JUN 1960

Visiting French pianist, PHILIPP[illegible]EMONT, talks with Mrs. PETER CARRODUS, daughte[illegible]ief Justice, Dr. H. V. Evatt, and Mrs. Evatt, at the [illegible] supper party held at the U.S. Consul-General's resi[illegible]d, Edgecliff, on Thursday night. The party followed the [illegible]dney performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Town Hall and hosts were the U.S. Ambassador, Mr. William Sebald, and the acting U.S. Consul-General, Mr. Orray Taft, and Mrs. Taft.

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

10 JUN 1960

Ambassador's party for "the Boston"

After the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Town Hall last night, the U.S. Ambassador, Mr. William Sebald, and the acting Consul-General for the U.S., Mr. Orray Taft, and Mrs. Taft gave a supper party for 60 guests.

The party was held at the U.S. Consul-General's residence, Craigend, Edgecliff.

Overseas visitors present were the orchestra's musical director, Dr. Charles Munch, guest conductor, Mr. Aaron Copeland, associate conductor, Mr. Richard Burgin, manager, Mr. Thomas Perry, Jnr., and Mrs. Perry, and French pianist, Philippe Entremont.

Other guests included the State Premier, Mr. R. J. Heffron, and Mrs. Heffron, the Chief Justice, Dr. H. V. Evatt, and Mrs. Evatt, Sir Richard and Lady Boyer, Sir Bernard Heinze, Dr. and Mrs. Nicolai Malko, Lady Jones and Mr. Charles Lloyd Jones, the Dean of the Consular Corps, Mr. F. Henning Hergel, and Mrs. Hergel, the United States Information Officer, Mr. Richard Joyce, and Mrs. Joyce, Doris Fitton and Mr. and Mrs. R. Keith Yorston.

Mrs. [illegible]THONY QUAINTON, wife of the new U.S. vice-consul, at the supper party held at the U.S. Consul-General's residence, Craigend, Edgecliff, last night after the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Town Hall.

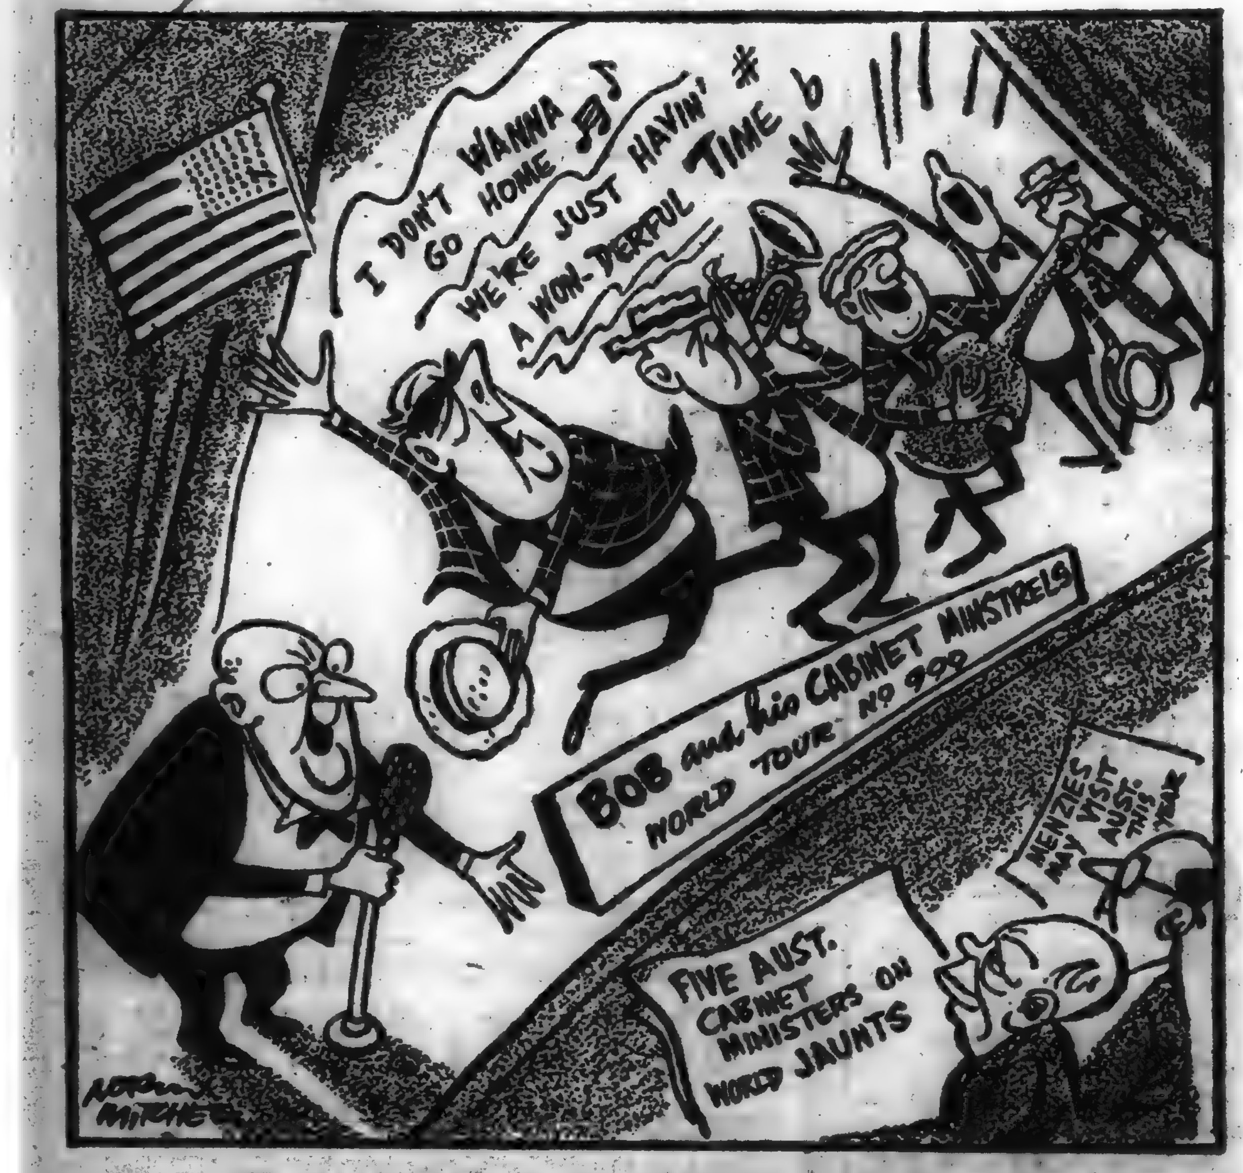
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

12 JUN 19



I DON'T WANNA GO HOME
WE'RE JUST HAVIN' A WON-DERFUL TIME
BOB and his CABINET MINSTRELS WORLD TOUR NO 900
MENZIES MAY VISIT AUST. THIS YEAR
FIVE AUST. CABINET MINISTERS ON WORLD JAUNTS
MITCHELL

It's a reciprocal agreement! Our Boston Symphony Orchestra is touring Australia—here's the Australian touring band to give us one of their old favorites! —Mitchell in The Adelaide News.

PRESS CUTTINGS

ourne, Victoria

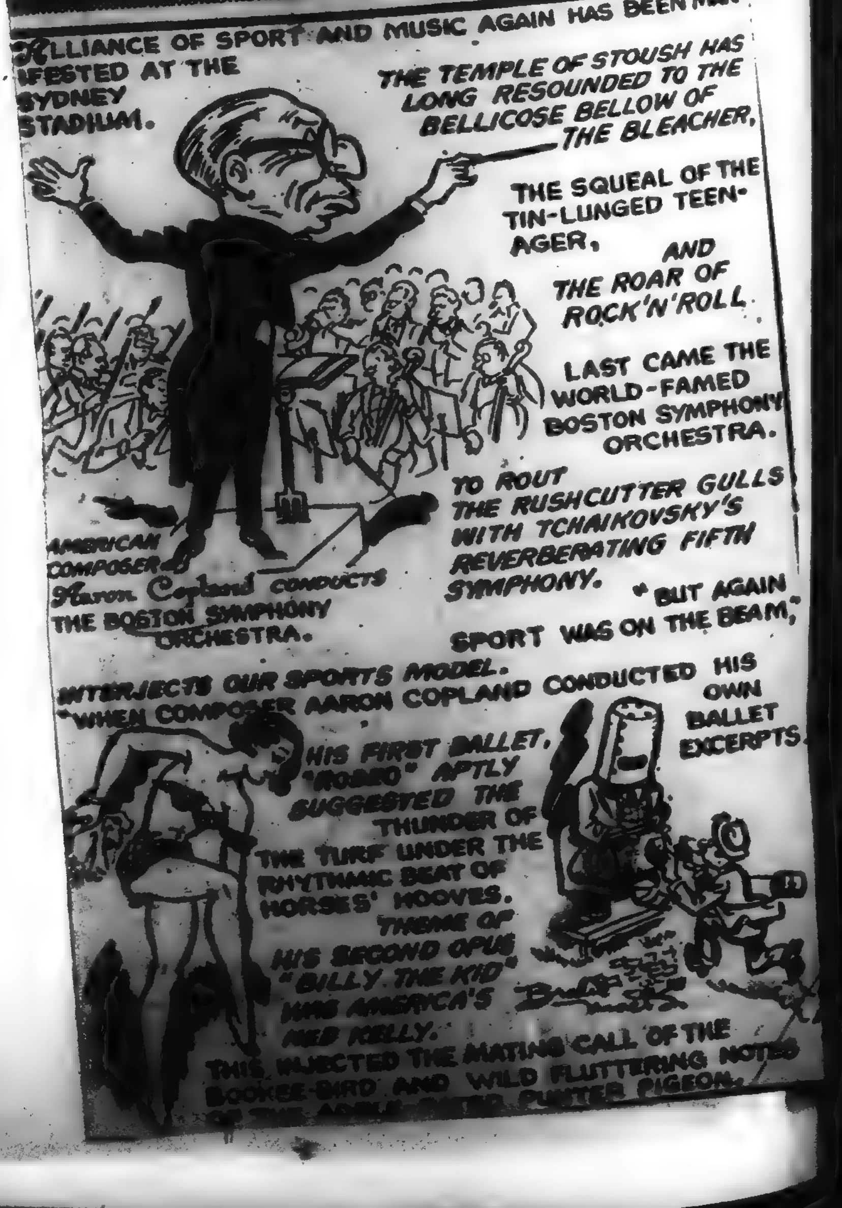
EGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

10 JUN 19

FRIDAY DAILY TELEGRA

BRODIE MACK'S HIGH NOTES



ALLIANCE OF SPORT AND MUSIC AGAIN HAS BEEN MANIFESTED AT THE SYDNEY STADIUM.
THE TEMPLE OF STOUSH HAS LONG RESOUNDED TO THE BELLICOSE BELLOW OF THE BLEACHER,
THE SQUEAL OF THE TIN-LUNGED TEEN-AGER,
AND THE ROAR OF ROCK'N'ROLL.
LAST CAME THE WORLD-FAMED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
TO ROUT THE RUSHCUTTER GULLS WITH TCHAIKOVSKY'S REVERBERATING FIFTH SYMPHONY.
AMERICAN COMPOSER Aaron Copland CONDUCTS THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
"BUT AGAIN SPORT WAS ON THE BEAM,"
INTERJECTS OUR SPORTS MODEL.
"WHEN COMPOSER AARON COPLAND CONDUCTED HIS OWN BALLET EXCERPTS.
HIS FIRST BALLET, "RODEO" APTLY SUGGESTED THE THUNDER OF THE TURF UNDER THE RHYTHMIC BEAT OF HORSES' HOOVES.
THEME OF HIS SECOND OPUS "BILLY THE KID" WAS AMERICA'S NED KELLY.
THIS INJECTED THE MATING CALL OF THE BOOKEE BIRD AND WILD FLUTTERING NOTES

207

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

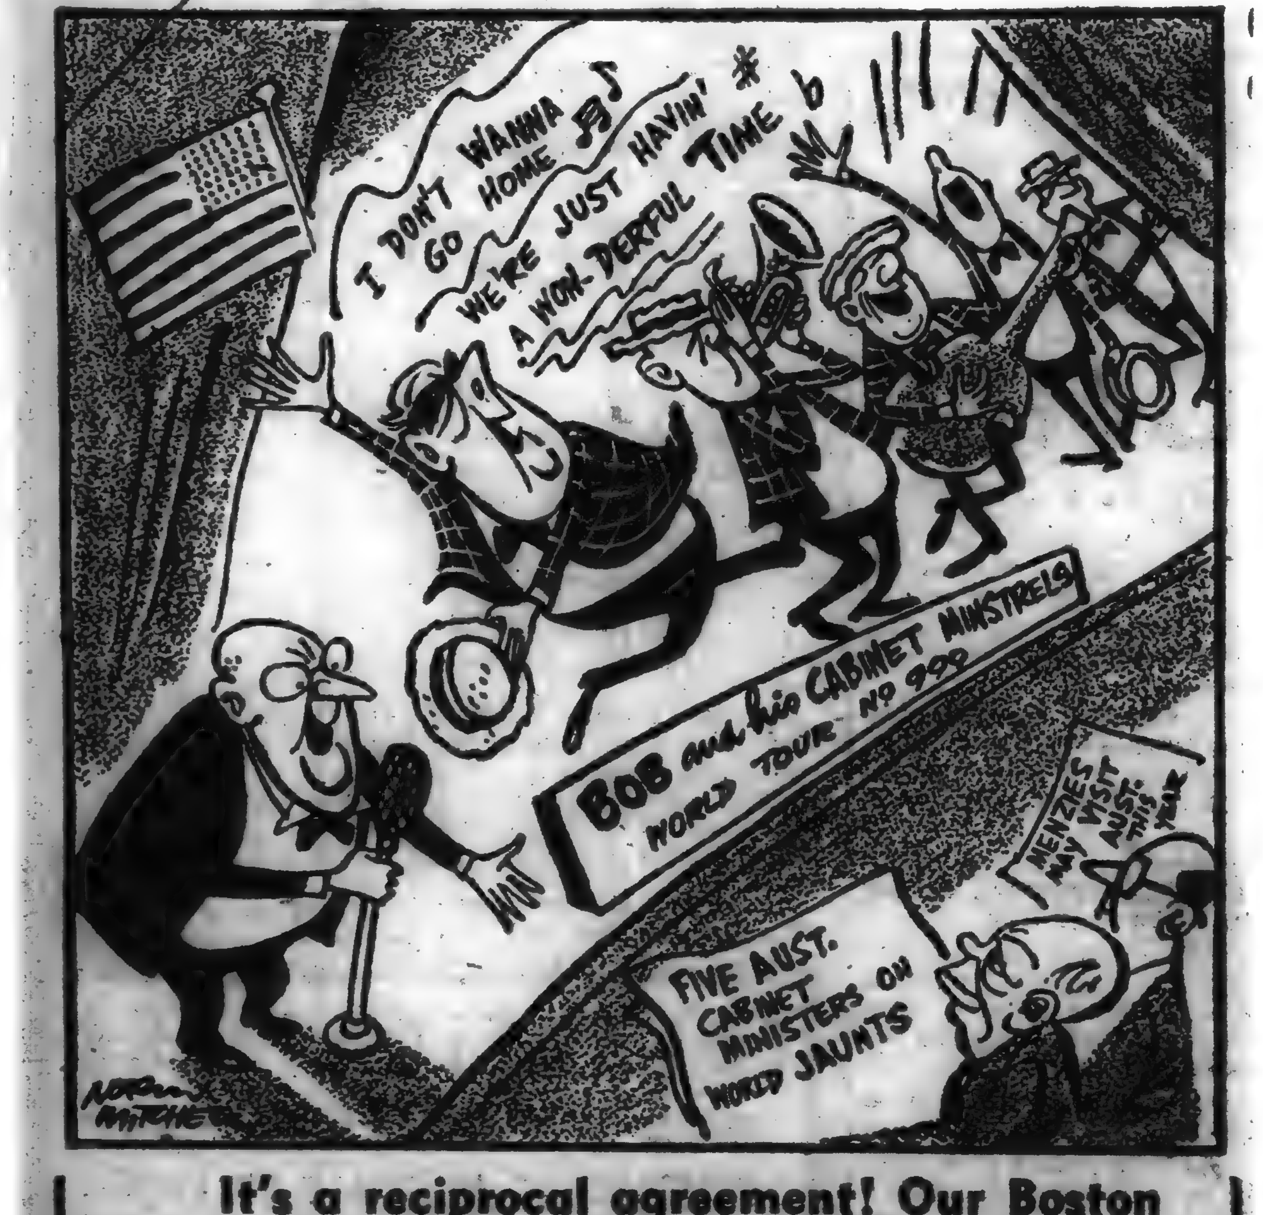
JUN 1960

Visiting French pianist, PHILIPP[illegible]MONT, talks with Mrs. PETER CARRODUS, daughte[illegible]ief Justice, Dr. H. V. Evatt, and Mrs. Evatt, at the [illegible] supper party held at the U.S. Consul-General's re[illegible]d, Edgecliff, on Thursday night. The party followed the [illegible]dney performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Town Hall and hosts were the U.S. Ambassador, Mr. William Sebald, and the acting U.S. Consul-General, Mr. Orray Taft, and Mrs. Taft.

Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

12 JUN



I DON'T WANNA GO HOME
WE'RE JUST HAVIN' A WON-DERFUL TIME
BOB and his CABINET MINSTRELS WORLD TOUR NO 999
MENZIES MAY VISIT AUST. THIS YEAR
FIVE AUST. CABINET MINISTERS ON WORLD JAUNTS
NORMAN MITCHELL

It's a reciprocal agreement! Our Boston Symphony Orchestra is touring Australia—here's the Australian touring band to give us one of their old favorites!—Mitchell in the Adelaide News.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

10 JUN 1960

Ambassador's party for "the Boston"

After the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Town Hall last night, the U.S. Ambassador, Mr. William Sebald, and the acting Consul-General for the U.S., Mr. Orray Taft, and Mrs. Taft gave a supper party for 60 guests.

The party was held at the U.S. Consul-General's residence, Craigend, Edgecliff.

Overseas visitors present were the orchestra's musical director, Dr. Charles Munch, guest conductor, Mr. Aaron Copeland, associate conductor, Mr. Richard Burgin, manager, Mr. Thomas Perry, Jnr., and Mrs. Perry, and French pianist, Philippe Entremont.

Other guests included the State Premier, Mr. R. J. Heffron, and Mrs. Heffron, the Chief Justice, Dr. H. V. Evat[illegible]nd Mrs. Evatt, Sir [illegible] and Lady Bo[illegible]nard Heinze[illegible] Mrs. Nicol[illegible]es an[illegible]

MR. RICHARDS speed to 50 mph
Automagically the best p
Automatically

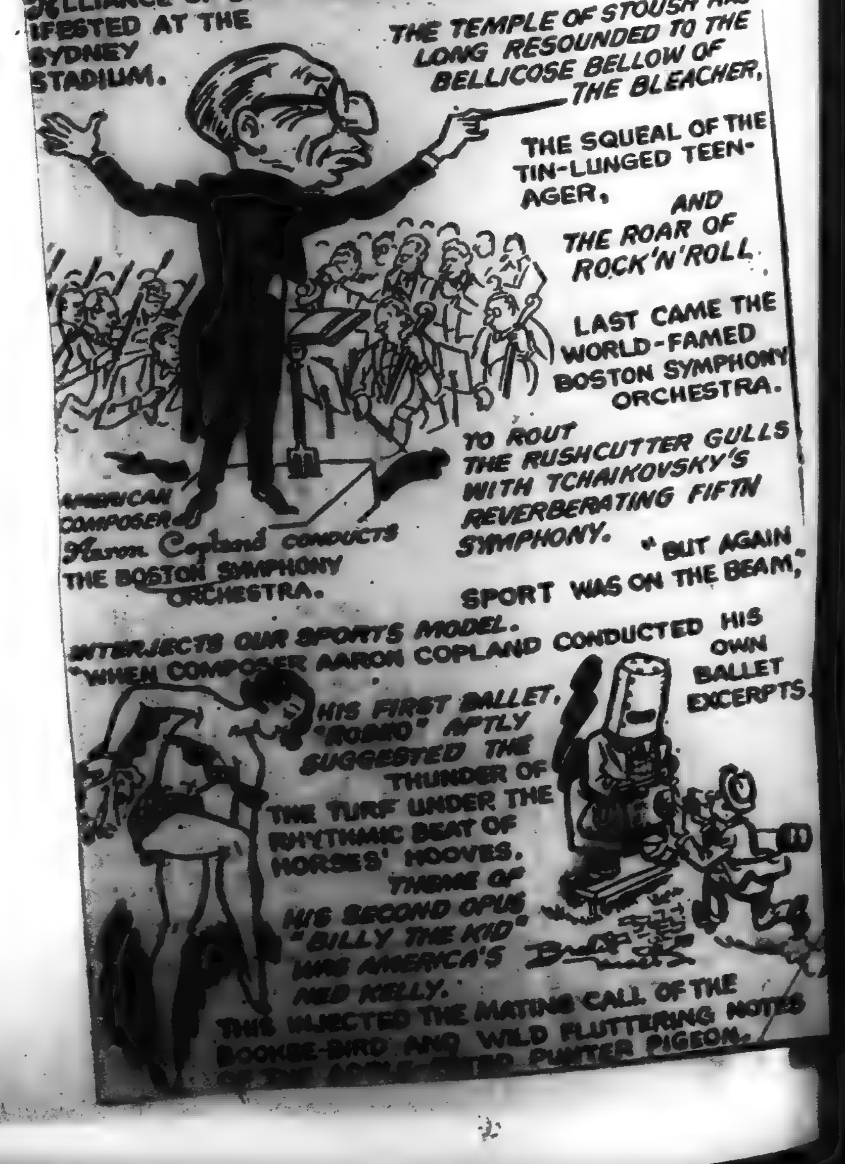
'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"TELEGRAPH"
Sydney, N.S.W.

10 JUN 1960

FRIDAY DAILY TELEGRA

BRODIE MACK'S HIGH NOTES



ALLIANCE OF SPORT AND MUSIC AGAIN HAS BEEN MANIFESTED AT THE SYDNEY STADIUM.
THE TEMPLE OF STOUSH HAS LONG RESOUNDED TO THE BELLICOSE BELLOW OF THE BLEACHER,
THE SQUEAL OF THE TIN-LUNGED TEEN-AGER,
AND THE ROAR OF ROCK'N'ROLL.
LAST CAME THE WORLD-FAMED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
TO ROUT THE RUSHCUTTER GULLS WITH TCHAIKOVSKY'S REVERBERATING FIFTH SYMPHONY.
AMERICAN COMPOSER Aaron Copland CONDUCTS THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
"BUT AGAIN SPORT WAS ON THE BEAM,"
INTERJECTS OUR SPORTS MODEL.
"WHEN COMPOSER AARON COPLAND CONDUCTED HIS OWN BALLET EXCERPTS.
HIS FIRST BALLET, "RODEO" APTLY SUGGESTED THE THUNDER OF THE TURF UNDER THE RHYTHMIC BEAT OF HORSES' HOOVES.
THEME OF HIS SECOND OPUS "BILLY THE KID" WAS AMERICA'S NED KELLY.
THIS INJECTED THE MATING CALL OF THE BOOKIE-BIRD AND WILD FLUTTERING NOTES OF THE [illegible] PUNTER PIGEON.
Brodie Mack

208

The Sydney Morning Herald

2 SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1960

CULTURE AND POLITICS

It is easy to be cynical about the rôle of cultural exchanges in international politics. How often, after a conference between East and West, has the announcement of failure to make progress on matters of life and death been followed by a bland reference to the desirability of increased cultural exchanges? Nevertheless yet another statesman, General de Gaulle, has recently been at pains to emphasise their practical importance. In a long-meditated report to France on the summit he named detente, controlled disarmament and East-West co-operation as the three conditions of peace and, by inference, the three stages of pacification; and he defined the first of these stages, detente, as the exclusion of provocative actions and, positively, as an increase in economic, cultural and tourist exchanges.

The General speaks as a European with a profound appreciation of European history and of the interplay of forces in Europe which have shaped the theory and practice of power politics which now operate throughout the world. Behind his vision of the emergence eventually of a community stretching from the Atlantic to the Urals there is an acknowledgment of common concepts of civilisation between very different races and creeds which have worked for centuries, and still work, to mitigate the collisions of national interests. The most significant product of civilisation is its art. To hear the Berlin Philharmonic play music as "Germanic" as Brahms or the Leningrad Symphony music as "Russian" as Mussorgsky is to be aware of all that "connects" the peoples of the world (to use E. M. Forster's famous word) and to see the events and interests that "disconnect" them in historic proportion.

Europe has long recognised that art has a function that is, in this sense, political. In Europe cultural exchanges in the interests of stability are older than nationalism—for great art, authoritatively interpreted, promotes goodwill, weakens chauvinism, awakens international sympathies, and so acts as a force for peace.

In Sydney this week we felt this force at work in the memorable performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. America is our ally, not our enemy. But Australia, like other countries, has cause for some bitterness over American mistakes. Bitterness creates misunderstanding. To hear the Boston musicians was to be aware of the passion of this idealistic people for perfection; to be aware of the European springs from which they, like us, draw their own culture; to be aware of our common ties and interests. Mingled with our enthusiasm and gratitude there developed a deeper sense of community. If this sense can pervade Sydney as dramatically as it did this week, how much more dramatic must be the impact, of which we have heard, of Russian art on America and of American on Russia; and how much more valuable.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

7 JUN 1960

THE COURIER-MAIL TUESDAY JUNE 7 1960 15

Well-dressed audience for orchestra

THERE was no sign of yesterday's power strike at the City ll last night when the Boston Symony Orchestra gave its premiere stralian concert.

tside floodlights in previous years
Royal Tour decorawere turned on to the building in a
e, golden glow.
e orchestra, which s it has never played empty seat, went one better last night
the packed audience spilled over into the stalls.

ad to hurry

ncert-goers had time exchange only brief
tings beforehand with nds in the foyer where yone seemed to be ing to reach their
s.
hey were spurred on by announcement that the s would be locked at m, and no one allowed until interval.
nly a few women chose nal, floor-length even-
gowns.
ne of the loveliest was n by Mrs. Harold Nett-n, of Ascot, whose long
pless dress of warm red eta featured a softly-
ed bodice.

ovely coats

Theatre coats seemed to be almost as popular as fur stoles and jackets, and made glamorous coverings for short evening dresses.

A shimmering peacock green evening coat, with a striking fur collar was the choice of Mrs. Rob Carlile, of Hamilton.

Miss Angela Sutton, of Ascot, wore palest pink kid shoes to offset her lustrous coat of midnight-blue velvet.

WOMEN

A special Boston supper party was given by the Premier (Mr. Nicklin) after the concert for members of the orchestra.

A "Boston tea party" was out of the question, because the players usually don't eat a meal before a performance.

Keeping in mind that more than 100 guests would not have dined, hot dishes were included in the supper menu.

Prawn dish

Hors d'oeuvres and savouries were followed by curried prawns and rice and savoury mince casserole.

The Governor (Sir Henry Abel Smith) and Lady May, who attended the supper given in the dining-room at Parliament House, were received by the Premier (Mr. Nicklin) and Mrs. Nicklin.

College dance

HOT doughnuts were served at the American College Dance given by the Home Science Teachers' College at the O'Connor Boathouse last night.

More than 200 guests were met by the president, Miss Leila Kenny, of Red Hill, and Miss Pat Stevens, of Gregory Terrace.

THE BOSTON Symphony concert in the City Hall last night brought back nostalgic memories to Dr. and Mrs. Murray Williams, of Taringa, who are pictured here with another concert-goer (at right) Mrs. Jim Armitage, of Kenmore, Dr. and Mrs. Williams once lived in Boston while Dr. Williams did post-graduate work at Harvard.

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

10 JUN 1960

Orchestra bells ring the welkin

by MARTIN LONG

THE most startling feature of the startling performance of Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday night were the enormous bells that clanged like Thor's anvil in the finale.

The bells, standing mouth-up among the percussion instruments at the top of the orchestra, intrigued the audience even before the concert began.

The sound of them, when they tolled out to introduce the Dies Irae section of the movement, was in ear-splitting contrast to the conventional orchestral tubular bells normally used in this passage.

The tubular bells make a polite, "bonging" sound. The Boston bells are designed to shatter the welkin.

IMPRESSED by the dedication that drives the orchestra to transport these massive resonators half way round the world to play 30-odd notes in one short passage in one work, I investigated the bells.

I found that they are a monument to Franco-American perfectionism.

The advance manager of the orchestra, Mr. William Cox, said that they were specially made just for this work at the request of Dr. Charles Munch, the French-born principal conductor of the orchestra.

"Dr. Munch felt that the ordinary tubular bells didn't fill the bill," he said.

"We experimented with sheets of metal, but that was not satisfactory either.

"Finally we had the bells specially cast in France. And even then they had to file bits off them before Dr. Munch was satisfied."

The bells are made of bronze, and between them they weigh about a third of a ton—only 1/27th after all, of the nine tons of baggage that the orchestra has brought with it on its tour.

They are not swung and sounded with a rope and clapper like "steeple" bells, but struck on the rim with a hammer.

Bells in the orchestra have long been a problem.

Composers in their enthusiasm are inclined to write deep-sounding bell parts to give an atmosphere of religious solemnity to their [illegible], forgetting that if ordinary steeple bells were used for such low notes they would have to weigh about 50 tons.

One of the most elaborate of these was made for the 19th century composer and conductor Felix Mottle to play the famous bell-motive in Wagner's opera Parsifal.

As one writer who saw it said: "It looked as though an amateur carpenter had been trying to convert a billiard table into a grand pianoforte and in the course of his experiments had left the works outside."

It was not much of a success. When it was introduced at the Wagner Festival Theatre in Bayreuth it had to be assisted by five gongs and a bass tuba.

In course of time it was abandoned in favor of a conventional set of tubular bells.

BERLIOZ, in his Symphonie Fantastique passage, called for two deep bells. But being a realist as well as an experimentalist he suggested that the part could be played in heavy triple octaves on a grand piano.

I have never heard of a piano being used as a stand-in these days: tubular bells are the usual solution.

[illegible] the Boston bells re[illegible] us just how far removed the rather pure tone of tubular bells is from the deep, complex clang of a true steeple bell.

208

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"COURIER MAIL"
Brisbane, Qld.
7 JUN 1960

Well-dressed audience for orchestra

THERE was no sign of yesterday's power strike at the City Hall last night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its premiere Australian concert.

WOMEN

Outside floodlights used in previous years for Royal Tour decorations were turned on to bathe the building in a gentle, golden glow.

The orchestra, which boasts it has never played to an empty seat, went even one better last night . . . the packed audience even spilled over into the choir stalls.

Had to hurry

Concert-goers had time to exchange only brief greetings beforehand with friends in the foyer where everyone seemed to be jostling to reach their seats.

They were spurred on by the announcement that the doors would be locked at 8 p.m. and no one allowed in until interval.

Only a few women chose formal, floor-length evening gowns.

One of the loveliest was worn by Mrs. Harold Nettheim, of Ascot, whose long strapless dress of warm red taffeta featured a softly-draped bodice.

Lovely coats

Theatre coats seemed to be almost as popular as fur stoles and jackets, and made glamorous coverings for short evening dresses.

A shimmering peacock green evening coat, with a striking fur collar was the choice of Mrs. Rob Carlile, of Hamilton.

Miss Angela Sutton, of Ascot, wore palest pink kid shoes to offset her lustrous coat of midnight-blue velvet.

A special Boston supper party was given by the Premier (Mr. Nicklin) after the concert for members of the orchestra.

A "Boston tea party" was out of the question, because the players usually don't eat a meal before a performance.

Keeping in mind that more than 100 guests would not have dined, hot dishes were included in the supper menu.

Prawn dish

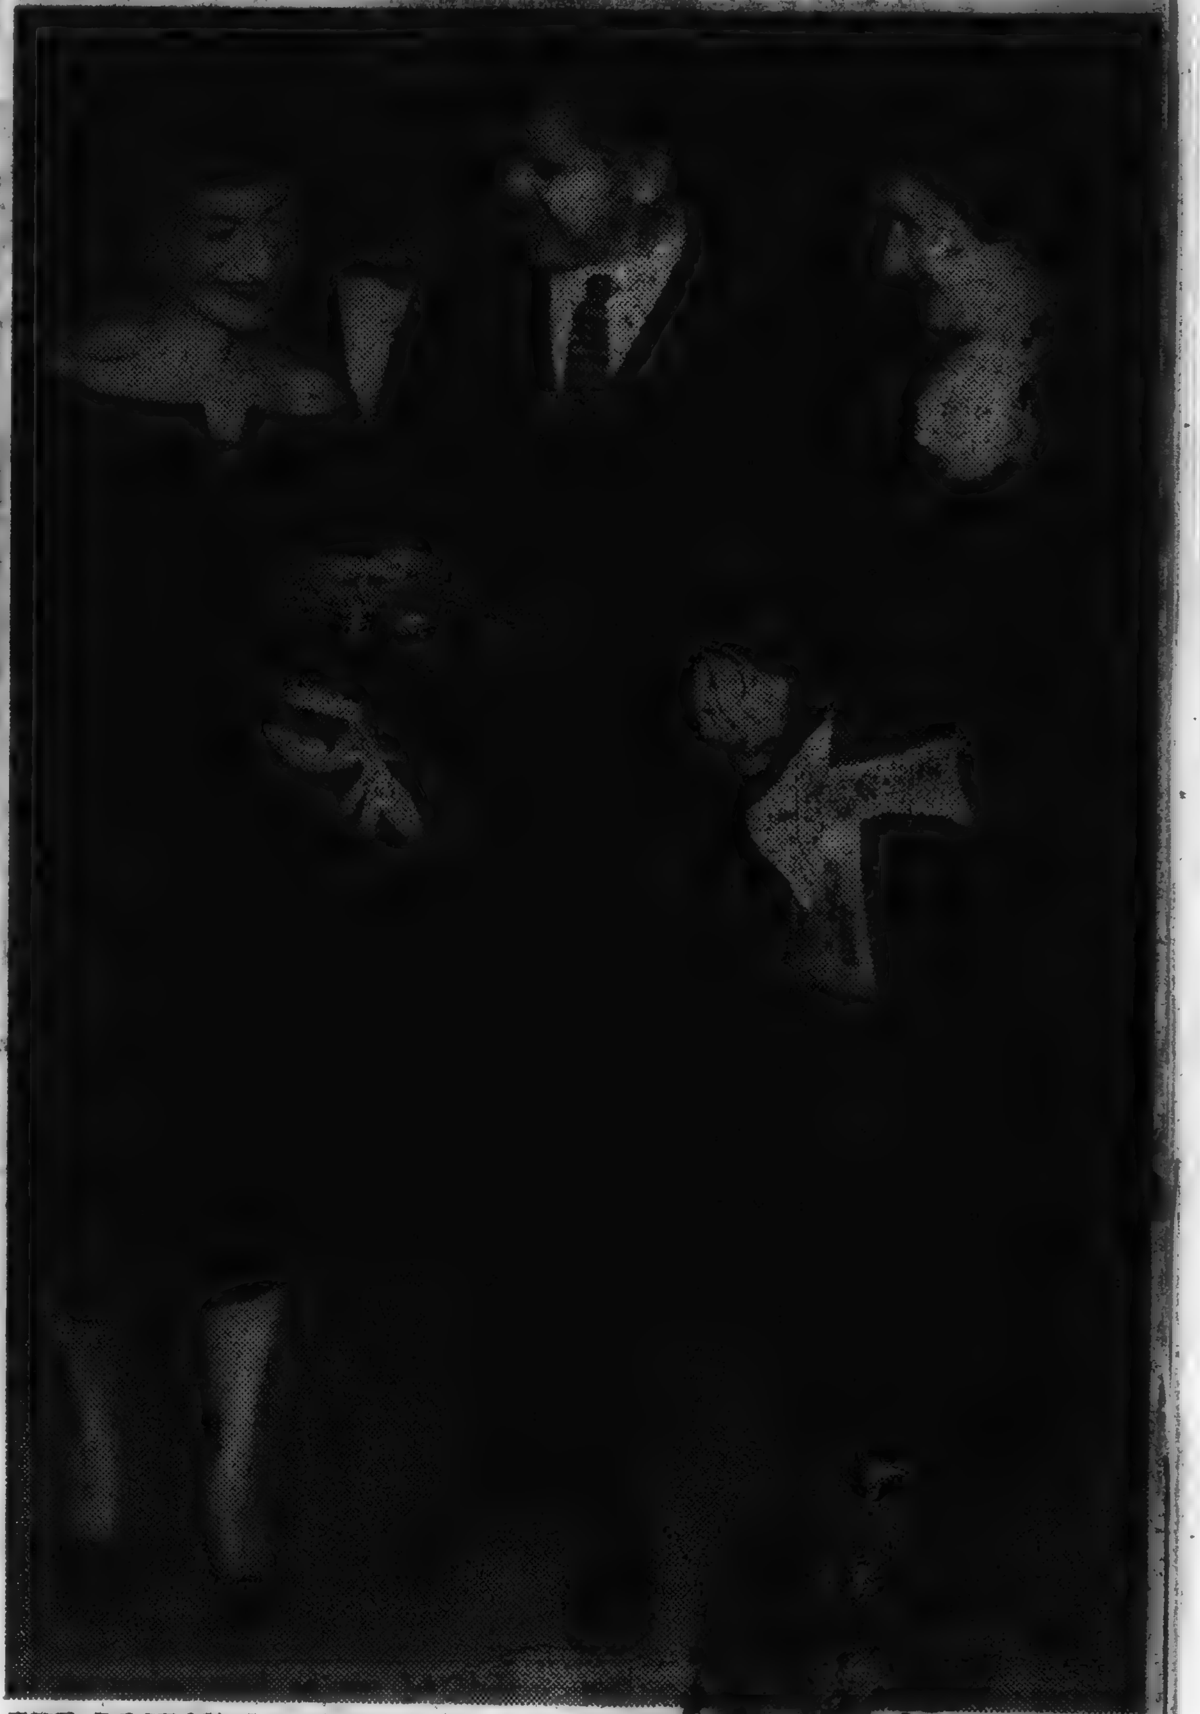
Hors d'oeuvres and savouries were followed by curried prawns and rice and savoury mince casserole.

The Governor (Sir Henry Abel Smith) and Lady May, who attended the supper given in the dining-room at Parliament House, were received by the Premier (Mr. Nicklin) and Mrs. Nicklin.

College dance

HOT doughnuts were served at the American College Dance given by the Home Science Teachers' College at the O'Connor Boathouse last night.

More than 200 guests were met by the president, Miss Leila Kenny, of Red Hill, and Miss Pat Stevens, of Gregory Terrace.



THE BOSTON Symphony concert in the City Hall last night brought back nostalgic memories to Dr. and Mrs. Murray Williams, of Taringa, who are pictured here with another concert-goer (at right) Mrs. Jim Armitage, of Kenmore. Dr. and Mrs. Williams once lived in Boston while Dr. Williams did post-graduate work at Harvard.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"TELEGRAPH"
Sydney, N.S.W.
10 JUN 1960

Orchestra bells ring the welkin

by MARTIN LONG

THE most startling feature of the startling performance of Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday night were the enormous bells that clanged like Thor's anvil in the finale.

The bells, standing mouth-up among the percussion instruments at the top of the orchestra, intrigued the audience even before the concert began.

The sound of them, when they tolled out to introduce the Dies Irae section of the movement, was in ear-splitting contrast to the conventional orchestral tubular bells normally used in this passage.

The tubular bells make a polite, "bonging" sound. The Boston bells are designed to shatter the welkin.

IMPRESSED by the dedication that drives the orchestra to transport these massive resonators half way round the world to play 30-odd notes in one short passage in one work, I investigated the bells.

I found that they are a monument to Franco-American perfectionism.

The advance manager of the orchestra, Mr. William Cox, said that they were specially made just for this work at the request of Dr. Charles Munch, the French-born principal conductor of the orchestra.

"Dr. Munch felt that the ordinary tubular bells didn't fill the bill," he said.

"We experimented with sheets of metal, but that was not satisfactory either.

"Finally we had the bells specially cast in France. And even then they had to file bits off them before Dr. Munch was satisfied."

The bells are made of bronze, and between them they weigh about a third of a ton—only 1/27th after all, of the nine tons of baggage that the orchestra has brought with it on its tour.

They are not swung and sounded with a rope and clapper like "steeple" bells, but struck on the rim with a hammer.

Bells in the orchestra have long been a problem.

Composers in their enthusiasm are inclined to write deep-sounding bell parts to give an atmosphere of religious solemnity to their music, forgetting that if ordinary steeple bells were used for such low notes they would have to weigh about 50 tons.

One of the most elaborate of these was made for the 19th century composer and conductor Felix Mottle to play the famous bell-motive in Wagner's opera Parsifal.

As one writer who saw it said: "It looked as though an amateur carpenter had been trying to convert a billiard table into a grand pianoforte and in the course of his experiments had left the works outside."

It was not much of a success. When it was introduced at the Wagner Festival Theatre in Bayreuth it had to be assisted by five gongs and a bass tuba.

In course of time it was abandoned in favor of a conventional set of tubular bells.

BERLIOZ, in his Symphonie Fantastique passage, called for two deep bells. But being a realist as well as an experimentalist he suggested that the part could be played in heavy triple octaves on a grand piano.

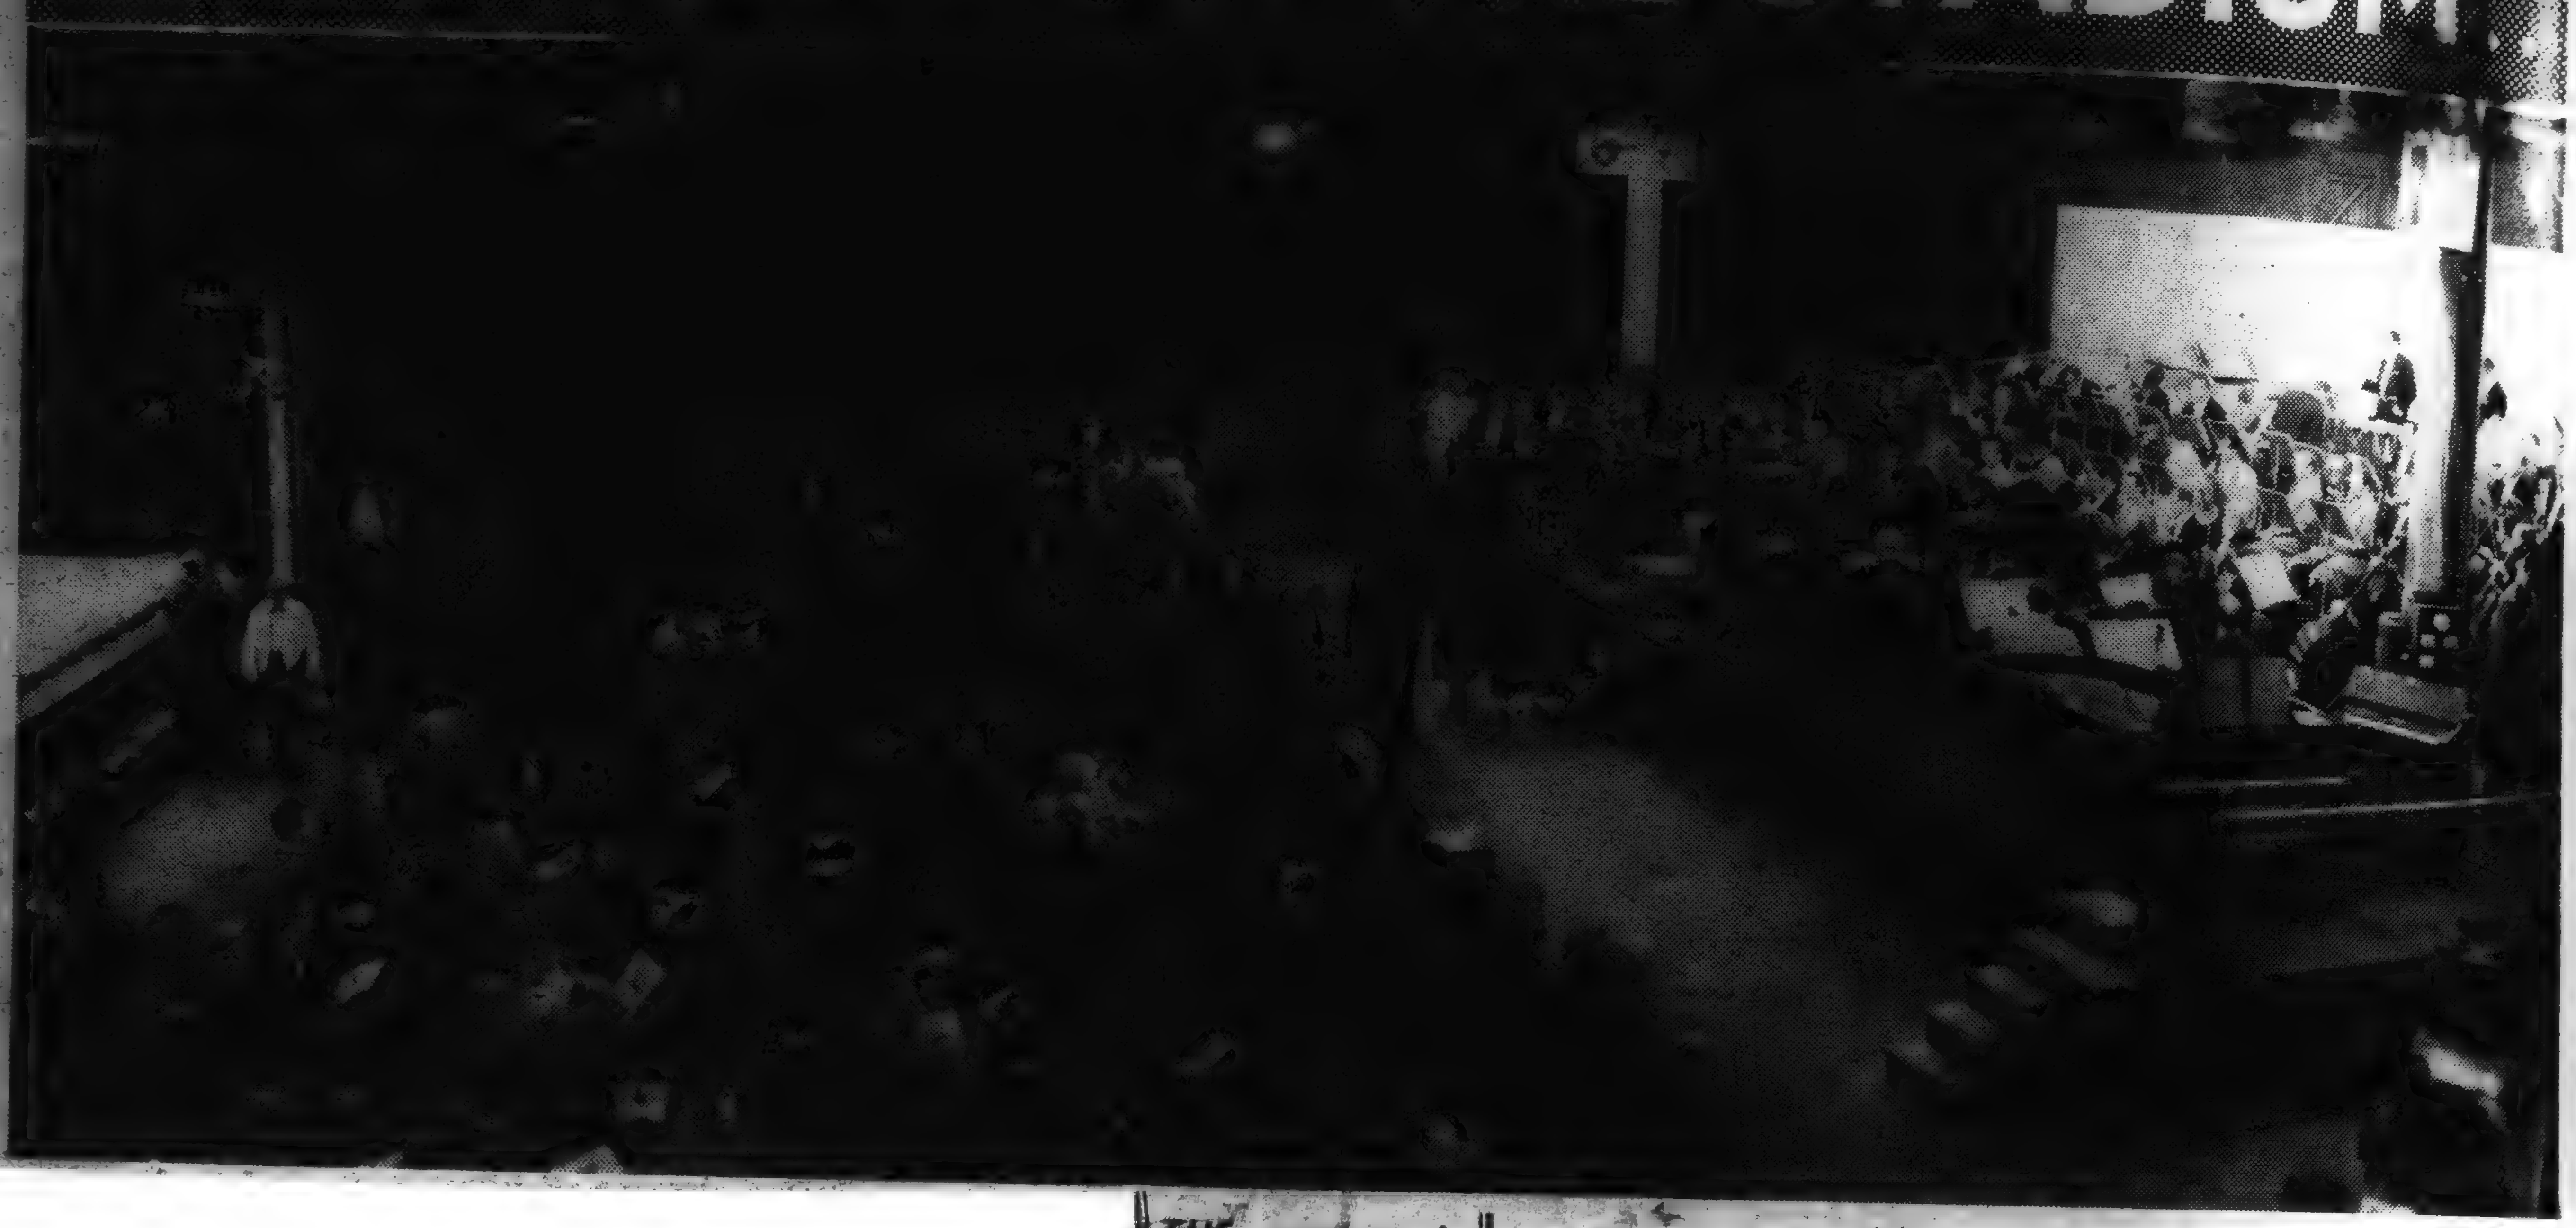
I have never heard of a piano being used as a stand-in these days: tubular bells are the usual solution.

But the Boston bells remind us just how far removed the rather pure tone of tubular bells is from the deep, complex clang of a true steeple bell.

209

Sydney

SYMPHONY AT THE STADIUM



THE scene at the Stadium last night just before the start of the concert of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Governor (Sir Eric Woodward) attended the concert.

AUDIENCE RECALLS CONDUCTOR 7 TIMES

An audience of more than 6000 at Sydney Stadium last night recalled American composer-conductor Aaron Copland seven times at the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert.

Mr. Copland was associate conductor with Richard Burgin.

Mr. Copland conducted two of his own works, his First Symphony and the orchestral suite from "The Tender Land," in the second part of the programme.

The orchestra played two encores, excerpts from Mr. Copland's "Billy the Kid" and "Rodeo" ballets.

Mr. Burgin conducted the programme's major work, Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

Swelling waves of applause, the beating of feet and cheers from the bleachers, followed each conductor from the platform.

The concert was Sydney's most informal for some time.

Many members of the orchestra wore overcoats because of the cold night.

One member said later the orchestra's visit to the Philippines had left them unprepared for Sydney's [illegible]

The audience came equipped with rugs and, in some cases, with hot-water bottles.

The Orchestra will give its final Sydney concert at the Town Hall tonight.

• REVIEW, PAGE 44.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"WEST AUSTRALIAN"

Perth, W.A.

22 JUN 1960

Different Artists At Stadium Show

THERE was not a discordant note in Sydney's reception of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Booking for the final concert was so heavy that it had to be held at the Rushcutter Bay Stadium where a special stage was built. It is to the credit of Sydney that the audience of 5,000 exceeded the attendances when two highly-rated fellows in the business of prize-fighting catered for the pleasure of citizens who like blood and thumps and plenty of them.

It was a change, too, to see seats normally occupied by bleachers who applaud ecstatically when one of the artists in the ring knocks the other flat on his back, or draws blood copiously from nose or eye, filled by brave men and fair women in evening dress paying unanimous tribute to the referee—that is to say, the conductor.

When orchestras and conductors of lesser reputation than the Boston party appear in Sydney a leading music critic usually qualifies even his favourable notices with some buts. He gave the Bostonians all he had without qualification. Indeed in his unbridled enthusiasm he became almost incoherent. The music of this fine band of musicians moved him to strange expressions—strange at least to one reader of his notice. This is some of it:

THE SYDNEY SCENE

from Geoff Burgoyne

The expertness of the playing . . . was almost everywhere as gripping as the characteristically Bostonian textures it produced . . . If it is reasonable to think of the Philadelphia aesthetic, say as something akin to the Rubens Venus on a velvet divan it could be just as reasonable to think of the Boston aesthetic as a Rembrandt merchant officiating from a Chippendale chair, himself as sturdy and solid and sane as his support and, in thought, as deeply brown as its grain.

When I heard the orchestra I had no vision of a buxom nude reclining on a red velvet couch, or of a Dutch merchant seated on Chippendale or Austrian bentwood in a brown study. But, then, I have no claim to be able to interpret composers' inspirations, and perhaps I missed a bar or two—musical.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"LISTENER-IN"

Melbourne, Vic.

11 JUN 1960

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch will be seen in a direct telecast from the Olympic Pool on ABV2 at 7.55 on Tuesday night, June 14. The orchestra will play "Symphonie Fantastique" by Berlioz during the hour-long concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 45,338

JUN 8 - 1960

Quincy Patriot Ledger,

Australians Praise Boston Symphony

MELBOURNE, Australia (Reuters) — The touring Boston Symphony Orchestra was greeted by capacity audiences and high praise with its opening concert in Sydney Tuesday.

An audience of 2,300, which included Governor-General Viscount Dunrossil and Lady Dunrossil, gave the orchestra a tremendous ovation for its performance at the Sydney Town Hall.

The orchestra played at Sydney Stadium to an audience estimated at between 5,000 and 7,000. The Australian tour opened to an enthusiastic audience in Brisbane.

The Sydney Morning Herald music critic described Tuesday's concert as a master stroke for American diplomacy and for music.

"This mightly orchestra . . . plays with the precision of a machine yet nowhere does this have the effect of submerging the enormous human warmth which these men give their music . . ."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,072

JUN 8 - 1960

at the new school.

SYMPHONY IN AUSTRALIA

SYDNEY, (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra received a [illegible] reception last night from a capacity audience of 2,300 in Sydney Town Hall. The orchestra performs today in Sydney Stadium before an expected audience of 7,000.

210

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

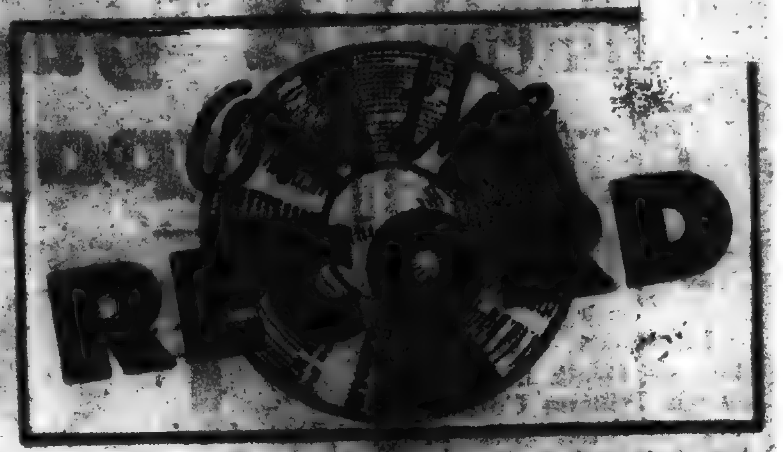
"SUN"

Sydney, N.S.W

21 JUN 1960

Boston

Heifetz still peerless



BY JULIAN RUSSELL

HEIFETZ' coupling of Prokofieff's G Minor Violin Concerto with Mendelssohn's E Minor on a 12 inch R.C.A. mono might seem incongruous to buyers with specialised tastes.

But this will not discourage those on the look-out for a characteristic example of the playing of one of the greatest violin virtuosos of the century.

Heifetz uses a technique which must still be envied by many of his contemporaries, young and old, and a tone as tautly beautiful as ever.

And he plays both these pieces with an authority that compels agreement however reluctantly conceded.

I first heard Heifetz play the Mendelssohn in the middle 1920s, and remember well how surprised I was at his fiery account of the first movement and at what I then thought was the "impossible" rapidity of his finale.

My response nearly half a century later is much the same—one of giddy admiration.

No one else plays the opening movement so urgently, and the finale still goes at a rocket-like speed, leaving a trail of musical sparks behind it.

The writer might nowadays prefer a less reckless reading—Milstein's, for instance—but he remains agape with wonder at Heifetz'.

The Second Prokofieff is not an endearing work. The lyrical first is much more graceful both to player and listener.

But Heifetz communicates all the beauty the closest examination can find in the spare score.

The sound throughout both concertos is excellently clean, though the violin most of the time is oppressively close to the mike.

The Boston, under Munch, supplies exemplary accompaniment.

* * *

FEW conductors with Munch's understanding of French music have an instrument like the Boston at their permanent disposal.

And his 12-inch R.C.A. The French Touch, issued simultaneously on mono and stereo, offers everything the most exacting admirer might expect of it.

The program includes Dukas' L'Apprenti Sorcier, Saint-Saens' Le Rouet d'Omphale, and Ravel's Mother Goose Suite.

Munch makes L'Apprenti sound like a true scherzo, bubbling with wit — and water.

The wonderfully fluid-sounding orchestration evokes a picture of a thorough drenching.

Munch takes the Saint-Saens' piece much more briskly than Beecham in the latter's recent recorded performance.

Where Munch's wheel really spins, Beecham's just turns over.

If I had to choose one example of woodwind playing more exquisite than the rest in this delicious performance, I should cite the oboe's staccato phrases at the beginning of the reprise of the main theme.

But it is all enchanting and the whole orchestra is consistently in the most sensitive balance imaginable.

The Ravel, too, is a joy. The fragile fabric of the opening Pavane is treated with rare delicacy.

The Tristan-like rising thirds of Petit Poucet move in restless anxiety behind the sad pipings of the wind.

Then comes the pointillist Laideronette, the many notes of the Chinese-sounding score set gem-like in their places.

The remaining items are all of similar perfection.

The sound is good on mono and superb on stereo, except for a slightly too prominent triangle in L'Apprenti Sorcier.

WESTMINSTER'S 12-inch mono of Beethoven's C Minor Symphony played by Rodzinsky and the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of London is spoiled by its engineering.

The bass is very woolly and the score sounds all top and bottom.

On this account alone it is not to be recommended in preference to the many excellent available versions of this popular work.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

14 JUN 1960

MORE than 4,000 years of combined lifetimes created the experience out of which the personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made its music here—so vast a stretch of time that, counted backwards from now, it would reach into a time when even Gizeh did not have its pyramids.

It's a staggering thought by any standard—4,000 years of life to entertain us—and not many great orchestras can offer it, for the Boston has many more veteran and middle-aged musicians than any of its rivals.

Still, perhaps no law can be deduced from the accumulated age of any musical body as a key to its musical rank.

Some of our Australian choral societies, for instance, could each amass enough age to stretch end to end way back beyond 4,004 B.C. and Adam and Eve.

Columbia. Filming is slated to ~~start next Monday in Spain.~~

Times 6/14/60

Bostonians Play in Melbourne

MELBOURNE, Australia, June 13 (Reuters)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert tonight at the Melbourne Town Hall, under direction of Richard Burgin associate conductor, was "a triumph of orchestral music-making," the music critic of the Melbourne Age said. Writing for tomorrow's edition of the newspaper, he said superlatives would fail to do justice to the orchestra.

Edward G. Robinson Jr. Fined

Est. 19

AUST

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVOCATE"

Burnie, Tas.

JUN 1960

Phillip Kaplan, flautist, one of the 115 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra pictured arriving at Essendon Airport this week for the orchestra's two concerts in Melbourne.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

14 JUN 1960

Orchestra's airliner just had to pause

AN American Constellation airliner was delayed for more than two hours at Eagle Farm yesterday while crew members held a "tarpaulin muster" to raise £310.

The money was needed for the release of a crewman.

He had been arrested under a warrant issued by the Sheriff of Queensland (Mr. C. L. Christopherson).

The Constellation airliner, which brought the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Brisbane for its Australian tour earlier this month, was due to leave for Auckland, New Zealand, at 11 a.m. to pick up the orchestra for the return flight to the United States.

But early yesterday a writ was taken out by Avis Rent-a-Car System Pty. Ltd. of Edward Street, Brisbane, claiming £300 against Earl I. Jolly, aircraft maintenance engineer, of Fairmount Street, Burbank, California, United States of America.

The company claimed the money was payable by Jolly under a car-rent agreement dated June 10, or alternatively the company claimed £300 damages for alleged breach of the agreement.

A warrant for Jolly's arrest was issued after Mr. Justice Stable in a special Supreme Court sitting had made a chamber order.

Just before 10 a.m. yesterday Mr. F. T. Huggett, Sheriff's Officer, went to a city hotel and arrested Jolly under the warrant.

AIRPORT MUSTER takings were counted by Flying Tiger aircraft captain (Captain R. Allen, right) as T.A.A. senior traffic officer (Mr. K. Fitzgerald, left) and Mr. Robert M. Badgery, a Brisbane solicitor, looked on.

MES

Stadium

Aaron

mphony

MU 5133

TTINGS

ne, Vic.

10 WEDNESDAY DAILY TELEGRAPH, JUNE 8, 1960

MAESTRO TAKES A BOW . . .

THE CONDUCTOR of the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra (Dr. Munch) taking his final bow at the Orchestra's concert in the Sydney Town Hall last night.

SYDNEY ACCLAIMS BOSTON ORCHESTRA

The world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra last night gave its first Sydney concert to a wildly-applauding capacity audience of 2300 people at the Town Hall.

Sustained clapping and unprecedented cheering continued for more than seven minutes after the first half of the concert.

The orchestra's permanent musical director, celebrated French conductor Charles Munch, took the rare step of giving two encores at the end of the scheduled performance

The Boston Symphony, recognised as one of the world's finest orchestras, is on a nine-day concert tour of Australia.

The orchestra will give performances at the Stadium tonight and at the Town Hall tomorrow night before leaving for Adelaide

The 117-piece orchestra opened last night with Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique.

As the last movement drew to a shattering climax, the tumultuous applause began.

Back six times

Charles Munch returned to the rostrum six times to acknowledge the tremendous ovation.

The orchestra then played Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale, and Roussel's Bacchus et Ariane. Suite No 2. Opus 43.

At the completion of the pieces Charles Munch made two curtain calls before playing an encore—Handel's Water Music Suite.

When he again tried to leave the stage the audience burst into demanding applause and he returned.

Dabbing his brow he led the orchestra through another variation of the Water Music Suite.

Almost exhausted, he left for his hotel minutes only after the last encore ended.

Review, P. 31

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

21 JUN 1960

Letters To

A MUSIC CRITIC'S "INACCURACIES"

Mr Moses Defends The A.B.C.

SIR,—Your Music Critic's article "Moses Hunting for Scapegoats" ("Herald," June 14) is so far off the mark that I am obliged to point out its major misconceptions and inaccuracies.

The critic's second paragraph about complaints made by "dozens" of unnamed artists about "poor accommodation, poor transport and galley-slave overwork" does not stand up to scrutiny. We accommodate our artists at the best hotels and send them a list, months before they arrive, setting out the full range of hotels in every city and inviting them to make their choice.

A cable received jointly from Charles Munch, musical director, and Thomas D. Perry, manager, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is worth mentioning. It reads: "Arrived safe and sound but already homesick for Australia and your superb hospitality greetings." It is the rule rather than the exception for A.B.C. artists to take the trouble to write expressing their appreciation of the arrangements made for them.

On transport, we book them for longer journeys by Australian airlines and for shorter trips by car or train, whichever they prefer.

Itineraries Negotiated

As for the "galley-slave overwork," itineraries are the subject of negotiation between the A.B.C., the artists and their agents, and each artist who comes here, and his management, know precisely what he has undertaken. I might add that most artists who come to Australia are under the management of the world's most important concert agencies. These agencies would not permit their artists to come here if the dark picture your critic paints were accurate.

Moreover, despite what he has said on this occasion (and he and his colleagues on other occasions) we do succeed in maintaining a high standard of musical performances at our concerts. During the present season, for instance, we have had so far such people Sir Malcolm Sargent, Philippe Entremont, Alfredo Campoli and Lois Marshall. All of these, with Igor Markevitch, conductor, and the Soviet 'cellist, Rostropovich, who come to us next month, are in constant demand in the world's major music centres. None, to use your critic's term, is a "second-rater" and none, again despite your critic, is being paid less than the fee payable in other parts of the world.

It is true that some artists do not wish to come to Australia. Some, while they would be willing to come for short seasons in Sydney and Melbourne, are reluctant to be away from Europe and the United States for the period necessary to give concerts in most of the capital cities.

CHARLES MOSES,
General Manager,
Australian Broadcasting Commission.
Sydney.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

14 JUN 1960

After a busy week while the Boston Symphony Orchestra was in town, the U.S. Information Officer, Mr. Richard Joyce, and Mrs. Joyce left by car yesterday to spend a week's holiday at Surfers Paradise.

Their two sons, Timothy and Christopher are with them.

212

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

10 JUN 1960

Ray Castle

THEY NEARLY SPILLED THE BEANS IN BOSTON

An ABC lesson Bananalanders should learn

IN the early hours of yesterday morning the Australian Broadcasting Commission rescued Australia from one of the greatest diplomatic blunders of all time.

The occasion of this happy diplomatic triumph was a party at Kings Cross.

There some of the A.B.C.'s top brass restored to members of the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra the belief that Australians are a race of friendly, happy, hospitable people.

The party stopped these 100-odd musical ambassadors from taking back to the United States the impression that we are a bunch of backwoods hicks.

The world-famous musicians got this bad impression from no less a body than Her Majesty's Queensland Government.

Last Monday night the pineapple State invited the Bostonians to a Government reception in Brisbane's Parliament House after their first appearance in Australia.

No chairs

No grog

But what a party!

There were tiny saucers of curry and rice, a few asparagus rolls and suchlike titbits.

But no chairs.

And no grog.

The musicians shuffled about awkwardly.

Until conductor CHARLES MUNCH walked in, saw the situation, and announced: "There is nothing to drink; there is nowhere to sit. I am going home to bed."

And he did.

With this sour taste in their mouths, the Bostonians were rather lukewarm when they received invitations to the A.B.C.'s party at the Kings Cross restaurant of JOSEPH GOTTWALD on Wednesday night.

And, naturally, half of them didn't turn up.

But what a welcome surprise for those who did. Wine galore—white, followed by red, followed by champagne.

Gallons of the stuff.

And the food . . . ah, the food. Sydney rock oysters, kangaroo tail soup, steak and mushrooms, "Woomera Bomb" (a magnificent dessert), New Guinea coffee, a huge Australia-shape cake.

Jo Gottwald really did the orchestra proud.

And, A.B.C. big-wigs, chairman SIR RICHARD BOYER, general manager CHARLES MOSES and assistant general manager HUCK FINLAY were all in fine form.

They laughed, they drank, they sang—"Home, home on the range." The Boston boys loved it.

When I arrived one of them was just leaving to go back to his hotel. He returned 10 minutes later with 15 reinforcements who had been scared off by the Brisbane famine.

United States information officer DICK JOYCE was leading the singing.

DR. NICOLAI MALKO, musical director of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra, was fascinating American composer AARON COPLAND with conjuring tricks.

On and on it went into the morning. Members of the orchestra were arriving in a constant stream as the word went out: it's a wing-ding.

First clarinettist GINO CIOFFI declared: "This is the most wonderful party I've ever been to."

Trombonist WILLIAM GIBSON found a baton to conduct a French rondo. Bass clarinet ROSARIO MAZZEO observed that Australia should be on the Boston's regular itinerary.

A fiddler leaned over my shoulder and asked: "Is Brisbane really part of the same country?"

I explained their different ways Up North. I think he understood.

Anyway, there was more champagne to be drunk, so who cared?

SIR RICHARD BOYER, at the head of the table, presides over a happy party for the Boston orchestra—on his right Aaron Copland, Lady Boyer, Richard Burgin; on his left Dr. Nicolai Malko, Mrs. and Mr. Thomas Perry, Jun.*

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVOCATE"

Burnie, Tas.

16 JUN 1960

24-STONE MASCOT

This is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's mascot — 24-stone plus Leslie ("Tiny") Martin. "Tiny" plays the double bass and has been with the orchestra, which is at present visiting Melbourne, for three years.

OBSCURED TEXT

The Sydney Morning Herald, Friday, June 10, 1960 5

Boston's Final Sydney Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra said farewell to Sydney at the Town Hall last night with a concert in which their zeal to give all outweighed the fact that these travellers, covering ground more desperately than their own beloved Paul Revere, were not fresh enough for definitive Debussy or Brahms.

In both Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' second symphony, tone and attack, balance and ensemble were of an excellence which could have most of the name orchestras of the world aching with envy.

And yet, elusively during the ecstasy of Debussy's world of spindrift and spume and gull-wheelings and less obscurely during the autumnal contemplation of lost worlds in the Brahms, one could sense some lack of spontaneity.

At that, conductor Charles Munch's Debussy seascapes were limned larged and formidable — no water-colourist's dabbling on Lake Geneva this, but a full oil fresco of the Biscayan Atlantic's cold, wild games with killer winds.

DELIBERATION

The Brahms was carried forward with a more measured deliberation and dark solidity of thought than is usual, Dr Munch presumably inclining to the view that the idyllic qualities of this second symphony must not be allowed so much dominance as to make the whole work too spectacular a change of course from the storming tragedy of Brahms' first.

The expertness of the playing, as in everything else in the program (including Samuel Barber's "Medea" ballet music of Britten-like economy, thrust and evocativeness), was almost everywhere as gripping as the characteristically Bostonian textures it produced.

The world knows nothing to compare with it. If it is reasonable to think of the Philadelphia aesthetic, say, as something akin to a Rubens Venus on a velvet divan, it could be just as reasonable to think of the Boston aesthetic as a Rembrandt merchant officiating from a Chippendale chair, himself as sturdy and solid and sane as his support and, in thought, as deeply brown as its grain.

This aristocratic browness of colour pervading all that the Boston does, a browness arriving from a mixture of many-coloured tempers as tertiary colour emerges on a palette when flasher hues blend, is rather of the quality of mahogany for those who sense it.

COMPACTNESS

Indeed, the order and compactness of stratum upon stratum of tone in the Boston's matchless all-in sonorities (the Brahms had so many of them!) recalls nothing in nature so much as miraculous order and compactness of the concentric circles exposed by cross section through a great tree.

All is in place and of its due size, all is in order, every sectional tone (as every annular ring) a determinant of the shape and size of every other.

Perhaps it is still true that "the town of the bean and the cod" is still a place where "the Lowells speak to the Cabots, and the Cabots speak only to God," but Sydney might rather think:

Hurrah for the good old Boston,
The band of the style and the punch,
Where the muses are snobby to no-one
And tell their best secrets to Munch.

And Boston's own President John Adams might reasonably be expected here to turn in his grave to unsay his dictum that "it is not possible to enlist the fine arts on the side of Truth." — L.B.

Sydney

FRIDAY DAILY TELEGRAPH JUNE 10, 1960

Town Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

LAST CONCERT LEAVES NO DOUBT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played the last of its three Sydney concerts in the Town Hall last night.

It left no remaining doubt of its range and greatness.

The concert, with Charles Munch conducting, was, taken as a whole, quite the most satisfying, musical and revealing of the three.

The showmanship and applause-winning of the first Munch concert on Tuesday were over.

This was serious and purposeful music-making right through, and no less exciting for that.

The programme was made up of two pieces from the ballet "Medea" by Samuel Barber, Debussy's "La Mer," and the second symphony of Brahms.

It was instructive — if so dry a word is permissible for so lively a performance — to hear the orchestra get away from its French-Russian-American orbit to play a German classic—Brahms.

Forthright

Munch's Brahms was active and forthright; there was nothing of the brooding greybeard that we have grown too accustomed to.

Though it lacked nothing in strength, there was often a buoyancy and clarity about it that was new and refreshing.

But in some of the fully scored passages the violin tone tended to obscure the woodwinds — an inbuilt problem of the large modern orchestra, with its swollen complement of fiddles.

The Boston woodwinds are worth hearing. There was evidence of that, for example, in the exquisite oboe playing in the "allegretto" movement of the Brahms.

There was exquisite playing, solo and concerted, in all departments of the orchestra in the Debussy sketches. This was a definitive performance, sensitive and richly evocative.

The Barber pieces from a ballet on the Medea legend written for Martha Graham were both dramatically vivid and intellectually appealing — rare examples of theatre music that really stand up to the hard light of a concert hall.—M. L.

WIDOW'S £10,000 AWARD

A widow whose waterside worker husband died after a nine feet fall down a ship's hold yesterday won £10,000 compensation for herself and two young daughters.

The widow is Mrs. Florence Lilian Brownlee, 33, of Pittwater Road, Boronia.

Gordon Thomas Brownlee, 37, her husband, died on October 20, 1955.

The jury, before Mr. Justice Wallace, awarded the damages against James Patrick and Co Pty., Ltd.

James Patrick and Co. denied responsibility for Brownlee's death

---

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"TELEGRAPH"
Sydney, N.S.W.
0 JUN 1960

ORCHESTRA WOULD RETURN 'ANY TIME'

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Dr. Charles Munch) said last night he would be happy to bring the orchestra to Sydney again "anytime."

Dr. Munch said this as he sat exhausted, with a towel around his neck, in the artist's room of the Town Hall.

He had just returned from the stage from his sixth [illegible] for a thunderous ovation from an audience of 2200.

He had conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final appearance of its three-day Sydney season.

"I think the concerts were a success," he said.

Last night's audience packed the Town Hall.

The programme included works by modern American composer Samuel Barber, Debussy and Brahms.

First encore

For the first encore the string section of the orchestra paid homage to Bach with an arrangement of the Air in G.

The audience responded with the rarest of all tributes—a rapt 15 seconds' silence before breaking into applause.

The concert manager for the A.B.C. (Mr. H. C. Russell) said attendances for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's three concerts were better than those for any three given by the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra last year.

Hundreds of people had come from country towns to hear the concerts, he said.

Several thousand people had to be turned away.

The orchestra will leave today to give concerts in Adelaide and Melbourne before going to New Zealand

---

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"HERALD"
Melbourne, Vic.
8 JUN 1960

He'll hear his work

VISITING American conductor, Aaron Copland, will hear his own composition played on Sunday afternoon at the Camerata's recital at the Lyceum Club.

He will give a talk on the work, his Quartet for Piano and Strings.

Mr Copland is in Australia as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The composers of the other two works on the program will also attend. They are the society's founder, Margaret Sutherland, and secretary, Dr Noel Nickson.

For further inquiries, ring Margaret Sutherland (WM8750) or Mrs John Rutherford (XB1585).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"HERALD"
Melbourne, Vic.
25 MAY 1960

Orchestra fans eat in street

BRISBANE, Today. — People waiting to book tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's only concert in Brisbane ate their breakfast in the street today.

The queue had swollen to 200 an hour before the booking office opened at 8.30.

The orchestra will arrive in Brisbane on June 5 and give its concert the following day.

MUSIC NOTE. — The same office handled tickets for the Johnny O'Keefe's Rock 'n' Roll show. It didn't rate a booking in the first hour.

From
"HERALD"
Melbourne, Vic.
3 MAY 1960

Lunch for orchestra

THE English-Speaking Un[illegible] entertain the conductors and leading members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a luncheon at The Delphic, Alfred Place, Melbourne, on Tuesday, June 14.

Applications for invitations to the luncheon, which is open to members and non-members, should be addressed to the secretary, E.S.U., 146W Toorak Rd., South Yarra.

Mr Justice Sholl will be chairman.

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

12 JU[illegible]

Conductor on Radio, TV

Mr. Aaron Copland, famous American composer and conductor, who is in Australia as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will broadcast as the ABC's Guest of Honor at 7.15 tonight from 2FC-2NA and regional stations.

The broadcast will be repeated on Monday at 3.15 pm from 2BL-2NC.

Mr. Copland also will star in the ABC's Spotlight program on Channel 2-ABN on Sunday, at 9 pm. The panel will include Sydney composer Franz Holford and Charles Buttrose.

Est. 1904 219 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

15 JUN 1960

MUSIC OF THE WEEK

By Frank Harris

DE LOS ANGELES . . . no kitten Carmen.

Salle Wagram in Paris is usually a rowdy spot—the home of pugilists and political meetings.

A bit like Sydney's Stadium.

And a bit like the Stadium, too, in which the multitudes last week bravoed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Salle Wagram occasionally lets culture climb into the ring.

Just over a couple of years ago, the French National Radio Orchestra and Chorus, and a troupe of prize solo singers "climbed into the ring" for a unique occasion — a knockout recording of Bizet's opera Carmen.

Referee was the belligerent conductor Sir Thomas Beecham who usually flattens any performer who does not meet his exacting demands for perfection.

About the only difference in this musical combat was that Beecham did not immediately announce a decision.

RECOUNT

Called away by concert demands, he took the recording tapes into hiding, conned them over for a year or more before he came back with the verdict—a recount on certain passages.

So they were done again, and at long last up came the true verdict — a knockout with this new HMV album (three 12in. discs) of Carmen.

Principal soloists are soprano Victoria De Los Angeles (heroine of Beecham's classy recording of La Boheme) as Carmen, tenor Nicolai Gedda in an unusually powerful performance as the miserable Don Jose, Janine Micheau as the slighted Micaela, and Ernest Blanc as the gaudy bullfighter Escamillo.

It has been suggested that Beecham chose De Los Angeles because her pure soprano could picture a girl more sinned against than a sinner.

Since the amazing thing about De Los Angeles is her deliberate mezzo coloring, stepping right down sometimes to a contralto thrill, this is so much bunkum. Her Carmen is a worldly, careless seductress, no kitten caught out by a wink during a Sunday afternoon band parade.

In fact the strongest point about this remarkable recording is the sheer earthiness of its tragic passion. Orchestra and chorus are sharp and fine. It is not perfect — no recording, or performance, ever is, but it comes close enough to it to make it a major achievement

N.B.: Carmen is released tomorrow week. A stereo version will be following soon.

DISCS

Luckily the Iron Curtain is not entirely sound-proof. Russian pianist Sviatoslav Richter has hidden behind it long enough, and the evidence of his greatness has had to be gleaned largely from an odd assortment of botched-up concert tapes. But in his Parlophone - Odeon (12in.) disc of Schubert's first published Sonata, he kicks aside that Curtain long enough to let through the sounds of a glorious recording. Most lovingly and expertly done.

UNIQUE

Another great Richter recording comes on a DGG 12in. in which he is featured in the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2, a magnificently alive version, with the Warsaw National Philharmonic, almost, but not quite equal, to the composer's own recording, plus Six Rachmaninoff Preludes as a fill-in. The Preludes give it a unique touch.

So[illegible]el (HMV 12in[illegible]baritone Gerard Souzay in six song groups, including the film settings for Don Quixote which involved Ravel in a court suit when he discovered that his original commission had been supplanted by others. Buttery-smooth tones all the way through. One wonders occasionally what Souzay would do if he were suddenly stuck in the ribs with a knife-edged climax.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings
Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From Truth.

12 JUN 1960 Brisbane, Qld.

"Starved" by the Govt., so

Boston boys had own tea party!

THE Queensland Government was off-key at a Parliamentary reception for the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra this week.

According to accounts of some of the guests the reception ended in an embarrassing fiasco.

Famous conductor Charles Munch went home to bed!

Other members of the orchestra stalked off to dine at a Chinese restaurant.

A Sydney newspaper described it as "one of the greatest diplomatic blunders of all time."

But the Premier, Mr. Nicklin, said yesterday this report "is obviously a highly-colored and incorrect account."

"There was no liquor because it was not that kind of a party," said Mr. Nicklin.

"As far as Conductor Charles Munch was concerned, he came merely as an act of courtesy. He spoke to me at the door, said he was tired and excused himself."

Mr. Nicklin said that many members of the orchestra enjoyed the party so much [illegible] bus had to b[illegible] when they [illegible] to leave.

"No one can fit 200 people and chairs into the room at the same time. There were chairs around the walls, but no one seemed to want to sit down," said Mr. Nicklin.

"The orchestra were given two hot dishes, a great variety of savories and sandwiches. There was no shortage of food. Much of it was left uneaten," he added.

The reception was given at Parliament House on Monday night following the first Australian performance of the Boston Symphony.

Apparently, nobody had told the caterers that the American musicians "fast" prior to a performance.

Anyway, some of them went off to a Chinese restaurant in the city.

A guest at the party described things to "Truth" in these words:

"Everyone stood about in desultory little groups. There was nothing to drink. I didn't even see a soft-drink.

"We were handed little plates of bright yellow curled prawns—very small serves for an orchestra which had not yet eaten. Most of them refused any[illegible]."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "TELEGRAPH"
Brisbane, Qld.

14 JUN [illegible]

Boston's top disc of 1959

MUSIC lovers who missed the Boston Symphony Orchestra's City Hall concert last week — and those who would like to hear it again — can hear the orchestra at its best on a new prize-winning disc of Debussy's Images for Orchestra.

The orchestra won the Grammy prize, awarded by the National American Record Society for the best orchestral performance on record released in America in 1959.

Debussy's music suggests Spanish highways and byways, the alternate chill and scented fragrance of a Spanish night, the fierce sunlight of summer, and dances.

It is a series of fleeting impressions in sound rather than of formal [illegible], and calls for orchestration suggestive of mockery and irony, of burning colors and mysterious sounds, of cynicism.

Charles Munch is very much the master of this atmosphere, and wrings from both string and wind sections a sharpness and sensitivity that shows orchestral technique at its peak.

This RCA collector's piece is on L16209.

★

215

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

2× JUN 196

ANDREA

BIG HAND FOR A GREAT ACTOR

TODAY is the day all Australians extend a bonanza of a welcome to one of this country's illustrious sons, CYRIL RITCHARD, whose fame during the past decade has reached the peaks.

Actor-director Cyril is accompanied by one of America's recognised leaders in the theatre and the literary world . . . CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER who co-stars with him in "THE PLEASURE OF HIS COMPANY."

Mr. Ritchard returned home by air this morning, and he and his stage partner were overwhelmed by the tidal proportions of the greeting they received.

It was in 1951 that we last saw this consummate artist here. He appeared then in company with his beloved wife, Madge Elliott, who died tragically, a short time after their return to New York, where at that time the vistas ahead loomed so bright.

Since then, this exceptional Australian has conquered Broadway in several media, all of which he serves so excellently.

Tomorrow, after a hectic 24 hours of auditions . . . of seeing relatives and friends, Ritchard goes on to rehearse in Melbourne and gawdelpus—open there!

Once again the Southern Capital gets the show before Sydney. T'aint fair! Sydney is Cyril's birthplace and no amount of softsoaping by JCW will stop the burghers from feeling slighted.

LENGTHY FRIENDSHIP

My friendship with Madge and Cyril . . . it's difficult to separate the two in my thinking . . . dates from the time Madge was a bewitchingly lovely schoolgirl.

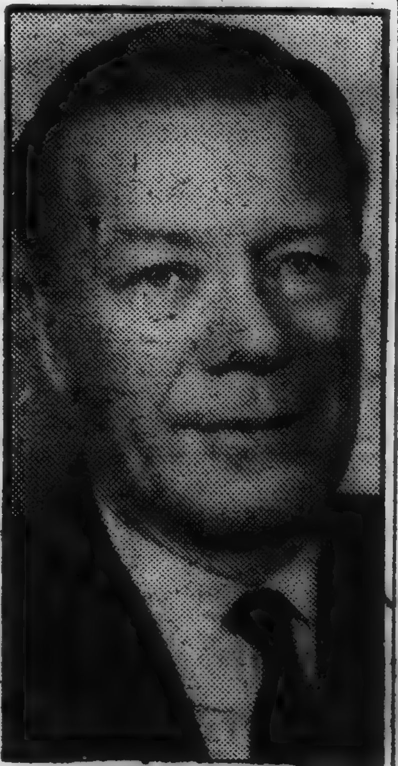
I was at their unforgettable marriage at St. Mary's Cathedral and I compered scenes at the wedding reception, over a nationwide hook-up, from a huge bed of azaleas that had transformed the hall at Elizabeth Bay House into a bower.

We went later, in the old Monterey, to America, and not long after that, I accompanied these twin souls on part of their honeymoon. This idyllic week was spent in California's "shangri-la," the Ojai Valley.

Looking back, there doesn't seem to be a time when our lives weren't linked in some way.

Cyril Ritchard has some unnecessarily hard work ahead of him. My only hope is that when he returns to Broadway, he will think of his visit as having been terribly worth-while.

* * *



CYRIL RITCHARD

AARON COPLAND, to whom Sydney has been introduced in person, this week is a man whose music — since I first became aware of it — sends me.

Mr. Copland, who appeared as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a rather quiet bachelor rounding the corner at the 60 turn. He is a composer who admits that it's a job to write a symphony.

Here's a man who delights the eye. He's the answer to the prayer of a casting director in search of a true-to-type composer-director . . . thick grey hair . . . domed forehead . . . spectacles and a long, lean visage.

When at home this brilliant musician dwells in a converted barn up the Hudson. In an explanatory mood he explains, "High ceilings are fine for music . . . the acoustics are so good." A relentless worker, come hell or high water, Copland composes a little each day of his life.

One of the pioneers of the distinctly American idiom in serious music, Copland says, "Once upon a time we were swayed by what the jazz boys were doing" . . . And by "we" I thought he might be including LEONARD BERNSTEIN. And with a satisfied smile he concluded: "Now they're beginning to be influenced by us."

* * *

The professional knockers are in full cry.

The announcement by the NSW and Victorian Railways that they are planning to put two super - luxury night trains out to connect Sydney and Melbourne has put them into a froth. They know they'll be obsolete even before they leave the drawing-board!

These nocturnal expresses will make their debut when the interstate gauge lines open.

"Fifty years behind the rolling stock of the USA," "old - fashioned in design," "a cardboard copy of America's great cross - country trains" . . . those that link the Atlantic Seaboard with the Pacific Coast . . . are some of the derogatory slings that are being fired on this welcome step forward in Australian train-travel.

I suggest we hold everything till the darn trains are built!

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

2 8 JUN 1960

MUSIC And THEATRES

"Cold War" In The Concert Halls

By The "Herald's" Drama And Music Critics

A two-pronged Russian invasion of Australian concert halls is to take place during the next few weeks, with Kiev Opera baritone Dmitry Gnatyuk and Baku-born 'cellist Mstislav Rostropovich.

Gnatyuk will begin his Sydney season at the Assembly Hall on July 5, and Rostropovich will give his first Sydney recital at the Conservatorium on July 14.

But, almost as if to preserve some "balance of power" in the month's concert-giving and to follow up the Boston Orchestra's cultural diplomacy, American pianist Grant Johannesen will play two concertos with the Sydney Symphony Orchestra on July 5.

Gnatyuk, born in 1925, was a factory hand when he was encouraged to study at the Kiev State Conservatory.

Within three years of graduation in 1951 he was one of the top vocal stars of the Kiev Opera. In 1958 he was honoured with the title "Distinguished Artist of the Ukrainian S.S.R."

The other day the "New Zealand Herald" rated him vocally and physically (he's 6ft 4in) "a giant."

At the very time that Gnatyuk is singing songs and arias (all in Russian) at the Assembly Hall, Grant Johannesen will be playing a Bach concerto and the "Wanderer" fantasy (in the Liszt arrangement at the Town Hall.

Later in the week—at the Blue series concerts—Johannesen's renowned aptitude for French music will be given rein in Faure's "Ballade" and Milhaud's "Carnival of Aix," the rest of the orchestral program also being French — Berlioz' "Corsair" overture and Debussy's "L' Apres-midi d'un Faune."

You'd almost think that this was fare to celebrate France's national day—but that date, July 14, belongs to Rostropovich.

Now 33, Rostropovich is said to own an eminence among 'cellists comparable with Oistrakh's among violinists. He has often appeared in London, and toured the United States in 1956.

DMITRY GNATYUK

His opening recital on July 14 will include a Shostakovich sonata and Falla's Spanish folk suite.

* * *

THE A.B.C. is still keeping the lights turned down so low at its recitals that it is impossible for audiences to read their printed programs.

Most audiences need some help from the printed translations of songs during such recitals as soprano Lois Marshall gave at the Conservatorium last week; it's impossible for the uninitiated to memorise them all in the few minutes' wait before a concert begins and in the interval.

Moreover, the A.B.C.'s printed programs for song recitals suppose that translations are enough; a short note on the origin and scope of such cycles as Debussy's "Chansons de Bilitis" (Bilitis being a character from Pierre Louys' work) is as vital to an audience's full appreciation as annotations are at any sonata recital.

It could do no harm, for instance, to let it be known when Schumann's "Frauenliebe" songs are sung that the verses are by an extraordinary poet named Chamisso, a writer who (like Joseph Conrad) became a literary classic in a language that was not his own. A Frenchman, Chamisso wrote in German.

And he was, incidentally, the leading "German" botanist of his day.

* * *

A SERIES of seven free lectures on music has been arranged for presentation at the Sydney Conservatorium by the Australian Music Examinations Board.

The first was given last Saturday by composer Raymond Hanson. Next Saturday, the lecture-demonstrators will be composer Miriam Hyde and theorist Alex Burnard.

On subsequent Saturdays —the sessions sometimes taking all day, with a lunch break—lecturers and demonstrators will discuss problems of the violin, the piano, singing and musical perception.

* * *

TRUE to its word that imported chamber music ensembles will not be allowed to deprive resident musicians of their share of the Sydney limelight, the Musica Viva is featuring five well-known Sydney musicians in its Town Hall concert on Thursday night.

String players Ernest Llewellyn, Donald Hazelwood, Robert Pikler, Lois Simpson and Richard Goldner and clarinettist Anne Menzies will present a Francaix string quartet, a Mozart string quintet (G minor, K516) and the Brahms clarinet quintet.

* * *

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

20 MAY 1960

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will have its Australian premiere in Brisbane next month. And the Ansett people, who will be flying the orchestra around Australia, have started planning to serve them typical Australian meals. On the menu: Australian sherry, burgundy, and champagnes, kangaroo tail soup, Hawkesbury River oysters, Queensland barramundi—you know, just the sort of thing you and I have for lunch every day.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUNDAY MAIL"

Adelaide, S.A.

21 MAY 196

* *

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will play here next month, and for identifying tunes played by that orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra, 5DN listeners can win recordings of these famous combinations.

The chance will come in a new competition in Jann Springett's "Home Show." Contest duration will be two weeks, starting on Monday between 4 p.m. and 5 p.m.

* *

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

23 MAY 1960

● The menu

FOR their airlift of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Sydney to here on June 10, Ansett-ANA asked the ABC people to suggest a typical Australian meal to serve to the players on the flight.

Suggested typical dishes were "pie 'n' sauce" or "sausages and chips."

However, the airline has settled for a menu beginning with Australian sherry followed by kangaroo tail soup, baked barramundi, then Australian white wine, Australian cheeses, and champagne.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

Sydney, N.S.W.

2× JUN 196

ANDREA

BIG HAND FOR A GREAT ACTOR

TODAY is the day all Australians extend a bonanza of a welcome to one of this country's illustrious sons, CYRIL RITCHARD, whose fame during the past decade has reached the peaks.

Actor-director Cyril is accompanied by one of America's recognised leaders in the theatre and the literary world . . . CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER who co-stars with him in "THE PLEASURE OF HIS COMPANY."

Mr. Ritchard returned home by air this morning, and he and his stage partner were overwhelmed by the tidal proportions of the greeting they received.

It was in 1951 that we last saw this consummate artist here. He appeared then in company with his beloved wife, Madge Elliott, who died tragically, a short time after their return to New York, where at that time the vistas ahead loomed so bright.

Since then, this exceptional Australian has conquered Broadway in several media, all of which he serves so excellently.

Tomorrow, after a hectic 24 hours of auditions . . . of seeing relatives and friends, Ritchard goes on to rehearse in Melbourne and gawdelpus—open there!

Once again the Southern Capital gets the show before Sydney. T'aint fair! Sydney is Cyril's birthplace and no amount of soft-soaping by JCW will stop the burghers from feeling slighted.

LENGTHY FRIENDSHIP

My friendship with Madge and Cyril . . . it's difficult to separate the two in my thinking . . . dates from the time Madge was a bewitchingly lovely schoolgirl.

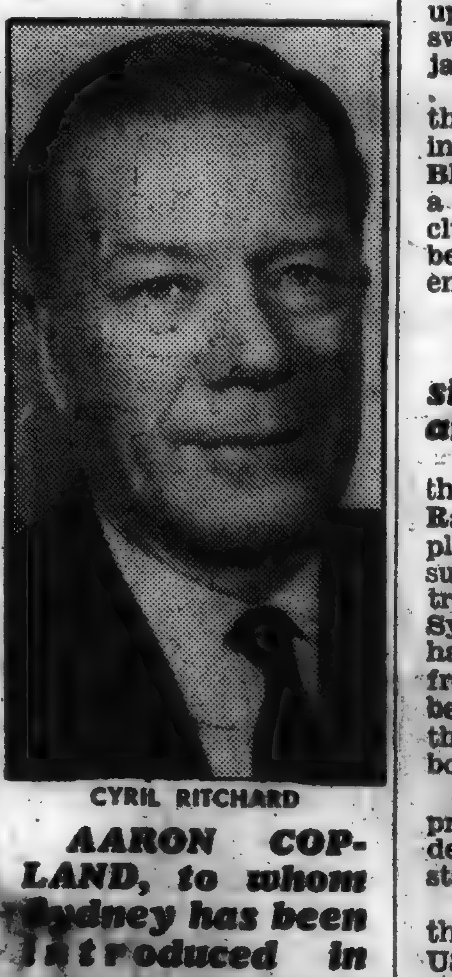
I was at their unforgettable marriage at St. Mary's Cathedral and I compered scenes at the wedding reception, over a nationwide hook-up, from a huge bed of azaleas that had transformed the hall at Elizabeth Bay House into a bower.

We went later, in the old Monterey, to America, and not long after that, I accompanied these twin souls on part of their honeymoon. This idyllic week was spent in California's "shangri-la," the Ojai Valley.

Looking back, there doesn't seem to be a time when our lives weren't linked in some way.

Cyril Ritchard has some unnecessarily hard work ahead of him. My only hope is that when he returns to Broadway, he will think of his visit as having been terribly worth-while.

* * *



CYRIL RITCHARD

AARON COPLAND, to whom Sydney has been introduced in person, this week is a man whose music — since I first became aware of it — sends me.

Mr. Copland appeared [illegible] the 60 turn. He is a composer who admits that it's a job to write a symphony.

Here's a man who delights the eye. He's the answer to the prayer of a casting director in search of a true-to-type composer-director . . . thick grey hair . . . domed forehead . . . spectacles and a long, lean visage.

When at home this brilliant musician dwells in a converted barn up the Hudson. In an explanatory mood he explains, "High ceilings are fine for music . . . the acoustics are so good." A relentless worker, come hell or high water, Copland composes a little each day of his life.

One of the pioneers of the distinctly American idiom in serious music, Copland says, "Once upon a time we were swayed by what the jazz boys were doing" . . . And by "we" I thought he might be including LEONARD BERNSTEIN. And with a satisfied smile he concluded: "Now they're beginning to be influenced by us."

* * *

The professional knockers are in full cry.

The announcement by the NSW and Victorian Railways that they are planning to put two super - luxury night trains out to connect Sydney and Melbourne has put them into a froth. They know they'll be obsolete even before they leave the drawing-board!

These nocturnal expresses will make their debut when the interstate gauge lines open.

"Fifty years behind the rolling stock of the USA," "old - fashioned in design," "a cardboard copy of America's great cross - country [illegible]" . . . those [illegible] Atlantic [illegible]

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

28 JUN 1960

MUSIC And THEATRES

"Cold War" In The Concert Halls

By The "Herald's" Drama And Music Critics

A two-pronged Russian invasion of Australian concert halls is to take place during the next few weeks, with Kiev Opera baritone Dmitry Gnatyuk and Baku-born 'cellist Mstislav Rostropovich.

Gnatyuk will begin his Sydney season at the Assembly Hall on July 5, and Rostropovich will give his first Sydney recital at the Conservatorium on July 14.

But, almost as if to preserve some "balance of power" in the month's concert-giving and to follow up the Boston Orchestra's cultural diplomacy, American pianist Grant Johannesen will play two concertos with the Sydney Symphony Orchestra on July 5.

Gnatyuk, born in 1925, was a factory hand when he was encouraged to study at the Kiev State Conservatory.

Within three years of graduation in 1951 he was one of the top vocal stars of the Kiev Opera. In 1958 he was honoured with the title "Distinguished Artist of the Ukrainian S.S.R."

The other day the "New Zealand Herald" rated him vocally and physically (he's 6ft 4in) "a giant."

At the very time that Gnatyuk is singing songs and arias (all in Russian) at the Assembly Hall, Grant Johannesen will be playing a Bach concerto and the "Wanderer" fantasy (in the Liszt arrangement at the Town Hall.

Later in the week—at the Blue series concerts—Johannesen's renowned aptitude for French music will be given rein in Faure's "Ballade" and Milhaud's "Carnival of Aix," the rest of the orchestral program also being French — Berlioz' "Corsair" overture and Debussy's "L' Apres-midi d'un Faune."

You'd almost think that this was fare to celebrate France's national day—but that date, July 14, belongs to Rostropovich.

Now 33, Rostropovich is said to own an eminence among 'cellists comparable with Oistrakh's among violinists. He has often appeared in London, and toured the United States in 1956.

DMITRY GNATYUK

His opening recital on July 14 will include a Shostakovich sonata and Falla's Spanish folk suite.

* * *

THE A.B.C. is still keeping the lights turned down so low at its recitals that it is impossible for audiences to read their printed programs.

Most audiences need some help from the printed translations of songs during such recitals as soprano Lois Marshall gave at the Conservatorium last week; it's impossible for the uninitiated to memorise them all in the few minutes' wait before a concert begins and in the interval.

Moreover, the A.B.C.'s printed programs for song recitals suppose that translations are enough; a short note on the origin and scope of such cycles as Debussy's "Chansons de Bilitis" (Bilitis being a character from Pierre Louys' work) is as vital to an audience's full appreciation as annotations are at any sonata recital.

It could do no harm, for instance, to let it be known when Schumann's "Frauenliebe" songs are sung that the verses are by an extraordinary poet named Chamisso, a writer who (like Joseph Conrad) became a literary classic in a language that was not his own. A Frenchman, Chamisso wrote in German.

And he was, incidentally, the leading "German" botanist of his day.

* * *

A SERIES of seven free lectures on music has been arranged for presentation at the Sydney Conservatorium by the Australian Music Examinations Board.

The first was given last Saturday by composer Raymond Hanson. Next Saturday, the lecture-demonstrators will be composer Miriam Hyde and theorist Alex Burnard.

On subsequent Saturdays —the sessions sometimes taking all day, with a lunch break—lecturers and demonstrators will discuss problems of the violin, the piano, singing and musical perception.

* * *

TRUE to its word that imported chamber music ensembles will not be allowed to deprive resident musicians of their share of the Sydney limelight, the Musica Viva is featuring five well-known Sydney musicians in its Town Hall concert on Thursday night.

String players Ernest Llewellyn, Donald Hazelwood, Robert Pikler, Lois Simpson and Richard Goldner and clarinettist Anne Menzies will present a Francaix string quartet, a Mozart string quintet (G minor, K516) and the Brahms clarinet quintet.

* * *

'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

20 MAY 1960

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will have its Australian premiere in Brisbane next month. And the Ansett people, who will be flying the orchestra around Australia, have started planning to serve them typical Australian meals. On the menu: Australian sherry, burgundy, and champagnes, kangaroo tail soup, Hawkesbury River oysters, Queensland barramundi—you know, just the sort of thing you and I have for lunch every day.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS,

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUNDAY MAIL"

Adelaide, S.A.

21 MAY 196

* *

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will play here next month, and for identifying tunes played by that orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra, 5DN listeners can win recordings of these famous combinations.

The chance will come in a new competition in Jann Springett's "Home Show." Contest duration will be two weeks, starting on Monday between 4 p.m. and 5 p.m.

* *

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

23 MAY 1960

● The menu

FOR their airlift of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Sydney to here on June 10, Ansett-ANA asked the ABC people to suggest a typical Australian meal to serve to the players on the flight.

Suggested typical dishes were "pie 'n' sauce" or "sausages and chips."

However, the airline has settled for a menu beginning with Australian sherry followed by kangaroo tail soup, baked barramundi, then Australian white wine, Australian cheeses, and champagne.

SHOWTHROUGH

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
USTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

7 [illegible] 1960

16 The Sydney Morning Herald, Saturday, May 7, 1960

HIS FACE TELLS THE SCORE

From Maurice Adams In New York

"A magnetic leader, no egocentric or sensationalist, but a thoroughly equipped and full-blooded interpreter . . . a musician singularly keen of ear, sensitive to tonal values, acutely aware of the special capacities, technical and colouristic of every instrument."

THIS was how one of America's leading—and most severe—music critics, the late Olin Downes, of the New York "Times," described Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after his first appearance in Boston 11 years ago.

It is a judgment that Australians may make for themselves when the 68-year-old French maestro conducts the orchestra in Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane in June.

EXPRESSIVE

THE tall, dignified figure with the thick silvery hair, striding across the stage to the podium, has become a familiar figure on the American musical scene.

But the audiences who see the well-tailored back and the expressive, well-shaped hands, and hear the music he draws from his 105-member orchestra miss one of the most fascinating aspects of Munch the conductor.

The music is written on his face almost as clearly as it is upon the scores in front of his musicians.

The extreme mobility, the expressive power of his countenance, is transformed into a mirror reflecting a thousand shades of feeling.

I noted all this one day last week when for a few hours I occupied a vantage stage seat at Symphony Hall in Boston to watch Charles Munch at rehearsals.

I saw and heard him coach and coax his orchestra in a mixture of French and English sprinkled with some German.

ONE passage in a Roussel symphony, he told them, undulating his hand through the air, should "glisse-glisse (slide) like the snake."

One phrase in Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe should float into the air "like smoke"; in another, he whispered, "La nuit . . . you sleep until a tiny bit of sun comes through."

Sometimes he would go on bended knees before the cellos to woo more tone from them.

His most frequent admonitions were, "Accent, more accent!" and "Respirez la musique." He believes that if music is a living thing, it should breathe.

He used to tell his students at the Paris Conservatory: "Remember this: the ears and the heart as well as the arms have their part in your conducting."

HE prefers a fine, thin sound, one not so big or wide as to obscure neatness and facility. His interpretations have eloquence and vitality, and driving force and vigour.

An extremely sensitive man, he has an imagination and intensity that makes his readings of French music electrifying, and works like the Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" passion and despair incarnate.

It is a truism that there are no more severe critics of a conductor than the musicians who work for him.

AS a result of informal conversations with a number of musicians at Symphony Hall I discovered an almost universal feeling bordering on adoration for their conductor, with the utmost respect for his musicianship.

Munch is very fair, but he demands and gets accuracy. He insists on the members of the orchestra studying the scores and warming up before he appears for rehearsal.

Exhausted, Munch bows to the applause.

New works—and he has introduced many new American works in recent years—are played through once to get the general idea, then the difficult sections are worked over, and finally the whole is put together again.

Old works are rehearsed by touching up a few difficult spots. There is no elaborate polishing of detail, because Munch assumes that his co-workers are co-artists—accomplished musicians and adults, not to be treated as children, repeating a detail over and over and learning by rote.

INVARIABLY his men spoke of his devotion to a composer's ideas, of his magnetism as a conductor, and of his ability to impart to his musicians and thus to the public the ideal that is constantly before him.

They spoke of his Berlioz with a special awe, for in this music even more than any other he transforms himself into the composer himself.

In every performance, whether it is the wildly romantic "Symphonie Fantastique," which Munch will conduct in Sydney, or the reverent "Requiem" Munch is like a man imbued with the life and spirit of another.

In a semi-autobiographical book entitled "I am a Conductor" published six years ago, Charles Munch revealed his inner feelings—and anxieties—as a conductor.

"You perch on a pedestal in the middle of a battlefield," he wrote. "You are Saint Sebastian exposed to the Roman arrows. You are Joan of Arc ready to burn at the stake for what you love.

"If even after 40 years of conducting you are still struck to the heart before every concert by fear and panic that overwhelm you with the strength of a tidal wave, if you feel this formidable transport of anguish still more intensely each time, you are still making progress and every time you conduct you will understand your mission a little better.

"There are many reasons for your anguish. It is you who must breathe life into the score. It is you and you alone who must expose it to the understanding, reveal the hidden jewel to the sun at the most flattering angles.

"Your task is one of setting and is as delicate as the film director's, measuring out light and dark, sharp images and blurred, groping towards the projection of an ideal that does not exist in real life.

"It is not easy."

In the concert hall, Munch, who makes conducting appear as easy as magic, takes upon himself none of the privileges and none of the customary flamboyance of a great conductor.

One somewhat perfunctory bow to acknowledge the applause that greets his appearance on the stage, then he mounts the podium and proceeds without more ado.

At the end of the number, he steps down and from the front of the orchestra makes his bow, then gestures to the orchestra to rise, and indicates that the applause is for them.

"In the middle of a battlefield"—Munch in action

2/6

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MIRROR"
Sydney, N.S.W.

19 MAY 1960

'Too stupid' so took [illegible] conduct[illegible]

Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, likes to tell [illegible] he is a conductor only because he is too stupid to be an[illegible].

He has his wife, the [illegible] of one of the founders [illegible] chocolate manufacturing [illegible], to thank for his present role as one of the most famous conductors in the [illegible].

In 1932 a year before they were married she hired both the hall and the first orchestra he conducted. Up to that time he had earned his living as a violinist, but orchestras were soon offering engagements.

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Sydney next month Dr. Munch will conduct two concerts at the Town Hall where seats will range in price from £2/2/6 to £1/0/6.

If this makes you wonder at the wonderful profit the orchestra must be making think again.

It costs about £3800 to mount a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, selling one out brings in about £3100 and that multiplied by 220 (the number of concerts [illegible] in a year) doesn't add up to a profit.

This deficit is made up partly by income on endowments and partly by contributions.

Way back there was a deficit [illegible]. The orchestra's [illegible] (a pianist turned banker) Major Henry Lee Higginson, met its losses from 1881 (the year of its foundation) to his death in 1919.

"AGE"
M[illegible], Vic.

21 MAY 1960

The Week In Wireless

THE MAJOR MUSICAL event from the ABC's point of view this week was the Victorian final of the concerto and vocal competition, a worthy event in its way, but not one to which a whole radio evening need be devoted.

It is a splendid idea to encourage the young musician and the ABC does so in many ways, of which this is one. At the same time little or nothing is heard subsequently of the winners who, after the competition, appear to lapse into obscurity and probably end by becoming teachers. Also, I am afraid, this competition does little but produce pianists which, in this country, are like Gilbert's dukes.

We heard a little of Sir Malcolm Sargent this week, but it had to come all the way from Queensland. Reception was not very good. He had with him soprano Lois Marshall in Mozart's Exultate Jubilate. She was also soloist in Rossini's Solemn Mass which suffered from an inferior broadcast and was switched off before the end to make way for more students from the 1960 music camp.

I note that on May [illegible] Lois Marshall was also a soloist in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, presented in Sydney by Dr. Malko, the Sydney Orchestra and the Hurlstone Choir. It was broadcast in New South Wales, South Australia and Tasmania, but not in Victoria. Why? Parliament was sitting, of course, and nothing must disturb 3AR's lowbrow programmes.

It was not a very happy week for some listeners, even though we did hear from Sydney the first performance of Poulenc's Piano Concerto with Joseph Post conducting and Marjorie Hesse as soloist. Poulenc is always diverting. He always displays a nice musical wit.

On Sunday morning from 3LO we heard Schumann's Dichterliebe as sung by Lotte Lehmann, with Bruno Walter at the piano, an exasperating performance in a way, since I have tried to obtain that beautiful record without success, and apparently it cannot now be imported. On the other side of the recording is the same artists' version of Schumann's Frauenliebe und Leben, which is an equally lovely performance.

Gioconda de Vito and Raymond Lambert were the Sunday night Celebrities from 3LO in the Cesar Franck Sonata in which they combined very happily.

Later, on Sunday night, Mr. Lambert was heard in the Cesar Franck Prelude Chorale and Fugue which reveals the composer's great sensitivity and high ideals as well as anything he ever wrote.

One of the most delightful short sessions of the week came from 3LO on Monday night. It was a BBC transcription of Maori Folk Songs sung by the Maori Inia Te Wiata. The songs were less important than the singer who has one of the most delightful baritone voices I have ever heard.

The ABC continues to publicise the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presumably to keep people aware of the fact that the orchestra is to visit us shortly. On Tuesday night we had two of its recordings conducted by Pierre Monteux which included Richard Strauss's Don Juan and the much weatherbeaten Fifth Symphony of Tchaikovsky.

—By [illegible]

Est. 1904 217 Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"WOMAN'S DAY"

Sydney, N.S.W.

20 JUL 1960

HAND OF THE SYMPHONY

Nicholas (14) helps his famous cellist mother to garden.

Olivia Luetcke, Boston Symphony Orchestra harpist, breeds chihuahuas, needs a dog-sitter for tours.

Cellist Winifred Winograd and fabrics with aboriginal

Most disappointed member of the orchestra was flautist Doriot Dwyer. Her baby (due in July) kept her at home.

Est. 1904 217 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"WOMAN'S DAY"

Sydney, N.S.W.

2 [illegible] JUN 1960

WINTER HOLIDAY IN TAHITI

The plane dropped down lower an we were in another world—a world warmth, of sun, colour and laugh

by ETHEL BRICE

over the coals of a fire,

THE GUIDING BOSTON

He coaxes his musicians in three languages and woos them on his knees to get "more accent"

IT was a red letter day for Australian music lovers on June 5, when a chartered plane from Manila touched down in Brisbane, carrying 117 passengers and 16,000lb of baggage and equipment.

The passengers were members of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra and much of the equipment was the valuable instruments for the orchestra's first tour of Australia.

The tour, which is under the management of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, lasts for only 10 days, but the crowded, carefully timed program was planned to include concerts in Brisbane (June 6), Sydney (June 7, 8 and 9), Adelaide (June 11) and Melbourne (June 13 and 14).

The pace was hectic, but that was nothing new to the members of the orchestra, who have made many tours.

The driving force behind the musicians is the orchestra's musical director and principal conductor, Charles Munch, who was interviewed by "Woman's Day" at his home in New York before he left for the Australian tour.

At rehearsals, Munch coaches and coaxes his musicians in a mixture of French, English and German, sometimes going on his bended knees before the cellos to woo more tone from them.

One phrase in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" should float into the air "like smoke," he says; in another, he whispers, "La nuit . . . you sleep, a tiny bit of sun comes through." His most frequent cry is for "Accent, more accent."

Charles Munch likes to tell his friends he is a conducter "only because I am too stupid to be anything else" but, in fact, his great talent is in line with a family history of musical talent and his choice of career was almost automatic.

A musical family

His father, Ernst Munch, was an organist and a professor of music at the Strasbourg Conservatory. As a child at the turn of the century, young Charles and his five brothers and sisters spent long hours practising various instruments and, on Sunday afternoons and evenings, the family gathered to play chamber music. At 21, Charles went to Paris to study the violin and soon began a distinguished career as a violinist and conductor.

When he became musical director and leading conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1949, he fell heir to an organisation with a long and proud tradition.

The orchestra was founded in 1881 and it is the second oldest symphonic organisation in the United States.

Also conducting the orchestra in Australia at some concerts will be Richard Burgin, permanent associate conductor, and composer Aaron Copland.

Today, three women are among the orchestra's members — Doriot Dwyer, Winifred Winograd and Olivia Luetcke.

Doriot is the first and only woman principal in the orchestra—she plays the No. 1 flute—but she was unable to make the Australian tour because she's expecting her first baby next month. She has been replaced by Lois Schaefer, of the New York City Centre Opera Company.

The two other permanent women instrumentalists, cellist Winifred Winograd and harpist Olivia Luetcke are both mothers of teenage children.●

Olivia Luetcke, Boston Symphony Orchestra harpist, breeds chihuahuas, needs a dog-sitter for tours.

Cellist Winifred Winograd hopes to buy woollen sweaters and fabrics with aboriginal motifs while she is in Australia.

218

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTI

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.

JUN 1960

Boston's Final Sydney Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra said farewell to Sydney at the Town Hall on Thursday night with a concert in which their zeal to give all outweighed the fact that these travellers, covering ground more desperaely than their own beloved Paul Revere, were not fresh enough for definitive Debussy or Brahms.

In both Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' second symphony, tone and attack, balance and ensemble were of an excellence which could have most of the name orchestras of the world aching with envy.

And yet, elusively during the ecstasy of Debussy's world of spindrift and spume and gull-wheelings and less obscurely during the autumnal contemplation of lost worlds in the Brahms, one could sense some lack of spontaneitv.

At that, conductor Charles Munch's Debussy seascapes were limned larged and formidable — no water-colourist's dabbling on Lake Geneva this, but a full oil fresco of the Biscayan Atlantic's cold, wild games with killer winds.

DELIBERATION

The Brahms was carried forward with a more measured deliberation and dark solidity of thought than is usual, Dr Munch presumably inclining to the view that the idyllic qualities of this second symphony must not be allowed so much dominance as to make the whole work too spectacular a change of course from the storming tragedy of Brahms' first.

The expertness of the playing, as in everything else in the program (including Samuel Barber's "Medea" ballet music of Britten-like economy, thrust and evocativeness), was almost everywhere as gripping as the characteristically Bostonian textures it produced.

The world knows nothing to compare with it. If it is reasonable to think of the Philadelphia aesthetic, say, as something akin to a Rubens Venus on a velvet divan, it could be just as reasonable to think of the Boston aesthetic as a Rembrandt merchant officiating from a Chippendale chair, himself as sturdy and solid and sane as his support and, in thought, as deeply brown as its grain.

This aristocratic browness of colour pervading all that the Boston does, a browness arriving from a mixture of many-coloured tempers as tertiary colour emerges on a palette when flasher hues blend, is rather of the quality of mahogany for those who sense it.

COMPACTNESS

Indeed, the order and compactness of stratum upon stratum of tone in the Boston's matchless all-in sonorities (the Brahms had so many of them!) recalls nothing in nature so much as miraculous order and compactness of the concentric circles exposed by cross section through a great tree.

All is in place and of its due size, all is in order, every sectional tone (as every annular ring) a determinant of the shape and size of every other.

Perhaps it is still true that "the town of the bean and the cod" is still a place where "the Lowells speak to the Cabots, and the Cabots speak only to God," but Sydney might rather think:

Hurrah for the good old Boston,
The band of the style
and the punch,
Where the muses are snobby to no-one,
And tell their best secrets to Munch.

And Boston's own President John Adams might reasonably be expected here to turn in his grave to unsay his dictum that "it is not possible to enlist the fine arts on the side of Truth." — L.B.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 6133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MIRROR"

22 JUN 1960

Sydney, N.S.W.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK

By Frank Harris

Tenor Kenneth Neate takes his music teacher with him on tour—in a locked box.

It's a tape recorder—"one of the best teachers I ever had," he said.

But tenor Neate, who uses his tape recorder mainly as a [illegible] style in diff[illegible]tic roles, w[illegible] who might [illegible] the idea. "[illegible] strong on [illegible]cism when you hea[illegible] play back."

Kenneth Neate, who is just finishing off a season as a guest star with the Elizabethan Opera Company, will follow with a four-months concert and recital tour for the ABC.

"I started the tape recorder idea six years ago and have since built up a complete library of tapes of many operatic roles. I am also taping my recitals," he said.

"I don't record a tape until I feel I have got the role up to a peak performance, then I record it privately with a pianist as accompanist."

NEATE . . . a teacher in a box

Triumph

Neate doesn't have to sing in the bath to build up a role—he simply switches on his taped performance while he is shaving, and listens with a razor-sharp critic's ear.

His recorded tape of his role in Lucia di Lammermoor, for instance, was his only help when he was called up from Paris at 36 hours notice to sing opposite Joan Sutherland in London without a rehearsal. This was the show that put Sutherland's name in lights as a great soprano.

One of Neate's triumphs in the years since his last visit was his creation of the name role in the contemporary opera Samperio Corso, by Henri Tomasi. Neate is pictured above as Samperio.

Based on the story of a Corsican liberator, it was premiered in Bordeaux in 1956 and repeated with great success at the Holland Festival.

"This is very modern in conception, but it has the true requirements of great music of all time—it is strongly melodic and comes more from the heart than the head."

Obsession

Beethoven must have had an eye to Hi-Fi recording when he wrote his three parade ground army marches, recorded for the first time in the original version on Pye (12in.) with Karl Haas conducting the London Baroque Ensemble. Ludwig van seems to have had an obsession for the clatter of drums, cymbals, triangles, etc. He tried to drag them in with somewhat doubtful effect in the Choral Symphony finale, but here, with superb sound fidelity, these odd bits of B sound fine. Topped off with the E Flat Octet and the Rondino. A capital adventure in sound.

* * *

Stereo is a new suit of clothes for Festival's unique disc of Elizabethan and Jacobean Ayres, Madrigals, and Dances (12in.) which had a pretty smart drape shape in its mono version. The works are by Byrd, Gibbons, Morley, Dowland, and so on, but don't be misled by these old-time names. Presented by the New York Pro Musica, under Noah Greenberg, who won the Daily Mirror's Disc of the Year award with his Play of Daniel, these lilting pieces have a startling freshness. And a word of praise to Sydney artist, Maris Earle for her brilliant cover, which makes it a fine local pressing all round.

* * *

Stereo re-issues—all giving stereo lustre to important mono records that scored high points when reviewed earlier . . . a popular double, has Solomon playing the Grieg and Schumann Piano Concertos, with Menges conducting the Philharmonia on H.M.V. (12in.); then there is Kirsten Flagstad singing Great Sacred Songs (Decca 12in.); a lively build-up on R.C.A. 12in. of the Billy the Kid and Rodeo ballet suites, by Aaron Copland, in Sydney this week as special conductor with the Boston Symphony; and violinist Christian Ferras in another very attractive double, the Tchaikowsky and Mendelssohn Concertos, with Silvestri conducting the Philharmonia (H.M.V. 12in.).

Grand team work in recital

The first recital of visiting soprano Lois Marshall at the Conservatorium last had some rare and fine qualities.

First there was the quality of voice, with its rich, full-bodied timbre, which never showed signs of strain, secondly there was an overwhelming passion of feeling in everything she sang, thirdly she was blessed with an uncommonly sensitive accompanist in pianist Weldon Kilburn.

Kilburn was her teacher in Toronto and their tour has established a teamship of quite exceptional quality.

This was most evident in the Schumann Woman's Life and Love song cycle, usually an unnerving demon in its subtle hazards of expression and exacting demands, but tamed by this pair into an angel of expressiveness.

The singer's quivering emotion in these eight songs which range in feeling from the first quick starting of love, through marriage and childbirth to the death of the beloved partner, all matched by an equally vivid piano part, made the cycle a touching experience.

The same lavish intensity of tone spurted through the seven lush-colored Spanish songs of De Falla, the romantic Richard Strauss bracket, and the Duparc and Debussy pieces.

America's Samuel Barber and Ireland's hated James Joyce seem a couple of odd bedfellows, and neither Barber's music nor Joyce's poems, which were the subject, seemed typical of either artist, yet here again, Lois Marshall invested the three song settings with a vital passion that seemed to give them a unique air.

Even Joyce, who wandered on to weirder word music of his own in Finnegan's Wake, might have cocked an appreciative air to this live singing. — FRANK HARRIS.

HERALD

Melbourne, Vic.

13 JUN 1960

They like climate

PHILLIP KAPLAN, flautist, on his arrival at Essendon Airport today with other members of the 115-man Boston Symphony Orchestra.

All were brimming with enthusiasm about Australian audiences but had reservations about our appreciation of modern music.

The manager, Mr Thomas D. Perry jnr., said the orchestra had been delighted by the overwelming hospitality.

"This is a wonderful country — so is the climate. Isn't this supposed to be winter?" he asked.

The orchestra will appear at the Melbourne Town Hall tonight and at the Olympic Swimming Stadium tomorrow night.

218

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

JUN 1960

Boston's Final Sydney Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra said farewell to Sydney at the Town Hall on Thursday night with a concert in which their zeal to give all outweighed the fact that these travellers, covering ground more desperaely than their own beloved Paul Revere, were not fresh enough for definitive Debussy or Brahms.

In both Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' second symphony, tone and attack, balance and ensemble were of an excellence which could have most of the name orchestras of the world aching with envy.

And yet, elusively during the ecstasy of Debussy's world of spindrift and spume and gull-wheelings and less obscurely during the autumnal contemplation of lost worlds in the Brahms, one could sense some lack of spontaneity.

At that, conductor Charles Munch's Debussy seascapes were limned larged and formidable — no water-colourist's dabbling on Lake Geneva this, but a full oil fresco of the Biscayan Atlantic's cold, wild games with killer winds.

DELIBERATION

The Brahms was carried forward with a more measured deliberation and dark solidity of thought than is usual, Dr Munch presumably inclining to the view that the idyllic qualities of this second symphony must not be allowed so much dominance as to make the whole work too spectacular a change of course from the storming tragedy of Brahms' first.

The expertness of the playing, as in everything else in the program (including Samuel Barber's "Medea" ballet music of Britten-like economy, thrust and evocativeness), was almost everywhere as gripping as the characteristically Bostonian textures it produced.

The world knows nothing to compare with it. If it is reasonable to think of the Philadelphia aesthetic, say, as something akin to a Rubens Venus on a velvet divan, it could be just as reasonable to think of the Boston aesthetic as a Rembrandt merchant officiating from a Chippendale chair, himself as sturdy and solid and sane as his support and, in thought, as deeply brown as its grain.

This aristocratic browness of colour pervading all that the Boston does, a browness arriving from a mixture of many-coloured tempers as tertiary colour emerges on a palette when flasher hues blend, is rather of the quality of mahogany for those who sense it.

COMPACTNESS

Indeed, the order and compactness of stratum upon stratum of tone in the Boston's matchless all-in sonorities (the Brahms had so many of them!) recalls nothing in nature so much as miraculous order and compactness of the concentric circles exposed by cross section through a great tree.

All is in place and of its due size, all is in order, every sectional tone (as every annular ring) a determinant of the shape and size of every other.

Perhaps it is still true that "the town of the bean and the cod" is still a place where "the Lowells speak to the Cabots, and the Cabots speak only to God," but Sydney might rather think:

Hurrah for the good old Boston,
The band of the style and the punch,
Where the muses are snobby to no-one
And tell their best secrets to Munch.

And Boston's own President John Adams might reasonably be expected here to turn in his grave to unsay his dictum that "it is not possible to enlist the fine arts on the side of Truth." — L.B.

MU 5133

NGS

y, N.S.W.

OF THE EEK

By Frank Harris

Tenor Kenneth Neate takes his music teacher with him on tour—in a locked box.

NEATE . . . a teacher in a box

It's a tape recorder—"one of the best teachers I ever had," he said.

But tenor Neate, who uses his tape recorder mainly as a [illegible] style in diff[illegible]tic roles, wa[illegible] who might [illegible] the idea. "You [illegible] be strong on [illegible]-criticism when you hea[illegible] play back."

Kenneth Neate, who is just finishing off a season as a guest star with the Elizabethan Opera Company, will follow with a four-months concert and recital tour for the ABC.

"I started the tape recorder idea six years ago and have since built up a complete library of tapes of many operatic roles. I am also taping my recitals," he said.

"I don't record a tape until I feel I have got the role up to a peak performance, then I record it privately with a pianist as accompanist."

Triumph

Neate doesn't have to sing in the bath to build up a role—he simply switches on his taped performance while he is shaving, and listens with a razor-sharp critic's ear.

His recorded tape of his role in Lucia di Lammermoor, for instance, was his only help when he was called up from Paris at 36 hours notice to sing opposite Joan Sutherland in London without a rehearsal. This was the show that put Sutherland's name in lights as a great soprano.

One of Neate's triumphs in the years since his last visit was his creation of the name role in the contemporary opera Samperio Corso, by Henri Tomasi. Neate is pictured above as Samperio.

Based on the story of a Corsican liberator, it was premiered in Bordeaux in 1956 and repeated with great success at the Holland Festival.

"This is very modern in conception, but it has the true requirements of great music of all time—it is strongly melodic and comes more from the heart than the head."

Obsession

Beethoven must have had an eye to Hi-Fi recording when he wrote his three parade ground army marches, recorded for the first time in the original version on Pye (12in.) with Karl Haas conducting the London Baroque Ensemble. Ludwig van seems to have had an obsession for the clatter of drums, cymbals, triangles, etc. He tried to drag them in with somewhat doubtful "direct" in the Choral Symphony finale, but here, with superb sound fidelity, these odd bits of B sound fine. Topped off with the E Flat Octet and the Rondino. A capital adventure in sound.

* * *

Stereo is a new suit of clothes for Festival's unique disc of Elizabethan and Jacobean Ayres, Madrigals, and Dances (12in.) which had a pretty smart drape shape in its mono version. The works are by Byrd, Gibbons, Morley, Dowland, and so on, but don't be misled by these old-time names. Presented by the New York Pro Musica, under Noah Greenberg, who won the Daily Mirror's Disc of the Year award with his Play of Daniel, these lilting pieces have a startling freshness. And a word of praise to Sydney artist, Maris Earle for her brilliant cover, which makes it a fine local pressing all round.

* * *

Stereo re-issues—all giving stereo lustre to important mono records that scored high points when reviewed earlier . . . a popular double, has Solomon playing the Grieg and Schumann Piano Concertos, with Menges conducting the Philharmonia on H.M.V. (12in.); then there is Kirsten Flagstad singing Great Sacred Songs (Decca 12in.); a lively build-up on R.C.A. 12in. of the Billy the Kid and Rodeo ballet suites, by Aaron Copland, in Sydney this week as special conductor with the Boston Symphony; and violinist Christian Ferras in another very attractive double, the Tchaikowsky and Mendelssohn Concertos, with Silvestri conducting the Philharmonia (H.M.V. 12in.).

Grand team work in recital

The first recital of visiting soprano Lois Marshall at the Conservatorium last had some rare and fine qualities.

First there was the quality of voice, with its rich, full-bodied timbre, which never showed signs of strain, secondly there was an overwhelming passion of feeling in everything she sang, thirdly she was blessed with an uncommonly sensitive accompanist in pianist Weldon Kilburn.

Kilburn was her teacher in Toronto and their tour has established a teamship of quite exceptional quality.

This was most evident in the S song cycle, usually an unnerving demon in its subtle hazards of expression and exacting demands, but tamed by this pair into an angel of expressiveness.

The singer's quivering emotion in these eight songs which range in feeling from the first quick starting of love, through marriage and childbirth to the death of the beloved partner, all matched by an equally vivid piano part, made the cycle a touching experience.

The same lavish intensity of tone spurted through the seven lush-colored Spanish and the D[illegible] and Debussy pieces.

America's Samuel Barber and Ireland's hated James Joyce seem a couple of odd bedfellows, and neither Barber's music nor Joyce's poems, which were the subject, seemed typical of either artist, yet here again, Lois Marshall invested the three song settings with a vital passion that seemed to give them a unique air.

Even Joyce, who wandered on to weirder word music of his own in Finnegan's Wake, might have cocked an

---

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

13 JUN 1960

They like climate

PHILLIP KAPLAN, flautist, on his arrival at Essendon Airport today with other members of the 115-man Boston Symphony Orchestra.

All were brimming with enthusiasm about Australian audiences but had reservations about our appreciation of modern music.

The manager, Mr Thomas D. Perry jnr., said the orchestra had been delighted by the overwelming hospitality.

"This is a wonderful country — so is the climate. Isn't this supposed to be winter?" he asked.

The orchestra will appear at the Melbourne Town Hall tonight and at the Olympic Swimming Stadium tomorrow night.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4280

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 183,620

MAR 8 - 1960

219

Woman Of Week Boston Symphony Flutist

By GLADYS MASON

[redacted] nd experience essentials for a post with a top symphony orchestra, according to Doriot Anthony Dwyer.

Our Woman of the Week, talented first flutist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, knows whereof she speaks.

She has played with the National Symphony in Washington, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra with Bruno Walter and on the N.B.C. network.

"The flute solos you hear at Symyhony take a short time," said the pert brunette. "But they take enormous training to play. After you master your instrument you must play with fine musicians and conductors.

MUST PROVE YOURSELF AGAIN AND AGAIN

"You must get to learn the requirements of five or six different conductors. Wherever you go, you must prove yourself all over again."

Mrs. Dwyer came to Boston in 1952. She is very happy with the orchestra and with the city. "In the middle west when I was little, music was something that practically had to be imposed on the public," she said.

"In Boston, music is a part of everyone's life and they accept it so naturally.

"I also enjoy the uniqueness of Boston. What some people might think is old-fashioned about the city is to me fascinating. I hope all the new building developments don't change this quality."

Mrs. Dwyer loves traveling, for all that it is tiring, and feels [illegible] a musician's blood. She was with the orchestra when they made the famous tour that included Russia.

"Everyone wrote about Russia and wanted to know what we thought of it," she said. "But the country I really loved was Ireland. The people were charming and friendly and the scenery was so beautiful."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will [redacted] a 10-week tour of the Orient. This will include Hawaii, New Zealand, Japan and Australia. Mrs. Dwyer, an avid shopper, looks forward to adding to her rug collection on the tour.

The Dwyers live in Chestnut Hill. Dr. Thomas Dwyer is Associate Director of the Psychiatric Service at Beth Israel Hospital. He is also Clinical Associate in Psychiatry at Harvard Medical School.

Though Mrs. Dwyer has a housekeeper, she plans menus and does the shopping herself.

"When people ask me what my hobbies are, I have to smile," she said. "I have so little time for homemaking it might almost be called a hobby."

Mrs. Dwyer is a [illegible] woman and does [illegible] derplay this as a [illegible] the orchestra.

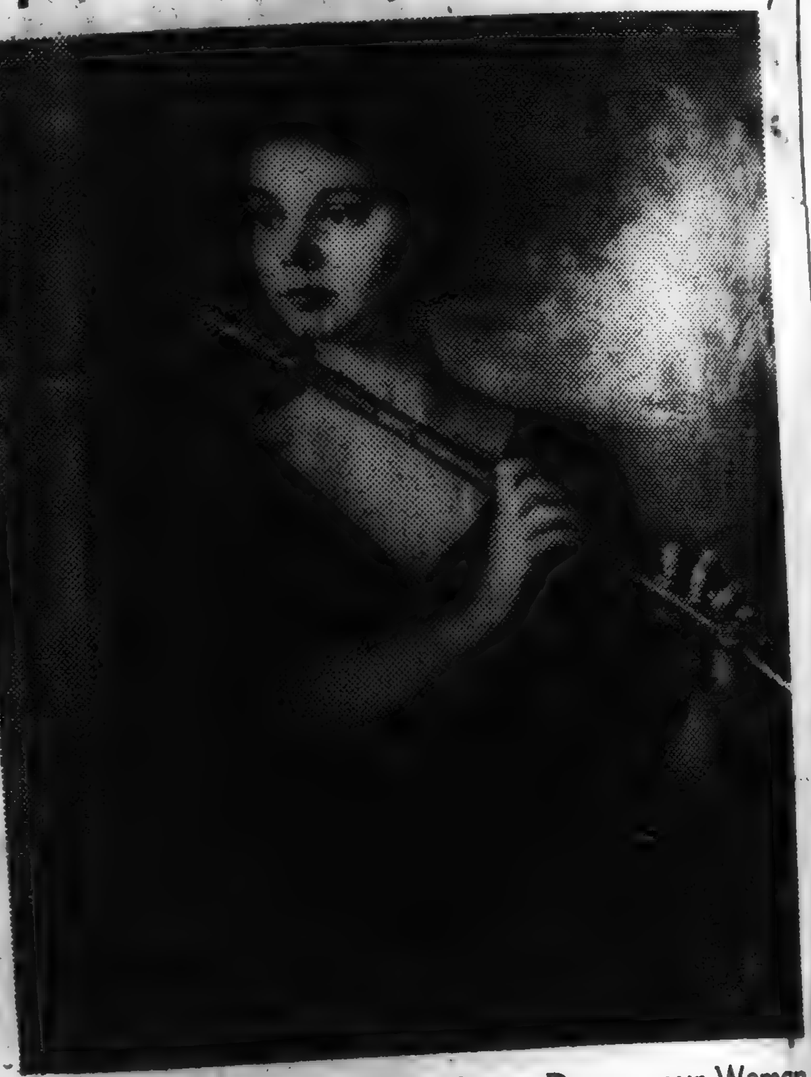
"I think when a female musician tries to dress in a severe way she attracts more attention than if she wears what is flattering," she said.

"Naturally, I do not wear clothes that will stand out too much. But I like soft colors and wide skirts. Every now and then I like to wear navy blue instead of black, too. I love to design clothes and design many of my own.

"I can make dresses but don't have much time to do it. I love textiles and materials. Both my husband and I enjoy collecting art, too."

Mrs. Dwyer gives many recitals on her own, recently appearing at Town Hall in New York.

When asked if she'd ever like to retire and lead a "normal" life, she smiled and said: "This is my normal life."



PORTRAIT OF Doriot Anthony Dwyer, our Woman of the Week, was done by Irwin D. Hoffman, a Vermont artist. Mrs. Dwyer is first flutist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

DAILY TELEGRAPH JUNE 6, 1960

NEWS FO

She's out of time with the orchestra

TWENTY-FOUR hours each day are just not enough for American girl Sally Hempel, who arrived in Sydney yesterday.

Sally is secretary to the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Thomas D. Perry, Jun.

The orchestra arrived from Brisbane yesterday and gave the first of three concerts at Sydney Town Hall last night.

"Every day is almost a 26-hour one," she said.

For her there are mix-ups to cope with all the time—the stage is too small to accommodate all the players, somebody's ill, hotel bookings are inadequate, baggage gets mislaid.

With practically no time to call her own she still manages to find time to play the piano.

Relaxation

"For relaxation only — with an example of brilliance always before me, I wouldn't dare take up music seriously," she said.

Thirty-one years old, a qualified nurse, and once an air-hostess, Sally Hempel has been with the Boston Symphony for four years.

The personnel of the orchestra are "very domesticated" according to Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, wife of the manager, and official hostess for the tour.

Only about [illegible] of the men are ba[illegible]

And of th[illegible]men musicians [illegible]rried — harpist [illegible]livia Luetcke, a[illegible] Mrs. Winifred [illegible]

Mrs. W[illegible] the first woma[illegible] player to be accep[illegible] member of the orchest[illegible]

The third w[illegible]n musician is [illegible]ist Lois Schaefer, who is Mrs. Winograd's sister.

For the past five years Miss Schaefer has been a permanent flautist with the orchestra of the New York City Centre of Music and Drama.

For Sally Hempel the Boston Symphony Orchestra is . . .

SEEN, BUT NOT HEARD

SLIM, blonde Sally Hempel (pictured left) has only one regret about joining the staff of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — she hasn't been to a symphony concert in years.

"I have been one of the orchestra's most ardent fans since I went to live in Boston 10 years ago," said Sally, a former nurse and air hostess when she arrived in Melbourne with the orchestra yesterday.

"I used to go to as many concerts as I could afford.

"Then, four years ago, my closest friend, who had resigned as secretary to the orchestra's manager, Mr Thomas D. Perry, jnr., asked if I was interested in the job.

"I got it — and everything changed."

Now, when the orchestra strikes up for a concert performance, Sally is behind closed doors with Mr Perry and other staff members, planning the next series of performances.

"But we do hear snatches of rehearsals by leaving our office doors open," she said.

"Our orchestra is one of the few which owns its own hall and the offices are all around the auditorium."

Sally described her job generally as "seeing that Mr Perry's decisions are carried out."

"On this trip, that has meant checking on transport, accommodation and facilities in concert halls, knowing where all 117 players are at a given time — or, failing that — finding them, delivering their mail, making appointments for them and seeing that they get there, and coping with miscellaneous emergencies," she explained.

3 WOMEN, 114 MEN

TWO sisters, cellist Mrs Winifred Winograd, and flautist Miss Lois Schaefer, are among the three women musicians who arrived in Melbourne with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday.

The third woman is Mrs Olivia Luetcke, a harpist.

Mrs Winograd is the first permanent woman player in the orchestra's string section.

Formerly first cellist in the Fort Wayne Philharmonic Orchestra in Indiana, she was the only woman among 13 musicians who auditioned for the post three years ago.

"I felt I was being rather 'forward' in trying for the job," she laughed yesterday.

"But Charles Munch, our conductor, is less prejudiced than most against women players, and the men in the orchestra accepted me very quickly."

Miss Schaefer joined the orchestra to replace another woman flautist who was unable to make the trip.

She lives in New York, where she plays in the theatre-size orchestra at the New York City Centre of Music and Drama.

"This is a kind of experimental theatre which produces annual seasons of opera, ballet, drama and musical comedy," Miss Schaefer explained.

220

From
"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

12 MAY 1960

Three Women In Boston S.O.

Travellers

THERE WILL BE only three women among the 117 players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it arrives in Australia next month.

There are Mrs Winifred Winograd ('cellist), Miss Lois Schaefer (flautist) and Mrs Olivia Hall Luetcke (harpist).

However, there will be two other women travelling in the specially chartered plane which is bringing the orchestra on its tour of the Far East and Australia. The manager, Mr Thomas D. Perry, jun., will be accompanied by his wife and his secretary, Miss Sally Hempel. Miss Hempel is also a registered nurse.

Mrs Luetcke, the harpist, is one of the few Americans actually born in New York City; most New Yorkers gravitate there from somewhere else.

SUBURBAN COLONIAL

She and her teenage daughter now live in a large colonial house in suburban Boston, where they raise Chihuahuas. Their dogs have been awarded many prizes at dog shows.

The flautist (or, as the Americans say, flutist), Miss Schaefer, is first flute with the New York City Centre Opera Company's Orchestra. But Dr Charles Munch invited her to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra for this tour of the Far East and Australia.

She has been soloist with many American orchestras, including the Chicago Symphony and the Boston Pops. Miss Schaefer is a sister of 'cellist, Mrs Winifred Winograd.

Mrs Winograd was the first woman string player ever engaged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She joined it in 1957. She studied with Gregor Piatigorsky, at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia and at the Boston Symphony's summer school of music, the Berkshire Music Centre.

GARDENING HER HOBBY

Mrs Winograd has a teenage son called Nicky.

The manager and his wife, Mr and Mrs Thomas D. Perry, live in suburban Hingham, 16 miles from Boston, in a large Victorian house surrounded by an acre or so of lawns and gardens.

Mrs Perry's hobby is looking after the garden, and caring for their large shaggy dog, Gus (short for Argus, of the hundred eyes). Their two sons, Doane (17) and Rodney (15) are pupils at a New England preparatory school.

It is Mrs Perry's job to be "first lady" at the orchestra's many social functions, and she always attends the Friday matinee concerts.

Miss Hempel, who comes from Illinois in the midwest, has been Mr Perry's secretary for three and a half years. Before that, besides working as a nurse, she was for a time an air hostess.

The orchestra's first concert in Sydney is on June 7.

MRS THOMAS D. PERRY, wife of the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and MISS SALLY HEMPEL, his secretary take a look at the route the orchestra will follow on its tour of the Far East and Australia. They will be among the five women travelling with the Orchestra in a specially chartered plane.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 'cellist, MRS WINIFRED WINOGRAD.

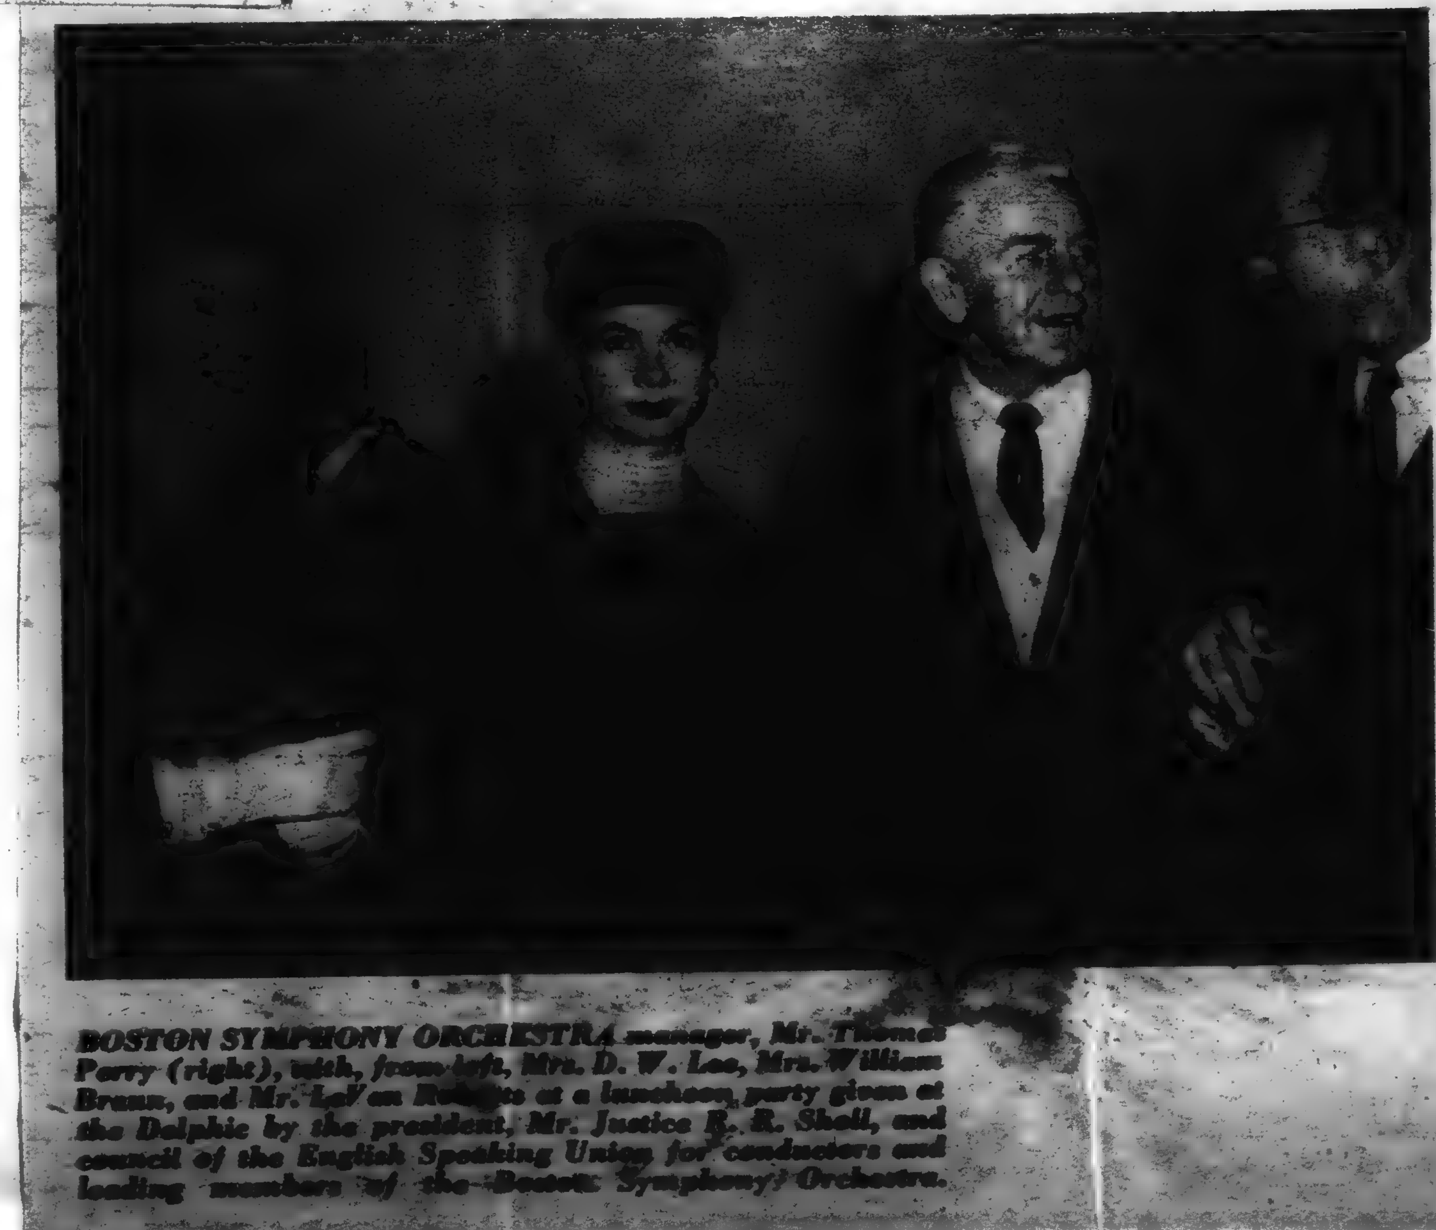
Right: MISS LOIS SCHAEFER (flautist) has joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its tour.

MRS OLIVIA LUETCKE, harpist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, packing her trunk before leaving for their current tour of the Far East and Australia.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Stalbridge Chambers
443 Little Collins Street
Melbourne, Victoria

From 29 JUN 1960
"WOMEN'S WEEKLY,"



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA manager, Mr. Thomas Perry (right), with, from left, Mrs. D. W. Lee, Mrs. William Braun, and Mr. [illegible] at a luncheon party given at the Delphic by the president, Mr. Justice R. R. Sholl, and council of the English Speaking Union for conductors and leading members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

22

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Stalbridge Chambers
443 Little Collins Street
Melbourne, Victoria

From "WOMEN'S WEEKLY."
18 MAY 1960

● The Boston Symphony Orchestra which will tour Australia for 11 days.

Boston breaks the sex barrier

By ROBERT FELDMAN, of our New York staff

● Biology has something to do with the bias against women musicians in America's major orchestras, but lately the sex barrier has been broken down—notably in Boston by conductor Charles Munch.

BUT even the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will tour Australia for 11 days next month, has only three women among its 100 musicians.

By comparison, the New York Philharmonic hasn't a single woman member—not even a harpist, for whom exceptions are traditionally made.

The Boston Symphony's tour of Australia is a part of the U.S. cultural exchange programme. The orchestra will also visit Korea, Japan, the Philippines, and New Zealand.

The three black-skirted members of the orchestra are Olivia Hall Luetcke, harpist, Winifred Winograd, cellist, and Lois Schaefer, flutist. Mrs. Winograd and Miss Schaefer are sisters.

Some years ago the Boston and several other organisations renounced the sex bias by instituting anonymous auditions.

Musicians auditioning for a vacancy played behind an opaque screen—heard but not seen.

To the judges on the other side of the screen (the first-chair players of each section of the orchestra) they were identified only by number.

Only in the final audition—for the conductor—were the applicants seen in full view of the stage.

Having passed both aural and visual hurdles, Mrs. Luetcke and Mrs. Winograd have been with the Boston Symphony for nine years and two years respectively.

Miss Schaefer is not a regular member of the Boston. She is the permanent first flautist in the New York City Opera Company, and joins the Boston Orchestra for the tour only as a replacement for the regular first flautist Doriot Anthony Dwyer.

Mrs. Dwyer, the wife of a Boston physician, is due to have a baby in August.

"My male colleagues couldn't be nicer," Mrs. Winograd, a slender divorcee in her thirties, told me. "I haven't heard a whisper against me, although string players are notoriously jealous of tradition.

● LOIS SCHAEFER — no harping against a female flautist.

"On tour in America I ride in the non-smoking carriage and I don't play cards, so most of the time I travel in near-solitary splendor.

"The men understand that I'm not really anti-social — it's just that when the Boston Symphony lights up you can die of smoke poisoning.

"Nice as the men are, I wouldn't like to be the only woman with the orchestra. Once in a while, when the other two women are absent, and I'm the only female on stage, I look round and wonder what I'm doing there."

Mrs. Winograd lives in her own large house in suburban Needham, Massachusetts, and has a 14-year-old son, Nicholas.

The boy knows something of music — he reluctantly played the piano for the State Department film crew — but he much prefers science.

His room is a clutter of oscilloscopes, signal generators, and other gadgets. He built his own binary computer, a type of "electronic brain," and [illegible] awarded a prize for [illegible] science fair.

Sisters [illegible] and Lois (she's the [illegible]) share a passion for hiking and mountain-climbing.

Miss Schaefer has been with the New York City Centre Orchestra for four years and is a recording artist and teacher of the flute.

Previously she was a member of the famous Chicago Symphony for three years.

The Schaefer sisters grew up in a musical home in Yakima, an apple-growing town in Washington State.

"Mother taught and played the piano," Lois said. "She decided that the flute, cello, and piano would make a good trio for passing the long winter evenings.

"Unfortunately, not much music has been written for this combination. That didn't stop us — we made our own."

For Mrs. Luetcke this will be her third overseas trip with the Boston.

Mrs. Luetcke, incidentally, a mere 5ft. in height, can step easily into her instrument's 6½ft. travelling-case.

"I'm the only one in the orchestra who can use her instrument case as a dressing-room," she said.

She raises chihuahuas as a sideline, and owns about 50, with 18 of them actually in her large house at Chestnut Hill, a Boston suburb.

While in the Far East she will send her 12-year-old daughter, Carlotta, to summer camp.

Like Mrs. Winograd, Mrs. Luetcke is a divorcee. Her mother and a helper will look after the dogs while she is away.

Like many classical musicians, she is a jazz fan. Her particular hero is Count Basie, but she is also a fan of Robert Maxwell, an American jazz harpist.

"Most people don't care for jazz harp," she said. "At first it sounds too gummy — like someone playing old rubber bands. The harp isn't much good, either, for rhythmic bass or fast chromatic work.

"'Hip harp' is a cultivated taste, and I'd be fascinated to learn if anyone in Australia has cultivated it."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "ADVERTISER"
Geelong, Vic.
14 JUN 1960

French Touch From Boston

Although the performances are light-hearted they sometimes made me gasp at the brilliance of the orchestra and conductor.

It's the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch. The recording under review features music by French composers Dukas, Saint-Saens and Ravel and is released under the title "The French Touch" (RCA L16227).

Munch really gets to the heart of this music of fantasy and wit and the orchestra responds magnificently.

The Australian Broadcasting Commission has given us the chance to hear this wonderful orchestra in person. It will be a memorable occasion for all those who attend.

The Boston Pops Orchestra shows off its form in American music on two other recordings on issue by R.C.A. A fine performance of Gershwin's "Rhapsody In Blue" and "An American in Paris" are given with pianist Earl Wild (L16223).

The orchestra, under Arthur Fiedler, accompanies the soloist in a reading which has many virtues and few failures. The rhythms are flexible from start to finish in the "rhapsody" and the recorded sound is first-rate.

The other album features two scores commissioned by the New York Ballet Company and compiled by young composer Hershy Kay. The first, "Stars and Stripes", is adapted and orchestrated from John Philip Sousa's music. It is a stirring arrangement splendidly played by the Boston Pops, again conducted by Fiedler. The second score is entitled "Cakewalk" which comprises music by Louis Gottschalk. Its form follows a classical pattern of the minstrel show. Both items are admittedly compelling. The album catalogue number is (L16228).

Est. 1904
AUSTRA
from
"MO
8- JUN

222

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Sydney, N.S.W

7 JUN 1960

WOMEN'S

S, FASHION and GOSSIP

Orchestra has a 'mother'

Checking last-minute arrangements for their Sydney visit are Bostonians SALLY HEMPEL and MRS THOMAS D. PERRY JNR.

AN adopted "family" of 103 men and five women hasn't presented as many problems to the "first lady of the Boston" as her two teenage children.

This slightly greying "mother" with twinkling china blue eyes is Mrs Thomas D. Perry, jun., wife of the business manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Officially I'm their social hostess," she explained at Sydney Airport today, when she arrived by Ansett-ANA from Brisbane.

Unofficially she's the Boston's "morale booster and general odd-job girl."

According to Mrs Perry, temperamental tantrums are rare in this world-famous orchestra.

"We do have occasional outbursts — musicians will be musicians.

"But they're well-timed, and never interfere with a performance."

Despite this, Mrs Perry helps to iron out difficulties encountered by French, Italian, Russian, Pole, German, Finn, Danish and American members, including six bachelors."

"But 99 per cent of the time we're just one big happy family," she hastened to add.

So proud of her "family" is this music-minded housewife that she never misses a performance.

"I've heard them play from every angle of the concert hall," she said.

Her only real worry on tour was how her mother would cope with her two sons, Doane, 17, and Rodney, 15 (they came out of boarding school today).

But Mrs Perry and her busy husband supplied the solution by sending home packages of cameras and transistor radios to keep the boys "out of mischief."

But help with her Herculean tasks has been provided for Mrs Perry in the form of Sally Hampel, her husband's 31-year-old secretary.

Sally, apart from being as "efficient as a robot," is also a registered nurse and a qualified air hostess.

"And believe me, that experience has been invaluable for this 26-hour-a-day job," she said at the airport as she darted about sorting mail and organising accommodation for the two planeloads of musicians.

Greatest "headache" since her departure from America on April 25 has been mix-ups in accommodation.

"With 108 people to house, you can understand it," she said.

"But can you imagine what it was like in Japan when I couldn't speak Japanese and they couldn't understand a word I said."

Especially happy at her selection to play with the orchestra during their tour is flautist Lois Schaefer, whose sister Mrs Winifred Winograd, is also a member.

Winifred, a cellist, is the first woman string player to make the grade and play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Although it takes a considerable time to unload nine tons of musical instruments, this great orchestra will give its first Sydney performance at Sydney Town

---

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8- JUN 19

NEWS FOR WOMEN

MRS J. de VESSEY, of Double Bay, and MRS E. TRAUB, of Edgecliff who attended the first Sydney concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night. The orchestra will give its second concert at Rushcutter Bay stadium tonight, one concert in Adelaide, two in Melbourne, and then fly to New Zealand for a series of concerts there.

Old Friends Met At Concert

The associate conductor and concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr Richard Burgin, and the musical director of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra, Dr Nicolai Malko, met last night at the orchestra's first Sydney concert, at the Town Hall—for the first time since they were music students together in Russia.

Although they have both been internationally successful in their careers, they had not met since their student days until last night.

Before the concert, the United States Information Officer, Mr Richard Joyce, and Mrs Joyce gave a buffet dinner party at their Vaucluse home for some of the orchestra members — and invited guests back for supper after the show.

The chairman of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, Sir Richard Boyer, and Lady Boyer, and the general manager, Mr Charles Moses, and Mrs Moses, will entertain the orchestra at a party after tonight's concert.

The Governor-General, Lord Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil, who are paying a four-day visit to Sydney, attended the concert last night.

Others among the audience had been guests at a preview of the Theatre Design Exhibition which is being held at David Jones' Art Gallery to aid the Opera House Appeal.

They went on from the exhibition, and the buffet dinner which accompanied it, to the Town Hall.

Mr Justice Macfarlan and Mrs Macfarlan attended both the exhibition and the concert; so did Mr and Mrs Marcel Dekyvere, Dr and Mrs R. Ernst, and Mr and Mrs F. Wenkart.

Nineteen designs for theatre sets, made by non-professional students, and sets created by professional designers were included in the exhibition.

A scale model of the set created for a scene from Ray Lawler's "Piccadilly Bushman" was on display.

The students' designs of scale model theatre sets have been judged by Robin Lovejoy, producer for the Elizabethan Theatre Trust.

Prize-winners will be announced when Lady Lloyd Jones officially opens the exhibition today.

The prizes were donated by Miss Margaret Gillespie, a member of the Opera House Appeal committee.

Australian artists, including Elaine Haxton, William Constable and Loudon Sainthill, contributed sketches of stage costumes to the exhibition.

Joern Utzon, the designer of the Sydney Opera House, sent sketches of costumes created by Danish artist Erik Norgreen for William Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew," they arrived by post yesterday, only a few hours before guests arrived to view the exhibition.

223

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From "MERCURY" Hobart, Tas.

26 MAY

Boston

THE MERCURY WOMEN'S SECTION

Sisters In Boston Orchestra's Tour Of Australia

TWO musical sisters will be among the 117 players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it arrives in Australia next month.

They are Mrs. Winifred Winograd, one of the orchestra's 'cellists, and the flautist, Miss Lois Schaefer.

There will be only three women players with the orchestra. The third is Mrs. Olivia Hall Luetcke, a harpist.

However, there will be two other women travelling in the specially chartered plane which is bringing the orchestra on its tour of the Far East and Australia. The manager, Mr. Thomas D. Perry, jun., will be accompanied by his wife and his secretary, Miss Sally Hempel. Miss Hempel is also a registered nurse.

Mrs. Luetcke, the harpist, is one of the few Americans actually born in New York City; most New Yorkers gravitate there from somewhere else.

She and her teenage daughter now live in a large colonial house in suburban Boston, where they raise Chihuahuas. Their dogs have been awarded many prizes at dog shows.

The flautist (or, as the Americans say, flutist), Miss Schaefer, is first flute with the New York City Centre Opera Company's Orchestra. But Dr. Charles Munch invited her to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra for this tour of the Far East and Australia.

She has been soloist with many American orchestras, including the Chicago Symphony and the Boston Pops.

Her sister, Mrs. Winograd was the first woman string player ever engaged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She joined it in 1957. She studied with Gregor Piatigorsky, at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia and at the Boston Symphony's summer school of music, the Berkshire Music Centre.

Mrs. Winograd has a teenage son called Nicky.

The manager and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, live in suburban Hingham, 16 miles from Boston, in a large Victorian house surrounded by an acre or so of lawns and gardens.

It is Mrs. Perry's job to be "first lady" at the orchestra's many social functions, and she always attends the Friday matinee concerts.

Miss Hempel, who comes from Illinois in the mid-west, has been Mr. Perry's secretary for three and a half years.

LEFT: Mrs. Winifred Winograd is a 'cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

RIGHT: Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, wife of the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his secretary, Miss Sally Hempel, will fly on the tour.

ABOVE: Miss Lois Schaefer (flautist) has joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its tour. LEFT: Mrs. Olivia Luetcke, harpist with the orchestra, packing her trunk for the tour of Australia.

From
"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

THE MUSICIANS FROM BOSTON

The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in Sydney from Brisbane yesterday and had their first look at Sydney from a bus that took them from Kingsford Smith airport, Mascot, to the city. A trombonist, Josef Orosz (top left), sat quietly, clutching a wicker basket. E. Paneka (top right), who plays the bassoon and arrived in Sydney wearing a Digger's hat, poked his head through a window for a better view. Leslie Martin (above), the 24-stone double bass player, sat gingerly—on two bus seats.

Orchestra Packs Town Hall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played to a capacity house at its opening concert in Sydney at the Town Hall last night.

The concert, which was attended by the Governor-General, Lord Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil, had all the glitter of a theatre "first night."

The audience of 2,300 regular Sydney concert-goers gave the orchestra a tremendous ovation, especially for its brilliant performance of Berlioz's Symphonia Fantasque, the principal work on the program.

The second part of the program consisted of works by Dello Joio and Roussel.

The orchestra arrived for its three-day visit only yesterday.

Tonight, at Sydney Stadium, it will play to an audience expected to number between 5,000 and 7,000.

The last Sydney concert by the world-renowned orchestra will be at the Town Hall tomorrow night. This has been fully booked out by regular concert-goers.

225

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Sydney, N.S.W

9 JUN 1960

BOSTON MUSIC'S GLORY

MUSICAL Sydney turned up in strength at the Rushcutter Bay Stadium last night to listen to one of the world's top-ranking orchestras.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by its concertmaster and associate conductor, Richard Burgin, was heard in an imposing performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony and two works by Aaron Copland under the baton of the composer.

Mr Burgin's interpretation of the Tchaikovsky Symphony was fundamentally more concerned with its momentous architectural structure than with emotional outpourings.

His [illegible] while stressing the [illegible] and richness, never exaggerated the sentimental or romantic contents of the thematic material.

The lush over-all sound

Imposing concert

the Bostonians produced was simply glorious.

They revelled in the radiant climaxes and created blazing orchestral colours.

And yet, how transparent sounded the more tranquil passages, although I have still to hear a read pianissimo from the orchestra.

The art of Aaron Copland is difficult to assess on a single hearing, especially the abstract score of the "First Symphony."

Obviously still in search of a personal style, the composer employs a jazz idiom with [illegible] skill that seems to [illegible] prerogative (or birthright) of American musicians.

The Orchestral Suite from the opera "The Tender Land," is unashamedly romantic music in large sections — W. WAGNER.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Perth, W.A.

9 JUN 1960

Eerie On The Ears

SYDNEY, Thurs: Some young American composers are experimenting with music made electronically, according to U.S. composer Aaron Copland.

The music sounded quite unreal, he said — "as if it were coming from outer space."

It was just the thing to play for space fiction.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

9 JUN 1960

THE final Sydney concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch, is heard over 3LO at 8.00 tonight. Highlights of the program are "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance" (Barber), and "La Mer: Three Symphonic Sketches" (Debussy).

---

work of the Joe MacDonald group.

Monitor 6/15/60

BSO in Melbourne

By Reuters

Melbourne

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony at the Olympic Swimming Pool here yesterday. The orchestra, praised as "technically immaculate and with magnificent breadth of imagination," won critical acclaim despite the uncertain acoustics.

The pool, covered over for the performance, was used for the concert because of its large seating capacity. There was some criticism of the choice.

A Melbourne critic said that the Berlioz symphony received an exhilarating performance. "Nothing is too technically exacting for this orchestra and no demands on conductorship too difficult to comply with. Their conductor, Charles Munch, has dynamic manner, a splendid sense of rhythm, and most eloquent hands that draw from the orchestra most luscious and invigorating sounds," the critic said.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

29 JUN 1960

Red concert artists good value

THE propaganda war is bringing benefits to the local concert-goer, if to no one else.

Following the Washington-sponsored visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sydney will be invaded next month by three leading Soviet concert artists. If accompanists are included the list extends to five.

This is an attack of unprecedented concentration: when violinist David Oistrakh came to Australia two years ago he was the first Soviet artist ever to be heard here, and since then we have had only two Soviet musical visitors.

Next month's visitors are 'cellist Mstislav Rostropovich, his wife, soprano Galina Vishnevskaya, and Ukranian baritone Dmitry Gnatyuk.

Pianist Alexander Dedyukhin will be the associate artist with Rostropovich and Vishnevskaya. Gnatyuk's accompanist will be his former teacher, Rosalia Elvova.

(At her second recital, by the way, Vishnevskaya will be accompanied by Rostropovich, who is a pianist and composer as well as a 'cellist).

WE stand more than a good chance of hearing many more Soviet artists in the future. At least two local concert organisations are negotiating now for contracts with Russian artists.

Names that have been let drop include those of the two leading Russian pianists, Gilels and Richter, and violinist Leonid Kogan.

The first secretary of the Russian Embassy, Mr. I. F. Skripov, a musical enthusiast who has been active in arranging these visits, is at present in Moscow oiling the mechanism of cultural exchange.

The A.B.C., it is reported, has been lobbying in Canberra for an Australian-Soviet cultural exchange treaty.

A cultural treaty such as Britain and the United States already have with Russia would enable negotiations to be made at the top level, and would cut through the vagaries of Soviet bureaucracy.

Russian artists themselves seem to be keen to come here. Word has come back that Oistrakh (despite his alleged dissatisfaction with Australian critics) has been lauding Australia as a place to make music in.

(A two-way traffic in musical artists does not seem to have been considered yet. But Rostropovich, when he passed through Sydney on the way to New Zealand this week, reported that Australian violinist Beryl Kimber had given a couple of recitals recently in Moscow and had had good audiences).

Although there may be some here (such as Mr. D. J. Killen, the Queensland M.H.R. who raised a fuss about the visit of the Bolshoi Ballet) who hold that we should not allow ourselves to be contaminated with the products of Soviet culture, the greatest enemies to cultural dissemination seem to be Russians themselves.

It takes a lot of patience, I am told, to get a Russian virtuoso safely on to Australian soil.

Although propaganda through music may be top-level Russian policy now, distrust of the capitalist West seems to be still deeply ingrained in the lesser officials of the Ministry of Culture.

Prolonged negotiations vanish into unexplained silence, at the end of which a cable may arrive saying that the artist is already on the way.

The Russians do not seem to understand the need for long-range concert bookings nor the uses of publicity.

Oistrakh's tour was arranged well in advance (though even with him there was some confusion because Moscow was negotiating with two Australian organisations, Williamsons and the A.B.C., simultaneously), and, more important, his name was already news here.

His concerts were all sold out without difficulty.

In contrast was the visit of the young Soviet pianist Eugene Malinin, who turned up, unheralded soon after Oistrakh's visit, and gave two recitals here for a part-time concert promoter.

by MARTIN LONG

He was an artist of remarkable gifts and the goods he had to offer were not, after all, so much below Oistrakh's in quality. But although the critics gave him a big hand the public stayed away from his recitals in crowds.

Much the same thing happened when Tatyana Nikolayeva, an astonishing pianist that nobody here had ever heard of, arrived in Australia last year as one of a "cultural delegation."

The A.B.C. would have been glad to arrange a full tour for her (which would have given publicity time to build), but she had time for only one solo recital in each city.

So the importation of Soviet artists will continue to be a risky business until the Russian authorities realise that they should send out artists who are already known here by name, or until Australian concert-goers realise that a Russian artist, even an unknown one, is a good risk.

I am not in business to "puff" the enterprises of local impresarios, but it should be obvious that the Russians would not risk a bad propaganda mark by sending abroad an artist who was less than good.

And there is no question that the Russians have a big pool of good musicians to draw upon. Russia—Czarist or Sovietist—has always been one of the most intensely musical countries in the world, and today it has a system of musical education which, for thoroughness, is probably second to none.

Rostropovich, the most celebrated of the Soviet performers we are to hear in the next few weeks, is a true product of that system.

He comes from a musical family (his father and first teacher was also a cellist), began to study the cello at eight, and went to a music school—a school combining music with an ordinary curriculum.

He graduated from there to the Moscow Conservatorium, where he completed both the regular course and a two-year post-graduate course.

While he was still officially a student he gave concerts in association with Richter, Gilels and Kogan.

Since then he has made a world-wide name for himself, and has been acclaimed as the natural successor to the great Casals.

HIS wife, Galina Vishnevskaya, is one of the leading sopranos of the Bolshoi Opera, where she has sung roles ranging from Cherubino in Mozart's Figaro to the leading part in Shostakovich's Lady Macbeth at Mtsensk.

She caused a sensation in New York this year when she sang with the Moscow State Symphonic Orchestra and in a solo Carnegie Hall recital.

Dmitry Gnatyuk, now 35, began his professional career rather later in life. He was working in a factory in his native Kiev when he was "discovered" by the engineer husband of his future teacher, Madame Elvova.

He went to the Kiev Conservatorium for five years and is now a principal baritone of the Kiev opera. Although he has sung in the Scandinavian countries this is his first extensive tour abroad.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133
AUSTRALiAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"NEWS"
Adelaide, S.A.
10 JUN 1960

An orchestra like this could give us classics AND pops

Above you see the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is famed for both its classical and "pops" concerts.

JOHN FAHEY

explains how Adelaide could set about getting the same sort of orchestra here.

Where is the money coming from to pay for it?

Although the proposition is undeniably pertinent today, in this instance it has nothing to do with the price of the weekend joint.

The score is simply how to give Adelaide a full-size symphony orchestra and, musically, lift this city out of the "she'll do, mate" class.

A certain degree of controversy has followed publication in The News last Saturday of an opus which I optimistically conceived as a whimsical fantasy with an admonitory sting.

It was called "Pops Go The People." Perhaps it now could be changed to "Pop Go The Purists."

Let there be no equivocation in reiterating the motives:

● Firstly, the SA Symphony Orchestra should be increased in permanent strength from 45 to at least 75.

● Secondly, the subscription concert season ought to be supplemented with a "pops" series to widen the scope and community appeal of an admirable orchestra operating under obvious numerical difficulties.

No waste of time

The esteemed Boston Symphony Orchestra, which plays at Centennial Hall tomorrow night, has a long regular concert season. Then, with about 90 of its musicians masquerading as the Boston Pops Orchestra, it dispenses lighter music, plus food and liquor, for two months.

Boston's definition of "pops" includes such unlikely stablemates as Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnole" and Richard Rodgers' "Oklahoma."

AND Bach chorales (if "Sheep May Safely Graze" can't be classified as a pop I'll conduct a charity performance of Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony with the Glen Osmond Philharmonic Orchestra and the Mindarie Halidon Oratorio Society).

No respectable Bostonians, not even the Cabots and the Lodges of Beacon Hill, imagine for one moment that the orchestra is wasting its precious time by playing pops.

This pops venture helps to defray operating costs and provide more work for the musicians. Moreover, it gives immense pleasure and exposes hundreds of the curious and the cautious to the sound of a great orchestra in the flesh.

Thus, many of the uninitiated are encouraged to explore the more rarefied symphonic altitudes.

Surely it would not be inappropriate for Adelaide to emulate, on a smaller scale, the quaint habits of a city which, by traditional American standards, is considered to be staid and stuff-shirted.

Anyone claiming to possess one jot of tonal perspicacity can scarcely challenge seriously the validity of this argument.

Perversely enough, non-constructive criticism has emanated from quarters one would normally expect to be sympathetic.

OK. Knock the rock—but please spare the squares.

A business matter

NOW, about that money. It has been asked, quite [illegible] that it would be splendid to have a full size orchestra but from where and [illegible] is the filthy lucre to be extracted?

[illegible] as the cigarette makers would [illegible] gave them half a [illegible] king-size question [illegible] problem.

[illegible] could [illegible] of our well-[illegible] who profess to [illegible] arts.

[illegible] Wales the State Government, invoking the name of a Sydney Opera House, regularly arranges for certain interested Australians to have £100,000 windfalls.

In South Australia a trust fund designed to attract bequests and other donations of all sizes might be more expedient.

Back in 1947, when we had a permanent orchestra of 17, a noted conductor I interviewed for The News said:

"For a city of Adelaide's size a permanent orchestra of 75 should be the aim.

"A fine orchestra is a city's greatest publicity asset (take Philadelphia, for instance).

"Once Adelaide's citizens are convinced of this, in a door-to-door canvass if necessary, the money will come in. A sinking fund would be better than relying on sporadic support each season."

This was Sir Eugene (then Mr.) Goossens talking. And I don't think anyone can question his musical authority.

Good music must be sold to the people, said Goossens. There was no reason why it could not be sold in Adelaide.

"To talk of selling music is putting it rather crudely, but it's got to be done," he added.

This message is as urgent today as it was 13 years ago.

It is inconceivable that a city which staged a successful Festival of Arts and left Sydney and Melbourne farther behind than Caduceus in a qualifying race at the Nar Nar Goon trots should have to struggle along with a sadly under-strength orchestra.

It is an affront not only to a fine nucleus of musicians, but also to Henry Krips, who has conducted and recorded with London's Philharmonia Orchestra, easily one of Europe's crack groups.

Practical people

No amount of unctuous high priestishness, no number of shrugs in the "Oh, those awful peasants" manner, can gloss over the truth.

Promotion of a symphony orchestra by well-meaning amateur do-gooders who appear to confuse music critiques with the social jottings is next to useless.

(This is not meant to reflect on anyone working for the Adelaide cause, but that old cap is still available if it fits.)

Practical men and women—with their feet definitely off the mantelpiece—preferably with hard heads for business and activated by pride in their city, are needed to head a board of trustees which, as in Boston, can originate and sustain drives to rake in the symphonic shekels.

Plenty are needed. It must take at least £60,000 a year to maintain the SA Symphony Orchestra. The Australian Broadcasting Commission is doing a good job in running it.

Helpful are subsidies from the State Government (£12,500 last year), the City Council (£2,500), and the SA Orchestral Association.

Box office receipts can never solve the deficit headache. The main source of revenue inevitably must be all who believe in music as an integral part of human existence.

Ordinary people can, and should be made to, feel that the SA Symphony Orchestra belongs to them.

This will never happen while a muddle-headed minority or cryptic critics sneer and snipe at any effort to scale this summit.

227

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

JUN 1960

MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were guests-of-honor at a party held after their concert at the Town Hall last night at the Darling Point home of the United States Consul-General.

The United States Consul-in-Charge (Mr. Orray Taft) and Mrs. Taft welcomed 50 guests.

They included Sir Bernard and Lady Heinze, of Bellevue Hill, Sir Richard and Lady Boyer, of Wahroonga, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Moses, of Double Bay, the Premier (Mr. R. J. Heffron) and Mrs. Heffron, and the American Ambassador (Mr. W. Sebald).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TRUTH"

Melbourne, Vic.

11 JUN 1960

THE A.B.C. can be pretty precious about culture and things like that. Tuesday night an announcer, introducing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, referred to its Austral Asian tour. Ordinary people, including many who have been educated, say Australasian.

Es 'Phone: MU 5133

AU CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

9 - JUN 1960

Sixty minutes of music from the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will be brought to Adelaide listeners tonight from the Sydney orchestral concert, broadcast over 5AN at 7.30.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From T R UTH

12 JUN 1960 Brisbane, Qld.

SAW Mrs. J. Swan, Ascot, smart study, attending the Red Cross Garden Party at the home of Lady Tooth on Thursday. Just back from Sydney, she was in time to also take in the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

10 JUN 1960 Adelaide, S.A.

Good Morning

IN THE SWIM.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give a concert at the Centennial Hall tomorrow night, is having some odd settings for concerts on its Australian tour. In Sydney on Wednesday night, the orchestra played in the Stadium — it was so cold many of the musicians played in their overcoats —and in Melbourne, it will give a performance at the Olympic Swimming Pool. But, as one Melburnian pointed out, "It's not as remarkable as it might be. What would be news is if they had a swim at the Town Hall!"

★ ★ ★

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor is more than just a conductor. Charles Munch is also something of a matinee idol. Some time ago, a Paris magazine polled 10,000 French people (who can't be wrong) asking whom they would like to dine with that night if given the choice. Mr. Munch was second only to Sir Winston Churchill, and lengths ahead of the film stars!

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

VISITING U.S. ORCHESTRA

MR JOHN CHALK, of Yowie Bay, and MISS AUDREY DOBLER, of Parramatta, at the first Sydney concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Town Hall last night. The Governor-General, Lord Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil attended the concert.

227

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

JUN 1960

MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were guests-of-honor at a party held after their concert at the Town Hall last night at the Darling Point home of the United States Consul-General.

The United States Consul-in-Charge (Mr. Orray Taft) and Mrs. Taft welcomed 50 guests.

They included Sir Bernard and Lady Heinze, of Bellevue Hill, Sir Richard and Lady Boyer, of Wahroonga, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Moses, of Double Bay, the Premier (Mr. R. J. Heffron) and Mrs. Heffron, and the American Ambassador (Mr. W. Sebald).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

10 JUN 1960 Adelaide, S.A.

Good Morning

IN THE SWIM.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give a concert at the Centennial Hall tomorrow night, is having some odd settings for concerts on its Australian tour. In Sydney on Wednesday night, the orchestra played in the Stadium — it was so cold many of the musicians played in their overcoats —and in Melbourne, it will give a performance at the Olympic Swimming Pool. But, as one Melburnian pointed out, "It's not as remarkable as it might be. What would be news is if they had a swim at the Town Hall!"

★ ★ ★

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor is more than just a conductor. Charles Munch is also something of a matinee idol. Some time ago, a Paris magazine polled 10,000 French people (who can't be wrong) asking whom they would like to dine with that night if given the choice. Mr. Munch was second only to Sir Winston Churchill, and lengths ahead of the film stars!

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TRUTH"

Melbourne, Vic.

11 JUN 1960

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

8 - JUN 1960

VISITING U.S. ORCHESTRA

MR JOHN CHALK, of Yowie Bay, and MISS AUDREY DOBLER, of Parramatta, at the first Sydney concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Town Hall last night. The Governor-General, Lord Dunrossil, and Lady Dunrossil attended the concert.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

9 - JUN 1960

Sixty minutes of music from the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will be brought to Adelaide listeners tonight from the Sydney orchestral concert, broadcast over 5AN at 7.30.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From T R UTH

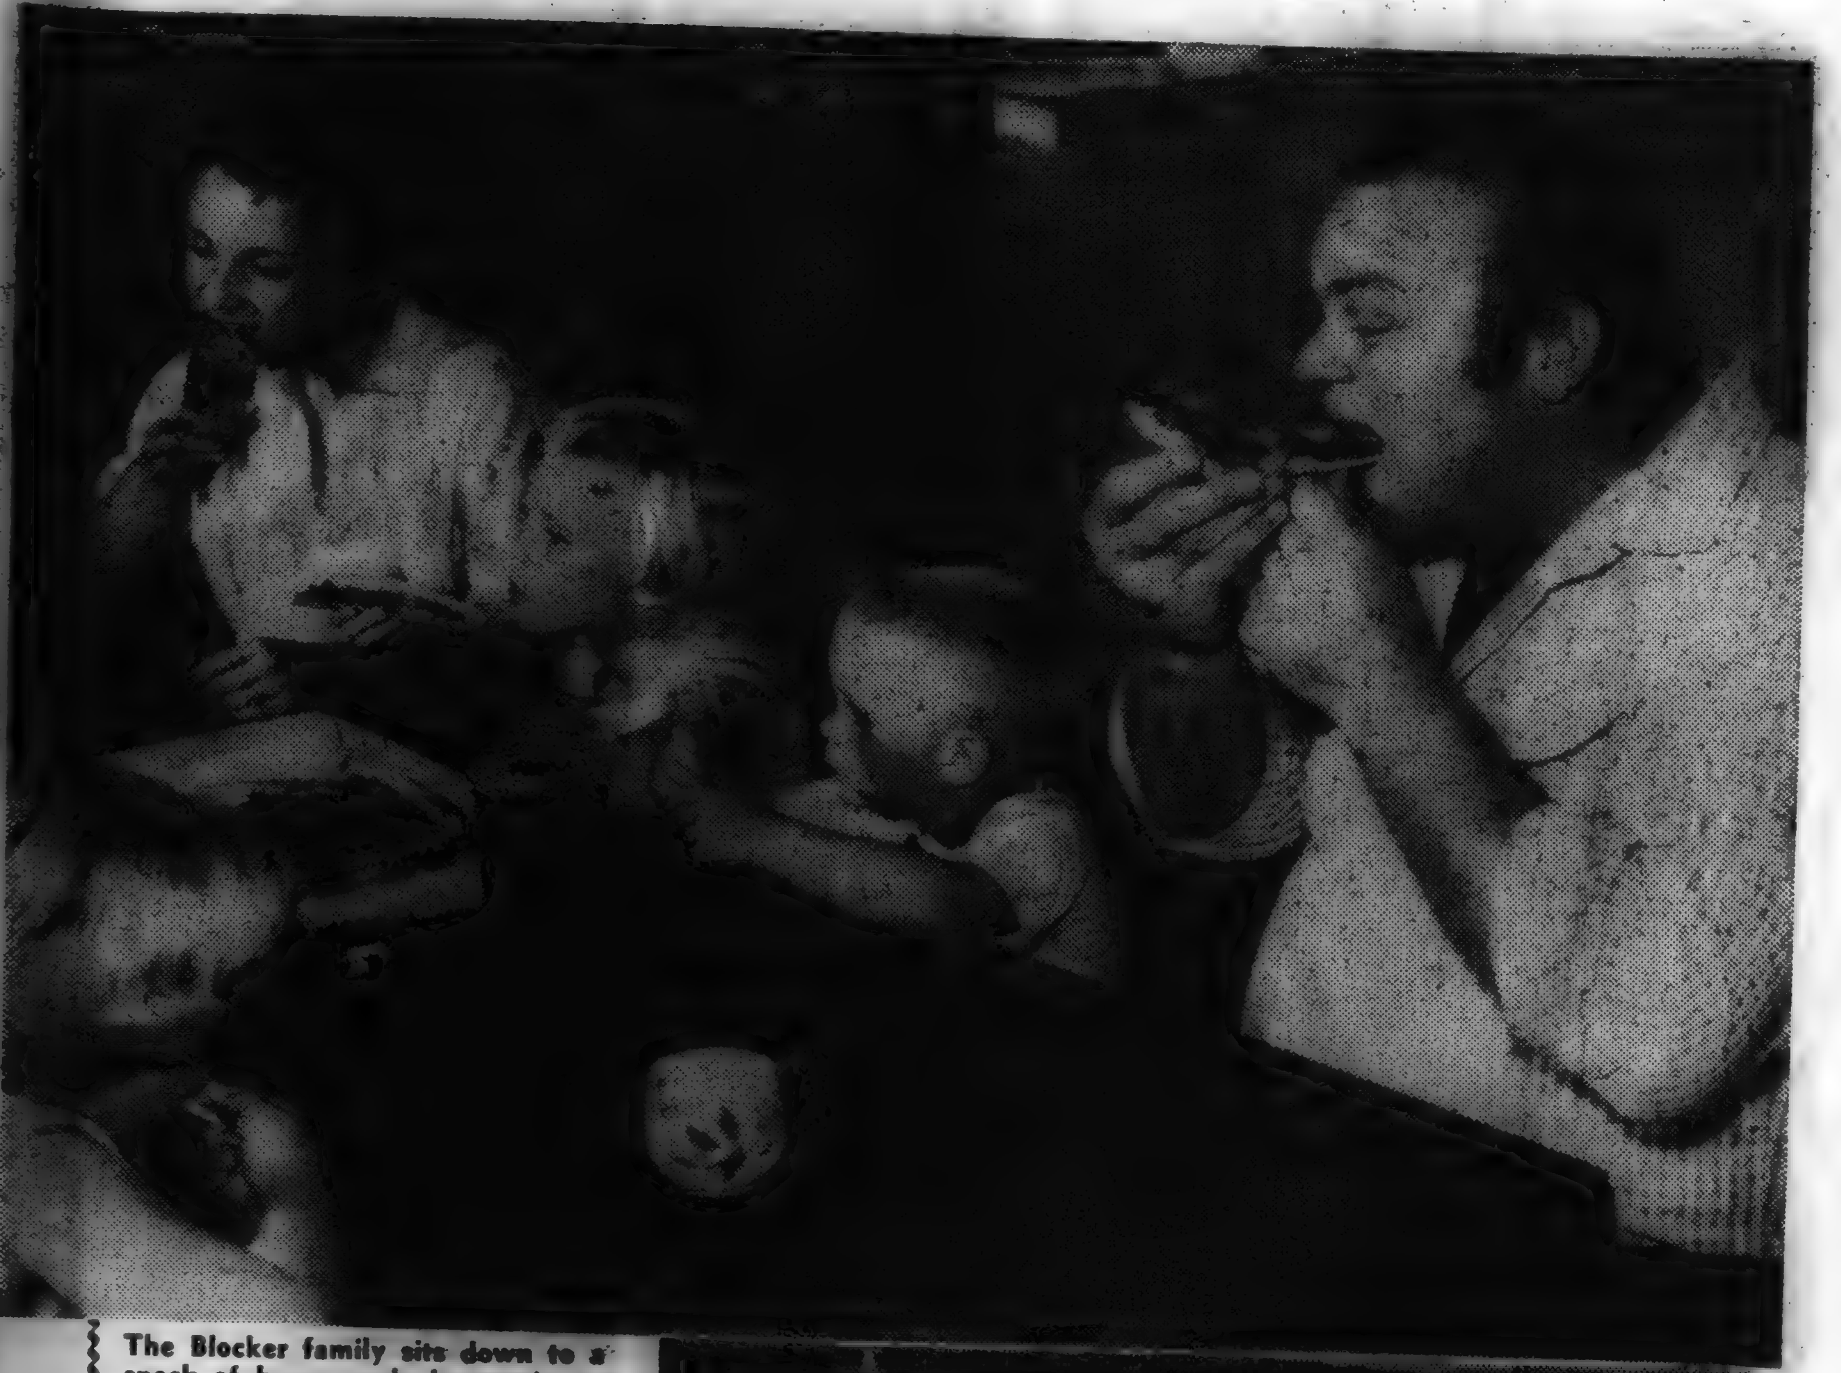
12 JUN 1960 Brisbane, Qld.

SAW Mrs. J. Swan, Ascot, smart study, attending the Red Cross Garden Party at the home of Lady Tooth on Thursday. Just back from Sydney, she was in time to also take in the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

COLORED PAPER

228

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From T.V. Times
9 JUN 1960 Melbourne, Vic.



The Blocker family sits down to a snack of home-made berry pie on the screened-in porch at the side of their new house.

RIGHT: Dan holds up the entire family in this picture. At top is his wife Dolphia, on the left are sons David Douglas, born May 4, 1955, and Dennis Dirk, born July 31, 1957. At right are twin daughters Debra Lee and Danna Lynn, born July 7, 1953.

even know oranges grew on trees. Our kids now just pick them off the trees and eat them then and there. . . ."

"Not until after I had washed them," interposed Mrs. Blocker.

"Anyway," said Dan after we settled down in the spacious living room, "this is our new home and we love it.

"Couldn't live in the big city. Squeezed me in. After all, we are small town folk. . ."

"My dad and mom are coming here next month to live out their lives in California," he added happily.

"Dad has been ailing and he's quite old. And I'm his only son.

"So naturally, we'll want to set them up close by."

The older Blockers have been living in O'Donnell, Texas, where Dan grew up, the biggest, heaviest, fightingest youngster in the community.

The role of "Hoss" has made him a happy man, he said, giving him a chance to sink his teeth into a specific portrayal and to establish a name for himself

"Gee," he said, "I'm even getting fan mail from Australia. You won't believe me, will you?"

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"NEWS",
Adelaide, S.A.
9 - JUN 1960

The Boston in new recording

Classics

By TED SMITH

The Boston Symphony, due to play here on Saturday, presents Adelaide with exciting evidence of its greatness in a new recording, with violinist Heifetz, of the Mendelssohn E Minor and Prokofieff Second Concertos.

This full toned RCA disc has been only recently released.

Heifetz, now in his late fifties, is still the supreme master, with unexcelled technical wizardry and beauty of tone. The pairing of these two works is extreme, but the Mendelssohn gains new strength under Heifetz's brilliance. The Prokofieff, a devil to play, is full of fire and lyricism. The last movement, in particular, is supercharged with life and movement. The orchestra, under Charles Munch, is equal to all demands, a worthy partner of its great soloist. (RCA L 16022, 57/6).

* *

PHILIPS has released No. 4 of the excellent Dylan Thomas series. Here Thomas, with his inimitable flood of words, gives an "irreverent preamble" titled "A Visit to America," being his views on the pilgrimages of English lecturers across the States. Witty, brilliant somewhat cruel. He reads works by Henry Reid, De la Mare, Auden, and Thomas Hardy, including Reid's lovely, bitter-sweet "Naming of Parts." (Philips, B [illegible] L, 52/6).

* *

SYDNEY pianist Barry Gibbons contributes a Chopin recital in a series marked "Volume I." for Rex, an Australian label. He plays a collection of studies, preludes, nocturnes, and impromptus. His approach is clean, but there seems to be too little poetry in it. (RA 2001, [illegible]/-).

COLORED PAPER

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From T.U. Times
9 JUN 1960 Melbourne, Vic.

Aaron Copland, the noted American composer, is guest conductor during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's tour.

The Boys From Boston

One of the world's greatest orchestras is visiting Australia.

A FRENCH women's magazine once asked 10,000 female readers to answer this question:

"What man would you like to have dinner with tonight if you could make your choice?"

Sir Winston Churchill took first place, and running a close second was Charles Munch, now music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, visiting Australia this week.

In the poll Munch beat the French screen idol, Jean Marais (star of the Cocteau films "Beauty and the Beast" and "Orpheus") who ran third.

In his younger days Munch, now 68, was pursued by what could be called a French version of the "bobbi-soxers"—they were [illegible] "Munchettes."

From [illegible] thirties onwards he was at the centre of musical life in Paris.

At the start of the war, Charles Munch was invited to America from France to conduct the St. Louis orchestra.

He accepted, and went as far as Lisbon. Then he returned to Paris. It was his sincere conviction that he could best serve his countrymen during the war by remaining at his post and doing for them what he knew best how to do.

During the German occupation the Munch country house was an important way-station used by the Resistance in the "underground" railroad that helped prisoners escaping from the Germans.

Many crews of Allied planes shot down over France were returned to England via this route.

Munch's substantial earnings as a conductor helped also to finance Resistance activities.

After the liberation of France, he was the first French conductor invited to cross the Channel.

Besides conducting in England, he visited Switzerland, Holland, Spain, Belgium, Australia, Czechoslovakia, Portugal and South America.

He conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a guest in December, 1946. Two years later he was appointed to succeed Serge Koussevitzy as regular conductor.

In Australia Charles Munch will direct the orchestra's first concert at the Brisbane City Hall on Monday, June 6. He will also conduct two concerts at Sydney Town Hall on June 7 and 9, and a telecast concert from the Olympic Stadium, Melbourne on Tuesday, June 14.

In the Melbourne telecast the orchestra will play Variations—Chaconne and Finale, by Dello Joio, a contemporary American composer, and Roussel's Bacchus and Ariadne.

A concert in Adelaide on Saturday, June 11, will be conducted by composer Aaron Copland.

The orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin, will conduct a telecast concert by the 104-man orchestra from the Sydney

They made the first symphony record

Stadium, [illegible] Wednesday, June 8.

The [illegible] will be tele-[illegible] for showing later in [illegible] States.

[illegible] most of the orchestra's regular season Burgin, 67, sits unobtrusively at the violin section's first desk, as he has for the past 39 years.

At the end of the performance the conductor or guest soloist will shake his hand.

If the guest happens to be someone as impulsive as Leonard Bernstein he may even kiss his cheeks.

Burgin has a reputation for forgetfulness in his private life.

Once he left his Stradivarius on the train. But he has a legendary memory for music.

No use for melodrama

Many times he has saved the situation when a conductor lost his place, by simply playing on until the maestro found himself.

When he leads the orchestra in a concert, as he will in Sydney, Richard Burgin conducts with utmost craftsmanship and no melodrama.

"I know what I want, I know how to tell them what I want, and they give it to me," he says, adding as an afterthought, "just as they give it to any other conductor, only maybe to me a little quicker."

Burgin's program for the Sydney telecast is Tchaikovsky's popular Symphony No. 5 in E Minor.

Members of the orchestra regard themselves as a happy family. Many are Frenchmen, some are Italians, there is an Egyptian, and one of the Americans is the grandson of a Cherokee Indian.

The Boston Orchestra's visit to Australia follows a tour of Japan, Formosa and the Philippines under President Eisenhower's program for encouraging cultural visits to other countries. From Australia the orchestra will go to New Zealand.

The orchestra was the first symphony group to make a gramophone record—in September, 1917.

The Victor Talking Machine Company transported the orchestra to Camden, New Jersey, and in a temperature of 100 in the shade crammed them into an almost sound-tight room which had one wall like an enormous shell.

The soloists sat outside on high stools, blowing into inverted megaphones of their own.

When other musicians had problem parts to play they ran out of the room and played into a special megaphone, running back to resume their seats.

The conductor of that time, Dr. Karl Muck, stood outside in full formal dress, alternately conducting and turning to peer behind him at the turntable which was making the master disc.

The composition recorded was Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4. The recording was recently re-issued as part of an LP commemorating the 75th anniversary of the orchestra.

Diamonds on baton

At the same time the record company, which had recorded the orchestra for 40 years, presented a 2000-dollar diamond studded baton to the symphony orchestra through its conductors, Charles Munch and Arthur Fiedler.

Fiedler conducts the orchestra during its Promenade or "Pops" season each year.

Every spring 80 of the orchestra become the Boston Pops.

The orchestra's permanent home, Symphony Hall, changes its maroon walls for spring green hangings, and green and gold tables are dotted about the auditorium.

There, with a glass of wine or beer in front of them, members of the audience listen to romantic waltzes, evergreens and any other music that comes under the heading of popular and light classics.

Since 1930, when Arthur Fiedler took over, the Pops have become known all over the world as a glamor light orchestra.

Balanced music diet

However the symphony and not the Pops Orchestra is touring Australia.

In Adelaide, Aaron Copland, America's best-known contemporary composer, will conduct them in a performance of his own Symphony No. 1 and a suite from his opera "The Tender Land."

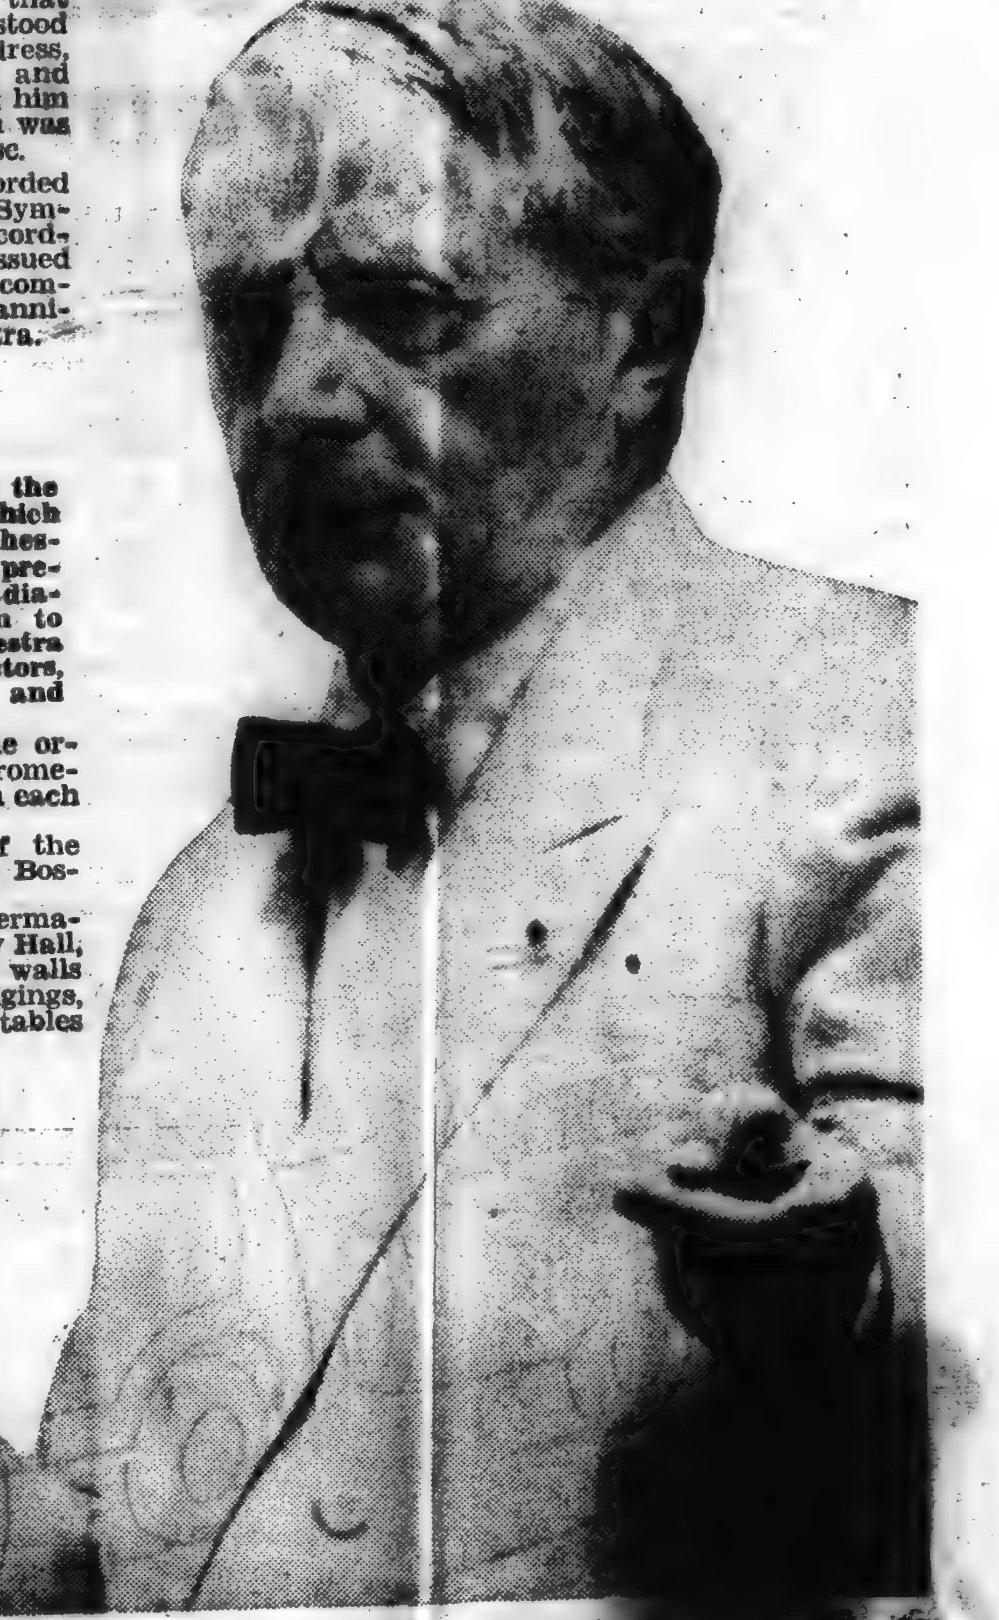
Copland has written music for ballet ("Billy the Kid") and for movies ("Our Town," "The Heiress").

He is a terse critic of musical interests which oppose the performance of contemporary music.

"The simple truth is that our concert halls have been turned into musical museums — auditory museums of a most limited kind," he says.

"We must have a balanced musical diet that permits us to set off our appraisals of the old masters against the varied and different musical manifestations of more recent times.

"It is only in the light of the whole musical experience that the classics become most meaningful."



Charles Munch, the music director of the orchestra, supported the French resistance while conducting in Paris during the war. Allied fliers, returning to England via the French "underground" used his country house as a way-station.

Est. 1904
AUSTRALiAN
Melbou
From
"N
9 - JUN 1960

The Boston i recor

Classics

By TED SMITH

The Boston Symphony, due to play here on Saturday, provides Adelaide with exciting evidence of its greatness in a new recording, with violinist Heifetz, of the Mendelssohn E Minor and Prokofieff Second Concertos.

This full toned RCA disc has been only recently released.

Heifetz, now in his late fifties, is still the supreme master, with unexcelled technical wizardry and beauty of tone. The pairing of these two works is extreme, but the Mendelssohn gains new strength under Heifetz's brilliance. The Prokofieff, a devil to play, is full of fire and lyricism. The last movement, in particular, is supercharged with life and movement. The orchestra, under Charles Munch, is equal to all demands, a worthy partner of its great soloist. (RCA L 16222, 57/6).

* *

PHILIPS has released No. 4 of the excellent Dylan Thomas series. Here Thomas, with his inimitable flood of words, gives an "irreverent preamble" titled "A Visit to

229

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Sydney, N.S.W

10 JUN 1960

BOSTON'S "LA MER"

Music with "bite" in it

The Boston Symphony Orchestra again played superbly under Charles Munch in the Town Hall last night.

Debussy's "La Mer" was full of the most exquisite nuancing.

The delicate surface texture shone with a myriad of lights over a structure of sturdy bones.

This was Debussy with a bite in it . . . exhilarating, irresistible.

Mr Munch offered an unusual reading of Brahms' Second Symphony.

His first movement was the most songful I have ever heard.

He made of it a long cantilena full of poetic musings without, however, the propulsion given it by the best of the German conductors.

Elegance

He called on the full splendour of the orchestra's string tone for an impassioned Adagio Non Troppo.

And he imparted to the Scherzo a unique elegance that in no way impaired its masculinity.

After all these refinements the Finale remained obstinately earthbound.

Despite the energy that went into its performance it seemed to mark time — always in the same place.

Samuel Barber's "Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance," tightly written and expressive, completed a program that filled the Town Hall with sound of a quality that is seldom heard outside the great cities of Europe and America. — JULIAN RUSSELL.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

10 JUN 1960

Boston Young People Have A Special Ambition

Many young people in Boston, America, have what is described as a "very special ambition."

They don't want to rise to the top in the business, medical, legal or similar worlds — their eyes are on the internationally celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra — to be seen in Melbourne on June 13 and 14.

For to become a member of this orchestra is a rare achievement, and it has been that way since the orchestra's foundation more than 79 years ago.

It not only means winning the applause of American audiences but of peoples in different parts of the world —including Russia and Japan. The Boston Symphony is acclaimed in all corners of the globe.

Before it left for its current tour of Japan, Korea, New Zealand and Australia, the orchestra completed a season of 100 concerts in 20 American cities. At all engagements a great part of the audience comprised young men and women, especially teenagers.

The Boston Symphony owes its origin to an unfortunate accident — not in America, but Austria— 100 years ago. The accident in Vienna stopped a promising young Boston concert pianist.

The young man, Henry L. Higginson, son of a prominent Boston banker, turned his frustration over a permanently injured hand into forming a full-time symphony orchestra.

Although Mr. Higginson followed the family banking tradition, he gathered together the best musicians he could find in Austria and Germany. He chose a young German conductor, George Henschel, to lead them.

Concerts in the downtown area of Boston soon became a feature of local life. Gradually the orchestra's fame spread throughout America and the world.

Bostonians hold their orchestra in such high esteem that they named the subway stop near the concert hall "Symphony." (Perhaps we could acknowledge our own Victorian Symphony Orchestra in the same way when we have an underground railway.)

The 105-man orchestra will be seen in Melbourne under both its conductor, Charles Munch, and associate conductor, Richard Burgin.

Charles Munch become permanent conductor, succeeding Serge Koussevitzky in 1949. He is the orchestra's tenth conductor since its foundation.

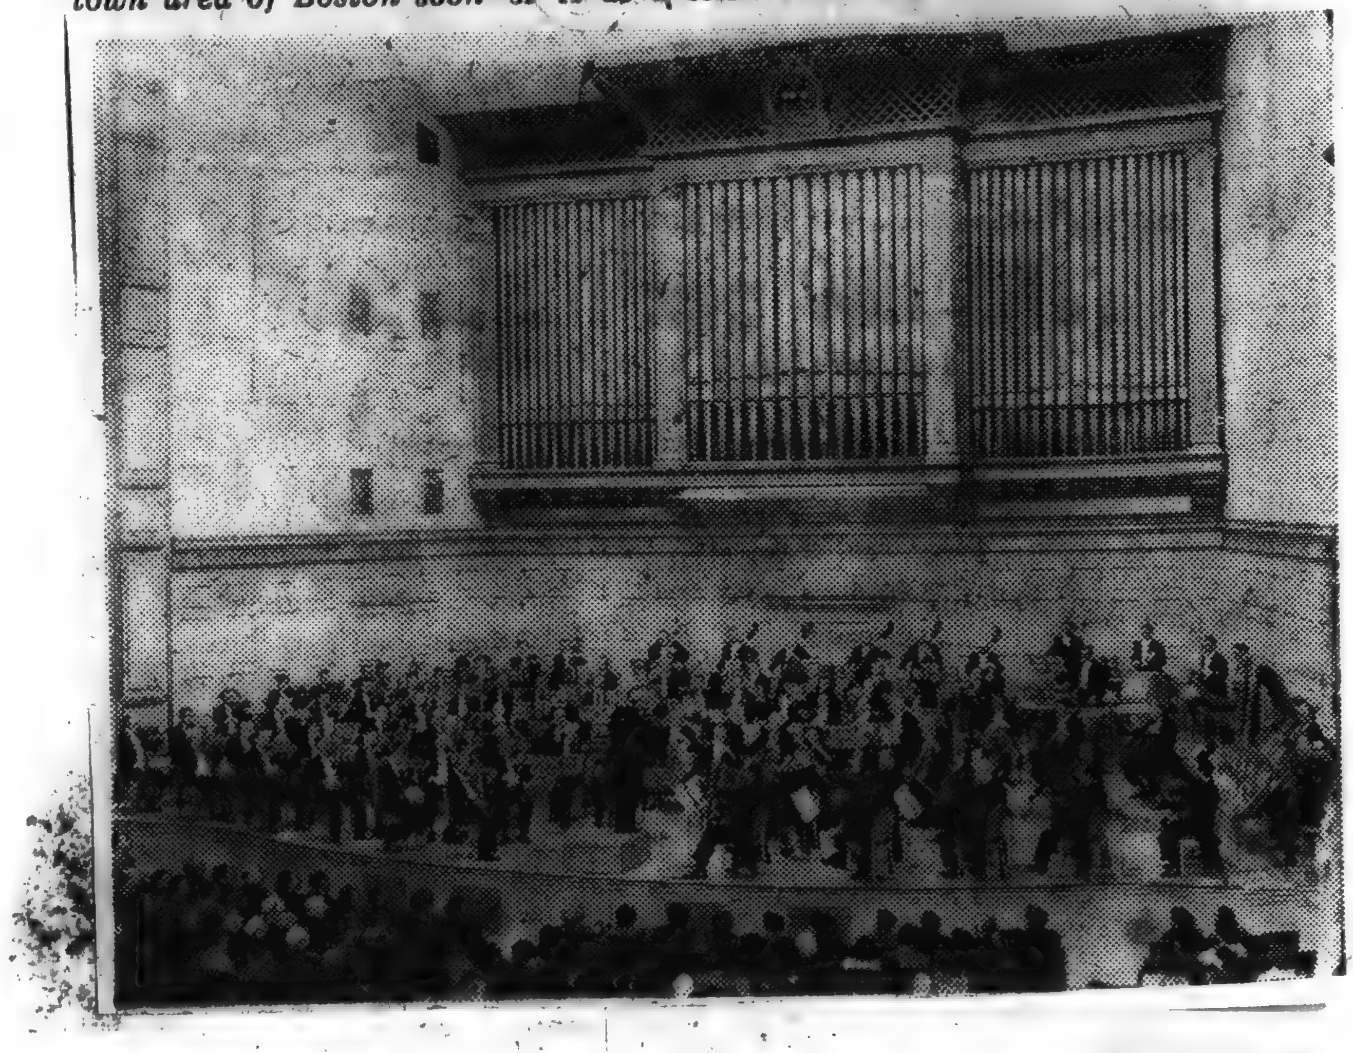
Dr. Munch was one of France's foremost musicians and the conductor of many top orchestras. Even now, when time permits, he conducts the leading orchestras in Israel, France, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Austria, and other lands.

Warsaw - born Richard Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as a soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He was appointed in 1920 (at the age of 27) to be concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. France made him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1955.

The orchestra, which will also give concerts in Brisbane, Sydney and Adelaide, caused top Russians to praise it during its first Moscow visit in 1956.

The "New York Times" correspondent cabled: "The Soviet Union's musical elite gave the Boston Symphony Orchestra a tumultuous reception, culminating in a 10-minute standing ovation after the orchestra had played two encores. The outburst of acclaim in Moscow's packed Conservatory surpassed anything the orchestra — or Moscow — had ever experienced."

It also helps explain why it is almost impossible to obtain a seat at a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert—and why so many youngsters have their hearts set on becoming Boston Orchestra members.—S.M.



Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Brisbane, Qld.

10 JUN 1960

TOP COMPOSER

Mr. Aaron Copland, guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interviewed during Channel 2's half-hour Spotlight program on Sunday night.

Mr. Copland is one of America's best-known composers.

Spotlight starts at 8.30.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

10 JUN 1960

ON Sunday night, at 8.30, Two will feature an interview with distinguished American composer - conductor Aaron Copland, in Adelaide with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

★ ★

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

11 JUN 1960

—PERSONAL—

The US Ambassador to Australia (Mr. W. J. Sebald) will arrive in Adelaide from Sydney by air this afternoon to attend the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in the Centennial Hall tonight. He will attend a reception to the orchestra given by the US Consul (Mr. J. Ausland) and Mrs. Ausland in the South Australian Hotel tonight.

Mr. D. L. Elix, president of the Metal Industries Association of SA; Mr. H. Skellon, vice-president; Mr. W. G. Gerard, junior vice-president of the Australian Metal Industries Association; Mr. D. S. Yelland, senior industrial adviser of the MIA of SA; and Mr. A. M. Blackburne, secretary, will attend the annual general and executive meetings of the AMIA in Melbourne next week.

Mr. D. F. Wilson, SM, resumed duty at the Adelaide Police Court yesterday after sick leave.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

[illegible] 1960

Conductor

Aaron Copland, the American composer and guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interviewed in "Spotlight" on Channel Two at 8.30 p.m. tomorrow.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

10 JUN 1960

in Adelaide and out

THEY'RE TALKING ABOUT . . . anot[illegible] temporary home fire . . . the strike which caus[illegible] Broadway[illegible] theatres to close . . . two birthdays this [illegible]—Australia's second city, Melbourne, was 125, and Lo[illegible]n's St. Paul's Cathedral was 250 . . . "Ike's" propose[illegible] Japanese tour despite anti-American demonstrations . . [illegible] visit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra . . . will Adelaide get a "pops" season . . . Sammy Davis, jun., whose marriage announcement has caused a racial disturbance .

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

11 JUN 1960

Reception will follow symphony concert

A supper reception at the South Australian Hotel will be a bright finale to the Centennial Hall concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight.

Host and hostess will be the American Consul, Mr. John C. Ausland, and Mrs. Ausland.

Her multi-colored evening skirt will be topped by a bodice of black velvet.

Among guests will be members of the orchestra, the Premier, Sir Thomas Playford, and Lady Playford, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. S. Hargrave, Sir Arthur and Lady Barrett, Sir Lyell and Lady McEwin, Sir Philip and Lady McBride, and Lady Bonython.

Also present will be Mr. and Mrs. John McLeay, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Miller (her corded black sheath frock will be topped by furs), and Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Dawes — she will be cosy in silver fox.

Mrs. Henry Krips, in a green velvet evening ensemble, will be accompanied by her husband, resident conductor of the SA Symphony Orchestra.

Audience

In the enthusiastic audience will be Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Wicks, Mr. and Mrs. David Cornell, Mrs. Arthur Watson, Mrs. Sydney Hamilton, and Mrs. Arnold Moulden.

A black coat over floral silk will be worn by Mrs. J. Albyn Rankine, who will accompany Mrs. Andrew Tennant.

Mrs. J. G. Cornell will wear furs with her full-skirted black taffeta frock.

Taffeta will also be the choice of Mrs. W. A. Scales, whose natural toned frock features an apron skirt.

Together

Together will be Mrs W. C. T. Upton with Mrs. E. C. Bridges, and in a family group will be Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Schomburgk, with their daughter, Miss Pauline Schomburgk, and their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Ian Schomburgk.

Mrs. Charles Symon will be with her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Symon.

Elegant in a black velvet sheath frock and a fur stole will be Mrs. Horace Perkins, present with Dr. Perkins, and others in the throng will be Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Conrad, and Mr. and Mrs. David Liljegren.

Mrs. P. F. Pollnitz will be attractive in royal blue

Coronet

A coronet of plaited tulle and pearls will hold the veil of Miss Judith Martin, when she marries Mr. Alan Kerr in St. Margaret's Church, Woodville, this evening.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Martin, of Woodville, she will wear a classically cut gown of white peau-de-soie.

Long frocks of gold peau-de-soie, and matching bows on their heads, will be worn by bridesmaids, Misses Judith Davis and Heather Martin.

New home

The Rev. and Mrs. George Shaw, who were married in St. Columba's Church, Hawthorn, this morning, will make their future home at Longreach, Queensland.

The bride, formerly Miss Jeanette Gibson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Gibson, of Westbourne Park, wore a long gown of white delustered satin, with a rose-studded train falling from a broad belt.

She was attended by Misses Jennifer Cranston, Faye Hammond, and Lorraine Nowson, in aqua delustred satin.

Flowers

Fresh gardenias, flown from Melbourne, will hold Miss Diane Hagley's veil at her wedding with Mr. John Standish Harvey in St. Columba's Church, Hawthorn, this evening.

Her swiss peau de soie gown is caught up in front with two roses and the train falls from petals of a full-blown rose.

Matrons of honor, Mrs. Charles Warnes, of Woolgangi, Burra, and Mrs. David Trestrail, of Yeelanna, will wear slim gowns of cinnamon silk over apricot silk taffeta. Cognac satin roses trail down the back skirts.

Embossed

Miss Josie Walkley will wear rose-embossed satin when she marries Mr. Dean Woodman in Enfield Methodist Church this afternoon.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Walkley, of Modbury, the bride will be attended by Misses Elisabeth Smith and Jennifer Tucker in gold delustred satin, with sprays of green leaves in their hair.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

FLOWERS from the garden of her home, Eringa, Unley Park, have been used by Mrs. Walter Kidman as decorations for a cocktail party this evening.

More than [illegible] guests will celebrate the birthday of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Sidney Ayers.

Among those invited are Lady Swift, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. S. Hargrave, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Hayward, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Skipper, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Clarke, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Melrose, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Tennant, and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Gooch.

Others congratulating Mrs. Ayers will be Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Milne, Mr. and Mrs. Keith Brougham, Mr. and Mrs. Ross Coles, Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Reid, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Russell, and Mesdames Douglas Murray, R. Burns Cuming, Harold Bickford, and W. W. Jolly.

---

t; Mr.
vicetralian ssociaelland, iser of d Mr. sec-
he anecutive
HIA in k.
SM, re-
Adelaide
ay after

231

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

11 JUN 1960

THE AGE, SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1960

Famous Orchestra Comes To Australia

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the first front-rank American group to visit Australia under the scheme known as the President's Programme, a kind of cultural "Marshall Aid." Apart from the orchestra and its celebrated conductor Charles Munch and associate conductor Richard Burgin, we will have the opportunity to acknowledge America's most famous composer Aaron Copland.

By
"The Age"
Music Critic

THE VISIT, WHICH IS part of the orchestra's 1960 "Far Eastern Tour," is not as long as one could wish. We are to have a meagre seven concerts spread over four capital cities.

The orchestra will finish its Australian tour with a concert at the Melbourne Town Hall (June 13) and the Olympic Swimming pool (June 14).

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is much travelled in time and space since it was founded in 1881 by Henry Lee Higginson, boasting of an imposing array of conductors—such names as Nikisch, Monteux, Koussevitsky, Munch come to mind—and an even more imposing list of first performances—Bach, Honegger, Walton, &c.

The B.S.O.'s first conductor, George Henschel, did not last long, he played too much of this modern stuff—amusingly enough we had a similar situation in Melbourne a few years back—only at that time it was Brahms and Wagner.

Then "Symphony Hall" Boston sported notices over doorways saying, "Exit in case of Brahms," but Henschel did set the trend which has always associated the B.S.O. with contemporary art.

As Charles Munch, its present director, writes:

"Music to exist must be played and who is to play it if we do not? I tell you frankly that it would be easier for us to play only older music just as it would be easier for you as a listener, but if we impose this restriction on ourselves, we should be refusing our obligation to history."

The orchestra's longest-term conductor was Serge Koussevitzky, 1924-49. With him began a new era for the orchestra and the American composer. The world war had seen the end of the long Teutonic domination of music and the most gifted musicians were "Americans in Paris."

A point worth dwelling on, as Munch is celebrated for his great humanism—many stories can be told of his assistance to the underground and his deeds on behalf of French Jewish musicians—he holds the rank of Commander in the Legion of Honor.

In 1948 he visited America with the Orchestra National Francaise, which led to his Boston appointment, and in 1952 he took the B.S.O. on its first tour of Europe, followed by a tour of Russia in 1956.

Of his work he says: "Let no one be astonished, then, that I consider my work a priesthood, not a profession . . . a sacred calling . . . a total self-renunciation and a profound humility."

Though it is obvious that Munch favors the music of Berlioz, Debussy and Ravel, he has nevertheless revealed a surprising range of versatility. There is not a single repetition from one season to the next.

In America orchestras are not State supported; they are a public trust, the property and responsibility of the community they serve.

Such an organisation cannot be built overnight; it takes years of blending before you produce an orchestra of great sensitivity and flexibility which will sound as one instrument.

The B.S.O. gives concerts for 46 weeks a year, broken up into 30 weeks of winter season—nine weeks of concerts by the Boston Pops under Arthur Fiedler and a six-week season at Tanglewood.

This is something like our music camps, but individual tuition is not given, except in compostion.

It is a school of ensemble playing, plus orchestra and choral work, plus opera, with the teaching staff headed by Aaron Copland.

Mr. Copland is rightly called the father of American music and having at one stage been an "American in Paris," he brings to the world of music the sophisticated French technique, plus the angular, exciting rhythms of jazz.

Deeply steeped in American folk lore, his modes are gawky and vivacious and, above all, colored with a laconic sense of humor. Even non-music lovers remember the film Fiesta with joy.

But Copland is not just "America's first great composer"; he has many more activities to his credit—his critical writings, his selfless pioneer work throughout the Western world on behalf of American music.

In addition to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he first conducted in 1957, he has been guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, the National Orchestra in Washington, the St. Louis Symphony, and many others, as well as nearly every major European orchestra.

Speaking of conducting, Mr. Richard Burgin, the assistant conductor of the B.S.O., has been with that orchestra since 1920.

Mr. Burgin was a fellow pupil of Jasha Heifetz, of Leopold Auer, and concert master of the Helsinki and Oslo Symphony until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concert master of the B.S.O.

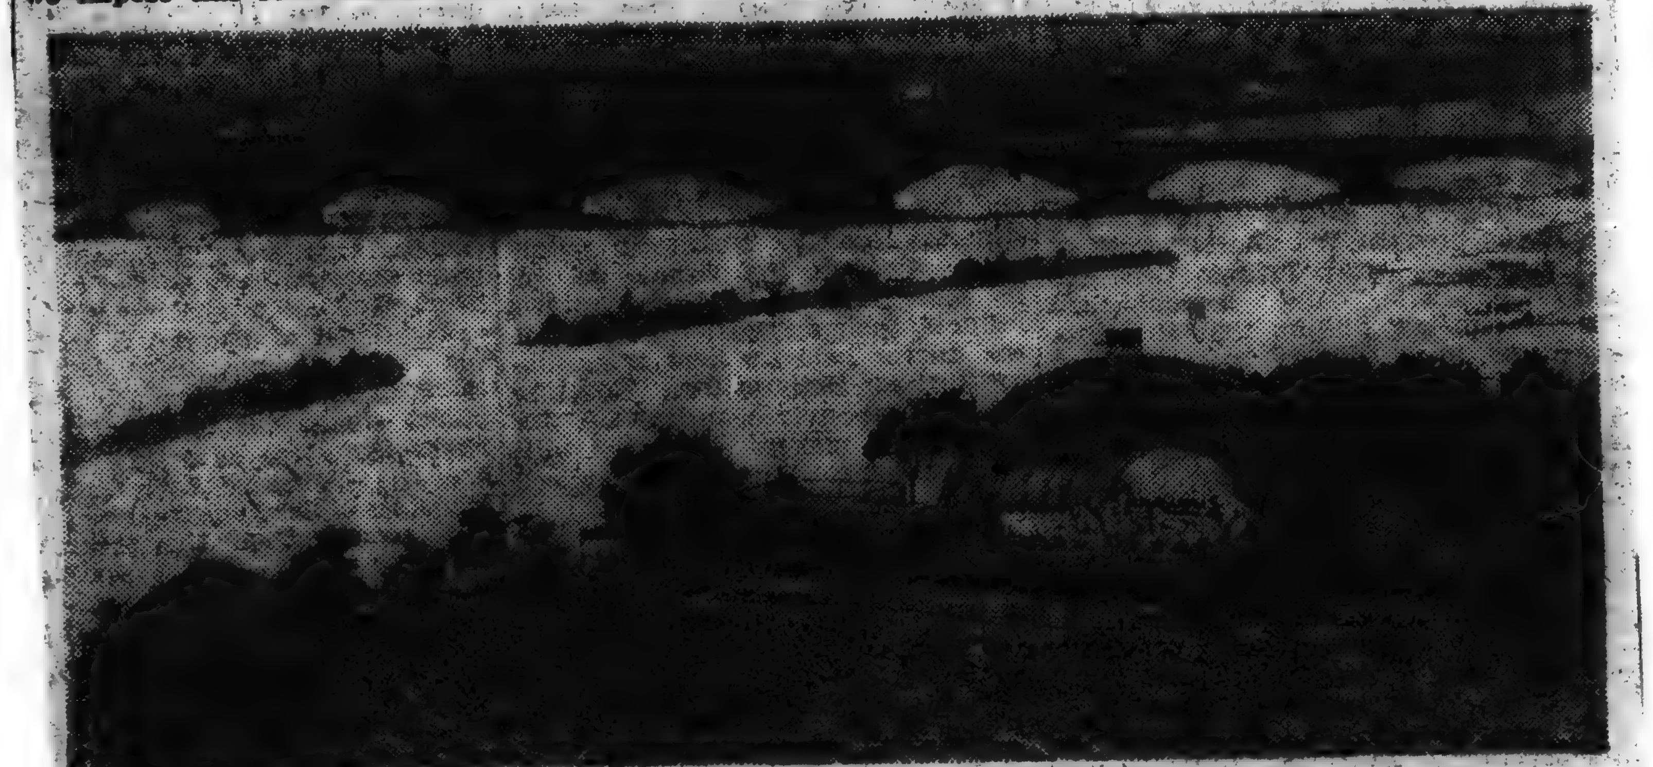
Mr. Burgin usually conducts the B.S.O. for several weeks each season, and on tour introduces or reintroduces many compositions to the orchestra's audiences.

These audiences invariably pack Symphony Hall (capacity 2600), and yet the B.S.O. works at a loss owing to the huge production costs.

Realising this, a society known as "The Friends of the Boston Orchestra" was established to encourage individual contributions, a remarkably successful venture, numbering in the vicinity of 4000 "Friends."

The idea of corporate support for artistic institutions is not yet fully accepted by any means, but more and more businessmen and leaders of the community recognise what such an institution as a symphony orchestra means to the community.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.



A large audience enjoys music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra along the banks of the Charles River. There is no admission charge for these Concerts.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From "WEST AUSTRALIAN"
Perth, W.A.

25 JUN 1960

PERTH missed seeing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but we are getting at least our share of La Societa Corelli which will give three different concerts, covering all composers in its extensive repertoire except Bartok.

The group consists of 12 strings and piano or cembalo, like I Musici, which it replaces for an Australian tour and whose reputation it almost equals. The three concerts will be on July 23, 25 and 27, in the Government House ballroom.

The number of concerts compares interestingly with four in Sydney, two each in Melbourne and Adelaide, and one each in Canberra, Bendigo, Hobart and Brisbane.

The players are passing through Australia and New Zealand on their way to the United States for their fifth tour of that country. An American review: "The tone was consistently lucid and musical, dynamic shading was subtle and wide in range. The concert as a whole gave an unusual sense of joy in performance."

Each programme begins with a Concerto Grosso from the famous Op. 6 group by the society's namesake, Arcangelo Corelli, and each programme also includes a work by Vivaldi.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

9 JUN 1960

Visiting composer at recital

By JOHN SINCLAIR

HISTORY will be made next Sunday afternoon when Aaron Copland, distinguished American composer, conductor, pianist and teacher, will make a special visit to Melbourne to appear as guest of honor at a recital of contemporary music by the Camerata Society.

This is the first time a world-famous composer has visited Australia and so far we seem to have been rather complacent about it.

One would have expected such a man to have been pursued by the ABC for broadcast talks and concerts and by the conservatoriums for master classes in composition. Indeed the American authorities might well have seen that Mr Copland made an adequate number of such appearances.

True, he comes to Australia as guest conductor of the Boston Orchestra (he does not conduct in Melbourne) on a schedule which would not allow him to accept many outside engagements.

Yet with the selflessness which is part of his great reputation he never hesitated in accepting an invitation from a small society when all he knew about it was that it was devoted to the cause of modern music.

It was Margaret Sutherland who invited Mr Copland on the society's behalf and we should be grateful for her initiative.

Next Sunday's recital will be given in the Lyceum Club. The performers will be Sybil Copeland (violin), John Glickman (viola), Henry Wenig ('cello), David Woolley (cor anglais) and Margaret Schofield (piano).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALiAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN-HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

12 JUN 1960

● HOW WE ALL turned out (but not all in our best bibs and tuckers) for the Boston Orchestra.

The Town Hall hardly lends itself to glamour, unless you own mink, but at least it was warmer than the Stadium.

Three concerts, three parties, and the orchestra was gone.

Ah, me!

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MAIL"

Adelaide, S.A.

11 JUN 1960

SUPPER PARTY FOLLOWS CONCERT THRILL

After the thrill of hearing the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Centennial Hall, tonight, many were invited to meet its members at supper in the drawing room of the South Australian Hotel.

Host and hostess were the U.S. Consul in Adelaide, Mr, John C. Ausland, and Mrs. Ausland.

The U.S. Ambassador, Mr. William J. Sebald, flew from Canberra today with the Public Affairs Officer at the Embassy, Mr. Le Van Roberts, to attend the concert and the party.

Among the guests who were received by the ambassador, the consul, and Mrs. Ausland, were the composer-conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Aaron Copland; the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Mr. McLeay, and Mrs. McLeay; the Premier, Sir Thomas Playford, and Lady Playford; the Chief Secretary, Sir Lyell McEwin, and Lady McEwin; the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, Mr. and Mrs. Hargrave; Sir Philip and Lady McBride, Sir Arthur and Lady Barrett, Lady Bonython, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Dawes, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Basten, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. M. Boswell, Prof. and Mrs. John Bishop, Prof. and Mrs. J. G. Cornell, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Krips, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Miller, and Mr. A. A. West.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MAIL"

Adelaide, S.A.

JUN 1960

VERSATILITY OF BOSTONIANS

What's new on records

By JAMES GLENNON

To coincide with the Adelaide visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, RCA has issued further records of this famous 100-strong orchestra, also its associate "pops" orchestra.

THE FRENCH TOUCH. Boston S.O. (Chas. Munch), L 16227 (57/6). VIOLIN CONCERTOS: E MINOR (Mendelssohn) and No. 2 in G MINOR (Prokofieff) with Jascha Heifetz, L 1622 (57/6). MUSICAL HISTORY OF BOSTON SYMPHONY AND "POPS", SP-12 (15/6). "STARS AND STRIPES" AND "CAKEWALK", MARCHES IN HI-FI, Boston "Pops" L 16228/9 (57/6 each).

The "French Touch" allows the Bostonians to prove their versatility in "Sorcerer's Apprentice" (Dukas), "Omphale's Spinning Wheel" (Saint-Saens) and "Mother Goose Suite" (Ravel).

Here we have splendid playing from a superbly balanced group of musicians in authentic recorded sound.

SP-12 tells the story of the Boston and "pops" orchestras.

In the Prokofieff we hear the golden phrasing of Heifetz, his tastefully managed portamento, the emotional "push" on certain notes in the lyric passages, his unfailing technique. His brilliant account of the Mendelssohn will please many. The Boston Symphony Orchestra supports warmly and reproduction is vivid.

The Ballet Suites "Stars and Stripes" and "Cakewalk," by Hershy Kay "after" music by Sousa and Gottschalk, and a selection of marches from Beethoven to Gershwin are played with spirit by the "pops" orchestra under Arthur Fiedler.

OPERA INTERMEZZI. Philharmonia Orch. (H. von Karajan). Columbia 330 CX 7516 (57/6).

This record covers a fairly wide range of operatic orchestral music: "Manon Lescaut," "La Traviata," "I Pagliacci," "L'Amico Fritz," "Notre Dame," "Khovantschina," "Goyescas," "The Trojans" (Royal Hunt and Storm) and "Tales of Hoffmann" (Barcarolle).

Karajan achieves an emotional warmth in all, with especially fine playing in the Berlioz.

Reproduction is excellent.

THE CHURCH SINGS. Coral CL-7646 (55/-).

Fifteen hymns and anthems are sung with sincerity by the Westminster Choir of the First Presbyterian Church, San Diego, California.

Well balanced singing has recorded well.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

11 JUN 1960

THE opening Melbourne concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast from 5AN at 8.30 p.m. on Monday. Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the orchestra, will conduct.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in its final Australian concert on Tuesday at the Melbourne Olympic Stadium.

This concert, which will be heard from 5AN at 8.45 p.m., will include "Variations," "Chaconne" and "Finale" (Dello Joio) and the suite, "Bacchus and Ariadne" (Roussel).

2 33

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

1 3 JUN 1960

Conducted by MARGARET BRENTON

AT BOSTON CONCERT

MR. PETER KELLY and Miss Mary MacKay at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Centennial Hall.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

11 JUN 1960

THE WEEK IN RADIO

THE RADIO EVENT OF the week was, of course, Tuesday night's broadcast from Sydney of the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Dr. Charles Munch in the Fantastic Symphony of Hector Berlioz.

The ABC has led music lovers to a high pitch of excitement in its various forecasts of what the orchestra can and does do so that even the most hardened listener must have been on his toes in an unusual state of expectation. In that state the realisation can be groans of disappointment or a crowning beatitude.

We were not disappointed. We have been hearing this fantastic symphony from various sources over the years and in various ways chiefly from recordings most of which fell short of what was expected.

I would say that this version by the Boston Symphony Orchestra topped the lot.

And those bells in the scene of the Witches' Sabbath! Real bells—specifically procured by the conductor for this movement. I have heard them elsewhere like gongs and sometimes a little out of tune, but never before like this. How lovely and clear and tuneful!

The post office technicians did a sterling job on the relay. I have criticised them often, but I am glad, on this occasion, to praise instead.

At the Melbourne end we had the Victorian Orchestra under the visiting French conductor, Georges Tzipine, in French music. Saturday night brought us the Chausson Symphony, which I have always held in tender regard. It is first-class audience music, and we were given an excellent performance. I can only recall one previous broadcast of it in a night programme, and that was a good many years ago.

Mr. Tzipine also gave us in the other half of this concert, broadcast on Monday, Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2 which appears to be about the most popular of this composer's works, along with Debussy's Apres Midi and the Suite in F by Roussel. These were marked by fine orchestral playing.

The week produced three violin sonatas which are seldom played. One came from violinist Dorcas McClean with pianist Carl Bartling as collaborator. This was by Dvorak. It is not represented in the record catalogue, but like all Dvorak, it was easy to take. This violinist can always be relied on to give an impeccable performance and Mr. Bartling, who is constantly before us as accompanist in choral and other work, was an excellent collaborator.

On Sunday night the Music Lovers' Hour gave us the Grieg Violin Sonata No. 3 from record (Josef Fuchs and pianist Frank Sheridan). This happy music was followed on Tuesday night by Campoli broadcasting from Ballarat the Op. 30, No. 2, of Beethoven. It was a very lovely performance.

It was a full week for music, much of which must go unmentioned, but I must comment on a short session at 6.30 on Sunday night, when soprano Joan Dargavel sang with Raymond Lambert as accompanist, and Thomas White clarinettist, Schubert's exquisite Shepherd on the Rock. The mention is for Miss Dargarvel, of whom I don't seem to have heard previously and whose voice quality and technique show promise.

On Sunday afternoon I had to listen to the first half of Richard Strauss's opera Ariadne auf Naxos, maybe just for the delight of hearing such lovely voices as Elizabeth Schwarzkopf, Irmgard Seefried and Rita Streich. If you listen next Sunday afternoon at 2 you will hear the last-named in Zerbinetta's aria and that is something.

— By ARIEL

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TELEGRAPH"

Sydney, N.S.W.

3 JUN 1960

"Jazz idiom in serious music"

A considerable school of serious symphonic writers and composers in the United States was using the jazz idiom in their music, composer Aaron Copland said last night.

Mr. Copland, who arrived in Australia last week as associate conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was speaking on the A.B.C.'s Guest of Honor programme.

The musicians included Walter Piston, Virgil Thomson, Roy Harris, William Schuman and Samuel Barber.

"They constitute a serious school rather than a jazz school of composers," Mr. Copland said.

Mr. Copland said jazz in its orchestration leaned heavily on the rhythm section of the drums and the piano and on the dry sound of the double bass pizzicato without any string sonorities.

"By combining these elements the jazz band produced a different kind of orchestral sound which has been a direct influence on the more serious composers," he said.

Speaking of the development of progressive jazz, Mr. Copland said composers in this idiom were writing music very close to serious music.

"They write music which is not at all meant to be danced to, but merely to be listened to," he said.

Musicians in this school were well-trained by serious composers and were familiar with the works of Stravinsky, Schonberg and Ravel and the latest contemporary composers.

"One of the most gifted of the newer musicians, with wide training in jazz and serious idioms was Gunther Schuler," Mr. Copland said.

"He is particularly anxious to get serious musicians to improvise in the same way that the jazz musician improvises," he said.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

13 JUN 1960

A PRESENTATION of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, at the opening Melbourne concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is broadcast over 3LO at 9 tonight.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

13 JUN 1960

Orchestra At McLaren Vale

The chairman of the SA Symphony Orchestra Committee (Mr. M. A. F. Pearce) said yesterday that a day spent by 80 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at McLaren Vale would be "wonderful publicity" for SA.

Members of the orchestra were taken on an inspection of the Tintara wine cellars yesterday and were served a barbecue luncheon.

There was a crowded house of more than 3,000 at the orchestra's only Adelaide concert in the Centennial Hall on Saturday night.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

13 JUN 1960

INFLUENCE OF JAZZ ON SERIOUS MUSIC

Many different kinds of contemporary composers had been interested in using American jazz in their own music, Mr Aaron Copland said yesterday.

The noted American composer, who is touring Australia as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was speaking on the A.B.C. Guest of Honour program.

He said it might appear that the relationship of jazz and serious music was a curious juxtaposition of two things that did not really belong together.

Never Tampered With Jazz

History had shown, however, a tendency for serious composers to be influenced by the "popular" music of the day.

"That is certainly true of our own day," he added.

The fact that jazz was so characteristic of "popular" music had made easier for serious composers to take hold of it in different ways and use it in their own music.

"It is a curious thing that certain of our serious composers have never in any way tampered with jazz.

"I can think of no instance of Richard Strauss or Arnold Schonberg or Manuel De Falla or, perhaps, Roger Sessions, the American composer, having had anything to do with the jazz idiom.

"On the other hand, composers like Debussy in some of his piano works, or Stravinsky around 1918, in the rag-time for 11 instruments and the piano rag music, used jazz in those early days."

Mr Copland said that perhaps the finest example of the European composer using the American jazz idiom was the ballet "Creation of the World" by Darius Milhaud.

An Unconscious Awareness

He said the ballet made typical and excellent use of jazz materials, including the kind of "barber-shop harmonies and blue notes that were so typical of that time."

Outside the United States there was a tendency to imagine that jazz was the only music Americans possessed.

But America had developed a considerable school of serious symphonic writers and composers such as Walter Piston, Virgil Thompson, Roy Harris, William Schuman and Samuel Barber.

All had been aware of the jazz element and had sometimes used its rhythms and melodies in an unconscious way in their music.

"But they, nevertheless, constitute a serious school rather than a jazz school of composers."

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

16 JUN 1960

GISBORNE HERALD
(Gisborne)
Circulation approx. 11,500
Auckland Province (South)

ORCHESTRA ARRIVES

Wellington Airport became a trans-Tasman terminal for the first time when three chartered airliners, two DC6's and a DC4, arrived from Melbourne with members and equipment of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The charter was a joint operation of a number of airlines.—P.A.

N 1960

SOUTHLAND DAILY NEWS
(Invercargill)
Circulation approx. 12,500
Southland Province.

ORCHESTRA LEAVES: The members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left Whenuapai this morning in two chartered aircraft on their homeward flight to the United States, after their successful round-the-Pacific 36-concert tour. An aircraft carrying their instruments took off several hours beforehand.—Auckland.

Bostonians Leave

AUCKLAND, Sat. (P.A.) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra left Whenuapai for home this morning in two chartered aircraft after its successful round-the-Pacific 36-concert tour.

An aircraft carrying the instruments took off several hours beforehand.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"EXAMINER"

Launceston, Tas.

16 JUN 1960

Orchestra has "tiny" mascot

● HERE'S the Boston Symphony Orchestra's mascot—24 stone-plus Leslie ("Tiny") Martin. "Tiny" plays the double bass and has been with the orchestra for three years. "Say, don't believe those tall stories about my appetite—some of these other fellows in the orchestra could put me to shame," rumbled Leslie when he was interviewed at breakfast in his hotel room in Melbourne. Leslie said he took up the double bass not because he was a big man, but because his father played one.

SUNDAY TELEGRAPH, JUNE 12, 1960 69

PAMELA'S WEEKLY LETTER

[illegible] dear, [illegible] can't possibly describe the musical feast we've had with the Boston Sym. Orch. in our midst. Excitement culminated on the final night for U.S. Ambas. William Sebald's (Mrs. S. unable to come down the last moment) large party of V.I.Ps. whom he had invited to the concert and a party at the newly decorated U.S. official Sydney residence, "[illegible]," afterwards. Acting C.G. and Mrs. Orray Taft received. Among those who enjoyed a lobster Newburg and American chicken pie around a blazing log fire were the three conductors. C. Justice and Mrs. Evatt, Premier and Mrs. Heffron, Lady Lloyd Jones and the Nicolai Malko's.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From 15 JUN 1960

"BULLETIN,"

Sydney, N.S.W.

June 15, 1960

SYDNEY

Such goings-on as there were in Sydney during the week! Nearly everyone at all the parties had just "come-on" from somewhere or was going-on to somewhere else. It wasn't only that there were such a number of things to attend but that really it takes more than one engagement these days to justify the worries attached to transport and parking.

☆ ☆ ☆

The presence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in town was the main cause of all this transience, however. Those party-goers who had come-on from the Stadium concert looked as if they had come-on from the South Pole. Even the orchestra wore overcoats! Wise peope who attend concerts at the Stadium provide themselves with rugs and cushions. South Pole-sitting can be so arduous.

The sooner that Opera House gets itself built the better for this city. When one hears that the new County Council building at the corner of Bathurst Street is to cost £3 million, the price of the Opera House seems quite moderate. This week's doings showed many music-lovers more forcibly than ever that even the Town Hall is unsuitable for such an orchestra as the Boston Symhpony. Those in the front rows were almost blown away by the sheer volume of sound.

☆ ☆ ☆

A brilliant effect was achieved at the Harlequin Ball in aid of the Mater Misericordiæ Hospital, held at the Trocadero during the week. The gay decor, in which a circus motif predominated, was aided by the freer arrangement of the tables which quite escaped the usual "boarding-school" formality and created an atmosphere of space and graciousness.

Mrs. Tom Bateman, with Dr. Bateman, received as guests-of-honor the Governor and Lady Woodward (who had come on from the first half of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Stadium), and were accompanied by their son and daughter Edmund and Rosalind. The judges of the most beautiful dress, not black or white, were Mrs. Bruce McFarlan, Mrs. Stella Fraenkel and Mr. George Molnar, their choice falling on the Grecian-draped dress of silver lamé worn by Mrs. Bob McInerney.

Several honors fell on the party hostessed by Mrs. C. P. Rudwick, as her candle-lit arrangement of frosted-grapes and gilded-leaves won her first-prize for the best-decorated table, while three of her guests—Mrs. Denis O'Neil, Mrs. Frank Kenny (Bathurst) and Mrs. C. Greiner (Killara) — were among the finalists for the most beautiful dress, second place going to Mrs. Greiner for her elegantly-draped sheath in silk-jersey.

☆ ☆ ☆

234

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"MORNING HERALD"
Sydney, N.S.W.

1 3 JUN 1960

INFLUENCE OF JAZZ ON SERIOUS MUSIC

Many different kinds of contemporary composers had been interested in using American jazz in their own music, Mr Aaron Copland said yesterday.

The noted American composer, who is touring Australia as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was speaking on the A.B.C. Guest of Honour program.

He said it might appear that the relationship of jazz and serious music was a curious juxtaposition of two things that did not really belong together.

Never Tampered With Jazz

History had shown, however, a tendency for serious composers to be influenced by the "popular" music of the day.

"That is certainly true of our own day," he added.

The fact that jazz was so characteristic of "popular" music had made easier for serious composers to take hold of it in different ways and use it in their own music.

"It is a curious thing that certain of our serious composers have never in any way tampered with jazz.

"I can think of no instance of Richard Strauss or Arnold Schonberg or Manuel De Falla or, perhaps, Roger Sessions, the American composer, having had anything to do with the jazz idiom.

"On the other hand, composers like Debussy in some of his piano works, or Stravinsky around 1918, in the rag-time for 11 instruments and the piano rag music, used jazz in those early days."

Mr Copland said that perhaps the finest example of the European composer using the American jazz idiom was the ballet "Creation of the World" by Darius Milhaud.

An Unconscious Awareness

He said the ballet made typical and excellent use of jazz materials, including the kind of "barber-shop harmonies and blue notes that were so typical of that time."

Outside the United States there was a tendency to imagine that jazz was the only music Americans possessed.

But America had developed a considerable school of serious symphonic writers and composers such as Walter Piston, Virgil Thompson, Roy Harris, William Schuman and Samuel Barber.

All had been aware of the jazz element and had sometimes used its rhythms and melodies in an unconscious way in their music.

"But they, nevertheless, constitute a serious school rather than a jazz school of composers."

SUNDAY TELEGRAPH, JUNE 12, 1960 69

PAMELA'S
WEEKLY
LETTER

[illegible] dear, [illegible] can't possibly describe the musical treat we've had with the Boston Sym. Orch. in our midst. Excitement culminated on the final night for U.S. Ambas. William Sebald's (Mrs. S. unable to come down the last moment) large party of V.I.Ps. whom he had invited to the concert and a party at the newly decorated U.S. official Sydney residence, "Craigend," afterwards. Acting C.G. and Mrs. Orray Taft received. Among those who enjoyed a lobster Newburg and American chicken pie around a blazing log fire were the three conductors. C. Justice and Mrs. Evatt, Premier and Mrs. Heffron, Lady Lloyd Jones and the Nicolai Malko's [illegible]

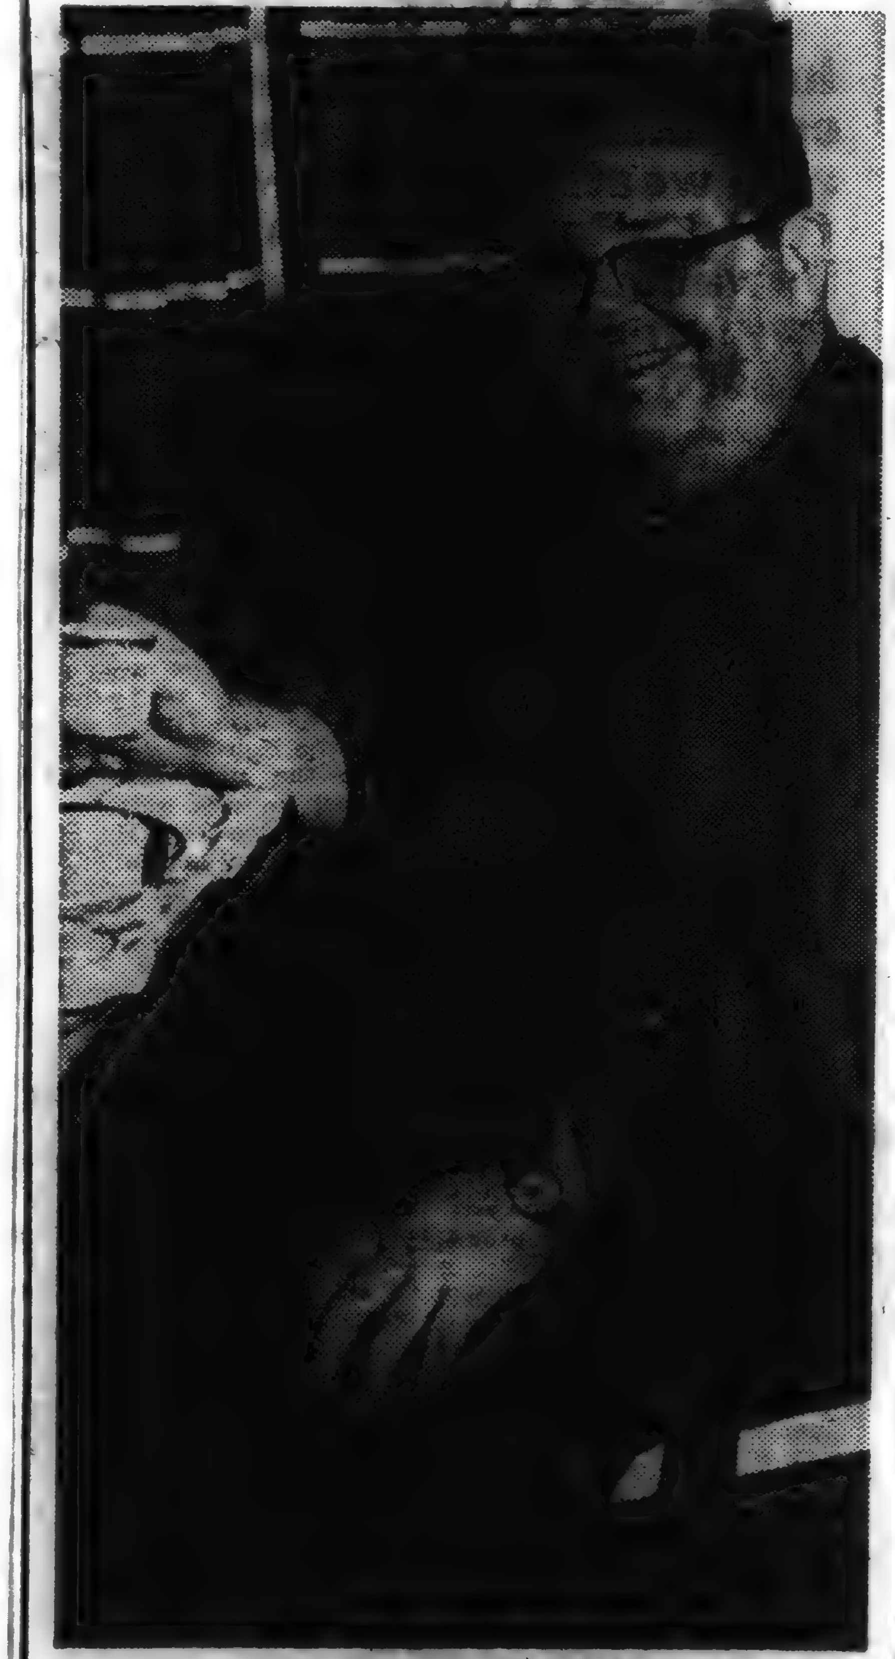
Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"EXAMINER"
Launceston, Tas.

1 6 JUN 1960

Orchestra has "tiny" mascot



● HERE'S the Boston Symphony Orchestra's mascot—24 stone-plus Leslie ("Tiny") Martin. "Tiny" plays the double bass and has been with the orchestra for three years. "Say, don't believe these tall stories about my appetite—some of these other fellows in the orchestra could put me to shame," rumbled Leslie when he was interviewed at breakfast in his hotel room in Melbourne. Leslie said he took up the double bass not because he was a big man, but because his father played one.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings
Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From 1 5 JUN 1960

"BULLETIN,"
Sydney, N.S.W.

June 15, 1960

SYDNEY

Such goings-on as there were in Sydney during the week! Nearly everyone at all the parties had just "come-on" from somewhere or was going-on to somewhere else. It wasn't only that there were such a number of things to attend but that really it takes more than one engagement these days to justify the worries attached to transport and parking.

☆ ☆ ☆

The presence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in town was the main cause of all this transience, however. Those party-goers who had come-on from the Stadium concert looked as if they had come-on from the South Pole. Even the orchestra wore overcoats! Wise peope who attend concerts at the Stadium provide themselves with rugs and cushions. South Pole-sitting can be so arduous.

The sooner that Opera House gets itself built the better for this city. When one hears that the new County Council building at the corner of Bathurst Street is to cost £3 million, the price of the Opera House seems quite moderate. This week's doings showed many music-lovers more forcibly than ever that even the Town Hall is unsuitable for such an orchestra as the Boston Symhpony. Those in the front rows were almost blown away by the sheer volume of sound.

☆ ☆ ☆

A brilliant effect was achieved at the Harlequin Ball in aid of the Mater Misericordiæ Hospital, held at the Trocadero during the week. The gay decor, in which a circus motif predominated, was aided by the freer arrangement of the tables which quite escaped the usual "boarding-school" formality and created an atmosphere of space and graciousness.

Mrs. Tom Bateman, with Dr. Bateman, received as guests-of-honor the Governor and Lady Woodward (who had come on from the first half of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Stadium), and were accompanied by their son and daughter Edmund and Rosalind. The judges of the most beautiful dress, not black or white, were Mrs. Bruce McFarlan, Mrs. Stella Fraenkel and Mr. George Molnar, their choice falling on the Grecian-draped dress of silver lamé worn by Mrs. Bob McInerney.

Several honors fell on the party hostessed by Mrs. C. P. Rudwick, as her candle-lit arrangement of frosted-grapes and gilded-leaves won her first-prize for the best-decorated table, while three of her guests—Mrs. Denis O'Neil, Mrs. Frank Kenny (Bathurst) and Mrs. C. Greiner (Killara) — were among the finalists for the most beautiful dress, second place going to Mrs. Greiner for her elegantly-draped sheath in silk-jersey.

☆ ☆ ☆

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings
Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

18 JUN 1960
SOUTHLAND DAILY NEWS
(Invercargill)
Circulation approx. 12,500
Southland Province.

ORCHESTRA LEAVES: The members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra left Whenuapai this morning in two chartered aircraft on their homeward flight to the United States, after their successful round-the-Pacific 36-concert tour. An aircraft carrying their instruments took off several hours beforehand.—Auckland.

Bostonians Leave

AUCKLAND, Sat. (P.A.) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra left Whenuapai for home this morning in two chartered aircraft after its successful round-the-Pacific 36-concert tour.

An aircraft carrying the instruments took off several hours beforehand.

234

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MORNING HERALD"

Sydney, N.S.W.

1 3 JUN 1960

INFLUENCE OF JAZZ ON SERIOUS MUSIC

Many different kinds of contemporary composers had been interested in using American jazz in their own music, Mr Aaron Copland said yesterday.

The noted American composer, who is touring Australia as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was speaking on the A.B.C. Guest of Honour program.

He said it might appear that the relationship of jazz and serious music was a curious juxtaposition of two things that did not really belong together.

Never Tampered With Jazz

History had shown, however, a tendency for serious composers to be influenced by the "popular" music of the day.

"That is certainly true of our own day," he added.

The fact that jazz was so characteristic of "popular" music had made it easier for serious composers to take hold of it in different ways and use it in their own music.

"It is a curious thing that certain of our serious composers have never in any way tampered with jazz.

"I can think of no instance of Richard Strauss or Arnold Schonberg or Manuel De Falla or, perhaps, Roger Sessions, the American composer, having had anything to do with the jazz idiom.

"On the other hand, composers like Debussy in some of his piano works, or Stravinsky around 1918, in the rag-time for 11 instruments and the piano rag music, used jazz in those early days."

Mr Copland said that perhaps the finest example of the European composer using the American jazz idiom was the ballet "Creation of the World" by Darius Milhaud.

An Unconscious Awareness

He said the ballet made typical and excellent use of jazz materials, including the kind of "barber-shop harmonies and blue notes that were so typical of that time."

Outside the United States there was a tendency to imagine that jazz was the only music Americans possessed.

But America had developed a considerable school of serious symphonic writers and composers such as Walter Piston, Virgil Thompson, Roy Harris, William Schuman and Samuel Barber.

All had been aware of the jazz element and had sometimes used its rhythms and melodies in an unconscious way in their music.

"But they, nevertheless, constitute a serious school rather than a jazz school of composers."

SUNDAY TELEGRAPH, JUNE 12, 1960 69

PAMELA'S WEEKLY LETTER

[illegible] dear, [illegible] can't possibly describe the musical treat we've had with the Boston Sym. Orch. in our midst. Excitement culminated on the final night for U.S. Ambas. William Sebald's (Mrs. S. unable to come down the last moment) large party of V.I.Ps. whom he had invited to the concert and a party at the newly decorated U.S. official Sydney residence, "[illegible]," afterwards. Acting C.G. and Mrs. [illegible] Tait received. Among those who enjoyed a lobster Newburg and American chicken pie around a blazing log fire were the three conductors, C. Justice and Mrs. Evatt, Premier and Mrs. Heffron, Lady Lloyd Jones and the Nicolai Malko's.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

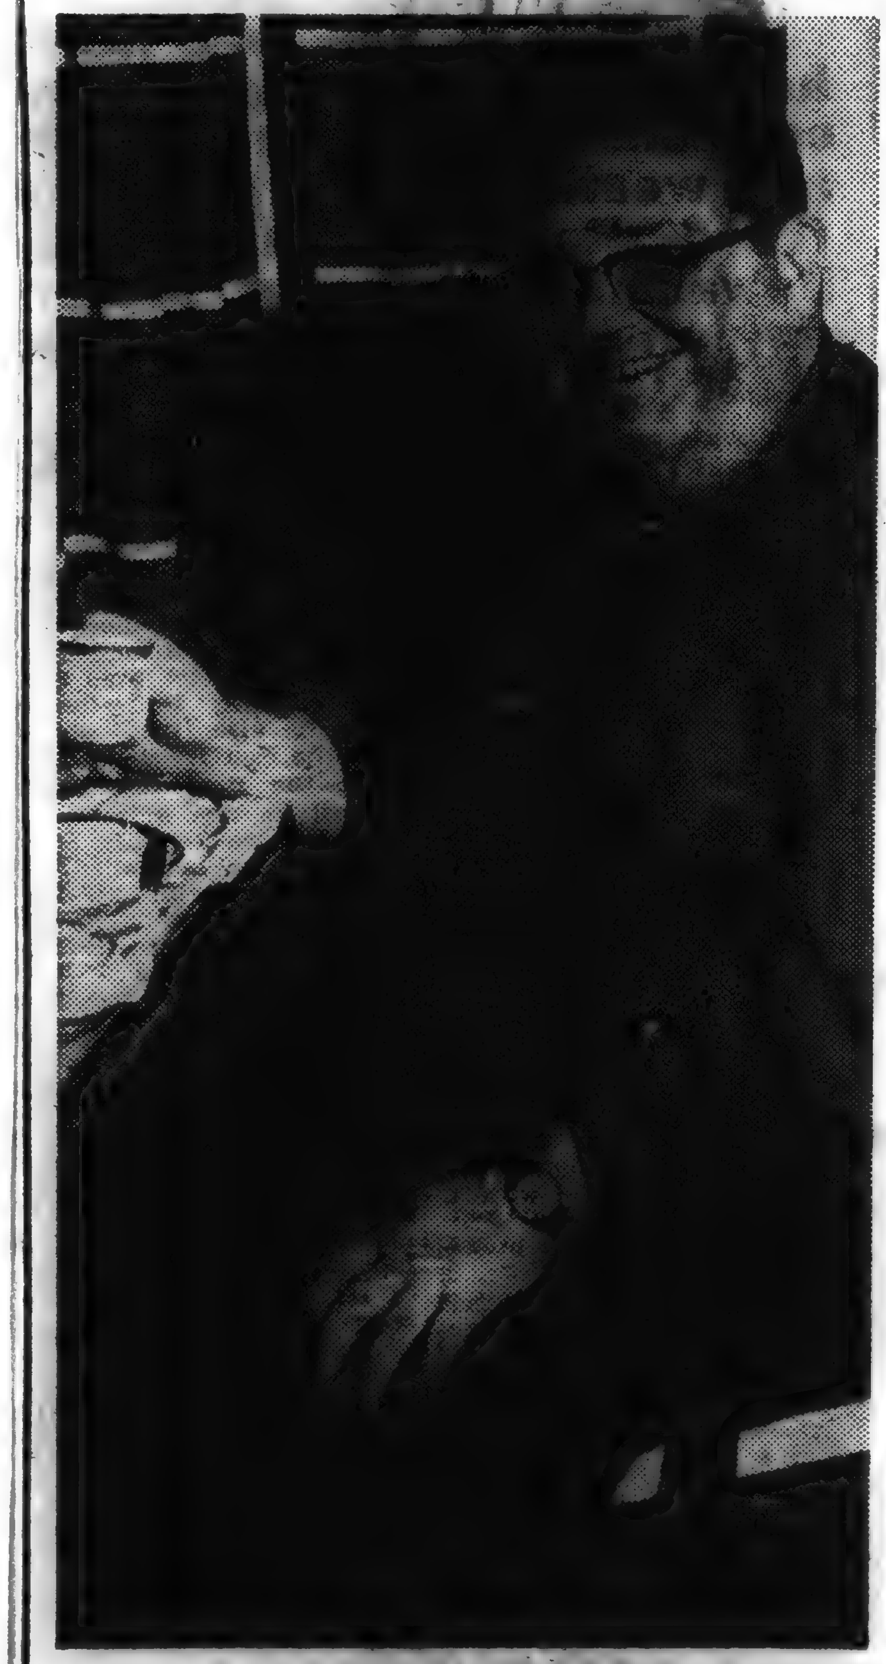
From

"EXAMINER"

Launceston, Tas.

1 6 JUN 1960

Orchestra has "tiny" mascot



● HERE'S the Boston Symphony Orchestra's mascot—24 stone-plus Leslie ("Tiny") Martin. "Tiny" plays the double bass and has been with the orchestra for three years. "Say, don't believe those [illegible] stories about my appetite—some of these other fellows in the orchestra could put me to shame," rumbled Leslie when he was interviewed at breakfast in his hotel room in Melbourne. Leslie said he took up the double bass not because he was a big man, but because his father played one.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From 1 5 JUN 1960

"BULLETIN,"

Sydney, N.S.W.

June 15, 1960

SYDNEY

Such goings-on as there were in Sydney during the week! Nearly everyone at all the parties had just "come-on" from somewhere or was going-on to somewhere else. It wasn't only that there were such a number of things to attend but that really it takes more than one engagement these days to justify the worries attached to transport and parking.

☆ ☆ ☆

The presence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in town was the main cause of all this transience, however. Those party-goers who had come-on from the Stadium concert looked as if they had come-on from the South Pole. Even the orchestra wore overcoats! Wise peope who attend concerts at the Stadium provide themselves with rugs and cushions. South Pole-sitting can be so arduous.

The sooner that Opera House gets itself built the better for this city. When one hears that the new County Council building at the corner of Bathurst Street is to cost £3 million, the price of the Opera House seems quite moderate. This week's doings showed many music-lovers more forcibly than ever that even the Town Hall is unsuitable for such an orchestra as the Boston Symhpony. Those in the front rows were almost blown away by the sheer volume of sound.

☆ ☆ ☆

A brilliant effect was achieved at the Harlequin Ball in aid of the Mater Misericordiæ Hospital, held at the Trocadero during the week. The gay decor, in which a circus motif predominated, was aided by the freer arrangement of the tables which quite escaped the usual "boarding-school" formality and created an atmosphere of space and graciousness.

Mrs. Tom Bateman, with Dr. Bateman, received as guests-of-honor the Governor and Lady Woodward (who had come on from the first half of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at the Stadium), and were accompanied by their son and daughter Edmund and Rosalind. The judges of the most beautiful dress, not black or white, were Mrs. Bruce McFarlan, Mrs. Stella Fraenkel and Mr. George Molnar, their choice falling on the Grecian-draped dress of silver lamé worn by Mrs. Bob McInerney.

Several honors fell on the party hostessed by Mrs. C. P. Rudwick, as her candle-lit arrangement of frosted-grapes and gilded-leaves won her first-prize for the best-decorated table, while three of her guests—Mrs. Denis O'Neil, Mrs. Frank Kenny (Bathurst) and Mrs. C. Greiner (Killara) — were among the finalists for the most beautiful dress, second place going to Mrs. Greiner for her elegantly-draped sheath in silk jersey.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Au tings

Miles, of Melbourne (Norton), K. in the first lap; P. Pawson, of New Zealand, (A.J.S.), at the end of the third lap, and H. Anderson, of New Zealand (Norton), in the fourth lap. Surtees now leads the world

---

ne: MU 5133

UTTINGS

laide, S.A.

tra aren e an of the y Orches-
e (Mr. M. said yester-
ay spent by the Boston
rchestra at e would be ublicity" for the orchestra
on an inspec-
Tintara wine
rday and were barbecue luna crowded than 3,000 at a's only Adein the Cen-
on Saturday

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

ttings

WHITCOMBE & TOMBS LIMITED

Subscriptions are available at 26/- yearly — 31/5 yearly posted at the Magazine Department,

---

Melbourne, Victoria.

18 JUN 1960

NORTHERN ADVOCATE

(Whangarei)

Circulation approx. 10,100

Auckland Province (North)

Bostonians Leave

AUCKLAND, Sat. (P.A.) —The Boston Symphony Orchestra left Whenuapai for home this morning in two chartered aircraft after its successful round-the-Pacific 36-concert tour.

An aircraft carrying the instruments took off several hours beforehand.

235

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

13 JUN 1960

TONIGHT Melbourne will hand Boston an I O U, and there is at least one Bostonian in town who will not let us forget the debt until it is repaid.

He is Mr. Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Town Hall tonight.

"After all," Mr. Burgin told us yesterday, "we are here on a cultural exchange visit, and exchange implies reciprocation.

"We want an Australian orchestra to come to the United States."

Mr. Burgin, who has been with the B.S.O. for 40 years, first as concert master and for the past 33 years as associate conductor, suggested that a composite orchestra, chosen from the best players in the Sydney and Victorian orchestras, might make an overseas tour.

In the slightly guilty tone of a man who has been been given the drum on what to say to raise a laugh, Mr. Burgin said there might be a bit of rivalry between Sydney and Melbourne in choosing the players to go on tour.

"You would have to have at least 80 or 90," he said, "or they wouldn't be heard in the bigger concert halls."

Curiosity

ON the question of whether an Australian orchestra could attract American audiences, Mr. Burgin said, without, we are sure, any intention of being uncharitable: "Well, there's always the element of curiosity at first."

He does think, though, that it would be a wonderful experience for Australian musicians to see how a different audience reacted to them.

"We have this experience in America," he said, "because orchestras regularly give concerts in other cities that have their own resident orchestras. We go to Chicago and Philadelphia, for instance."

Mr. Burgin has not been here long enough to be sure which people he should speak to, but he promised to do a [illegible] propaganda job with his suggestion that our musicians should tour [illegible].

And he had a word of comfort for the Australian Broadcasting Commission, which has been trying so unsuccessfully to engage a resident conductor for the Victorian Symphony Orchestra.

"That must be easy," he said, "when you have a fine body of players."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

3 JUN 1960

Recital a great success

by JOHN SINCLAIR,
The Herald Music Critic

Yesterday afternoon's recital by the Camerata Society in the Lyceum Club gave Melbourne its only chance to meet Aaron Copland and gave Mr Copland his only glimpse of creative and interpretive music in this city.

Mr Copland, the most distinguished living American composer, is in Australia to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in performances of his own works — but he will not do so in Melbourne.

Yesterday's recital was historic, and also a hands-down musical success.

The program consisted of three works — Margaret Sutherland's very attractive Quartet for Cor Anglais and Strings, Noel Nickson's somewhat - austere but finely-written Sonata for Violin and Viola, and Aaron Copland's Quartet for Piano and Strings, a delightful and finely-textured work written with the inventiveness, skill and discipline of a master.

The program was played, it seemed to me flawlessly, y Sybil Copeland (violin), ohn Glickman (viola), enry Wenig ('cello), vid Woolley (cor ang-) and Margaret Scho- (piano).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

14 JUN 1960

BOSTON CONCERT ON TWO

Tonight should prove whether Melbourne's Olympic Pool is suited acoustically for symphony concerts.

Television viewers will be able to form their own opinion when Channel TWO will telecast part of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at 7.55 o'clock.

Two sisters are members of the orchestra, which will be conducted by Dr Charles Munch.

They are flautist Miss Lois Schaefer and 'cellist Mrs Winifred Winograd.

Miss Schaefer is the first flute in the orchestra at New York's City Centre Opera Company. She was invited by Dr Munch to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra on tour.

Mrs Winograd in 1957 became the first woman string [illegible] to be engaged by [illegible] orchestra.

For the [illegible] telecast, the [illegible] will play "Symphonie Fantastique" by Berlioz.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

14 JUN 1960

THE final Australian concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Olympic Swimming Stadium tonight is broadcast by 3LO at 9.15. The program includes the suite "Bacchus and Ariadne," by Roussel, and is conducted by Charles Munch.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

14 JUN 1960

● Sweet, dry

IT'S just an old Polish custom, according to Boston Symphony Orchestra bass player John Barwicki, himself of Polish descent.

At the Tintara barbecue luncheon for the orchestra at the weekend, he mixed for himself a draught of three parts of the dry white wine Riesling with one part of the red sweetness of port.

He explained to the locals who had never seen it before that it was a favorite tipple in Poland because it took a little of the dryness from the white wine and made it a palatable beverage for the medium taste.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

13 JUN 1960

TONIGHT Melbourne will hand Boston an I O U, and there is at least one Bostonian in town who will not let us forget the debt until it is repaid.

He is Mr. Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Town Hall tonight.

"After all," Mr. Burgin told us yesterday, "we are here on a cultural exchange visit, and exchange implies reciprocation.

"We want an Australian orchestra to come to the United States."

Mr. Burgin, who has been with the B.S.O. for 40 years, first as concert master and for the past 33 years as associate conductor, suggested that a composite orchestra, chosen from the best players in the Sydney and Victorian orchestras, might make an overseas tour.

In the slightly guilty tone of a man who has been been given the drum on what to say to raise a laugh, Mr. Burgin said there might be a bit of rivalry between Sydney and Melbourne in choosing the players to go on tour.

"You would have to have at least 80 or 90," he said, "or they wouldn't be heard in the bigger concert halls."

Curiosity

ON the question of whether an Australian orchestra could attract American audiences, Mr. Burgin said, without, we are sure, any intention of being uncharitable: "Well, there's always the element of curiosity at first."

He does think, though, that it would be a wonderful experience for Australian musicians to see how a different audience reacted to them.

"We have this experience in America," he said, "because orchestras regularly give concerts in other cities that have their own resident orchestras. We go to Chicago and Philadelphia, for instance."

Mr. Burgin has not been here long enough to be sure which people he should speak to, but he promised to do a [illegible] propaganda job with his suggestion that our musicians should [illegible].

And he had a word of comfort for the Australian Broadcasting Commission, which has been trying so unsuccessfully to engage a resident conductor for the Victorian Symphony Orchestra.

"That [illegible] be easy," he said, "when you have a fine body of players."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

13 JUN 1960

Recital a great success

by JOHN SINCLAIR,
The Herald Music Critic

Yesterday afternoon's recital by the Camerata Society in the Lyceum Club gave Melbourne its only chance to meet Aaron Copland and gave Mr Copland his only glimpse of creative and interpretive music in this city.

Mr Copland, the most distinguished living American composer, is in Australia to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in performances of his own works — but he will not do so in Melbourne.

Yesterday's recital was historic, and also a hands-down musical success.

The program consisted of three works — Margaret Sutherland's very attractive Quartet for Cor Anglais and Strings, Noel Nickson's somewhat - austere but finely-written Sonata for Violin and Viola, and Aaron Copland's Quartet for Piano and Strings, a delightful and finely-textured work written with the inventiveness, skill and discipline of a master.

The program was played, it seemed to me flawlessly, by Sybil Copeland (violin), John Glickman (viola), Henry Wenig ('cello), David Woolley (cor anglais) and Margaret Schofield (piano).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

14 JUN 1960

THE final Australian concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Olympic Swimming Stadium tonight is broadcast by 3LO at 9.15. The program includes the suite "Bacchus and Ariadne," by Roussel, and is conducted by Charles Munch.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

14 JUN 1960

BOSTON CONCERT ON TWO

Tonight should prove whether Melbourne's Olympic Pool is suited acoustically for symphony concerts.

Television viewers will be able to form their own opinion when Channel TWO will telecast part of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at 7.55 o'clock.

Two sisters are members of the orchestra, which will be conducted by Dr Charles Munch.

They are flautist Miss Lois Schaefer and 'cellist Mrs Winifred Winograd.

Miss Schaefer is the first flute in the orchestra at New York's City Centre Opera Company. She was invited by Dr Munch to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra on tour.

Mrs Winograd in 1957 became the first woman string player to be engaged by the orchestra.

For the [illegible] telecast, the [illegible] will play "Symphonie Fantastique," by Berlioz.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

14 JUN 1960

● Sweet, dry

IT'S just an old Polish custom, according to Boston Symphony Orchestra bass player John Barwicki, himself of Polish descent.

At the Tintara barbecue luncheon for the orchestra at the weekend, he mixed for himself a draught of three parts of the dry white wine Riesling with one part of the red sweetness of port.

He explained to the locals who had never seen it before that it was a favorite tipple in Poland because it took a little of the dryness from the white wine and made it a palatable beverage for the medium taste.

236

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513

JUN 13 1960

My Boston

By Alan Frazer

MUSIC, when soft voices die,
Vibrates in the memory.
—Shelley

"BOSTON Music Wins Cheers," said a newspaper in Brisbane, Australia, last Tuesday, adding: "Concert One to Remember" and: "The Boston Symphony Orchestra conquered its first Autralian audience completely in the City Hall last night.

IT continued: "The packed audiences reaction made the orchestra certain it is going to enjoy its 10-day Australian tour. Everything was 'marvelous' for conductor CHARLES MUNCH after he had just finished the second encore of the night to a tumult of applause.

"LEADING American composer AARON COPLAND was in the audience. A total of 2330 concert-goers crowded into the hall. The audience, which included the Governor (Sir Henry Abel Smith) brought Dr. Munch back four times after the Beethoven Eroica Symphony; and there were cheers after the brilliance of the Ravel 'Daphnis and Chloe' Suite No. 2."

"IT is difficult to speak of the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra except in superlatives; the trouble is that one's stock of them is inadequate," wrote a critic.

"THEY gave us such playing as I have not heard for many a long day, and which I hardly hope to hear again for an equally long time. What impressed one was the simply lovely sound which Dr. Munch obtained. In every department, beauty of tone is pre-eminent and every soloist is an artist of fine calibre.

"IT is all too rarely that such an experience can come our way. Our delight will long be remembered."

THERE were thousands of more words and a four-column picture of Dr. Munch exercising with a spring stretcher in his hotel room. Another paper published a picture of DR. KERAN CHOBANIAN of Boston, who is traveling with the orchestra, administering medicine to cello player MISCHA NIELAND who had a cold (nothing serious)

OTHER photos showed Aaron Copland and Dr. Munch at the airport where the famous Boston conductor "rejected any attempt to describe the tour as cultural propaganda, saying: 'We are here to make music first.'"

"WE were very much surprised at the knowledge the peoples in Japan, Formosa and the Philippines had of western music," he added, and said that Mozart, Beethoven and Brahms were the favorites in Japan.

OFFICIALS at the airport tried to bar Dr. Munch's personal aide, secretary and valet, M. ROGER TOUREAU, from the automobile carrying the conductor but Toureau got in. "Where the maestro goes, I go," he said.

COPLAND is traveling with the orchestra and arrived in Australia with a huge black box full of presents, for the folks at home, from Japan.

LESLIE R. (Tiny) Martin, who one newspaper said weighs 14 stone (336 pounds), occupied two seats in the plane from Manila. Australians were shown his picture. Another photo displayed AYRTON PINTO, violin; OLIVIA LUETCKE, harp; and ROBERT KAROL, viola.

THE orchestra arrived 108 strong, 54 to a plane, with 20,000 pounds of baggage in a third plane which had the flag of Nationalist China painted on the hull.

"THE players hope nothing happens to Australia while they are here," wrote a reporter. "Revolutionary riots forced them to abandon their Korean visit and go to Formosa instead.

"TIDAL waves struck Japan while they were there. And they missed a typhoon in Manila by only two days. But the orchestra has suffered only one casualty so far. A viola player died in Japan.

"A VIOLIN insured for 8000 dollars belonging to concert master RICHARD L. BURGIN was damaged in Formosa but can be repaired. Many of the players were laden with souvenirs. Violinist GEORGE ZAZOFSKY struggled with a big square parcel containing an outsize monkey-wood salad bowl from Manila. 'I bought it in a moment of madness,' he said. He will lump it back to Waban, Massachusetts.

"Clarinetist FELIX A. VISCUGLIA shouldered a 16-stringed Chinese harp he bought in Formosa for 20 dollars American. Birthplaces of the players represent 15 different nationalities. Oldest of them is bass-player HENRI GIRARD who will be 72 this month."

THE musicians were looking forward to a change in Australia after sleeping, or trying to, in plane seats and Japanese inns with headrests made from rice hulls, according to MRS. THOMAS D. PERRY of Hingham, who arrived at Brisbane with her husband, the orchestra's manager.

MRS. PERRY was described as "tall, slim and charming." She told a reporter the heat in Manila was intense. Her official duties include writing thank-you letters for all the hospitality the orchestra has received since leaving Boston.

DR. MUNCH said he loved the perfect Queensland winter sunshine, dry and not too hot. "I would be glad to pay for this air after the thick air we have been having," he said.

THE premier of Queensland, in which Brisbane is situated, gave "a speci[illegible]ton supper" for members of the orchestra after the [illegible] A "Boston Tea Party" had been contemplated b[illegible] the players "usually don't eat a meal before [illegible]formance." Hors d'oeuvres and savories were followed [illegible] prawns and rice and [illegible] mince casserole.

THIS supper [illegible] great social event. One woman wore "a shimmering peacock-green evening coat with fur collar" and another, "the palest pink kid shoes to offset her lustrous coat of midnight blue velvet."

THERE was a power strike in Brisbane but it wasn't permitted to affect the concert.

Est. 1904
'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"HERALD"
Melbourne, Vic.

14 JUN 1960

Magnificent playing from Boston men

By JOHN SINCLAIR,
The Herald Music Critic

A capacity audience in the Melbourne Town Hall last night heard one of the most celebrated sounds in 20th century music — the sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This was the Boston's first Melbourne concert. Although the precision and discipline of the playing was flawless, it was the opulence and power of orchestral tone which held my interest.

The wonderful sonority of this orchestra's string section, the rather dark and perfectly blended tone of the woodwinds and the controlled power of the brass instruments provided the conductor with a rich palette of tones and colors.

In short this orchestra is a magnificent instrument and, I suspect, an even more flexible one than it appeared to be last night.

Richard Burgin conducted with a businesslike efficiency which never taxed the orchestra's full resources. There was not one really thrilling pianissimo in the program.

The "Adagio" from Mahler's 10th Symphony could have been handled with more tenderness and more intensity; and despite all the glories of the actual playing in Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, the interpretation was more hearty than distinguished.

The opening work, Kirchner's Toccata for strings, wind and percussion, provided the orchestra with difficulties which it surmounted with ease and the listener with difficulties which I did not manage so well.

Melbourne has now heard two of the world's greatest orchestras — the Boston Symphony and the Czech Philharmonic—but it has not yet heard a great orchestra under a great conductor. That experience will come tonight when the Boston Orchestra ends its Australian tour with a concert under Charles Munch in the Olympic Swimming Stadium.

ACOUSTICS APPROVED

ABC experts have designed and installed a sound-reflecting surface at the back of the temporary stage at the Olympic Swimming Stadium for tonight's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

An ABC spokesman said it was inspected and approved last night by the conductor, Charles Munch, who had also approved the pool's acoustics.

Choice of the swimming stadium for one of the Boston orchestra's concerts has been criticised by music lovers on the ground that the acoustics are bad.

So far 4000 seats have been booked for tonight's stadium concert. The stadium holds 7000.

Est. 1904
'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"HERALD"
Melbourne, Vic.

14 JUN 1960

★

RICHARD BURGIN, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and leading members of the orchestra were guests of honor at the English-Speaking Union's lunch today at the Delphic, Alfred-pl.

The president, Mr Justice Sholl, and Mrs Sholl welcomed them.

Among more than 100 present were Dr W. K. Braun, of the United States Information Service, and Mrs Braun, Mr Howard King, the Victorian Symphony Orchestra Subscribers' Committee president, and violinist Beryl Kimber.

★

237

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"HERALD"
Melbourne, Vic.

4 JUN 1960

24 STONE "TINY" IS THEIR MASCOT

Here's the Boston Symphony Orchestra's mascot — 24 stone-plus Leslie ("Tiny") Martin.

BREAKFAST for "Tiny" Martin, 24 stone double bass player, today.

"Tiny" plays the double bass and has been with the orchestra for three years.

"Say, don't believe those tall stories about my appetite — some of those other fellows in the orchestra could put me to shame," rumbled Leslie when he was interviewed at breakfast in his hotel room today.

Leslie said he took up the double bass not because he was a big man, but because his father played one.

Out early

The 115-strong orchestra and officials were out early today to see Melbourne — second last leg of their whirlwind eight weeks' tour.

They said although they had found parts of Australia cold — Brisbane and Sydney! — they didn't mind the cold themselves but their instruments did not like it.

"Some of our players have very old stringed instruments that get temperamental in cold weather," explained viola player Jerome Lipson.

"And the brasses are hard to keep in tune in changes of temperature."

Associate conductor Richard Burgin said the Boston Symphony Orchestra had missed a Boston Pops season because of its overseas tour.

A reduced orchestra played as the Boston Pops from May to July under the conductorship of Arthur Fiedler. This year, a scratch orchestra had filled in while the regular players were on their overseas tour.

Booked out

Here are some of the other Boston personalities and what they had to say:

Samuel Mayes, leader of cellos: "A good season ticket for 24 concerts costs $100, and [illegible] seat is booked out [illegible] advance. Some people will [illegible] tickets to their heirs. People who haven't got season tickets stand in line every n gnt waiting for cancellations by subscribers who are not coming. This money goes into the benevolent fund."

Henry Freeman, double bass player: "I was nearly a member of your Sydney Symphony Orchestra. My father came out to Sydney from England as a small boy, then the family moved on to America. My father was back here in 1910 as a member of Sousa's band."

They ALL said they found Australian hospitality, and audience reaction, "overwhelming."

The orchestra's second and final Melbourne concert will be at the Olympic Swimming Stadium tonight, conducted by Dr Charles Munch.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"NEWS"
Adelaide, S.A.

13 JUN 1960

Hot doggity says 'Tiny'

DOUBLE BASS PLAYER Leslie R. "(Tiny") Martin, who weighs 24 st., makes short work of a hot dog at a barbecue held at the Tintara winery, McLaren Vale, yesterday after members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra inspected the winery. Who ate most of the hot dogs? . . . "Tiny" wasn't saying.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.

14 JUN 1960

★ ★ ★

When 24 stone "Tiny" Martin, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's delicate double bass player, left by air for Melbourne yesterday he occupied as usual two seats. He's one of the world's few travellers who regularly gets two seats for the price of one. Biggest squeeze he's ever known was on Japan's internal airlines, where the seats are smaller than usual. "Tiny" nearly had to ask for three seats.

★ ★ ★

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 6133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"COURIER MAIL"
Brisbane, Qld.

19 MAY 1960

AUSTRALIAN PREMIERE IN BRISBANE

Three women play in orchestra

THERE will be three women among the 117 players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it arrives in Australia next month.

The orchestra will have its Australian premiere in Brisbane on June 6.

MRS. Thomas D. Perry, Jnr., wife of the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Miss Sally Hampel, secretary to Mr. Perry, have a final conference before travelling with the orchestra on its current tour of the Far East.

MRS. Olivia Luetcke, harpist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The women players are Miss Lois Schaefer (flautist), Mrs. Winifred Winograd (cellist) and Mrs. Olivia Hall Luetcke (harpist).

There will be two other women travelling in the specially chartered plane which is bringing the orchestra on its tour of the Far East and Australia.

They are Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, jun., wife of the manager, and Mr. Perry's secretary, Miss Sally Hempel, who is also a registered nurse.

For the tour

The flautist, Miss Schaefer, has been soloist with many famous American orchestras, including the Chicago Symphony and the Boston Pops.

She is first flute with the New York City Centre Opera Company's Orchestra and was invited to join the Boston Symphony for this tour.

She is a sister of 'cellist Mrs. Winifred Winograd.

Mrs. Winograd made musical history when, in 1957, she became the first woman string player to be engaged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

She studied under Gregor Piatigorsky at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia and at the Boston Symphony's summer school of music, the Berkshire Music Centre.

Mrs. Winograd has a teenage son, Nicky.

Began at 6

The harpist, Mrs. Luetcke, began her studies on the harp at the age of six.

She and her teenage daughter live in a large colonial house in suburban Boston where they raise Chihuahuas as a hobby.

Their dogs have been awarded many prizes at shows.

The manager and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, live in suburban Hingham, 16 miles from Boston, in a large Victorian house surrounded by an acre of lawns and gardens.

Mrs. Perry's hobby is gardening and looking after their large shaggy dog, Gus (short for Argus, of the hundred eyes).

Their two sons, Doane (17) and Rodney (15) are students at a New England preparatory school.

Mrs. Perry restricts her orchestral activities to attending matinee concerts and acting as "first lady" at many social functions.

A midwesterner from Illinois, Miss Hempel has been Mr. Perry's secretary for three and a half years. Before that, she worked as a nurse, and was for a time, an air hostess.

⬆ MRS. Winifred Winograd, cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the first woman to play with the orchestra. She has been with it since 1957.

★

⬅ MISS Lois Schaefer, flautist, was invited to join the Boston Symphony Orchesra for the duration of its tour.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 4 JUN 1960

A PLACE IN THE SUN

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in town and the players brought fearful news of the weather in Sydney.

It was so cold at the Sydney Stadium that half the orchestra played in overcoats, something that hadn't been done before anywhere else in the world.

However [illegible] were proud to advise them [illegible] conditions [illegible] be quite different in [illegible]. The orchestra did not [illegible] overcoats at the Town Hall [illegible] night —and its second concert will be given in a heated swimming pool.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE".

Melbourne, Vic.

1 4 JUN 1960

Boston Played and Conquered

They came, played, and conquered. Superlatives would fail to do justice to the fabulous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Their first concert at Melbourne Town Hall under the direction of their associate conductor Richard Burgin was a triumph of orchestral music making.

They demonstrated a remarkable palette of sound colorings, a fantastic range of dynamics and a precision and timing which is absolutely superb.

The inner parts of each individual section were crystal clear and the overall timbre was pure and unclouded.

The main work of the evening was Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony, which in wealth of thematic material as well as development of elaboration surpasses all works written in the latter half of the 19th century.

Mr. Burgin conducted this masterpiece with great penetration. The heroic spirit of Byron's Manfred was never allowed to deteriorate into pessimism and the brassy "Fatum" theme was allowed to ruthlessly scatter our dreams and present tragic reality.

The allegro vivace coda was breathtaking and from every point of view it was a thrilling experience.

A Toccata by Kirchner of monotonously sparse and meagre texture had opened the programme. The composer, though observing the letter of serial technique, had failed to grasp its spirit.

The work contained an astonishing amount of ingenuity, but was let down rather badly by poor orchestration.

The unfinished symphony by Gustav Mahler was beautifully done, but for my taste it borders too much on decadence with its sentimentalised death theme and Keats-like lyricism.

Mahler was, of course, a great composer, but towards the end he began rather to repeat himself.

Tomorrow night's concert at the Olympic Pool is an absolute must for all music lovers. One simply cannot afford to miss one bar from this magnificent orchestra.—FELIX WERDER.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

JUN 1960

CONSUL'S WIFE

Mrs. J. C. Ausland, wife of the US Consul (Mr. Ausland) was a decorative figure at the reception in midnight blue, an outfit, she proudly commented, which she had bought in Adelaide. The dress was of billowy blue taffeta, with a slim-fitting bodice, and over it went a shaped stole of shining blue velvet. Mr. and Mrs. Ausland will give a reception in honor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight.

With them in a consular group were the Vice-Consul for Italy (Miss Elena Rubeo), Mr. M. L. Lathlean and Mr. and Mrs. J. Walters (she wore a closely draped sheath of pure white chiffon).

The Commissioner of Police (Mr. J. G. McKinna) went to the reception with Mrs. McKinna, in pale blue satin dusted with beading. Pale blue organza made an enchanting dress for Mrs. C. R. Duncan, with loose-petalled blue organza flowers outlining the neckline.

Dr. John Bray, QC, was in a group with Mr. D. F. A. Simpson, Mrs. J. F. Astley (she wore muted blue—and come to think of it, blue was easily the favorite color for reception dressing) and Mr. J. F. Astley, QC.

Mrs. J. W. Rollison's full-length dress of orchid pink was tiered in lace and satin, with self-embroideries. Mrs. W. C. D. Veale, who accompanied the Town Clerk (Mr. Veale) wore a midnight velvet coat over her evening dress.

Opal green satin made a glamorous dress for Mrs. R. N. Irwin; Mrs. J. R. Kearnan, wife of the Crown Solicitor (Mr. Kearnan QC) wore midnight blue lace with a softly pleated skirt.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"MERCURY"

Hobart, Tas.

4 JUN [illegible]

CULTURAL WAY TO FRIENDSHIP

MELBOURNE. — Cultural exchanges like the Boston Symphony Orchestra's visit to Pacific countries were an important way of helping world understanding, Dr. Charles Munch (68), the orchestra's musical director, said yesterday.

If Australia could send one of her orchestras abroad for a tour, the result — in goodwill — would be valuable for Australia, he said.

Dr. Munch, now on his third oversea tour with the orchestra, said that he was feeling a little travel weary after the orchestra's month-long flying visit to Japan, Formosa, the Philippines and Australia.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"TELEGRAPH"
Sydney, N.S.W.

14 JUN 1960

Critics and criticised

FREQUENTLY, and in no uncertain terms, Australians have been told that they are unable to accept criticism.

Following recent statements in the metropolitan Press, and in the Canberra Times, one can only conclude that the shoe is on the other foot.

I am referring to musical events in connection with the A.B.C. There is, for example, the distinguished French conductor Monsieur G. Tzipine who dislikes "tough criticism."

These criticisms, he says, are mainly levelled against visiting artists from overseas.

Because of a recent not-so-flattering criticism, he advocates that the A.B.C. ban all critics from his concert tour.

Monsieur Tzipine should be well-pleased in view of the write-up he got in the Melbourne Sun-Pictorial on June 9.

Mr. Yi-kwei Sze complained of the sparing applause accorded him at his recent recitals in Canberra.

He accused the patrons of indifference, or perhaps lack of understanding, of his artistic qualities.

In my opinion this gentleman lacks the quality of grandeur; fortunately for us, or for him, there was no critical write-up of his recital in the Canberra Times.

No distinction

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra having just about finished their Australian tour, and with the Czech Symphony Orchestra's visit during October 1959, it should be said, it all fairness to the critics, that they do not make distinctions between overseas or Australian artists; and when one analyses their comments one cannot help feeling that these critics are persons who have a profound knowledge of the matter they discuss.

Statements apparently attributed to the general manager of the A.B.C. that he expressed over "harsh criticisms" of artists, etc., printed in the Daily Telegraph on June 8, are rather surprising.

Mr. Moses should pause for a moment and cast his mind back over the period 1938 to, say 1948. Surely he remembers the standard of our orchestras of that period!

It is only because of the help of numerous guest conductors and artists from overseas, and the untiring efforts of our own conductors and artists, for example, Professor Sir Bernard Heinze, Mr. Joseph Post, the late Edgar Bainton and many others, that the standard of music and celebrity performance in our land has improved immensely.

During these years of growing into musical maturity there certainly has been harsh and severe criticism.

Whether we liked Mr. Neville Cardus' critical observations, so often studded with high-falutin' terms, or not, we owe respect to him for the help he too has given Australian and foreign artists, and for his frank, unbiased and straightforward critical observations, for which he was so often abused.

Surely the general manager of the A.B.C. in making his recent statement to the Press will remember this particular period!

The average concert-goer or music lover knows little or nothing of the persons who write criticisms for one paper or another.

However, it can safely be assumed that these persons are sufficiently conversant with the music and the works they criticise.

My impression of the late Mr. Kapell, to whom Mr. Moses also makes reference, by way of example, is that Mr. Kapell was an outstanding, highly gifted artist.

More mature

But he was also a rather young gentleman with a quick temper.

I dare say that had Kapell lived he would have (despite his remark on the day of his departure, "Never, ever, to return to Australia") gladly come back to our shores and, perhaps, at a time when he, Mr. Kapell, would have been more mature.

May I remind Mr. Moses that each Sunday night from 6 to 6.30 the A.B.C. has on the National network a session "The Critics," in which a film, a book and a live show are usually debated.

If ever there has been outspoken criticism, it can be heard in that session! I often wonder if any newspaper would dare to put into print what is said in this session.

In our era we should be less sensitive to criticism, because anything anyone does, performs or says, immediately becomes world-news and therefore subject to world-wide criticism—that is, of course, if the matter is of such magnitude and interest to the people.

Acclaimed

Naturally, music is one of the interesting, international subjects and therefore artists of repute should welcome criticism rather than resent it.

Many will remember that some years ago the then conductor of one of our major orchestras went to Europe to conduct an orchestra as a guest conductor.

Although he was severely criticised there, and this was also printed in our Press, the same gentleman went back the following year to conduct another orchestra in the same country and this time was favorably criticised for his fine conducting, and was greatly acclaimed.

Criticism of musical performances is most desirable; whether this criticism is favorable or adverse is immaterial.

However, it is imperative that such criticism emanate from the pen of educated, informed persons, familiar with the art, and possessing the necessary qualifications.

This should be the only criterion entitling them to voice their opinions publicly. By way of tolerance, clear thinking and objective approach to the problem we all can help in finding the answer.

—K. W. STERN.
Masson Street, Turner,
Canberra.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

14 JUN 1960

We Respond to "Difficult" Music

Australian concert audiences responded enthusiastically to "difficult" contemporary music.

This is the opinion of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Dr. Charles Munch).

Dr. Munch yesterday said that Australians, like Americans, did not seem to have any snobbish reluctance about accepting new works.

Dr. MUNCH.

The 69-year-old conductor said he hoped that Australians would return again and again to performances of difficult music.

"Growing understanding and love of a work of art is more than compensation for taking this trouble," he said.

He supported a suggestion made by his associate conductor (Mr. Richard Burgin) on Sunday, that an Australian orchestra should tour overseas.

"Cultural exchanges are good for the world," said Dr. Munch, who in 1956 took his orchestra to Moscow. "And music is the international language."

Two planes brought the 99 players (including three women) and nine officials of the orchestra to Melbourne from Adelaide yesterday.

Specially strengthened music cases make up most of the weight in their 10 tons of baggage.

The orchestra has played in Japan, Formosa and the Philippines on its current tour. It will go to New Zealand after its Melbourne concerts.

The only thing the players do not like about Australia is the lack of central heating. So excuse them if they take a while to warm up.

Mr. Burgin [illegible] the Town Hall [illegible] Dr. Munch [illegible] at the Olympic [illegible] stadium tonight.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From
"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

14 JUN 1960

Birdman

CRITICS rave, audiences cheer, but one man in the Boston Symphony Orchestra likes to get the bird.

He is Rosario Mazzeo, the orchestra's personnel manager.

Slung about with cameras and binoculars, Mr. Mazzeo (a member of several bird-watching and protection societies) was eager to be off to the Dandenongs when he arrived from Adelaide yesterday with the orchestra.

"I hear your lyre birds are very amenable," he said, with something like optimism. "In that case, I shouldn't have any trouble at all."

Mr. Mazzeo has already had what he calls "one of the greatest triumphs" of his ornithological life on the present tour—at Malabar Heads, Sydney.

"It must be the only place in the world," he said, "where you can look in the viewfinder of your camera and see 400 wandering albatross all at once."

241

From

"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

1 4 JUN 1960

Orchestra Member Seeks Pop Tune for Son

WHEN the 99 member Boston Symphony Orchestra reached Melbourne yesterday on its whirlwind two-day visit, 'cellist Mrs. Winifred Winograd wondered where she could get a recording of the current Australian pop tune Tie me kangaroo down sport !

"It is for my 14-year-old son, Nicky," she hastily explained. "He is more interested in rock 'n' roll than classical music, I'm afraid."

There are three women members of the orchestra on the current tour—Mrs. Winograd and her sister, Miss Lois Schaefer, a flautist, and Mrs. Olivia Luetcke, who plays the harp.

Mrs. Winograd was the first woman string player to be engaged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, joining in April, 1957.

Prejudice

She heard that there was a vacancy for a 'cellist and applied for an audition.

"Usually, in the major symphony orchestras in America, unlike the smaller ones, there seems to be a prejudice against women, so I did not think I had a chance," she said yesterday.

She was the only woman at the audition, the other 12 applicants being men. It was a great thrill when the conductor engaged her.

Mrs. Winograd's only previous association with the Boston orchestra was as a student, when she attended one of the summer schools the orchestra conducts at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire mountains in Massachusetts.

She trained at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia and was for eight years first 'cellist with the Fort Wayne orchestra in the Mid-West.

Her sister, Miss Schaefer, is a temporary addition to the orchestra, replacing a woman member who could not make the tour.

● Mrs. Olivia Luetcke

She is on leave of absence from her usual position as first flute in the orchestra at New York's City Centre of music and drama.

"The City Centre is like an experimental theatre, staging American operas that would be difficult to put on in larger opera houses and playing seldom-heard music, besides the usual standard works," explained Miss Schaefer.

"Many of our younger singers and conductors gain valuable experience at this centre. Ballet is also presented here," she added.

Miss Schaefer has been with the centre for five years. Previously she was for three years flautist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Third Trip Overseas

This is the third overseas trip Mrs. Luetcke has made with the orchestra. The first two trips—in 1952 and 1956—were to Europe.

Mrs. Luetcke was the only woman in the orchestra when she joined in 1951. "I understand I was actually the first, but I am not sure.

She began her studies on the harp when six years old and at the age of 16 joined the New York National Orchestral Association. "It is a training ground for orchestras, its members being between 16 and 25 years," she explained.

After four years with the association, Mrs. Luetcke took a position as first harp with the San Antonio Symphony Orchestra, Texas. While there she married.

She now lives with her 12-year-old daughter Carlotta in Boston.

Ideas that musicians' hands are tender plants are scorned by Mrs. Luetcke. When a small job of painting, carpentry or gardening is required around the house she tackles it with relish.

"The rougher the work I do the better my hands for playing the harp."

As a change from her music, Mrs. Luetcke is interested in raising Chihuahuas. At the present time she has 35 of these miniature dogs, 18 being pets. She also owns 27 German Shepherd dogs.

Sisters

● Sisters with the Boston Symphony Orchestra — Mrs. Winifred Winograd (standing) and Miss Lois Schaefer.

Secretary is "Girl Friday"

A REAL "Girl Friday" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Miss Sally Hempel, secretary to the manager, Mr. Thomas Perry.

Her job on the present Pacific tour includes checking on transport and accommodation arrangements, and the facilities of a strange concert hall—to see, for instance, whether the conductor has a warm, convenient waiting room.

As well she distributes the mail, finds members when wanted for appointments and sees that they get to a concert hall on time.

She hardly has a minute to draw breath, but she obviously loves every minute of her exacting job.

● Miss Sally Hempel

A trained nurse and later an air hostess, Miss Hempel has been secretary for almost four years.

Although she had no previous direct contacts with the music world, she was an avid fan of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attending as many concerts as she could.

Rehearsals Only Chance

Now that she works with the orchestra the only times she has a chance to hear it is when the orchestra is practising.

"It is one of the few orchestras to have its own symphony hall and offices. When the auditorium doors are open the staff working in the offices can hear the music," said Miss Hempel

But when there is an actual concert she is usually busy helping the manager with next season's schedules of concert dates, &c.

Despite the excitement of an overseas tour, it is no sightseeing jaunt for Miss Hempel.

All she saw of Sydney during the orchestra's three-day stay was that section between the hotel and the concert hall. But she hopes to see something of Melbourne.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133
AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria
From
"ADVERTISER"
Adelaide, S.A.
13 JUN 1960

ABOUT PEOPLE By MARY ARMITAGE

Thousands Hear U.S. Orchestra

Music-lovers filled Centennial Hall — one official estimated the crowd at 3,000—for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert on Saturday night. The US Ambassador (Mr. William J. Sebald), who flew from Canberra, was in the great audience.

Inside, the hall ran white-hot with enthusiasm, with a hammer of handclaps and a thrumming of stamping feet that brought conductor Aaron Copland back again and again.

Outside, it was cold as charity, and the music-lovers arrived rugged up to the eyes, with extra rugs on their arms. Mrs. J. C. Ausland, who was with Mr. Sebald and the US Consul (Mr. Ausland) wore a black mohair coat over her gold and black-etched skirt and boat-neck blouse; Mrs. J. S. Miller wore full-length mink over black, and Mrs. E. R. Dawes, wife of the ABC vice-chairman, also added furs to her petunia-toned dress.

Lady Playford, who went to the concert with the Premier (Sir Thomas Playford), covered her full-length dinner dress of sugar-pink brocade with a seven-eighths coat of burgundy. The Lady Mayoress (Mrs. Hargrave) was in muted blue; so was Lady McBride, wife of the Australian - American Association president (Sir Philip McBride).

Mrs. Robert Campbell was in the big official party, which included the Town Clerk (Mr. W. C. D. Veale), Mrs. Veale, Lady Bonython, who is president of the SA Symphony Orchestra Subscribers' Committee, Sir Arthur and Lady Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Freney (she wore a sheath of hyacinth blue lace).

Music-lover Dr. N. Stannus Gunning arrived, carrying a blue knee-rug, with his pianist wife; Mr. R. A. MacKirdy carried a bold tartan rug for his family party, which included Mrs. MacKirdy and Miss Annabel Rivaz, who is engaged to their son Mr. J. A. MacKirdy.

Coffee Pleases

Boston Symphony Orchestra awarded top marks to the person who thought of serving steaming hot coffee to cold musicians during the interval at Centennial Hall on Saturday.

Aesthetes in the audience gave few marks to stage decorations of potted palms swathed in green crinkle paper. Why decorate any orchestra, let alone the Boston Symphony?

Otherwise, with plenty of programmes and programme sellers, and a nice smooth system of seating that enormous crowd, the audience hadn't a complaint.

Mr. K. T. Hardy was an early arrival with his daughter Mrs. W. G. Hay. They were joined by Mrs. Hardy, who swathed her satin dress with a mink stole, and Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Christophersen (she wore an ermine wrap with silk chiffon velvet).

With an orchid pinned on her winter-white coat, Mrs. David Cornell was in the audience with Mrs. H. de Pledge Sykes and Mrs. H. P. Davis.

Mink Stole

Mrs. Eric Bonython, with a wild mink stole over her old-gold silk taffeta dress, was in a party with Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Angas Parsons (her furs were white Arctic fox) and Mrs. Eric Kelly.

Lady Morgan, with a black Persian lamb coat over her black concert dress, was in the audience with Sir Edward Morgan.

Mrs. Andrew Tennant, in a beaver coat and carrying a mink stole, waited o nthe steps for Mrs. J. Albyn Rankine and Mr. Oliver Symon; Dr. and Mrs. Ashley Magarey joined another party of music lovers.

ENVOY AT SUPPER

KEY Adelaide music-lovers met key members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the supper party given after the concert on Saturday night.

The US Consul (Mr. John Campbell Ausland) and Mrs. Ausland, who gave the party, presented guests to the US Ambassador (Mr. William J. Sebald) at the party.

The Premier (Sir Thomas Playford) and Lady Playford had a long chat with the orchestra's composer-conductor (Mr. Aaron Copland).

Mr. Henry Krips, resident conductor of the SA Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Krips were enchanted to meet their namesake from the orchestra, violinist Mr. Alfred Krips from Berlin (no relation).

The Vice-Chancellor of the University of Adelaide (Mr. H. B. Basten) and Mrs. Basten, in taupe chiffon, were in a music-loving group that included Professor and Mrs. J. G. Cornel, Lady Bonython (chintzy flowers patterned her slim sheath dress of pewter) and Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Boswell.

With the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress (Mr. and Mrs. Hargrave) were Sir Arthur and Lady Barrett, the Director of Elder Conservatorium (Professor John Bishop) and Mrs. Bishop.

Lady McEwin, who was chatting with Sir Philip and Lady McBride, regretted the absence of the Chief Secretary (Sir Lyell McEwin), who as a violinist had played in an orchestra for several years.

With the ABC vice-chairman (Mr. E. R. Dawes) and Mrs. Dawes were the State manager for the ABC (Mr. J. S. Miller) and Mrs. Miller who was wearing furs with her slim black lace dress.

A brilliant splash of color was the sky blue Chinese brocade dinner dress worn by the US Second Consul (Miss Ruth McLendon), who helped to entertain guests. Among them were the US Public Affairs Officer from Canberra (Mr. L. Van Roberts) and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Easley, from Louisiana, US, who are now living in Adelaide. Mrs. Easley wore a softly draped black chiffon dress to Mr. and Mrs. Ausland's party, which was held in the blue room of the South Australian Hotel.

PICTURE PARADE ON SATURDAY

- Mrs. Andrew Tennant (top, extreme left) was in the great audience that heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Centennial Hall, Wayville, on Saturday night.
- Miss Mignonne Hannan (top, extreme right) with Miss Lorna Seedsman at the party given for Miss Seedsman and her fiance Mr. Christopher Hurford in North Adelaide on Saturday night. Dr. Robert Britten Jones gave the party with Miss Hannan.
- Mrs. Robert Fennell (bottom, extreme right), guest of honor at a farewell party at Norwood, with guests Mr. and Mrs. John Brennan, of Kolendo, Port Augusta, on Saturday night. Mrs. Fennell will fly to Canada on Friday.

243

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 4

"Music tours aid good will"

CULTURAL exchanges like the Boston Symphony Orchestra's visit to Pacific countries were an important way of helping world understanding, Dr Charles Munch, 68, the orchestra's musical director, said yesterday.

If Australia could send one of her orchestras abroad for a tour, the result — in goodwill — would be valuable for Australia, he said.

Dr Munch, famous French-born maestro, will conduct the orchestra tonight at the Olympic Swimming Stadium.

He reached Melbourne yesterday from Sydney—where he has been recuperating from what he described as "a bad cold."

Because of his cold he did not go with the orchestra to Adelaide.

Dr Munch, now on his third overseas tour with the orchestra, said that he was feeling a little travel-weary after the orchestra's month-long flying visit to Japan, Formosa, the Philippines and Australia.

Asking for a glass of water as soon as he stepped off the plane at Essendon, he said in heavily-accented English: "I will be glad of having some little rest."

He said that within a fortnight of returning to Boston from New Zealand he would have to step straight into the orchestra's summer program.

The orchestra plays regular festival concerts at its summer headquarters at Tanglewood.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 5 JUN 1960

Orchestra Was an Indivisible Unit

The amazing thing about the Boston Orchestra is the smooth blending of strings, woodwinds, percussion and brass into an indivisible unit.

They give the impression of complete assurance and ease of execution. It would be absurd to single out individual sections or even players for praise — they play as one instrument and that is the secret of good orchestral ensemble.

Their conductor, Charles Munch, has a dynamic manner, a splendid sense of rhythm and most eloquent hands that draw from the orchestra the most luscious and invigorating sounds.

Some of our conductors could learn from the nervous intensity with which Mr. Munch beats the smallest rhythmic unit, or again sometimes as he stands absolutely still only to swoop down on some dramatic climax.

Last night's concert was held in the Olympic swimming pool and the programme consisted of the Fantastic Symphony, by Berlioz, the Variations, Chaconne and Finale, by Dello Jojo and Roussel's Bachus et Ariane Suite No. 2.

The Fantastic Symphony received a most exhilarating performance. Nothing is too technically exacting for this orchestra and no demands on conductorship too difficult to comply with.

In the adagio Mr. Munch showed a certain tendency to dwell on the tender passages to the point where the pace of the music became distorted.

The Witches' Sabbath was chiefly notable for a full-throated brass choir of exceptional richness and sonority. However, at times throughout the evening the explosive sforzandi of the trumpets were uncalled for.

This was no doubt due to the poor acoustics and one had the uncomfortable feeling that the orchestra was playing next door.

To judge by his variations Dello Jojo is a sensitive and capable composer without any touches of individuality. To judge by his musical quotations he has good taste.

Roussel's Opus emerged with an unusual freshness and sparkle. Technically immaculate and with a magnificent breadth of imagination this orchestra presented a delectable performance which will long remain in the memory. — FELIX WERDER.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 5 JUN 1960

Vice-Regal

The Governor (Sir Dallas Brooks) and Lady Brooks, accompanied by Colonel R. W. Spraggett left Government House for Sydney, yesterday afternoon.

The Governor and Lady Brooks later left for England via America on a private visit.

The Lieutenant-Governor (Sir Edmund Herring) and Dame Mary Herring, accompanied by Miss Margaret Herring and Colonel A. G. Oldham and attended by Lieut.-Commander F. G. Evans, R.A.N.V.R., were present at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Olympic Swimming Pool, yesterday evening.

While the Lieut.-Governor is administering the Government of the State of Victoria, Colonel A. G. Oldham, E.D., will act as his private secretary.

The Lieut.-Governor and Dame Mary Herring's visitors book will be available for signing at the main gate at Government House.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

13 JUN 1960

U.S. Conductor at Recital

LEADING American composer Aaron Copland, guest conductor with the Boston Symphony orchestra flew from Adelaide yesterday to attend a recital in Melbourne.

The recital was held by the Camerata Society of Contemporary Music at the Lyceum Club by courtesy of Miss Margaret Sutherland.

The programme comprised works by Aaron Copland, also Miss Sutherland and Dr. Noel Dickson.

Artists were Margaret Schofield, David Woolley, Sybil Copeland, John Glickman and Henry Wenig.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 4 JUN 1960

The Boston Symphony was magnificent...

By DOROTHY PENFOLD

THE world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra played to an excited and wildly enthusiastic audience in the packed Town Hall last night.

Solo Winds and Percussion by American composer Leon Kirchner is scored in contemporary form.

It is difficult to appreciate completely at a first hearing.

It begins plaintively, woodwind and cellos taking up the melodic line, giving way to a trio for oboe, clarinet and solo violin, ending after some rhythmic turbulence in which strings and celesta principally predominate.

Adagio from the Tenth Symphony by Gustav Mahler, a posthumous work of great beauty, expressing the composer's fore-knowledge of approaching death begins on a pianissimo melody for violas alone.

As the work proceeds a contrast of sombre and contemplative moods brings out the exquisite loveliness of strings and woodwind.

In the Purgatorio section the full orchestra begins to display the brilliance of its brass, one of the trumpets producing a thrilling high note.

It was, however, in the 5th Symphony by Tchaikovsky that the full majesty of sound from this magnificent orchestra really electrified the audience.

As I left the hall a storm of applause and bravos thundered the audience's appreciation of an unforgettable experience.

244

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

15 JUN 1960 Melbourne, Vic.

U.S. AMBASSADOR AT CONCERT

THE U.S. Ambassador, Mr William J. Sebald, was among the official guests at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance at the Olympic Swimming Stadium last night.

The official party was welcomed by the general manager of the ABC, Mr Charles Moses, and the Victorian manager, Mr Ewart Chapple.

The Lieutenant Governor, Sir Edmund Herring, was accompanied by Dame Mary Herring and Miss Margaret Herring.

The Acting Prime Minister, Mr McEwen, and Mrs McEwen attended. The State Minister for Forests, Mr Fraser, represented the Premier. He was accompanied by Mrs Fraser.

Also in the official party were the Federal Treasurer, Mr Holt, and Mrs Holt; Mrs Calwell, wife of the Leader of the Federal Opposition, with Miss Mary Elizabeth Calwell, and the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, Cr and Mrs Bernard Evans.

After the concert the U.S. Consul, Mr William F. Ryan, and Mrs Ryan gave a reception at Menzies Hotel for the conductor, Dr Charles Munch, and representatives of the orchestra.

Among the guests — who included members of the official party at the concert — were Sir Arthur and Lady Dean, Sir George and Lady Paton, the manager of the orchestra, Mr Thomas D. Perry, and Mrs Perry, and Mr Richard Burgin, who conducted the orchestra for its first Melbourne concert on Monday evening.

Also there were the Federal secretary of the Musicians' Union of Australia, Mr Charles Wheatland, and Mrs Wheatland, and Dr W. K. Braun, cultural affairs officer in the U.S. Information Service, with Mrs Braun.

SCHOOL banners and colors of blue, gold and white decorated the Royale Ballroom last night when 550 guests attended the 11th annual Mt Scopus ball.

Six debutantes, wearing individual long white frocks, were presented to Mr M. J. Ashkanasy, [illegible] and Mrs Ashkanasy.

★

NINE debutantes wearing individual white frocks were presented to the Mayor and Mayoress of Broadmeadows, Cr and Mrs E. J. Angel, at the City of Broadmeadows mayoral ball in the Essendon Town Hall last night.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

Adelaide, S.A.

13 JUN 1960

★ ★ ★

The American Flag hanging behind the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert in Adelaide on Saturday night was two stars out of date. It had only 48 stars. (Flag was no doubt made before Alaska and Hawaii became States of the Union).

★ ★ ★

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUN"

13 JUN 1960 Melbourne, Vic.

OUR CONCERT AUDIENCES ARE "WARM"

AUSTRALIAN audiences were "very warm and enthusiastic," the associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr Richard Burgin, said last night.

Mr Burgin arrived in Melbourne yesterday to conduct the orchestra at the Melbourne Town Hall tonight.

The music director of the orchestra, Dr Charles Munch, will conduct at a concert at the Olympic Pool tomorrow.

The [illegible]-member orchestra will arrive in Melbourne by air today.

The orchestra and the instruments will come in four aircraft — two passenger, and two freight, planes.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVERTISER"

13 JUN 1960 Adelaide, S.A.

Boston's Perfect Balance

By JOHN HORNER

The world is shrinking rapidly. Australia is now within touring distance of the world's greatest orchestras. We have heard the Boyd Neel and the Czech Philharmonic; and now the almost legendary Boston Symphony Orchestra itself, with its great conductor, Charles Munch, and his associate, Richard Burgin.

On Saturday night in the Centennial Hall it was Adelaide's proud turn to welcome them.

There is no doubt at all about this orchestra. A hundred strong, with 60 strings, it made the grandest sound Adelaide has ever heard. The maturity of the players is visible as well as audible. The average age must be fairly high.

Every department is manned by a staff of perfectionists. The little solo bits, such as the long 'cello variation in the Haydn Symhony, were flawless and distinguished.

Each chorus — strings, wind, brass—is perfectly balanced, with that glowing sonority in the strings that comes only from adequate numbers from top to bottom, plus glorious quality.

Yet, such is tha tantalising effect of the highest standards, even on minds not accustomed to them, that there were points about this wonderful gift horse's mouth that modified the raptures of some of us.

First, where was Charles Munch? Even Richard Burgin was not with us. If Barbirolli brought the Halle to Australia, but sent a deputy to conduct in little Adelaide, it would be disappointing, would it not?

The guest-conductor for Adelaide was the famous American composer Aaron Copland. Since the second item on the programme was Copland's own Suite from "The Tender Land," there was a good reason for his choice, but conductors are conductors and composers are composers and seldom the twain shall meet in the one body.

Personally, I found the Copland work the most interesting on the programme as a fine specimen of modern American music magnificently played under the composer himself.

And this raised another little point about the horse's mouth — the programme. It consisted of Haydn's Symphony No. 95 (C minor) and Tschaikowsky's 5th Symphony, with Copland's suite between. What a pity that we were not given another work or two that only a virtuoso orchestra like the Boston could tackle and that Adelaide could never otherwise hear.

It is not ingratitude that prompts these quibbles. It is simply that, for future reference, those who reign over us should be encouraged to rank Adelaide with Melbourne and Sydney when choosing conductors and programmes.

Otherwise the occasion was historic and excitingly rich in promise.

Boyd Neel—Czech—Boston. What next? The London Philharmonic, Vienna Philharmonic, Berlin Philharmonic? Why not? Let us keep raising our sights—and let us (not too humbly) request the top conductors for Adelaide in future.

245

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent
Circ. 149,070

MAR 8 - 1960

Outdoor Concert By Munch et al Draws Critic Ire

MELBOURNE, Mar. 8 (AP)—"Symphony or swymphony?" Melbourne music lovers asked today after announcement that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in the Olympic Stadium here next June.

The Australian Broadcasting Commission, which will manage the orchestra's Australian tour, says the stadium seats 7500. The Melbourne Town Hall, usual scene of orchestral concerts, seats only 2555.

The orchestra will give two concerts in Melbourne, and critic John Sinclair of the Melbourne Herald commented: "Putting the concerts in the Town Hall would mean that 5110 people could hear the orchestra—putting them in the swimming stadium means nobody will hear the orchestra properly.

"One wonders what Charles Munch and Aaron Copeland, who will conduct the orchestra, or the American State Department, which is keenly interested in its reception, know about all this."

George Laughlin, head of the Melbourne University Music Conservatory, likewise urged use of the Town Hall.

"We'll derive great cultural benefits from the tour, and it would be a pity to detract from these by holding recitals in a stadium which is acoustically unsound," Laughlin said.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

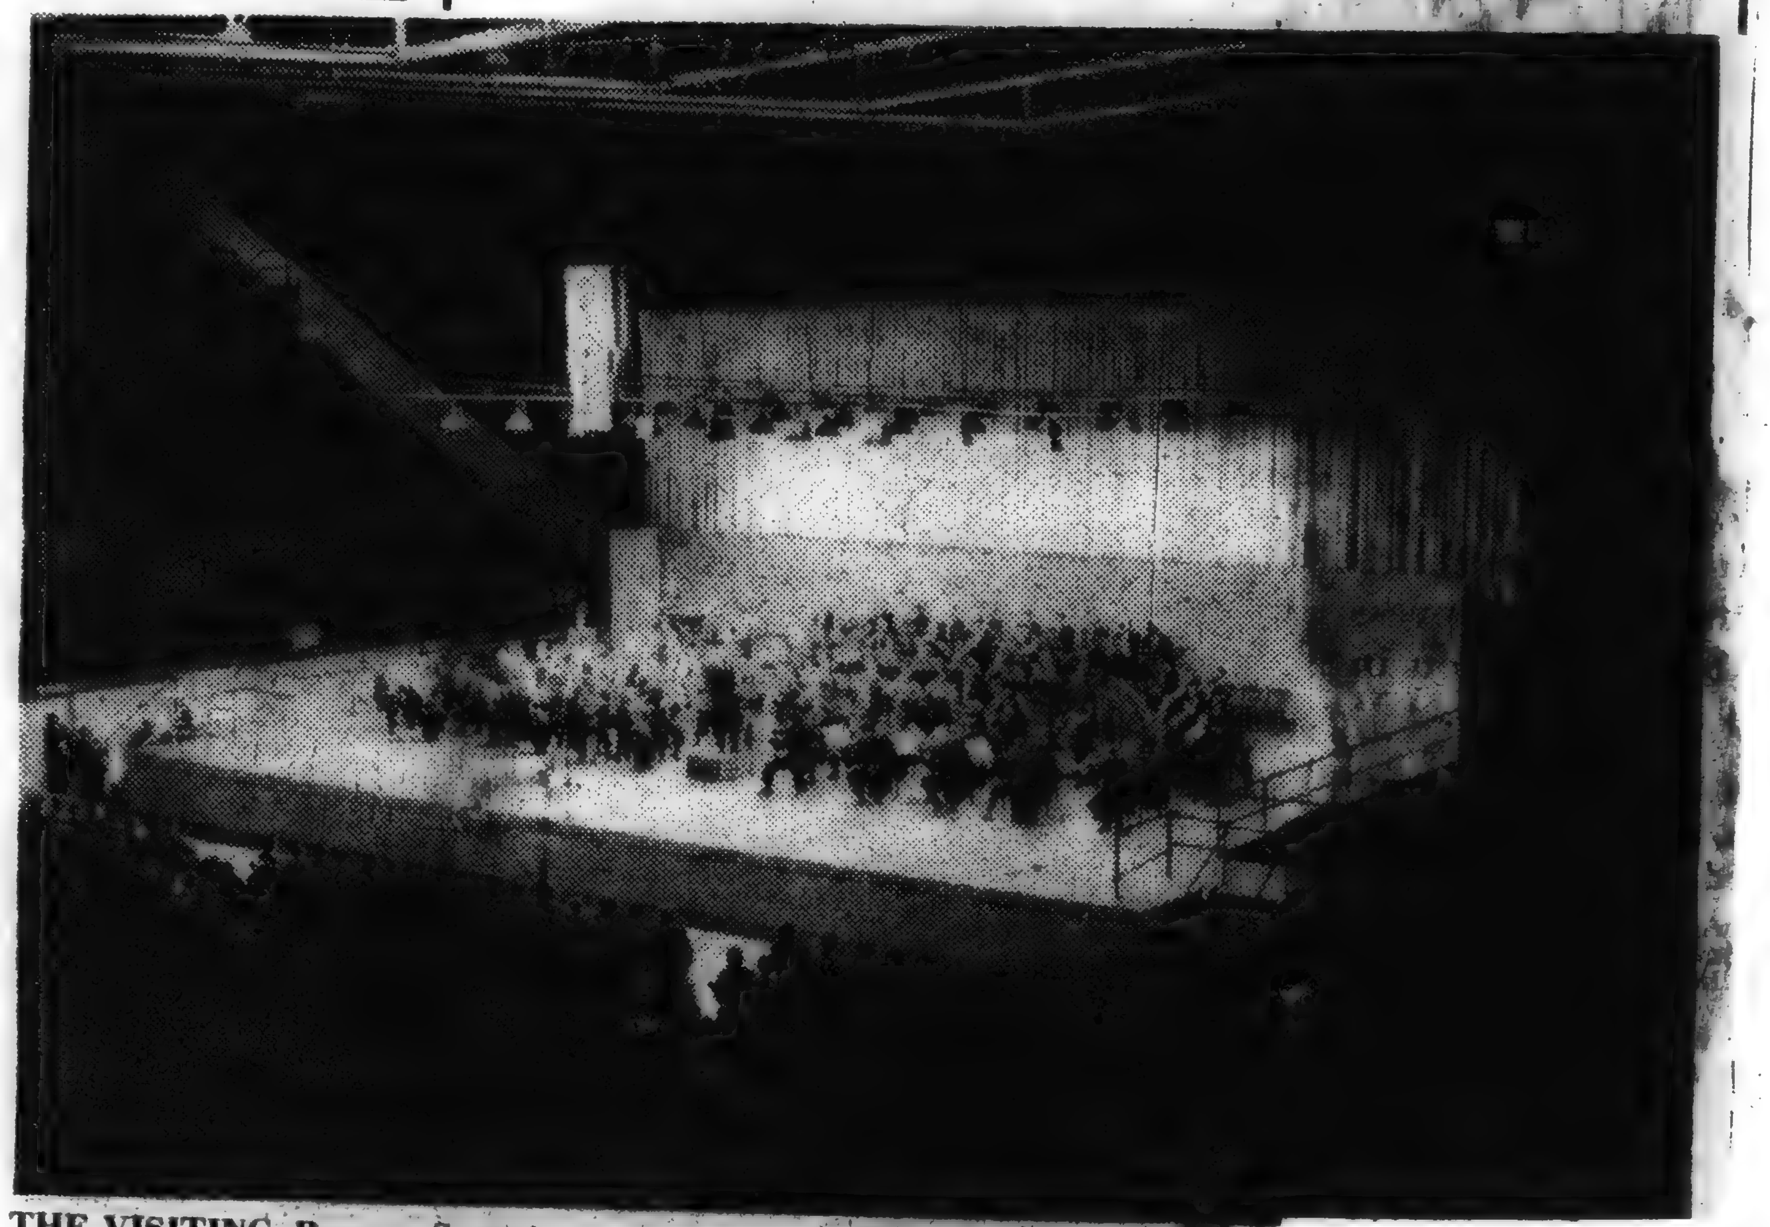
From

"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

1 5 JUN 1960

AGE, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1960

Orchestra at the Pool



THE VISITING Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of conductor Dr. Charles Munch, made this impressive spectacle at the Olympic swimming stadium during last night's performance. (Review P.5).

From

"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

1 5 JUN 1960

AY, JUNE 15, 1960

People, Parties . . .

Boston Orchestra Concert

A LARGE official party attended the second and final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Olympic swimming pool last night. The special guests included the Lieutenant-Governor (Sir Edmund Herring), Dame Mary Herring and Miss Margaret Herring.

Others in the official party included the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. McEwen) and Mrs. McEwen, the U.S. Ambassador (Mr. W. J. Sebald), the Federal Treasurer (Mr. Holt), the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress (Cr. and Mrs. Bernard Evans), the Minister for Forests (Mr. Fraser) and Mrs. Fraser, the Chancellor of the University (Sir Arthur Dean) and Lady Dean, the vice-chancellor of the University (Sir George Paton) and Lady Paton, Sir John Latham, the U.S. Consul (Mr. William F. Ryan) and Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. Arthur Calwell and Miss Mary Calwell.

They were welcomed by the general manager of the Australian Broadcasting Commission [illegible] Charles J. Moses), a[illegible] the Victorian manager (Mr. Ewart Chapple) and Mrs. Chapple.

Visiting actress, Miss Cornelia Otis Skinner, was also in the audience.

After the concert, the U.S. Consul (Mr. Ryan) and Mrs. Ryan gave a sup-for some of the official party.

Members of the orchestra were entertained at an informal supper party at the Italian Society restaurant.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

1 5 JUN 1960

Luncheon: Several members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were present at a luncheon held at the Delphic yesterday arranged by the English Speaking Union. Guests were welcomed by Mr. Justice Sholl and Mrs. Sholl.

Among those present were the associate conductor of the orchestra, Mr. R. Burgin, the manager of the orchestra (Mr. T. D. Perry), who was accompanied by Mrs. Perry; also Mr. L. Speyer, Mr. G. Humphrey, Mr. K. V. Smith, Mr. Roland Tapley and Mr. L. Stone Street.

Mrs. Sholl was in a tailored suit of clerical grey wool with a small black cap and black accessories.

Also sitting at the official table were the director of the U.S. information service in Canberra, Mr. LeVan Roberts, the U.S. Information Officer, Dr. W. K. Braun, and Mrs. Braun, and Miss Dorothy Coles.

More than 150 guests were present. They included Mrs. A. E. V. Richardson, Mrs. K. Nisbet, Miss Beryl Kimber, Miss C. Parkinson, Miss Elise Haas, Mr. Howard King, Mr. M. D. Solow, of Jerusalem, Miss Jean Cameron, Miss Joan Sutherland Smith and Miss Ann Swallow.

246

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 5 JUN 1960

Musical History Of The Boston Symphony

To coincide with the current visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, R.C.A. has released several new records, among them being an excellently produced documentary of considerable historical value.

OFF THE RECORD

by

JOHN MASTERS

This disc (SP-12, monaural) is entitled A Musical History of the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops, and is offered as a special attraction by R.C.A. at 15/6.

I do not hesitate to say that this is among the greatest bargains in the long history of recorded music. The disc would still be a treasure at the usual price of 57/6; but R.C.A.'s gesture places it within the reach of every gramophile.

The record offers absorbing entertainment.

On side 1 we have excerpts from recordings made by the Boston Symphony from 1917 up to the present time, and on the reverse is a selection of items played by the Boston Pops (the B.S.O. at reduced strength for summertime concerts) from 1935 onwards.

The musical items are linked together with interesting commentaries by Milton Cross and Leslie Rogers, and the programme has been chosen with the greatest care from R.C.A.-Victor's archives in Camden, New Jersey.

After a brief introduction (Berlioz: Romeo and Juliet), the programme proper begins at Camden in 1917, where the Bostonians, under Karl Muck, made the first American records of a symphony orchestra.

Mr. Rogers, who was present at this historical session, recalls the difficulties under which the records were made by the primitive acoustic recording process, and then we hear the finale of Tchaikovsky's 4th Symphony.

The dim, faraway sounds gathered by the acountic recording horn are fascinating to hear because they make us realise the giant forward strides made in recording technique over the years.

Looking back, it is difficult to imagine how anyone took the gramophone seriously in those distant days.

Incidentally, although R.C.A.'s cover notes give 1917 as the year of the B.S.O.'s first recordings for Victor, actually a quartet of wind instruments from the orchestra recorded for the company as far back as 1906.

So, without stretching truth too far, we may say that the orchestra has by far the longest gramophone history.

From 1917 we jump to 1928 (Beethoven: 6th Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting), and this excerpt from the orchestra's first attempt with the electrical recording process still sounds impressive and quite realistic, although the sound is rather distant.

Thereafter there are snippets from Copland's Appalachian Spring, Stars and Stripes, Schubert's "unfinished," Don Quixote of Richard Strauss, and, to conclude the side, a most ingenious version of Berlioz's Rakoczy March, which consists of three different recordings expertly strung together.

The opening is conducted by Muck (1917), the middle section by Koussevitzky (1940) and the finale by Charles Munch (1954).

It is an amusing technical trick, and the continuity is faultless.

Side two gets under way with Arthur Fiedler recalling his discovery of Jealousy in 1934. Struck with the tune, he used it for his first R.C.A.-Victor recording, and the record sold a million copies.

The side includes Johann Strauss's Morning Leaves, Piston's Circus Parade (the orchestra providing crowd noises, &c.), two different recordings of Carioca spliced together, Gaite Parisienne and, by no means least, a hilarious satire on Ebb Tide, full of deliciously grotesque noises.

R.C.A.'s monaural sound is fine throughout, and I wish this gem of a record the success it deserves.

★

AMONG the classical issues we have Heifetz with Charles Munch conducting the B.S.O. in contrasting concerti: Mendelssohn's E Minor and Prokofieff's No. 2 in G Minor (I-16222, monaural).

Heifetz gives a superlative performance of the Prokofieff, an arresting work combining lyricism with strong rhythmic impetus.

Notice the vigorous thrust of the first movement and his velvety playing of the gorgeous lyrical (2nd) movement.

Conductor, soloist and orchestra are perfectly matched in this work.

I thought Heifetz's reading of the popular Mendelssohn work a shade too objective — this sentimental and romantic music can stand any amount of warmth from the soloist; Heifetz does not supply overmuch warmth, but what a flawless virtuoso he is!

Try the last movement. Clean, spacious sound on both sides.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

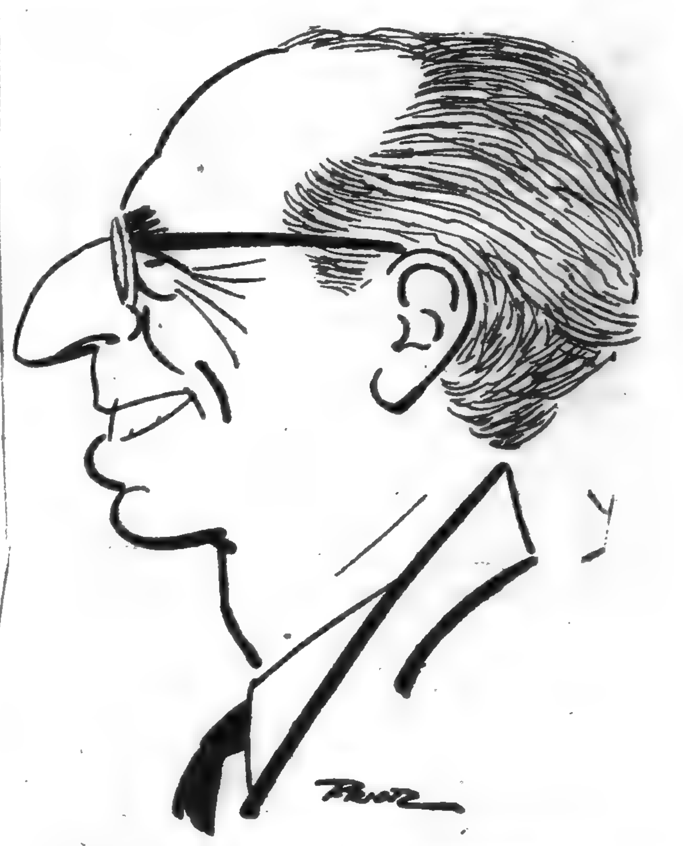
From 1 5 JUN 1960

"BULLETIN,"

Sydney, N.S.W.

At the Sydney dinner given by the Australian Performing Rights Association, at which he was guest-of-honor, Aaron Copland showed the sense of humor which invests some of his delightful songs, and which is reflected in this sketch by Prior. But Copland is best known as a serious composer whose works are in the most modern style, and it's in that capacity he has come with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on their goodwill tour, sponsored by President Eisenhower. The composer acts as guest-conductor and wields the baton when the orchestra is playing his own works—as he did at Sydney Stadium last week in a memorable concert.

Born where the celebrated tree grew in New York, Copland thumped the piano as a boy to his sister's tuition before he knuckled down to tougher tutorship from Wittgenstein, Wolfson, Goldmark and Nadia Boulanger. Then he launched straight into the field to which he has since dedicated himself—limning the American musical scene and writing a variety of ballets and symphonies, concertos and music for the voice. Today he's in the front rank of American composers, holds top positions in a swag of organisations which further the improvement of American composition, and is a prolific writer on music for various periodicals. He's 60, but spry by a decade or two less.



CONTEMPORARY COMPOSER

From

"SUN"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 5 JUN 1960

Come back again, Boston Symphony

CARL MUNCH, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a dynamic individualist in his conducting. Sometimes he rests for a few bars, re-entering with a strong down beat when pace or change of mood demands.

The superb musicianship of the orchestra suffered a little last night from the Olympic Pool's acoustics, which took some of the sparkle from the upper registers.

The audience showed undiminished approval throughout.

The Berlioz "Fantastique" was brilliantly done. From the love of Berlioz, suggested in the first three episodes — Reveries, A Ball and Scene in the Meadows — there is a violent change to [illegible] the Scaffold a[illegible] the Witches [illegible] clearly indic[illegible] rupt end to the [illegible]

The "Fa[illegible] appears continuously in the brilliant orchestration.

Variations, Chaconne and Finale, by Norman Dello Joio, was a curious mixture of liturgical and secular music in which a Gregorian Chant and a Kyrie form the main theme.

The cheerful Bacchus and Ariadne Ballet, Second Suite, brought (besides the high and low woodwihds, strings, horns, trumpets and harps) the unusual tambourine and military drum into a glorious medley of brilliant sound.

Warm thanks to the [illegible] Symphony Orchestra. May they soon return! —DOROTHY PENFOLD.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALiAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

1 5 JUN 1960

TWO-SEATER

JUST because that Boston Symphony Orchestra player takes two seats in the plane doesn't mean that some fellows—and women, too—have to sprawl all over a bus seat to the exclusion or discomfort of another.—WEARY WILLIE (Kensington Gardens).

247

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALiAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

1 3 JUN 1960

THE 'BOSTON' GAVE US A REMARKABLE CONCERT

says NADRA PENALURICK

JOHN MILES REVIEWS NEW FILMS—P. 23.

FOR the crowd which packed Centennial Hall to its doors on Saturday night, the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the most thrilling musical experience of a lifetime.

Whatever ideas one had conjured up faded in the glorious richness of orchestral tone which burst upon us.

The one disappointing feature came from the fact that from one's position in the body of the hall, it was completely impossible to see any but the string players. Brass, woodwind, and percussion, seated behind them, were entirely hidden.

The orchestra as a whole has the hallmark of greatness indelibly stamped on it, but listening and analysing its proportions one is immediately struck by the individual's quality as a musician.

Outstanding

When it was announced that conductor Charles Munch was not to come to Adelaide, there were some sighs of disappointment.

Now, on reflection, I feel certain that the audience on Saturday night counted the appearance of Aaron Copland as a musical experience to be equalled only by that of hearing the Boston Symphony itself.

As an outstanding American composer, his qualities stand high — so high, in fact, that his skill as an orchestral conductor may have been overshadowed.

His appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday will live long in our memory. His dynamic control, his very expressive hand movements, his great knowledge and skill in making the most of every instance of orchestral effect were magnificently achieved.

The Haydn C Minor Symphony (No. 95) opened the program, and we expected something pretty big from this world-renowned orchestra — something superior in the matter of string tone.

Sixty players (15 more than the entire SA Orchestra!) is the string section of this orchestra, and 60 musicians of the quality of the Boston Symphony can produce music of unbelievable beauty, so we discovered.

The suite from "The Tender Land," Copland's first major opera, completed in 1954, gave us one of the most exhilarating glimpses of American composition.

The work "lives" in every way. It is sensitive, poignant in parts, and modern in much of its materials.

There is nothing stuffy or stodgy in Aaron Copland as a composer. He represents today's way of life. One even senses his feeling for tomorrow in his boldly conceived style and full, vivid scoring.

In writing of the performance of the Tschaikowsky E Minor Symphony (the fifth) one could easily be forgiven for becoming a little incoherent. If ever an audience were lifted out of their seats, it was here.

It was an extraordinary performance. It would be hard to imagine another where there was so much virtuosic skill expounded and so great a freedom of expression from each player, yet where an iron control was so evident that the work was moulded into a powerful interpretation of orchestral sound.

Exciting

Without a shadow of a doubt it was the most exciting performance one could imagine.

With the climax of the allegro vivace the pent-up feelings of that crowded Centennial Hall gave way to unprecedented applause.

Time after time Copland returned to acknowledge the applause on behalf of the orchestra. Then again they played, this time "Prairie Night" from Copland's "Billy the Kid" ballet, to be followed by yet another encore, "Hoedown" from his "Rodeo."

Calculated to send us home with hearts and feet a'dancing — a most remarkable scene and an overwhelmingly remarkable concert.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From 1 5 JUN 1960

"BULLETIN,"

Sydney, N.S.W.

Nearly everybody at the preview-party for the Theatre Design Exhibition in David Jones' Art Gallery seemed to be "going-on" to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and fur coats (mostly of the full-length ermine type) were the vogue. Miss Margaret Gillespie, who organised the exhibition in aid of the Opera House Appeal, welcomed the guests, who included Mr. Robin Bailey (who was "going-on," needless to say, to "My Fair Lady" because he's the star of it) and Mrs. Bailey, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Langker, Director of Education, H. D. Wyndham and Mrs. Wyndham (going-on to "Mon Oncle"), singers Kenneth Neate and Heather Beatty, designer Desmonde Downing (whose set for "The Piccadilly Bushman" excited much admiration), A.B.C. "set-men" (if that's the right term), Douglas Smith (remember his set for TV "Hamlet"?), James Hall, Ronald Wolveridge and Michael Santry, many North Shore Liners including Mr. and Mrs. Neils Giddings, and three handsome ladies on holidays from Melbourne, Miss Jean Carter, Miss Elva Breen and Miss Trixie Johnstone.

The following afternoon the exhibition was opened for the public by Lady Lloyd Jones, and the Consul-General for Denmark, Mr. Henning Hergal, announced the winners. First prize went to J. Blain (Brisbane) for "The Lark" setting, second to Joan A. Swinbourne for her setting for "Peter and the Wolf," and third prize to Algis Butavicius (Canberra) for his "Waiting for Godot" set. The latter's set for "The Voyage of Magellan" was also highly commended, as was "Street-car Called Desire" by John E. Atkinson, and "The Crucible" by A. Arkinstall.

☆ ☆ ☆

Est. 1904

AUSTRALIAN PRE

Melbourne, V

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 5 JUN 1960

Music was fine—if you could hear it

By JOHN SINCLAIR, The Herald Music Critic

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ended its Australian tour with what was probably a magnificent concert under Charles Munch in the Olympic Swimming Stadium last night.

I say "probably" because from one of the dearest seats, I could not hear well enough to enjoy or assess the playing.

It was not pleasant to sit through a performance of Berlioz's "Fantastic Symphony" to be tantalised by fragments of beautiful sound and exasperated by the confusion, lifelessness and falsity of the orchestral tone as a whole.

NEW SEAT

After interval, with nothing to lose and perhaps something to gain, I sat in the tiered section above the orchestra.

The sound, although far from ideal, was much better, and I was able to gain some idea of the beauty of playing in Dello Joio's "Variations, Chaconne and Finale," and Roussel's "Bacchus and Ariane" suite.

But it was still impossible to hear a clear and balanced sound. I could hear the violas, but not the first violins; and the acoustics of the building placed disastrous emphasis on the tympani.

In short the promises made by the ABC and the Americans that the acoustics would be satisfactory were not fulfilled and, but for Monday night's concert in the Town Hall, I for one, would not feel that I had heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

From JUN 1960

"BULLETIN,"

Sydney, N.S.W.

June 15, 1960

TALKIES
THEATRE
MUSIC
ART

SUNDRY SHOWS

Stage and Music

The Boston in Brisbane

The distinctive sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra became evident as it struck-up the Australian and U.S. anthems. Once it got the feel of the acoustics of the Brisbane City Hall and had begun to stir-up the passions of Beethoven's "Eroica" excitement began to mount. One never suspected that music could be quite as breathtaking as this. Records seem quite inadequate to catch the power and splendor of this orchestra in full flight.

Conductor Charles Münch used the same programme here as for his first Moscow concert in 1956, putting the "Eroica" first, just as Beethoven wanted.

The Boston reputation for satin-smooth tone did not get in the way of some fierce touches in the symphony; these polished string-players knew well how to provide an almost rough, masculine sound when it was wanted. Nevertheless, the very perfection of their playing was itself a distraction. It was sometimes hard not to admire details of phrasing and warmth of tone at the expense of the music itself. Rarely had basses sounded so audible, and the fine discipline of the whole band driven along under the urgent beat of the conductor was a joy to watch as well as to hear.

When they came to the novelty of the programme it was possible to revel in the sheer beauty of sound for its own sake Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony was written with the Boston Symphony in mind, and it is a hand-tailored fit. Solo players fell with delight on passages specially written for them, and the 'cello leader produced such a rich tone that one could forget that in writing for the orchestra Piston forgot to write for himself. The music was lively, spectacular, even moving in the adagio, but quite impersonal just the same.

The concert ended with a stunning performance of Ravel's second suite from "Daphnis and Chloe." This piece the Bostonians regard with pride; no other orchestra, they feel, can touch them in it. Münch, twirling his long baton like a whirlwind, drew from his players a staggering sound at the climaxes. It seemed almost tangible—even more powerful than the wild applause that followed.

Reading the programme beforehand, one thought greedily of the music the orchestra might have played if it had stayed longer. Wagner and Berlioz were obvious, so what better than some of both as encores? Münch, aware that the occasion was burning deep into the minds of his audience, showed no signs of wanting to stop.

Perhaps Boston audiences have become used to their splendid orchestra. Here, where its brilliance has to be sampled in one-night stands, no one was ashamed to stand and stare. It may be a long time before we hear its like again.

D.J.M.

◆ ◆ ◆

The Boston in Sydney

One of the most striking features of this giant orchestra—the second-oldest of America's symphonic organisations and the first to come to Australia—is that it is mainly composed of men who are middle-aged to elderly; there are only three women among the 108 members. Another, even more striking, feature is the youthful vigor and eagerness with which the veterans and the sprinkling of younger men tackle the job in hand. The split-second responses, the overall discipline and the beauty of tone in the mass are to be marvelled at.

The orchestra's permanent conductor, Charles Münch, had charge of the first concert in Sydney. A stocky, silver-haired man, he bustles up to the podium, with a quick nod acknowledges the applause, whirls around, and within two seconds his forces are stuck into it. His style is crisp and forthright, and his adjurations range from a gentle rocking on his feet with both arms down full-stretch at his sides to great flailings when he slips them into overdrive. The results he got amounted to the most exciting event Sydney has enjoyed in big music.

Münch came up initially with an Olympian work to match the size of his orchestra: Berlioz's "Fantastic Symphony." In all music there is nothing like this delirious, anguished portrayal of the composer's white-hot infatuation for the Irish actress Henrietta Smithson, and no better symphony could have been chosen to show-off the Boston's capabilities.

Münch drove-along the flamboyant first section, which is mostly Byronic passion raised to powerhouse voltage, with what might too lightly have been taken to be frenzy, but only appeared to be that. It was always under complete control as he drew special tone-colors from this or that instrument or group of instruments while riding-out the storm. The Waltz was a long stream of lyrical beauty to which the high strings and the harps—this orchestra rates two of them—contribute so richly.

There was plenty of rustic charm in the "Scene in the Meadows" movement, preluded by an enchanting duet between oboe and English-horn.

Violence was ushered in with the unrelenting, ominous rhythms of the "March to the Gallows" section and here tumultuous outbursts, followed without modulation by measured steps, were brilliantly effective. The closing part, "Witches' Sabbath," was all diabolic orgy, and here the percussion-section used not the tubular bells of our own resident orchestras but two great brass bells, the biggest looking as if it weighed close to 200lb., and banged with a big mallet. The final dance to the parody of the Dies Iræ was a whirlwind beautifully integrated.

Modern orchestral colorations are cleverly fused with classical procedures in "Variations, Chaconne and Finale" by the contemporary American composer Norman Dello Joio, here given its first hearing in Australia. A very listenable work, with agreeable melodies and strong rhythmic patterns, it was played with great feeling.

Roussel's "Bacchus and Ariadne" Ballet, Second Suite, gave the lie to someone's claim that Roussel "possessed every desirable characteristic of a great composer except the power of invention." Invention there is, and plenty of it, in this meticulously crafted dance-piece which always has the accent on gracefulness, a quality which Dr. Münch—who here, as in the Berlioz, dispensed with a score—brought out in the loveliest vein. The work of some of the principal desks was of virtuoso standard. A good deal of the solo work fell on the principal clarinetist, who produced a superbly mellow tone.

S.W.K.

◆ ◆ ◆

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

15 JUN 1960

Flowers of ours

FASCINATED to see poinsettias growing in the open air in Brisbane and Sydney, Mrs Thomas Perry, wife of the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a keen gardener when she is at her home in the Boston suburb of Hingham.

"Poinsettias are always grown under cover in Boston," she said, "and they are at their best at Christmas time, when they make wonderfully cheerful room decorations."

Sculpturing and reading are also Mrs Perry's interests. Biographies are her favorite books, she says, when she has time to read. She does sculpturing in the summer months at classes in her home town.

Mrs Perry has already accompanied her husband on two tours to Europe with the orchestra, but this is her first visit to Australia.

"I wish I had more time to [illegible] the country. You [illegible] see much from the air," she said.

"I have not even had time to get some souvenirs to take home to my two young sons. So far, all I have collected is one small Australian opal!"

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

[illegible] JUN 1960

Boston's full value missed

By JOHN SINCLAIR, Herald Music Critic

THERE must be thousands of music lovers in Melbourne today whose minds are filled with the remembered sounds of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Such luxurious music-making is an experience not to be forgotten. Yet with all gratitude it is regrettable that this orchestra's visit to Melbourne was not exploited to the best advantage.

Why, for instance, was Melbourne denied the chance to hear a major work by Aaron Copland with the composer conducting?

To my mind no excuses could justify such a serious omission.

Why also was the conducting not shared so that Charles Munch conducted half of the concert in the Town Hall and half of the one in the Swimming Stadium?

As it was we heard a magnificent orchestra but not magnificent playing in the Town Hall while the sound of the Boston Orchestra at its best (as it surely is under Munch) was lost in the vastness of the Swimming Stadium.

It would, I think, be foolish and very undesirable to compare the Boston Orchestra with the Czech Philharmonic (which visited Australia last year) in an effort to decide which was the better.

They are two great but entirely different ensembles and it would be a wise listener who tried simply to discern and enjoy the characteristic qualities of each orchestra and left it at that.

However, it is worth adding that we would be wise also to accept the fact that Australia is not likely to have an orchestra of comparable standard within this century.

We are not as rich as the Americans nor as musical as the Czechs. It takes a long time to build a fine orchestra and to develop the communal love of music which is essential to an orchestra's existence.

The good thing is that we have begun and the visit of the Boston orchestra should inspire us to redouble our efforts.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 6 JUN 1960

Page Four

★ Record Previews ★

H.M.S. Pinafore, Recitals by Boston Orchestras

A new performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's Pinafore, discs by the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops orchestras, Gershwin songs by Pearl Bailey, and dance sessions from English and European bands are prominent in the new stereo releases.

Pinafore, one of the most popular of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas, is performed in its entirety—music and dialogue—for the first time in the new stereo recording.

The two-disc album is in presentation box.

The opera was "pirated" in America even before it was an established success in London.

Cast includes John Reed (Porter), Jeffrey Skitch (Corcoran), Thomas Round (Rackstraw), Donald Adams (Deadeye), Jean Hindmarsh (Josephine), Gillian Knight (Little Buttercup) and the D'Oyly Carte opera company.

Stereo

Gilbert and Sullivan operas are effectively reproduced on stereo.

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra performing in Australia opportunity is being taken by RCA to release a selection from the wide range of this fine orchestra's repertoire.

In The French Touch the orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, presents three middle-of-the-road pieces—Dukas's The Sorcerer's Apprentice Saint-Saen's Omphale's Spinning Wheel, and Ravel's Mother Goose Suite.

It is an attractively recorded recital.

Fiedler Conducts Ballet Suites —Two "Firsts" for Australia

The Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, has two "firsts"—for Australia in ballet suites based on the march tune, Stars and Stripes, and in Gottschalk's Cakewalk.

Both pieces were commissioned by the New York City Ballet of young American composers and arranger Hershy Kay.

As befits the piece, Stars and Stripes has five movements (or campaigns) which are danced by "regiments."

Cakewalk follows the classical pattern of the minstrel show.

Pearl Bailey in Film Score Songs

Pearl Bailey, who both acts and sings the role of Maria in the newly released film Porgy and Bess, includes some of the songs from the score in Pearl Bailey Sings Porgy and Bess (Roulette l-p).

The 12-track recital also includes other Gershwin melodies.

Miss Bailey has a very expressive voice, and she is suitably accompanied by orchestra and singing group.

I Got Plenty o' Nuttin', Summertime, Lady Be Good, Bess You Is My Woman, They [illegible] Take That Away from [illegible] A Woman is a Sometime Thing.

Dance orchestras from both sides of the English Channel provide a variety of dance music.

Edmundo Ros's London orchestra features 12 Latin American arrangements in Ramona, Jealousy, and Estrellita are among the titles.

Dixieland jazz is dominant in Dixie For Dancing (Polydor l-p) with 12 titles from the Hazy Osterwald Sextet, a little-know but well-performed European group.

Many of the popular Dixieland titles are in the recital which includes Muskrat Ramble, At the Jazzband Ball, Baby Won't You Please Come Home, At the Darktown Strutter's Ball, and Royal Garden Blues.

Lively, rhythmical music by Johann Strauss is performed by the Musical Arts Symphony Orchestra conducted by Leonard Sorkin in Music of Johann Strauss (Concert-disc l-p).

The six titles are among the most popular of the Viennese composer's music —Die Fledermaus overture, Pizzicato Polka, The Blue Danube and Emperor waltzes, Perpetual Motion, and Tales From Vienna Woods.

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

1 6 JUN 1960

LETTER

Televising The Boston

SIR. — CHARLES Munch, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copeland and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are to be congratulated for the musical feast they have given to Australian audiences. Especially the rich and intelligent performance of Symphonie Fantastique by Berlioz televised from the Olympic Pool at their farewell appearance.

Congratulations must also go to ABV-2 for televising this concert, thereby giving pleasure to many thousands of people.

One must, however, question the artistry of the ABV-2 technicians televising this performance. In most instances the number of musicians "in the picture" was seven. Invariably the section on camera was the section not playing.

And while Mr. Munch may not be a vain man, surely he, too, would have been disconcerted to know his left hand only, flopped up and down on the screen so constantly that one wondered if it were an advertisement for one of Tom Lehrer's sick songs.

More incredible was the lack of shots of full orchestra which are so necessary to a livingroom audience. Only two full views were shown, neither with telescopic lens.

It is fortunate that this film is not for overseas viewing for it would reflect poorly on the talent of our Australian directors who are, in fact, capable of producing world-class programmes.

G. RICHARDSON (Ivanhoe).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

1 7 JUN 1960

Encores

AFTER attending the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert here I'll never be satisfied with the SA Symphony Orchestra until its numbers are increased.

By the way, I noticed some people left immediately the Americans finished their scheduled program. But the orchestra played two brief, wonderful Aaron Copland pieces as encores. These rightly, drew applause which threatened to cause Centennial Hall to collapse.

So, those who left in such a rude hurry missed the Boston "Pops."

LITTLE JACK THUMB

Glenunga.

Est. 1904

AUSTRALIA

M

From

1 7 JUN

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

JN 1960

The Boston Orchestra

SIR, —IN REPLY TO A. S. Marshall (18/6) the A.B.C. will be repeating programmes given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Australia. Dates arranged are June 25, at 11 a.m.; in Concert Hall on June 27, July 4, 22 and 28, and on August 5, 12 and 16, at 12 noon.

The commission has also obtained the rights to repeat all programmes played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Australia.

While most of the broadcasts were direct presentations in our night sessions, research figures clearly show the peak radio audiences to be day-time listeners. For this reason, a number of our major programmes, such as those of the Boston Orchestra, are now broadcast during the day.

The A.B.C. endeavors to cater for all listeners' tastes by arranging broadcast times for a wide range of preferences including music, drama, sporting, talks and rural affairs

It may well be that individual listeners would like more accent on their personal preferences, but we believe that the proportions allotted to the various types of radio programmes do go a long way towards satisfying a major section of the community

E. CHAPPLE (Manager for Victoria, Australian Broadcasting Commission)

From

"COURIER MAIL"

Brisbane, Qld.

17 JUN

Music tour

WELLINGTON, N.Z. (A.A.P.).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived here by air yesterday from Melbourne for a two-day tour.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

15 JUN 1960

Herald, 15/6/60—P.3

In BLACK and WHITE

[illegible] the Boston Symphony Orchestra on in the swimming pool on a Sunday. Although, actually, they tell us members of the orchestra quite enjoyed the competition from the trains and trams last night.

Especially when the adagio movement of Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique" was ending on the dying phrases of the wind instruments — and in came the blast of a train siren from across the Jolimont yards.

We found it hard concentrating on the music. Kept thinking how much more frequently the trams run in Batman-av. than they ever do on our line.

★

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Shepparton, Vic.

17 JUN 1960

MUSIC GROUP JOURNEYS TO MELBOURNE

Thirteen members of the Youth Music Group journeyed to Melbourne to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Olympic Swimming Pool.

The concert was thoroughly enjoyed by all and members would like to thank Mr. Mal. Erskine and Mr. Alan Bonnett for transport. Those who travelled to Melbourne were: John Bentley, Mal. Erskine, Alan Bonnett, Roger Bonnett, Ron Whitehead, David Stephens, Janice Craig, Barbara Pither, Pamela Pearce, Judith Bonnett, Elaine Cockburn and Vencie Blewer.

The next meeting of the Group will be held on Tuesday, June 21, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. T. Bonnett, 39 Rea street, and the programme is entitled "Jazz in June."

From

"LISTENER-IN"

Melbourne, Vic.

18 JUN 1960

Music on the Air

B.S.O. brilliant, dynamic

The outstanding musical event of the week was, of course, the first Melbourne concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, heard over 3LO on Monday night.

This was not the orchestra's first broadcast here, but it was certainly their most direct and successful from the standpoint of Melbourne listeners.

For satisfactory reproduction of an orchestra of this size, with a dynamic range as extensive as they employed in the Tschaikowsky Fifth Symphony, you need a first-class receiver.

For this kind of music your transistor portable is worse than useless, and even a good mantel set will not do it justice. In fact, when it comes to a good, full-blooded fortissimo, which one would normally find exciting in the concert hall, even the best reproduction is likely to sound rather nerve-shattering.

On the other hand, a full orchestra reduced to the genteel level of background music is not worth listening to.

And certainly the Boston Orchestra under Richard Burgin gave us a brilliant and dynamic account of the Tschaikovsky Fifth, which made some of the more bombastic climaxes truly exciting to hear.

Of course the orchestra is a highly-developed musical machine; but in certain of the climactic passages it has a nervous tautness in its response to the conductor that is far more important than mere mechanical precision.

However, artistic value is not to be judged on either size or power, and one of the finest musical broadcasts I have heard for a long time came from four unaccompanied voices recorded in an English church.

This quartet, which included the well-known male alto Alfred Deller, sang the four-part Mass of William Byrd; and whether this work was intended for a quartet or for a full choir, the result was ideal for reproduction.

To most modern ears the music of this period tends to sound remote and rather monotonous, and even Palestrina, regarded by most of the specialists as almost a god, sounds rather cold.

But personally, I find the masses of William Byrd warm and human — almost romantic; and in this particular performance the voices, although pure, were sufficiently warm to escape Anna Russell's classification as "the pure and sexless."

S. G. Dunn

This week's laurels to:

RICHARD BURGIN and the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA for their first Melbourne concert (3LO, Monday).

251

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

18 JUN 1960 Melbourne, Vic.

The Week In Radio

THE TWO MELBOURNE broadcasts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week were a listening experience not to be forgotten readily or to be disregarded as a lesson in orchestral management.

What seems to stand out now that the players have departed is that an orchestra is just as good as its conductor makes it, and that a permanent conductor of high calibre is the one solution to most orchestral problems. I think it was Klemperer, some years ago, who said: "There are no bad orchestras: only bad conductors."

For many years the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been in the hands of one man. It may have played under other conductors, but it has always had a distinctive head whose hand has been its guiding factor. Its world-wide reputation came into being through recordings under the direction of the brilliant Serge Koussevitsky and now Charles Munch is the man in charge.

There is only one regret at the swift passing of this most effective combination. The first half of Monday night's concert was not broadcast and many of us would have been glad to hear the Mahler Tenth Symphony Adagio.

I still cannot understand an organisation which was formed chiefly to broadcast the best kind of entertainment, which imports the world's greatest artists for that purpose and then refuses to broadcast them. It does not make sense. There was nothing of any consequence on 3LO's Monday programme between 8 and 9 p.m. that could not have been postponed.

And the music from the Tuesday night Olympic Pool concert did sound a little dead in spite of microphonic adjacency. Some of it evidently was lost in the uninhabited desert of the pool's length.

As something of a set-off against the brilliance of the orchestra we were given two injections of the also brilliant Sviatoslav Richter, one in Sunday night's Music Lovers' Hour in the Schumann Piano Concerto, and the other among the celebrity records late on Tuesday night in Schubert's A Minor Piano Sonata.

It was an interesting performance, but the late Dinu Lipatti still holds the palm for the most perfect interpretation of this lovely work.

The Schubert A Minor was a different proposition. Here Richter was on his own and untrammelled by an orchestra that might not have suited his mood.

We have been hearing a lot of Schumann lately because this is the sesqui-centenary of his birth. Last week end we had his Piano Quintet from the Paul McDermott Quartet plus pianist Raymond Lambert—an excellent performance, but Schumann's chamber music, like his symphonies, clearly tells us that this was not his best medium.

— By ARIEL

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"NEWS"

Adelaide, S.A.

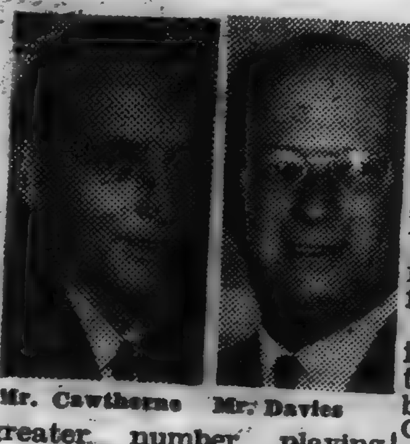
Bigger orchestra? 'yes, by all means!'

"Yes, please! By all means let's have a bigger symphony orchestra—particularly in the string section," SA musician Mr. Lloyd Davies said today.

Mr. Davies is principal study master of violin at Elder Conservatorium.

He has just returned to Adelaide after a seven-month study leave tour of Britain and Europe.

Mr. Davies was commeeting on suggestions made by John Fahey in two feature articles in The News recently that our permanent symphony orchestra should be increased from 45 to 75 permanent members and its repertoire extended to include promenade "pops" (mainly light classics).



Mr. Cawthorne Mr. Davies

Need balance

"It would not be practical at this stage to increase the orchestra to 75 members," said Mr. Davies.

"First of all we must get balance. And to do this we need about another 16 strings.

"At present we are sacrificing quality for noise. A small number of strings playing loudly can never give the same effect as a greater number playing within their true capacity.

"The SA Government has been generous in the past with its subsidy," he said. "It is to be hoped it will be even more generous in the future."

Mr. Davies is strongly in favor of the introduction of "pops," provided greater works are not sacrificed for the lighter classics.

Mr. Peter Cawthorne, of Cawthorne's Music Warehouse, yesterday said it would be a wonderful thing if Adelaide could have more orchestral concerts of light classics and the best stage show tunes.

He would also like to see performances of real jazz (the Dave Brubeck variety, for instance), as distinct from hit parade numbers.

Mr. Cawthorne was taking part in a discussion on the public taste in music broadcast from Maughan Church, Franklin street, City.

Noting the success of the Festival of Arts and the Boston Symphony Orchestra's visit, he said the general standard of Adelaide's musical appreciation had risen considerably in the past few years.

The future of music in SA lay with the younger people, who could learn—without being forced — that music did not begin and end with rock 'n' roll.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"HERALD"

Melbourne, Vic.

16 JUN 1960

★ The Classics

OUR latest visitors, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appear on several new records. One of the most immediately appealing is "The French Touch" (RCA Stereo SL16227, Mono L16227).

The disc has three works, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" (Dukas), "Omphale's Spinning Wheel" (Saint-Saens) and "Mother Goose Suite" (Ravel), each of which could be described as a tone picture painted by a very fine orchestra. Musical director of the orchestra, Charles Munch, conducts.

The Boston Symphony's lighter cousin, the Boston Pops Orchestra (which has many members of the Symphony) may also be heard in two new ballets, "Stars and Stripes" and "Cakewalk" (RCA Stereo SL16228, Mono L16228).

They were both arranged by Hershy Kay — "Stars and Stripes" from the music of Sousa, retaining the martial air but changing the tempos and orchestration while "Cakewalk" is arranged "after" music by a New Orleans writer, Louis Moreau Gottschalk, and recalls minstrel days.

Kay is an ingenious writer and if you're looking for light new works the disc should appeal. Founder of the "Pops," Arthur Fiedler, makes sure things go well.

A most economical issue is a single disc of the Beethoven "Symphony No. 9 in D Minor" ("Choral") played by L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande with chorus and soloists (including Australian Joan Sutherland) conducted by Ernest Ansermet (Ace Of Clubs ACLA77).

Not only is it a money-saving performance it is also quite a good one with particularly good female solos (the above Miss Sutherland and contralto Norma Procter).

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

18 JUN 1960

A.B.C.'s Stiff Necked Policy

SIR,—MAY I, ON BEHALF of all country music lovers, congratulate the A.B.C. on its unswerving determination never, in any circumstances, to deviate from its policy of broadcasting no more than half of any orchestral concert on any given night — even when such a distinguished body of musicians as the Boston Symphony Orchestra is visiting Australia, and even when the same orchestra is here at the very special request of the Broadcasting Commission itself.

How much more exciting is it for us to sit and listen to our Monday night theatre, or even to a world-shattering account of scallop fishers in Tasmania, when we know that our city friends—and the executives of the Broadcasting Commission, too — are filling Melbourne Town Hall or the swimming pool at the stadium, and listening to this world-famous orchestra that is evidently not worth broadcasting in full to the poorer country cousins.

I know, of course, that this futile letter will evoke no response at all from our broadcasting commission's dictatorship.

But it is perhaps well for the commission to know that there is at least one voice besides that of "The Age" radio commentator, Ariel, who is crying in the arid wilderness of radio officialdom.

A. S. MARSHALL (Queenscliff).

From

"TRUTH"

Melbourne, Vic.

18 JUN 1960

● MUSIC CRITICS said the Boston Symphony Orchestra was perfect, flawless, incomparable, faultless, and unimaginably excellent, not to say good. But they still managed to find a deal wrong with its playing.

From

"TRUTH"

Melbourne, Vic.

18 JUN 1960

● ACCORDING to RUTH NYE (2), the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA played in the Olympic Swimming Pool. Would not be the first entertainers to finish in liquidation.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From Express

18 JUN 1960 Launceston Tas

An interesting album both historically and musically is R.C.A.'s "HISTORY OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY AND BOSTON POPS." America's most active orchestra today, The Symphony and Pops plays a wide range of works under Karl Muck, Serge Kousseviitsky and Charles Munch. Milton Cross and Leslie Rogers are the narrators.

18 THE NEW ZEALAND HERALD, SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1960

PACKED TOWN HALL ACCLAIMS VISITING ORCHESTRA: Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Auckland last night. The visitors received a tumultuous reception.

OLYMPIANS OF MUSIC

Great Ovation For Orchestra

Never did orchestral playing in Auckland arouse such enthusiasm as that accorded last night to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its concert at the Town Hall goes down as one of the greatest events in New Zealand music.

Seats were at a premium. The Town Hall was packed to its limits by a crowd which noticeably took care to arrive on time and to give its keenest attention to every note played.

The air of expectancy in the hall as eight o'clock approached was something to be experienced. Let the folding door to the stage merely begin to open for any entry of the conductor and conversation froze at once into silence.

Rapt attention, which silenced all coughing except between movements, gave place to applause that knew no bounds at the end of each of the three major works played.

Good Reason

There was, of course, good reason for all this. Never before has so large an orchestra or one of such repute played here.

For the great majority of the audience it was the opening up of a new world of orchestral brilliance, with new limits of sound (for the Boston is numerically considerably stronger than the Czech orchestra on its visit last year) and a new vista of technical accomplishment.

The hundred players were packed into less stage space than is ordinarily occupied by our own orchestra, and with a different distribution on the sections. There was a little last-minute carpentry on some stands, and then for two blissful hours such a luxury of sound as only an orchestra of this size and tradition could produce.

Long History

What comes from the Boston Symphony is the product of a long history. Conductors of world eminence have in turn shaped its musical destinies. Behind what Charles Munch gave us last night lies the background of training from Koussevitzky, Monteux and many another distinguished name.

The result of all this is quite simply better music than we have ever heard played here before. It is not only that so large a body of strings are able to produce a glory of string tone far surpassing that of our ordinary hearing, or even that every one of these players is a highly skilled executant.

Here is an orchestra that has gone so much farther in the finer points of tonal balance, in meticulous accuracy whether of chords or of bravura passage playing, in the subtleties of tone colour, and in complete precision. Its range of dynamics is tremendous.

One could only marvel last night as one facet after another of its brilliance was revealed — the breathtaking glissandos of the strings, the complete evenness of six horns, the bite of a real sforzando in the low strings, the character of the tympani playing, the art that went even into a tambourine or castanet entry. The audience was visibly carried away by it all.

Interest began at once with the much slower than usual playing of our own National Anthem, followed immediately by the American Anthem. Then came the formal programme—a standard symphony, a contemporary American symphony, and a Ravel suite that is a tour de force of orchestral colouring.

Lived Up to Name

The "Eroica" lived up to its name. This, one felt, especially as it moved on, was how it was meant to sound. For the funeral march Dr Munch set a tempo whose slowness would have caught a less highly trained orchestra out.

But slow or fast—and both the Scherzo and Finale went at a sparkling pace—the orchestra gave the "Eroica" a significance that for one listener at least it had never had before.

Once one knows that the sixth symphony of Walter Piston has been specially written with the Boston in mind, it is hard to hear it for the first time as a piece of absolute music. One tended instead to couple up a Piston line with the players concerned and so lose the overall symphonic picture.

Miracle of Colour

The "Daphnis and Chloe" suite of Ravel was a miracle of tone colour and technical brilliance that will long be remembered. Previous versions were pale shadows beside this virtuoso orchestral playing in excelsis. From the delicacy of the opening sunrise scene to the final magnesium-like flare it held all spellbound.

Called back again and again, Dr Munch gave two encores, an Air and Allegro from Handel's "Water Music," the air dissolving into a silence that left everyone almost afraid to breathe.

Waiting outside the Town Hall were huge transporters to carry the instruments to the airport—a grim reminder that this glorious listening was so soon over. But its impact will long be felt.—L.C.M.S.

Ambassador At Reception After Concert

A City Council reception was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra after its perform-

---

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

22 JUN 1960

From

"BULLETIN,"

Sydney, N.S.W.

* * *

The occasional whistle of a train and the rumble of a passing tram were the only jarring notes when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the second and final concert at the Olympic Swimming Stadium. Lieut.-Governor Sir Edmund Herring, Dame Mary Herring and their daughter Margaret were the special guests. Others in the official party included Acting Prime Minister McEwen and Mrs. McEwen, U.S. Ambassador W. J. Sebald, Federal Treasurer Harold Holt, Minister for State Forests Alec Fraser and Mrs. Fraser, Lord Mayor Bernard Evans and the Lady Mayoress, University Chancellor Sir Arthur Dean and Lady Dean, Vice-Chancellor Sir George Paton and Lady Paton, Sir John Latham, U.S. Consul William F. Ryan and Mrs. Ryan (they entertained some of the official party at a supper-party at Menzies after the performance), and Mrs. Arthur Calwell and her daughter Mary. Cornelia Otis Skinner, visiting American actress, was also at the concert. The official party was welcomed by A.B.C. general-manager Charles Moses, and the Victorian manager Ewart Chapple and Mrs. Chapple.

253

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"RECORDER"

Port Pirie, S.A.

22 JUN 1960

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA DELIGHTS AUDIENCE

Although the weather was extremely cold, a large audience gave the S.A. Symphony Orchestra a very warm reception at its performance of "Treasures of Music" at the town hall on Monday night.

The orchestra was under the direction of the resident conductor, Mr. Henry Krips.

The first half of the programme consisted of the overture of the "Marriage of Figaro," a very gay and lively piece of music, and Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Op. 64."

This symphony was included following many requests for a well-known world famous symphony to be played.

It is the one which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play in Adelaide.

The second part of the concert was in a much lighter vein, beginning with the "Fete Polonaise", by Chabrier, from the light opera "Le Roi Malgre Lui" (A King in Spite of Himself).

The guest artist for the night, Adelaide soprano Rae Cocking, next appeared and sang "Vissi d'Arte," from Puccini's "Tosca."

This was followed by the playing of an Australian composition by Alfred Hill who, at 90 years of age, is still composing.

It was "The Moon's Gold Horn" — a very dreamy "moonlighty" piece of music.

Miss Cocking returned to sing "And This is My Beloved," a well-known piece from "Kismet."

She received a great ovation and, as an encore, sang "I'm in Love With Vienna."

"The Tivoli Suite," written by Ulrich Sommerlatte, chief music arranger of Hilversum Radio, Holland, was very popular with the audience.

It consisted of three movements — "Nightbirds," "Strange Intermezzo," and "Joyous Promenade."

The last item was "Pomp and Circumstance, No. 1," composed by Elgar. The melody of this march was later allied to the words of "Land of Hope and Glory."

Although receiving thunderous applause, Mr. Krips declined to give an encore, explaining that members of the orchestra were tired as they had left Adelaide early that morning and had given two concerts.

In thanking the audience for their appreciation, he said that the way they had received the orchestra had been "really wonderful."

Mr. Krips and members of the orchestra were entertained at a supper prepared by the Port Pirie A.B.C. Orchestral Concerts Committee.

The mayor (Mr. H. B. Welch) welcomed the guests and thanked them for a delightful performance.

The A.B.C. concert manager, Mr. Chris Symons, in turn, thanked the committee for a delightful supper.

The supper was convened by Mrs. B. C. Cunningham (wife of the secretary) and Mrs. A. C. Ball.

Mesdames C. R. Hannan and A. C. Ball were in charge of the floral arrangements.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

Australian Press Cuttings

Stalbridge Chambers,
443 Little Collins Street,
Melbourne, Victoria.

From 22 JUN 1960

"BULLETIN,"

.W.

Richard Burgin, associate-conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was a guest at the luncheon arranged by the English-Speaking Union at the Delphic in honor of the orchestra. Guests were welcomed by Mr. Justice Sholl and Mrs. Sholl. Other members of the orchestra present included the manager of the orchestra, Mr. T. D. Perry, and his wife, Mr. L. Speyer, Mr. G. Humphrey, Mr. K. Smith, Mr. Roland Tapley and Mr. L. Stone Street. The Director of the U.S. Information Service (Mr. Le Van Roberts), Miss Dorothy Coles, Mr. Howard King and U.S. Information Officer, Dr. W. K. Braun, and Mrs. Braun were in the official party. Among the 150 guests were Mrs. K. Nisbet, Miss Beryl Kimber, Elise Steele, Elsa Haas, Mr. M. D. Solow (Jerusalem), Mrs. Max Dietrich, Mrs. W. J. Wark, Mr. and Mrs. William Banks, Iris Williams, Joan Sutherland Smith, Jean Cameron and Anne Swallow.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"ADVOCATE"

Melbourne, Vic.

23 JUN 1960

By Eileen Geary

Music

Orchestra's Class Won in Stadium

TO hear the renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra perform under the direction of the equally renowned conductor, Charles Munch, in the uninspiring surroundings of the Melbourne Olympic Stadium might be compared to viewing a masterpiece of architecture with impaired vision.

A review of this orchestral concert has its difficulties for, even with the improvement in acoustics effected at the stadium, there were drawbacks to the complete enjoyment of the performance. An account of this orchestra's excellence must of necessity be bolstered by inferences, from foreknowledge, and by common sense, for such was the unparalleled discipline of this body of first-class musicians that the orchestral music reached the ears lessened in significance, but not shredded or distorted like the music of most concerts held in the same surroundings.

The choice of the "Fantastic Symphony," by Hector Berlioz, for the first half of the programme could not be bettered, for this work fascinates the majority of listeners, challenges the conductor's power of welding an interpretation into a poetic unit, and demands from all instrumental groups a mastery in the field of colour range and dynamics.

One could gain some idea of the authority and fine musical intellect of the conductor, Charles Munch, from the performance of this symphony which would have conformed to the composer's demands for understanding and passionate expression of his music, and of the excellence of instrumental technique, remembered from passages like the ethereal movement of strings for the scene at the ball, or the great beauty of wind playing in the pastoral scene, when even intermittent silence seemed part of the music's enchantment. But it might be mentioned that it was a short-lived enchantment, with the return to grim reality on the rattle of passing trams, far less romantic than the word which drew Keats away from his nightingale reveries.

The last two movements of the "Fantastic Symphony" suffered from a dimming of outline, with the "Witches' Sabbath" sounding attenuated, with little projection of the music's demoniac elements.

Della Joio's "Variations, Chaconne, and Finale,"" which has a liturgical theme for the basis of the work, sounded least affected by the conditions in the building, probably because this ingeniously written music has a strong limning of thematic material. The orchestra gave a magnificent performance of these variations, outlining themes with firm clarity, while maintaining steady command of the music's harmonic texture and intricate rhythm.

One of Roussel's most attractive work's, his Bacchus and Ariane ballet suite, had a performance from which it was not always possible to distinguish finer points of detail, but which was remarkable for fluency of movement and brilliant sweeps of colour.

While admitting the frustrations of hearing one of the world's great orchestras in one of the world's unsuitable musical settings, one must concede there is some reason to admit that "half a loaf is better than none."

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"LISTENER-IN"

Melbourne, Vic.

25 JUN 1960

Boston

HUNGARIAN REVOLT DRAMA DREW TERRIFYING PICTURE

The national television channel spent a great deal of money last week catering for its more sophisticated customers. Two prestige "live" shows — a telecast of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a drama of the Hungarian revolution — will probably be marked down by the rating pollsters, but nevertheless aroused more public discussion than the week's full stable of Westerns and the whole battery of Private Eyes.

Through a Looking Glass

BY "ION"

The job of telecasting an hour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance in the Olympic Swimming Pool, with all its acoustic oddities, must have been a production headache. Yet it was done so well that the stay-at-home audience from the comfort of their armchairs could enjoy the remarkable music without even the distractions of brasses reverberating or trams hurtling past, which bothered people who sat it out on the hard seats of the pool.

Orchestral concerts can probably never be transferred with full impact to the little screen. Nevertheless, the ABC on this occasion gave us a memorable reproduction. If in watching it you perhaps hankered for the real thing, isn't that the most satisfactory response possible?

As postscript, may I suggest that the channel might profitably devote a couple of minutes before such an important musical event to throw a test pattern on the screen? I found difficulty tuning to the concert after the stridency of an Ann Sothern comedy.

The second notable feature on ABC programs last week was Wednesday night's play, "Shadow of Heroes," by Robert Ardrey. In its time the ABC has been guilty of some deplorably woolly excursions into political drama, but here at last the assignment was tackled in terms that were intelligible and moving.

Central figures in the play were the two famous Hungarian patriots, Laszlo Rajk and his wife Julia, who carried on the battle for their country's freedom for 13 years before the revolution burst out and was crushed under the tracks of Russian tanks.

Laszlo's death was a match which helped to set it alight, and Julia vanished with a party of Hungarians under Prime Minister Imre Nagy who were later tricked into leaving sanctuary at the Jugoslav Embassy and were captured by the Russians.

Robert Ardrey, an American roving correspondent, dramatised the story of the Rajks, their friends and enemies, with controlled anger and the bitterness that springs from the sight of brave human decencies defeated.

His mood was mirrored by producer William Sterling and a team of Melbourne actors. I did not see the earlier production at the Little Theatre, but I find it hard to believe that the original stage version could have come across with more acid sharpness than the Sterling adaptation. It drew with terrifying clarity a picture of a massed momentum of evil distorting men's mind and stature.

The cast was excellent, playing not as Australians but as protagonists in a universal conflict. Outstanding were Donald Crosby as Janos Kadar, the reluctant Judas who deserted his friends to become a puppet ruler, and narrator Kevin McBeath, whose tired voice sketched a more vivid background than the economical sets.

Jane Brunell, an actress, who photographs beautifully, brilliantly underplayed the role of Julia Rajk. It was she who set the painful stamp of a realism close to actuality upon the whole play.

From the ABC musical telecast and drama to its two new series last week was a sad let-down.

I'm at a loss how to review "The Army Game," a comedy series on Thursday nights which has been publicised as Britain's answer to Bilko. Although allegedly popular in England, I found the first episode outlandishly farcical, with several characterisations of British service personnel so scurrilous they seemed like enemy propaganda. I hardly laughed at all.

Admittedly, I took a few weeks to appreciate Bilko, so perhaps in time I may learn to dig "The Army Game." But I suspect that if this is Britain's answer, Bilko will once again get in the last word.

"Enquiry," documentary half-hours from Sydney, may have been inspired by the dynamic Daniel Farson interviews, but the opening probe into loneliness resembled Farson as much as a hang-over resembles drinking. It was halting, timorous and unimaginative except for a succession of weird camera shots repeated to the point of comedy. The ABC must do much better if it is to carry out the good intention behind this series.

Est. 1904 Phone MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

[illegible] Chambers
443 Little Collins Street
Melbourne, Victoria

25 JUN 1960

From Week End "MAIL," T.V

Weekend Mail, Saturday, June 25, 1960 11

TELEVISION

hn McIlwraith

TWO offers comfort for music and football fans

CHANNEL 2 will ease recent disappointments for football followers and music fans in the next few weeks.

People who were disappointed by the omission of WA from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Australian tour will be able to see it on TV. And though the WANFL bans direct telecasts of its games, Two will soon telecast amateur association football. Details of these and other new programmes to be seen on Two:

- MUSIC: The highly-respected Boston Symphony Orchestra will be seen from Two on July 12 and July 26 in two hour-long telecasts from Sydney.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

23 JUN 1960

Radio is For All Listeners

SIR,—WHILE APPRECIATING the views of Ariel and A. [illegible] Marshall (18/6), and their desire to hear a full concert such as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I feel they should consider listeners who want to hear A.B.C. plays.

We drama and documentary listeners are not as fortunate as music lovers who can buy records of their favorite works. Drama and documentaries are not available on discs and so we are thankful to the A.B.C. for enabling us to hear these features.

I am prepared to forgo half an evening listening to good music, but feel music listeners should be prepared to do the same. After all, I, too, am a licence holder.

[illegible]

25

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

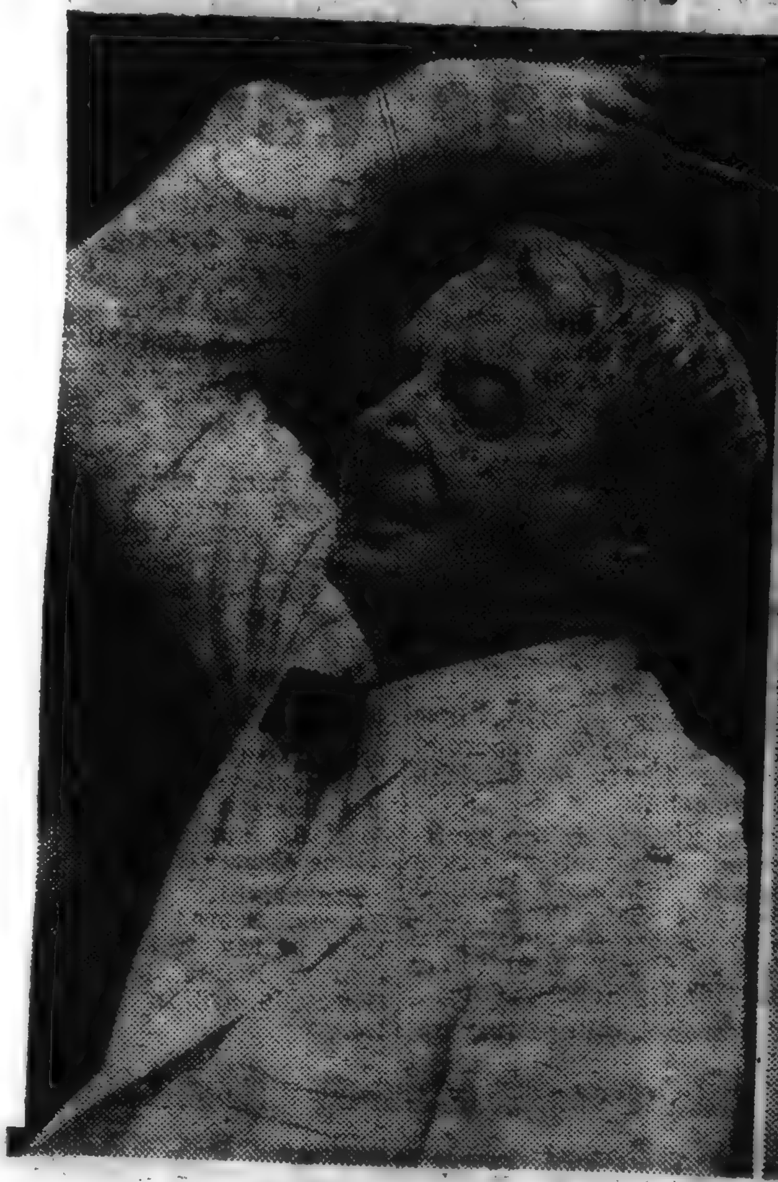
"AGE"

Melbourne, Vic.

19 MAY 1960

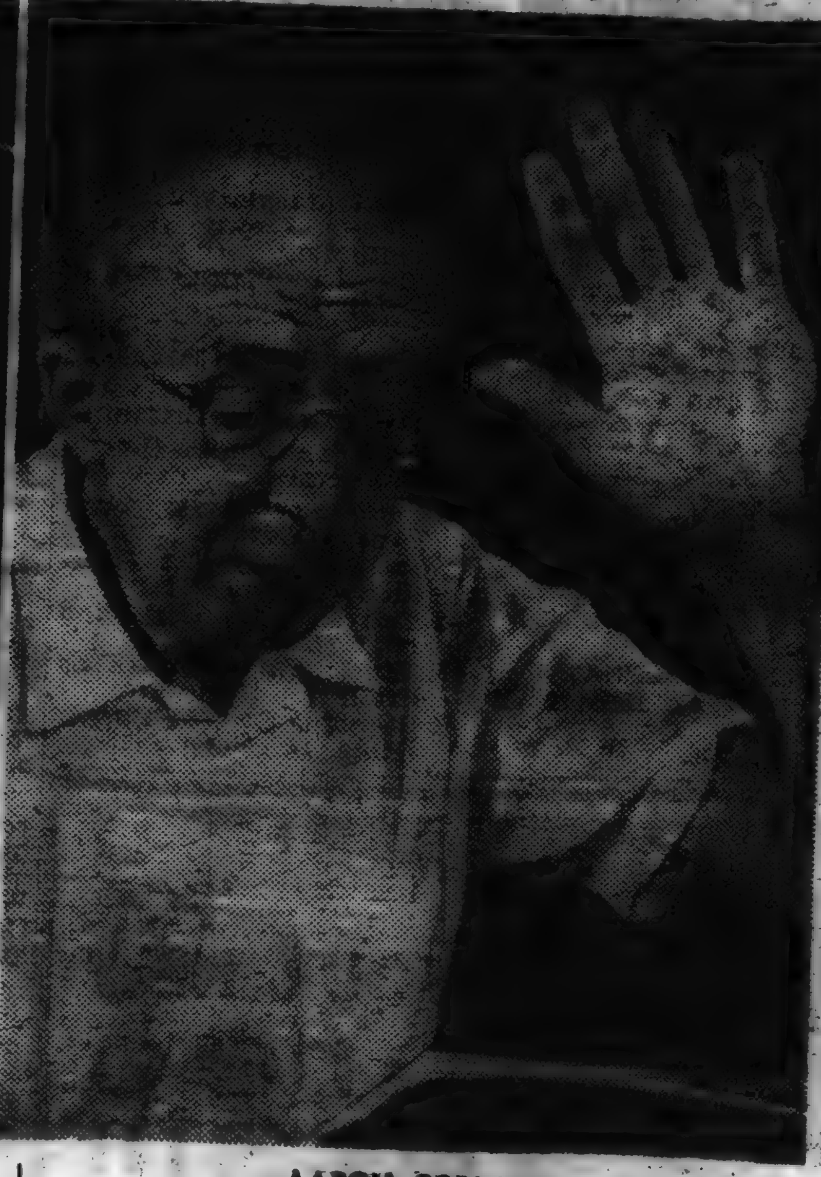
Page Three

"Cost-Price" Record to Coincide With Visit by Boston Orchestra



CHARLES MUNCH

. . . Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor. His affection for Bach is reflected in some of his programmes.



AARON COPLAND

. . . composer and conductor, who also is coming to Australia with the orchestra. He is a leading exponent of contemporary music in U.S.A.

The musical history of the famous American orchestras — the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops — will be contained in a new 12-inch long-playing "sampler" record to be sold at "cost" price to coincide with the Melbourne visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next month.

The low-priced record contains musical selections from tape-recordings of great performances by each orchestra, and linked by narration and the story of the orchestra's development.

To enable the record to be sold at this low price, the production has been subsidised by the artists (who waived their rights to fees), and R.C.A. of Australia (which [illegible] producing the disc [illegible]).

It is ex[illegible] the record wi[illegible] extensively in Australia. Melbourne sales may ex[illegible].

The record, referred to in the trade as a "sampler," is the lowest-priced 12-inch record made available to the Australian record-buying public.

It will be on sale in a few weeks.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard from ABC radio stations and will perform at the Olympic pool.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"LISTENER-IN"

Melbourne, Vic.

25 JUN 1960

NO one can accuse vocalist Annette Klooger of being narrow in the type of music she enjoys. Not after last week, that is. On the one day she went from Bach to boogie-woogie.

She started out at the Olympic Swimming Pool and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, then moved on to the Embers and the Oscar Petersen Trio.

While at the Embers, Annette was pleased to meet Nat Jackley, who is starring in the present Tivoli show. They both appeared on the same show while Annette was in England.

★ ☆ ★ ☆ ★ ☆

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"TRUTH"

Melbourne, Vic.

25 JUN 1960

Comment, Please!

I WOULD like to read in your TV column your comments on the shocking camera work by ABV2 of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

R. C. ROBINSON,
Middle Park.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"SUNDAY TIMES"

Perth, W.A.

TWO records made of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's recent Australian tour will be played in Concert Hall at noon tomorrow from WF. Variations Chaconne and Finale (Dello Joio) and Bacchus and Ariadne (Roussel), were both conducted by Charles Munch.

256

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"LISTENER-IN"
Melbourne, Vic.

25 JUN 1960

P.4 — Listener In-TV, June 25-July 1, 1960

Cyril Ritchard says: "If you seek only the best . . ."

TELL THE TV CHANNELS JUST WHAT YOU WANT

DON'T allow the cowboy and cop brigade of viewers to dictate what you see on television in Australia.

Unfortunately that is what has happened to television in the United States, with the result that now TV is in the doldrums there.

If you are a viewer who enjoys watching worthwhile television, my advice to you is to write to the stations . . . and keep writing.

Tell them the type of programs YOU like. Don't leave it to the morons to air THEIR views if you want to enjoy good TV standards.

Many worthwhile cultural programs, such as the "Omnibus" series, have been pushed out of existence in America by rating-conscious advertising men. However, I am sure that the good programs will return soon.

There is a healthy sign already that good television drama is on the road back. One station is videotaping a "Play of the Week," which is then screened each night for a whole week.

The cast of these plays comprises leading Broadway stars who rehearse them with the same thoroughness they would rehearse a stage production.

These plays are sponsored for the New York area. But they have become so popular that cities in other States are now buying the plays and getting sponsors for them, too.

Surely there must be room in television for all kinds of programs, not just Westerns, crime stories and other cheap types of entertainment.

The theatre in America is meeting the challenge of television well, despite the fact that last season was one of the most disastrous in the history of Broadway.

This was caused by mushroom managers, who came to New York from all parts of the country with local backing for plays written by all sorts of authors.

With the money behind them, these managers were able to stage plays that should never have reached even rehearsal stage. The result was an unprecedented number of flops and the loss of millions of dollars.

However, the good plays succeeded and that is good theatre.

When road companies staged these better plays, especially if they had a good run on Broadway and the original stars were in the cast, they played to capacity houses.

The reason? Because the average person in America is getting a little bored with TV these days.

From the little I have managed to see of television here, I can say that I have been impressed with the excellent quality of both picture and sound.

I was particularly pleased to see and hear the concert last week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on ABV2. But I have not seen sufficient Australian television to gauge its standard of quality.

My advice to television stations and to the discerning viewer is to live up to the motto which I have made my own: "Optimum semper" —Always the Best.

Producers should never cut costs if it means lowering the quality of the show they are presenting.

If television stations choose good plays and present them properly, they never will be without viewers.

The chief thing to remember is: Don't play down to the public. Give them credit for good taste.

Page 4's guest writer . . .

● CYRIL RITCHARD, distinguished Australian actor and producer, star of "The Pleasure of His Company," which will open at the Comedy Theatre on Saturday, July 2.

Est. 1904 Phone: MU 5133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"AGE"
Melbourne, Vic.

25 JUN 1960

THE WEEK IN RADIO

By ARIEL

A CHEERFUL LITERARY HOAX

TO A GREAT MANY LISTENERS the star turn of the radio week was not a musical highlight, but a literary hoax of a few years ago known by the name of Ern Malley.

A more painstaking effort to marshal all the facts concerned in this rather hilarious incident would be hard to imagine. The compiler, the well-known broadcaster John Thompson, literally raked the world for all facts and repercussions relative to the event. He got together all persons connected with it and allowed them to speak for themselves — both hoaxers and the hoaxed who published the verse.

What was surprising in the broadcast was the news that the joke had had such far-reaching interest. Most of the world knew about it sooner or later. Comments came from all quarters, with the result that today there are still those who believe that the joke, perpetrated by James McAuley and Harold Stewart, unwittingly presented real poetry, although the parents of Ern Malley, themselves poets, have never been of that opinion.

The joke was made during an idle period when the two men concerned, bored with having nothing to do, put their heads together with the idea of debunking the current tendency to present, as poetry, a lot of meaningless abstractions whose only virtue appeared to be their obscurity. It was the basis of a fine broadcast.

Musically listeners were quite well treated during the week, although the high tide caused by the Boston Orchestra's invasion had naturally subsided a little. However, the French conductor Georges Tzipine kept things on a high plane with the aid of the Victorian Orchestra, and there was a little first-class tenor singing along with some here-and-there fragments which were enough to appease the musical appetite.

Both the Tzipine orchestral broadcasts were notable. The Beethoven Fifth Symphony, about which listeners have heard a great deal over the years, came through as an old friend should, although dressed a little differently perhaps than usual. The flower in its buttonhole was an electric first movement that had all the color and scent expected from a well-cultivated musical garden.

In the Cesar Franck Symphony Mr. Tzipine was in his own country, and he produced as satisfying a version of this thoughtful music as I have heard in many broadcasts and recordings. So many conductors try to turn it into a show piece —a thing it was never intended to be—that one becomes more fussy about its interpretation than about that of other works.

Tenor Raymond Nilsson was 3LO's Sunday Night Celebrity in Beethoven and Schumann songs. This Sadler's Wells star has a nice appreciation of what German lieder demand from a singer, and his 20 minutes of songs were all too short. He opened with Beethoven's Adelaide, which, curiously enough, a couple of nights before, had been sung by another tenor, Kenneth Sullivan, who revealed a voice of nice quality.

UNIVERSAL INFORMATION SERVICE

PressClipping

c/o Daiichi Life Insurance Annex
Kyobashi 2-5, Chuo-ku, Tokyo
Tel (561) 9431 (代表)

ユニバーサル通信社
東京都中央区京橋2ー5第一生命分館
電話京橋 (561) 9431 (代表)

新聞切抜

ASAHI EVENING NEWS (Tokyo)

Dat. JUN 21 1960 Ed.

05

Boston Symphony Orchestra Says Demonstrations Not Aimed at U.S.

By The Associated Press

BOSTON, June 20 — Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, back from an eight-week concert tour of the Far East, including a month in Japan, say they detected no anti-American feeling in student demonstrations they saw.

Roger Voisin, first trumpet, said, "The animosity shown by the students was directed against the Government and not the United States."

George Humphrey, violinist, said the demonstrations were "not representative of how the Japanese feel toward the West."

The musicians conceded they had left Japan when the violence reached its climax last week.

Nevertheless, Mr. Humphrey said, "It's my personal opinion, President Eisenhower would have been safe" if he had gone to Japan as planned.

The orchestra played before an estimated 75,000 persons during a 30,000-mile air tour that began at Boston April 25. Besides 22 concerts in 16 cities in Japan, some broadcast over radio and television, the orchestra played two concerts at Taipei, Taiwan, three in the Philippines, seven in Australia and two in New Zealand.

Forty-nine musicians—about half—returned Sunday. The rest were due Monday.

Conductor Charles Munch left the party in San Francisco Sunday to board a plane for a polar flight to Europe. After a two-week vacation at his home outside Paris, he'll return for summer concerts.

257

MUSIC LOVERS in the official party at tonight's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Centennial Hall, Wayville. From left—Mrs. E. R. Daws, the U.S. Ambassador, Mr. William J. Sebald, Mrs. J. Ausland, Lady Bonython, and Mr. J. Ausland, the U.S. Consul in Adelaide. Story page 34.

Women's Pages

COUNTRY VISITORS in the foyer before the concert. Pictured are (from left) Mr. and Mrs. David Cowell, of Mount Crawford, and Mrs. and Mr. William Keynes, of Eden Valley. LEFT—Discussing the visit of the famous orchestra to Adelaide are Miss Prudence Coffey (left) and Mrs. Patrick W. Gleeson.

HISTORIC EVENT

Wellington Airport became a trans-Tasman terminal for the first time yesterday when three chartered airliners — two DC6s and a DC4 — flew in from Melbourne with members and equipment of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The charter was a joint operation of a number of airlines.

No regular service is planned between Wellington and Melbourne. The first scheduled Tasman service, to be operated by Teal between Wellington and Sydney, opens on July 24.

Wellington

12 THE DOMINION, THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 19

Famed Orchestra's Introduction To N.Z.

EXCHANGING HIS DOLLARS for New Zealand currency at Wellington Airport yesterday was a Boston Symphony Orchestra cymbalist, Mr. Harold Thompson (above left), with Mr. M. Weaver, of the Bank of New Zealand. BELOW: The first plane-load of members of the orchestra queue up outside a hangar to go through Customs.

259

Wellington N.Z.

12 THE DOMINION, FRIDAY, JUNE 17, 1960.

Programme To Suit Brilliance Of Orchestra

By Russell Bond

Playing a programme tailor-made to suit both its brilliant capabilities and the predelictions of its conductor, Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra swept a packed town hall audience into a frenzy of applause at its Wellington concert last night.

This was an exhilarating occasion, not just because this was only the third symphony orchestra to visit New Zealand, but because the Boston orchestra has an aura all its own. Only London, Leipzig, Vienna and Paris can boast orchestras of longer standing and none is quite as hand-picked as this one.

As happens at celebrity concerts where seats are high in price, some part of the audience was obviously there because this was a rare occasion and others were there for the thrill of a superb technical display. None of these listeners could possibly have been disappointed.

Others, those whose interest was predominantly centred on the music as distinct from the method of its presentation, might well have felt the evening could have been better planned.

Appreciation

The atmosphere before the concert began was simmeringly expectant and the burst of applause for Charles Munch as he made his first appearance was just the first wave of a rising tide of appreciation that reached flood height at the end of the concert.

After "God Save the Queen" played in unusually slow tempo, and "The Star-Spangled Banner," the conductor left the stage to give latecomers a chance to be seated.

Returning, he directed the orchestra into the simple beginning of the Fantastic Symphony, a work that represents a considerable feat of imagination on the part of Berlioz but musically does not compare with his best work. However, it offers almost unlimited opportunities for the exploitation of a great orchestra's resources and the Boston musicians made the most of every one of them.

There was no suggestion in their playing that they were nearing the end of an exhausting tour and no suggestion in the broad sweep of Charles Munch's conducting that he was well on the way to 70.

Extravagances

The colds and fatigue that kept members of the orchesetra from the mayoral reception in the morning were seemingly forgotten. Berlioz was given all he asked for, and that's saying a lot. The symphony calls for all sorts of extravagances and if we were to have the Fantastic Symphony to end all Fantastic Symphonies, then obviously this was it.

Four tympanists with six kettle drums all playing at once—two percussionists beating seven devils out of a bass drum turned on its side to facilitate the operation—someone else giving a couple of hefty steeple bells a series of real fortissimo dongs—this is the sort of thing our own orchestra cannot give us.

Nor can they be expected to give us the silky suavity of the Boston strings and the great weight of their tone and particularly the fire and strength of the lower strings. Then there was the wonderful playing of the woodwind and brass, notably the way in which the brass could blend into the tone of the whole orchestra to make one cohesive tonal mass.

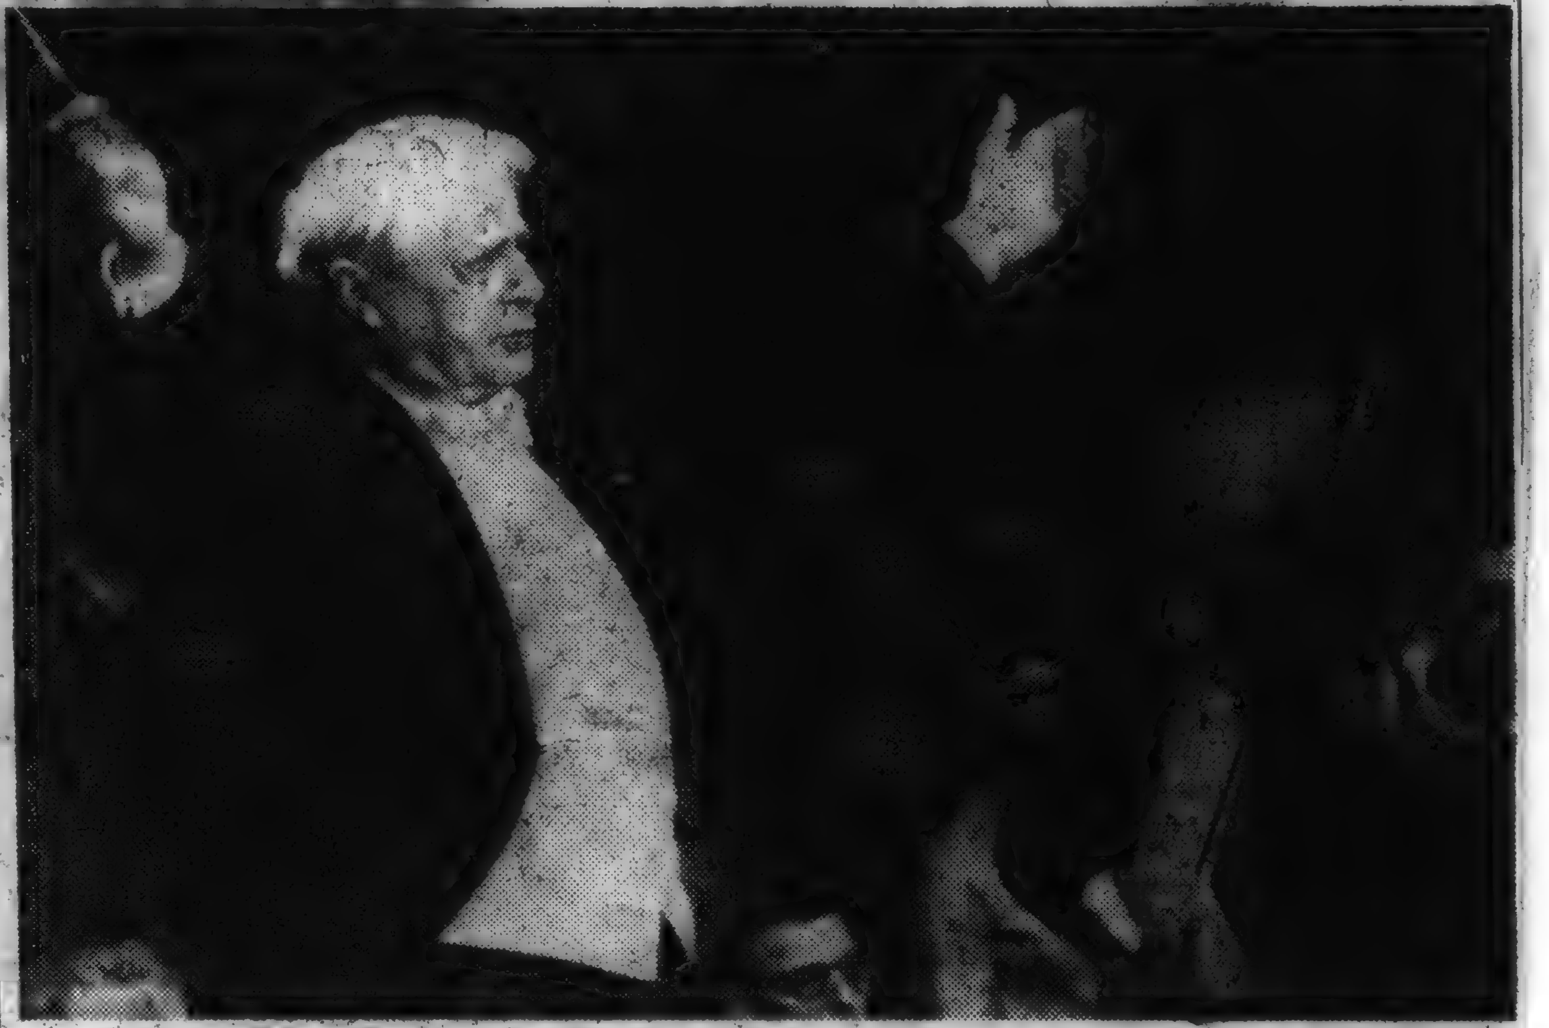
The second item, Norman Dello Joio's "Variations, Chaconne and Finale," was written 18 years ago and is based on a theme derived from a Gregorian mass. American-born, of Italian descent, Dello Joio has achieved a work of strength and integrity, if not of great stature, and by no means as austere as its theme might suggest. It was, of course, beautifully played.

Last item on the programme was Albert Roussel's second suite from his ballet, "Bacchus et Iriane." Often pleasant, frequently very noisy and short on worthwhile ideas, it would probably have made sense with dancers to interpret it. As it was, it hardly seemed necessary to bring it across the world to play to us, particularly in a programme that contained no universally accepted first-class composition.

Still, there was no doubt about the excitement the playing of these works engendered and the insistent applause brought us as encores an exquisitely precise Mendelssohn scherzo and a "Meistersinger" march with some splendidly co-ordinated brass playing.

But even with these additions the programme [illegible] like children's party [illegible] to an adult gathering [illegible]

Momentous Musical Occasion



CHARLES MUNCH conducting the "Star Spangled Banner" in the Wellington Town Hall last night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the first of its two New Zealand concerts. On the right is the associate conductor, Richard Burgin, who also leads the violins.

260

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

Heidelberger
Heidelberg V

3 JUN 1960

Direct Telecast By Boston Symphony Orchestra

The world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will visit Australia as part of a Far Eastern tour, will be seen in a direct telecast from the Olympic Pool, 7.55 to 8.55 p.m., on Tuesday, June 14. Charles Munch will conduct the Orchestra.

The item to be telecast from this second Melbourne concert will be Symphonie Fantastique. (Berlioz).

The Orchestra, which will visit Australia for the ABC, is touring the Far Eastern countries under the auspices of the President's International Cultural Exchange service, administered through the American National Theatre and Academy. (It will play at the Melbourne Town Hall on June 13 conducted by Richard Burgin.)

THE YOMIURI (Tokyo)

Dat. JUN 2[illegible]

Not Against US, Say Musicians

Boston, June 20 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, back from an eight-week concert tour of the Far East, including a month in Japan, say they detected no anti-American feeling in student demonstrations they saw.

Roger Voisin, first trumpet, said "The animosity shown by the students was directed against the government and not the United States."

George Humphrey, violinist, said the demonstrations were "not representative of how the Japanese feel toward the West."

The musicians conceded they had left Japan before the violence reached its climax last week.

Nevertheless Humphrey said "It's my personal opinion President Eisenhower would have been safe" if he had gone to Japan as planned.

The orchestra played before an estimated 75,000 persons during a 30,000-mile air tour that began at Boston April 25.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

Melbourne, Victoria

From

"COURIER MAIL"
Brisbane, Qld.

30 JUN 1960

Boston film

Viewers will have their first look at the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow night, when Channel 2 shows a one-hour telerecording [illegible] its Sydney Stadium conc[illegible]

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, JUNE 20, 1960 C 3

Japanese People Still Friendly, Say Boston Symphony Players

By PAUL COSTELLO

An advance contingent of 49 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra returned yesterday from a successful eight-week concert tour in the Far East convinced that the people of Japan and Asia are—and will continue to be—friends and allies of the United States.

Newsmen questioning symphony members debarking from a giant jetliner at Boston Airport were unable to find a single musician who would imply the recent riots in Japan were anti-American.

PERSONAL OPINION

And one man, violist George Humphrey of Arlington, flatly stated: "It's my personal opinion that President Eisenhower would have been safe . . ." if his plans for visiting Japan had materialized.

Humphrey admitted the orchestra was not in Japan when the riots, which he preferred to call "demonstrations," reached a climax last week, but the musicians did witness first-hand many of the student demonstrations during a month-long stay in Japan.

The validity of the observations by the orchestra members must be judged against what they saw on the scene and the reception they received while playing before 25,000 in 16 cities and millions of other Japanese who heard or saw their 22 concerts over radio and television.

STOPPED ON STREETS

Symphony members were amazed when stopped on the streets by barbers, waitresses, cab drivers and bartenders who recognized their distinctive orchestra identity badges and complimented them for performances they had seen on TV.

Roger Voisin, the orchestra's first trumpeter, said the "animosity shown by the students was directed against the government and not the United States."

He explained that the students are vitally interested in their government and their protests are part of an emerging new Japan, with the youth taking the lead in tossing off the old social order and customs for Western ideas and ways.

FATHER'S DAY—Roger Voisin of Jamaica Plain is greeted by his wife and children, Peter, 10, and Anne, 8, on return from an eight-week concert tour.

Humphrey said the demonstrations "were a normal reaction of youth of that age to a cause," but that trained Communist cadres took advantage of the students "to greatly exaggerate" the protests.

VOICING OPINION

Leonard Burkat, music administrator, said students explained the demonstrations to him as being "much like Americans writing their senator when they want to voice their opinion on a controversial issue."

He said that he and symphony conductor Charles Munch walked through the streets with the students on several occasions while heading for their hotel and that the youths were friendly and orderly.

[illegible] in the party also [illegible] that the great majority of Japanese people took the demonstrations in stride and often ignored the students and did not share their views.

The symphony [illegible] an estimated 75,000 [illegible] their 30,000 mile [illegible] that started here April 25. [illegible] gave two concerts in [illegible] Formosa, 3 in the Philippines, 7 in Australia and 2 in New Zealand.

Concerts in Australia also were televised and were broadcast in all other countries.

POPS CONDUCTOR

On hand to greet the returning musicians yesterday was Boston Pops Conductor Arthur Fiedler. Most of the symphony members are members of the Pops Orchestra and Fiedler said they will rejoin the Pops for Friday's concert.

The remaining 59 members of the symphony are scheduled to arrive by jetliner from California today at 11 a.m.

Conductor Munch left the party in San Francisco yesterday after a flight from New Zealand via Honolulu. Munch boarded a plane in San Francisco for a Polar flight to Europe. He'll spend two weeks at his home outside Paris before returning to his summer post at Tanglewood.

A transport plane carrying 19,000 pounds of personal baggage, as well as instruments, costumes and music for the orchestra arrived in Boston from New Zealand at noon yesterday. Al Robinson and Daniel Moriarty, stage managers, and Harvey Genereux, equipment manager, traveled with the equipment from Auckland, N. Z.

Est. 1904 'Phone: MU 8133

AUSTRALIAN PRESS CUTTINGS

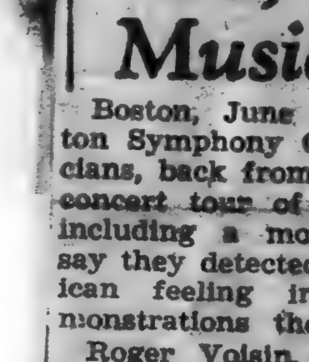
Melbourne, Victoria

From

"WOMAN'S DAY"
Sydney, N.S.W.

4 JUL 1960

WHAT with new stage shows and the Boston Symphony Orchestra's visit, Melbourne has got so used to "art" lately that it's no surprise to hear the ballet is coming, too.



Beryl Grey

On July 2, international ballerina Beryl Grey will begin an Australian tour with Bryan Ashbridge, a New Zealander who is now a member of the Royal Ballet. After 20 years with the Sadler's Wells Ballet, Miss Grey left the company to freelance and has since danced in America and Russia. And on both sides of the Iron [illegible] had equal triumphs.

261

Wellington

THE DOMINION, THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1960. 15

Four Women Travel With Boston Orchestra

SISTERS ARE MUSICIANS

Four women are part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's organisation, but the names of two of them conceal the fact that they are sisters.

The sisters are Mrs. Winifred Winograd, 'cellist, and Miss Lois Schaefer, flautist.

Miss Schaefer is first flute with the New York City Centre Opera Company's Orchestra. She was invited by Dr. Charles Munch to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the present tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand.

She has been soloist with many American orchestras, including the Chicago Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Living in New York Miss Schaefer made a number of recordings with orchestras in that city.

While in Japan she bought a camera which she hopes to use in New Zealand.

Her sister, Mrs. Winograd, holds the distinction of being the first woman string player ever engaged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which she joined in 1957.

She has studied with Felix Salmont and Gregor Piatigorsky, at the [illegible] Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

No Hobbies

With a fourteen-year-old son, Nicholas, and a house and garden in Boston, Mrs. Winograd says she has little time for hobbies. "Any spare time is spent practising."

Mrs. Winograd said six months of every year were spent at Tanglewood — summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood in Massachussetts then holds a festival of music and there is a school for young musicians and conductors. "I went there as a student. It was an important [illegible] training."

The two sisters are not the only women travelling with the orchestra. Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, Jun., wife of the permanent manager, and her husband's secretary Miss Sarah Hempel are also touring New Zealand.

WOMEN'S WORLD

Mrs. Perry has many hobbies including sculpturing which she cannot indulge in as much as she would like to, only in summer when the orchestra is at Tanglewood, Massachusetts. Their two sons Doane (17) and Rodney (15), who are pupils at a New England preparatory school, are being cared for by Mrs. Perry's mother.

It is Mrs. Perry's job to act as official hostess at the orchestra's many social functions.

Though very interested in music generally Mrs. Perry does not play any musical instrument.

Miss Hempel, who has been Mrs. Perry's secretary for four years, comes from Illinois in the mid-west. Besides being a registered nurse before taking up her present position, Miss Hempel was an air hostess.

In Mrs. Perry's own words, "Miss Hempel is an efficient and capable person."

MISS LOIS SCHAEFER with her sister, Mrs. Winifred Winograd.

---

10 THE AUCKLAND [illegible], FRIDAY, JUNE 17, 1960

Page for WOMEN

Women with Boston orchestra

Sisters in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Winifred Winograd (left), 'cellist, and Lois Schaefer (flautist), are seen changing their money after arrival at Wellington Airport on Wednesday.

One of the four women members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra organization is the mother of a 14-year-old son.

She is the 'cellist and her name is Mrs Winifred Winograd.

Mrs Winograd holds the distinction of being the first woman string player ever engaged by the orchestra, which she joined in 1957. She has studied with Felix Salmont and Gregor Platigorsky at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

With her son Nicholas to care for and a house and garden in Boston to maintain, Mrs Winograd can only devote all her spare time to music and has no hobbies.

The other woman to play with the orchestra in Auckland tonight is a sister of Mrs Winograd, Miss Lois Schaefer. Miss Schaefer is first flute with the New York City Centre Opera Company's orchestra and was invited by Dr Charles Munch to join the Boston Symphony for its present tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand.

She has been soloist with many American orchestras, including the Chicago Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestra.

One of her "off-music" hobbies is photography.

Two others

Travelling with the orchestra are two other women—Mrs Thomas D. Perry, Jun., wife of the permanent manager, and her husband's secretary, Miss Sarah Hempel.

It is Mrs Perry's job to act as official hostess at the orchestra's many social functions. Her hobby is sculpturing.

Before taking up her present position, Miss Hempel was an air stewardess. She is also a registered nurse.

18 THE EVENING POST, THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1960.

NO WONDER THEY NEEDED THREE AIRCRAFT

Flute player P. Kaplan (left) was holding on to his Japanese souvenirs when he stepped from his plane. The large item in his hand is a Japanese wood carving. He said he was making sure it did not get broken. At right, other orchestra members move up the queue to change their dollar bills (including some $100 bills) to buy more souvenirs.

Troubled With Colds And Travel Fatigue

FEW OF ORCHESTRA ATTEND RECEPTION

ONLY a small proportion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's party of 107 turned up at a Mayoral reception in the Concert Chamber at 11 this morning, due to colds and travel fatigue.

Dr. Charles Munch, 68-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Wellington Airport yesterday.

"It's been a rough tour," explained one musician, echoing the obvious general opinion.

At the reception nearly 100 local musicians, city councillors and others outnumbered the Boston visitors by about 10 to one.

At four city hotels many Boston visitors were still "confined," nursing colds and getting into shape for tonight's Town Hall concert. It will be the orchestra's second to last concert of a [illegible]-concert tour which has taken them through the Far East and Australia during the past two months.

The tour started with a [illegible]-hour flight from Boston to Formosa, which left the orchestra "numb with fatigue." Close brushes with an earthquake and a tidal wave in Japan and a typhoon in Manila did not improve their travels.

Orchestra members did not seem at all enthusiastic about arriving in New Zealand when they stepped out of their planes late yesterday afternoon.

Too long

One member explained that most were tired of touring. He said two months away from home was too long.

The orchestra arrived from Melbourne in two Douglas DC6b aircraft of the Ansett-ANA company. It was the first time Wellington Airport had been an international passenger terminal. The orchestra's baggage and instruments had come earlier in a DC4 plane.

It was cold in the airport hangar which was being used as a temporary passenger terminal for the party. The players went through the immigration procedure as quickly as possible, collected luggage, and climbed into their buses without delay. Many seemed reluctant to pause and talk to anyone.

One of the tiredest in the party was the conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, who is 68. He prefers to spend the morning after a concert in bed, but was unable to do that yesterday morning because of departure from Melbourne.

Dr. Munch gave a very brief radio interview at the airport. He said the orchestra had had wonderful receptions during the tour—an "amazing" reception in Japan.

Casualties

The manager of the orchestra, Mr. Thomas Perry, said the party numbered 115 at the start of the tour, but was now down to 107. One player had died in Japan and the others had returned home, mostly because of sickness.

The "casualty rate" in the orchestra was fairly high, due to the advanced age of most of the players. The youngest member, at 27, is a "baby." The oldest is 72.

Dr. Munch attended the Mayoral reception, but did not speak.

Mr. Perry spoke for the party in reply to welcome speeches by the Mayor (Mr. Kitts) and the Minister in charge of Broadcasting (Mr. Boord).

The only three women players in the 101-piece orchestra, from left, Winnifred Winograd (cellist), her sister Lois Schaefer (flautist), and Olivier Luetcke (harpist), with Bernard Zighera (harpist and pianist). Miss Schaeter joined the orchestra specially for the tour.

Wellington Dog Dosing To Start Soon

Dog dosing for the hydatid eradication scheme was expected to start in Wellington soon, said the acting City Engineer (Mr. G. I. B. Thomas) today.

Mr. Thomas announced the first dosing sites selected. "We have endeavoured to select sites which dog owners can walk to rather than have to take the dogs there by car," Mr. Thomas said. Dog owners in the various suburbs would be advised when dosing would take place in their area.

The sites announced are:—

Miramar - Seatoun: Corner

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164

JUN 11 1960

Music

To Hold Guild Piano Auditions Monday

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—The annual auditions sponsored locally by the National Guild of Piano Teachers will be held Monday in Kitson hall. The event which has grown in interest during the past four years has attracted a list of pupils covering several of the age categories.

This year each student participating will receive a certificate of standing and a pin representing his performing ability. Judging the event will be Gertrude Noll, nationally known member of the guild.

Representing the local organization will be Miss Eva M. Lequin, teacher and creator of the guild competition in Lowell. Miss Lequin is being assisted by a group of teachers who are interested in this special field.

Miss Eva M. Lequin

THE SENIOR Fellowship of the Eliot Presbyterian church will present "Spring Journey" at the parish house next Friday and Saturday evenings. The group, one of the newest on the local theatrical scene, is planning a full season of activity starting in the fall. Among the drama club's members are several young people who have been connected with other such organizations in the Greater-Lowell area and their association with the Senior Fellowship promises to make the Players one of Lowell's best known drama clubs.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY orchestra will arrive in Boston June 20. This will be the final touch of a trip to Japan, a co-operative endeavor with the President's special international program for cultural presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy. The concert series in Japan was in special recognition of the Centennial Year of American-Japanese relations.

Dr. Charles Munch, director of the orchestra, in a special statement on behalf of the orchestra said that "We have made many new friends. The people of our nations have helped to prove that international understanding is strengthened through a mutual appreciation of music and the common language of art."

"For all members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and for myself I want to thank the thousands of Japanese people who have been so wonderfully kind. The countless acts of individual thoughtfulness and the enthusiastic reception of our music by concert audiences will long be remembered by all of us who return to our homes in Boston. We are most grateful to the Japanese Broadcasting corporation and to the government of our two countries which helped to make this toun possible."

ONE OF THE HIGHLIGHTS of this season's activities at the North Shore theater will be a series of children's shows. The tremendous success realized by this endeavor last season prompted the directors of the theater to answer the overwhelming demand.

There will be three outstanding productions this summer. Two dramatic plays with music and dance, "Hansel and Gretel" and "Beauty and the Beast", and a fascinating children's concert, conducted and narrated by the well-known Robert Mandell, during which the young audience learns "The Instruments of the Orchestra", and participates, at times, in the show.

Symphony Musicians Live It Up Abroad

RELAXING MOMENTS for members of the Boston Symphony during their tour of the Pacific. At upper left, contrabassist Leslie (Tiny) Martin leads Japanese schoolgirls at Kobe in singing "Oh, Suzanna." At upper right, 'cellist Winifred Winograd (right) and flutist Lois Schaefer join Japanese girls in tea at Yahata. Buying a silk necktie at Taipei, Formosa, at lower left is Manuel Zung, violinist. Violinist William Marshall (below) selects postcards during stopover at Honolulu airport, and in the photo at lower right two Taipei children pose for violinist Emil Kornsand. The pictures were taken by violist George Humphrey.

265

New England Newsclip Agency
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 1[illegible]6,267
JU[illegible] 1 1960

Vicissitudes and Victories o ra in Japan

Musicians Tested by Trials of Touring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's historical 30-day concert tour of Japan came to an end on Tuesday, May 31, with the departure of the musicians for Manila. Led by Charles Munch, music director; Richard Burgin, associate conductor; and Aaron Copland, guest conductor, the 111-member party then performed concerts in the Philippines.

They are now in Australia and will perform in New Zealand before returning to Boston June 20.

The orchestra arrived in Tokyo May 1 after a pair of concerts in Taipei and presented 22 concerts in 16 major Japanese cities during its month-long stay under the auspices of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK). The tour of the Far East is being made in cooperation with the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy. The concert series in Japan was in special recognition of the Centennial Year of America-Japanese Relations.

* * *

"We have made many new friends," Dr. Munch said in a statement on behalf of the orchestra. "The people of our nations have helped to prove once more that international understanding is strengthened through a mutual appreciation of music and the common language of art.

"For all members of the Boston Symphony and for myself I want to thank the thousands of Japanese who have been so wonderfully kind. The countless acts of individual thoughtfulness and the enthusiastic reception of our music by concert audiences will long be remembered by all of us who return to our homes in Boston. We are most grateful to the Japan Broadcasting Corporation and to the governments of our two countries that helped to make this tour possible."

The 22 concerts in Japan were performed before an estimated concert hall audience of more than 50,000 in cities on all four main islands of the nation. Unnumbered thousands also heard or witnessed the live and delayed radio and television broadcasts over nationwide networks.

The musicians of the orchestra were besieged everywhere by music students, journalists, or music lovers. In dozens of individual and group meetings and demonstrations off-stage, the American visitors displayed their instruments or exhibited their particular musical techniques. Informal sessions arranged by directors of American Cultural Centers in 11 of the 16 cities on the itinerary brought together Japanese music students and orchestra members who were eager to demonstrate their instruments. The Boston players took part in a rehearsal of a university orchestra, a special session at the Tokyo University of Arts, and other informal events. On one occasion, the Boston players invited the members of the NHK Orchestra to a rehearsal conducted by Dr. Munch in Tokyo.

* * *

The orchestra's tour coincided with some dramatic events. In Matsuyama on the Island of Shikoku, a mild earthquake was experienced on the day of the concert.

The arrival of the orchestra in Sapporo coincided with the impact of the devastating tidal wave on the east coast which left thousands homeless. After traveling through the damaged areas in Matsushima on the way to the concert in Sendai, the orchestra performed Debussy's "La Mer" which contains a passage of musical violence symbolic of the great power of the sea.

At the close of the concert in Sendai, a gift of 100,000 yen from the members of the orchestra to the relief fund for tidal wave victims was presented on the stage to Yoshio Miura, governor of the Miyagi Prefecture.

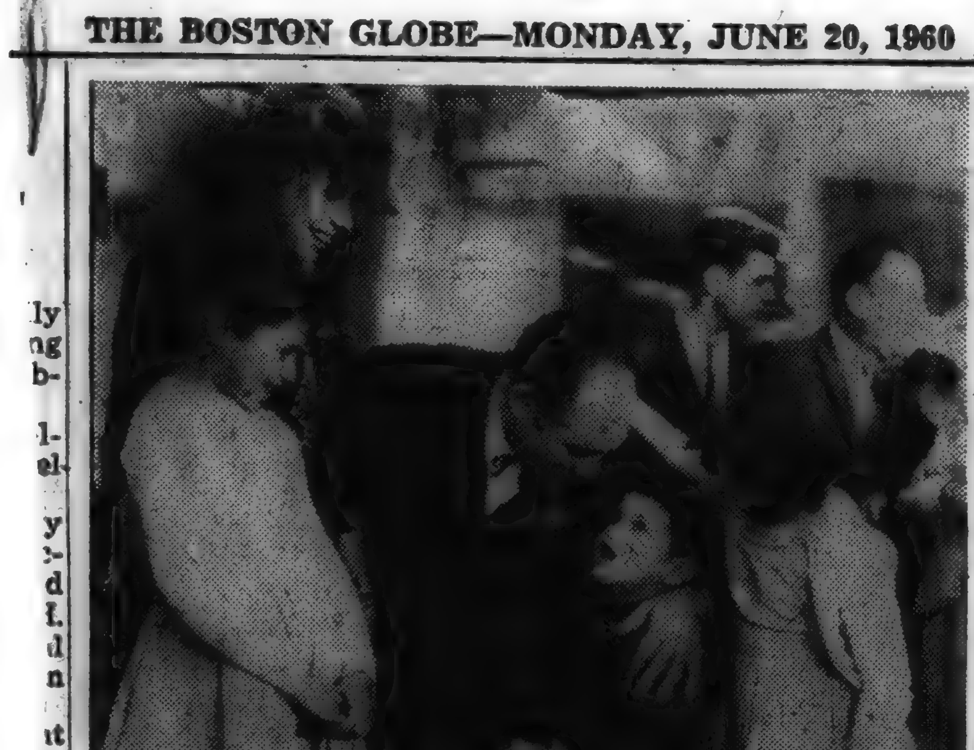
* * *

The visiting musicians traveled far by day and played concerts before capacity audiences at night. They sometimes stayed in Japanese inns and learned a different style of eating and sleeping. Everywhere they taxed hotel accommodations to the utmost. They learned to eat box lunches with chop-sticks during long train rides between concerts or quickly sought out the local restaurants which sometimes made special provisions for musicians who enjoyed dining after an evening concert, usually after the normal closing hours.

The Bostonians climbed Mt. Fuji-no-Yama, visited volcanoes in Hokkaido, enjoyed hot baths at famous Japanese hot springs, and sought out major tourist attractions. Informal research revealed that more than 75 cameras, many transistor radios, and countless pearls were purchased during the month.

On its return to Boston in late June, the Symphony will resume its normal summer schedule which includes the six-week series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Symphony Members Place Japan Riots in Lower Key



HOME AGAIN—Joseph De Pasquale, Boston Symphony's first violinist, is greeted by wife, Maria, and children, Sandra, 10; Lisa, 8; Joey, 4.

SYMPHONY

Continued From the First Page

He described Japanese audiences as "very responsive and extremely well-behaved." Voisin reported that Japanese audiences wait until the end of a performance to cough, clear their throats or indulge in any other kind of restlessness.

Leonard Burkat, music administrator for the orchestra, who accompanied the players on part of the tour, said they had "the best reception everywhere. It was all excitement from day to day."

With the exception of the death from natural causes, of one of its members, the orchestra suffered no undue setbacks. Burkat figured millions heard or saw the symphony on the tour.

"Wherever it performed—in Australia, New Zealand, or the Far East—national broadcasting concerns sponsored television or radio performances. In Formosa, the Symphony performed under the auspices of Madame Chiang Kai-shek.

Burkat agreed, too, that the student demonstrations were not anti-American. "They were specifically directed against their own government. It was the equivalent of our writing a complaint letter to our congressman.

In all, the Symphony gave 22 concerts in Japan, three in the Philippines, two on Formosa, two in New Zealand and seven in Australia. A scheduled performance in South Korea was canceled because of an uprising in that country.

Following their arrival at Logan Airport was another special plane carrying 16,825 pounds of baggage, including their precious instruments. Guardians of the cargo throughout the tour were Harvey Genereux, baggage master, Alfred Robison, and Daniel Moriarty. The trio engineered the difficult feat of transporting the musicians' paraphernalia on the orchestra's island-hopping tour. Remainder of the 104-man orchestra returns today.

Among those on hand to greet yesterday's arrivals was Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops. Some of the musicians are members of both the Symphony and the Pops and will rejoin the latter next Friday.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, left the group in San Francisco for a polar flight to his home in France where he will spend a few days before he begins the Berkshire Music Center season at Lenox.

265

New England Newsclip Agen
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON,
Circ. 156,267
JUN 11 1960

f the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Japan

Musicians Tested by Trials of Touring

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's historical 30-day concert tour of Japan came to an end on Tuesday, May 31, with the departure of the musicians for Manila. Led by Charles Munch, music director; Richard Burgin, associate conductor; and Aaron Copland, guest conductor, the 111-member party then performed concerts in the Philippines.

They are now in Australia and will perform in New Zealand before returning to Boston June 20.

The orchestra arrived in Tokyo May 1 after a pair of concerts in Taipei and presented 22 concerts in 16 major Japanese cities during its month-long stay under the auspices of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK). The tour of the Far East is being made in cooperation with the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy. The concert series in Japan was in special recognition of the Centennial Year of America-Japanese Relations.

* * *

"We have made many new friends," Dr. Munch said in a statement on behalf of the orchestra. "The people of our nations have helped to prove once more that international understanding is strengthened through a mutual appreciation of music and the common language of art.

"For all members of the Boston Symphony and for myself I want to thank the thousands of Japanese who have been so wonderfully kind. The countless acts of individual thoughtfulness and the enthusiastic reception of our music by concert audiences will long be remembered by all of us who return to our homes in Boston. We are most grateful to the Japan Broadcasting Corporation and to the governments of our two countries that helped to make this tour possible."

The 22 concerts in Japan were performed before an estimated concert hall audience of more than 50,000 in cities on all four main islands of the nation. Unnumbered thousands also heard or witnessed the live and delayed radio and television broadcasts over nationwide networks.

The musicians of the orchestra were besieged everywhere by music students, journalists, or music lovers. In dozens of individual and group meetings and demonstrations off-stage, the American visitors displayed their instruments or exhibited their particular musical techniques. Informal sessions arranged by directors of American Cultural Centers in 11 of the 16 cities on the itinerary brought together Japanese music students and orchestra members who were eager to demonstrate their instruments. The Boston players took part in a rehearsal of a university orchestra, a special session at the Tokyo University of Arts, and other informal events. On one occasion, the Boston players invited the members of the NHK Orchestra to a rehearsal conducted by Dr. Munch in Tokyo.

* * *

The orchestra's tour coincided with some dramatic events. In Matsuyama on the Island of Shikoku, a mild earthquake was experienced on the day of the concert.

The arrival of the orchestra in Sapporo coincided with the impact of the devastating tidal wave on the east coast which left thousands homeless. After traveling through the damaged areas in Matsushima on the way to the concert in Sendai, the orchestra performed Debussy's "La Mer" which contains a passage of musical violence symbolic of the great power of the sea.

At the close of the concert in Sendai, a gift of 100,000 yen from the members of the orchestra to the relief fund for tidal wave victims was presented on the stage to Yoshio Miura, governor of the Miyagi Prefecture.

* * *

The visiting musicians traveled far by day and played concerts before capacity audiences at night. They sometimes stayed in Japanese inns and learned a different style of eating and sleeping. Everywhere they taxed hotel accommodations to the utmost. They learned to eat box lunches with chop-sticks during long train rides between concerts or quickly sought out the local restaurants which sometimes made special provisions for musicians who enjoyed dining after an evening concert, usually after the normal closing hours.

The Bostonians climbed Mt. Fuji-no-Yama, visited volcanoes in Hokkaido, enjoyed hot baths at famous Japanese hot springs, and sought out major tourist attractions. Informal research revealed that more than 75 cameras, many transistor radios, and countless pearls were purchased during the month.

On its return to Boston in late June, the Symphony will resume its normal summer schedule which includes the six-week series of concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

HOME AGAIN—Joseph De Pasquale, Boston Symphony's first violinist, is greeted by wife, Maria, and children, Sandra, 10; Lisa, 8; Joey, 4.

Symphony Members Place Japan Riots in Lower Key

SYMPHONY

Continued From the First Page

He described Japanese audiences as "very responsive and extremely well-behaved." Voisin reported that Japanese audiences wait until the end of a performance to cough, clear their throats or indulge in any other kind of restlessness.

Leonard Burkat, music administrator for the orchestra, who accompanied the players on part of the tour, said they had "the best reception everywhere. It was all excitement from day to day."

With the exception of the death from natural causes, of one of its members, the orchestra suffered no undue setbacks. Burkat figured millions heard or saw the symphony on the tour.

"Wherever it performed—in Australia, New Zealand, or the Far East—national broadcasting concerns sponsored television or radio performances. In Formosa, the Symphony performed under the auspices of Madame Chiang Kai-shek.

Burkat agreed, too, that the student demonstrations were not anti-American. "They were specifically directed against their own government. It was the equivalent of our writing a complaint letter to our congressman.

In all, the Symphony gave 22 concerts in Japan, three in the Philippines, two on Formosa, two in New Zealand and seven in Australia. A scheduled performance in South Korea was canceled because of an uprising in that country.

Following their arrival at Logan Airport was another special plane carrying 16,825 pounds of baggage, including their precious instruments. Guardians of the cargo throughout the tour were Harvey Genereux, baggage master, Alfred Robison, and Daniel Moriarty. The trio engineered the difficult feat of transporting the musicians' paraphernalia on the orchestra's island-hopping tour. Remainder of the 104-man orchestra returns today.

Among those on hand to greet yesterday's arrivals was Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops. Some of the musicians are members of both the Symphony and the Pops and will rejoin the latter next Friday.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, left the group in San Francisco for a polar flight to his home in France where he will spend a few days before he begins the Berkshire Music Center season at Lenox.

266

[illegible] lines. The Seoul [illegible]

Eagle 6/20/60

BSO Members Back Home, Discount Japanese Riots

From UPI and AP

BOSTON — Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, back from a tour of the Far East, were agreed today that recent demonstrations in Japan were directed at the Japanese government and were not anti-American.

A contingent of [illegible] musicians flew into Logan Airport Sunday, to be followed by the remainder of the orchestra.

Ike Would Have Been Safe

Not one of the arriving musicians gave the impression he felt the Japanese rioting was anti-American, though they conceded they were not in Japan when the demonstrations were most violent.

Violinist George Humphrey of Arlington said he felt President Eisenhower would have been safe in Japan if his plans for visiting there had gone through.

Leonard Burkat, music administrator of the orchestra, said the demonstrations appeared to him to be much like Americans writing their senator when they want to voice their opinion on a controversial issue." He said he and conductor Charles Munch walked through student-clogged streets several times and the youths were friendly and orderly [illegible].

Several musicians said Japanese youths approached them on the streets and praised them for performances that had been presented over television. The musicians praised Japanese audiences as polite and orderly and also well-informed about music.

75,000 Heard [illegible]

The orchestra played before an estimated 75,000 persons during 22 concerts in Japan, two in Taipei, Formosa, three in the Philippines, seven in Australia and two in New Zealand. A scheduled concert in Seoul, South Korea, was called off because of unrest there. The tour started April 25 and covered about 30,000 miles.

Conductor Charles Munch left the party in San Francisco yesterday to board a plane for a polar flight to Europe. After a two-week vacation at his home outside Paris he'll return for the Tanglewood summer concerts in the Berkshires, which start July 6.

Monitor 6/20/60

Returned Hub Musicians Say Japanese Riots Not Anti-U.S.

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, returning last night from an eight-week concert tour of the Far East, said they found no anti-American feeling in student demonstrations in June, where the orchestra spent a month.

"The animosity shown by the students was directed against their government and not the United States," said Roger Voisin, first trumpeter.

He explained the protests as part of an emerging Japan in which students are leading the struggle to replace the old social order with Western ways.

Forty-nine musicians — about half — returned yesterday. The rest were due to arrive today.

Red Role Detected

Although the orchestra was not in Japan last week when the outbreaks reached their peak, members pointed out they had witnessed many of the student demonstrations during their four-week stay in the country.

George Humphrey, violist, called the demonstrations "a normal reaction of youth of that age to a cause." He added, however, that trained Communist organizers had taken advantage of the students to "greatly exaggerate" the protests.

"It's my personal opinion," Mr. Humphrey said, "that President Eisenhower would have been safe" if he had gone to Japan as planned.

Leonard Burkat, the orchestra's music administrator, likened the demonstrations to "Americans voicing their opinion on a controversial issue by writing their congressman."

Riots Held Unrepresentative

Several members of the entourage pointed out that the great majority of the Japanese people took the demonstrations in stride and appeared not to share the students' views.

The demonstrations, said Mr. Humphrey, "were not representative of how the Japanese feel toward the West."

The orchestra played before an estimated 75,000 persons during a 30,000-mile air tour that began at Boston April 25. Besides 22 concerts in 16 cities in Japan, some broadcast over radio and television, the orchestra played 2 concerts at Taipei, Formosa; 3 in the Philippines; 7 in Australia; and 2 in New Zealand.

Mr. Voisin characterized Japanese audiences as "very responsible and well-behaved."

The symphony, Mr. Burkat added, was well-received everywhere.

VISITORS FROM BOSTON

Facing the prospect tonight of the 35th concert of a 36-concert tour, 105 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra party disembarked at Wellington Airport yesterday afternoon.

They had come in two DC6 aircraft direct from Melbourne, where they played on Tuesday night.

Carrying no instruments to mark them as musicians, they could have been any nondescript group of travellers as they filed past the health and Customs officials.

Most of their baggage, including their instruments, had arrived earlier in the afternoon in a DC4 packed roof to floor from the forward bulkhead aft with everything a symphony orchestra needs from batons to bassoons, harps to horns. Another 3000lb. of luggage was carried by one of the DC6s.

PROFESSIONALS

This was obviously no carefree band of tourists. They were a company of professionals with a job to do and if there were more joy in their hearts than appeared in their faces it was probably caused by the thought that their home town of Boston was now almost in sight.

After tomorrow's 36th and last concert in Auckland they will fly off on Saturday for home. Because of transport difficulties half of them will have to spend a night at Nandi.

But most of them are not going home to rest. Tomorrow week they will be playing at a Boston "pops" concert under Arthur Fiedler and before that there will be rehearsals.

SUDDEN DEATH

Members of the orchestra who had come to New Zealand totalled 101, said Mr. Perry. There had been some defections during the tour for personal reasons or illness and one member died suddenly in Japan from a heart attack.

The tour began with a 48-hour flight from Boston to Taipeh, Formosa, said Mr. Cox, the party arriving numb with fatigue. Twenty-two concerts in 16 centres in Japan followed.

Japan provided their longest single immersion in a national atmosphere and most members of the party enjoyed it immensely, though they did find themselves dodging natural calamities. After an earthquake in Matsuyama, they were about to go to northern Japan when a seismic tidal wave struck the coast.

Having driven through the area of tidal destruction to give a concert at Sandai, the members of the orchestra personally contributed 100,000 yen, about £100, to a relief fund.

Just as they were ready to fly to Manila, it was struck by a typhoon, but this was the last of their weather troubles. It was fine in Australia and Wellington greeted them with the calm sunset of a perfect day.

Tour A Great Success, Says Charles Munch

Though he did not touch ground in New Zealand till 4.30 yesterday afternoon, Charles Munch, 68-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was already impressed by what he had seen.

"You have a wonderful country—such beautiful mountains," he said.

Mr. Munch said the tour had been a great success. Everywhere they had played to large audiences and he had been most impressed by the manner in which Western music was received in the East.

He expressed particular appreciation of the work done on the tour by the American composer and conductor, Aaron Copland, who did not make the trip from Australia to New Zealand. Copland's lectures during the tour had been a marvellous success, he added.

If Mr. Munch seemed tired on his arrival yesterday, he had reason to be. Usually he spends the morning after a concert in bed, but he conducted in Melbourne on Tuesday night and was up at six yesterday morning to catch the plane. Tonight he will conduct in Wellington and tomorrow night in Auckland.

But after that he plans a rest. Unlike the other members of the party, he is not going back direct to Boston. He goes straight to Paris, which might be called his spiritual home, as Strasbourg is his birthplace and Boston his place of employment. He is not even taking a score with him.

267

BOSTON DAILY RECORD TUES., JUNE 21, 1960

H[illegible] Symphony Hailed by Even Ja[illegible] Rioters

The Japanese are enthusiastic music lovers, a second group of 59 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra said yesterday on arrival in Boston from a 36-concert 30,000-mile tour of the Orient.

The orchestra left Boston April [illegible] and played for audiences in Japan, Formosa, Australia, the Philippines and New Zealand.

SAW [illegible] SCENES

William [illegible] Cox of Exeter, N. H., advance tour manager, told newsmen at Logan International Airport, East Boston:

"We saw a great deal, especially while in Japan. We left our hotel rooms to watch the demonstrations in the streets. But at no time was any of our personnel inconvenienced.

"In fact, some of those who took part in the demonstrations during the day lined up at stage doors at night seeking our autographs."

MORE ENTHUSIASTIC

He said Far Eastern music lovers seem the same as Americans, except they are more enthusiastic. "Some applaud in the middle of the numbers, and we [illegible] to do at least two encores at every performance," he [illegible].

Leonard Burkat, music administrator, told of seeing 6000 orderly [illegible] march down the main streets, but "I saw no violence. The police even stopped traffic and pedestrians so the marchers could get by."

FALL RIVER TAX UP

FALL RIVER—The 1960 ta rate will be $85.40, represent ing a $4.60 increase.

Meryyn Evans, 33, (United Pre

Eagle 6/18/60

Boston Symphony Home Next Week From Triumphs

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return home next week from a successful trip to the Orient and Australia.

The members of the orchestra will arrive in two planes at 11:15 a.m. from San Francisco, one group on Sunday, the other on Monday.

Conductor Charles Munch will fly directly from San Francisco to Paris for a short vacation before he begins the Berkshire Music Center season at Lenox, Mass.

The symphony's last concert stop was in New Zealand. The musicians will rejoin the Boston Pops Orchestra roster for a concert here Tuesday night.

Red China Spurns

Monitor 6/20/60

Symphony Returns

Arthur Fiedler was among those on hand yesterday at Logan Airport to greet 49 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra returning from the Far Eastern tour. The remaining members are scheduled to return today.

Having completed an eight-week, 36-concert trip with enormous success and acclaim from Tokyo to Melbourne, the musicians will replace their substitutes at the Pops on Friday evening for the remainder of its 75th season. Charles Munch flew from San Francisco to Paris and will return to Boston in time for the Berkshire Music Festival.

Wedding Dance ....
Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Monitor 6/17/60

Man of the Year

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops, was honored yesterday as the "Man of the Year" in music by the Better Music Broadcasters Association. Mr. Fiedler was informed of the award by Theodore Jones, president of WCRB. Mitch Miller was named recipient last year.

Mr. Jones cited Mr. Fiedler for his "significant contribution in the field of music," particularly in promoting the better quality of music. Mr. Jones took notice of Mr. Fiedler's 31 years of service as conductor of Pops, the longest tenure of any living American conductor.

Formal presentation of the award will be made on June 25 at WCRB Night at the Pops in Symphony Hall. Carl Schuele, president of Broadcast Time Sales, New York, will represent the dozen stations comprising the Better Music Broadcasters.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Independent Republican
Circ. 182,816
JUN 24 1959

Mayor Takayama Of Kyoto Visits Governor Today

Mayor Gizo Takayama of Kyoto, Japan and a group of Japanese civic leaders will visit Gov. Furcolo and key legislators this morning at the State House, in the third day of the Kyoto to Boston Salute.

The group will be the luncheon guests of Boston University president and Mrs. Harold Case. Tomorrow they will visit Lexington and Concord, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard, and at 7:30 p.m. Mayor Takayama will give a buffet and reception in the Sheraton-Plaza.

The Chamber of Commerce will tender the visitors a luncheon and the World Trade Center of New England will be their hosts at dinner in the Sheraton-Plaza Friday. At 8:30 p.m. they will be guests of honor at the Boston Pops Concert in Symphony Hall.

The Japanese delegation departs Saturday at 10 a.m. for Washington.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
JUN 6 1960

Superb Writers

To the Editor of The Herald:

For the "Best of Bill Cunningham" a small word of thanks. Not that it is necessary to recall him to life since for many of us his memory like that of Rudolf Elie and Bill Mullins cannot but endure.

His writing was so superb that one can hardly envy the difficult task of the editor in making selections.

It is to be hoped that soon there will appear volumes of his essays and those of Elie. This observer will never forget the latter's columns written from Europe at the time of the tour of the Boston Symphony, particularly the concert in the Cathedral of Chartres.

BERNARD McCABE.
East Milton.

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

Boston Globe
Front Page — 6/20/60

Japan Unrest Didn't Affect Hub Symphony

By GLORIA NEGRI

The Japanese student rebellions were "greatly exaggerated and they were demonstrations not riots," a Boston Symphony Orchestra viola player declared here yesterday.

George Humphrey of Arlington, a member of the first contingent of symphony musicians—numbering about 40—which arrived here after a triumphant eight-week Far Eastern tour, declared:

"The demonstrations were not representative of how the Japanese feel toward the West."

Humphrey dismissed the rebellion as "a normal reaction of youth. Japan is in the throes of breaking with tradition, and the students, being young and impatient, want to break away from everything at once. They are growing Western, but with a vengeance."

Humphrey recalled that one man in Japan greeted him: "Hey, American, you a Communist?" When Humphrey said "no" the Japanese countered, "I thought all Americans were Communist."

Roger Voisin, first trumpeter in the orchestra, agreed the demonstrations "were nothing very violent. Several times we were right in the midst of them—but there was no ill feeling directed at us. The students were [illegible] their feelings against their own government."

Voisin [illegible] at the way students are on the move in Japan. "Eight, 10 and 12-year-olds are traveling all over the country. It is a part of their education. Instead of just reading about places, they learn about them first-hand."

Japanese music lovers were, in general, very well [illegible] in Western style music. "They were interested in American music, but were hungry to hear the classics, as well," Voisin observed.

SYMPHONY
Page Three

---

you want peace for all the children of the world, a sentiment that we share. But, Mr. Premier, we have a saying that probably has a Russian equivalent: 'Actions speak louder than words.'

"We think this axiom is a most meaningful one. We have tried to be guided by it in this matter."

The 30-member editorial board unanimously agreed with the school editors.

* * *

FOURTEEN-YEAR-OLD Robert A. (Bobby) Hill, son of a U.S. Air Force Staff Sergeant stationed in Italy, has won official praise for causing some $400,000 worth of medical supplies to be given to the Dr. Albert Schweitzer Hospital in French Equatorial Africa.

At a recent ceremony, Bobby was given the first People-to-People award under the U.S. President's program for worldwide understanding.

Bobby's interest in Dr. Schweitzer's work made him seek donations of medical supplies from drug firms and individuals in Italy where the boy lived with his parents.

* * *

THOUSANDS OF LAO school children will be able to study their own language from textbooks collected for them by the school children of Hawaii.

The U.S. 50th State presented 50,000 copies of the elementary-grade books designed especially for the Lao pupils to the Lao Ministry of National Education recently.

Acknowledging the gift, Minister Nhouay Abhay said that it was "not only a fine brotherly gesture" but also showed recognition of Laos' efforts in the field of education.

1-42 (80)

268

FREE WORLD

C o n t e n t s

Volume IX Number 9

Nuclear Submarines — New Power for Peace 2
Opening New Channels of Commerce 8
Manila's International Zoo 10
Cambodia's Fine School for Artists 16
Malaya Mourns a Monarch 18
Reading the Clouds 20
The United Nations 22
The Questioners 24
Honor to the Elders 26
New Noisemaker Scares Them Away 29
One Man's Beautiful Shrine to Peace 30
A Land of Symphony Orchestras 32
Bounty Across the Land 36
These are Their Best 38
4-K Clubs Solve a Problem 40
After the Harvest — It's Festival Time! 42

SPECIAL FEATURES

Notes and Quotes ...... Inside Front Cover
Free World Introduces 21
Footnotes ...... Inside Back Cover

FRONT COVER

Manila was without a zoo for nearly 15 years. But last year, after several years of planning, a zoological garden was opened to the public. With the help of many countries who donated animals and birds, Manila's "international zoo" is one of the best in Asia and a popular place for young and old. See page 10.

BACK COVER

When the USS Triton, America's largest nuclear powered submarine, recently circled the globe underwater all the way, its periscope occasionally shot up to record landmarks — and simply to observe the surface. In the Makassar Strait, this sailing ship was photographed through the periscope. See story on page 2.

Published by Free Asia Press, Manila

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

GLOBE
Front Page 6/20/60

Japan Unrest Didn't Affect Hub Symphony

By GLORIA NEGRI

The Japanese student rebellions were "greatly exaggerated and they were demonstrations not riots," a Boston Symphony Orchestra viola player declared here yesterday.

George Humphrey of Arlington, a member of the first contingent of symphony musicians—numbering about 40—which arrived here after a triumphant eight-week Far Eastern tour, declared:

"The demonstrations were not representative of how the Japanese feel toward the West."

Humphrey dismissed the rebellion as "a normal reaction of youth. Japan is in the throes of breaking with tradition, and the students, being young and impatient, want to break away from everything at once. They are growing Western, but with a vengeance."

Humphrey recalled that one man in Japan greeted him: "[illegible] American, you a Communist?" [illegible] Humphrey [illegible] Japanese counter[illegible] Americans [illegible]

Roger [illegible] er in [illegible] the [illegible] nothing [illegible] times [illegible] midst [illegible] no ill [illegible] The [illegible] their [illegible] own [illegible]

Voisin [illegible] at the [illegible] the m[illegible] and [illegible] all ov[illegible] part [illegible] stead [illegible] places [illegible] first-ha[illegible]

Japan[illegible] in general [illegible] in Western [illegible] were interested in American music, but were hungry to hear the classics, as well," Voisin observed.

SYMPHONY
Page Three

---

you want peace for all the children of the world, a sentiment that we share. But, Mr. Premier, we have a saying that probably has a Russian equivalent: 'Actions speak louder than words.'

"We think this axiom is a most meaningful one. We have tried to be guided by it in this matter."

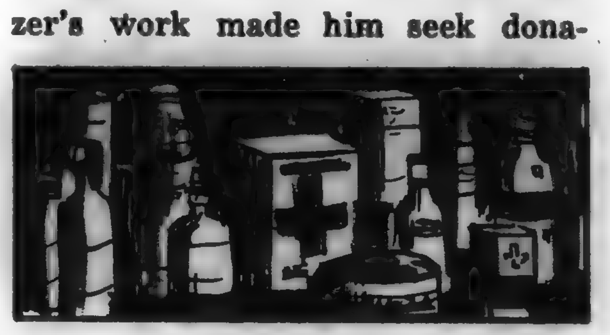
The 30-member editorial board unanimously agreed with the school editors.

★ ★ ★

FOURTEEN-YEAR-OLD Robert A. (Bobby) Hill, son of a U.S. Air Force Staff Sergeant stationed in Italy, has won official praise for causing some $400,000 worth of medical supplies to be given to the Dr. Albert Schweitzer Hospital in French Equatorial Africa.

At a recent ceremony, Bobby was given the first People-to-People award under the U.S. President's program for worldwide understanding.

Bobby's interest in Dr. Schweitzer's work made him seek donations of medical supplies from drug firms and individuals in Italy where the boy lived with his parents.



★ ★ ★

THOUSANDS OF LAO school children will be able to study their own language from textbooks collected for them by the school children of Hawaii.

The U.S. 50th State presented 50,000 copies of the elementary-grade books designed especially for the Lao pupils to the Lao Ministry of National Education recently.

Acknowledging the gift, Minister Nhouay Abhay said that it was "not only a fine brotherly gesture" but also showed recognition of Laos' efforts in the field of education.

1-42 (60)

FREE WORLD

Contents

Volume IX Number 9

Nuclear Submarines — New Power for Peace 2
Opening New Channels of Commerce 8
Manila's International Zoo 10
Cambodia's Fine School for Artists 16
Malaya Mourns a Monarch 18
Reading the Clouds 20
The United Nations 22
The Questioners 24
Honor to the Elders 26
New Noisemaker Scares Them Away 29
One Man's Beautiful Shrine to Peace 30
A Land of Symphony Orchestras 32
Bounty Across the Land 36
These are Their Best 38
4-K Clubs Solve a Problem 40
After the Harvest — It's Festival Time! 42

SPECIAL FEATURES

Notes and Quotes Inside Front Cover
Free World Introduces 21
Footnotes Inside Back Cover

FRONT COVER

Manila was without a zoo for nearly 15 years. But last year, after several years of planning, a zoological garden was opened to the public. With the help of many countries who donated animals and birds, Manila's "international zoo" is one of the best in Asia and a popular place for young and old. See page 10.

BACK COVER

When the USS Triton, America's largest nuclear powered submarine, recently circled the globe underwater all the way, its periscope occasionally shot up to record landmarks — and simply to observe the surface. In the Makassar Strait, this sailing ship was photographed through the periscope. See story on page 2.

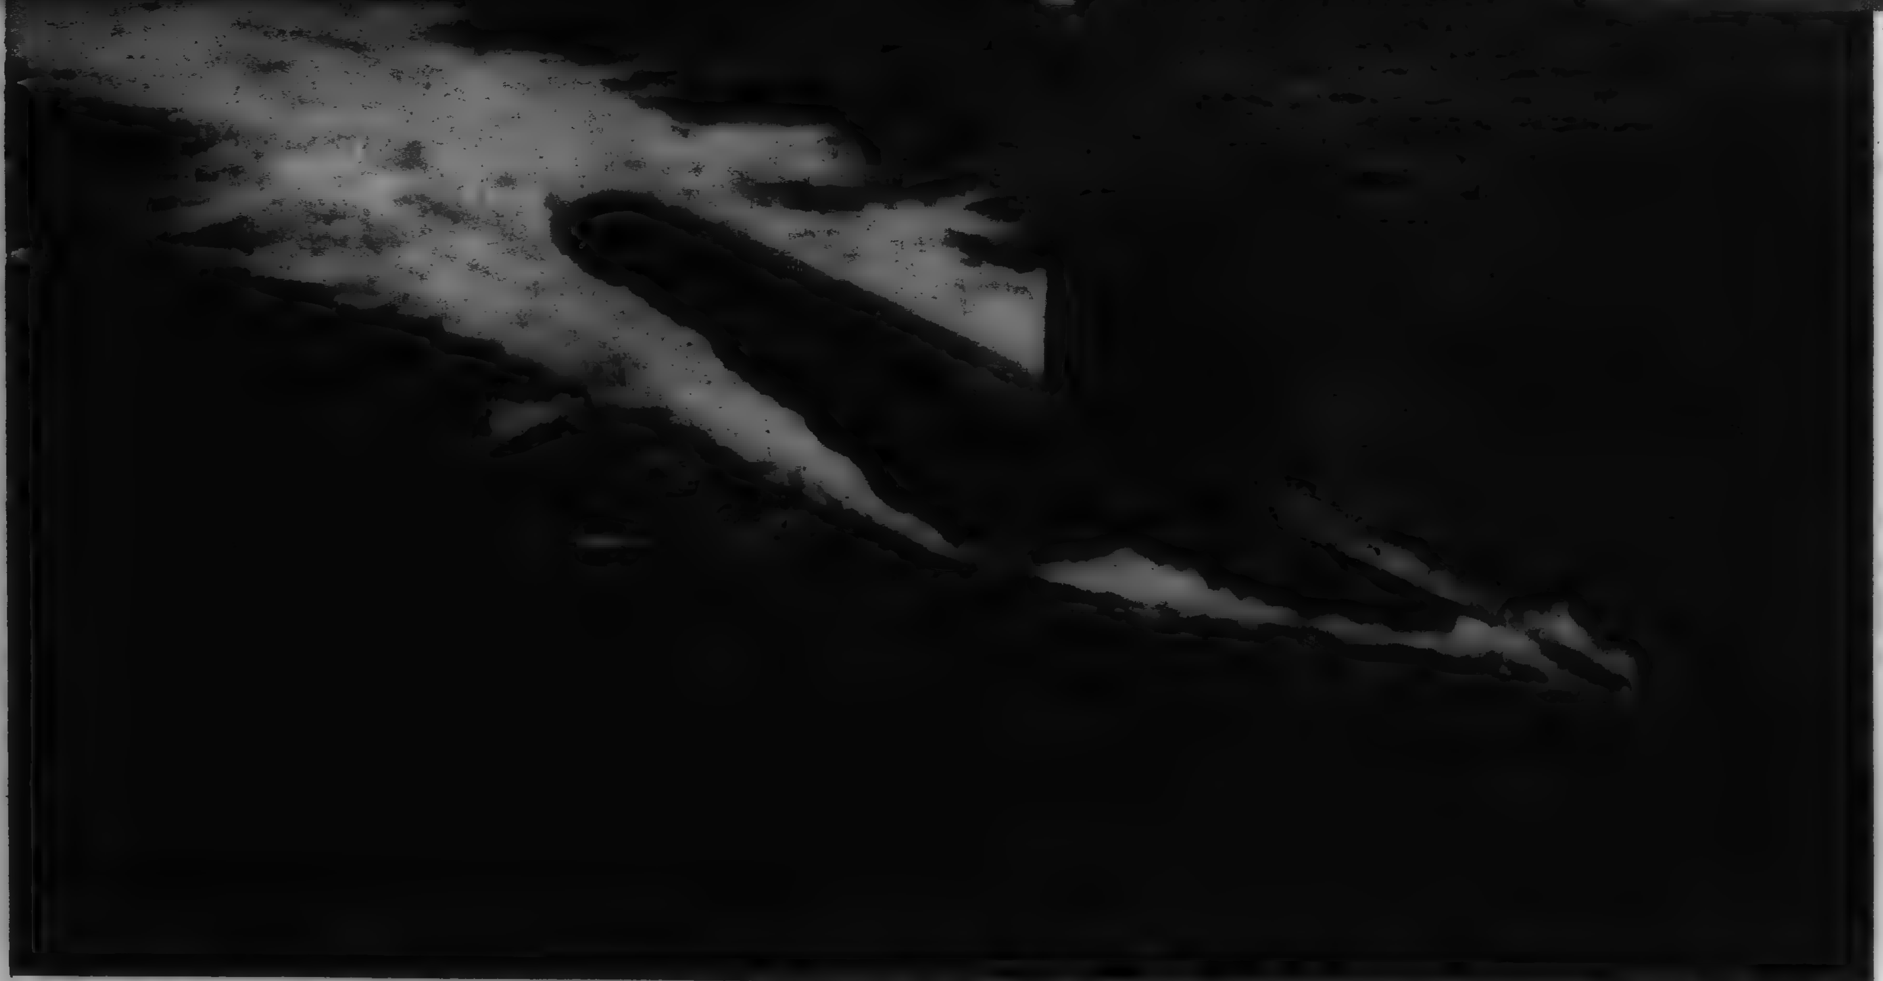
Published by Free Asia Press, Manila

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

GLOBE
Front Page — [illegible]

268



Off Montauk Point, Long Island, on Feb. 16, 1960, Triton prepares to dive for first submerged voyage around globe.

Santa Cruz in Canary Islands was photographed through Triton's periscope.

Crew members trace route on map. Capt. Beach uses periscope to see surface.

It costs $17, looks like a toy machine gun, sounds like a howitzer—and may help relieve India's food problems.

A noisemaker developed by Indian agricultural engineer Y. K. Murthy, it can protect a five-acre field by scaring hungry birds away at a cost of only five cents a day. It can also scatter wild elephants, jackals, snails and flying foxes.

The machine was modeled in India after British and German inventions which did not prove entirely successful in dispersing Indian fauna.

A few more adjustments will make it capable of solving another problem—the monkeys which are a nuisance to the Indian farmer and destroy crops. The bolder ones even steal food off plates or harras city and village dwellers in other ways. But few would kill them because of Indians' belief in non-violence and reverence for all forms of life.

Now being developed by the Plant Directorate of the Government of India, it is expected to be distributed among farmers throughout the country.

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

Front Page
GLOBE [illegible]

268

Sculptor Shinzan Yamada

ONE MAN'S BEAUTIFUL SHRINE TO PEACE

EVERY MORNING at five, a 74-year-old man barely five feet tall enters a wooden shed behind his home at Futenma on the island of Okinawa. He picks up his tools and begins to chisel away on a statue of Buddha twenty feet high. Working alone in the echoing shed, he is interrupted only by an occasional visitor who walks in as though he were entering a cathedral. For this is Shinzan Yamada's personal cathedral.

Eight hours a day, seven days a week, Shinzan Yamada toils on his monument to peace which he started three years ago. He hopes to finish the project by 1964. "It was early in 1957 when I first felt the urge to do a work of art completely devoted to the theme of peace," he explains. "Later that year, the building to shelter the working area went up and I went to work."

Most of the funds for the venture have come from Yamada's own pocket. There has been a trickle of outside support, mostly from visitors who drop in to watch the dedicated artist at work. Yamada estimates he has invested over $16,000 to date on the monument. This has come from earnings from a small restaurant run by his family and from proceeds from his books and paintings. A group of friends is helping collect more funds and to date has contributed about $6,000.

Donations have come from Burma, Indonesia, Taiwan, Korea, the Philippines, Viet-Nam, Italy, Mexico and the United States. Yamada estimates he will need an additional $250,000 to complete the monument —for the brass finishing, the statue's marble base and to make the surrounding area suitable.

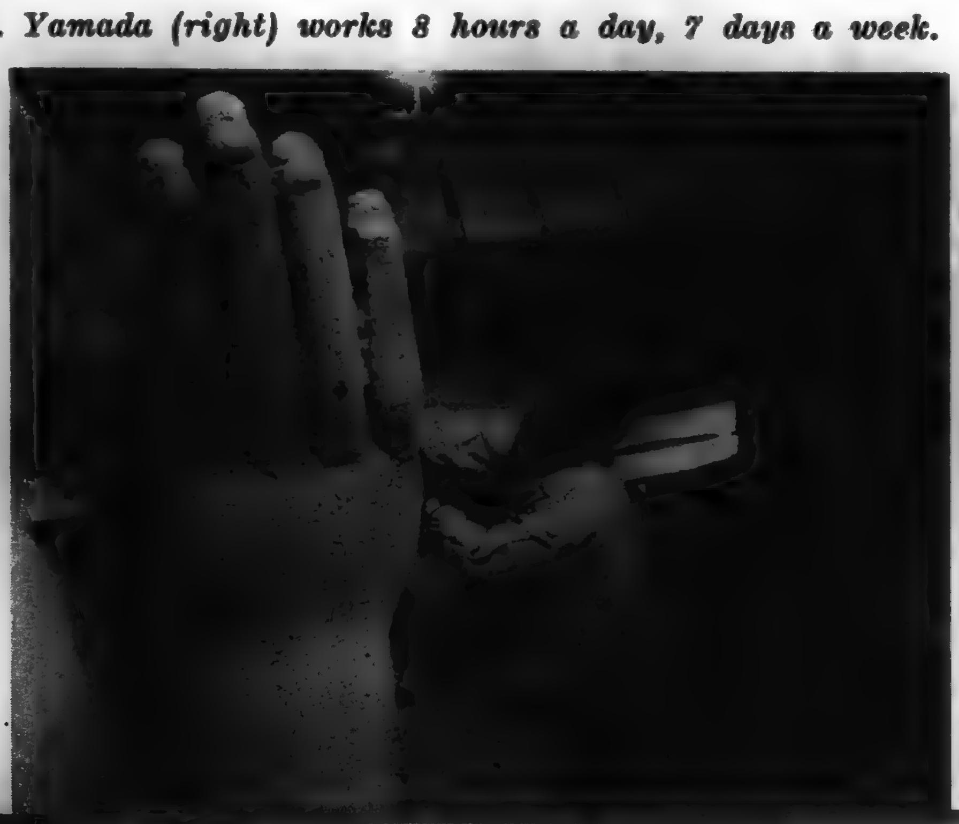
Besides financial donations, Yamada has received encouraging letters from persons around the world. "These letters are most precious to me," he says, "for these are small offerings and words of encouragement from average people, usually in the form of valuable stones or religious objects that are to be placed in the repository of the monument when it is completed."

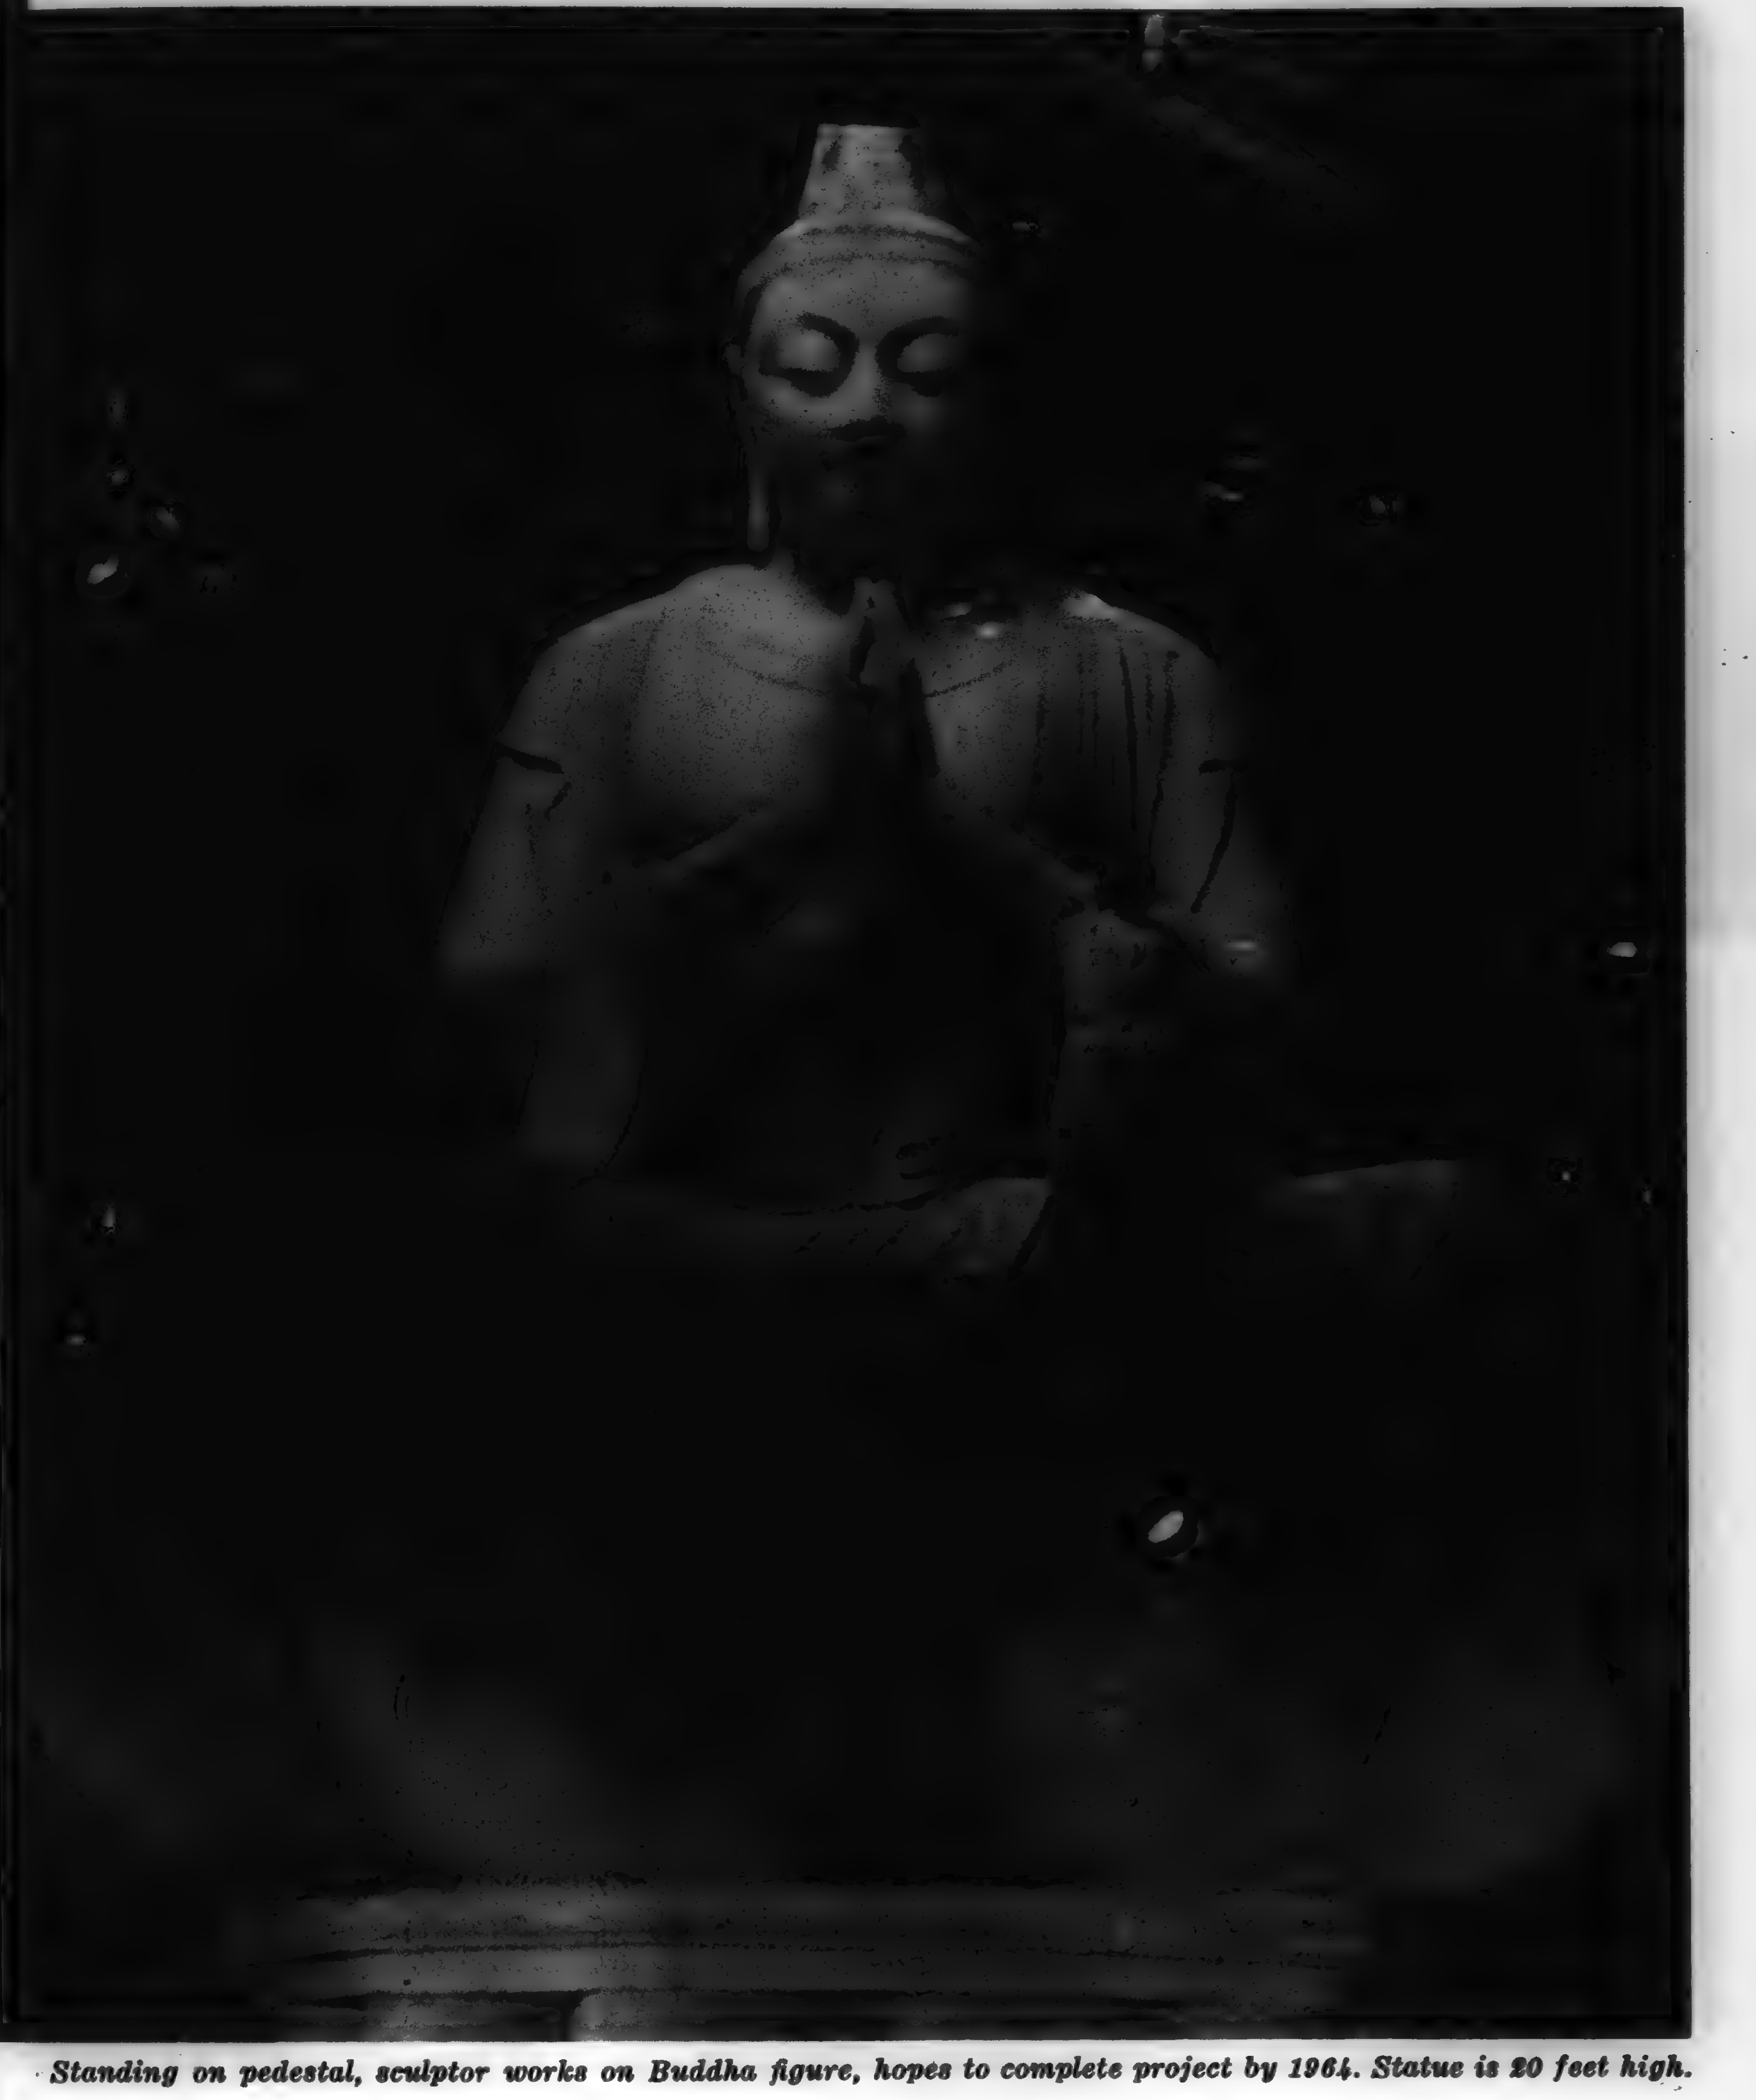
Shinzan Yamada has been a painter and sculptor most of his life. He first arrived in Okinawa in 1943. He was caught there by the war and lost two sons. At war's end he decided to stay on and settle in Futenma. In 1952 he was commissioned by the University of the Ryukyus to do an official book called "A Story of Okinawa Through Pictures." All the illustrations in this book are original paintings by Yamada.

Yamada chose Buddha as the central figure in his monument because he considers this personage the true embodiment of peace and serenity. Around its base are four other religious figures he admires: the Blessed Virgin Mary; Maya, the mother of Buddha; Mohammed and Confucius. The entire monument reaches a height of forty-four feet.

Upon the completion of this massive shrine, Shinzan Yamada plans to turn over to the world his personal contribution to the cause of peace.

In building (left) he constructed for peace monument, Mr. Yamada (right) works 8 hours a day, 7 days a week.





Standing on pedestal, sculptor works on Buddha figure, hopes to complete project by 1964. Statue is 20 feet high.

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

Front Page GLOBE 6/2[illegible]/60

268

A LAND OF SYMPHONY ORCHESTRAS

Standing, Boston Symphony Orchestra plays Philippine and American national anthems.

Wearing barong Tagalog, Dr. Charles Munch conducts the orchestra in performance of the Beethoven Third Symphony.

Considered one of the world's leading conductors, Dr. Munch leads spirited performance as shown in these pictures. Taken from rear of orchestra, they show conductor's face which is seldom seen by audience during a concert.

WHEN THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra appeared in Manila recently, it more than matched its advance publicity. The audiences—more than 20,000 Filipinos at three concerts—were prepared to hear one of the world's greatest symphony orchestras. They were not disappointed.

But when Conductor Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, stepped to the podium wearing a barong Tagalog, the popular Filipino shirt, the audience was pleased and flattered by his thoughtfulness. And when he asked the musicians to stand as they played the Philippine and American national anthems, the concert was well on its way to becoming a memorable musical evening for music lovers.

This was but one stop on its Asian tour that took the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Japan to Australia and New Zealand. And after every concert, critics acclaimed the orchestra as one of the world's greatest—just as they acclaimed it after concerts in Moscow, New York, Paris, San Francisco and scores of other cities where the orchestra has performed.

Critics outside the U.S. often express surprise when they hear the warm tonal qualities, the color and shading, the control and the spontaneity of the Boston Symphony. They do not expect a nation that produces "rock and roll" music also to develop an orchestra such as the Boston which can take its place beside the finest orchestras in the world.

But the fact is that the United States has become a land of symphony orchestras. There are more than 1,100 symphony orchestras in the U.S., and 22 of them, including the Boston, are of major stature in the music world.

There is other significant evidence of America's regard for symphonic music. It accounts for a growing percentage of recordings sold each year, and nearly 11,000 hours of concert music are programmed by radio stations. In a survey made recently it was found that Americans spend more money on concerts, recordings and musical instruments than on all spectator sports combined.

An orchestra has become an accepted part of community life in many cities. This has not always been true. In early America, music as an art existed primarily in major cities and among persons of education, wealth and family prestige. The average man pushing back the frontiers had little time for the arts. As the nation matured, so did the arts, and a typically American musical culture began to develop.

The American symphony orchestra was nurtured from the seeds of European culture but has matured in the democratic soil of a growing nation. At first it was dependent on its European ancestry. Gradually it has acquired an independence and stature of its own. Uniquely, the American symphony orchestra today is not bound to any particular musical tradition. It is at home among all of them.

The 18th century saw the beginnings of concert music in America, but the formation of more permanent groups and the rise of the symphony orchestra did not take place until nearly the middle of the 19th century. It was during that century that Boston developed a taste for fine music, under the influence of Gottlieb Graupner. He is generally credited with founding America's first—if small—serious orchestra. Other Boston groups made brief appearances in the city and visiting orchestras influenced the area's musical tastes.

The climate was ripe, then, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was formed in 1881. Its plan of financing in part by private aid set the pattern of financial support for all leading American orchestras during the next 50 years—and promoted high standards of artistic excellence.

Other cities were acquiring permanent orchestras in the late 19th century, but there were still only 10 professional orchestras in the U.S. by 1900. Today there are 22 major symphony orchestras.

Now there is a great effort by orchestras, civic leaders and educators to bring music directly to the people. There are concerts in school buildings, factories, museums, and in public buildings in the outlying neighborhoods of large cities. American orchestras today play some 7,800 symphony concerts a year to an audience estimated at ten million people.

The symphony audience represents every phase of American life. It is the man who owns the factory and the man who works in it. It is the professional and the student, the store clerk and the electrician, the taxi driver and the housewife.

These same people support the symphony through voluntary contributions as well as by buying tickets to concerts. Income from ticket sales and recordings is not sufficient to support a major orchestra. Outside help is needed to pay fair salaries to musicians and other employees, and to price tickets low enough to permit attendance by the average wage earner.

It has never been possible for great artistic institutions to pay their own way without patronage, and patronage in the traditional sense is no longer possible. The days of huge fortunes and large donations ended with World War I.

Continued on next page

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

Front Page

GLOBE

Concerts, radio, recordings bring symphony music to millions.

After arrival in Manila (left), Boston orchestra is serenaded by Philippine Constabulary Band. Added to big job of transporting 104 musicians half-way around the world is even bigger job of moving their musical instruments.

Culture is not directly subsidized by the Federal Government in the U.S. as it is in other countries. Americans historically have been distrustful of national support of the arts, which, like education, they feel is a matter for local determination. A small amount of indirect aid, however, does come from the Federal Government in the form of tax exemption for musical organizations qualifying as nonprofit educational institutions.

This is one indication of government recognition of the role of music in national life. Another is the increasing number of performing artists and groups such as the Boston Symphony Orchestra sent on tours abroad by the Federal Government.

The concert season of major orchestras usually runs from October through April, and often there is a summer season as well. Three types of concert series have become standard fare with professional orchestras.

The prime offering is a series of subscription concerts, with subscribers buying tickets in advance for the entire season. The orchestra programs works drawn from the entire symphonic repertoire and often features guest soloists of international fame. Sometimes guest conductors lead the ensemble. During its Asian tour, for example, the distinguished American composer, Aaron Copland, was guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for several of its concerts.

The second type is the series known as "popular" concerts which run simultaneously throughout the season. These reach the widest possible adult audience with lower ticket prices and often offer the chance for young musicians to appear with the finest orchestras

The third type, concerts for young people, give school children the experience of hearing good music—and also help to develop concert-goers of the future.

In addition to offering these programs to the people of their home communities, most major orchestras also tour other cities across the U.S.—and now across the world.

Summer concerts have become a regular activity with some major and community orchestras and are now an American tradition. They are held in city parks, in mountain retreats, from a river-front barge or in a large tent. Or they may be given in an elaborate amphitheater like the Hollywood Bowl.

Altogether, serious music in America today reflects not only a culturally mature nation, but a nation where democracy has reached to all the people, regardless of their social or economic position.

Americans listen to thousands of hours of symphonic music in concert halls and on radio programs. They watch outstanding orchestras and conductors on television. They support their own community orchestras. And they play instruments in amateur orchestras and ensembles.

This "grass roots" growth of musical vigor is no passing enthusiasm. Orchestra seasons — and budgets — are expanding continuously. If any trend is emerging, it is that of a rising artistic level. Orchestras of any size can attract and hold their audiences now only through visionary leadership and artistic excellence.

The vigor and growing energy of the symphonic climate in America today foreshadows one of the strongest cultural forces in the history of any nation. And it suggests that there will soon be even more orchestras of the stature of the Boston Symphony to bring the richness of the world's great music to audiences everywhere.

Photographs by Dolph Herras

Composer Aaron Copland, guest conductor, meets Filipino composers.

A cello player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a private concert (top) for Filipino workers while his colleague (above, left) reads a letter from home. Other musicians (above, right) tune their instruments and play for their own enjoyment (below) before performances. A specially designed music shell was built in Manila's Rizal Coliseum for Orchestra.

ARTICLE INCOMPLETE

Globe
Front Page 6/20/60

Japan Unrest Didn't Affect Hub Symphony

By GLORIA NEGRI

The Japanese student rebellions were "greatly exaggerated and they were demonstrations, not riots," a Boston Symphony Orchestra viola player declared here yesterday.

George Humphrey of Arlington, a member of the first contingent of symphony musicians—numbering about 40—which arrived here after a triumphant eight-week Far Eastern tour, declared:

"The demonstrations were not representative of how the Japanese feel toward the West."

Humphrey dismissed the rebellion as "a normal reaction of youth. Japan is in the throes of breaking with tradition, and the students, being young and impatient, want to break away from everything at once. They are growing Western, but with a vengeance."

Humphrey recalled that one man in Japan greeted him: "Hey, American, you a Communist?" When Humphrey [illegible] the Japanese countered, "[illegible] Americans [illegible]"

Roger [illegible] er in [illegible] the [illegible] nothing [illegible] times [illegible] midst [illegible] no ill [illegible] The [illegible] their [illegible] own [illegible]

Voi[illegible] at the [illegible] the m[illegible] and l[illegible] all ov[illegible] part [illegible] stead [illegible] places, [illegible] first-ha[illegible]

Japane[illegible] in general, [illegible] in Western style music. [illegible] were interested in American music, but were hungry to hear the classics, as well," Voisin observed.

SYMPHONY
Page Three

BOUNTY ACROSS T

WITHIN THE NEXT FIVE YEARS, idle lands and low yielding farms in the Republic of Viet-Nam will take a new and more productive look.

Fields of giant kenaf, jute and ramie fibers, juicy sugar cane, paddy plantations, vegetable gardens, and fruit orchards will bring a new and higher future to Viet-Nam's farmers and fields.

The transformation of the rural landscape has already started and its full impact will be felt by 1965. In the next five years Viet-Nam will become self-sufficient in many formerly imported agricultural products and will increase her exportable surplus to a substantial degree.

Viet-Nam's agricultural revolution is a result of the Government's land development program plus the application of the progressive farm methods and new improved types and varieties of crops being introduced to farmers through the United States technical cooperation mission.

Before the plan began a few years ago, the Republic imported almost all the sugar it needed, and large amounts of fibers for the manufacture of rope and grain containers.

As a result of the program, the country is already producing a surplus of rice for export, enough sugar cane to feed all its old mills and a few new ones, and is harvesting bigger crops of higher yielding fruits, vegetables, and field crops.

Agricultural researchers and teachers coordinate their activities from eight experimental stations located in regions with varying soils and climatic conditions. From their posts they travel outlying farms, distributing seeds, plants, and encouragement. Farmers are already growing new and improved varieties of sweet potatoes, corn, beans, peanuts, citrus, and avocado as a result of the stations work.

Seed distribution, however, is only one factor in the nation's agricultural improvement program.

Its technicians also analyze soil samples, test chemical fertilizers and teach farmers how to use new implements for land preparation and cultivation. They show them new ways to space seedlings and what types of fertilizers will produce the best results on their particular land and crop.

A newly organized soil service is making a soil

269

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY – CIRC. NOT AVAIL
AUG 1960

Sydney

Orchestra in Overcoats

Touring under President Eisenhower's program to encourage cultural visits to countries outside America, the 108 members of the Boston Symphony arrived from the Philippines in Brisbane on June 5. After their inaugural concert in Brisbane, the first ever given by an American symphony orchestra in Australia, the orchestra arrived in Sydney to give two concerts, conducted by Charles Munch, and one under Richard Burgin and Aaron Copland.

The programs included Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique", Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, Brahms's Second Symphony, "La Mer" by Debussy and "Bacchus et Ariane" by Roussel. In each of the three Sydney programs works by American composers were introduced. Mr. Munch conducted Norman Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale and Samuel Barber's music from "Medea". Aaron Copland was an eloquent interpreter of his First Symphony and a Suite from "The Tender Land".

The two concerts at the Town Hall were sold out in a matter of three hours. The third concert, which took place in an icy-cold, unheated boxing stadium, was attended by over 5,000 people, who most probably for the first time saw an orchestra playing in overcoats and pullovers with the white tie indicating formal dress.

Although conductors and players showed signs of fatigue after some extensive and exhausting traveling, the concerts were a revelation and undoubtedly a most stimulating exhibition of American cultural life. As one of the critics wrote: "Tone and attack, balance and ensemble were of an excellence which could have most of the name orchestras of the world aching with envy." —Wolfgang Wagner

---

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY – CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUL 1960

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony, under the leadership of Music Director Charles Munch, Associate Conductor Richard Burgin, an Guest Conductor Aaron Copland, gave a 30-day concert tour in Japan, during the month of May. The orchestra performed 22 concerts in 16 major Japanese cities under the auspices of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation. The series was in special recognition of the Centennial Year of American-Japanese Relations. The repertoire combined traditional works of the major composers of all periods with contemporary American music. The orchestra was lauded by audiences and critics, who lavishly praised the virtuoso orchestra for its remarkable performances. The tour also included the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

At the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony's summer home, the orchestra will again give 18 week-end concerts, on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning July 8. Dr. Munch will conduct 14 of these concerts, and Pierre Monteux, the orchestra's 85-year-old "conductor emeritus," four, one on each of the last four week-ends. The first week-end will be devoted to Bach, the second to Mozart, and the rest of the concerts to a variety of composers. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood on Aug. 11. On Aug. 4, there will be a Gala Evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

Eugene List was guest soloist with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops in an all-Gershwin program at Symphony Hall, Boston, June 26. Mr. List played the Concerto in F and Rhapsody in Blue. The program also included "An American in Paris," "Porgy and Bess, Symphony Picture for Orchestra" by Robert Russell Bennett, and "Strike Up the Band."

All the Saturday night concerts will be broadcast "live" from Tanglewood, July 9 through Aug. 13, over WQXR. Martin Bookspan, WQXR's director of recorded music, will be the program commentator.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

OMAHA, NEBR.
WORLD-HERALD (MORNING)
D. 125,007 S. 256,272

JUL 31 1960

Speaking of Music—

Maybe Leaders of Culture Could Achieve the Peace?

By Martin W. Bush

Risking guilt of harping to an annoying degree, I cannot resist—in the light of developments in recent weeks—renewing attention to international aspects of contradictions between the arts and politics.

The topic has served many writers. A major part of the comments concerned recent debacles of our President's experience in Paris and the calling-off of his planned visit to Japan.

Few of us are aware of what were coincidental occurrences in the field of music. Among the many comments on this phase more pointed was the editorial voice of Ronald Eyre in the magazine, Musical America. It was captioned: "Art Unites While Politics Divides."

In that editorial he called attention to the fact that while all this was happening the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, were winding up a tremendously successful one-month concert tour in four of Japan's principal islands.

On conclusion of the tour, Mr. Munch went on record to "thank the Japanese people who have been so wonderfully kind."

At the same time our pianist, Van Cliburn, our violinist, Isaac Stern, and our singer, Roberta Peters, were achieving triumphs with audiences all over Russia. In both nations there were overwelming displays of unmistakable admiration and good will.

As for the U-2 incident, Mr. Stern, on conclusion of his tour, said it: "May there be more American planes in the Soviet Union and more Soviet planes in the United States—filled with artists!"

Among the more persistent echoes of recent political conventions are the nominating speeches. Invariably the nominees become "that great American." His virtues exceeded all in the dictionary. Omniscience of his wisdom surpassed that of Solomon.

Would it be out of line to wish that a few politicians of such virtues and such wisdom might also possess a degree of sensitivity that would be alive to the moving powers of music?

269

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
AUG 1960

Sydney

Orchestra in Overcoats

Touring under President Eisenhower's program to encourage cultural visits to countries outside America, the 108 members of the Boston Symphony arrived from the Philippines in Brisbane on June 5. After their inaugural concert in Brisbane, the first ever given by an American symphony orchestra in Australia, the orchestra arrived in Sydney to give two concerts, conducted by Charles Munch, and one under Richard Burgin and Aaron Copland.

The programs included Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique", Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, Brahms's Second Symphony, "La Mer" by Debussy and "Bacchus et Ariane" by Roussel. In each of the three Sydney programs works by American composers were introduced. Mr. Munch conducted Norman Dello Joio's Variations, Chaconne and Finale and Samuel Barber's music from "Medea". Aaron Copland was an eloquent interpreter of his First Symphony and a Suite from "The Tender Land".

The two concerts at the Town Hall were sold out in a matter of three hours. The third concert, which took place in an icy-cold, unheated boxing stadium, was attended by over 5,000 people, who most probably for the first time saw an orchestra playing in overcoats and pullovers with the white tie indicating formal dress.

Although conductors and players showed signs of fatigue after some extensive and exhausting traveling, the concerts were a revelation and undoubtedly a most stimulating exhibition of American cultural life. As one of the critics wrote: "Tone and attack, balance and ensemble were of an excellence which could have most of the name orchestras of the world aching with envy." —Wolfgang Wagner

---

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUL 1960

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony, under the leadership of Music Director Charles Munch, Associate Conductor Richard Burgin, an Guest Conductor Aaron Copland, gave a 30-day concert tour in Japan, during the month of May. The orchestra performed 22 concerts in 16 major Japanese cities under the auspices of the Japan Broadcasting Corporation. The series was in special recognition of the Centennial Year of American-Japanese Relations. The repertoire combined traditional works of the major composers of all periods with contemporary American music. The orchestra was lauded by audiences and critics, who lavishly praised the virtuoso orchestra for its remarkable performances. The tour also included the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

At the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony's summer home, the orchestra will again give 18 week-end concerts, on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning July 8. Dr. Munch will conduct 14 of these concerts, and Pierre Monteux, the orchestra's 85-year-old "conductor emeritus," four, one on each of the last four week-ends. The first week-end will be devoted to Bach, the second to Mozart, and the rest of the concerts to a variety of composers. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood on Aug. 11. On Aug. 4, there will be a Gala Evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

Eugene List was guest soloist with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops in an all-Gershwin program at Symphony Hall, Boston, June 26. Mr. List played the Concerto in F and Rhapsody in Blue. The program also included "An American in Paris," "Porgy and Bess, Symphony Picture for Orchestra" by Robert Russell Bennett, and "Strike Up the Band."

All the Saturday night concerts will be broadcast "live" from Tanglewood, July 9 through Aug. 13, over WQXR. Martin Bookspan, WQXR's director of recorded music, will be the program commentator.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

OMAHA, NEBR.
WORLD-HERALD (MORNING)
D. 125,007 S. 256,272

JUL 31 1960

Speaking of Music—

Maybe Leaders of Culture Could Achieve the Peace?

By Martin W. Bush

Risking guilt of harping to an annoying degree, I cannot resist—in the light of developments in recent weeks—renewing attention to international aspects of contradictions between the arts and politics.

The topic has served many writers. A major part of the comments concerned recent debacles of our President's experience in Paris and the calling-off of his planned visit to Japan.

Few of us are aware of what were coincidental occurrences in the field of music. Among the many comments on this phase more pointed was the editorial voice of Ronald Eyre in the magazine, Musical America. It was captioned: "Art Unites While Politics Divides."

In that editorial he called attention to the fact that while all this was happening the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, were winding up a tremendously successful one-month concert tour in four of Japan's principal islands.

On conclusion of the tour, Mr. Munch went on record to "thank the Japanese people who have been so wonderfully kind."

At the same time, our pianist, Van Cliburn, our violinist, Isaac Stern, and our singer, Roberta Peters, were achieving triumphs with audiences all over Russia. In both nations there were overwelming displays of unmistakable admiration and good will.

As for the U-2 Incident, Mr. Stern, on conclusion of his tour, said it: "May there be more American planes in the Soviet Union and more Soviet planes in the United States—filled with artists!"

Among the more persistent echoes of recent political conventions are the nominating speeches. Invariably the nominees become "that great American." His virtues exceeded all in the dictionary. Omniscience of his wisdom surpassed that of Solomon.

Would it be out of line to wish that a few politicians [illegible]

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Dennis
Yarmouth Register
YARMOUTHPORT,
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,704
AUG 26 1960

LETTERS

World Therapy by Music

Mr. Emil Kornsand, the author of this letter, plays first violin with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which recently completed a widely hailed trip to the Far East. —Ed.

The Far Eastern tour of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place during the spring season of 1960 and lasted eight weeks. The places visited were Taiwan, Japan, the Philippine Islands, Australia and New Zealand. We gave 39 concerts in 24 different cities. The mileage, mostly by plane was approximately 34,000, the highest altitude about 7 miles and the fastest speed with tail wind over 600 mph.

In Shikoku I experienced a real earthquake which awakened me just in time for breakfast. In Honshu I saw the damage caused by a tidal wave and in Hokaido I ran twice into anti-American snake-dance demonstrations. In Luzon I took pictures of the destruction caused by a typhoon.

Four times we had long delays through mechanical trouble of the jet planes and in San Francisco our cargo plane with the musical instruments caught fire and was lucky enough to make an emergency landing.

In Taiwan we had to manipulate the chopsticks through a 10-course state dinner given by the Chiang Kai-shek government. In New South Wales we had a chance to try the strangest dishes (kangaroo-tail soup), and in South Australia quite a few of my colleagues while inspecting a winery got under its influence.

We exchanged the beginning of winter for the beginning of summer by flying at the right time over the Equator in a northerly direction and finally we could enjoy two Sundays in succession crossing the International Date Line going east. The serious question arose for the conscientious church-goers: "Does one have to go to Mass twice on a double Sunday?" And (believe it or not) some of our Frenchmen were put up in the Hotel Waterloo in Wellington. So much for statistics.

According to the applause we certainly had success all over. We on the other side were very much impressed by the people of the Far East, especially the Japanese. Their cleanliness, honesty, self-discipline, courtesy, alertness, nobleness and average intelligence are outstanding. In Japan the streets serve only the traffic and the cities are not built to display splendor and power as in Europe. Beauty is a matter of privacy and is hidden behind walls.

On entering a Japanese hotel one has to take off the shoes and slip into a pair of slippers of which a long row is parked in the lobby. A very unusual atmosphere prevails inside the inn. The rooms are sparsely furnished, just a low table and a few pillows on the floor which is covered by sweet smelling grass mats. In one corner there is usually a picture or a scroll with a few well arranged flowers. That's all. The maid, clad in a kimono, presents a hot and wet face cloth in a little basket and serves in a kneeling position the green tea on the low table. At night the room is transformed into a bedroom. The maid has been busy emptying the closets (with sliding paper doors) of the bedding and transferring it to the middle of the floor of this former living room. The drinking water, bedlamp, telephone, radio or even T.V. is within reach and can be operated while lying in bed. Next morning the maid again takes over the duties of the host and serves breakfast. The lack of linguistic knowledge is offset by melodious giggling. The maid has many duties: she presents the bill, takes the money, returns the receipt with a small gift and is reluctant to accept a tip. Many times the acceptance of tips was refused especially by cab drivers or waitresses in restaurants. The daily bath of the Japanese is considered more important than food. It almost becomes a ritual. The habit to soak in the extremely hot water did not quite agree with us, especially when we had to get ready for a concert. These hot baths are very relaxing and therefore only to be recommended if followed by a free evening, and we had very few of them indeed.

The Japanese countryside is charming, whether little farm houses amidst rice fields near a cedar covered slope or sea shore or Fuji Kama and the Japanese alps. Although the Japanese cities cannot compare with the cities in Europe in daylight, at night they are transformed into glittering splendor. The electric signs and illuminations of the Ginza or Asakusa districts in Tokyo or the reflections in the numerous canals of Osaka put Times Square or Piccadilly Circus almost in the shade. The famous sights are unfortunately somewhat spoiled because of overpopulation. Everything turns into a "Coney Island". But just the same, the famous Buddha in Kamakura with the open hands in his lap, or the gigantic Daibutsu in Nara with the blessing middle finger, could not fail to impress me very much.

We had several chances to watch oriental theater. We were presented with a special opera performance of the Chinese Air Force in Taipai. We also attended a show of the Geisha group in Kyoto and I went to a play of the famous Kabuki theater in Tokyo. I was very much impressed by the vitality of the Chinese opera and the colorful costumes and sceneries of the Kyoto Geisha theater. The Kabuki impressed me mainly through the pure style. Unfortunately I could not get all the enjoyment out of the latter, not knowing Japanese.

Finally: speaking of the generosity, friendliness and hospitality of the Japanese, I should like to mention Mitsuo Sugiyama and Shigeo Tanaka, both 19 year old students whom I had a chance to meet at the double bridge of the Imperial Palace in Tokyo. These

---

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
AUG 22 1960

Music Is Urged To Calm Nations

Theodate Johnson has a unique plan to promote international good will—replace conferences with concerts and ambassadors with musicians. "One good musician is worth three diplomats" is the opinion of "Musical America."

"Our government is vastly underestimating the importance of music and the arts toward promoting peace," Miss Johnson believes. "For instance, contrast the tremendous ovations received by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Japan, by the New York Philharmonic and Leonard Bernstein on their South American tour and by Van Cliburn, Isaac Stern and "My Fair Lady" in Russia with the receptions that greeted our government officials."

"Musical America," termed the 'voice of the music world' has subscribers in 73 countries and is considered an important cultural exchange medium by the United States Information Service.

Former Opera Singer.

"That's why I think that music is the important thing, to understand words is not necessary," said Miss Johnson.

This articulate woman, a former opera singer, became publisher and part-owner of the magazine in January after six years on the advertising staff. Coverage of music events throughout the world by well-known experts is but one of the new looks planned for the 63-year-old publication.

"We're going to concentrate on helping new artists and contemporary composers," said Miss Johnson, who, as a struggling young artist, went to Europe to be discovered.

Jittery Debut.

She made an unusual debut at the opera house in Antwerp singing the role of "Tosca" in Italian accompanied by an all-Flemish speaking cast without a rehearsal. "I still have nightmares about the second act when I got lost among the Flemish conversation, turned to the conductor for a cue and he shrugged his shoulders. I stopped singing and started acting," she recalled.

Miss Johnson also sang at the Paris Opera House. "I

THEODATE JOHNSON.

was soloist with the 7th Regiment and sang 'Ah Sweet Mystery of Life.' Can you imagine?" she said with a grimace.

Shortly after World War II began, Miss Johnson gave up singing to work for the Red Cross in Paris processing refugees.

"We worked night and day for six weeks, and with fear, nerves and illness, one day there was a crack and I lost my voice," said Miss Johnson. Her speaking voice returned in three years but her singing voice was gone forever.

This versatile woman has another project lined up—to learn all about jazz. "We're going to cover this field for the first time and I've really got to study. I'm not what said modestly.

Member Federal Reserve System
Member Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation
"At The Sign Of The Clock"

CROWELL CONSTRUCTION CO.
SOUTH DENNIS
SHORE PROTECTION LANDSCAPING
ROAD BUILDING DRIVEWAY CONST.
SAND · LOAM · HOT MIX · HARDENING
"no job too large ------- no job too small"
RTE. 134, SO. DENNIS, EXeter 8-8334

. . . . . for 123 years,
never returned less
30% dividend to

HYANNIS – OSTERVILLE
Newsclip Agency, Inc.
RIchmond 2-4200
Register
THPORT,
Circ. 1,704
1960

ng men showed me all of wn Tokyo, and at my re- to Tokyo later in May, visited at the concert hall, invited me a special sukiyaki dinner at the home of their fellow student, Kenko, and finally saw me off at the Tokyo airport with a present, a set of chopsticks in a beautiful laquor box.

The Philippines impressed me mainly through the tropical splendor. To see the strange fruits growing in their natural surroundings and to eat them in their natural ripeness is a special treat to an inhabitant of the temperate zone. In Manila I saw the most beautiful residential districts and the most horrible slums. The crime and corruption and the latent danger for a lonely tourist to promenade in Manila or to entrust oneself to a taxi made it desirable to travel across the Equator and to

Continued on page 4

Kiwis.

Because of a mix-up, one part of the orchestra was delayed for one full day in Vitilevu, the main island of the Fijis. I had a chance to travel over this fascinating south sea island and to swim in the coral lagoon of famous Korolevu beach. The last rolls of film could be used up on tropical flowers, volcanic cones, native villages with straw huts, Hindu mosques, sugar cane in blossom, etc.

We traveled from the south sea to the North Atlantic in 17 flying hours. I hope that through shrinking of our planet, and our modest attempt to bring the peoples of the world closer together through the only international language, music, we may come nearer to a permanent world peace.

Emil Kornsand - 1960
South Dennis

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
AUG 22 1960

Music Is Urged To Calm Nations

Theodate Johnson has a unique plan to promote international good will—replace conferences with concerts and ambassadors with musicians. "One good musician is worth three diplomats" is the opinion of "Musical America."

"Our government is vastly underestimating the importance of music and the arts toward promoting peace," Miss Johnson believes. "For instance, contrast the tremendous ovations received by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Japan, by the New York Philharmonic and Leonard Bernstein on their South American tour and by Van Cliburn, Isaac Stern and "My Fair Lady" in Russia with the receptions that greeted our government officials."

"Musical America," termed the 'voice of the music world' has subscribers in 73 countries and is considered an important cultural exchange medium by the United States Information Service.

Former Opera Singer.

"That's why I think that music is the important thing, to understand words is not necessary," said Miss Johnson.

This articulate woman, a former opera singer, became publisher and part-owner of the magazine in January after six years on the advertising staff. Coverage of music events throughout the world by well-known experts is but one of the new looks planned for the 63-year-old publication.

"We're going to concentrate on helping new artists and contemporary composers," said Miss Johnson, who, as a struggling young artist, went to Europe to be discovered.

Jittery Debut.

She made an unusual debut at the opera house in Antwerp singing the role of "Tosca" in Italian accompanied by an all-Flemish speaking cast without a rehearsal. "I still have nightmares about the second act when I got lost among the Flemish conversation, turned to the conductor for a cue and he shrugged his shoulders. I stopped singing and started acting," she recalled.

Miss Johnson also sang at the Paris Opera House. "I

THEODATE JOHNSON.

was soloist with the 7th Regiment and sang 'Ah Sweet Mystery of Life.' Can you imagine?" she said with a grimace.

Shortly after World War II began, Miss Johnson gave up singing to work for the Red Cross in Paris processing refugees.

"We worked night and day for six weeks, and with fear, nerves and illness, one day there was a crack and I lost my voice," said Miss Johnson. Her speaking voice returned in three years but her singing voice was gone forever.

This versatile woman has another project lined up—to learn all about jazz. "We're going to cover this field for the first time and I've really got to study. I'm not what said modestly.

270

DENNISPORT – HYANNIS –
Member Federal Reser
Member Federal Deposit Insur
"At The Sign Of T
CROW
CONSTRUCT SOUTH SHORE PROTECTION ROAD BUILDING
SAND · LOAM · HOT
"no job too large"
RTE. 134, SO. DENN
DRY CLEANING
DENNISPORT CLEANERS
A complete dry cleaning and laundry service
Agcy at So. Yarmouth Laundromat
FREE PICK UP AND DELIVERY
Main St., Dennisport, EX 8-3911
ELECTRICAL
Fruean Electrical Inc.
Electrical Contracting
Lighting Fixtures
and Fans on Display
Appliance Repairs
General Contr
Excavating, Trucking, Land
Building Maintenanc
Berry Ave., West Yarm
Box 74 SPring
. . . . for 123 years,
never returned less than 30% dividend to holders in England Newsclip Agency, Inc.

78, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Dennis mouth Register
MOUTHPORT,
Mass.
Circ. 1,704
26 1960

Letters (Cont'd)

accept the rather anticlimatic Australian late autumn. From Port Darwin to Brisbane we had to fly over hundreds of miles of the most desolate territory. But in Brisbane we could enjoy splendid subtropical autumn weather. The Australian cities, especially Sydney with its beautiful harbor, seemed to be very attractive in comparison with the eastern cities. We were wined and dined royally in Australia and the British mode of life there made us feel rather at home.

In New Zealand we could get a glimpse of Mount Cook while flying over Cook Strait. The harbor of Wellington is one of the most beautiful in the world. We sacrificed much color film there just as we did on Koalas, Kangaroos and Kiwis.

Because of a mix-up, one part of the orchestra was delayed for one full day in Vitilevu, the main island of the Fijis. I had a chance to travel over this fascinating south sea island and to swim in the coral lagoon of famous Korolevu beach. The last rolls of film could be used up on tropical flowers, volcanic cones, native villages with straw huts, Hindu mosques, sugar cane in blossom, etc.

We traveled from the south sea to the North Atlantic in 17 flying hours. I hope that through shrinking of our planet, and our modest attempt to bring the peoples of the world closer together through the only international language, music, we may come nearer to a permanent world peace.

Emil Kornsand - 1960
South Dennis

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 453,331 SAT. 174,917
AUG 22 1960

Music Is Urged To Calm Nations

THEODATE JOHNSON.

Theodate Johnson has a unique plan to promote international good will—replace conferences with concerts and ambassadors with musicians. "One good musician is worth three diplomats" is the opinion of "Musical America."

"Our government is vastly underestimating the importance of music and the arts toward promoting peace," Miss Johnson believes. "For instance, contrast the tremendous ovations received by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Japan, by the New York Philharmonic and Leonard Bernstein on their South American tour and by Van Cliburn, Isaac Stern and "My Fair Lady" in Russia with the receptions that greeted our government officials."

"Musical America," termed the 'voice of the music world' has subscribers in 73 countries and is considered an important cultural exchange medium by the United States Information Service.

Former Opera Singer.

"That's why I think that music is the important thing, to understand words is not necessary," said Miss Johnson.

This articulate woman, a former opera singer, became publisher and part-owner of the magazine in January after six years on the advertising staff. Coverage of music events throughout the world by well-known experts is but one of the new looks planned for the 63-year-old publication.

"We're going to concentrate on helping new artists and contemporary composers," said Miss Johnson, who, as a struggling young artist, went to Europe to be discovered.

Jittery Debut.

She made an unusual debut at the opera house in Antwerp singing the role of "Tosca" in Italian accompanied by an all-Flemish speaking cast without a rehearsal. "I still have nightmares about the second act when I got lost among the Flemish conversation, turned to the conductor for a cue and he shrugged his shoulders. I stopped singing and started acting," she recalled.

Miss Johnson also sang at the Paris Opera House. "I was soloist with the 7th Regiment and sang 'Ah Sweet Mystery of Life.' Can you imagine?" she said with a grimace.

Shortly after World War II began, Miss Johnson gave up singing to work for the Red Cross in Paris processing refugees.

"We worked night and day for six weeks, and with fear, nerves and illness, one day there was a crack and I lost my voice," said Miss Johnson. Her speaking voice returned in three years but her singing voice was gone forever.

This versatile woman has another project lined up—to learn all about jazz. "We're going to cover this field for the first time and I've really got to study. I'm not what said modestly.

271

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER
D. 102,083
SEP 3 1960

The Music Score

1960-61 Season Could Be Nashville's Best In Years

By SYDNEY DALTON

The music season of 1960-61 promises to be one of the most rewarding that Nashville has had for some years. Not only is the quality of the artists who will visit us of the highest, but the variety of the music to be presented promises, to musician and layman alike, a winter of real musical enjoyment.

One of the surprises of the season will be the visit of the Little Orchestra Society of New York, which will appear at Ryman Auditorium Nov. 16. This unique organization of 43 instrumentalists, 38 singers in the chorus and four distinguished soloists will present Handel's oratorio, "Judas Maccabaeus," Next to "Messiah" this is probably Handel's greatest choral work.

The Little Orchestra has won the praise of critics for its polished performances of music new and old and its conductor, Thomas Scherman, who, incidentally is the son of Harry Scherman, chairman of the board of the Book of the Month Club, has attained a place among the important conductors of the country. Irene Jordan is one of the four distinguished solists.

Other attractions so far booked for Ryman by Harry Draper are Fred Waring and his company, Oct. 28; the Ballet Russe, an established favorite in Nashville, Nov. 2, and the Jose Greco Ballet, equally popular here, Jan. 26.

Waring

Artists booked for appearances with the Nashville Symphony are Roberta Peters, a favorite singer who will be the first soloist of the season, Oct. 24-25. At the pair of concerts on Nov. 28-29, Claudio Arrau, who ranks with the really great pianists of the day, will return. Arrau suffered a slight heart attack recently but seems to have completely recovered.

On Feb. 13-14 the amazing virtuoso of the guitar, Andres Segovia, will be the soloist with the orchestra. He played here a few seasons ago at Fisk University. March 20-21 will bring Henryk Szeryng, a young artist who is winning extravagant praise for his violin playing. A local pianist, R. Emmett Vokes, will close the season April 17-18.

The Community Concert Series for this year has an attractive list of recitals and concerts, with lots of variety. The first attraction, Nov. 3, will be the Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre in a performance of Mozart's great opera, "Don Giovanni." The work will be sung in English by a distinguished cast of singers under the critical direction of Goldovsky, one of the leading opera authorities in this country.

On Dec. 5 Richard Tucker, one of the world's greatest tenors, will make his first appearance here and a young pianist who is rapidlly winning fame, Claude Frank, will play in War Memorial Feb. 21. That rarely heard instrument, the cello, will be played in a recital March 14 by Janos Starker and the season will be brought to a close May 7 with a program by the famous Concertgebouw Orchestra of Holland.

Fisk University is offering a particularly attractive list of artists during the coming season. It will open Oct. 31 with a recital by the great Negro baritone, William Warfield, whose voice and artistry have brought him worldwide renown. The new organ in Fisk Memorial Chapel, which is nearing completion, will be exhibited to its fullest Nov. 10, when the great organist, E. Power Biggs, gives a recital. A young pianist from Israel, David Bar-Illan, who has won much popularity in this country, will appear Jan. 9 and the season will close [illegible] with a dance recital by Paul Draper.

The new Fisk organ will be dedicated by Arthur Croley, of the Fisk faculty, Oct. 16. This recital will be free to the public.

The season at Lipscomb College will be made important by the appearance of Giomar Novaes, one of the greats among women pianists, a mature and seasoned artist of international reputation, who will play there Oct. 4.

Following its community Concerts appearance the Goldovsky opera company will be at A. & I. State University Nov. 4. A. & I. will present Players, Inc., Jan. 30 and the Lewis Johnson Dance Co. Feb. 28.

Here And There

As a contrast to all the political troubles the U. S. has had with the governments of the USSR and Japan, the receptions awarded our artists by the people of those countries is striking.

The Boston Symphony touring Japan, played to more than 50,000 people in 22 concerts.

GIOMAR NOUAES

"The countless acts of individual thoughtfulness and the enthusiastic reception of our music . . . will long be remembered by all of us who return to our homes in Boston," said Charles Munch, the conductor, at the end of the tour.

Meanwhile, Roberta Peters, soprano, and Isaac Stern, violinist, were being lauded during their Russian tours, and Van Cliburn was being greeted with cheers, tears and floral tributes by his Russian admirers. As Stern bid the Russians good-bye, he said:

"May there be more American planes in the Soviet Union, and more Soviet planes in the United States—filled only with artists!"

✦ ✦ ✦

News comes of the death of Anna Mlynarski, widow of the distinguished Polish musician, Emil Mlynarski, and mother of Mrs. Wiktor Labunski, well remembered here as a member of the faculty of the Nashville Conservatory of Music. Mrs. Artur Rubinstein is another daughter. Mrs. Mlynarski died at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Labunski in Kansas City.

✦ ✦ ✦

Death has also come to Clarence Cameron White, a well known Negro composer who was born in Clarksville. His opera, "Ouanga," won the David Bispham Medal in 1932 for the best operatic work by an American.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

AUG 28 1960

FROM TOKYO TO TANGLEWOOD

An exhibition of photos at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival there, drew much attention from concert-goers and musicians. The pictures were of the orchestra during its preceding 30,000 mile tour of Formosa, Japan, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand. This exhibit gave the musicians their first opportunity to review where they had been and what they had experienced during the strenuous tour activities.

SYMPHONY musicians enjoying exhibit. From left: Louis Speyer, English horn; Fredy Ostrovsky, violin; Bernard Kadinoff, viola; Josef Orosz, trombone; Gottfried Wilfinger, violin; Robert Karol, viola.

ADELAIDE, Australia—It was so cold on stage that Louis Speyer (left) and Ralph Gomberg had to use electric heater to warm their instruments.

FILIPINO cavalcade pauses for colt to have dinner.

IN PHILIPPINES, near Tagaytay. Ostrovsky and clarinetist Viscuglia make scenic photos.

SAPPORO, Japan—Dr. Keran Chobanian (center, left) and Harry Shapiro, French horn, learn that shoeshine boys are old women.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189

NOV 13 1960

Far East and Boston Symphony

JAPANESE DANCER was among entertainers who performed in Tokyo for the Boston Symphony Orchestra during its 1960 tour.

REPRESENTED on these pages is a cross section of 500 photographs taken on the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 30,000-mile good will Australasia tour by George Humphrey, violist, who lives in Arlington, Mass. Fifty of the pictures will be shown at Faunce House of Brown University starting tomorrow for two weeks. The orchestra's first Providence appearance this season is Nov. 22 at Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

The Australasia tour, during which 35 concerts were played, was conducted in cooperation with the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, and administered by the American National Theater and Academy. Mr. Humphrey, for his picture taking, used both American and Japanese cameras, all 2¼ by 2¼.

The viola brought home some pictures. They go on display at Brown tomorrow.

BIG BOYS. Leslie (Tiny) Martin, 350 pounds of musician, at last found someone bigger than he. Statue is of Niosan, Japanese God of Strength.

OPERATIC ORCHESTRA player illustrates his instrument for the Boston visitors in Tokyo. Japanese and Americans exchanged music views.

ony

section
Sym-ia tour
ington,
Faunce
or two ce this um.
were Presiultural n Na-is pic-
ameras, pictures.

omorrow

Mingle Musically

PHOTOGRAPHER who took the pictures presented here is George Humphrey of Arlington, Mass. He is viola player in Boston Symphony. About 500 pictures were taken. Some are now on exhibition at Brown.

COURT ORCHESTRA of Emperor of Japan plays at special offering of ancient dances for the Americans.

METHODIST MISSION school students on Inland Sea trip, Takahama to Beppu, sang for the orchestra.

DRAWING in lottery for seats on first plane home, Paul Kearney and Mrs. Winifred Winograd.

FINE POINTS are discussed by Armando Ghitalla, trumpet, and musician—Sapporo, Japan.

Continued on next page

VIOLINIST Rolland Tarpley tries out a banka dugout in a muddied Manila stream.

BOSTON SYMPHONY continued

Land of Emus and Koalas

ELDER STATESMAN of Chinese Nationalist government on Formosa, Yu You-Reu, is one of fine studies by Mr. Humphrey.

AUSTRALIAN KOALA captured the interest of John Sant Ambrogio, left, and Robert Ripley in stopover at the Brisbane zoo.

CUSTOM requires removal of shoes during visit in Tokyo. Eugene Lehner, Mr. Kearney, Andre Come, Gino Cioffi reclaim them after visit.

FAMOUS CROSSWORD puzzle answer, the Emu rate a doff of the hat at Brisbane zoo from Carl Zeise, cellist, and a puzzle fan.

ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR Dr. Charles Munch, right, and Einar Hansen, violinist, with hostesses at a return stopover in Honolulu.

END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE

REWIND